EASTER SUN. AFT. April 1 at 3.30	"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists: FLORENCE HINKLE MARION TELVA RICHARD CROOKS REINALD WERRENRATH The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE. April 1 at 8.15	JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (Plus Tax)
WED. EVE. April 4	Mr. Albert Steinert Announces the First Appearance in New England MME. MARIA JERITZA Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co. Tickets Now at SYMPHONY HALL. Downtown at STEINERT HALL
THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8.15	HARVARD GLEE CLUB Dr. A. T. DAVISON Conductor Assisted by the Famous Soprano—FRIEDA HEMPEL Tickets—$2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (No Tax)
SUN. AFT. April 8 at 3.30	GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE. April 8 at 8.15	JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI, Pianist Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (Plus Tax)
SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3.30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season

Mail Orders Filled Promptly (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Trans 3/24

Transcript Mar 24

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT MON. EVE. MAR. 26 at 8:15	BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF'S "SCHEHERAZADE"; BACH SUITE FOR STRINGS; RESPIGHI—Ballad of the Gnomides; Arias by ESTER FERRABINI JACCHIA, Soprano. $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
FRI. MAR. 30, at 2:30 SAT. at 8:15	Guest Conductor—BRUNO WALTER Soloist—ARTUR SCHNABEL—Piano Seats Now on Sale
EASTER SUN. AFT., APRIL 1 at 3:30	"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists: FLORENCE HINKLE MARION TELVA RICHARD CROOKS REINALD WERRENRATH The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE., APRIL 1 at 8:15	JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, plus tax
THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15	HARVARD GLEE CLUB Dr. A. T. DAVISON Conductor Assisted by the Famous Soprano—FRIEDA HEMPEL Tickets—$2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (No Tax)
SUN. AFT., APRIL 8 at 3:30	GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE., APRIL 8 at 8:15	JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI, Pianist Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Final Concert This Season

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Traveler Mar 24

HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
EMIL MOLLENHAUER, Conductor
Chorus of 400, Organ, Orchestra, in an
EASTER PERFORMANCE
OF GOUNOD'S
"REDEMPTION"
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting
With these artists as soloists
FLORENCE HINKLE
MARION TELVA
RICHARD CROOKS
CLIFTON WOODS
REINALD WERRENRATH
SYMPHONY HALL, Sun., April 1, at 3.30
Address mail orders to Symphony Hall Box Office. Tickets $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (plus 10% tax).

HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
EMIL MOLLENHAUER, Conductor
Chorus of 400, Organ, Orchestra, in an
EASTER PERFORMANCE
OF GOUNOD'S
"REDEMPTION"
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting.
With these artists as soloists:
FLORENCE HINKLE
MARION TELVA
RICHARD CROOKS
CLIFTON WOODS
REINALD WERRENRATH
SYMPHONY HALL, Sun., April 1, at 3:30
Address mail orders to Symphony Hall Box Office. Tickets $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (plus 10% tax).

Trav 3/24

Traveler Mar 24
Church page

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT MON. EVE., Mar. 26 at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
ESTER FERRABINI JACCHIA, Soprano
Seats now—$2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
EASTER SUN. AFT., Apr. 1 at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN
Choral Concert with Great Soloists
HINKLE WERRENRATH
TELVA CROOKS WOOD
Gounod's REDEMPTION
Orchestra—Chorus 400—Organ—Tickets Now
SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Monitor Mar 24

Herald Mar 24
Church page

[60] Churchman'sfield Transcript Mar 24

CUT-OUT

March 25, 26, 27, 28, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY MAR. 25 at 3:30 — ERIKA MORINI The Greatest Girl Violinist of All Time
Popular Prices—One Thousand Seats at $1.00
Remainder $1.50 and $2.00 (plus tax)

TOMORROW MON. EVE. MAR. 26 at 8:15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF'S "SCHEHERAZADE"; BACH SUITE FOR STRINGS; RESPIGHI—Ballad of the Gnomides; Arias by ESTER FERRABINI JACCHIA, Soprano. $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

FRI., MAR. 30, at 2:30 SAT. at 8:15 — Guest Conductor—BRUNO WALTER
Soloist—ARTUR SCHNABEL—Piano
Seats Now on Sale

EASTER SUN. AFT., APRIL 1 at 3:30 — "REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists:
FLORENCE HINKLE MARION TELVA
RICHARD CROOKS REINALD WERRENRATH
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE., APRIL 1 at 8:15 — JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR
VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, plus tax

WED. EVE. April 4 — Mr. Albert Steinert Announces the First Appearance in New England
MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
Tickets Now at SYMPHONY HALL Downtown at STEINERT HALL

THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15 — HARVARD GLEE CLUB Dr. A. T. DAVISON Conductor
Assisted by the Famous Soprano—FRIEDA HEMPEL
Tickets—$2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (No Tax)

SUN. AFT., APRIL 8 at 3:30 — GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE., APRIL 8 at 8:15 — JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI, Pianist
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax)

SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3:30 — CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Herald Mar 25

SYMPHONY HALL

Adv 3/25

TODAY MAR. 25 at 3:30 — ERIKA MORINI The Greatest Girl Violinist of All Time
Popular Prices—One Thousand Seats at $1.00
Remainder $1.50 and $2.00 (plus tax)

TOMORROW MON. EVE. MAR. 26 at 8:15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF'S "SCHEHERAZADE"; BACH SUITE FOR STRINGS; RESPIGHI—Ballad of the Gnomides; Arias by ESTER FERRABINI JACCHIA, Soprano $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

FRI., MAR. 30, at 2:30 SAT. at 8:15 — Guest Conductor—BRUNO WALTER
Soloist—ARTUR SCHNABEL—Piano
Seats Now on Sale

EASTER SUN. AFT., APRIL 1 at 3:30 — "REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists
Soloists — FLORENCE HINKLE, MARION TELVA
RICHARD CROOKS, REINALD WERRENRATH
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. Tickets Now

SUN. EVE., APRIL 1 at 8:15 — JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR
VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2, $1.50, $1, plus tax

SUN. AFT., APRIL 8 at 3:30 — GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE., APRIL 8 at 8:15 — JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI, Pianist
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax)

SUN. AFT., APRIL 15 at 3:30 — CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Advertiser Mar 25

SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW MON. EVE. MAR. 26 at 8:15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF'S "SCHEHERAZADE"; BACH SUITE FOR STRINGS; RESPIGHI—Ballad of the Gnomides; Arias by ESTER FERRABINI JACCHIA, Soprano. $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

FRI., MAR. 30, at 2:30 SAT. at 8:15 — Guest Conductor—BRUNO WALKER
Soloist—ARTUR SCHNABEL—Piano
Seats Now on Sale

Gl 3/25

EASTER SUN. AFT., APRIL 1 at 3:30 — "REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloist:
FLORENCE HINKLE MARION TELVA
RICHARD CROOKS REINALD WERRENRATH
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE., APRIL 1 at 8:15 — JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR
VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, plus tax

THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15 — HARVARD GLEE CLUB Dr. A. T. DAVISON Conductor
Assisted by the Famous Soprano—FRIEDA HEMPEL
Tickets—$2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (No Tax)

SUN. AFT., APRIL 8 at 3:30 — GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE., APRIL 8 at 8:15 — JOHN CHARLES THOM
ERWIN NYIREGYHA
Tickets—$2, $1.50, $1

SUN. AFT., April 15 at 3:30 — CHALIAPIN

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to

[redacted]

Globe Mar 25

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY MAR. 25 at 3:30 — ERIKA MORINI The Greatest Girl Violinist of All Time
Popular Prices—One Thousand Seats at $1.00
Remainder $1.50 and $2.00 (plus tax)

Post 3/25

TOMORROW MON. EVE. MAR. 26 at 8:15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF'S "SCHEHERAZADE"; BACH SUITE FOR STRINGS; RESPIGHI—Ballad of the Gnomides; Arias by ESTER FERRABINI JACCHIA, Soprano. $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

FRI., MAR. 30, at 2:30 SAT. at 8:15 — Guest Conductor—BRUNO WALTER
Soloist—ARTUR SCHNABEL—Piano
Seats Now on Sale

EASTER SUN. AFT., APRIL 1 at 3:30 — "REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists:
FLORENCE HINKLE MARION TELVA
RICHARD CROOKS REINALD WERRENRATH
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE., April 1 at 8:15 — JOHN STEEL America's Celebrated Tenor
(Victor Record Artist) Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (Plus Tax)

WED. EVE. April 4 — Mr. Albert Steinert Announces the First Appearance in New England
MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
Tickets Now at SYMPHONY HALL Downtown at STEINERT HALL

THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15 — HARVARD GLEE CLUB Dr. A. T. DAVISON Conductor
Assisted by the Famous Soprano—FRIEDA HEMPEL
Tickets—$2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (No Tax)

SUN. AFT., APRIL 8 at 3:30 — GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE., APRIL 8 at 8:15 — JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI, Pianist
Tickets, $2, $1.50, $1 (Plus Tax)

SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3:30 — CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Post Mar 25

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
ESTER FERRABINI JACCHIA, Soprano
Seats now—$2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
EASTER SUN. AFT., Apr. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN
Choral Concert with Great Soloists!
HINKLE WERRENRATH
TELVA CROOKS WOODS
GOUNOD'S REDEMPTION
Orchestra—Chorus of 400—Organ—(Tickets Now)

Herald Mar 26

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
ESTER FERRABINI JACCHIA, Soprano
Seats Now—$2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Globe Mar 26

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT at 8:15
TON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
RE MONTEUX, Conductor
FERRABINI JACCHIA, Soprano ow—$2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN
oncert with Great Soloists
E WERRENRATH
A CROOKS WOOD
REDEMPTION
horus 400—Organ—Tickets Now

Post Mar 26

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Ester Ferrabini Jacchia, Soprano
Seats now—$2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
EASTER SUN. AFT., April 1, at 3.30
HANDEL & HAYDN
Choral Concert with Great Soloists
HINKLE WERRENRATH
TELVA CROOKS WOOD
GOUNOD'S REDEMPTION
Orchestra—Chorus 400—Organ—Tickets Now

Trans 3/26

Transcript Mar 26

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks
THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
MME MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational New Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL
SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Herald Mar 27

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks
MME MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational New Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

Globe Mar 27

SYMPHONY HALL
MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational New Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL.
Downtown at STEINERT HALL
THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Post Mar 27

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN., Apr. 1, at 3.30
Chorus of 400—Great Soloists
FLORENCE HINKLE
RICHARD CROOKS
REINALD WERRENRATH
Merle ALCOCK Clifton WOOD
"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN
MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE'G, APRIL 4, at 8.15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL
THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8.15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3.30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Transcript Mar 28

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks
MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL.
Downtown at STEINERT HALL
SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Post Mar 28

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks
MME MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

[illegible] Mar 28

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks
MME MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL
THURS. EVE., April 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Globe Mar 28

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3.30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks
MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE'G, APRIL 4, at 8.15
Tickets now at Symphony Hall. Downtown at Steinert Hall.

Transcript Mar 27

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks
MME MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

Herald Mar 28

SYMPHONY HALL
MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational New Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

Traveler Mar 27

[61]

March 29, 30, 31, April 2nd, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL

EASTER SUN., Apr. 1, at 3:30 CHORUS of 400—GREAT Soloists
FLORENCE HINKLE
RICHARD CROOKS
REINALD WERRENRATH
Merle ALCOCK Clifton WOOD
"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN

MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

SUN. EVE., APR. 8
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI
(Tickets now)

Herald Mar 29

SYMPHONY HALL

EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL.
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

Post Mar 29

SYMPHONY HALL

EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Herald Mar 30

SYMPHONY HALL

EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sunday Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Transcript Mar 30

SYMPHONY HALL

EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Post Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL

MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

SUN., APR. 8, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZE (Tickets Now)

Globe Mar 29

SYMPHONY HALL

EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3.30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE'G, APRIL 4, at 8.15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8.15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Transcript Mar 29

SYMPHONY HALL

EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Globe Mar 30

SYMPHONY HALL

EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Herald Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL

EASTER SUN., Apr. 1, at 3:30 Chorus of 400—Great Soloists
FLORENCE HINKLE
RICHARD CROOKS
REINALD WERRENRATH
Merle ALCOCK Clifton WOOD
"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL.

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

SUN. EVE., APR. 8
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Tickets now

FRI. EVE., Apr. 13, at 8:15
Second Boston Concert
COLIN O'MORE, Tenor
Assisted by Emilie Rose KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2.00 (plus tax)

American Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL

MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

Traveler Mar 29

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

Monitor Mar 29

SYMPHONY HALL

EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Post Mar 30

SYMPHONY HALL

EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

Globe Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW at 3.30 EASTER Performance	"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists: HINKLE WERRENRATH CROOKS ALCOCK The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting (Tickets Now)
TOMORROW April 1 at 8.15	JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (Plus Tax)
NEXT WED. EVE. April 4 at 8.15	Mme. MARIA JERITZA Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co. Tickets Now at Symphony Hall
NEXT THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8.15	HARVARD GLEE CLUB DR. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Conductor Assisted by FRIEDA HEMPEL SOPRANO Tickets—$2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (No Tax)
SUN. AFT. April 8 at 3.30	GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE. April 8 at 8.15	JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano
FRI. EVE. April 13 at 8.15	SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR COLIN O'MORE Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist Tickets, $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3.30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8	LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT "In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)
SUN. AFT. April 22 at 3.30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

Mail Orders Filled Promptly (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Trans 3/31

Transcript Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL

TO-MORROW at 3:30 EASTER Performance	"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists; HINKLE WERRENRATH CROOKS ALCOCK The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. (Tickets Now)
TOMOR-ROW APRIL 1 at 8:15	JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $3.00, $1.50, $1.00, plus tax
NEXT WED. EVE. April 4 at 8:15	Mme. MARIA JERITZA Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co. Tickets Now at Symphony Hall
NEXT THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15	HARVARD GLEE CLUB DR. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Conductor Assisted by FRIEDA HEMPEL SOPRANO Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50 $1 (no tax)
SUN. AFT., APRIL 8 at 3:30	GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE., APRIL 8 at 8:15	JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano
FRI. EVE. Apr. 13 at 8:15	SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR COLIN O'MORE Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Trav 3/31

Traveler Mar 31

HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
EMIL MOLLENHAUER, Conductor
Chorus of 400, Organ, Orchestra, in an
EASTER PERFORMANCE
GOUNOD'S
"REDEMPTION"
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting
With these artists as soloists
FLORENCE HINKLE
MERLE ALCOCK
RICHARD CROOKS
CLIFTON WOODS
REINALD WERRENRATH
SYMPHONY HALL, Sun., April 1, at 3:30
Address mail orders to Symphony Hall Box Office. Tickets $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, 1.00 (plus 10% tax).

Herald (Church page) Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL

EASTER SUN., Apr. 1, at 3:30 CHORUS of 400—GREAT Soloists
FLORENCE HINKLE
RICHARD CROOKS
REINALD WERRENRATH
Marion TELVA Clifton WOOD
"Redemption" HANDEL & HAYDN

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5 at 8:15
Harvard Glee Club
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

FRI. EVE., Apr. 13, at 8:15
SECOND BOSTON CONCERT
Colin O'More, Tenor
Assisted by Emilie Rose Knox, Violinist
Seats $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)

Monitor Mar 31

HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
EMIL MOLLENHAUER, Conductor
Chorus of 400, Organ, Orchestra, in an
EASTER PERFORMANCE
OF GOUNOD'S
"REDEMPTION"
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting
With these artists as soloists
FLORENCE HINKLE
MERLE ALCOCK
RICHARD CROOKS
CLIFTON WOODS
REINALD WERRENRATH
SYMPHONY HALL, Sun., April 1, at 3.30
Address mail orders to Symphony Hall Box Office. Tickets $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (plus 10% tax).

Churchman
+ Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Herald April 2

[62]

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)

Post April 2

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT THURS. EVE., April 5, at 8.15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3.30
GABRILOWITSCH

April

April 1

March 29, 30, 31, April 2nd 1923
Ma

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN., Apr. 1, at 3:30 CHORUS of 400—GREAT Soloists
FLORENCE HINKLE
RICHARD CROOKS
REINALD WERRENRATH
Merle ALCOCK Clifton WOOD
"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN

MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

SUN. EVE., APR. 8
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI
(Tickets now)

Herald Mar 29

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL.
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

Post Mar 29

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Herald Mar 30

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sunday Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Transcript Mar 30

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Post Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL
MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

SUN., APR. 8, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZE (Tickets Now)

Globe Mar 29

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3.30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE'G, APRIL 4, at 8.15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8.15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Transcript Mar 29

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Globe Mar 30

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHNSTEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Post Mar 30

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Herald Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN., Apr. 1, at 3:30 Chorus of 400—Great Soloists
FLORENCE HINKLE
RICHARD CROOKS
REINALD WERRENRATH
Merle ALCOCK Clifton WOOD
"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL.

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

SUN. EVE., APR. 8
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Tickets now

FRI. EVE., Apr. 13, at 8:15
Second Boston Concert
COLIN O'MORE, Tenor
Assisted by Emilie Rose KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2.00 (plus tax)

American Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL
MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
WEDNESDAY EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

Traveler Mar 29

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

Monitor Mar 29

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. AFT., APR. 1, at 3:30
HANDEL & HAYDN REDEMPTION
Hinkle Werrenrath Crooks

FAREWELL CONCERT
JOHN STEEL
Celebrated American Tenor
Easter Sun. Eve., April 1, 1923, at 8:15
Tickets now on sale at Symphony Hall and Phonograph Stores

Globe Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW at 3.30 EASTER Performance	"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists: HINKLE WERRENRATH CROOKS ALCOCK The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting (Tickets Now)
TOMORROW April 1 at 8.15	JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (Plus Tax)
NEXT WED. EVE. April 4 at 8.15	Mme. MARIA JERITZA Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co. Tickets Now at Symphony Hall
NEXT THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8.15	HARVARD GLEE CLUB DR. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Conductor Assisted by FRIEDA HEMPEL SOPRANO Tickets—$2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (No Tax)
SUN. AFT. April 8 at 3.30	GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE. April 8 at 8.15	JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano
FRI. EVE. April 13 at 8.15	SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR COLIN O'MORE Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist Tickets, $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3.30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8	LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT "In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)
SUN. AFT. April 22 at 3.30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

Mail Orders Filled Promptly (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Transcript Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL

TO-MORROW at 3:30 EASTER Performance	"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists; HINKLE WERRENRATH CROOKS ALCOCK The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. (Tickets Now)
TOMOR-ROW APRIL 1 at 8:15	JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, plus tax
NEXT WED. EVE. April 4 at 8:15	Mme. MARIA JERITZA Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co. Tickets Now at Symphony Hall
NEXT THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15	HARVARD GLEE CLUB DR. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Conductor Assisted by FRIEDA HEMPEL SOPRANO Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50 $1 (no tax)
SUN. AFT., APRIL 8 at 3:30	GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE., APRIL 8 at 8:15	JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano
FRI. EVE. Apr. 13 at 8:15	SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR COLIN O'MORE Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Traveler Mar 31

HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
EMIL MOLLENHAUER, Conductor
Chorus of 400, Organ, Orchestra, in an
EASTER PERFORMANCE
GOUNOD'S
"REDEMPTION"
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting
With these artists as soloists
FLORENCE HINKLE
MERLE ALCOCK
RICHARD CROOKS
CLIFTON WOODS
REINALD WERRENRATH
SYMPHONY HALL, Sun., April 1, at 3:30
Address mail orders to Symphony Hall Box Office. Tickets $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (plus 10% tax).

Herald (Church page) Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL
EASTER SUN. Apr. 1, at 3:30 CHORUS of 400—GREAT Soloists
FLORENCE HINKLE
RICHARD CROOKS
REINALD WERRENRATH
Marion TELVA Clifton WOOD
"Redemption" HANDEL & HAYDN

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5 at 8:15
Harvard Glee Club
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

SUNDAY AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

FRI. EVE., Apr. 13, at 8:15
SECOND BOSTON CONCERT
Colin O'More, Tenor
Assisted by Emilie Rose Knox, Violinist
Seats $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)

Monitor Mar 31

HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
EMIL MOLLENHAUER, Conductor
Chorus of 400, Organ, Orchestra, in an
EASTER PERFORMANCE
OF GOUNOD'S
"REDEMPTION"
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting
With these artists as soloists
FLORENCE HINKLE
MERLE ALCOCK
RICHARD CROOKS
CLIFTON WOODS
REINALD WERRENRATH
SYMPHONY HALL, Sun., April 1, at 3.30
Address mail orders to Symphony Hall Box Office. Tickets $2.50, $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (plus 10% tax).

[illegible] + Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Herald April 2

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)

Post April 2

[62]

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT THURS. EVE., April 5, at 8.15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH

April 1

April 1
over

April 1, 3, 4, 5, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY at 3:30 EASTER Performance	"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists: HINKLE WERRENRATH CROOKS ALCOCK The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. (Tickets Now)
TONIGHT APRIL 1 at 8:15	JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, plus tax
NEXT WED. EVE. April 4 at 8:15	Mme. MARIA JERITZA Her 4/1 Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co. Tickets Now at Symphony Hall
NEXT THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15	HARVARD GLEE CLUB DR. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Conductor Assisted by FRIEDA HEMPEL SOPRANO Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50 $1 (no tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT., APRIL 8 at 3:30	GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)
NEXT SUN. EVE., APRIL 8 at 8:15	JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano
FRI. EVE. Apr. 13 at 8:15	SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR COLIN O'MORE Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8	LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT "In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)
SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Herald April 1

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY at 3:30 EASTER Performance	"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists HINKLE WERRENRATH CROOKS ALCOCK The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. (Tickets Now)
TONIGHT APRIL 1 at 8:15	JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, plus tax
NEXT WED. EVE. April 4 at 8:15	Mme. MARIA JERITZA Gl 4/1 Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co. Tickets Now at Symphony Hall
NEXT THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15	HARVARD GLEE CLUB DR. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Conductor Assisted by FRIEDA HEMPEL SOPRANO Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT. APRIL 8 at 3:30	GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)
NEXT SUN. EVE. APRIL 8 at 8:15	JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano
FRI. EVE. April 13 at 8:15	SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR COLIN O'MORE Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8	LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT "In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)
SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Globe April 1

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY at 3:30 EASTER Performance	"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists HINKLE WERRENRATH CROOKS ALCOCK The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. Tickets Now
TONIGHT APRIL 1 at 8:15	JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR Adv 4/1 VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2, $1.50, $1, plus tax
NEXT WED. EVE. April 4 at 8:15	Mme. MARIA JERITZA Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co. Tickets Now at Symphony Hall
NEXT THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15	HARVARD GLEE CLUB DR. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Conductor Assisted by FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax
NEXT SUN. AFT. April 8 at 3:30	GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)
NEXT SUN. EVE. APRIL 8 at 8:15	JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI. Pianist Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano
FRI. EVE. Apr. 13 at 8:15	Second Boston Concert of the Celebrated Tenor COLIN O'MORE Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT. APRIL 15 at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8	LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT "In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)
SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Advertiser April 1

SYMPHONY HALL

(P 4/1) TODAY at 3:30 EASTER Performance	"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists: HINKLE WERRENRATH CROOKS ALCOCK The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. (Tickets Now)
TONIGHT APRIL 1 at 8:15	JOHN STEEL America's Celebrated Tenor (Victor Record Artist) Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (Plus Tax)
NEXT WED. EVE. APRIL 4 at 8:15	Mme. MARIA JERITZA Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co. Tickets Now at Symphony Hall
NEXT THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15	HARVARD GLEE CLUB DR. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Conductor Assisted by FRIEDA HEMPEL SOPRANO Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT., APRIL 8 at 3:30	GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)
NEXT SUN. EVE. APRIL 8 at 8:15	JOHN CHARLES THOMAS BARITONE ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI PIANIST Tickets, $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano
FRI. EVE APRIL 13 at 8:15	SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR COLIN O'MORE Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT. APRIL 15 at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. EVE. APRIL 13 at 8	LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT "In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)
SUN. AFT. APRIL 22 at 3:30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Post April 1

SYMPHONY HALL

MME. MARIA Her 4/3

JERITZA

Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.

TOMORROW EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15

Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15

HARVARD GLEE CLUB

Dr. A. T DAVISON, Conductor

Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano

Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30

GABRILOWITSCH

CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets [illegible]

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15 JOHN CHARLES THOMAS

ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT

THE CELEBRATED TENOR

COLIN O'MORE

EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin

Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)

SUN. AFT., APR. 15

CHALIAPIN

Herald April 3

SYMPHONY HALL

MME. MARIA Gl 4/3

JERITZA

Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.

TOMORROW EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15

Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15

HARVARD GLEE CLUB

Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor

Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano

Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30

GABRILOWITSCH

CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15 JOHN CHARLES THOMAS

ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT

THE CELEBRATED TENOR

COLIN O'MORE

EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin

Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)

SUN. AFT., APR. 15

CHALIAPIN

Globe April 3

SYMPHONY HALL

MME. MARIA P 4/3

JERITZA

Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.

TOMORROW EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15

Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT SUN. EVE., APR. 8, at 8:15

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS

ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

Post April 3

SYMPHONY HALL

MME. MARIA Trans 4/3

JERITZA

Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.

TOMORROW EVE., APRIL 4, at 8.15

Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

THURS. EVE., April 5, at 8.15

HARVARD GLEE CLUB

Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor

Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano

Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APRIL 8, at 3.30

GABRILOWITSCH

CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Transcript April 3

SYMPHONY HALL

Tonight at 8:15 Pst 4/4

MME. MARIA

JERITZA

Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.

Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15

HARVARD GLEE CLUB

Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor

Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano

Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30

GABRILOWITSCH

CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15 JOHN CHARLES THOMAS

ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT

THE CELEBRATED TENOR

COLIN O'MORE

EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin

Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)

SUN. AFT., APR. 15

CHALIAPIN

Post April 4

SYMPHONY HALL

H 4/4 TONIGHT at 8:15

MME. MARIA

JERITZA

Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.

Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15

HARVARD GLEE CLUB

Dr. A. T DAVISON, Conductor

Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano

Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30

GABRILOWITSCH

CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15 JOHN CHARLES THOMAS

ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

SUN. AFT., APR. 15

CHALIAPIN

Herald April 4

SYMPHONY HALL

TONIGHT AT 8:15 Gl 4/4

MME. MARIA

JERITZA

Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.

Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

Downtown at STEINERT HALL

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15

HARVARD GLEE CLUB

Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor

Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano

Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15 JOHN CHARLES THOMAS

ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

Globe April 4

SYMPHONY HA

TONIGHT, Apr. 5, at 8 Her 4/5

HARVARD GLEE CLUB

Dr. A. T DAVISON, Conductor

Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano

Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30

GABRILOWITSCH

CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15 JOHN CHARLES THOMAS

ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT

THE CELEBRATED TENOR

COLIN O'MORE

EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin

Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)

Herald April 5

SYMPHONY HALL

TONIGHT, Apr. 5, at 8:15 Gl 4/5

HARVARD GLEE CLUB

Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor

Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano

Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., Apr. 8, at 3:30

GABRILOWITSCH

CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

SUN. EVE., Apr. 8, at 8:15

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS

ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

Globe April 5

April 1, 3, 4, 5, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY at 3:30 EASTER Performance
"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists:
HINKLE WERRENRATH CROOKS ALCOCK
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. (Tickets Now)

TONIGHT APRIL 1 at 8:15
JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR
VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, plus tax

NEXT WED. EVE. April 4 at 8:15
Mme. MARIA JERITZA Her 4/1
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
Tickets Now at Symphony Hall

NEXT THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
DR. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Conductor
Assisted by FRIEDA HEMPEL SOPRANO
Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50 $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APRIL 8 at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)

NEXT SUN. EVE., APRIL 8 at 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano

FRI. EVE. Apr. 13 at 8:15
SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist
Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)

SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3:30
CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season

SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8
LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT
"In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)

SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30
MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Herald April 1

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY at 3:30 EASTER Performance
"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists
HINKLE WERRENRATH CROOKS ALCOCK
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. (Tickets Now)

TONIGHT APRIL 1 at 8:15
JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR
VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2.00, $1.50, $1.00, plus tax

NEXT WED. EVE. April 4 at 8:15
Mme. MARIA JERITZA G 4/1
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
Tickets Now at Symphony Hall

NEXT THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
DR. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Conductor
Assisted by FRIEDA HEMPEL SOPRANO
Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT. APRIL 8 at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)

NEXT SUN. EVE. APRIL 8 at 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano

FRI. EVE. April 13 at 8:15
SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist
Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)

SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3:30
CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season

SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8
LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT
"In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)

SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30
MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Globe April 1

SYMPHONY HALL
MME. MARIA He 4/3
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
TOMORROW EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)

SUN. AFT., APR. 15
CHALIAPIN

Herald April 3

SYMPHONY HALL
MME. MARIA G 4/3
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
TOMORROW EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)

SUN. AFT., APR. 15
CHALIAPIN

Globe April 3

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY at 3:30 EASTER Performance
"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists
HINKLE WERRENRATH CROOKS ALCOCK
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. Tickets Now

TONIGHT APRIL 1 at 8:15
JOHN STEEL AMERICA'S CELEBRATED TENOR Adv 4/1
VICTOR RECORD ARTIST Tickets $2, $1.50, $1, plus tax

NEXT WED. EVE. April 4 at 8:15
Mme. MARIA JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
Tickets Now at Symphony Hall

NEXT THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
DR. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Conductor
Assisted by FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax

NEXT SUN. AFT., April 8 at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)

NEXT SUN. EVE., APRIL 8 at 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI. Pianist
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano

FRI. EVE. Apr. 13 at 8:15
Second Boston Concert of the Celebrated Tenor
COLIN O'MORE
Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist
Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)

SUN. AFT., APRIL 15 at 3:30
CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season

SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8
LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT
"In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)

SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30
MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Advertiser April 1

SYMPHONY HALL

(P 4/1)
TODAY at 3:30 EASTER Performance
"REDEMPTION" HANDEL & HAYDN SOCIETY
Chorus of 400—Enlarged Orchestra—Organ—Great Soloists:
HINKLE WERRENRATH CROOKS ALCOCK
The Easter Story in an Inspiring Musical Setting. (Tickets Now)

TONIGHT APRIL 1 at 8:15
JOHN STEEL America's Celebrated Tenor
(Victor Record Artist) Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (Plus Tax)

NEXT WED. EVE. APRIL 4 at 8:15
Mme. MARIA JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
Tickets Now at Symphony Hall

NEXT THURS. EVE. APRIL 5 at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
DR. ARCHIBALD T. DAVISON, Conductor
Assisted by FRIEDA HEMPEL SOPRANO
Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APRIL 8 at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)

NEXT SUN. EVE. APRIL 8 at 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS BARITONE
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI PIANIST
Tickets, $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano

FRI. EVE APRIL 13 at 8:15
SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist
Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)

SUN. AFT. APRIL 15 at 3:30
CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season

SUN. EVE., APRIL 13 at 8
LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT
"In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)

SUN. AFT. APRIL 22 at 3:30
MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Post April 1

SYMPHONY HALL
MME. MARIA Post 4/3
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
TOMORROW EVE., APRIL 4, at 8:15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT SUN. EVE., APR. 8, at 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

Post April 3

SYMPHONY HALL
MME. MARIA Tr 4/3
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
TOMORROW EVE., APRIL 4, at 8.15
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

THURS. EVE., April 5, at 8.15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APRIL 8, at 3.30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Transcript April 3

SYMPHONY HALL
Tonight at 8:15
MME. MARIA Post 4/4
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)

SUN. AFT., APR. 15
CHALIAPIN

Post April 4

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT at 8:15
MME. MARIA Her 4/4
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

SUN. AFT., APR. 15
CHALIAPIN

Herald April 4

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8:15 G 4/4
MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
Downtown at STEINERT HALL

THURS. EVE., Apr. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

Globe April 4

SYMPHONY HA
TONIGHT, Apr. 5, at 8 Her 4/5
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)

Herald April 5

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT, Apr. 5, at 8:15 G 4/5
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT., Apr. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)

SUN. EVE., Apr. 8, at 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)

Globe April 5

CUT-OUT

April 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 1923

Herald 4/10 side preceding page

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8.15
MME. MARIA
JERITZA
Sensational Prima Donna of the Metropolitan Opera Co.
Tickets now at SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW EVE., Apr. 5, at 8.15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist
FRIEDA HEMPEL

[redacted]

GA
CHOPI
SUN. EV
JOHN CH
ERWIN
FRI. EV
THE
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)
SUN. AFT., APR. 15
CHALIAPIN

Transcript April 5

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT, APR. 5, at 8:15
HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Dr. A. T. DAVISON, Conductor
Soloist
FRIEDA HEMPEL Soprano
Tickets, $2.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
SUN. EVE., APR. 8, at 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)
FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)
AFT., APR. 15
LIAPIN

t April 5

MPHONY HALL
GHT, April 5, at 8.15
ARD GLEE CLUB
T. DAVISON, Conductor
HEMPEL Soprano
.50, $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
XT SUNDAY AFT., Apr. 8, at 3.30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)
SUN. AFT., APR. 15
CHALIAPIN

Transcript April 5

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)
Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)
SUN. AFT., APR. 15
CHALIAPIN

Herald April 6

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)
SUN. EVE., APR. 8, at 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)
FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)

Post 4/6

Post April 6

SYMPHONY HALL
Sun., Apr. 8, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)
FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT., APR. 15
CHALIAPIN

Globe April 6

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT SUNDAY AFT., Apr. 8, at 3.30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)
SUN. AFT., APR. 15
CHALIAPIN

Trans 4/6

Transcript April 6

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW AFT., Apr. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)
TOMORROW EVE., Apr. 8, at 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)
SUN. AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
CHALIAPIN

Herald Apr 7

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN, PROGRAM (Tickets now)
Tomorrow, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)
SUN. AFT., APR. 15 at 3:30
CHALIAPIN

Post 4/7

Post Apr. 7

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)
Tomorrow 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)
FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
CHALIAPIN

Globe 4/7

Globe Apr 7

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)
Tomorrow, 8:15
JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI (Tickets now)
FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30
ELMAN

American Apr 7

SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW at 3.30 — GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)

TOMORROW EVE. April 8 at 8.15 — JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano

Trans 4/7

FRI., APR. 13, at 2.30; SAT. at 8.15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Soloists—J. BEDETTI, 'Cello; G. LAURENT, Flute. (Seats on Sale)
MON., APR. 23, at 8.15 — Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano Chicago Opera Co.
Seats—$2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT FRI. EVE. April 13 at 8.15 — SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist
Tickets, $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)

SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3.30 — CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season

SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8 — LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT
"In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)

SUN. AFT. April 22 at 3.30 — MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

Mail Orders Filled Promptly (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Transcript April 7

SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW at 3:30 — GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)

TOMORROW EVE. APRIL 8 at 8:15 — JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano

Tr 4/7

FRI., APR. 13, at 2:30; SAT. at 8:15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Soloists—J. BEDETTI, 'Cello. G. LAURENT, Flute (Seats on sale)
MON., APR. 23, at 8:15 — Soloists—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano Chicago Opera Co.
Seats $2, $1.50, $1 (No tax)

NEXT FRI. EVE. Apr. 13 at 8:15 — SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist
Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)

SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3:30 — CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season

SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8 — LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT
"In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)

SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30 — MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Traveler April 7

SYMPHONY HALL
SUN. AFT., APR. 8, at 3:30
GABRILOWITSCH
CHOPIN PROGRAM (Tickets now)
FRI. EVE., Apr. 13, at 8:15
Second Boston Concert
COLIN O'MORE, Tenor
Assisted by Emilie Rose KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2.00 (plus tax)
SUN. AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30
ELMAN

Monitor April 7

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY at 3:30 — GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)

TONIGHT APRIL 8 at 8:15 — JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano

Her 4/8

FRI., APR. 13, at 2:30; SAT. at 8:15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Soloists—J. BEDETTI, 'Cello. G. LAURENT, Flute (Seats on sale)
MON., APR. 23, at 8:15 — Soloists—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano Chicago Opera Co.
Seats $2, $1.50, $1 (No tax)

NEXT FRI. EVE. Apr. 13 at 8:15 — SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist
Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3:30 — CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season

SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8 — LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT
"In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)

SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30 — MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE. April 22 at 7:30 — Sullivan's GOLDEN LEGEND
PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM Conductor
SOLOISTS: Marjorie MOODY, Byron HUDSON, Jean MacDONALD, Charles BENNETT
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c (No tax)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Herald April 8

Advertiser / Post | April 8 OVER

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY at 3:30 — GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)

TONIGHT APRIL 8 at 8:15 — JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone
ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano

FRI., APR. 13, at 2:30; SAT. at 8:15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Soloists, J. BEDETTI, 'Cello; G. LAURENT, Flute (Seats on Sale)
MON., APR. 23, at 8:15 — Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano, Chicago Opera Co.
Seats—$2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

NEXT FRI. EVE. Apr. 13 at 8:15 — SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist
Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)

NEXT SUN. AFT. April 15 at 3:30 — CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season

SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8 — LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT
"In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)

SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30 — MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE. April 22 at 7:30 — SULLIVAN'S GOLDEN LEGION
PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION
GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor
SOLOISTS—Marjorie Moody, Jean MacDonald, Byron Hudson, Charles Bennett
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c (no tax)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Globe April 8

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15 at 3:30
CHALIAPIN
The Great Russian Singer
SUN. AFT., APR. 29 at 3:30
PADEREWSKI

Her 4/9

Herald April 9

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15 at 3:30
CHALIAPIN
The Great Russian Singer
SUN. AFT., APR. 22 at 3:30
ELMAN
SUN. AFT., APR. 29 at 3:30
PADEREWSKI

Gl 4/9

Globe April 9

SYMPHONY HALL
FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15 at 3:30
CHALIAPIN
The Great Russian Singer
SUN. AFT., APR. 29 at 3:30
PADEREWSKI

Post 4/9

Post April 9

SYMPHONY HALL
Next Sun. Aft., Apr. 15 at 3:30
CHALIAPIN
The Great Russian Singer
Sun. Aft., Apr. 22 at 3:30
ELMAN
Sun. Aft., Apr. 29 at 3:30
PADEREWSKI

Transcript Apr 10

[64]

CUT-OUT

April 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY at 3:30	GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)
TONIGHT APRIL 8 at 8:15	JOHN CHARLES THOMAS Baritone ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI Pianist Tickets, $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax). Knabe piano.
FRI., APR. 13, at 2:30 SAT. at 8:15	BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor Soloists—J. Bedetti, 'Cello; G. Laurent, Flute. (Seats on Sale)
MON., APR. 23, at 8:15	Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano Chicago Opera Co. Seats—$2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
NEXT FRI. EVE. Apr. 13 at 8:15	Second Boston Concert of the Celebrated Tenor COLIN O'MORE Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT., APRIL 15 at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. EVE. April 15 at 8	LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT "In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)
SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Ad 4/8

Advertiser April 8

Transcript 4/10 W4

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY at 3:30	GABRILOWITSCH CHOPIN Program (Tickets Now)
TONIGHT APRIL 8 at 8:15	JOHN CHARLES THOMAS BARITONE ERWIN NYIREGYHAZI PIANIST Tickets, $2, $1.50, $1 (plus tax) Knabe Piano
FRI., APR. 13, at 2:30 SAT. at 8:15	BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor Soloists—J. BEDETTI, 'Cello; G. LAURENT, Flute (Seats on sale)
MON., APR. 23, at 8:15	Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano Chicago Grand Opera Co. Seats $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
NEXT FRI. EVE. APRIL 13 at 8:15	SECOND BOSTON CONCERT OF THE CELEBRATED TENOR COLIN O'MORE Assisted by EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violinist Tickets $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT. APRIL 15 at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. EVE. APRIL 15 at 8	LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT "In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)
SUN. AFT. APRIL 22 at 3:30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE. April 22 at 7:30	SULLIVAN'S GOLDEN LEGEND PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor SOLOISTS: Marjorie Moody, Jean MacDonald, Byron Hudson, Charles Bennett Tickets $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c (no tax)

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Post April 8

SYMPHONY HALL
TODAY at 2.30 TOMORROW at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX Conductor
Soloists, J. Bedetti, 'Cello; G. Laurent, Flute
TONIGHT, APR. 13, at 8.15
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15 at 3.30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22 at 3.30
ELMAN

Trans 4/13

Transcript April 13

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Soloists, J. BEDETTI, 'Cello; G. LAURENT, Flute
TOMORROW AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN

Her 4/14

Herald April 14

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Soloists, J. BEDETTI, 'Cello; G. LAURENT, Flute
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15, AT 3:30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN

Globe April 14

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Soloists, J. BEDETTI, 'Cello; G. LAURENT, Flute
TOMORROW AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30
ELMAN

Post 4/14

Post April 14

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
CHALIAPIN
Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30
ELMAN
MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats, $2, $1.50, $1. (No tax)
SUN. AFT., APR. 29, at 3:30
PADEREWSKI

American April 14

SYMPHONY HALL
FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22 at 3:30
ELMAN

Herald April 10

SYMPHONY HALL
FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN

Globe April 10

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22 at 3:30
ELMAN

Post April 10

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW EVE., April 13, at 8:15
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN

Herald Apr 12

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT, APR. 13, at 8:15
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)
SUN. AFT., APR. 15
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30
ELMAN

Herald April 13

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15 at 3:30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22 at 3:30
ELMAN

Herald April 11

SYMPHONY HALL
FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus Tax)
SUN. AFT., APR. 15
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN

Post April 11

SYMPHONY HALL
FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (plus tax)
Next Sun. Aft., Apr. 15, at 3:30—
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30
ELMAN

American April 11

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW EVE., APR. 13, at 8:15
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30
ELMAN

Globe April 12

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT, APRIL 13, AT 8:15
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15, AT 3:30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN

Globe April 13

SYMPHONY HALL
FRI. EVE., APR. 13—2nd CONCERT
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus tax)
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15 at 3.30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22 at 3.30
ELMAN

SYMPHONY HALL
NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 15 at 3:30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22 at 3:30
ELMAN

Trav 4/11

Traveler April 11

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW EVE., Apr. 13, at 8:15
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus Tax)
NET SUN. AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN
SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30
ELMAN

Post April 12

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT, APR. 13 AT 8:15
THE CELEBRATED TENOR
COLIN O'MORE
EMILIE ROSE KNOX, Violin
Seats, $1, $1.50, $2 (Plus Tax)
NET SUN. AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
THE GREAT
CHALIAPIN
The Great Russian Singer

Post April 13

SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW at 3.30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
TOMORROW EV. at 8	LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT "In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)
MON. EVE. April 23 at 8.15	BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor Weber—Mendelssohn—Wagner—Mozart—Saint-Saens Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano Chicago Opera Co. Seats $2, $1.50, $1 (No tax)
SUN. AFT. April 22 at 3.30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE. April 22 at 7.30	Sullivan's GOLDEN LEGEND PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor SOLOISTS: MARJORIE MOODY, BYRON HUDSON, JEAN MACDONALD, CHARLES BENNETT Tickets $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c (No tax)
SUN. AFT. April 29 at 3.30	PADEREWSKI (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE. April 29 at 8.15	PATTI Concert by LUELLA MELUIS

Mail Orders Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Trans 4/14

Transcript April 14

SYMPHONY HALL
TOMORROW AFT., APR. 15, at 3:30
CHALIAPIN
Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30
ELMAN
MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Pierre Monteux, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT SAENS
Soloist, FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2, $1.50, $1. (No tax)
SUN. AFT., APR. 29, at 3:30
PADEREWSKI

Monitor April 14

Traveler 4/14
next page

[65]

CUT-OUT

April 14, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL

Trav 4/14

TOMORROW at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE. Apr. 22 at 7:30	Sullivan's GOLDEN LEGEND PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor SOLOISTS: MARJORIE MOODY, BYRON HUDSON, JEAN MACDONALD, CHARLES BENNETT Tickets $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c, (No tax)
MON. EVE. Apr. 23 at 8:15	BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor Weber—Mendelssohn—Wagner—Mozart—Saint-Saens Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano Chicago Opera Co. Seats $2, $1.50, $1 (No tax)
SUN. AFT. Apr. 29 at 3:30	PADEREWSKI (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE. Apr. 29 at 8:15	PATTI Concert by LUELLA MELUIS

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Traveler April 14

SYMPHONY HALL

Adv 4/15

TODAY at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
TONIGHT at 8	LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT "In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)
NEXT SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)
MON. EVE. Apr. 23 at 8:15	BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor Weber—Mendelssohn—Wagner—Mozart—Saint-Saens Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano Chicago Opera Co. Seats—$2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)
SUN. AFT. Apr. 29 at 3:30	PADEREWS
SUN. EVE. Apr. 29 at 8:15	PATTI Concert by LUEL

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Ch

Advertiser

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30

ELMAN

Trav 4/18

NEXT MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8.15

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2, $1.50, $1. (No tax)

SUN. EVE., APR. 29, at 8.15

PATTI CONCERT by

LUELLA MELUIS

Mail Orders for above filled promptly

Transcript april 18

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30

ELMAN

Her 4/19

NEXT MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2, $1.50, $1 (No tax)

SUN. EVE., APR. 29, at 8:15

PATTI CONCERT by

LUELLA MELUIS

Herald april 19

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30

ELMAN

Adv 4/21

NEXT MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT-SAENS
Soloist—Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats—$2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser apr 21

SYMPHONY HALL at 3:30 Tomorrow ELMAN

Gl 4/21

Globe apr 21

SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30

ELMAN

Post 4/21

NEXT MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2, $1.50, $1. (No tax)

Post apr 21

SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW, APR. 22, at 3:30

ELMAN

Amer 4/21

MON. EVE., APR. 23, AT 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER WAGNER MOZART
MENDELSSOHN SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (No tax)

SUN. AFT., APR. 29, at 3:30

PADEREWSKI

SUN. EVE., APR. 29, at 8:15

PATTI CONCERT by

LUELLA MELUIS

OPENING NIGHT—MONDAY, MAY 7

POPS

Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Music
Refreshments
Seats Tom'w—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

American apr 21

SYMPHONY HALL

Her 4/15

TODAY at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
TONIGHT at 8	LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT "In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)
NEXT SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 3:30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE. Apr. 22 at 7:30	Sullivan's GOLDEN LEGEND PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor SOLOISTS: MARJORIE MOODY, BYRON HUDSON, JEAN MACDONALD, CHARLES BENNETT Tickets $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c, (No tax)
MON. EVE. Apr. 23 at 8:15	BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor Weber—Mendelssohn—Wagner—Mozart—Saint-Saens Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano Chicago Opera Co. Seats $2, $1.50, $1 (No tax)
SUN. AFT. Apr. 29 at 3:30	PADEREWSKI (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE. Apr. 29 at 8:15	PATTI Concert by LUELLA MELUIS

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Herald April 15

SYMPHONY HALL

Post 4/15

TODAY at 3:30	CHALIAPIN Farewell Concert This Season
TONIGHT at 8	LITTLE RUTH PIERCE POSSELT "In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)
NEXT SUN. AFT. Apr. 22 at 7:30	MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)
	LEGEND N GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor JEAN MACDONALD HARLES BENNETT o tax)
at 8:15	RCHESTRA tor —Mozart—Saint-Saens Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano Chicago Opera Co. Seats $2, $1.50, $1 (No tax)
SUN. AFT. Apr. 29 at 3:30	PADEREWSKI (Tickets Now)
SUN. EVE., Apr. 29 at 8:15	PATTI Concert by LUELLA MELUIS

MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Post April 15

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30

ELMAN

Post 4/19

NEXT MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2, $1.50, $1. (No tax)

SUN. EVE., APR. 29, at 8:15

PATTI CONCERT by

LUELLA MELUIS

Post april 19

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30

ELMAN

NEXT MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT-SAENS
Soloist — Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats—$2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

Herald apr 20

SYMPHONY HALL—Next Sun. at 3:30 ELMAN

Post apr 20

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30

ELMAN

Her 4/21

NEXT MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2, $1.50, $1. (No tax)

SUN. EVE., APR. 29, at 8:15

PATTI CONCERT by

LUELLA MELUIS

Herald apr 21

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30

E

NEXT MO

BOSTO

PIERR
WEBE
MENDE
Soloist —
Seats

Tr

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY, APR. 15, at 3:30

Gl 4/15

CHALIAPIN

Farewell Concert This Season

TONIGHT, APR. 15, at 8

LITTLE

RUTH PIERCE POSSELT

"In all my experience I never heard such a remarkable child violinist."—MAX SMITH, N. Y. American. (50c to $2.50)

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30

ELMAN

SUN. EVE., APR. 22, at 7:30

SULLIVAN'S

GOLDEN LEGEND

People's Choral Union

GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor. Soloists: MARJORIE MOODY, BYRON HUDSON, JEAN MACDONALD, CHARLES BENNETT. Tickets $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c. (No tax)

MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

PIERRE, MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2, $1.50, $1. (No tax)

SUN. AFT., APR. 29, at 3:30

PADEREWSKI

SUN. EVE., APR. 29, at 8:15

PATTI CONCERT by

LUELLA MELUIS

Globe april 15

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30

ELMAN

Gl 4/18

NEXT MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8.15

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2, $1.50, $1. (No tax)

SUN. EVE., APR. 29, at 8:15

PATTI CONCERT by

LUELLA MELUIS

Globe april 18

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3:30

ELMAN

NEXT MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8:15

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

PIERRE, MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2, $1.50, $1. (No tax)

SUN. EVE., APR. 29, at 8:15

PATTI CONCERT by

LUELLA MELUIS

Mail Orders for above filled promptly

Globe apr 20

SYMPHONY HALL

NEXT SUN. AFT., APR. 22, at 3.30

ELMAN

4/20

NEXT MON. EVE., APR. 23, at 8.15

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER—WAGNER—MOZART
MENDELSSOHN—SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano

other April 2 papers

[66]

CUT-OUT

April 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 28, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW Apr. 22, at 3.30 — MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

TOMORROW EVE. April 22 at 7.30 — Sullivan's GOLDEN LEGEND
PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor
Soloists: Marjorie MOODY, Byron HUDSON, Jean MACDONALD, Charles BENNETT. $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c (No Tax)

MON. EVE. April 23 at 8.15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Weber—Mendelssohn—Wagner—Mozart—Saint-Saens
Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano. $2, $1.50, $1 (No Tax)

SUN. AFT. April 29 at 3.30 — PADEREWSKI (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE. April 29 at 8.15 — PATTI Concert by LUELLA MELUIS

OPENING NIGHT Mon., May 7 38th Season — Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players AGIDE JACCHIA, Cond. POPS Popular Programs Refreshments
Ticket Sale Opens Tomorrow—$1, 75c, 50c. Admission 25c (No Tax)
Mail Orders Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Transcript Apr 21

SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW Apr. 22 at 3:30 — MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

TOMORROW EVE. Apr. 22 at 7:30 — Sullivan's GOLDEN LEGEND
PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor
Soloists: Marjorie MOODY, Byron HUDSON, Jean MACDONALD, Charles BENNETT. $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c (No Tax)

TOMORROW MON. EVE. Apr. 23 at 8:15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Weber—Mendelssohn—Wagner—Mozart—Saint-Saens
Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano. $2, $1.50, $1 (No tax)

SUN. AFT. Apr. 29 at 3:30 — PADEREWSKI (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE. Apr. 29 at 8:15 — PATTI Concert by LUELLA MELUIS

OPENING NIGHT Mon., May 7 38th Season — Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players AGIDE JACCHIA, Cond. POPS Popular Programs Refreshments
Ticket Sale Opens Tomorrow—$1, 75c, 50c. Admission 25c (No Tax)
MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Traveler Apr 21

SYMPHONY HALL

TOMORROW, APR. 22, at 3:30
ELMAN

Tomorrow At 7:30 Sullivan's
GOLDEN LEGEND
PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION
GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor. Soloists: MARJORIE MOODY, BYRON HUDSON, JEAN MACDONALD, CHARLES BENNETT.
Tickets $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c (No tax)

APR. 23 (MON. EVE.) 8:15
Boston Symphony
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER WAGNER MOZART
MENDELSSOHN SAINT-SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (No tax)

SUN. AFT., APR. 29, at 3:30
PADEREWSKI

OPENING NIGHT—MONDAY, MAY 7
POPS Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players Agide Jacchia Conductor Popular Music Refreshments
Seats Tom'w—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Monitor Apr 21

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY Apr. 22 at 3:30 — MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

TONIGHT Apr. 22 at 7:30 — Sullivan's GOLDEN LEGEND
PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor
Soloists: Marjorie MOODY, Byron HUDSON, Jean MACDONALD, Charles BENNETT. $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c (No Tax)

TOMORROW MON. EVE. Apr. 23 at 8:15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Weber—Mendelssohn—Wagner—Mozart—Saint-Saens
Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano. $2, $1.50, $1 (No tax)

SUN. AFT. Apr. 29 at 3:30 — PADEREWSKI (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE. Apr. 29 at 8:15 — PATTI Concert by LUELLA MELUIS

OPENING NIGHT Mon., May 7 38th Season — Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players AGIDE JACCHIA, Cond. POPS Popular Programs Refreshments
Ticket Sale Opens Tomorrow—$1, 75c, 50c. Admission 25c (No Tax)
MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Herald Apr 22

SYMPHONY HALL

adv 4/22

TODAY Apr. 22 at 3:30 — MISHCA ELMAN Violin (TicketsNow)

TONIGHT Apr. 22 at 7:30 — Sullivan's GOLDEN LEGEND
PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor
Soloists. Marjorie MOODY, Byron HUDSON, Jean MACDONALD, Charles BENNETT. $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c, (No Tax)

Tomorrow MON. EVE. Apr. 23 at 8:15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Weber—Mendelssohn—Wagner—Mozart—Saint-Saens
Soloist—Florence Macbeth, Soprano. $2, $1.50, $1 (No Tax)

SUN. AFT. Apr. 29 — PADEREWSKI TICKETS NOW

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY At 3:30 ELMAN

Tonight At 7:30 Sullivan's
GOLDEN LEGEND
People's Choral Union
GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor. Soloists: MARJORIE MOODY, BYRON HUDSON, JEAN MACDONALD, CHARLES BENNETT.
Tickets $2. $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c (No tax)

TOMORROW (MON. EVE.) 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER WAGNER MOZART
MENDELSSOHN SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (No tax)

SUN. AFT., APR. 29, at 3:30
PADEREWSKI

SUN. EVE., APR. 29, at 8:15
PATTI CONCERT by
LUELLA MELUIS

OPENING NIGHT—MONDAY, MAY 7
POPS Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players Agide Jacchia Conductor Popular Music Refreshments
Seats Tom'w—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Globe apr 22

SYMPHONY HALL

TODAY Apr. 22 at 3.30 — MISCHA ELMAN Violin (Tickets Now)

TONIGHT April 22, at 7:30 — Sullivan's GOLDEN LEGEND
PEOPLE'S CHORAL UNION GEORGE SAWYER DUNHAM, Conductor
Soloists: Marjorie MOODY, Byron HUDSON, Jean MACDONALD, Charles BENNETT. $2, $1.50, $1, 75c, 50c (No Tax)

TOMORROW MON. EVE. Apr. 23 at 8:15 — BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Weber—Mendelssohn—Wagner—Mozart—Saint-Saens
Soloist—FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano. $2, $1.50, $1 (no tax)

SUN. AFT. Apr. 29 at 3:30 — PADEREWSKI (Tickets Now)

SUN. EVE., Apr. 29 at 8:15 — PATTI Concert by LUELLA MELUIS

OPENING NIGHT Mon., May 7 38th Season — Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players AGIDE JACCHIA, Cond. POPS Popular Programs Refreshments
Ticket Sale Opens Tomorrow—$1, 75c, 50c. Admission 25c (No Tax)
MAIL ORDERS Filled Promptly. (Make Checks to Symphony Hall)

Post Apr 22

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER WAGNER MOZART
MENDELSSOHN SAINT-SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (No tax)

Herald apr 23

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER WAGNER MOZART
MENDELSSOHN SAINT SAENS
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (No Tax)

Globe Apr 23

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Weber Wagner Mozart
Mendelssohn Saint Saens
Soloist, Florence MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2, $1.50, $1. (No tax)

Post Apr 23

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT AT 8.15
Boston Symphony Orchestra
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
WEBER WAGNER MOZART
MENDELSSOHN SAINT SAENS
Soloist, FLORENCE MACBETH, Soprano
Seats $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 (No tax)

Transcript Apr 23

SYMPHONY HALL
Last Pair of Concerts But One This Season
THIS FRI., APR. 27, at 2:30; SAT. at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor

OPENING NIGHT—MONDAY, MAY 7
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Popular Programs—Refreshments
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Herald Apr 25

SYMPHONY HALL
Last Pair of Concerts But One This Season
This Fri., Apr. 27, at 2.30; Sat. at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor

SYMPHONY HALL
Last Pair of Concerts But One This Season
THIS FRI., APR. 27, at 2:30; SAT. at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor

SYMPHONY HALL
Tomorrow at 8:15
Historical Memorial Concert
To the Memory of
ADELINE PATTI
By Luella Meluis

American Apr 28

SYMPHONY HALL
EVERY NIGHT OPENING Mon., May 7
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats Now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

American apr 28

SYMPHONY HALL
Tomorrow 3.30 PADEREWSKI
CHOPIN Program—Admission $2

TOMORROW AT 8.15
Historical Memorial Concert
TO THE MEMORY OF
ADELINE PATTI
By LUELLA MELUIS

LAST CONCERT of the Season
THIS FRI., MAY 4, at 2.30; SAT. at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor

EVERY NIGHT OPENING Mon., May 7
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Sun., May 13—Russian Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Transcript Apr 28

SYMPHONY HALL
Tomorrow at 3:30 PADEREWSKI
CHOPIN Program—Admission $2

TOMORROW at 8:15
Historical Memorial Concert
to the memory of
ADELINE PATTI
By Luella Meluis

LAST CONCERT of the Season
THIS FRI., MAY 4, at 2:30; SAT. at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor

EVERY NIGHT OPENING Mon., May 7
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats Now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Traveler Apr 28

SYMPHONY HALL
Every Night OPENING Mon., May 7
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats Now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Telegram Apr 28

CUT-OUT

April 29, May 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7

SYMPHONY HALL
TODAY at 3:30 PADEREWSKI
CHOPIN Program—Admission $2
TONIGHT at 8:15
Historical Memorial Concert
to the memory of
ADELINA PATTI
By Luella Meluis
LAST CONCERT of the Season
THIS FRI., MAY 4, at 2:30; SAT. at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
EVERY NIGHT OPENING Mon., May 7
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats Now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Herald apr 29

SYMPHONY HALL
TODAY at 3:30 PADEREWSKI
CHOPIN Program—Admission $2
TONIGHT AT 8:15 Historical Memorial Concert
To the Memory of Adeline Patti
By Luella Meluis
LAST CONCERT of the Season
THIS FRI., MAY 4, at 2:30; SAT. at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
EVERY NIGHT OPENING MON., May 7
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Sun., May 13 — RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats Tom'w—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Globe apr 29

SYMPHONY HALL
TODAY at 3:30 PADEREWSKI
CHOPIN Program—Admission $2
TONIGHT AT 8:15
Historical Memori
A PATTI
By LUELLA MELUIS
LAST CONCERT of the Season
THIS FRI. MAY 4, AT 2:30; SAT. AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
EVERY NIGHT OPENING Mon., May 7
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats Now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Advertiser apr 29

SYMPHONY HALL
TODAY at 3:30 PADEREWSKI
CHOPIN Program—Admission $2
TONIGHT at 8:15
ORICAL MEMORIAL CONCERT
to the memory of
DELINE PATTI
By Luella Meluis
LAST CONCERT of the Season
THIS FRI., MAY 4, at 2:30; SAT. at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
EVERY NIGHT OPENING Mon., May 7
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats Tom'w—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Post apr 29

SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
Every Night
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Globe May 1

SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
Every Night
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Post May 1

SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
EVERY NIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13, Russian Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No Tax)

Transcript May 1

SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
EVERY NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Herald May 2

SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
Every Night
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Globe May 2

SYMPHONY HALL
LAST CONCERTS
Of the Season Today at 2:30, Sat. at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
SEATS ON SALE

Globe May 4

SYMPHONY HALL
LAST CONCERTS (This Season) This Fri. at 2.30. Sat at 8.15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor

Transcript May 3

SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
Every Night
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Post May 3

SANDERS THEATRE, Cambridge
TOMORROW, MAY 3 AT 8.00
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Tchaikovsky, "Pathetic Symphony"; Gretry, Suite; Weber, "Oberon" Overt.; Airs of Wagner and Saint-Saens by EMMA ROBERTS, Soloist. Seats at University Book Store, Harvard Sq.

SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
EVERY NIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13, Russian Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No Tax)

Transcript May 2

SYMPHONY HALL
LAST CONCERTS Of the Season Today at 2:30—Sat. at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Seats on Sale

Post May 4

SYMPHONY HALL
LAST CONCERT OF THE SEASON TONIGHT AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Seats on Sale
OPENING NEXT MON., May 7
POPS
EVERY NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13 — RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Herald May 5

SYMPHONY HALL
Last Concerts (This Season) This Fri. at 2:30. Sat. at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Seats on Sale
SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
EVERY NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Herald May 3

SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
EVERY NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
POPULAR PROGRAMS
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Monitor May 2

SYMPHONY HALL
LAST CONCERT of the Season TONIGHT at 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
Seats on Sale
OPENING NEXT MONDAY, MAY 7
POPS
EVERY NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats Now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No Tax)

Globe May 5

SYMPHONY HALL
LAST CONCERT of the season TONIGHT AT 8:15
BOSTON SYMPHONY
ORCHESTRA
PIERRE MONTEUX, Conductor
SEATS ON SALE
OPENING NEXT MON., May 7
POPS
Every Night
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Post May 5

SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
Every Night
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Globe May 4

SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
Every Night
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Post May 4

SYMPHONY HALL OPENING TOMORROW
(Every Night) Popular Programs by
ORCHESTRA OF EIGHTY SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
POPS
SUNDAY MAY 13 RUSSIAN—Tchaikovsky Program
Seats Now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Herald May 6

SYMPHONY HALL OPENING MONDAY May 7
(Every Night) Popular Programs by
ORCHESTRA OF EIGHTY SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
POPS
SUNDAY MAY 13 RUSSIAN—Tchaikovsky Program
Seats Now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

American May 5

SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
EVERY NIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
rams
Russian Tchaikowsky Program
—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No Tax)

Transcript May 4

Symphony Hall
(Every SUNDA
Seats No

SYMPHONY HALL
NING MONDAY, MAY 7
Night) Popular Programs by
ORCHESTRA OF EIGHTY SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
OPS
May 13 Russian—Tchaikovsky Program
Seats Now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Telegram May 5

SYMPHONY HALL OPENING TOMORROW
(Every Night) Popular Programs by
ORCHESTRA OF EIGHTY SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
POPS
SUNDAY MAY 13 RUSSIAN—Tchaikovsky Program
Seats Now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Globe May 6

SYMPHONY HALL OPENING TOMORROW
(Every Night) Popular Programs by
ORCHESTRA OF EIGHTY SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
SUNDAY MAY 13
Seats Now—25

SYMPHONY HALL OPENING MONDAY MAY 7
(Every Night) Popular Programs by
ORCHESTRA OF EIGHTY SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
POPS
SUNDAY MAY 13 RUSSIAN—Tchaikovsky Program
Seats Now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Traveler May 5

SYMPHONY HALL—Opening MON., May 7
POPS
Every Night
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Programs
Sun., May 13—RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Seats now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Monitor May 5

Symphony Hall (Every Night) OPENING
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 7

Symphony Hall (Every Night) OPENING
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 7

Post May 4

Symphony Hall (Every Night) OPENING
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 7

Symphony Hall (Every Night) OPENING
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Traveler May 7

Symphony Hall (Every Night) OPENING
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 7

Symphony Hall (Every Night) OPENING
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 7

Symphony Hall (Every Night) OPENING
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 7

[68]

CUT-OUT

May 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 1923.

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
2t(A) my 8

Transcript May 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Traveler May 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS

PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
RUSSIAN—Tchaikovsky Program
50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 9

HALL (Every Night)
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
RUSSIAN—Tchaikovsky Program
$1 (no tax)

American May 9

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Sun, May 13—Russian—Tchaikowsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
4t(A) my 8

Transcript May 9

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 9

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUNDAY May 13 RUSSIAN Tchaikovsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 10

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Sun., May 13—Russian Tchaikowsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 10

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conducter
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUNDAY May 13 RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 10

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUNDAY MAY 13 RUSSIAN TCHAIKOVSKY PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 10

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUNDAY May 13 RUSSIAN Tchaikovsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 10

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUNDAY MAY 13 RUSSIAN TCHAIKOVSKY PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
4t(A) my 8

Transcript May 10

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
May 13 RUSSIAN Tchaikovsky

Refreshments
RUSSIAN Tchaikovsky Program
50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 10

HALL (Every Night)
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUNDAY May 13 RUSSIAN Tchaikovsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Sun., May 13—Russian Tchaikowsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
[redacted]

Advertiser May 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUNDAY MAY 13 RUSSIAN TCHAIKOVSKY PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUNDAY May 13 RUSSIAN Tchaikovsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUNDAY MAY 13 RUSSIAN TCHAIKOVSKY PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
4t(A) my 8

Transcript May 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUN. May 13 RUSSIAN Tchaikovsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUNDAY May 13 RUSSIAN Tchaikovsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 12

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Sun., May 13—Russian Tchaikowsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 12

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUNDAY May 13 RUSSIAN Tchaikowsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 12

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
13 RUSSIAN TCHAIKOVSKY PROGRAM
25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 12

POPS
SYMPHONY HALL
EVERY NIGHT
ORCHESTRA
OF 80
SYMPHONY
PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
POPULAR PROGRAMS
Refreshments
TOMOR'W 1st Sunday Concert
RUSSIAN Program
Mon. May 14, Harvard Freshman Glee Club
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

American May 12

POPS
SYMPHONY HALL
EVERY NIGHT
ORCHESTRA
OF 80
SYMPHONY
PLAYERS
AGIDE JACCHIA
Conductor
POPULAR PROGRAMS
Refreshments
TOMOR'W 1st Sunday Concert
RUSSIAN Program
MON., May 14-Harvard Freshman Glee Club
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax).

Transcript May 12

POPS
SYMPHONY HALL
EVERY NIGHT
ORCHESTRA
OF 80
SYMPHONY
PLAYERS
AGIDE JACCHIA
Conductor
POPULAR PROGRAMS
Refreshments
TOM'W 1st Sunday Concert
RUSSIAN Program
MON., May 14—Harvard Freshman Glee Club
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Traveler May 12

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs, Refreshments
Tomor'w—Russian TCHAIKOVSKY PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Monitor May 12

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TOM'W RUSSIAN Tchaikovsky Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 12

Herald May 13

POPS
SYMPHONY HALL
EVERY NIGHT
ORCHESTRA
OF 80
SYMPHONY
PLAYERS
AGIDE JACCHIA
Conductor
POPULAR PROGRAMS
Refreshments
TONIGHT 1st Sunday Concert
RUSSIAN Program
MON., May 14—Harvard Freshman Glee Club
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Globe May 13

POPS
SYMPHONY HALL
EVERY NIGHT
ORCHESTRA
OF 80
SYMPHONY
PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
POPULAR PROGRAMS
Refreshments
TONIGHT 1st Sunday Concert
RUSSIAN Program
Mon. May 14, Harvard Freshman GleeClub
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Advertiser May 13

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—HARVARD FRESHMAN GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 14

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
Tonight—HARVARD Freshman Glee Club
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 14

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—HARVARD Freshman Glee Club
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 14

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs.
Refreshments
Tonight—HARVARD Freshman Glee Club
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 14

HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—HARVARD FRESHMAN GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 14

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight — HARVARD Freshman Glee Club
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 14

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Harvard Freshman Glee Club
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 14

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS EVERY NIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Music
Refreshments
Smoking
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No Tax)

M.I. Tech Senior Review May 10

CUT-OUT

TIGHT BINDING

May 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
NIGHT—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
ickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 15

YMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
NIGHT—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
ickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 15

YMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
IGHT—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
kets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 15

YMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
IGHT—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
ickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 15

PHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
IGHT—HARVARD FRESHMAN GLEE CLUB
ickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
ONIGHT—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert, May 27—All-WAGNER
ickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 15

YMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
onight—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sunday Concert May 27; ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert, May 27; ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert, May 27—All-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 17

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 17

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 17

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 17

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
2nd
Tic

SYM
PO
2nd S
Ticket

SYM
PO
2nd Su
Tickets

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 18

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sunday Concert May 27; ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 18

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 18

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert, May 27—All-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sunday Concert May 27; ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 19

SYMPHONY HALL

EVERY NIGHT
Popular Programs
by
Orchestra
of 80
Symphony
Players
gide Jacchia
Conductor
efreshments
RST NIGHT, with
Thurs., May 24.
D SUNDAY Con-
y 27—Program All
RD NIGHT, Mon.,
eats, $1 and 75c;
l., $1, 75c and 50c.
n 25c (no tax).

POPS

Transcript May 19

Traveler May 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 19

SYMPHONY
HALL

EVERY NIGHT
Popular Programs by
Orchestra
of 80
Symphony
Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor

Refreshments
AMHERST NIGHT with songs—Thurs., May 24.
2nd SUNDAY Concert May 27—Program: ALL-WAGNER. HARVARD Night Mon., May 28.
Table Seats, $1 & 75c; 1st Bal. $1, 75c & 50c
Admission 25c (no tax)

POPS

Herald May 20

SYMPHONY
HALL

EVERY NIGHT
Popular Programs by
Orchestra
of 80
Symphony
Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor

Refreshments
AMHERST NIGHT with songs—Thurs., May 24.
2nd SUNDAY Concert May 27—Program: ALL-WAGNER. HARVARD Night Mon., May 28.
Table Seats, $1 & 75c; 1st Bal. $1, 75c & 50c.
Admission 25c (no tax)

POPS

Globe May 20

SYMPHONY
HALL

EVERY NIGHT
Popular Programs by
Orchestra
of 80
Symphony
Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor

Refreshments
AMHERST NIGHT with songs—Thurs., May 24.
2nd SUNDAY Concert May 27—Program: ALL-WAGNER HARVARD Night, Mon., May 28.
Table Seats, $1 & 75c; 1st Bal. $1, 75c & 50c
Admission 25c (no tax)

POPS

Advertiser May 20

SYMPHONY
HALL

EVERY NIGHT
Popular Programs by
Orchestra
of 80
Symphony
Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor

Refreshments
AMHERST NIGHT with songs—Thurs., May 24.
2nd SUNDAY Concert May 27—Program: ALL-WAGNER. HARVARD NIGHT Mon., May 28.
Table Seats, $1 & 75c; 1st Bal. $1, 75c & 50c
Admission 25c (no tax)

POPS

Post May 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sunday Concert May 27; ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
2t(A) my 21

Transcript May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
2t(A) my 21

Transcript May 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 22

TIGHT BINDING

CUT-OUT

May 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—HARVARD FRESHMAN GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert, May 27—All-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2d Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Songs by Radcliffe Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sunday Concert May 27; ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert, May 27; ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert May 27—All-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 17

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 17

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2d Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 17

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 17

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80

2nd
Tic

SYM
PO
2nd S
Ticket

SYM
PO
2nd Su
Tick

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2d S Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 18

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sunday Concert May 27; ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 18

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 18

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert, May 27—All-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert, May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2d Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sun. Concert May 27—ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sunday Concert May 27; ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 19

SYMPHONY HALL
EVERY NIGHT
Popular Programs by
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
gide Jacchia
Conductor
efreshments
RST NIGHT, with
Thurs., May 24.
D SUNDAY Con-
ay 27—Program All
RD NIGHT, Mon.,
eats, $1 and 75c;
l., $1, 75c and 50c.
n 25c (no tax).
POPS

Transcript May 19

Traveler May 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 19

SYMPHONY HALL
EVERY NIGHT
Popular Programs by
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
AMHERST NIGHT with songs — Thurs., May 24.
2nd SUNDAY Concert May 27—Program: ALL-WAGNER. HARVARD Night Mon., May 28.
Table Seats, $1 & 75c; 1st Bal. $1, 75c & 50c
Admission 25c (no tax)
POPS

Herald May 20

SYMPHONY HALL
EVERY NIGHT
Popular Programs by
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
AMHERST NIGHT with songs — Thurs., May 24.
2nd SUNDAY Concert May 27 — Program: ALL-WAGNER. HARVARD Night Mon., May 28.
Table Seats, $1 & 75c; 1st Bal. $1, 75c & 50c.
Admission 25c (no tax)
POPS

Globe May 20

SYMPHONY HALL
EVERY NIGHT
Popular Programs by
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
AMHERST NIGHT with songs — Thurs., May 24.
2nd SUNDAY Concert May 27 — Program: ALL - WAGNER HARVARD Night, Mon., May 28.
Table Seats, $1 & 75c; 1st Bal. $1, 75c & 50c
Admission 25c (no tax)
POPS

Advertiser May 20

SYMPHONY HALL
EVERY NIGHT
Popular Programs by
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
AMHERST NIGHT with songs — Thurs., May 24.
2nd SUNDAY Concert May 27 — Program: ALL-WAGNER. HARVARD NIGHT Mon., May 28.
Table Seats, $1 & 75c; 1st Bal. $1, 75c & 50c
Admission 25c (no tax)
POPS

Post May 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd Sunday Concert May 27; ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
2t(A) my 21

Transcript May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
2t(A) my 21

Transcript May 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 22

CUT-OUT

May 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT AMHERST COLLEGE SONGS OPEN TO PUBLIC
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 24

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT AMHERST COLLEGE SONGS OPEN TO PUBLIC
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 24

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT AMHERST COLLEGE SONGS OPEN TO PUBLIC
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 24

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT AMHERST COLLEGE SONGS OPEN TO PUBLIC
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 24

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 24

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT AMHERST COLLEGE SONGS OPEN TO PUBLIC
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 24

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight Amherst College Songs Open to Public
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 24

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd SUNDAY CONCERT MAY 27 All-Wagner
MON. MAY 28 HARVARD NIGHT—HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 25

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd SUNDAY CONCERT MAY 27 ALL-WAGNER
MON. MAY 28 HARVARD NIGHT—HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 25

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd SUNDAY CONCERT MAY 27 ALL-WAGNER
MON., MAY 28 HARVARD NIGHT—HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 25

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd SUNDAY Concert May 27 ALL-WAGNER
MON. May 28 HARVARD NIGHT—HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 25

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT AMHERST COLLEGE SONGS OPEN TO PUBLIC
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 25

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd SUNDAY CONCERT MAY 27 ALL-WAGNER
MON. MAY 28 HARVARD NIGHT—HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 25

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2d Sunday Concert May 27 ALL-WAGNER
Mon. May 28 HARVARD NIGHT—Harvard Glee Club
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 25

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd SUNDAY CONCERT MAY 27 All-Wagner
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 25

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd SUNDAY CONCERT MAY 27 ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 26

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd SUNDAY CONCERT MAY 27 ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 26

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd SUNDAY Concert May 27 ALL-WAGNER
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 26

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2nd SUNDAY CONCERT MAY 27 ALL-WAGNER
MON. MAY 28 HARVARD NIGHT—HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American May 26

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Tomorrow Second Sun. CONCERT ALL WAGNER
MON., May 28 HARVARD NIGHT—Harvard GLEE CLUB
MEMORIAL DAY—Special Programme
Table Seats $1.00 and 75c.; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Transcript May 26

Symphony Hall—Every Night
P
Orchestra
AGI
Popul
TOMOR'
MON., May 28
MEMO
Table
75c an

POPS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
2d Sunday Concert May 27 ALL-WAGNER
Mon. May 28 HARVARD NIGHT—Harvard Glee Club
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 26

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
2nd SUN
Mon., May 28
Ti

SYMPHONY HALL—Tonight
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TONIGHT 2nd Sun. CONCERT ALL WAGNER
TOMOR'W—HARVARD NIGHT-Harvard GLEE CLUB
MEMORIAL DAY—Special Programme
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Herald May 27

SYMPHONY HALL—Tonight
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Tonight— 2nd Sun. CONCERT All WAGNER
TOMOR'W—HARVARD NIGHT—Harvard GLEE CLUB
MEMORIAL DAY—Special Programme
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Globe May 27

Advertiser May 27

HONY HALL—Tonight
OPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TONIGHT 2nd Sun. CONCERT ALL WAGNER
TOM'W—HARVARD NIGHT—Harvard GLEE CLUB
MEMORIAL DAY—Special Program
Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00,
d 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Post May 27

PHONY HALL (Every Night)
OPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
HARVARD NIGHT—HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 28

[71]

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
HARVARD NIGHT—HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 28

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Harvard NIGHT, HARVARD Glee Club
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 28

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
HARVARD NIGHT—HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 28

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
HARVARD NIGHT—HARVARD GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 28

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
HARVARD NIGHT Harvard GLEE CLUB
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 28

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
WED. MAY 30 SONGS BY BAKULE CHORUS
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 29

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
WED. MAY 30 SONGS BY Bakule Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 29

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Wed. May 30 Songs by Bakule Chorus
75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 29

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
WED. MAY 30 Songs by BAKULE CHORUS
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 29

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
WED. MAY 30 Songs by BAKULE CHORUS
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 29

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Wed. May 30 Songs by BAKULE CHORUS
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 29

CUT-OUT

May 30, 31; June 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
Tonight Songs by Celebrated BAKULE CHORUS
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 30

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
Tonight Songs By Celebrated Bakule Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Glob May 30

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight Songs by Celebrated Bakule Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 30

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Program
Refreshments
TONIGHT SONGS BY CELEBRATED BAKULE CHORUS
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 30

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 31

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT June 10 Operatic Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Glob May 31

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 Operatic Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 31

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 31

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. Concert June 10 OPERATIC Programme
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 31

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd Sun Concert June 10 Operatic Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 31

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 1

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT June 10 Opera

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 Operatic Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 1

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 1

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. Concert June 10 OPERATIC Programme
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 1

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd Sun Concert June 10 Operatic Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 1

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 2

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT June 10 Operatic Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 2

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 Operatic Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 2

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 2

SYMPHONY HALL
Trans 6/1
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Third Sun. Concert June 10 OPERATIC Program
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Transcript June 2

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd Sun Concert June 10 Operatic Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 2

POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs, Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT June 10 OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Monitor June

Traveler June 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Her 6/3
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Player
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT June 10 OPERATIC Program
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no

Herald June 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Gl 6/3
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
3rd SUN CONCERT JUNE 10 Operatic Program
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00. 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Globe June 3

SYMPHONY HALL
Adv 6/3
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Program
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Advertiser June 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Post 6/3
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 Operatic Program
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Post June 3

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 4

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 4 [72]

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 4

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 4 5

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 4

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 4

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Tic

SYM
PO
Ticke

SYM
P Ticke

SYM
PO
Tickets

PO
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 5

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Player
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Program
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 5

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs, Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT June 10 OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Monitor June 6

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
Next SUNDAY—OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 6

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
Next Sunday—Operatic Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 6

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
Next SUN.—OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 6

(Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
NEXT SUNDAY—OPERATIC PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 6

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next SUNDAY—OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
3t(A)
Je 6

Transcript June 6

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
OPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
t Sunday OPERATIC Prog.
ickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 6

PHONY HALL (Every Night)
OPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
UNDAY—OPERATIC Program
ets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 7

ONY HALL (Every Night)
OPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
Sunday—Operatic Prog.
ets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 7

PHONY HALL (Every Night)
OPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
PopularPrograms
Refreshments
SUN.—OPERATIC Prog.
kets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 7

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
NEXT SUNDAY—OPERATIC PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 7

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next SUNDAY—OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
3t(A)

Transcript June 7

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next Sunday OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 7

CUT-OUT

May 30, 31, June 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight Songs by Celebrated BAKULE CHORUS
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 30

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight Songs By Celebrated Bakule Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 30

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight Songs by Celebrated Bakule Chorus
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 30

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT SONGS BY CELEBRATED BAKULE CHORUS
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 30

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald May 31

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT June 10 Operatic Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe May 31

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 Operatic Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser May 31

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post May 31

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. Concert June 10 OPERATIC Programme
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript May 31

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd Sun Concert June 10 Operatic Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram May 31

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 1

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT June 10 Operatic Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 Operatic Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 1

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 1

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. Concert June 10 OPERATIC Programme
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 1

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd Sun Concert June 10 Operatic Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 1

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 2

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT June 10 Operatic Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 2

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 Operatic Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 2

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Third Sun. Concert June 10 OPERATIC Program
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Transcript June 2

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
3rd Sun Concert June 10 Operatic Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 2

POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs, Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT June 10 OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Monitor June 2

Traveler June 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Her 6/3
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Player
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT June 10 OPERATIC Program
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Herald June 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Gl 6/3
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
3rd SUN CONCERT JUNE 10 Operatic Program
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00. 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Globe June 3

SYMPHONY HALL
Adv 6/3
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 OPERATIC Program
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Advertiser June 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Post 6/3
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT JUNE 10 Operatic Program
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Post June 3

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 4

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 4 [72]

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 4

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 4 5

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 4

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 4

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
TONIGHT

Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 5

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Player
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Program
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 5

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs, Refreshments
3rd SUN. CONCERT June 10 OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Monitor June 6

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next SUNDAY—OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 6

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next Sunday—Operatic Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 6

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next SUN.—OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 6

(Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
NEXT SUNDAY—OPERATIC PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 6

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next SUNDAY—OPERATIC Prog.
3t(A) Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax) Je 6

Transcript June 6

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
OPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
t Sunday OPERATIC Prog.
ickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 6

MPHONY HALL (Every Night)
OPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
UNDAY—OPERATIC Program
ets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 7

ONY HALL (Every Night)
OPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Sunday—Operatic Prog.
ts—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 7

HONY HALL (Every Night)
OPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SUN.—OPERATIC Prog.
ets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 7

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
NEXT SUNDAY—OPERATIC PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 7

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next SUNDAY—OPERATIC Prog.
3t(A) Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 7

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next Sunday OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 7

CUT-OUT

June 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16,

In "THE SIGN OF THE ROSE"
SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Next SUNDAY—OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Next Sunday—Operatic Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Next SUN.—OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
NEXT SUNDAY—OPERATIC PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 8

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Next SUNDAY—OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
3t(A) je 6

Transcript June 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Next Sunday OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 8

In "THE SIGN OF THE ROSE"
SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Next SUNDAY—OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 9

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Next Sunday—Operatic Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 9

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Next SUN.—OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 9

(Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
NEXT SUNDAY—OPERATIC PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 9

SYMPHONY HALL—EVERY NIGHT
POPS
Trans 6/9
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programme—Refreshments
TOMORROW 3rd Sun. CONCERT OPERATIC
MON., JUNE 11—TECH NIGHT
Tuesday, June 12—Masonic Clubs Night
(All Nights Open to the Public)

SYMPHONY HALL EVERY NIGHT
POPS
Trav 3/9
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TOMORROW 3rd SUN. CONCERT OPERATIC
MON., JUNE 11—TECH NIGHT
TUES., JUNE 12—MASONIC CLUBS NIGHT
(All Nights Open to the Public)
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Traveler June 9

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tel 6/9
Next Sunday OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 9

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs. Refreshments.
TOMORROW 3rd Sun. Program OPERATIC
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

SYMPHONY HALL—Tonight
POPS
Adv 6/10
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TONIGHT 3rd Sun. Concert OPERATIC
TOMORROW—TECH NIGHT
Tues., June 12—Masonic Clubs Night
(All Nights Open to the Public)
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Advertiser June 10

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tomor'w 3rd Sun. Program Operatic
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American June 9

Transcript June 9

Post June 10

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 11

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 12

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 12

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 12

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 12

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 12

[73]

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 13

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 13

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 13

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 13

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 13

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 13

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 14

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TO NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tues. June 19 Program of Dance Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 14

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TUES., June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
ThM(A) je 14

Transcript June 14

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tel 6/14
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 14

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TO NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tues. June 19 Program of Dance Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 15

(Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
LAST SUN. Concert JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 15

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TUES., June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Last Sun. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TUES. JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
Last Sun. Concert, June 24, RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TO NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tues. June 19 Program of Dance Music
Last Sun. CONCERT JUNE 24 Russian Prog
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
LAST SUN. Concert JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TUES., June 19, Program of DANCE Music
LAST SUN. Concert June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American June 16

SYMPHONY HALL
P O P S
Trans 6/16
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TUES., June 19 Program of DANCE Music
NEXT (and Last) SUN. Concert—June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Table Seats $1.00 and 75c; Balcony $1.00 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Transcript June 16

CUT-OUT

June 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 1923

In "THE SIGN OF THE ROSE"
SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next SUNDAY—OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next Sunday—Operatic Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next SUN.—OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
NEXT SUNDAY—OPERATIC PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 8

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next SUNDAY—OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
St(A) je 6

Transcript June 8

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next Sunday OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 8

In "THE SIGN OF THE ROSE"
SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next SUNDAY—OPERATIC Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 9

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next Sunday—Operatic Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 9

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Next SUN.—OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 9

(Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
NEXT SUNDAY—OPERATIC PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 9

SYMPHONY HALL—EVERY NIGHT
POPS
June 6/9
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programme—Refreshments
TOMORROW 3rd Sun. CONCERT OPERATIC
MON., JUNE 11—TECH NIGHT
Tuesday, June 12—Masonic Clubs Night
(All Nights Open to the Public)
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Transcript June 9

SYMPHONY HALL EVERY NIGHT
POPS
Trav 6/9
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TOMORROW 3rd SUN. CONCERT OPERATIC
MON., JUNE 11—TECH NIGHT
TUES., JUNE 12—MASONIC CLUBS NIGHT
(All Nights Open to the Public)
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Traveler June 9

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tel 6/9
Next Sunday OPERATIC Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 9

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs. Refreshments.
TOMORROW 3rd Sun. Program OPERATIC
6/9
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

[illegible] June 9

SYMPHONY HALL—Tonight
POPS
Adv 6/10
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TONIGHT 3rd Sun. CONCERT OPERATIC
TOMORROW—TECH NIGHT
Tues., June 12—Masonic Clubs Night
(All Nights Open to the Public)
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Advertiser June 10

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tomor'w 3rd Sun. Program Operatic
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American June 9

Post June 10

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Adv 6/11
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 11

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 11

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 4

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 12

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 12

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 12

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 12

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tel 6/12
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 12

[73]

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
6/13
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 13

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
6/13
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 13

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Adv 6/13
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 13

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Post 6/13
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 13

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
6/13
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 13

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
6/13
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 13

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 14

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TO NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Adv 6/14
Tues. June 19 Program of Dance Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 14

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
6/14
TUES., June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
ThM(A) je 14

Transcript June 14

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tel 6/14
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 14

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Her 6/15
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TO NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tues. June 19 Program of Dance Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
LAST SUN. Concert JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 15

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
6/15
TUES., June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Last Sun. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
~~Telegram 6/15~~

Telegram. June 15

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TUES. JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
Last Sun. Concert, June 24, RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TO NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tues. June 19 Program of Dance Music
Last Sun. CONCERT JUNE 24 Russian Prog
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
LAST SUN. Concert JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
6/16
TUES., June 19, Program of DANCE Music
LAST SUN. Concert June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American June 16

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Trans 6/16
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TUES., June 19 Program of DANCE Music
NEXT (and Last) SUN. Concert—June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Table Seats $1.00 and 75c; Balcony $1.00 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Transcript June 16

TIGHT BINDING

June 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 1923.

SYMPHONY HALL
Trav 6/16
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TUES., JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
NEXT (and LAST) SUN. Concert—June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Traveler June 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Tel 6/16
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tues., June 19, Program of Dance Music.
Last Sun. Concert, June 24, Russian prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 16

POPS
6/16
Symphony Hall
TONIGHT
Orchestra of Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Refreshments
Popular Music
Tues., June 19, Program of Dance Music
Last Sun. Concert June 24 Russian Program
Tickets 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Monitor June 16

SYMPHONY HALL
Her 6/17
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TUES., JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
NEXT (and LAST) SUN. Concert—June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Herald June 17

SYMPHONY HALL
Gl 6/17
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TUES., JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
NEXT (and LAST) SUN. Concert—June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Globe June 17

SYMPHONY HALL
Adv 6/17
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TUES., JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
NEXT (and Last) SUN. CONCERT — JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Advertiser June 17

SYMPHONY HALL
Post 6/17
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TUES., JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
NEXT And Last SUN. Concert June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Post June 17

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Her 6/18
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 18

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Gl 6/18
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TOMORROW JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 18

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Post 6/18
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 18

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Her 6/19
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Gl 6/19
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TO-NIGHT Program of Dance Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Adv 6/19
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Post 6/19
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Amer 6/19
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—Program of DANCE Music
Last Sun. CONCERT JUNE 24 Russian Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American June 19

SYMPHONY HALL
Amer 6/2
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
3rd Sun. CONCERT JUNE 10 Operatic Program
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

American June 2

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS
Trans 6/19
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TO-NIGHT Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Tel 6/19
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TO-NIGHT Program of Dance Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Her 6/20
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Gl 6/20
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Adv 6/20
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Post 6/20
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Trans
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
—Popular Programs
Refreshments
LAST SUN. Concert June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
2t(A) je 20

Transcript June 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Tel
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
H
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Gl
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Last Sun. CONCERT JUNE 24 Russian Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
P
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Trans 6/21
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
LAST SUN. Concert June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
2t(A) je 20

Transcript June 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Tel 6/21
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Last Sun. Concert June 24 Russian Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Her
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Gl 6/22
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Adv 6/22
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
P 6/22
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Trans
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Tel
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Gl
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Last Sun. JUNE 24 CONCERT Russian Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Post 6/23
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 23

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Trans 6/23
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Tomor'w Last Sun. Concert RUSSIAN Prog.
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS., June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2 — ITALIAN-VERDI Program.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c. (No tax.)

Transcript June 23

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Trav
POPS
6/23
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Tomorrow Last Sun. Concert RUSSIAN Prog.
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
Thurs. Jun. 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Traveler June 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
Tel 6/23
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Last Sun. Concert June 24 Russian Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 23

SYMPHONY HALL
Monitor
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS., June 28 A SPANISH Program, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Monitor June 23

TIGHT BINDING

June 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Trav 6/16
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TUES., JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
NEXT (and LAST) SUN. Concert—June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Traveler June 16

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Tel 6/16
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tues., June 19, Program of Dance Music.
Last Sun. Concert, June 24, Russian prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 16

POPS
Mon 6/16
Symphony Hall TONIGHT
Orchestra of Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Refreshments Popular Music
Tues., June 19, Program of Dance Music
Last Sun. Concert June 24 Russian Program
Tickets 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (No tax)

Monitor June 16

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Her 6/17
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TUES., JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
NEXT (and LAST) SUN. Concert—June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Herald June 17

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Gl 6/17
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TUES., JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
NEXT (and LAST) SUN. Concert—June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Globe June 17

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Adv 6/17
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TUES., JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
NEXT (and Last) SUN. CONCERT—JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Advertiser June 17

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Post 6/17
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TUES., JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
NEXT And Last SUN. Concert June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Post June 17

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Her 6/18
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 18

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Gl 6/18
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TOMORROW JUNE 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 18

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Post 6/18
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TUES. June 19 Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 18

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Her 6/19
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tonight—Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Gl 6/19
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TO-NIGHT Program of Dance Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Adv 6/19
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tonight—Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Post 6/19
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TONIGHT Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Am 6/19
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TONIGHT—Program of DANCE Music
Last Sun. CONCERT JUNE 24 Russian Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American June 19

SYMPHONY HALL
Amer 6/2
POPS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
3rd Sun. CONCERT JUNE 10 Operatic Program
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

American June 2

Symphony Hall (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Tran 6/19
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TO-NIGHT Program of DANCE Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TO-NIGHT Program of Dance Music
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 19

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Gl 6/20
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Adv 6/20
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Post 6/20
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Tran
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
LAST SUN. Concert June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
2t(A) je 20

Transcript June 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Tel
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 20

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
H
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Last Sun. CONCERT JUNE 24 Russian Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
P
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Tran 6/21
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
LAST SUN. Concert June 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)
2t(A) je 20

Transcript June 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Last Sun. Concert June 24 Russian Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 21

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Gl 6/22
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Adv 6/22
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
P 6/22
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Tran
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Tel
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 22

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Adv
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Last Sun. JUNE 24 CONCERT Russian Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Post 6/23
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
LAST SUN. CONCERT JUNE 24 RUSSIAN Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 23

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Tran 6/23
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Tomor'w Last Sun. Concert RUSSIAN Prog.
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS., June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2 — ITALIAN-VERDI Program.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c. (No tax.)

Transcript June 23

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
POPS
Trav 6/23
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Tomorrow Last Sun. Concert RUSSIAN Prog.
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
Thurs. Jun. 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Traveler June 23

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS TONIGHT
Tel 6/23
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Last Sun. Concert June 24 Russian Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 23

SYMPHONY HALL
Mon 6/23
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS., June 28 A SPANISH Program, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Monitor June 23

June 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 1923.

SYMPHONY HALL, Tonight
LAST WEEK But One
POPS
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TONIGHT Last Sun. Concert RUSSIAN Prog.
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
Thurs. Jun. 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Herald June 24

SYMPHONY HALL, Tonight
LAST WEEK But One
POPS
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TONIGHT LAST SUN. CONCERT RUSSIAN Prog.
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS., June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Globe June 24

SYMPHONY HALL, Tonight
LAST WEEK But One
POPS
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TONIGHT LAST SUN. CONCERT RUSSIAN Prog.
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
Thurs. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Advertiser June 24

SYMPHONY HALL, Tonight
LAST WEEK But One
POPS
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Tonight LAST SUN. CONCERT RUSSIAN Prog.
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
Thurs. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Post June 24

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
THURS. Jan. 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
THURS. Jun. 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
THURS. Jan. 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Thurs. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, Drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
THURS. Jun 28 A SPANISH Program drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS., June 27 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 26

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 26

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 26

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
WED., JUNE 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 26

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
Thurs. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, Drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 26

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS. Jun 28 A SPANISH Program drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 26

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tonight—REQUEST NIGHT
THURS., June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 27

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TONIGHT REQUEST NIGHT
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 27

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tonight—REQUEST NIGHT
THURS., June 28 SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 27

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tonight, Request Night
THURS., June 28 SPANISH Program drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 27

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Tonight—REQUEST NIGHT
Thurs. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, Drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 27

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TONIGHT — Request Night
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH Program drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 27

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 9 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TO-NIGHT A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 28

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 9 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TO-NIGHT A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 28

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 9 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TO-NIGHT A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Rep.)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 28

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 9 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TO-NIGHT A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 28

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 9 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TO-NIGHT A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDE Program.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Program (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 28

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 9 NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
TO-NIGHT A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 28

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 8 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 29

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 8 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Rep.)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 29

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 8 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Program
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 29.

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 8 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 29

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 8 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Program.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Program (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 29

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 8 NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 29

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 7 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 30

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 7 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Program
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 30

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 7 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Rep.)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 30

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 7 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia Conductor
Popular Programs Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 30

CLOSING WEEK
SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Transcript June 30

June 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 1923

SYMPHONY HALL, Tonight
LAST WEEK But One
POPS
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TONIGHT Last Sun. Concert RUSSIAN Prog.
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
Thurs. Jun. 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Herald June 24

SYMPHONY HALL, Tonight
LAST WEEK But One
POPS
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TONIGHT LAST SUN. CONCERT RUSSIAN Prog.
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS., June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Globe June 24

SYMPHONY HALL, Tonight
LAST WEEK But One
POPS
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
TONIGHT LAST SUN. CONCERT RUSSIAN Prog.
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
Thurs. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Advertiser June 24

SYMPHONY HALL, Tonight
LAST WEEK But One
POPS
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Tonight LAST SUN. CONCERT RUSSIAN Prog.
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
Thurs. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Post June 24

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
THURS. Jan. 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
THURS. Jun. 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
THURS. Jan. 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

American June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Thurs. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, Drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
THURS. Jun 28 A SPANISH Program drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 25

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS., June 27 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 26

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 26

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 26

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
WED., JUNE 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 26

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
Thurs. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, Drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 26

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
WED., June 27 REQUEST NIGHT
THURS. Jun 28 A SPANISH Program drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 26

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—REQUEST NIGHT
THURS., June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 27

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT REQUEST NIGHT
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 27

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—REQUEST NIGHT
THURS., June 28 SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 27

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2 WEEKS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight, Request Night
THURS., June 28 SPANISH Program drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 27

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight — REQUEST NIGHT
Thurs. June 28 A SPANISH PROGRAM, Drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 27

SYMPHONY HALL (Every Night)
POPS
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT — Request Night
THURS. June 28 A SPANISH Program drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 27

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 9 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TO-NIGHT A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 28

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 9 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TO-NIGHT A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 28

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 9 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TO-NIGHT A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Rep.)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 28

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 9 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TO-NIGHT A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 28

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 9 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TO-NIGHT A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDE Program.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Program (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 28

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 9 NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TO-NIGHT A SPANISH PROGRAM, drawn from the wealth of music inspired by the fascinating rhythms of Spain.
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 28

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 8 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 29

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 8 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Rep.)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 29

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 8 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Program
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 29.

[75]

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 8 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 29

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 8 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Program.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Program (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript June 29

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 8 NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80 Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 29

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 7 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald June 30

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 7 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Program
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe June 30

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 7 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Rep.)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser June 30

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 7 NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80 SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post June 30

CLOSING WEEK
SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated).
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Transcript June 30

CUT-OUT

TIGHT BINDING

June 30, July 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 1923.

LAST 8
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
LIAN-VERDI Prog.
SIAN Program
EST Prog. (Repeated)
ERATIC Program
NER Program
ING NIGHT
75c, $1 (no tax)

une 29

LAST 8
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
ERDI Program.
Program
Program (Repeated)
IC Program
Program
NIGHT
, $1 (no tax)

t June 29

LAST 8
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
mphony Player
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
lar Programs
efreshments
DI Prog.
ogram
(Repeated) Program
ram
HT
(no tax)

une 29

LAST 7
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
-VERDI Prog.
N Program.
T Prog. (Repeated)
ATIC Program.
Program.
NIGHT.
75c, $1 (no tax)

June 30

LAST 7
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
ALIAN-VERDI Program
USSIAN Program.
QUEST Prog. (Repeated)
PERATIC Program
GNER Program
SING NIGHT
50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

obe June 30

LAST 7
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TALIAN-VERDI Prog.
USSIAN Program.
EQUEST Prog. (Rep.)
OPERATIC Program
GNER Program
OSING NIGHT
5c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

tiser June 30

LAST 7
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TALIAN-VERDI Prog.
RUSSIAN Program
EQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
OPERATIC Program
GNER Program
OSING NIGHT
50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

st June 30

ING WEEK
PHONY HALL
OPS
f Symphony Players
ACCHIA, Conductor
ograms—Refreshments
TALIAN-VERDI Prog.
USSIAN Program.
EQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
PERATIC Program.

cript June 30

CLOSING WEEK
SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
rchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
pular Programs—Refreshments
July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
July 5—OPERATIC Program.
July 6—WAGNER Program.
July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00,
d 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Traveler June 30

PHONY HALL
OPS
LAST 7
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
July 3—RUSSIAN Program
July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
July 5—OPERATIC Program
July 6—WAGNER Program
July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
ckets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 30

YMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 7
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Player
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
on., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
es., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
ed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
hurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
ri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
at., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Monitor June 30

CLOSING WEEK
SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00,
75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Herald July 1

CLOSING WEEK
SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00,
75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Globe July 1

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 6
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Italian-Verdi Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post July 2

CLOSING WEEK
SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—Request Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00,
75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Advertiser July 1

Post July

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 6
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Italian-Verdi Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c $1 (no tax)

American July 2

Herald July 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 6
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—ITALIAN-VERDI Program.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe July 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 6
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser July 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 6
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—ITALIAN-VERDI Program.
Tues, July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript July 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 4
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c,

July 4

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 6
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Italian-Verdi Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Prog.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram July 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 5
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald July 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 5
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe July 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 5
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser July 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 5
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post July 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 5
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript July 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 5
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—Russian Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram July 3

SYMPHONY HALL (LAST 5 NIGHTS)
POPS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT

Monitor July 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 4
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald July 4

[76]

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 4
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser July 4

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 4
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post July 4

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 3
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald July 5

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 3
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—OPERATIC Program
Fri, July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat, July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe July 5

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 3
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—OPERATIC PROGRAM
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser July 5

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 3
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post July 5

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 3
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript July 5

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 3
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—Operatic Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT—WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Wagner Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Wagner Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
CLOSING
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald July 7

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
CLOSING
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe July 7

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
CLOSING
NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser July 7

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
CLOSING
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TICKETS 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (NO TAX)

Post July 7

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
CLOSING
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript July 7

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
CLOSING
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram July 7

CUT-OUT

TIGHT BINDING

June 30, July 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 1923.

LAST 8
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
LIAN-VERDI Prog.
SSIAN Program
UEST Prog. (Repeated)
PERATIC Program
NER Program
ING NIGHT
75c, $1 (no tax)

une 29

LAST 8
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
ERDI Program.
Program
Program (Repeated)
TIC Program
Program
NIGHT
c, $1 (no tax)

t June 29

LAST 8
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
VERDI Prog.
rogram
(Repeated) Program
ram
HT
(no tax)

une 29

LAST 7
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
N-VERDI Prog.
N Program.
T Prog. (Repeated)
ATIC Program.
Program.
NIGHT.
75c, $1 (no tax)

June 30

LAST 7
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
ALIAN-VERDI Program
SSIAN Program.
QUEST Prog. (Repeated)
PERATIC Program
GNER Program
SING NIGHT
50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

obe June 30

LAST 7
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TALIAN-VERDI Prog.
USSIAN Program.
EQUEST Prog. (Rep.)
OPERATIC Program
GNER Program
OSING NIGHT
0c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

tiser June 30

LAST 7
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TALIAN-VERDI Prog.
RUSSIAN Program
EQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
OPERATIC Program
GNER Program
OSING NIGHT
50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

st June 30

ING WEEK
PHONY HALL
OPS of Symphony Players
ACCHIA, Conductor
rograms—Refreshments
TALIAN-VERDI Prog.
USSIAN Program.
EQUEST Prog. (Repeated).
OPERATIC Program.
AGNER Program.
OSING NIGHT.
and 75c; Balcony $1.00, 75c script June 30

CLOSING WEEK
SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
July 5—OPERATIC Program.
July 6—WAGNER Program.
July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00,
and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Traveler June 30

PHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 7
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
July 3—RUSSIAN Program
July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
July 5—OPERATIC Program
July 6—WAGNER Program
July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram June 30

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 7
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Player
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Monitor June 30

CLOSING WEEK
SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00,
75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Herald July 1

CLOSING WEEK
SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00,
75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Globe July 1

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 6
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Italian-Verdi Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post July 2

CLOSING WEEK
SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
Orchestra of Symphony Players
AGIDE JACCHIA, Conductor
Popular Programs—Refreshments
Mon., July 2—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—Request Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Table Seats $1 and 75c; Balcony $1.00,
75c and 50c. Admission 25c (no tax)

Advertiser July 1

Post July 1

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 6
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Italian-Verdi Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c $1 (no tax)

American July 2

Herald July 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 6
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—ITALIAN-VERDI Program.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri, July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat, July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe July 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 6
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—ITALIAN-VERDI Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser July 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 6
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—ITALIAN-VERDI Program.
Tues. July 3—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript July 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 4
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri, July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat, July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, [illegible] (no tax)

Globe July 4

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 6
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Italian-Verdi Prog.
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Prog.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram July 2

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 5
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald July 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 5
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—RUSSIAN Program.
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri, July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat, July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe July 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 5
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tues., July 3—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser July 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 5
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post July 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 5
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript July 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 5
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—Russian Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram July 3

SYMPHONY HALL (LAST 5 NIGHTS)
POPS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—RUSSIAN Program
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT

Monitor July 3

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 4
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald July 4

[76]

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 4
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Wed., July 4—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program.
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser July 4

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 4
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—REQUEST Prog. (Repeated)
Thurs., July 5—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post July 4

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 3
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald July 5

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 3
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—OPERATIC Program
Fri, July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat, July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe July 5

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 3
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—OPERATIC PROGRAM
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser July 5

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 3
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post July 5

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 3
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—OPERATIC Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program.
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT.
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript July 5

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 3
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—Operatic Program
Fri., July 6—WAGNER Program
Sat., July 7—CLOSING NIGHT
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT—WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Wagner Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2
NIGHTS
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TONIGHT—WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Post July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—WAGNER PROGRAM
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
LAST 2
NIGHTS
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tonight—Wagner Program
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram July 6

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
CLOSING
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Herald July 7

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
CLOSING
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Globe July 7

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
CLOSING
NIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Advertiser July 7

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
CLOSING
TONIGHT
ORCHESTRA OF 80
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
TICKETS 25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (NO TAX)

Post July 7

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
CLOSING
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Transcript July 7

SYMPHONY HALL
POPS
CLOSING
TONIGHT
Orchestra of 80
Symphony Players
Agide Jacchia
Conductor
Popular Programs
Refreshments
Tickets—25c, 50c, 75c, $1 (no tax)

Telegram July 7

CUT-OUT

SYMPHONY HALL

Opening Night—Monday, May 7

POPS

ORCHESTRA OF 60
SYMPHONY PLAYERS
Agide Jacchia, Conductor
Refreshments—Popular Music
Sun., May 13—Russian Program
Seats Now—25c, 50c, 75c, $1
(No tax)

J Adv 5/3

HILL SMITH & CO INC
STATIONERS
[illegible]
BOSTON

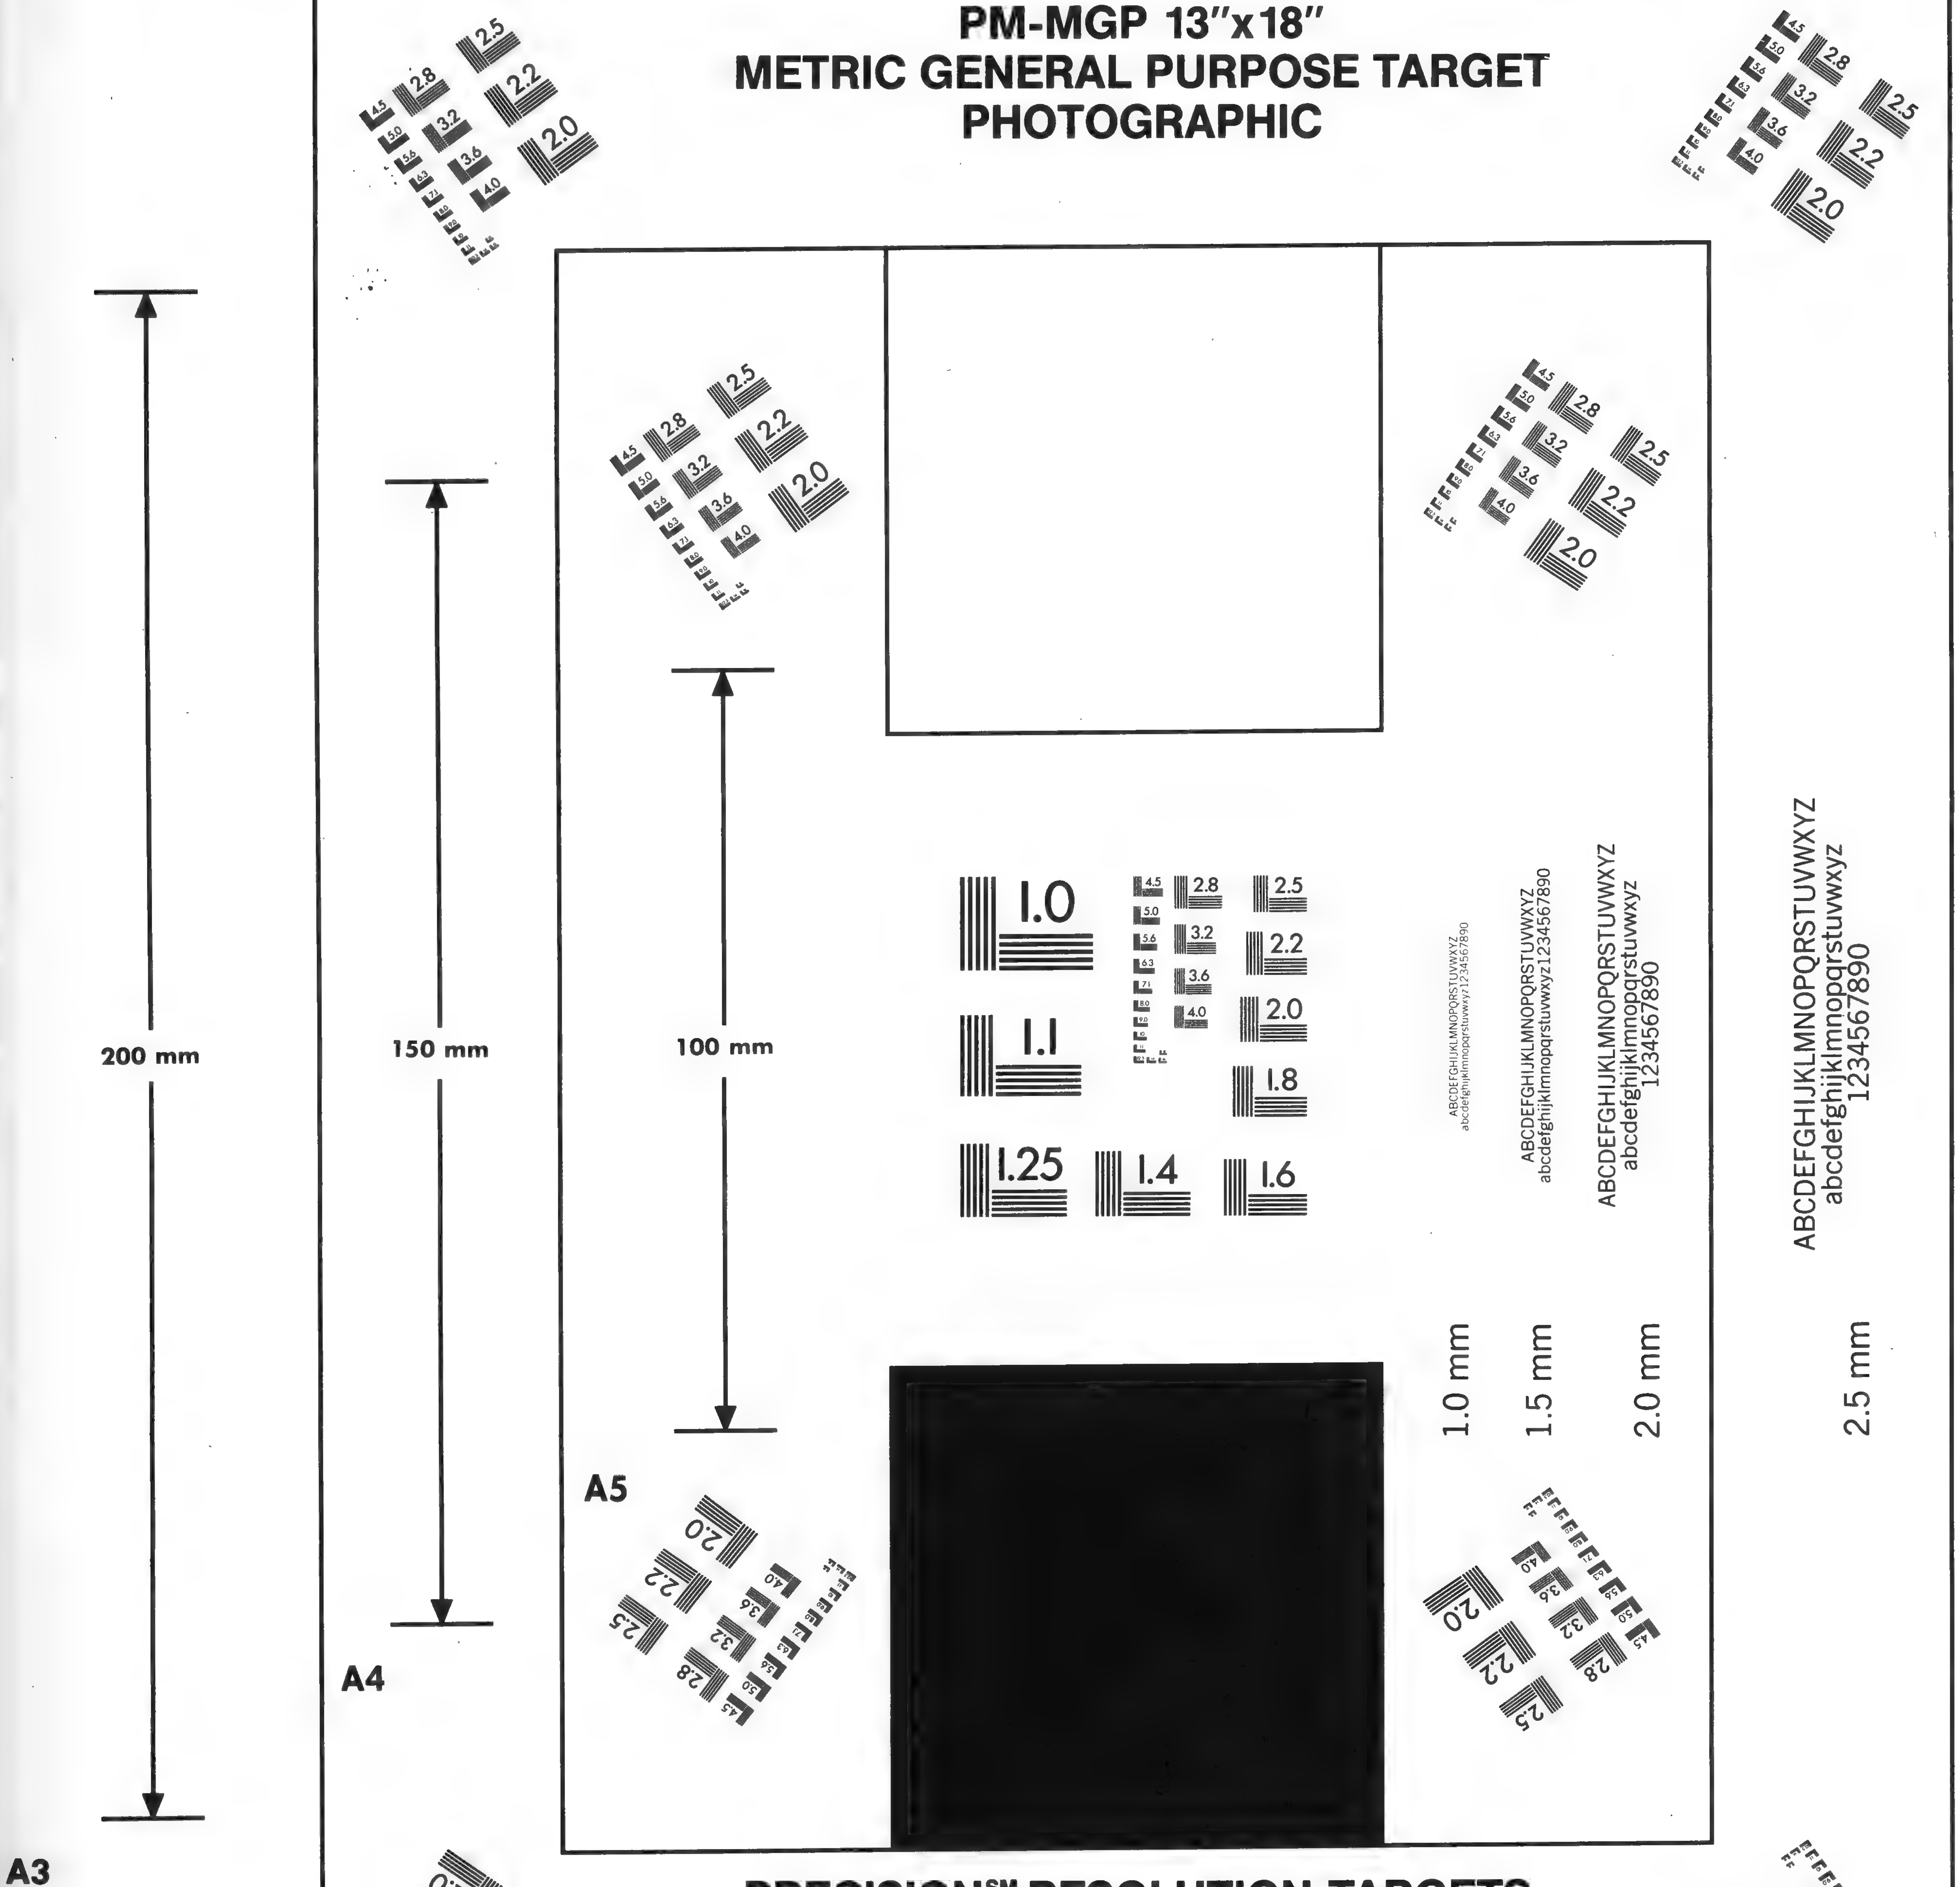
Shipman's Scrap Book
FOR DUPLICATE ORDER NUMBER
911
ASA L. SHIPMAN'S SONS
NEW YORK

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



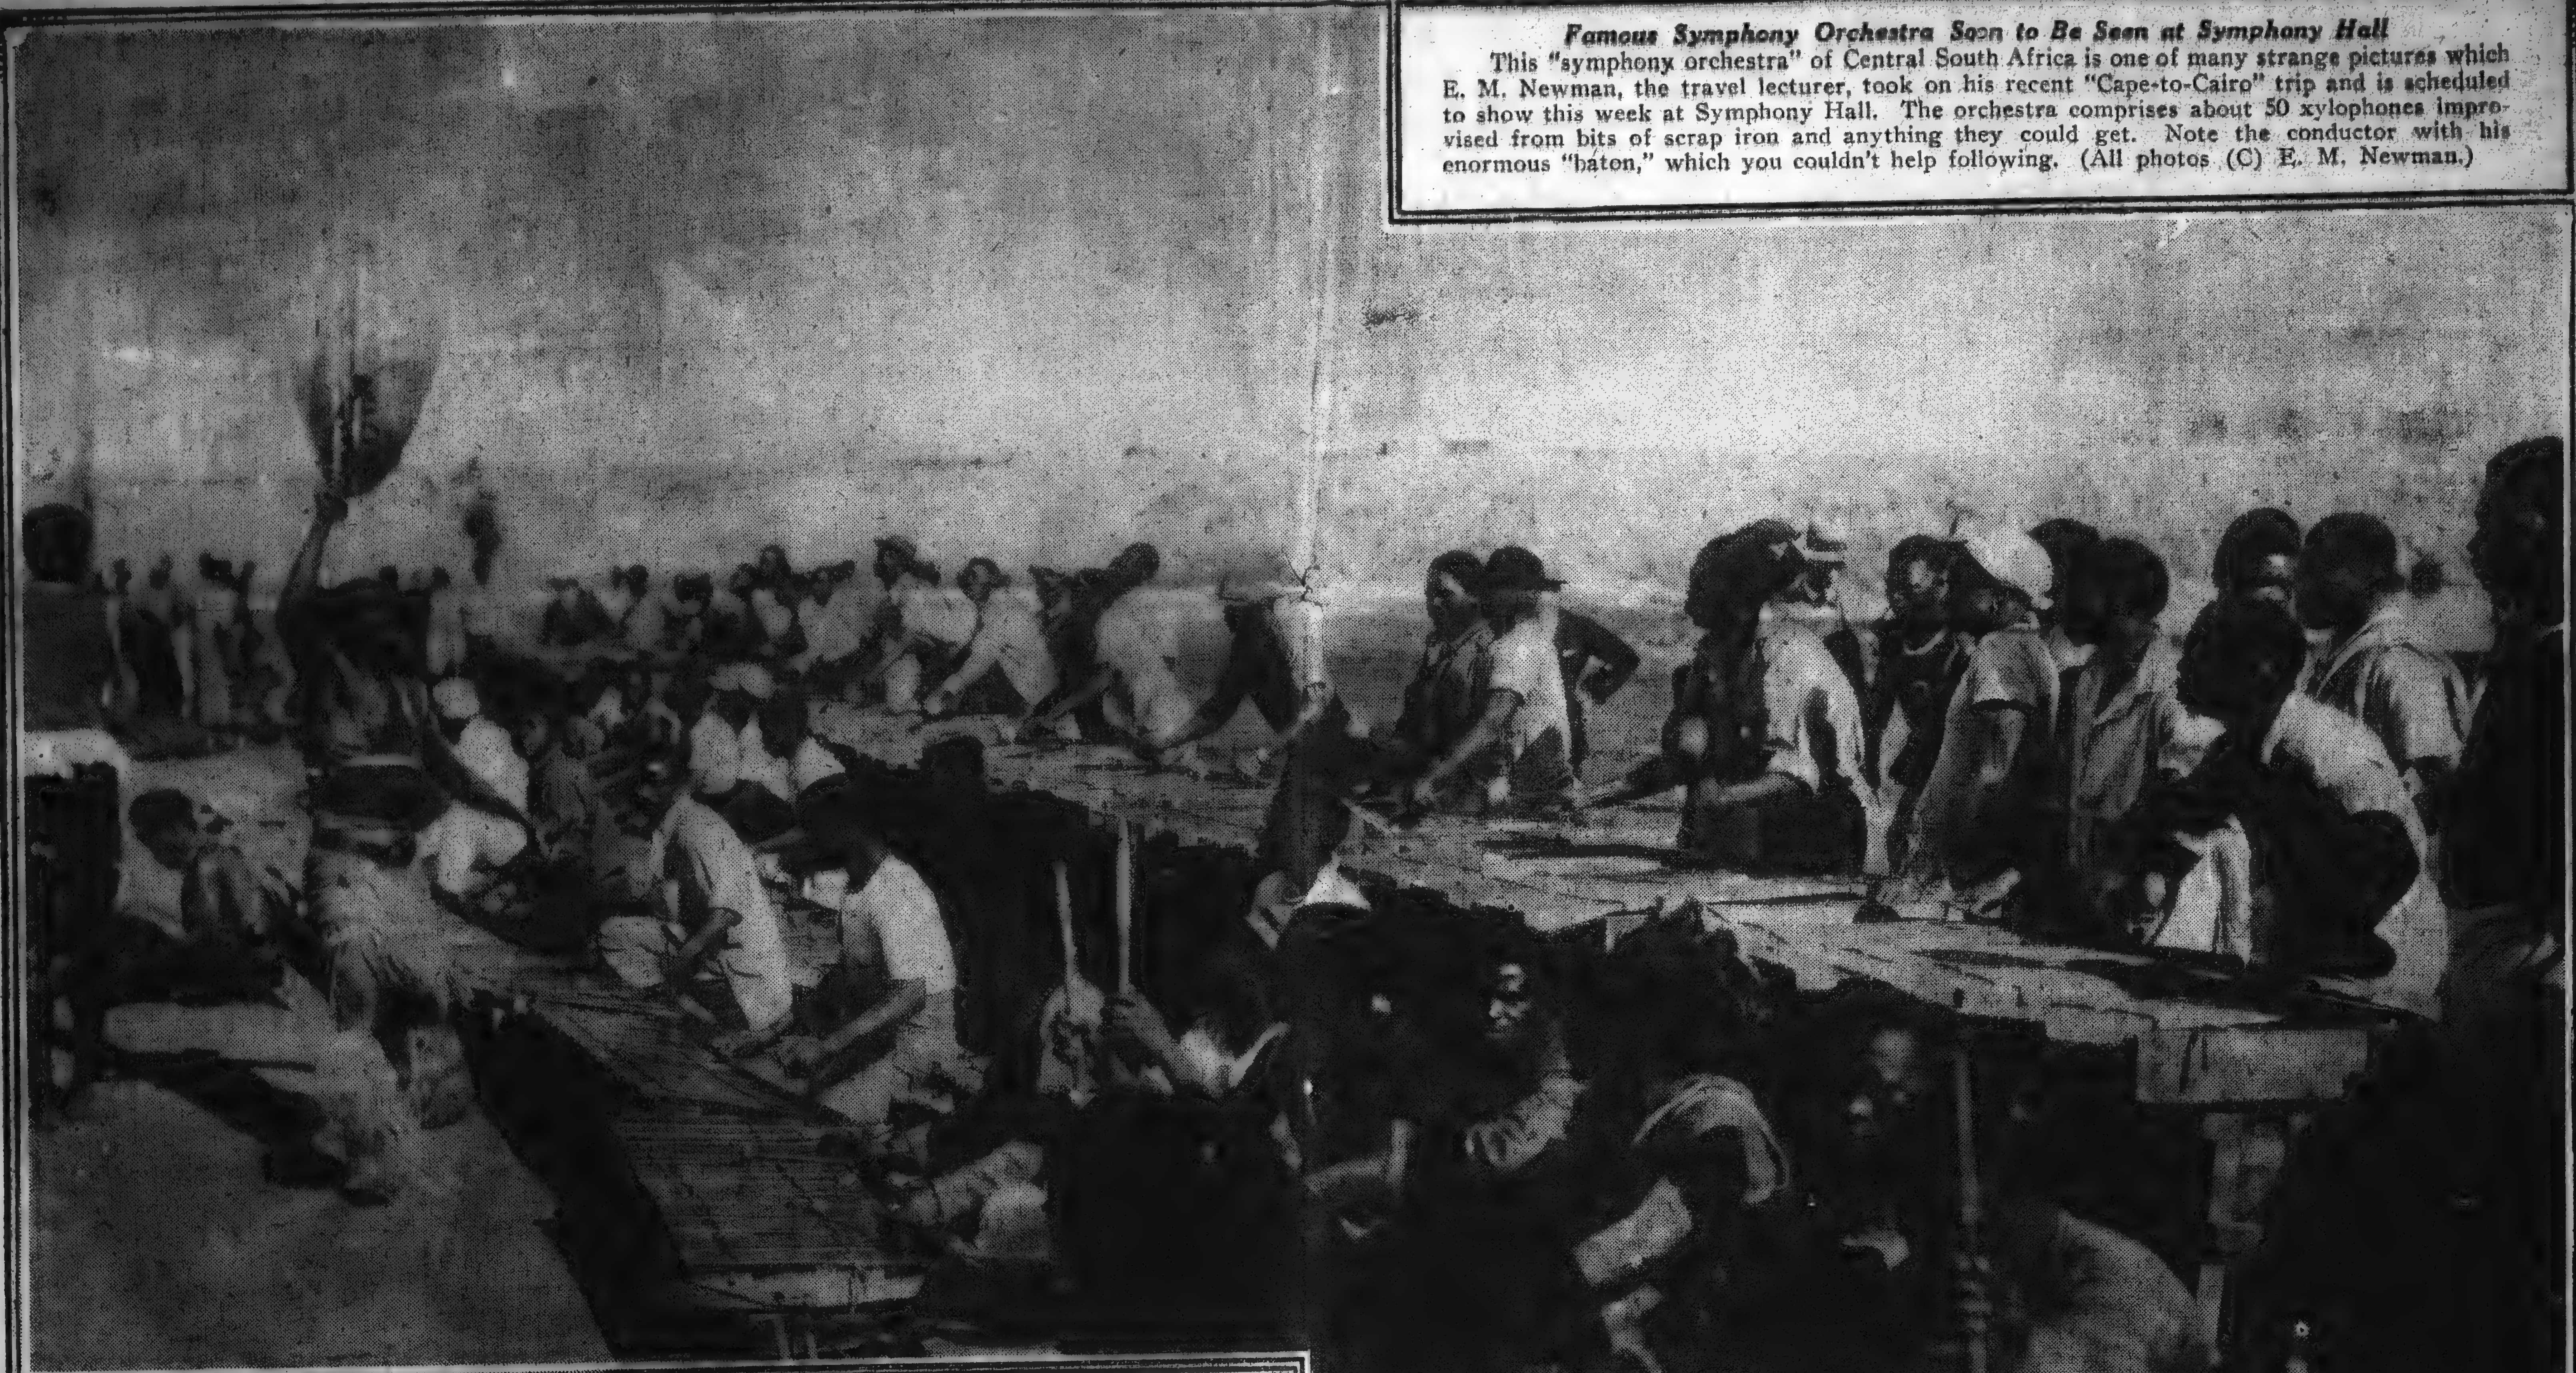
200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A3
A4
A5
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

REMARKABLE VIEWS OF NEWMAN'S AFRICAN ADVENTURES

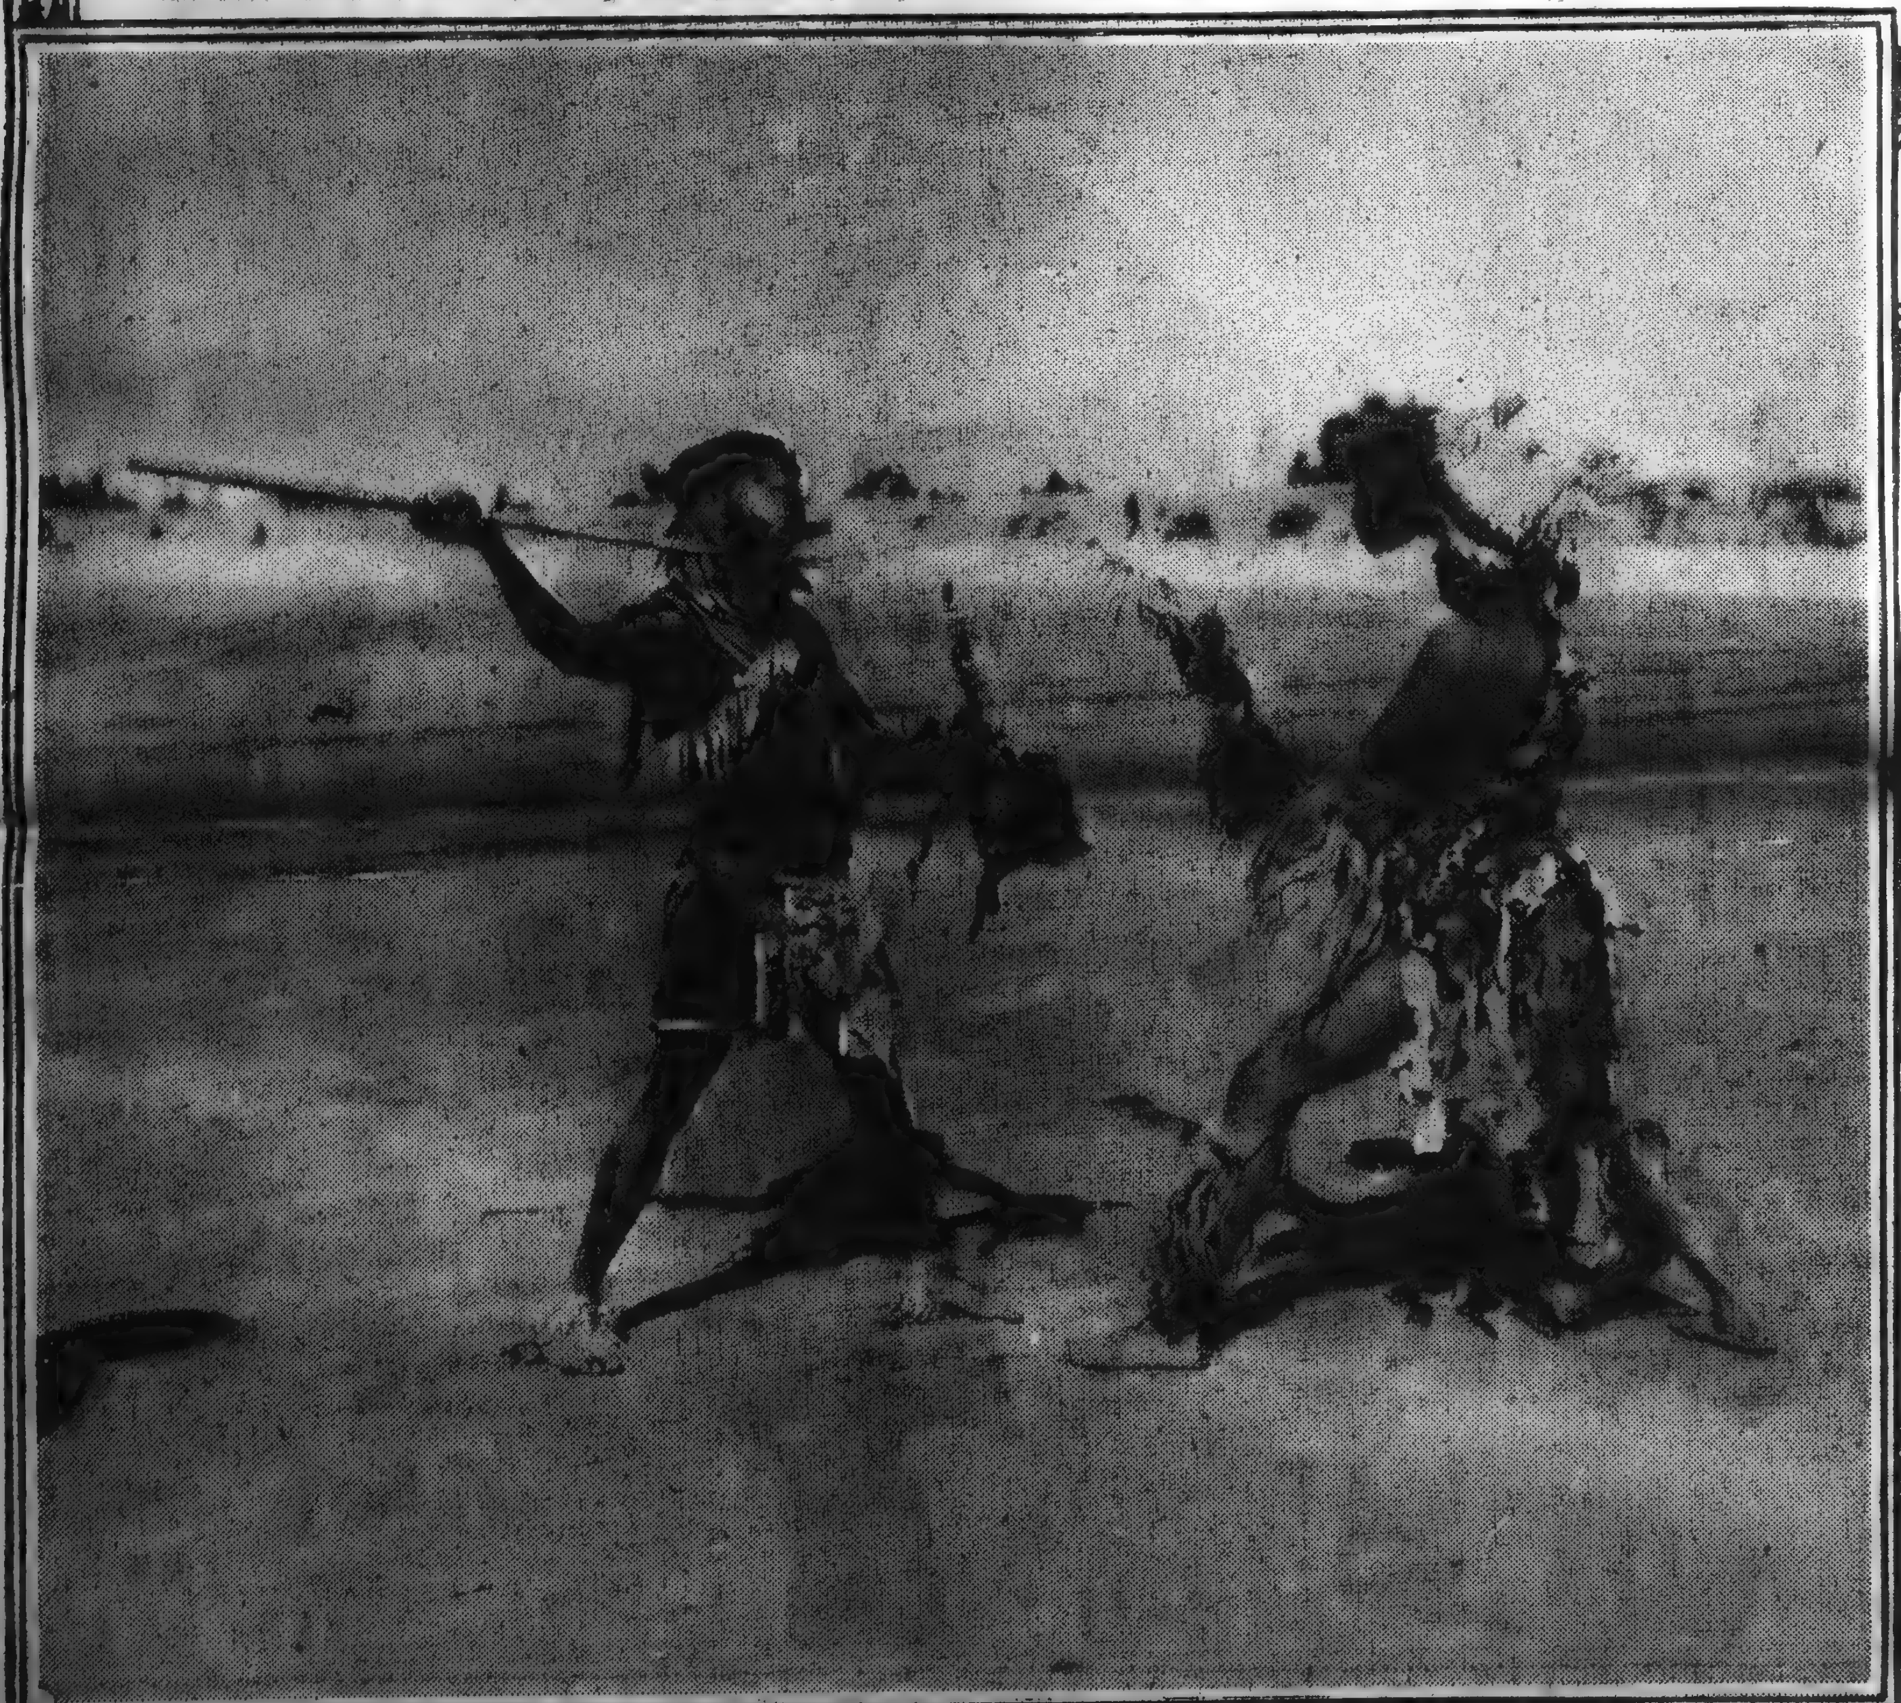


Famous Symphony Orchestra Soon to Be Seen at Symphony Hall

This "symphony orchestra" of Central South Africa is one of many strange pictures which E. M. Newman, the travel lecturer, took on his recent "Cape-to-Cairo" trip and is scheduled to show this week at Symphony Hall. The orchestra comprises about 50 xylophones improvised from bits of scrap iron and anything they could get. Note the conductor with his enormous "baton," which you couldn't help following. (All photos (C) E. M. Newman.)

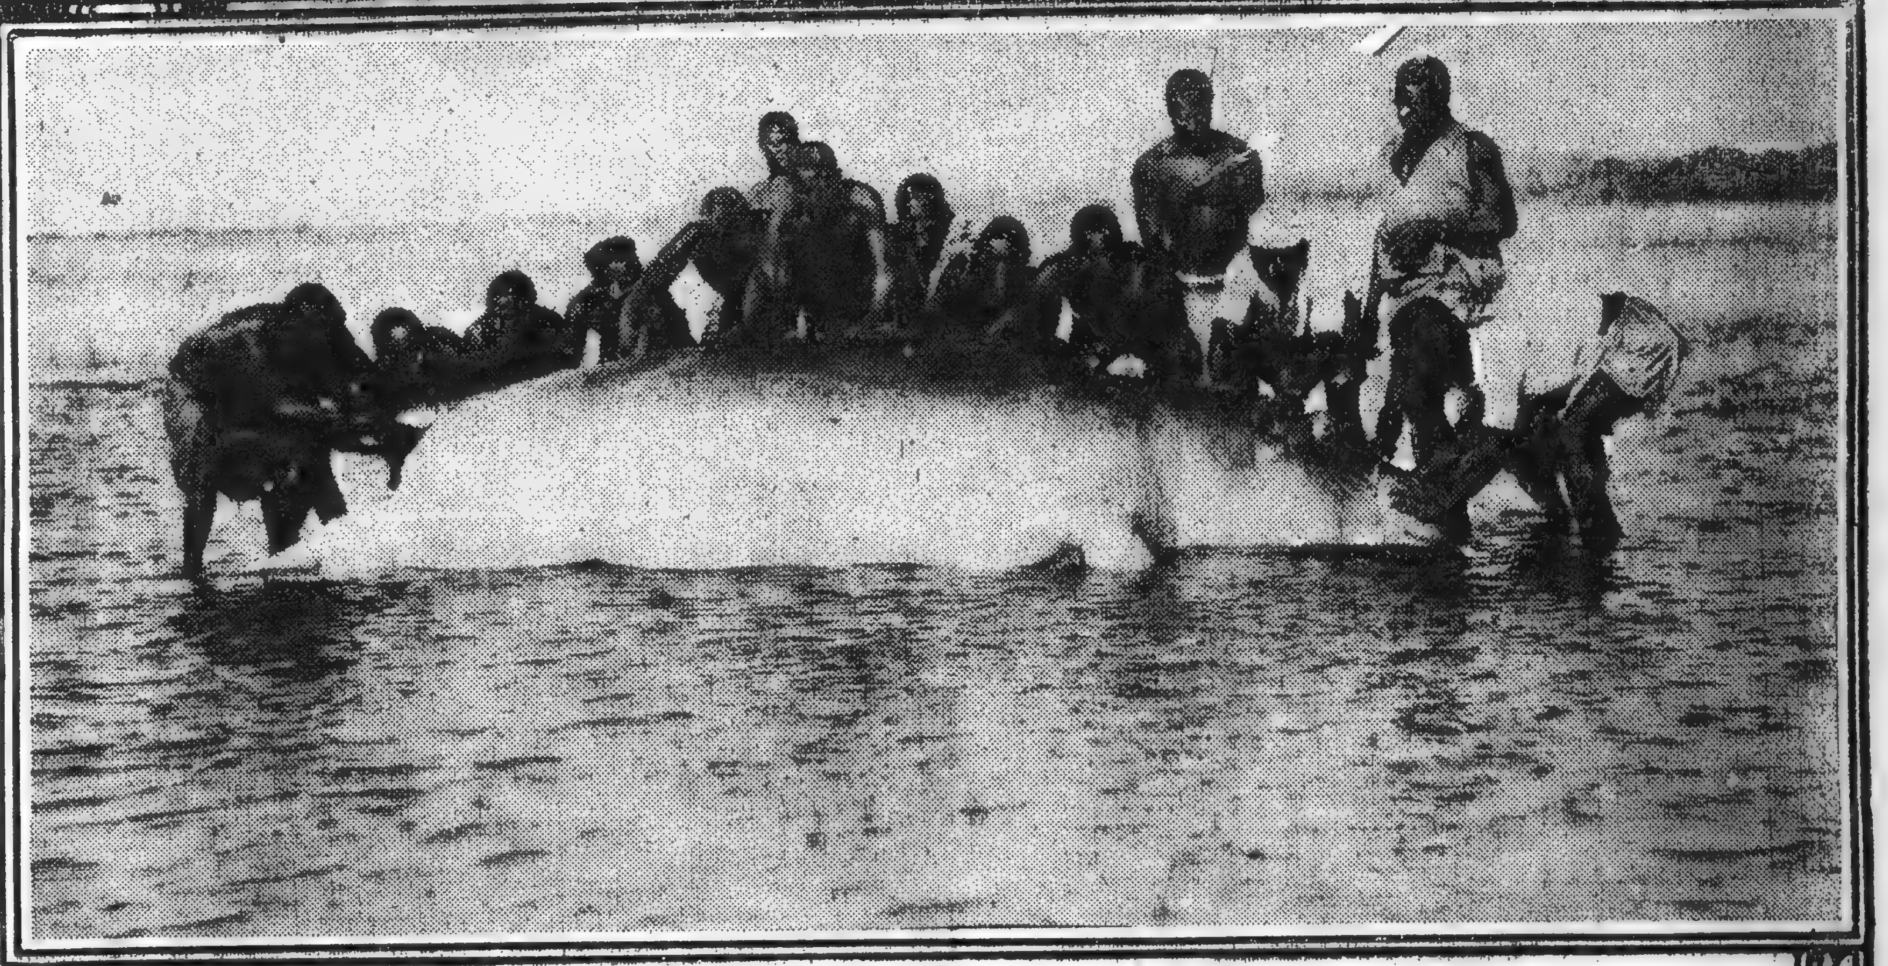
A Glimpse of Real Wild Animal Life You Don't Often Get

This live leopard was totally unconscious that he was being photographed, which means, as you may guess, that elaborate preparations had to be made beforehand to camouflage the camera, and the photographer no doubt had to sit perfectly still for hours, day after day, to wait for this rare chance. This is an unusually fine leopard, and his spots are more brilliant than when in captivity.



Witch Doctor and Devil Dancer Have a Little Set-to

This original costume dance never fails to impress the natives of the Matabele tribe, of which these two are prominent representatives of the medical and religious professions. The witch doctor, in fact, is credited with supernatural powers.



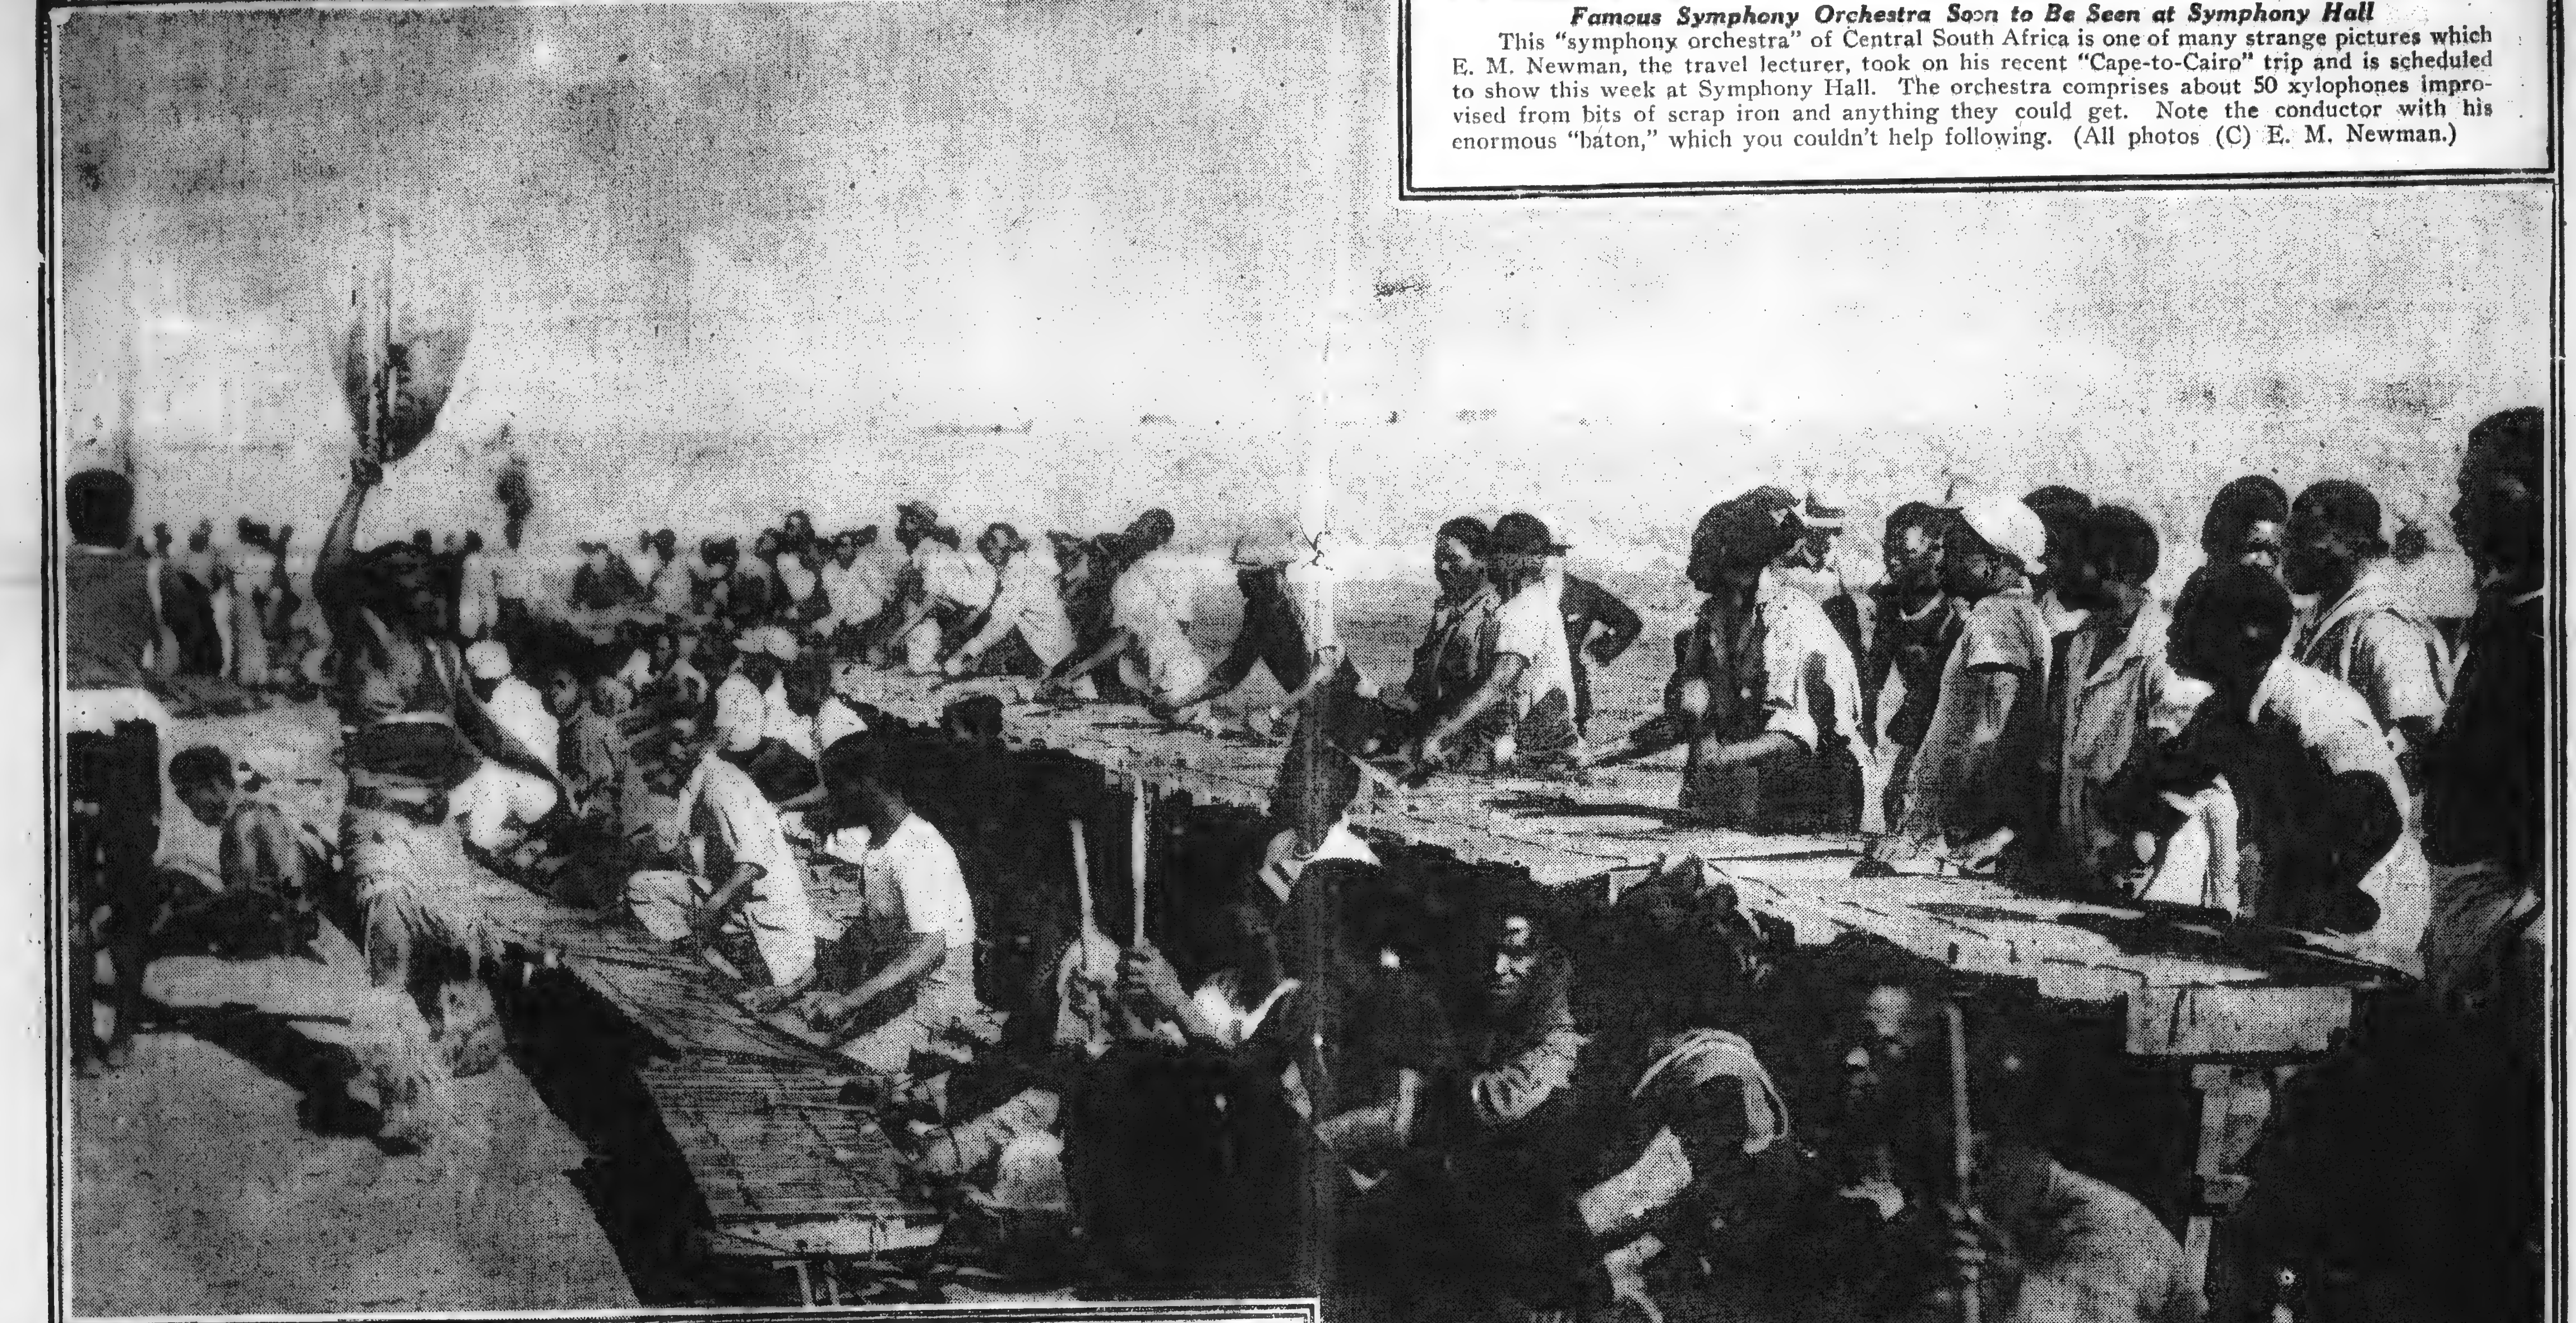
"Fifteen Men on a Dead Man's Chest—Yo, ho, ho and"—Ahem!

The "dead man" is a great hippo, slain in his native river by Mr. Newman's party. Special licenses are issued for the extermination of hippos because of their insatiable appetite for natives who ply the river in light canoes. If the hippo should "come to," those 15 natives just "wouldn't be ain't."

An Extraordinary Photo of Actual Wild Animal Hunting

A movie camera, to say nothing of the man who operates it, has a hard time in the African jungle. The camera that took this picture of one of Mr. Newman's hunters stalking two immense rhinos was actually charged by one of these rhinos when he was wounded, and he surely gummed up the works.

REMARKABLE VIEWS OF NEWMAN'S AFRICAN ADVENTURES

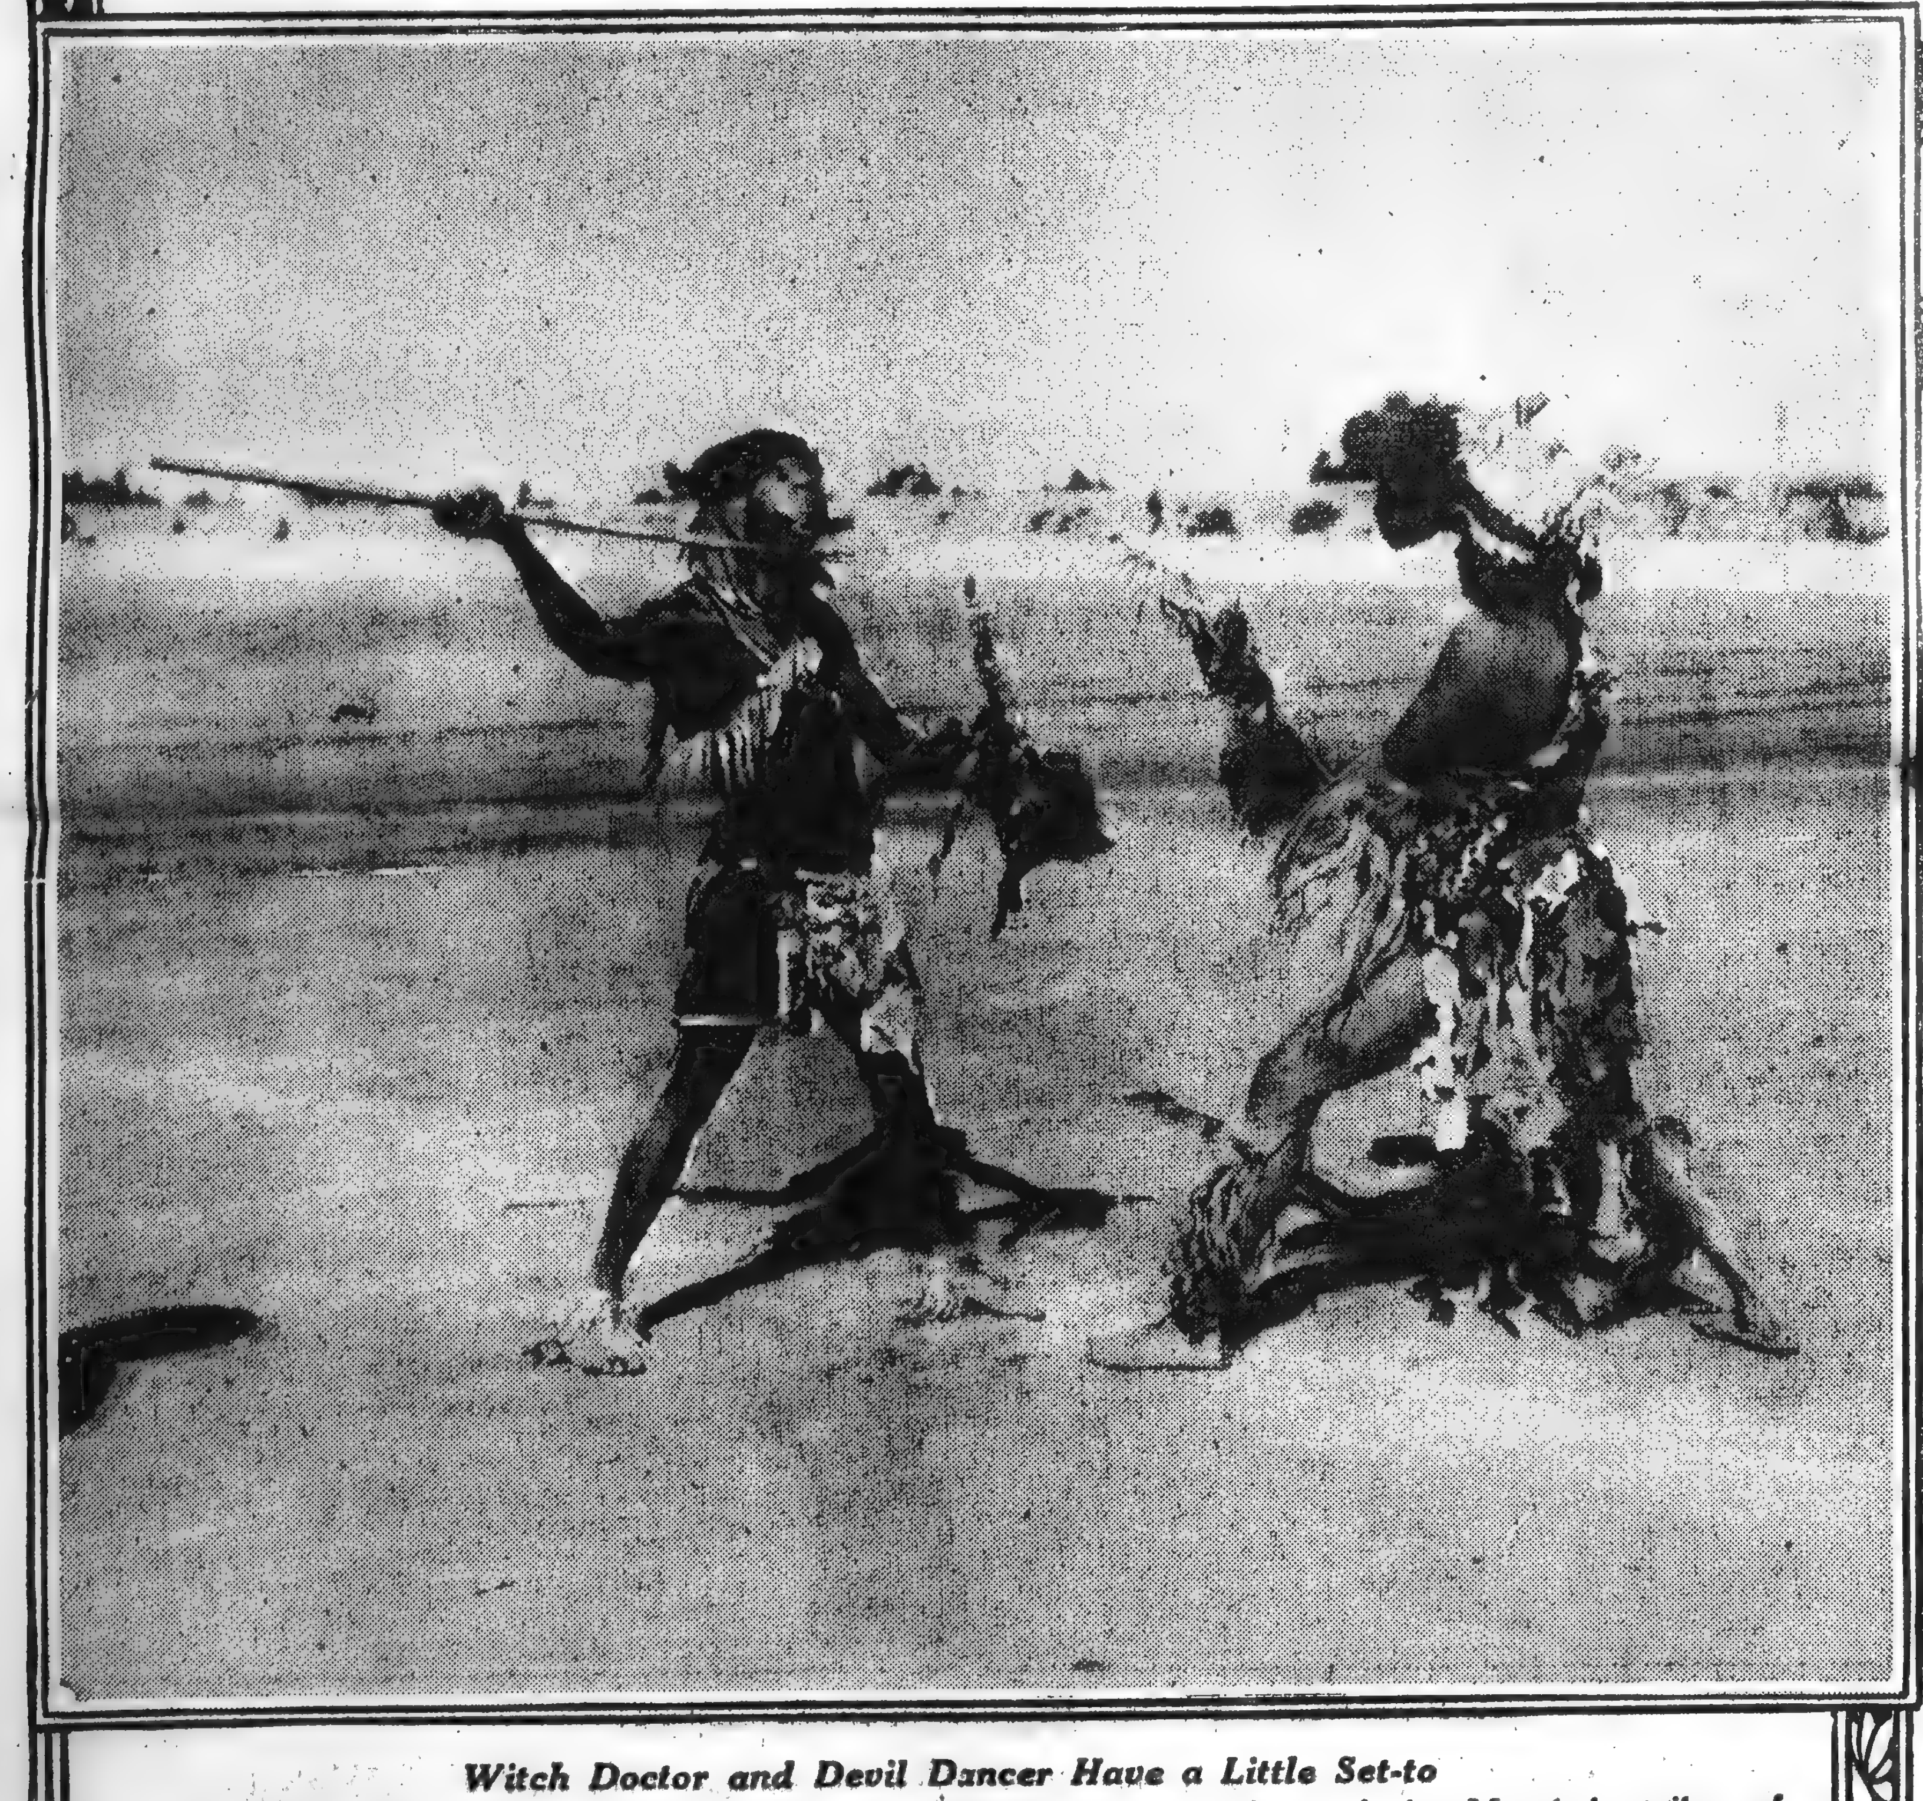


Famous Symphony Orchestra Soon to Be Seen at Symphony Hall

This "symphony orchestra" of Central South Africa is one of many strange pictures which E. M. Newman, the travel lecturer, took on his recent "Cape-to-Cairo" trip and is scheduled to show this week at Symphony Hall. The orchestra comprises about 50 xylophones improvised from bits of scrap iron and anything they could get. Note the conductor with his enormous "baton," which you couldn't help following. (All photos (C) E. M. Newman.)

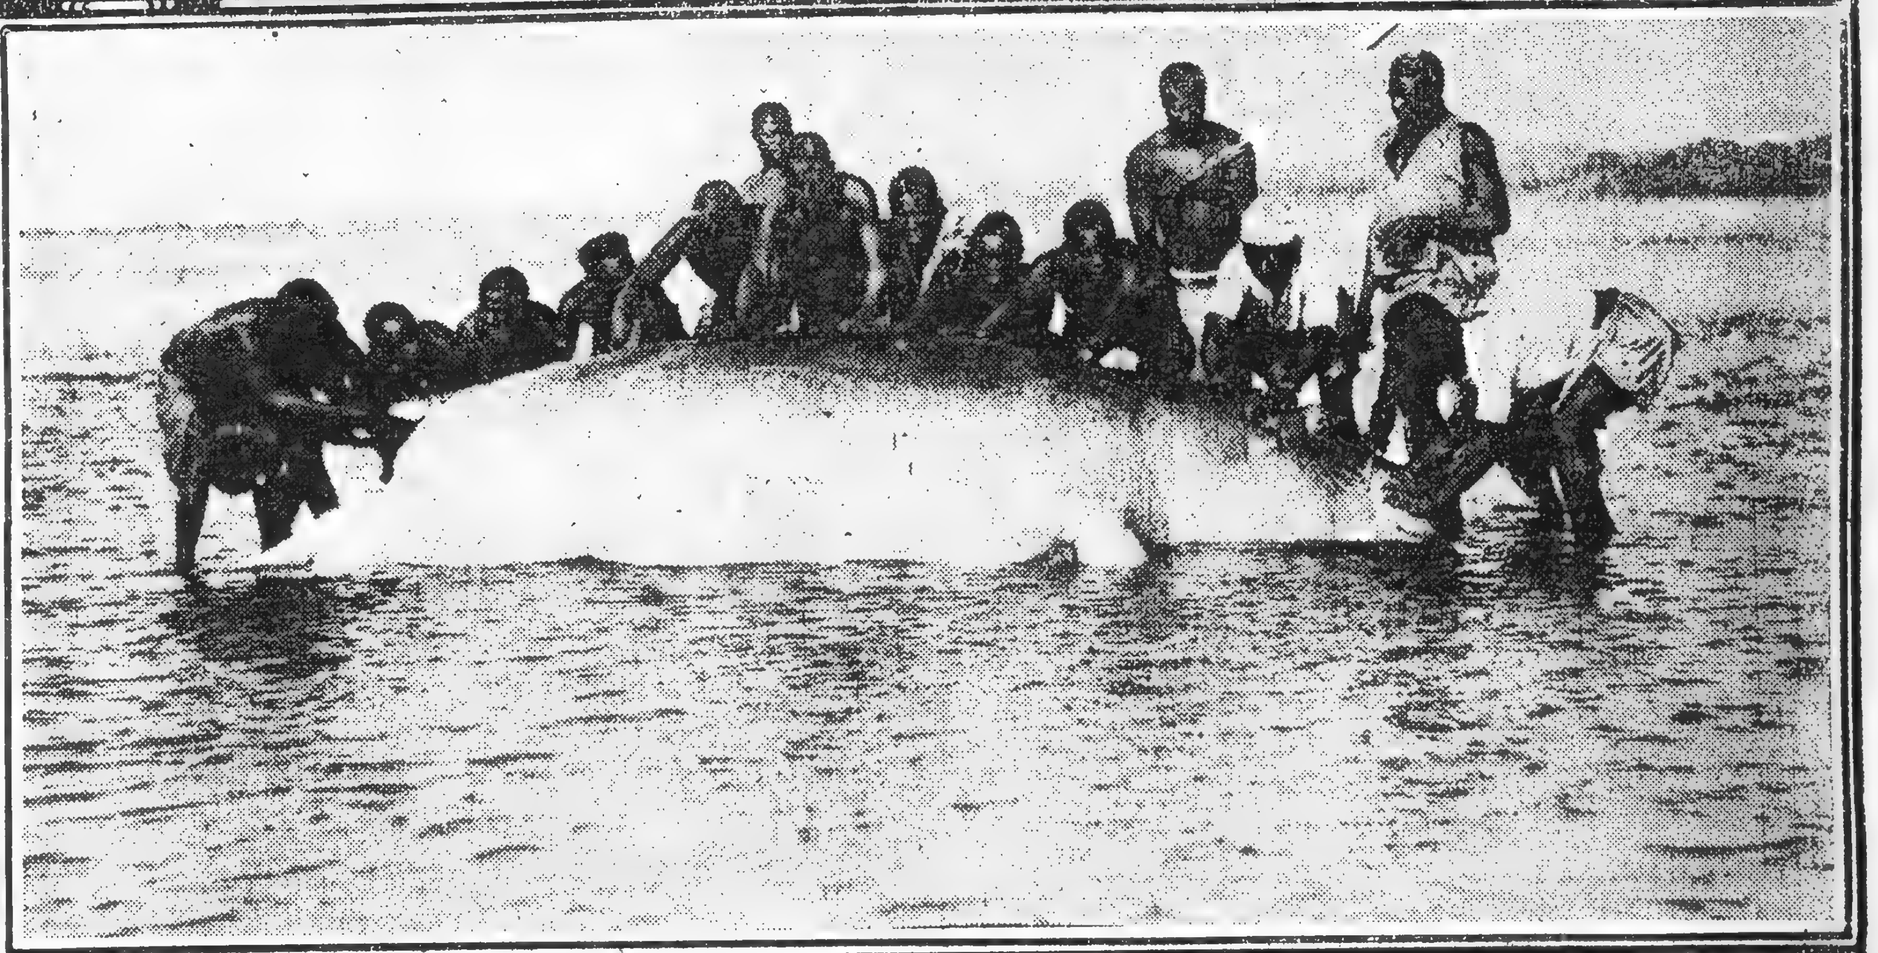
A Glimpse of Real Wild Animal Life You Don't Often Get

This live leopard was totally unconscious that he was being photographed, which means, as you may guess, that elaborate preparations had to be made beforehand to camouflage the camera, and the photographer no doubt had to sit perfectly still for hours, day after day, to wait for this rare chance. This is an unusually fine leopard, and his spots are more brilliant than when in captivity.



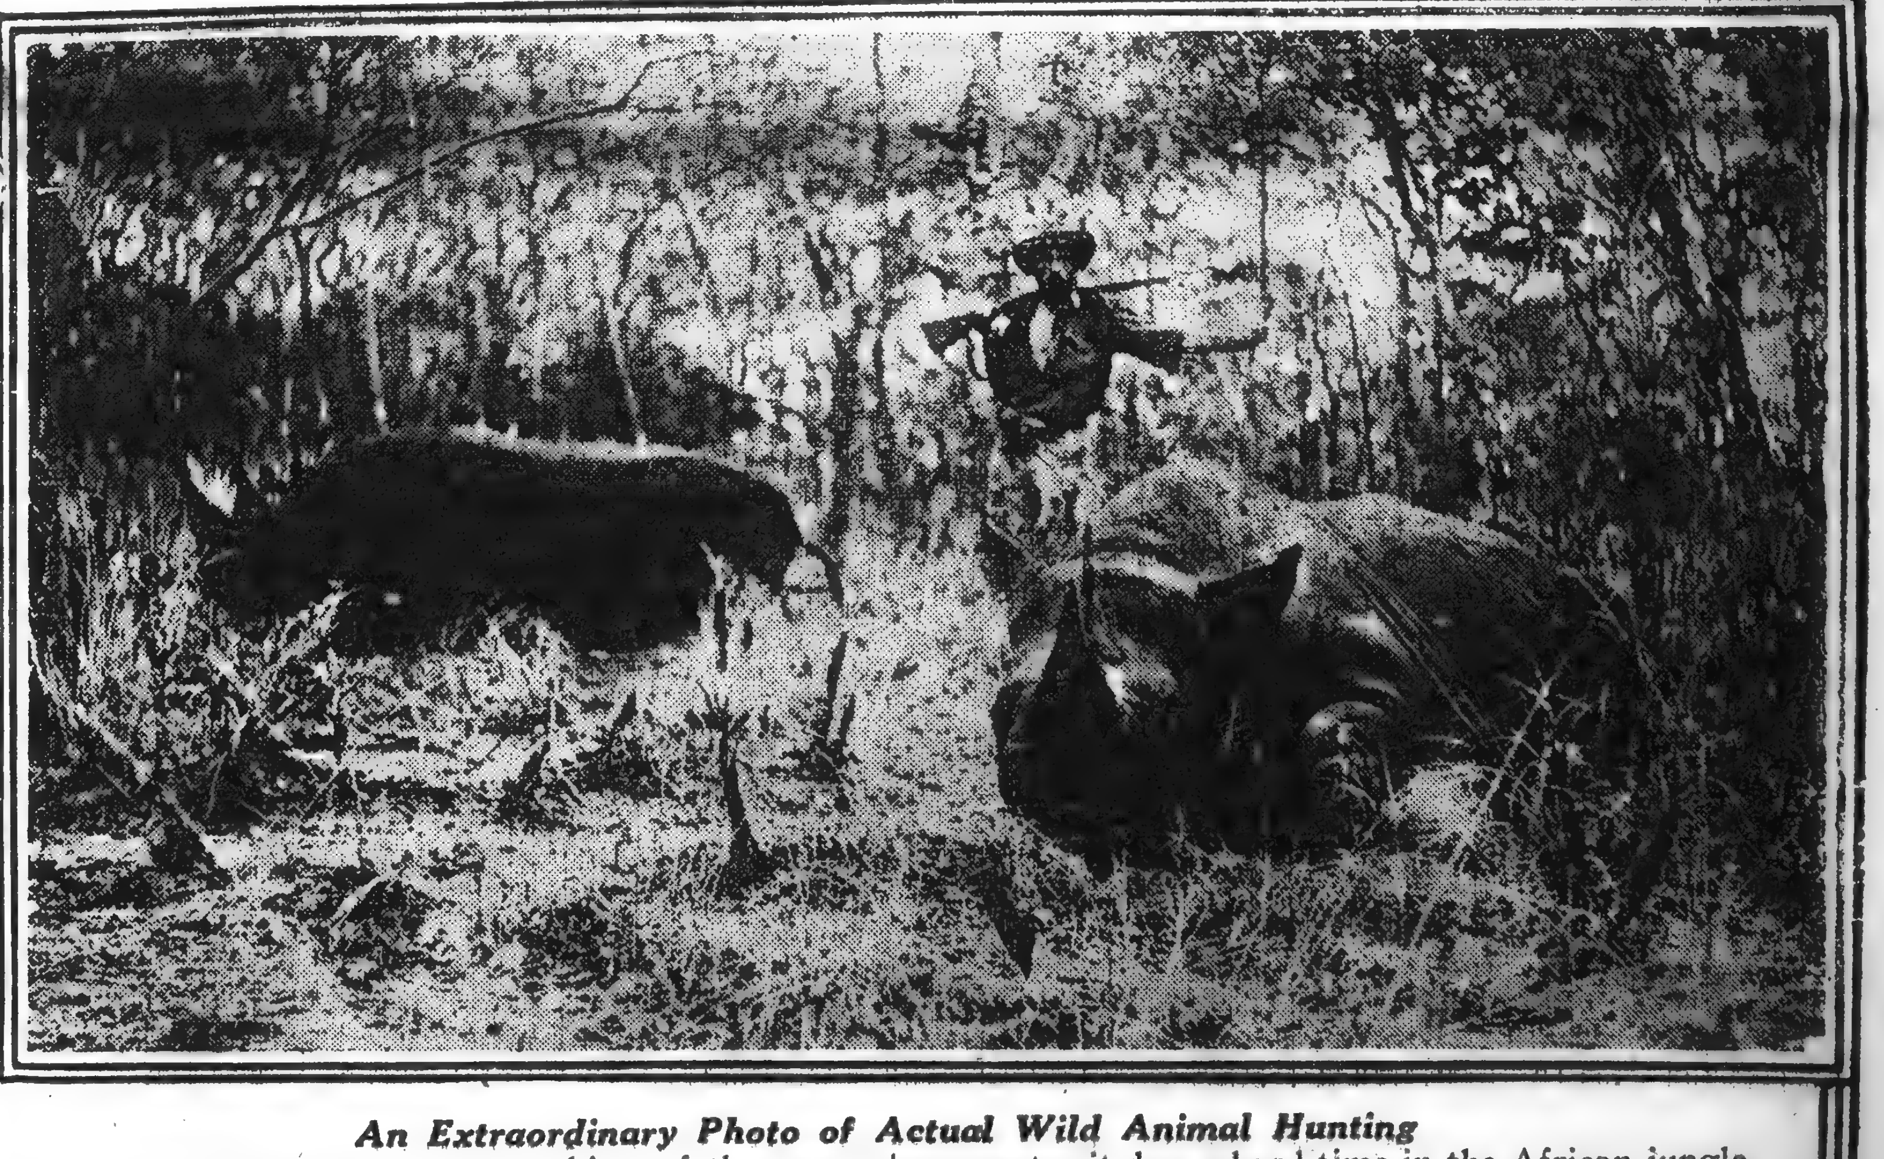
Witch Doctor and Devil Dancer Have a Little Set-to

This original costume dance never fails to impress the natives of the Matabele tribe, of which these two are prominent representatives of the medical and religious professions. The witch doctor, in fact, is credited with supernatural powers.



"Fifteen Men on a Dead Man's Chest—Yo, ho, ho and"—Ahem!

The "dead man" is a great hippo, slain in his native river by Mr. Newman's party. Special licenses are issued for the extermination of hippos because of their insatiable appetite for natives who ply the river in light canoes. If the hippo should "come to," those 15 natives just "wouldn't be ain't."



An Extraordinary Photo of Actual Wild Animal Hunting

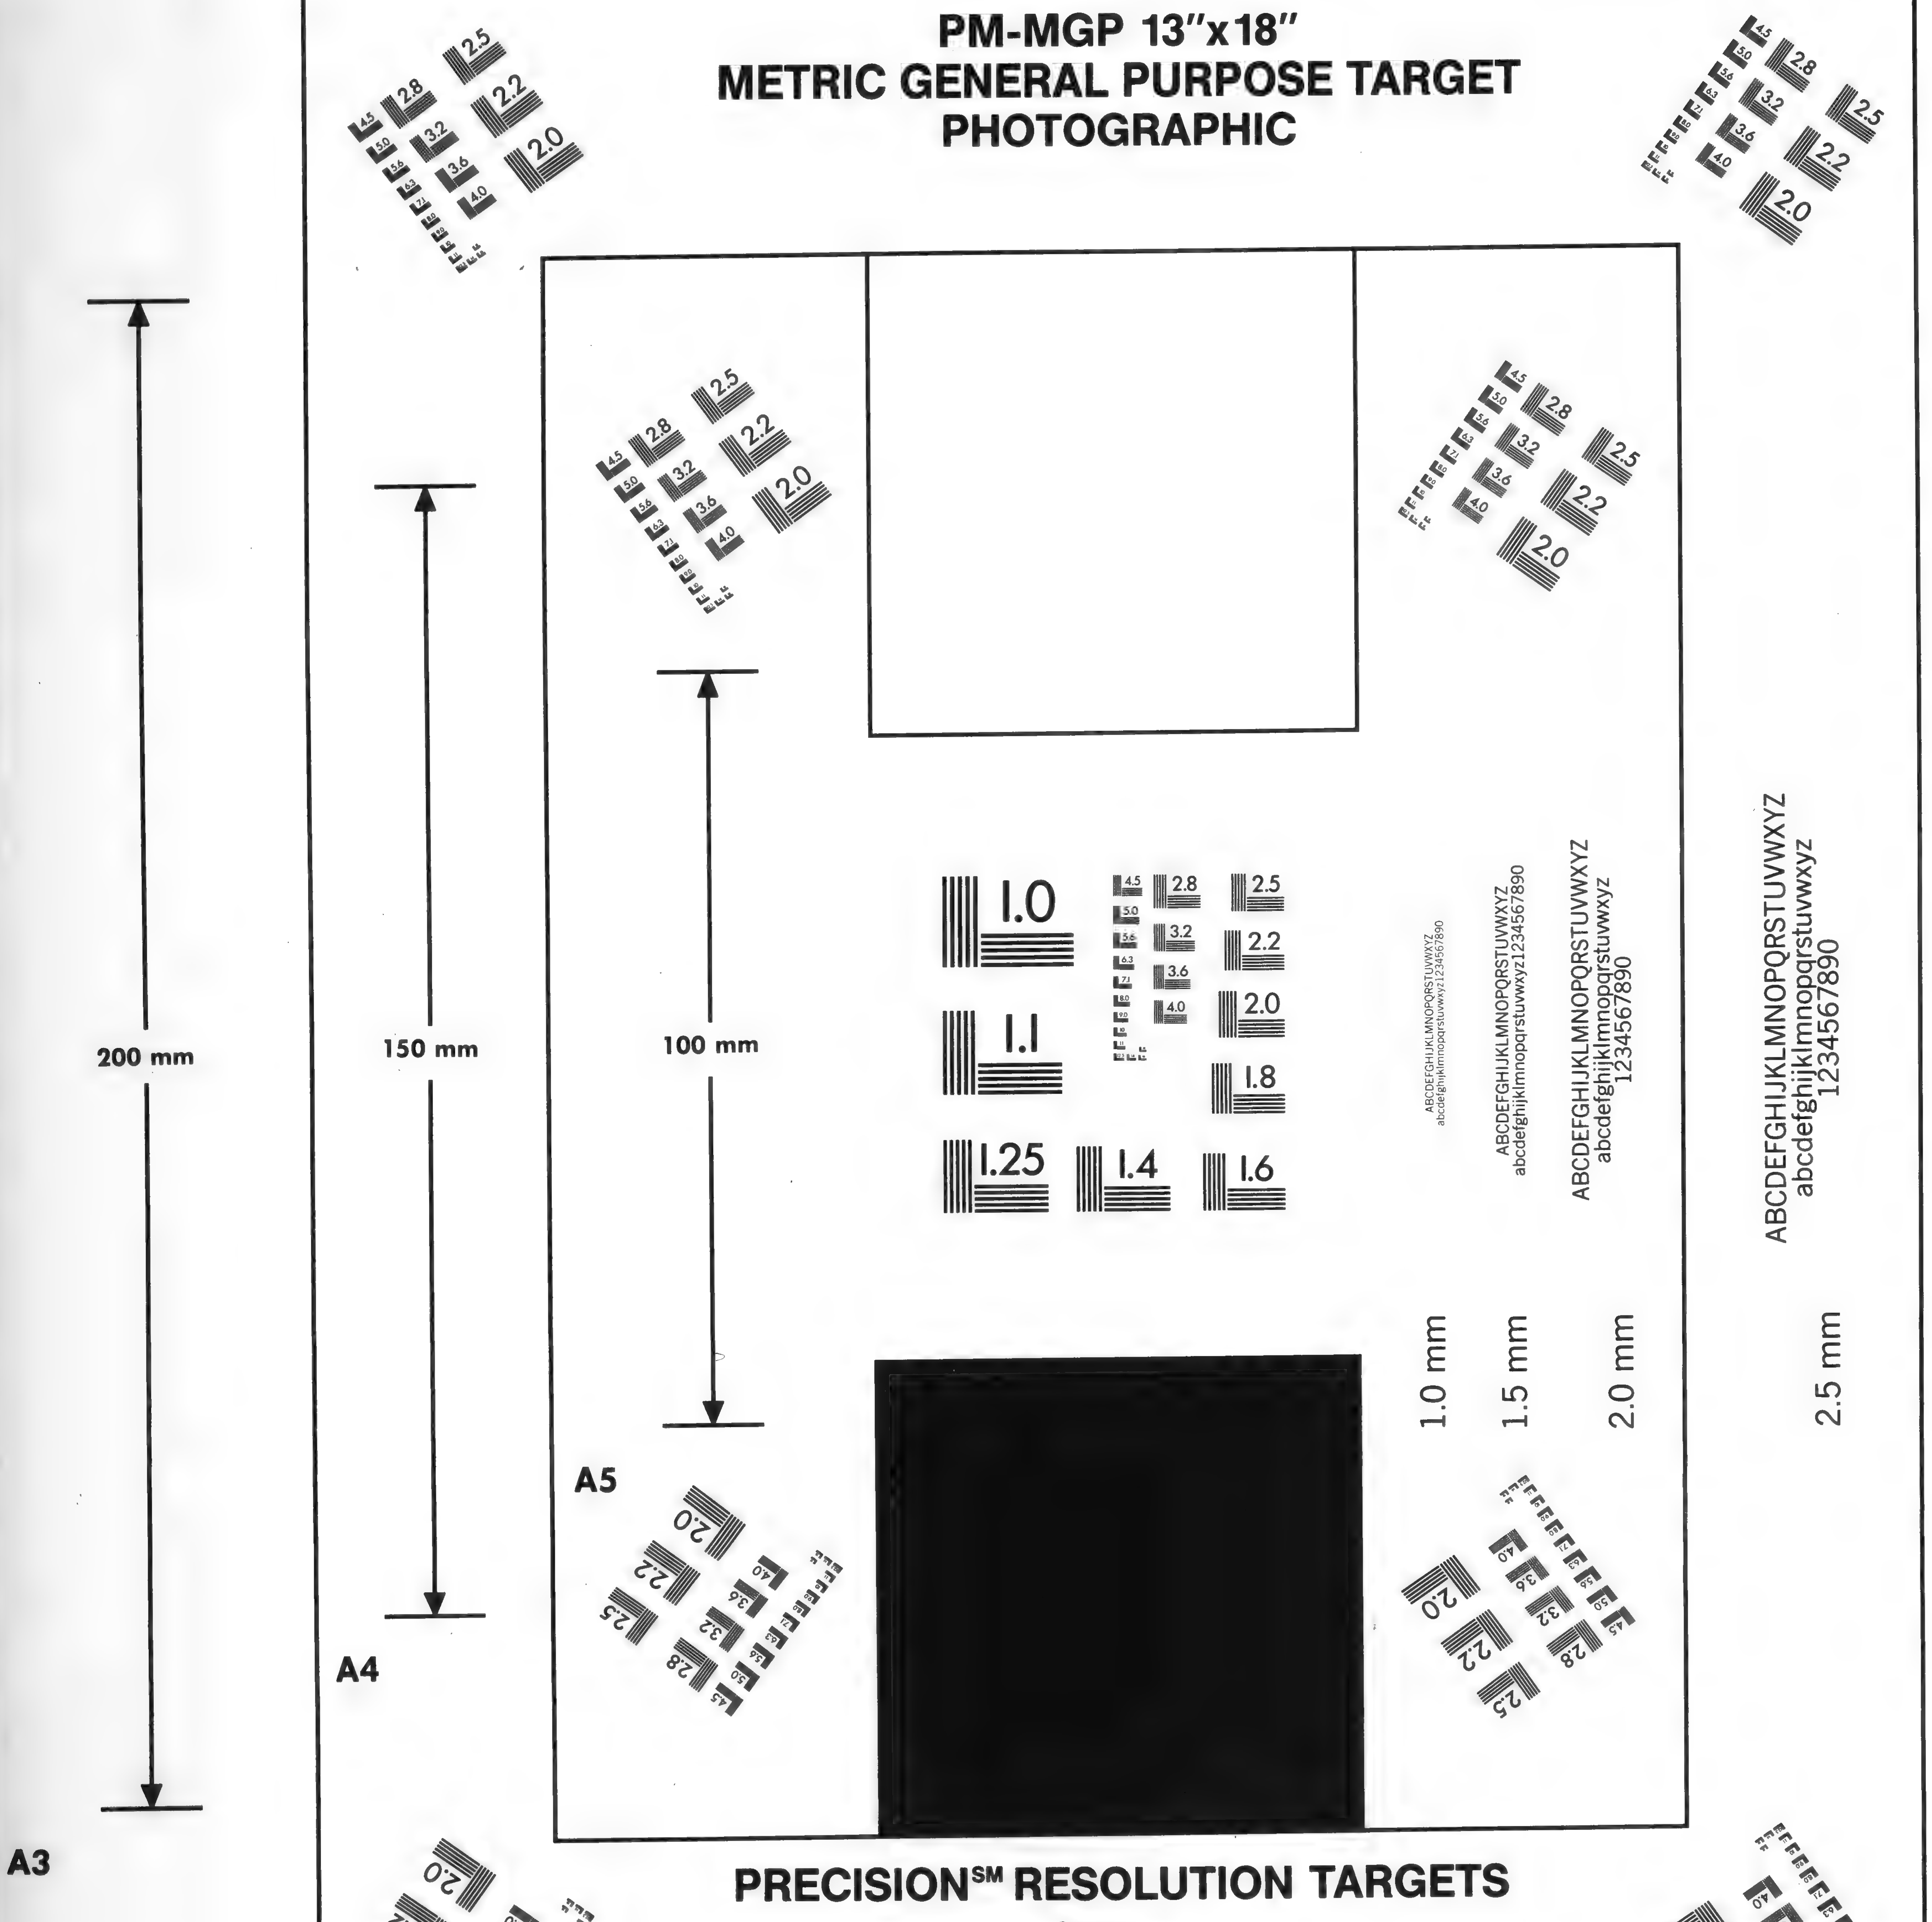
A movie camera, to say nothing of the man who operates it, has a hard time in the African jungle. The camera that took this picture of one of Mr. Newman's hunters stalking two immense rhinos was actually charged by one of these rhinos when he was wounded, and he surely gummed up the works.

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm
A5
A4
A3

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

HARVARD AND OXFORD DEBATE

Will Argue on Question of U. S. Joining League of Nations Oct. 2

Herald 9/24

BRITONS CHOOSE AFFIRMATIVE SIDE

American and English collegiate orators will meet in forensic contest at Symphony hall, Monday evening, Oct. 2, when teams of Harvard University and of Oxford University, England, will debate the question: "Resolved, That the United States Should Immediately Join the League of Nations."

It was announced yesterday that Gov. Cox will preside. Harvard's representatives will have the negative side of the debate.

HARVARD TEAM NOT CHOSEN

Harvard's debaters are yet to be chosen, but Oxford will be represented by Edward Marjoribanks of Christ Church College, Kenneth Lindsay of Worcester College, and M. C. Hollis of Balliol College.

The audience will be drawn closely into the debate because of the decision to use the English method of deciding the winner. This is done by vote of the audience at the close of the argument. According to the parliamentary method as employed by the Oxford debaters, the audience shows its decision by filing out one of two doors which have been marked "yes" and "no" respectively.

The Harvard debaters held their first trial meeting yesterday and are now working in close contest the six men, three of whom will be chosen.

The visit of the Oxford team to this country grew out of the debates last year between Oxford and Bates College

Herald Sept 24

PICKS DEBATERS TO MEET OXFORD

Harvard Has Selected Four Members of Team—Contest Oct. 29

Herald Sept 24

DECISION WILL BE MADE BY AUDIENCE

Four of the six members of the Harvard debating team which will meet Oxford University on the question, "The United States and the League of Nations" in Symphony hall, Monday evening, Oct. 29, have been chosen by the Harvard debating council in a series of daily trial meetings, as follows: R. S. Bowers '24, president of the council; R. S. Fanning '23, N. E. Hines '23, and P. R. Harmel '24.

The men were selected on the merits of their debating last year. Two more will be chosen, and of the six, three will be alternates and three will speak. Harvard will have the negative side of the question.

Gov. Cox will act as chairman at the debate and will also make an address. A feature will be that the audience, instead of regularly appointed judges, will make the decision.

Edward Marjoribanks, president of the Oxford Debating Union, arrived in New York yesterday and will soon meet his team-mates, Kenneth Lindsay and M. C. Hollis, to prepare for the debate. Marjoribanks is president of the Carleton Club, a London political society, and secretary of the Canning Club.

R. S. BOWERS

One of the Members of the Harvard Debating Team Which Will Meet Oxford.

Herald Sept 24

---

neglect.

HARVARD-OXFORD DEBATE ON OCT 9

The debating teams of Harvard and of Oxford, Eng, are to meet for the first time in history in public discussion at Symphony Hall Monday evening, Oct 9. Gov Channing H. Cox will be presiding chairman.

"Resolved, That the United States Nations," will be the topic under dis- should immediately join the League of cussion, the Harvard team to take the negative and the English debaters the affirmative side. This vital subject of the hour in Europe recalls the former debate on the League of Nations between Pres Lowell of Harvard and Senator Lodge, which was also held at Symphony Hall.

Globe 9-24

R. S. BOWERS,
President of Harvard University Debating Council.

Daily trials are being held at Harvard that the final team of six may be decided upon, three of whom will be "alternatives" and three will appear in actual debate. The Oxford team will be composed of Edward Marjoribanks of Christ Church, Kenneth Lindsay of Worcester, and M. C. Hollis of Balliol.

The usual American method of decision by three judges will in this case yield to the English method of the Oxford team, which is modelled upon the Parliamentary usage of the House of Commons. The audience, after hearing the speakers, files out at two doors, one marked "Yes," the other "No." A count is made and the decision immediately announced.

Globe Sept 24

HARVARD-OXFORD TO MEET IN DEBATE

9-30 Trav

An occasion of political as well as scholastic importance will be the first meeting in history between the great American and English universities of Harvard and Oxford in public debate in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, Oct. 9. The topic to be discussed is "Resolved, That the United States Should Immediately Join the League of Nations." Oxford is to take the affirmative side and Harvard the negative. The decision will be made in the English manner, i. e., by the vote of the audience instead of by judges, which is the American way.

Traveler Sept 30

HARVARD-OXFORD DEBATE

Amer 9/30

An occasion of political as well as scholastic importance will be the first meeting in history between the great American and English universities of Harvard and Oxford in public debate in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, October 9th. The topic to be discussed is "Resolved, that the United States should immediately join the League of Nations" Oxford is to take the affirmative side, and Harvard the negative. The decision will be made in the English manner, i.e., by the vote of the audience instead of by selected judges, which is the

American Sept 30

Harvard Team Chosen to Debate With Oxford

The Harvard Debating Council yesterday announced it had chosen four men for the team that is to meet Oxford University to debate the question, "Should the United States Enter the League of Nations," in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, Oct. 9.

The Harvard team will include R. S. Bowers, '24, who is president of the council; R. S. Fanning, '23, N. E. Hines, '23, and P. R. Harmel, '24. They have been selected upon the merits of their work last year in debating. Two more members are to be chosen. Of the six, three will be held in readiness as "Alternatives" and three will speak upon the platform.

Harvard will take the negative side of the question and Oxford the affirmative view. Governor Cox will preside and will address the audience.

The debate will be held in accordance with the procedure of the British House of Commons, which for generations has been the usage of the Oxford Union. Instead of judges the audience, at the conclusion of the speaking, will make the decision.

Post 9-24

RICHARD S. BOWERS
President of the Harvard Debating Council and of the team chosen to debate with the Oxford team at Symphony Hall, on Oct. 9.

Post Sept 24

HARVARD TEAM COMPLETE FOR DEBATE WITH OXFORD

At the trial meeting of the Harvard Debating Council in Harvard Hall, Cambridge, last night, three men were chosen from the 14 speakers to complete the Harvard team which is to meet the visiting team of Oxford University for the first time in a public debate at Symphony Hall Monday, Oct 9.

The three new men picked by the judges are Paul W. Williams, '25, who figured in two debates last year; Alfred Zinn, '25, formerly on the varsity team at Swarthmore, and F. G. Wesson, '25, who was on the winning team of the inter-class freshman debate.

The other three members of the team are debaters of considerable experience, having been on the varsity team last year—R. S. Bowers, '24, who is president; R. S. Fanning, '23, and Paul R. Harmel, '23. The six are to be trained daily by Coach Rudolph P. Berle until next week, when the three who are actually to speak against the Oxonians will be named.

The League of Nations is to be the topic of the debate, Harvard to contend the United States should not join immediately and Oxford to contend that we should join immediately. The decision is to be made, according to the English procedure, by the vote of the audience.

Globe Sept 28

BAXTER TO ENTERTAI BATES AND OXFORD ME

English Debater Praises Maine C lege's Team

Herald 9/28

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

LEWISTON, Me., Sept. 27—Memb of the rival debating teams of Oxf Union and Bates College left this aft noon for Augusta, where they will entertained by Gov. Baxter at executive mansion. Later they will turn to Lewiston, and the Oxford m will leave for New York, where th will stay for a short time before bating other American college teams

Mr. Marjoribanks, president of Oxford Union, said he was especia interested in the contrast of fund mental principles involved in the pr entation of arguments by the two tea Everything in English debating, he plained, is based upon parliamenta custom, and if a man were to raise voice above a conversational tone hall would be promptly emptied. your last speaker" continued Mr. Ma joribanks, "were to have appeared fore the House of Commons for stance, in the same manner in whi he presented his case to you Tuesd evening, the audience would ha promptly walked out."

He considered the present Bates tea superior in every way to the tea which journeyed to Oxford last yea The Bates speakers were very academ he held, and "appeared before us wi learned discussions," which was ve different from debating methods Oxford.

Herald Sept 28

FOR YALE-OXFORD DEBATE

English Rules to Govern—Two Yale Men and One Oxford Man on One Side and Two Oxonians and One Yale Man on Other

Trans 9/29

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 29—English style will be followed in the Yale-Oxford debate at Yale on Oct. 6. Two Yale men and one Oxford man will uphold the negative side of the question, and two Oxford men and one Yale man will defend the affirmative. This will be the first debate at Yale under these rules.

Transcript Sept 29

HARVARD-OXFORD DEBATE

Adv 9-24

The debating teams of Harvard and Oxford are to meet for the first time in public discusison at Symphony Hall on Monday evening, October 9. Governor Cox will preside. The subject of the debate will be the League of Nations. The Harvard team will speak for the United States attitude and the Oxford team against it.

Advertiser Sept 24

Defeated Oxford Debater Criticises American Way

Left to right: M. C. Hollis, Mir Mahmood and Edward Marjoribanks, members of the Oxford University debating team, which was defeated by the Bates College debaters at Lewiston, Me. Hollis and Marjoribanks will debate against Harvard Oct. 9. Kenneth Lindsay will take Mahmood's place as third member of the team. This is the first photograph of the English debaters taken on this side of the water.

Traveler 9/29

Marjoribanks Says U. S. Collegians Speak Like Lawyers with an Oratory Which Would Empty Hall in House of Commons

"American debaters speak as if from the lawyer's point of view, formally, systematically and sometimes with an oratory which, in the House of Commons, would result in a sudden and complete emptying of the hall," Edward Marjoribanks, president of the Oxford University Union and member of the Oxford debating team, now on a tour of the United States debating against some of the best collegiate teams in the country, commented after the Bates-Oxford debate at Lewiston, Me.

The Bates College debaters were declared the winners. The subject was the immediate entry of the United States into the League of Nations.

Marjoribanks continued: "We speak informally in English debates, as if in the House of Commons. We address the audience and, to them leave the decision, as in the House of Commons. Your speakers are ready to take either side and are judged by their oratorical skill.

UNITED FOR LEAGUE

"There are few subjects on which the political thought of Oxford is more unanimous. One of my companions is a Liberal, the other a Labor man, and both are enthusiastic supporters of the league. There is a real reason why we are speaking in favor of it."

Mir Mahmood, an East Indian, took the place of Kenneth Lindsay, regular member of the team, at the last minute in the debate against Bates. Lindsay, however, will speak in the debate against Harvard in Symphony Hall, Oct. 9.

Marjoribanks is a member of Christ Church College and belongs to the Conservative party. He is the heir of Lord Tweedmouth and nephew of the Marquis of Aberdeen. His mother, an American, was formerly Miss Missy Brown of Nashville, Tenn. He visited that section of the United States on his arrival in this country.

M. C. Hollis is from Somerset, Eng. and is secretary-elect of the Oxford Union. He is from Balliol College and a member of the Liberal party.

Traveler Sept 29

HARVARD AND OXFORD DEBATE

Will Argue on Question of U. S. Joining League of Nations Oct. 2

9/24

BRITONS CHOOSE AFFIRMATIVE SIDE

American and English collegiate orators will meet in forensic contest at Symphony hall, Monday evening, Oct. 2, when teams of Harvard University and of Oxford University, England, will debate the question: "Resolved, That the United States Should Immediately Join the League of Nations."

It was announced yesterday that Gov. Cox will preside. Harvard's representatives will have the negative side of the debate.

HARVARD TEAM NOT CHOSEN

Harvard's debaters are yet to be chosen, but Oxford will be represented by Edward Marjoribanks of Christ Church College, Kenneth Lindsay of Worcester College, and M. C. Hollis of Balliol College.

The audience will be drawn closely into the debate because of the decision to use the English method of deciding the winner. This is done by vote of the audience at the close of the argument. According to the parliamentary method as employed by the Oxford debaters, the audience shows its decision by filing out one of two doors which have been marked "yes" and "no" respectively.

The Harvard debaters held their first trial meeting yesterday and are now working in close contest the six men, three of whom will be chosen.

The visit of the Oxford team to this country grew out of the debates last year between Oxford and Bates College

Herald Sept 24

Herald Sept. 24

PICKS DEBATERS TO MEET OXFORD

Harvard Has Selected Four Members of Team—Contest Oct. 29

DECISION WILL BE MADE BY AUDIENCE

Four of the six members of the Harvard debating team which will meet Oxford University on the question, "The United States and the League of Nations" in Symphony hall, Monday evening, Oct. 29, have been chosen by the Harvard debating council in a series of daily trial meetings, as follows: R. S. Bowers '24, president of the council; R. S. Fanning '23, N. E. Hines '23, and P. R. Harmel '24.

The men were selected on the merits of their debating last year. Two more will be chosen, and of the six, three will be alternates and three will speak. Harvard will have the negative side of the question.

Gov. Cox will act as chairman at the debate and will also make an address. A feature will be that the audience, instead of regularly appointed judges, will make the decision.

R. S. BOWERS

One of the Members of the Harvard Debating Team Which Will Meet Oxford.

Edward Marjoribanks, president of the Oxford Debating Union, arrived in New York yesterday and will soon meet his team-mates, Kenneth Lindsay and M. C. Hollis, to prepare for the debate. Marjoribanks is president of the Carleton Club, a London political society, and secretary of the Canning Club.

Herald Sept 24

HARVARD-OXFORD TO MEET IN DEBATE

9-30 Trav

An occasion of political as well as scholastic importance will be the first meeting in history between the great American and English universities of Harvard and Oxford in public debate in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, Oct. 9. The topic to be discussed is "Resolved, That the United States Should Immediately Join the League of Nations." Oxford is to take the affirmative side and Harvard the negative. The decision will be made in the English manner, i. e., by the vote of the audience instead of by judges, which is the American way.

Traveler Sept 30

---

neglect.

HARVARD-OXFORD DEBATE ON OCT 9

The debating teams of Harvard and of Oxford, Eng, are to meet for the first time in history in public discussion at Symphony Hall Monday evening, Oct 9. Gov Channing H. Cox will be presiding chairman.

"Resolved, That the United States Nations," will be the topic under disshould immediately join the League of cussion, the Harvard team to take the negative and the English debaters the affirmative side. This vital subject of the hour in Europe recalls the former debate on the League of Nations between Pres Lowell of Harvard and Senator Lodge, which was also held at Symphony Hall.

Globe 9-24

R. S. BOWERS,

President of Harvard University Debating Council.

Daily trials are being held at Harvard that the final team of six may be decided upon, three of whom will be "alternatives" and three will appear in actual debate. The Oxford team will be composed of Edward Marjoribanks of Christ Church, Kenneth Lindsay of Worcester, and M. C. Hollis of Balliol.

The usual American method of decision by three judges will in this case yield to the English method of the Oxford team, which is modelled upon the Parliamentary usage of the House of Commons. The audience, after hearing the speakers, files out at two doors, one marked "Yes," the other "No." A count is made and the decision immediately announced.

Globe Sept 24

HARVARD-OXFORD DEBATE

Amer 9/30

An occasion of political as well as scholastic importance will be the first meeting in history between the great American and English universities of Harvard and Oxford in public debate in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, October 9th. The topic to be discussed is "Resolved, that the United States should immediately join the League of Nations" Oxford is to take the affirmative side and Harvard the negative. The decision will be made in the English manner, i.e., by the vote of the audience instead of by selected judges, which is the American way.

American Sept 30

Harvard Team Chosen to Debate With Oxford

The Harvard Debating Council yesterday announced it had chosen four men for the team that is to meet Oxford University to debate the question, "Should the United States Enter the League of Nations," in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, Oct. 9.

The Harvard team will include R. S. Bowers, '24, who is president of the council; R. S. Fanning, '23, N. E. Hines, '23, and P. R. Harmel, '24. They have been selected upon the merits of their work last year in debating. Two more members are to be chosen. Of the six, three will be held in readiness as "Alternatives" and three will speak upon the platform.

Harvard will take the negative side of the question and Oxford the affirmative view. Governor Cox will preside and will address the audience.

The debate will be held in accordance with the procedure of the British House of Commons, which for generations has been the usage of the Oxford Union. Instead of judges the audience, at the conclusion of the speaking, will make the decision.

Post 9-24

RICHARD S. BOWERS

President of the Harvard Debating Council and of the team chosen to debate with the Oxford team at Symphony Hall, on Oct. 9.

Post Sept 24

HARVARD TEAM COMPLETE FOR DEBATE WITH OXFORD

At the trial meeting of the Harvard Debating Council in Harvard Hall, Cambridge, last night, three men were chosen from the 14 speakers to complete the Harvard team which is to meet the visiting team of Oxford University for the first time in a public debate at Symphony Hall Monday, Oct 9.

The three new men picked by the judges are Paul W. Williams, '25, who figured in two debates last year; Alfred Zinn, '25, formerly on the varsity team at Swarthmore, and F. G. Wesson, '25, who was on the winning team of the inter-class freshman debate.

The other three members of the team are debaters of considerable experience, having been on the varsity team last year—R. S. Bowers, '24, who is president; R. S. Fanning, '23, and Paul R. Harmel, '23. The six are to be trained daily by Coach Rudolph P. Berle until next week, when the three who are actually to speak against the Oxonians will be named.

The League of Nations is to be the topic of the debate, Harvard to contend the United States should not join immediately and Oxford to contend that we should join immediately. The decision is to be made, according to the English procedure, by the vote of the audience.

Globe Sept 28

BAXTER TO ENTERTAI BATES AND OXFORD ME

English Debater Praises Maine C lege's Team

Herald 9/29

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

LEWISTON, Me., Sept. 27—Memb of the rival debating teams of Oxf Union and Bates College left this aft noon for Augusta, where they will entertained by Gov. Baxter at executive mansion. Later they will turn to Lewiston, and the Oxford m will leave for New York, where th will stay for a short time before bating other American college teams

Mr. Marjoribanks, president of Oxford Union, said he was especia interested in the contrast of fund mental principles involved in the pr entation of arguments by the two tea Everything in English debating, he plained, is based upon parliamenta custom, and if a man were to raise voice above a conversational tone hall would be promptly emptied. your last speaker" continued Mr. Ma joribanks, "were to have appeared b fore the House of Commons for i stance, in the same manner in whi he presented his case to you Tuesd evening, the audience would ha promptly walked out."

He considered the present Bates tea superior in every way to the tea which journeyed to Oxford last yea The Bates speakers were very academ he held, and "appeared before us wit learned discussions," which was ve different from debating methods Oxford.

Herald Sept 28

FOR YALE-OXFORD DEBATE

English Rules to Govern—Two Yale Men and One Oxford Man on One Side and Two Oxonians and One Yale Man on Other

Trans 9/29

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 29—English style will be followed in the Yale-Oxford debate at Yale on Oct. 6. Two Yale men and one Oxford man will uphold the negative side of the question, and two Oxford men and one Yale man will defend the affirmative. This will be the first debate at Yale under these rules.

Transcript Sept 29

HARVARD-OXFORD DEBATE

The debating teams of Harvard and Oxford are to meet for the first time in public discusison at Symphony Hall on Monday evening, October 9. Governor Cox will preside. The subject of the debate will be the League of Nations. The Harvard team will speak for the United States attitude and the Oxford team against it.

Advertiser Sept 24

Defeated Oxford Debater Criticises American Way

Left to right: M. C. Hollis, Mir Mahmood and Edward Marjoribanks, members of the Oxford University debating team, which was defeated by the Bates College debaters at Lewiston, Me. Hollis and Marjoribanks will debate against Harvard Oct. 9. Kenneth Lindsay will take Mahmood's place as third member of the team. This is the first photograph of the English debaters taken on this side of the water.

Traveler 9/29

Marjoribanks Says U. S. Collegians Speak Like Lawyers with an Oratory Which Would Empty Hall in House of Commons

"American debaters speak as if from the lawyer's point of view, formally, systematically and sometimes with an oratory which, in the House of Commons, would result in a sudden and complete emptying of the hall," Edward Marjoribanks, president of the Oxford University Union and member of the Oxford debating team, now on a tour of the United States debating against some of the best collegiate teams in the country, commented after the Bates-Oxford debate at Lewiston, Me.

The Bates College debaters were declared the winners. The subject was the immediate entry of the United States into the League of Nations.

Marjoribanks continued: "We speak informally in English debates, as if in the House of Commons. We address the audience and to them leave the decision, as in the House of Commons. Your speakers are ready to take either side and are judged by their oratorical skill.

UNITED FOR LEAGUE

"There are few subjects on which the political thought of Oxford is more unanimous. One of my companions is a Liberal, the other a Labor man, and both are enthusiastic supporters of the league. There is a real reason why we are speaking in favor of it."

Mir Mahmood, an East Indian, took the place of Kenneth Lindsay, regular member of the team, at the last minute in the debate against Bates. Lindsay, however, will speak in the debate against Harvard in Symphony Hall, Oct. 9.

Marjoribanks is a member of Christ Church College and belongs to the Conservative party. He is the heir of Lord Tweedmouth and nephew of the Marquis of Aberdeen. His mother, an American, was formerly Miss Missy Brown of Nashville, Tenn. He visited that section of the United States on his arrival in this country.

M. C. Hollis is from Somerset, Eng. and is secretary-elect of the Oxford Union. He is from Balliol College and a member of the Liberal party.

Traveler Sept 29

Harvard — Oxford Debate

Harvard University and the University of Oxford, England, will meet for the first time in debate at Symphony Hall, Boston, Monday evening, October 9. The subject of the debate will be "Resolved, that the United States should immediately join the League of Nations." Harvard will take the negative and Oxford the affirmative side. Governor Channing H. Cox will preside and will make an address. This debate will be held according to the English procedure, whereby there are no selected judges but the audience at the conclusion votes the decision. H Gazette 9/30

Tickets for the debate, at 50 cents, $1.00, $1.50, and $2.00 each, are on sale at the Coöperative and at Leavitt & Peirce's, in Cambridge, and at Symphony Hall in Boston.

Harvard Gazette Sept 30

THE SUNDAY HERALD, BOSTON, OCTOBER 1, 192

HARVARD DEBATING TEAM AND COACH

STANDING, LEFT TO RIGHT, R. M. MORRISON '24, MANAGER; PAUL W. WILLIAMS '25, R. S. BOWERS '24, PRESIDENT; F. G. WESSON '25, RUDOLPH R. BERLE, THIRD YEAR LAW, COACH. SEATED, LEFT TO RIGHT, ALFRED ZINN '25, PAUL HARMELL '23, R. S. FANNING '23.

Herald Oct 1

DRILLING FOR OXFORD DEBATE

Harvard Speakers and Alternates to Be Designated Tomorrow

CONTEST WILL TAKE PLACE ON OCT.

Coach Rudolph P. Berle is expected to announce tomorrow afternoon the names of the three members of the Harvard debating team who will meet the team from Oxford University in public debate o the League of Nations in symphony hall on Monday evening, Oct. 9. The other three members of the team will be held in readiness as alternates, according to custom.

Three of the six men were retained on the team by virtue of their brilliant wor last year. They are R. S. Bowers, who is president of the debating council; R. S. Fanning and Paul R. Harmell. The other three were chosen last week after a series of trials. They are Paul W. Williams, who participated in two debates last year; Alfred Zinn, who comes from Swarthmore College with a record as a debater, and F. G. Wesson, who was on the winning team of his inter-class freshman debate.

THE OXFORD DEBATERS

The visiting Oxford team comprises Edward Majoribanks, an aspirant to Parliament; M. C. Hollis, secretary-elect of the Oxford Union, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is active in the labor movement in England and also prominent at Oxford as a member of the first football eleven.

The Oxonians are to advocate the immediate entrance of the United States into the League of Nations, while the Harvard speakers are to combat this proposition. The Harvard team will waive its usual custom of a group of judges, and the decision will be left entirely to the audience, ballots to be passed around and counted immediately at the conclusion of the speaking.

HARVARD AND OXFORD IN PUBLIC DEBATE

B U News 10/3

League Of Nations Subject Of Forensi Battle To Be Held At Symphony Hall

A public debate between Harvar and Oxford University of England, i to take place the evening of October 9 at Symphony Hall. It is understoo that several of the active debating organizations in the university will sen delegations.

The subject to be discussed is, "Resolved that the United States shoul immediately join the League of Nations." Oxford is to take the affirmative side and Harvard the negativ Governor Cox will preside and addres the audience at this function, whic will bear international, political, a well as scholastic importance.

The three members of the Oxof team are Edward Marjoribanks, pres dent, who is heir to Lord Tweedmout and nephew of the Marquis of Abe deen; his mother is an American, fo merly Miss Missy Brown, and a nativ of Nashville, Tenn.; M. C. Hollis, o Somerset, Eng., is likewise of disti guished descent and is secretary-ele of the Oxford Union. The third member is Kenneth Lindsay, who is activ in the labor movement in England, an also prominent at Oxford as a member of the first football eleven.

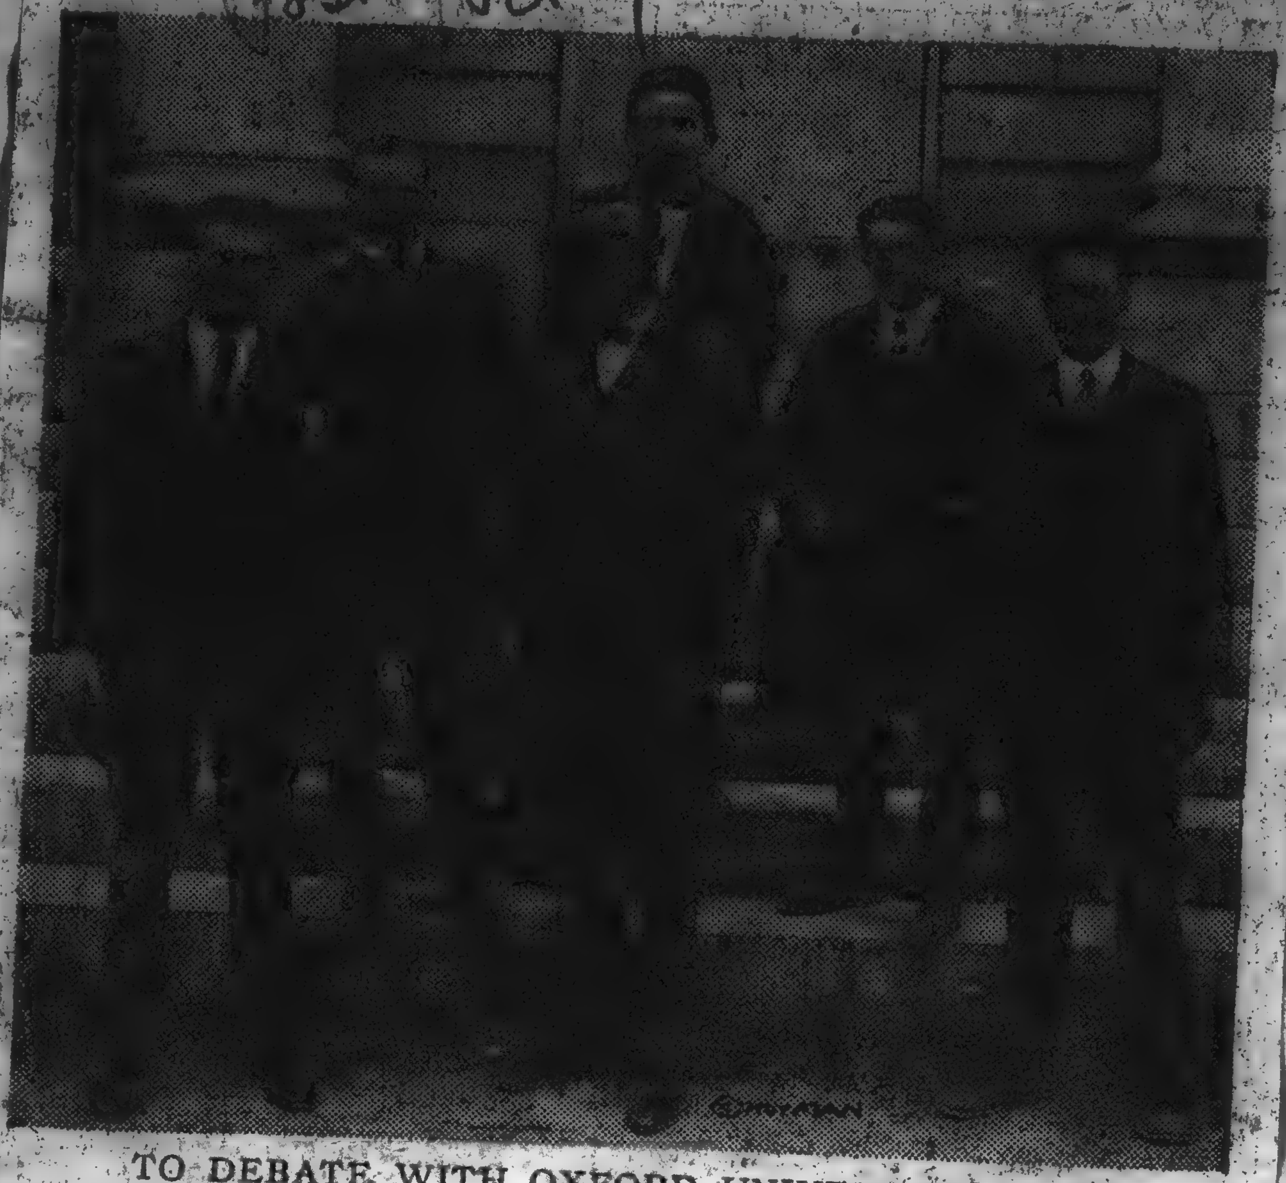
The Harvard team comprises R. S Fanning, '23; P. R. Harmell, '23; R S. Bowers, '24; Alfred Zinn, '25; E. G Wesson, '25, and P. W. Williams, '25 The six are to be coached daily unti a few days before the debate, when th three who are to meet the Oxonian will be named.

There will be no judges, in accordance with the American method, bu the decision will be made by the vot of the audience. This is the custon of the Oxford debaters and is modelle on the procedure of the House of Commons.

B U News Oct 3

Harvard Debaters to Meet Oxford Oct. 9

Post Oct 1



TO DEBATE WITH OXFORD UNIVERSITY TEAM.
Harvard speakers, who are to meet the British debaters in Symphony Hall on Oct. 9. In the group are, left to right: Paul W. Williams, '25; Alfred Zinn, '23; R. S. Bowers, '24; R. S. Fanning, '23; Paul Harmell, '23, and E. G. Wesson, '25.

The three Crimson debaters who are to oppose the Oxford debating team on the subject of the League of Nations in Symphony Hall on Oct 9 will be named tomorrow, together with the trio of alternates.

The team is being tried out daily by Coach Rudolph B. Berle. Three of the six men on the team were retained by virtue of their good work on the varsity team last year, H. S. Bowers, who is president of the debating council, R. S. Fanning and Paul R. Harmell. The other three were chosen last week after a series of trials. They are Paul W. Williams, Alfred Zinn and F. G. Wesson.

The Oxford team is composed of Edward Marhoribanks, the president, M. C. Hollis and Kenneth Lindsay. The first named is of distinguished lineage and an aspirant to Parliament; Hollis is secretary-elect of the Oxford Union, while Lindsay is active in the Labor movement in England and prominent at Oxford as a member of the first football eleven.

The Oxonians are to advocate the immediate entrance of the United States into the League, while the Harvard speakers are to take the opposite side.

The decision will be made by the audience, ballots to be passed about and counted immediately at the conclusion of the speaking.

Post Oct 1

THREE OF THESE HARVARD MEN TO MEET OXONIANS IN DEBAT

Globe 10/1

Harvard debaters, from whom three will be chosen to meet Oxford in public discussion of the League of Nations at Symphony Hall, Oct 9. Left to right: Paul W. Williams, '25; Alfred Zinn, '25; R. S. Bowers, '24 (President), R. S. Fanning, '23; Paul Harmell, '23; E. G. Wesson, '25.

This is a picture of the six Harvard men from whom there will be chosen to oppose the visiting Oxford debaters, who will argue for the immediate entrance of the United States into the League of Nations.

The six are being tried out every day before Coach Rudolph P. Berle, and the three who are actually to speak on the platform at Symphony Hall will be named tomorrow afternoon. The other three will act as alternates.

R. E. Bowers, who is president of the Debating Council; R. S. Fanning and Paul R. Harmell were chosen as a result of their work on the Harvard Debating team last year. The other three were chosen last week, after a series of trials. Of these, Paul W. Williams figured in two debates last year. Alfred Zinn comes from Swarthmore College with the reputation of a brilliant debater and F. G. Wesson was on the winning team of his interclass freshman debate.

The Oxford team is headed by Edward Marjoribanks, an aspirant to Parliament; M. C. Hollis, the secretary of the Oxford Union, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is a member of the Oxford University football team and is prominent in the English labor movement.

The subject of the debate will add to the interest which it is arousing, as the present troubles at the Dardenelles and the British project to put Constantinople under control of the League of Nations has brought that body into the foreground again.

The decision will be given in the English manner, by a ballot of the audience and not by judges.

WILL REPRESENT HARVARD IN DEBATE

Team Chosen to Meet Oxford Men on Monday

Herald 10/3

Harvard last night picked its team members for the international debate in Symphony hall on Monday, when the Oxford University speakers will advocate immediate entrance of the United States into the League of Nations, with Harvard taking the opposing side.

The judges, Prof. H. B. Huntington and R. P. Berle, who is a third year student, chose Raymond S. Fanning '23 of Chattanooga, Richard S. Bowers '24 of Brookline and Paul R. Harmel '23 of Cleveland to represent Harvard. Their alternates will be Edward C. Wesson '25 of Montclair, N. J.; Alfred E. Zinn of Swarthmore, Pa., and Paul W. Williams of New Bedford.

An engagement in the western part of the state may prevent the attendance of Gov. Cox, who was to preside at the debate.

Herald Oct 3

HARVARD PICKS HER DEBATERS

Three Men Chosen to Face Oxonians

Post 10/3

The three Harvard debaters who will face the Oxford team Monday night at Symphony Hall were chosen last night by Coach Berle of Harvard. They are R. S. Bowers, '24, of Brookline; R. S. Fanning, '23, of Chattanooga, Tenn., and R. R. Harmel, '23, of Cleveland, Ohio.

They will take the negative of the resolution: "The United States Should Join the League of Nations." The speeches will be of 15 minutes each, and there will be no rebuttals. Governor Channing H. Cox will preside.

Three other members of the Harvard debating team will assist the chosen three to prepare their subject matter. The assistants are E. G. Wesson, 25, of Montclaire, N. J.; A. E. Zinn, '25, of Swarthmore College, and P. W. Williams of New Bedford.

Post Oct 3

Harvard — Oxford Debate

Harvard University and the University of Oxford, England, will meet for the first time in debate at Symphony Hall, Boston, Monday evening, October 9. The subject of the debate will be "Resolved, that the United States should immediately join the League of Nations." Harvard will take the negative and Oxford the affirmative side. Governor Channing H. Cox will preside and will make an address. This debate will be held according to the English procedure, whereby there are no selected judges but the audience at the conclusion votes the decision. H Gazette

Tickets for the debate, at 50 cents, $1.00, $1.50, and $2.00 each, are on sale at the Coöperative and at Leavitt & Peirce's, in Cambridge, and at Symphony Hall in Boston.

Harvard Gazette Sept 30

THE SUNDAY HERALD, BOSTON, OCTOBER 1, 192

HARVARD DEBATING TEAM AND COACH

STANDING, LEFT TO RIGHT, R. M. MORRISON '24, MANAGER; PAUL W. WILLIAMS '25, R. S. BOWERS '24, PRESIDENT; F. G. WESSON '25, RUDOLPH R. BERLE, THIRD YEAR LAW, COACH. SEATED, LEFT TO RIGHT, ALFRED ZINN '25, PAUL HARMELL '23, R. S. FANNING '23

Herald Oct 1

DRILLING FOR OXFORD DEBATE

Harvard Speakers and Alternates to Be Designated Tomorrow

CONTEST WILL TAKE PLACE ON OCT. 9

Coach Rudolph P. Berle is expected to announce tomorrow afternoon the names of the three members of the Harvard debating team who will meet the team from Oxford University in public debate on the League of Nations in symphony hall on Monday evening, Oct. 9. The other three members of the team will be held in readiness as alternates, according to custom.

Three of the six men were retained on the team by virtue of their brilliant work last year. They are R. S. Bowers, who is president of the debating council; R. S. Fanning and Paul R. Harmell. The other three were chosen last week after a series of trials. They are Paul W. Williams, who participated in two debates last year; Alfred Zinn, who comes from Swarthmore College with a record as a debater, and F. G. Wesson, who was on the winning team of his inter-class freshman debate.

THE OXFORD DEBATERS

The visiting Oxford team comprises Edward Majoribanks, an aspirant to Parliament; M. C. Hollis, secretary-elect of the Oxford Union, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is active in the labor movement in England and also prominent at Oxford as a member of the first football eleven.

The Oxonians are to advocate the immediate entrance of the United States into the League of Nations, while the Harvard speakers are to combat this proposition. The Harvard team will waive its usual custom of a group of judges, and the decision will be left entirely to the audience, ballots to be passed around and counted immediately at the conclusion of the speaking.

HARVARD AND OXFORD IN PUBLIC DEBATE

B U News

League Of Nations Subject Of Forensic Battle To Be Held At Symphony Hall

A public debate between Harvard and Oxford University of England, is to take place the evening of October 9 at Symphony Hall. It is understood that several of the active debating organizations in the university will send delegations.

The subject to be discussed is, "Resolved that the United States should immediately join the League of Nations." Oxford is to take the affirmative side and Harvard the negative. Governor Cox will preside and address the audience at this function, which will bear international, political, as well as scholastic importance.

The three members of the Oxford team are Edward Marjoribanks, president, who is heir to Lord Tweedmouth and nephew of the Marquis of Aberdeen; his mother is an American, formerly Miss Missy Brown, and a native of Nashville, Tenn.; M. C. Hollis, of Somerset, Eng., is likewise of distinguished descent and is secretary-elect of the Oxford Union. The third member is Kenneth Lindsay, who is active in the labor movement in England, and also prominent at Oxford as a member of the first football eleven.

The Harvard team comprises R. S. Fanning, '23; P. R. Harmell, '23; R. S. Bowers, '24; Alfred Zinn, '25; E. G. Wesson, '25, and P. W. Williams, '25. The six are to be coached daily until a few days before the debate, when the three who are to meet the Oxonians will be named.

There will be no judges, in accordance with the American method, but the decision will be made by the vote of the audience. This is the custom of the Oxford debaters and is modelled on the procedure of the House of Commons.

B U News Oct 3

Harvard Debaters to Meet Oxford Oct. 9

Post Oct 1

TO DEBATE WITH OXFORD UNIVERSITY TEAM.
Harvard speakers, who are to meet the British debaters in Symphony Hall on Oct. 9. In the group are, left to right: Paul W. Williams, '25; Alfred Zinn, '23; R. S. Bowers, '24; R. S. Fanning, '23; Paul Harmell, '23, and E. G. Wesson, '25.

The three Crimson debaters who are to oppose the Oxford debating team on the subject of the League of Nations in Symphony Hall on Oct. 9 will be named tomorrow, together with the trio of alternates.

The team is being tried out daily by Coach Rudolph B. Berle. Three of the six men on the team were retained by virtue of their good work on the varsity team last year, H. S. Bowers, who is president of the debating council, R. S. Fanning and Paul R. Harmell. The other three were chosen last week after a series of trials. They are Paul W. Williams, Alfred Zinn and F. G. Wesson.

The Oxford team is composed of Edward Marhoribanks, the president, M. C. Hollis and Kenneth Lindsay. The first named is of distinguished lineage and an aspirant to Parliament; Hollis is secretary-elect of the Oxford Union, while Lindsay is active in the Labor movement in England and prominent at Oxford as a member of the first football eleven.

The Oxonians are to advocate the immediate entrance of the United States into the League, while the Harvard speakers are to take the opposite side.

The decision will be made by the audience, ballots to be passed about and counted immediately at the conclusion of the speaking.

Post Oct 1

WILL REPRESENT HARVARD IN DEBATE

Team Chosen to Meet Oxford Men on Monday

Herald 10/3

Harvard last night picked its team members for the international debate in Symphony hall on Monday, when the Oxford University speakers will advocate immediate entrance of the United States into the League of Nations, with Harvard taking the opposing side.

The judges, Prof. H. B. Huntington and R. P. Berle, who is a third year student, chose Raymond S. Fanning '23 of Chattanooga, Richard S. Bowers '24 of Brookline and Paul R. Harmel '23 of Cleveland to represent Harvard. Their alternates will be Edward C. Wesson '25 of Montclair, N. J..; Alfred E. Zinn of Swarthmore, Pa., and Paul W. Williams of New Bedford.

An engagement in the western part of the state may prevent the attendance of Gov. Cox, who was to preside at the debate.

Herald Oct 3

HARVARD PICKS HER DEBATERS

Three Men Chosen to Face Oxonians

Post 10/3

The three Harvard debaters who will face the Oxford team Monday night at Symphony Hall were chosen last night by Coach Berle of Harvard. They are R. S. Bowers, '24, of Brookline; R. S. Fanning, '23, of Chattanooga, Tenn., and R. R. Harmel, '23, of Cleveland, Ohio.

They will take the negative of the resolution: "The United States Should Join the League of Nations." The speeches will be of 15 minutes each, and there will be no rebuttals. Governor Channing H. Cox will preside.

Three other members of the Harvard debating team will assist the chosen three to prepare their subject matter. The assistants are E. G. Wesson, 25, of Montclaire, N. J.; A. E. Zinn, '25, of Swarthmore College, and P. W. Williams of New Bedford.

Post Oct 3

THREE OF THESE HARVARD MEN TO MEET OXONIANS IN DEBATE

Globe 10/1

Harvard debaters, from whom three will be chosen to meet Oxford in public discussion of the League of Nations at Symphony Hall, Oct 9. Left to right: Paul W. Williams, '25; Alfred Zinn, '25; R. S. Bowers, '24 (President), R. S. Fanning, '23; Paul Harmell, '23; E. G. Wesson, '25.

This is a picture of the six Harvard men from whom there will be chosen to oppose the visiting Oxford debaters, who will argue for the immediate entrance of the United States into the League of Nations.

The six are being tried out every day before Coach Rudolph P. Berle, and the three who are actually to speak on the platform at Symphony Hall will be named tomorrow afternoon. The other three will act as alternates.

R. E. Bowers, who is president of the Debating Council; R. S. Fanning and Paul R. Harmell were chosen as a result of their work on the Harvard Debating team last year. The other three were chosen last week, after a series of trials. Of these, Paul W. Williams figured in two debates last year. Alfred Zinn comes from Swarthmore College with the reputation of a brilliant debater and F. G. Wesson was on the winning team of his interclass freshman debate.

The Oxford team is headed by Edward Marjoribanks, an aspirant to Parliament; M. C. Hollis, the secretary of the Oxford Union, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is a member of the Oxford University football team and is prominent in the English labor movement.

The subject of the debate will add to the interest which it is arousing, as the present troubles at the Dardenelles and the British project to put Constantinople under control of the League of Nations has brought that body into the foreground again.

The decision will be given in the English manner, by a ballot of the audience and not by judges.

Harvard — Oxford Debate

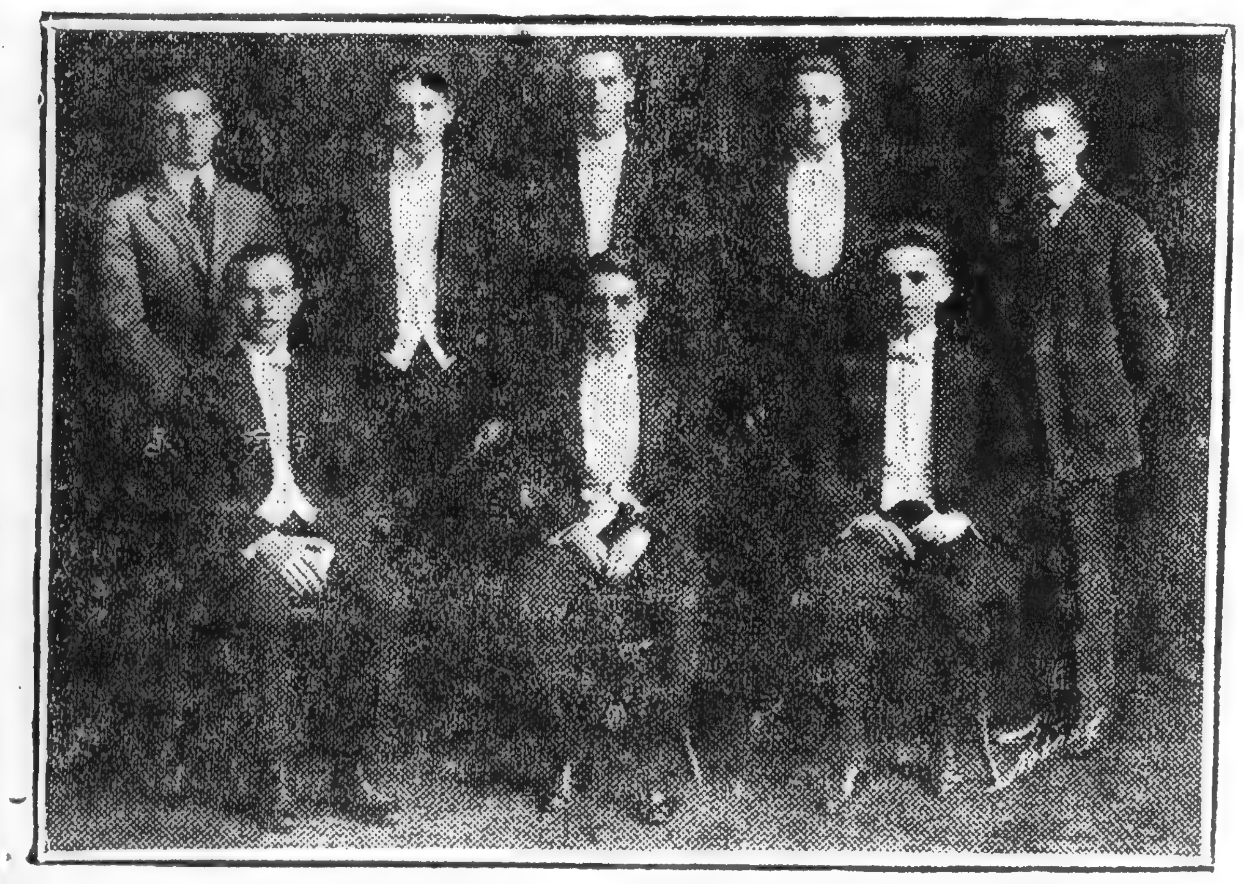
Harvard University and the University of Oxford, England, will meet for the first time in debate at Symphony Hall, Boston, Monday evening, October 9. The subject of the debate will be "Resolved, that the United States should immediately join the League of Nations." Harvard will take the negative and Oxford the affirmative side. Governor Channing H. Cox will preside and will make an address. This debate will be held according to the English procedure, whereby there are no selected judges but the audience at the conclusion votes the decision.

Tickets for the debate, at 50 cents, $1.00, $1.50, and $2.00 each, are on sale at the Coöperative and at Leavitt & Peirce's, in Cambridge, and at Symphony Hall in Boston.

Harvard Gazette Sept 30

THE SUNDAY HERALD, BOSTON, OCTOBER 1, 1922

HARVARD DEBATING TEAM AND COACH



STANDING, LEFT TO RIGHT, R. M. MORRISON '24, MANAGER; PAUL W. WILLIAMS '25, R. S. BOWERS '24, PRESIDENT; F. G. WESSON '25, RUDOLPH R. BERLE, THIRD YEAR LAW, COACH. SEATED, LEFT TO RIGHT, ALFRED ZINN '25, PAUL HARMELL '23, R. S. FANNING '23

Herald Oct 1

DRILLING FOR OXFORD DEBATE

Harvard Speakers and Alternates to Be Designated Tomorrow

CONTEST WILL TAKE PLACE ON OCT. 9

Coach Rudolph P. Berle is expected to announce tomorrow afternoon the names of the three members of the Harvard debating team who will meet the team from Oxford University in public debate on the League of Nations in symphony hall on Monday evening, Oct. 9. The other three, members of the team will be held in readiness as alternates, according to custom.

Three of the six men were retained on the team by virtue of their brilliant wor" last year. They are R. S. Bowers, who is president of the debating council; R. S. Fanning and Paul R. Harmell. The other three were chosen last week after a series of trials. They are Paul W. Williams, who participated in two debates last year; Alfred Zinn, who comes from Swarthmore College with a record as a debater, and F. G. Wesson, who was on the winning team of his inter-class freshman debate.

THE OXFORD DEBATERS

The visiting Oxford team comprises Edward Majoribanks, an aspirant to Parliament; M. C. Hollis, secretary-elect of the Oxford Union, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is active in the labor movement in England and also prominent at Oxford as a member of the first football eleven.

The Oxonians are to advocate the immediate entrance of the United States into the League of Nations, while the Harvard speakers are to combat this proposition. The Harvard team will waive its usual custom of a group of judges, and the decision will be left entirely to the audience, ballots to be passed around and counted immediatel at the conclusion of the speaking.

HARVARD AND OXFORD IN PUBLIC DEBATE

League Of Nations Subject Of Forensi Battle To Be Held At Symphony Hall

A public debate between Harvar and Oxford University of England, i to take place the evening of October 9 at Symphony Hall. It is understoo that several of the active debating or ganizations in the university will sen delegations.

The subject to be discussed is, "Re solved that the United States shoul immediately join the League of Na tions." Oxford is to take the affirma tive side and Harvard the negativ Governor Cox will preside and addres the audience at this function, whic will bear international, political, a well as scholastic importance.

The three members of the Oxfor team are Edward Marjoribanks, pres dent, who is heir to Lord Tweedmout and nephew of the Marquis of Abe deen; his mother is an American, for merly Miss Missy Brown, and a nativ of Nashville, Tenn.; M. C. Hollis, o Somerset, Eng., is likewise of distin guished descent and is secretary-elec of the Oxford Union. The third mem ber is Kenneth Lindsay, who is activ in the labor movement in England, and also prominent at Oxford as a mem ber of the first football eleven.

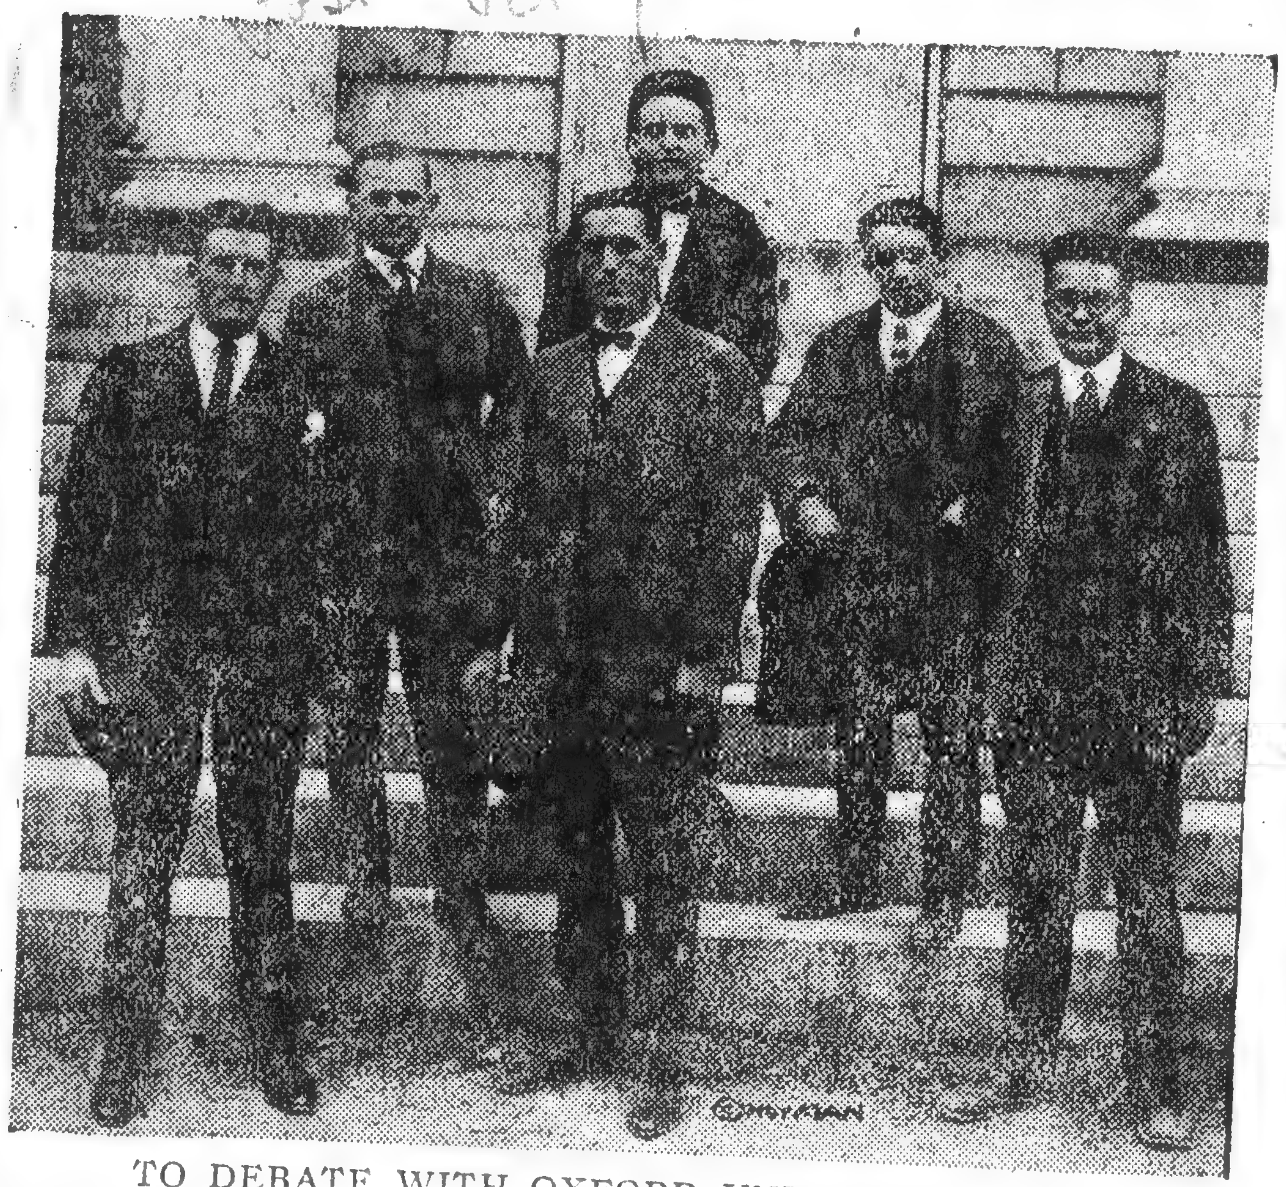
The Harvard team comprises R. S Fanning, '23; P. R. Harmell, '23; R S. Bowers, '24; Alfred Zinn, '25; E. G Wesson, '25, and P. W. Williams, '25 The six are to be coached daily unti a few days before the debate, when the three who are to meet the Oxonians will be named.

There will be no judges, in accord ance with the American method, bu the decision will be made by the vote of the audience. This is the custom of the Oxford debaters and is modelled on the procedure of the House of Com mons.

BU News Oct 3

Harvard Debaters to Meet Oxford Oct. 9

Post Oct 1



TO DEBATE WITH OXFORD UNIVERSITY TEAM.

Harvard speakers, who are to meet the British debaters in Symphony Hall on Oct. 9. In the group are, left to right: Paul W. Williams, '25; Alfred Zinn, '23; R. S. Bowers, '24; R. S. Fanning, '23; Paul Harmell, '23, and E. G. Wesson, '25.

The three Crimson debaters who are to oppose the Oxford debating team on the subject of the League of Nations in Symphony Hall on Oct. 9 will be named tomorrow, together with the trio of alternates.

The team is being tried out daily by Coach Rudolph B. Berle. Three of the six men on the team were retained by virtue of their good work on the varsity team last year, H. S. Bowers, who is president of the debating council, R. S. Fanning and Paul R. Harmell. The other three were chosen last week after a series of trials. They are Paul W. Williams, Alfred Zinn and F. G. Wesson.

The Oxford team is composed of Edward Marhoribanks, the president, M. C. Hollis and Kenneth Lindsay. The first named is of distinguished lineage and an aspirant to Parliament; Hollis is secretary-elect of the Oxford Union, while Lindsay is active in the Labor movement in England and prominent at Oxford as a member of the first football eleven.

The Oxonians are to advocate the immediate entrance of the United States into the League, while the Harvard speakers are to take the opposite side.

The decision will be made by the audience, ballots to be passed about and counted immediately at the conclusion of the speaking.

Post Oct 1

WILL REPRESENT HARVARD IN DEBATE

Team Chosen to Meet Oxford Men on Monday

Herald 10/3

Harvard last night picked its team members for the international debate in Symphony hall on Monday, when the Oxford University speakers will advocate immediate entrance of the United States into the League of Nations, with Harvard taking the opposing side.

The judges, Prof. H. B. Huntington and R. P. Berle, who is a third year student, chose Raymond S. Fanning '23 of Chattanooga, Richard S. Bowers '24 of Brookline and Paul R. Harmel '23 of Cleveland to represent Harvard. Their alternates will be Edward C. Wesson '25 of Montclair, N. J.; Alfred E. Zinn of Swarthmore, Pa., and Paul W. Williams of New Bedford.

An engagement in the western part of the state may prevent the attendance of Gov. Cox, who was to preside at the

Herald Oct 3

HARVARD PICKS HER DEBATERS

Three Men Chosen to Face Oxonians

Post 10/3

The three Harvard debaters who will face the Oxford team Monday night at Symphony Hall were chosen last night by Coach Berle of Harvard. They are R. S. Bowers, '24, of Brookline; R. S. Fanning, '23, of Chattanooga, Tenn., and R. R. Harmel, '23, of Cleveland, Ohio.

They will take the negative of the resolution: "The United States Should Join the League of Nations." The speeches will be of 15 minutes each, and there will be no rebuttals. Governor Channing H. Cox will preside.

Three other members of the Harvard debating team will assist the chosen three to prepare their subject matter. The assistants are E. G. Wesson, 25, of Montclaire, N. J.; A. E. Zinn, '25, of Swarthmore College, and P. W. Williams of New Bedford.

Post Oct 3

THREE OF THESE HARVARD MEN TO MEET OXONIANS IN DEBATE

Harvard debaters, from whom three will be chosen to meet Oxford in public discussion of the League of Nations at Symphony Hall, Oct 9. Left to right: Paul W. Williams, '25; Alfred Zinn, '25; R. S. Bowers, '24 (President), R. S. Fanning, '23; Paul Harmell, '23; E. G. Wesson, '25.

This is a picture of the six Harvard men from whom there will be chosen to oppose the visiting Oxford debaters, who will argue for the immediate entrance of the United States into the League of Nations.

The six are being tried out every day before Coach Rudolph P. Berle, and the three who are actually to speak on the platform at Symphony Hall will be named tomorrow afternoon. The other three will act as alternates.

R. E. Bowers, who is president of the Debating Council; R. S. Fanning and Paul R. Harmell were chosen as a result of their work on the Harvard Debating team last year. The other three were chosen last week, after a series of trials. Of these, Paul W. Williams figured in two debates last year. Alfred Zinn comes from Swarthmore College with the reputation of a brilliant debater and F. G. Wesson was on the winning team of his interclass freshman debate.

The Oxford team is headed by Edward Marjoribanks, an aspirant to Parliament; M. C. Hollis, the secretary of the Oxford Union, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is a member of the Oxford University football team and is prominent in the English labor movement.

The subject of the debate will add to the interest which it is arousing, as the present troubles at the Dardenelles and the British project to put Constantinople under control of the League of Nations has brought that body into the fore ground again.

The decision will be given in the English manner, by a ballot of the audience and not by judges.

Debaters from Overseas

Trans 9/28

(From Kahill Studios, Portland, Me.)

The Oxford Team, Which Was Defeated by Bates This Week and Which Meets the Men of Harvard in a Public Debate on the League of Nations Question in Symphony Hall on October 9th.

Left to Right—M. C. Hollis, Mir Mahmood and Edward Marjoribanks.

THE photograph was taken on the Bates College campus at Lewiston, just before the Oxionians met the Bates team on the same subject which is to be discussed in Boston. Mir Mahmood, the East Indian speaker, was substituted at the last minute for Kenneth Lindsay and the latter is to appear at Symphony Hall instead.

Marjoribanks, president of the Union, interviewed after the debate, pointed out the great divergence between the debating methods of England and America. "We speak informally," he said, "as if in the House of Commons, which, indeed, is our usual goal. We address the audience, and to them leave the decision, as in the House of Commons. The merits of the subject are always considered rather than the skill in the speaking. You Americans, on the other hand, speak as if from the lawyer's point of view, formally, systematically, and sometimes with an oratory which, in the House of Commons, would result in a sudden and complete emptying of the hall. Your speakers are ready to take either side and are judged on their oratorical skill."

"There are few subjects on which the political thought of Oxford is unanimous. One of my companions is a Liberal, the other a Labor man, and both are enthusiastic supporters of the League. There is the real reason why we are speaking in favor of it."

Marjoribanks is a member of Christ Church College, and belongs to the Conservative party. He is heir of Lord Tweedmouth and nephew of the Marquis of Aberdeen. His mother, formerly Miss Missy Brown, is an American and a native of Nashville, Tennessee, which part of the country the Englishman visited on his arrival in America.

M. C. Hollis, of Somerset, England, is secretary-elect of the Oxford Union. He is from Balliol College and is a member of the Liberal party. He first sailel to Canada and joined his colleagues by way of Montreal.

As a result of trials held last night, the remaining members of the Harvard team which is to meet the Oxonians have been selected. The final composition of the squad is as follows: R. S. Fanning, '23, P. R. Harmel, '23, R. S. Bowers, '24, Alfred Zinn, '25, E. G. Wesson, '25, and P. W. Williams, '25. During the coming week further trials will be carried on among this squad and at the end of the week the final team of three men will be chosen for the debate.

Transcript Sept 28

The International Debates

Herald 10-2

Little Bates, the American David, went to England last year and met Oxford, the Imperial Goliath, in the forum where the British empire trains its future debaters for the House of Commons. This year the British Goliath comes to America and will do battle with the American David at Lewiston and with the representatives of Harvard University at Symphony hall. Oxford challenged Bates last year because that small Maine college stood for the best America possessed in college debating. Now comes the return engagement.

For many reasons we wish these debates might stir the public to enthusiasm. If great audiences hear them, and if the interest in them is extended enough to command liberal amounts of newspaper space, we think the reflex influence of the average American undergraduate will be salutary. As things are now, college athletics are featured and intellectual competitions of every kind are not. The men who "do most" for their schools are those who score touchdowns and bat out home runs. For over-emphasis on college sport and under-emphasis on scholarship we are inclined to think the graduate body more responsible than the students themselves. To be sure a high-stand man sometimes is a "grind" and nothing else, not a "mixer," not very likable, not interested in the general activities of the institution.

But we would like to see these debates make sufficient impression on both the general public and the undergraduates to help a little towards a needed readjustment of values. Not that a debater who is not inerrant in his use of adjectives will obtain the attention that a football man gets when he sprains a knee, nor that a college the size of Bates, which wins debates against such universities as Harvard and Yale, will get such headlines as does Centre when it plays Harvard to a standstill on the gridiron. Not until some fundamental changes are made in human nature will the wrangler in the forum receive the recognition that comes to the gladiators in the stadium.

But these wranglers ought to have greater recognition. Think what Bates has done. She has won 40 debates in 50 against small schools and great universities. In 1920 and 1921 she won seven consecutive victories, with Cornell, Harvard and Yale numbered among the vanquished. She faced great odds at Oxford. The subject was that of the non-intervention policy of America in European affairs. In this country the arguments are weighed by a small body of judges who render the decision. At Oxford the audience itself, of graduates and students, settles the question. And Bates, with a team chosen from a few hundred students, appeared in that historic Oxford Union to support a viewpoint which ran counter to all the opinions and prepossessions of their English hearers, and in the argument, against a team chosen from the 6000 members of the 22 colleges of Oxford University, Bates performed the miracle of getting more than a third of the vote.

Manners of speaking differ, of course. But the difference between the English and the American manner is the opposite of what most of us would suppose it to be, according to the professor of law and politics at Hamilton College, who says in the New York Times that the "comments of the English press indicated that the Americans excelled in logic and reasoning ability and were more earnest," and that "the English speakers were more emotional and impulsive and witty and eloquent, and were given to oratorical climaxes." They had "the parliamentary grand manner" [illegible] Americans "followed more the procedure of the court room and the precedents of the American bar."

The background thus sketched ought to increase the public interest in the forthcoming arguments. That the English visitors will receive every courtesy that kindly feeling can suggest goes without saying. That the debates, under American conditions and rules, will be a severe test for the visitors is clear. No matter where victory may lie the great thing is to make these debaters feel that the public in and out of the universities thinks the debates are worth while.

With 66 [illegible]

Herald Oct 2

McCALL SELECTED TO PRESIDE AT DEBATE

Herald Oct 6

Former Governor Also Will Be Guest at Harvard-Oxford Banquet

Former Gov. Samuel W. McCall will be the presiding officer at the Harvard-Oxford international debate Monday evening in Symphony hall. Gov. Cox, originally selected to be in the chair, has another engagement on that date and was forced to reconsider. Mr. McCall will also attend the banquet which the Harvard Club of Boston will give the two teams the evening of the debate.

Tomorrow Mr. McCall will dine at the Union Club of Boston with representatives of both teams to discuss arrangements for the debate. Although in the matter of having the audience award the decision, of limiting each speaker to 15 minutes, and allowing no rebuttal, the English debating practice has been followed entirely, but it is doubtful whether the Harvard team will alter its style of presentation of material to match the more conversational English manner.

Herald Oct 6

HARVARD-OXFORD DEBATE

adv Oct 8

Tomorrow evening, in Symphony Hall, the universities of Harvard and Oxford will meet for the first time in history in a public debate on the League of Nations, Oxford to advocate and Harvard to combat the immediate entrance of the United States into the league. The Oxford team comprises Edward Marjoribanks, the president, a conservative, M. C. Hollis, a liberal, and Kenneth Lindsay, of the English Labor Party. On the Harvard team are Richard S. Bowers, president, Paul Har[illegible], and Raymond S. Fannin[illegible]

Advertiser Oct 8

AUDIENCE TO BE JUDGE AT HARVARD-OXFORD DEBATE

Final arrangements for conducting the debate between Harvard and Oxford Universities on the League of Nations at Symphony Hall on Monday night were completed yesterday by Richard S. Bowers, president of the Harvard Debating Council, and the men representing the Oxford team.

The audience will be the judge on the relative merits of the two sides. Ballots will be passed among the audience, which is expected to fill the hall. Arthur H. Marlow, vice consul of Great Britain and Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard have been invited to act as official tellers for Oxford and Harvard.

Ex-Gov Samuel W. McCall will preside, and has invited representatives of the Harvard and Oxford teams to lunch with him today to go over details of procedure for the debate. The Oxford team will arrive in Boston at noon today and will be entertained at the football game at Soldiers' Field this afternoon.

The Oxford team consists of Edward Marjoribanks, president; M. C. Hollis and Kenneth Lindsay. The Harvard debaters are Richard S. Bowers, Paul R. Harmell and Raymond S. Fanning.

Globe Oct 7

Globe 10/7

Debaters from Overseas

Trans 9/28

(From Kahill Studios, Portland, Me.)

The Oxford Team, Which Was Defeated by Bates This Week and Which Meets the Men of Harvard in a Public Debate on the League of Nations Question in Symphony Hall on October 9th.

Left to Right—M. C. Hollis, Mir Mahmood and Edward Marjoribanks.

THE photograph was taken on the Bates College campus at Lewiston, just before the Oxionians met the Bates team on the same subject which is to be discussed in Boston. Mir Mahmood, the East Indian speaker, was substituted at the last minute for Kenneth Lindsay and the latter is to appear at Symphony Hall instead.

Marjoribanks, president of the Union, interviewed after the debate, pointed out the great divergence between the debating methods of England and America. "We speak informally," he said, "as if in the House of Commons, which, indeed, is our usual goal. We address the audience, and to them leave the decision, as in the House of Commons. The merits of the subject are always considered rather than the skill of the speaking. You Americans, on the other hand, speak as if from the lawyer's point of view, formally, systematically, and sometimes with an oratory which, in the House of Commons, would result in a sudden and complete emptying of the hall. Your speakers are ready to take either side and are judged on their oratorical skill."

"There are few subjects on which the political thought of Oxford is unanimous. One of my companions is a Liberal, the other a Labor man, and both are enthusiastic supporters of the League. There is the real reason why we are speaking in favor of it."

Marjoribanks is a member of Christ Church College, and belongs to the Conservative party. He is heir of Lord Tweedmouth and nephew of the Marquis of Aberdeen. His mother, formerly Miss Missy Brown, is an American and a native of Nashville, Tennessee, which part of the country the Englishman visited on his arrival in America.

M. C. Hollis, of Somerset, England, is secretary-elect of the Oxford Union. He is from Balliol College and is a member of the Liberal party. He first sailel to Canada and joined his colleagues by way of Montreal.

As a result of trials held last night, the remaining members of the Harvard team which is to meet the Oxonians have been selected. The final composition of the squad is as follows: R. S. Fanning, '23, P. R. Harmel, '23, R. S. Bowers, '24, Alfred Zinn, '25, E. G. Wesson, '25, and P. W. Williams, '25. During the coming week further trials will be carried on among this squad and at the end of the week the final team of three men will be chosen for the debate.

Transcript Sept 28

The International Debates

Herald 10-2

Little Bates, the American David, went to England last year and met Oxford, the Imperial Goliath, in the forum where the British empire trains its future debaters for the House of Commons. This year the British Goliath comes to America and will do battle with the American David at Lewiston and with the representatives of Harvard University at Symphony hall. Oxford challenged Bates last year because that small Maine college stood for the best America possessed in college debating. Now comes the return engagement.

For many reasons we wish these debates might stir the public to enthusiasm. If great audiences hear them, and if the interest in them is extended enough to command liberal amounts of newspaper space, we think the reflex influence on the average American undergraduate will be salutary. As things are now, college athletics are featured and intellectual competitions of every kind are not. The men who "do most" for their schools are those who score touchdowns and bat out home runs. For over-emphasis on college sport and under-emphasis on scholarship we are inclined to think the graduate body more responsible than the students themselves. To be sure a high-stand man sometimes is a "grind" and nothing else, not a "mixer," not very likable, not interested in the general activities of the institution.

But we would like to see these debates make sufficient impression on both the general public and the undergraduates to help a little towards a needed readjustment of values. Not that a debater who is not inerrant in his use of adjectives will obtain the attention that a football man gets when he sprains a knee, nor that a college the size of Bates, which wins debates against such universities as Harvard and Yale, will get such headlines as does Centre when it plays Harvard to a standstill on the gridiron. Not until some fundamental changes are made in human nature will the wranglers in the forum receive the recognition that comes to the gladiators in the stadium.

But these wranglers ought to have greater recognition. Think what Bates has done. She has won 40 debates in 50 against small schools and great universities. In 1920 and 1921 she won seven consecutive victories, with Cornell, Harvard and Yale numbered among the vanquished. She faced great odds at Oxford. The subject was that of the non-intervention policy of America in European affairs. In this country the arguments are weighed by a small body of judges who render the decision. At Oxford the audience itself, of graduates and students, settles the question. And Bates, with a team chosen from a few hundred students, appeared in that historic Oxford Union to support a viewpoint which ran counter to all the opinions and prepossessions of their English hearers, and in the argument, against a team chosen from the 6000 members of the 22 colleges of Oxford University, Bates performed the miracle of getting more than a third of the vote.

Manners of speaking differ, of course. But the difference between the English and the American manner is the opposite of what most of us would suppose it to be, according to the professor of law and politics at Hamilton College, who says in the New York Times that the "comments of the English press indicated that the Americans excelled in logic and reasoning ability and were more earnest," and that "the English speakers were more emotional and impulsive and witty and eloquent, and were given to oratorical climaxes." They had "the parliamentary grand manner"; the Americans "followed more the procedure of the court room and the precedents of the American bar."

The background thus sketched ought to increase the public interest in the forthcoming arguments. That the English visitors will receive every courtesy that kindly feeling can suggest goes without saying. That the debates, under American conditions and rules, will be a severe test for the visitors is clear. No matter where victory may lie the great thing is to make these debaters feel that the public in and out of the universities thinks the debates are worth while.

With 66 free lectures already an

Herald Oct 2

McCALL SELECTED TO PRESIDE AT DEBATE

Herald Oct 6

Former Governor Also Will Be Guest at Harvard-Oxford Banquet

Former Gov. Samuel W. McCall will be the presiding officer at the Harvard-Oxford international debate Monday evening in Symphony hall. Gov. Cox, originally selected to be in the chair, has another engagement on that date and was forced to reconsider. Mr. McCall will also attend the banquet which the Harvard Club of Boston will give the two teams the evening of the debate.

Tomorrow Mr. McCall will dine at the Union Club of Boston with representatives of both teams to discuss arrangements for the debate. Although in the matter of having the audience award the decision, of limiting each speaker to 15 minutes, and allowing no rebuttal, the English debating practice has been followed entirely, but it is doubtful whether the Harvard team will alter its style of presentation of material to match the more conversational English manner.

Herald Oct 6

HARVARD-OXFORD DEBATE

adv Oct 8

Tomorrow evening, in Symphony Hall, the universities of Harvard and Oxford will meet for the first time in history in a public debate, on the League of Nations, Oxford to advocate and Harvard to combat the immediate entrance of the United States into the league. The Oxford team comprises Edward Marjoribanks, the president, a conservative, M. C. Hollis, a liberal, and Kenneth Lindsay, of the English Labor Party. On the Harvard team are Richard S. Bowers, president, Paul Harmell, and Raymond S. Fanning.

Advertiser Oct 8

AUDIENCE TO BE JUDGE AT HARVARD-OXFORD DEBATE

Final arrangements for conducting the debate between Harvard and Oxford Universities on the League of Nations at Symphony Hall on Monday night were completed yesterday by Richard S. Bowers, president of the Harvard Debating Council, and the men representing the Oxford team.

The audience will be the judge on the relative merits of the two sides. Ballots will be passed among the audience, which is expected to fill the hall. Arthur H. Marlow, vice consul of Great Britain and Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard have been invited to act as official tellers for Oxford and Harvard.

Ex-Gov Samuel W. McCall will preside, and has invited representatives of the Harvard and Oxford teams to lunch with him today to go over details of procedure for the debate. The Oxford team will arrive in Boston at noon today and will be entertained at the football game at Soldiers' Field this afternoon.

The Oxford team consists of Edward Marjoribanks, president; M. C. Hollis and Kenneth Lindsay. The Harvard debaters are Richard S. Bowers, Paul R. Harmell and Raymond S. Fanning.

Globe Oct 7

Globe 10/7

[81]

Debaters from Overseas

Trans 9/28

(From Kahill Studios, Portland, Me.)

The Oxford Team, Which Was Defeated by Bates This Week and Which Meets the Men of Harvard in a Public Debate on the League of Nations Question in Symphony Hall on October 9th.

Left to Right—M. C. Hollis, Mir Mahmood and Edward Marjoribanks.

THE photograph was taken on the Bates College campus at Lewiston, just before the Oxionians met the Bates team on the same subject which is to be discussed in Boston. Mir Mahmood, the East Indian speaker, was substituted at the last minute for Kenneth Lindsay and the latter is to appear at Symphony Hall instead.

Marjoribanks, president of the Union, interviewed after the debate, pointed out the great divergence between the debating methods of England and America. "We speak informally," he said, "as if in the House of Commons, which, indeed, is our usual goal. We address the audience, and to them leave the decision, as in the House of Commons. The merits of the subject are always considered rather than the skill of the speaking. You Americans, on the other hand, speak as if from the lawyer's point of view, formally, systematically, and sometimes with an oratory which, in the House of Commons, would result in a sudden and complete emptying of the hall. Your speakers are ready to take either side and are judged on their oratorical skill."

"There are few subjects on which the political thought of Oxford is unanimous. One of my companions is a Liberal, the other a Labor man, and both are enthusiastic supporters of the League. There is the real reason why we are speaking in favor of it."

Marjoribanks is a member of Christ Church College, and belongs to the Conservative party. He is heir of Lord Tweedmouth and nephew of the Marquis of Aberdeen. His mother, formerly Miss Missy Brown, is an American and a native of Nashville, Tennessee, which part of the country the Englishman visited on his arival in America.

M. C. Hollis, of Somerset, England, is secretary-elect of the Oxford Union. He is from Balliol College and is a member of the Liberal party. He first sailel to Canada and joined his colleagues by way of Montreal.

As a result of trials held last night, the remaining members of the Harvard team which is to meet the Oxonians have been selected. The final composition of the squad is as follows: R. S. Fanning, '23, P. R. Harmel, '23, R. S. Bowers, '24, Alfred Zinn, '25, E. G. Wesson, '25, and P. W. Williams, '25. During the coming week further trials will be carried on among this squad and at the end of the week the final team of three men will be chosen for the debate.

Transcript Sept 28

McCALL SELECTED TO PRESIDE AT DEBATE

Herald Oct 6

Former Governor Also Will Be Guest at Harvard-Oxford Banquet

Former Gov. Samuel W. McCall will be the presiding officer at the Harvard-Oxford international debate Monday evening in Symphony hall. Gov. Cox, originally selected to be in the chair, has another engagement on that date and was forced to reconsider. Mr. McCall will also attend the banquet which the Harvard Club of Boston will give the two teams the evening of the debate.

Tomorrow Mr. McCall will dine at the Union Club of Boston with representatives of both teams to discuss arrangements for the debate. Although in the matter of having the audience award the decision, of limiting each speaker to 15 minutes, and allowing no rebuttal, the English debating practice has been followed entirely, but it is doubtful whether the Harvard team will alter its style of presentation of material to match the more conversational English manner.

Herald Oct 6

HARVARD-OXFORD DEBATE

Tomorrow evening, in Symphony Hall, the universities of Harvard and Oxford will meet for the first time in history in a public debate, on the League of Nations, Oxford to advocate and Harvard to combat the immediate entrance of the United States into the league. The Oxford team comprises Edward Marjoribanks, the president, a conservative, M. C. Hollis, a liberal, and Kenneth Lindsay, of the English Labor Party. On the Harvard team are Richard S. Bowers, president, Paul Harmell, and Raymond S. Fanning.

Advertiser Oct 8

AUDIENCE TO BE JUDGE AT HARVARD-OXFORD DEBATE

Final arrangements for conducting the debate between Harvard and Oxford Universities on the League of Nations at Symphony Hall on Monday night were completed yesterday by Richard S. Bowers, president of the Harvard Debating Council, and the men representing the Oxford team.

The audience will be the judge on the relative merits of the two sides. Ballots will be passed among the audience, which is expected to fill the hall. Arthur H. Marlow, vice consul of Great Britain and Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard have been invited to act as official tellers for Oxford and Harvard.

Ex-Gov Samuel W. McCall will preside, and has invited representatives of the Harvard and Oxford teams to lunch with him today to go over details of procedure for the debate. The Oxford team will arrive in Boston at noon today and will be entertained at the football game at Soldiers' Field this afternoon.

The Oxford team consists of Edward Marjoribanks, president; M. C. Hollis and Kenneth Lindsay. The Harvard debaters are Richard S. Bowers, Paul R. Harmell and Raymond S. Fanning.

Globe Oct 7

The International Debates

Herald 10-2

Little Bates, the American David, went to England last year and met Oxford, the Imperial Goliath, in the forum where the British empire trains its future debaters for the House of Commons. This year the British Goliath comes to America and will do battle with the American David at Lewiston and with the representatives of Harvard University at Symphony hall. Oxford challenged Bates last year because that small Maine college stood for the best America possessed in college debating. Now comes the return engagement.

For many reasons we wish these debates might stir the public to enthusiasm. If great audiences hear them, and if the interest in them is extended enough to command liberal amounts of newspaper space, we think the reflex influence on the average American undergraduate will be salutary. As things are now, college athletics are featured and intellectual competitions of every kind are not. The men who "do most" for their schools are those who score touchdowns and bat out home runs. For over-emphasis on college sport and under-emphasis on scholarship we are inclined to think the graduate body more responsible than the students themselves. To be sure a high-stand man sometimes is a "grind" and nothing else, not a "mixer," not very likable, not interested in the general activities of the institution.

But we would like to see these debates make sufficient impressio on both the general public and the undergraduates to help a littl towards a needed readjustment o values. Not that a debater who i not inerrant in his use of adjective will obtain the attention that foot ball man gets when he sprains knee, nor that a college the size o Bates, which wins debates agains such universities as Harvard an Yale, will get such headlines as doe Centre when it plays Harvard to standstill on the gridiron. Not unt some fundamental changes are mad in human nature will the wrangler in the forum receive the recognitio that comes to the gladiators in th stadium.

But these wranglers ought have greater recognition. Thin what Bates has done. She has wo 40 debates in 50 against sma schools and great universities. I 1920 and 1921 she won seven co secutive victories, with Cornel Harvard and Yale numbered amon the vanquished. She faced gre odds at Oxford. The subject wa that of the non-intervention polic of America in European affairs. I this country the arguments a weighed by a small body of judge who render the decision. At Oxfor the audience itself, of graduate and students, settles the questio And Bates, with a team chose from a few hundred students, ap peared in that historic Oxford Unio to support a viewpoint which ra counter to all the opinions and pre possessions of their English hea ers, and in the argument, against team chosen from the 6000 mem bers of the 22 colleges of Oxfor University, Bates performed th miracle of getting more than a thir of the vote.

Manners of speaking differ, o course. But the difference betwee the English and the American man ner is the opposite of what most o us would suppose it to be, accord ing to the professor of law and poli tics at Hamilton College, who say in the New York Times that the "comments of the English press indicated that the Americans excelled in logic and reasoning ability and were more earnest," and that "the English speakers were more emotional and impulsive and witty and eloquent, and were given to oratorical climaxes." They had "the parliamentary grand manner"; the Americans "followed more the procedure of the court room and the precedents of the American bar."

The background thus sketched ought to increase the public interest in the forthcoming arguments. That the English visitors will receive every courtesy that kindly feeling can suggest goes without saying. That the debates, under American conditions and rules, will be a severe test for the visitors is clear. No matter where victory may lie the great thing is to make these debaters feel that the public in and out of the universities thinks the debates are worth while.

With 66 free lectures already an

Herald Oct 2

Ready for the Oxonians

Trans 10/6

(Photo by Notman)

The Harvard Team Which Will Meet Oxford in Public Debate in Symphony Hall Monday Evening

Left to Right—Richard S. Bowers, '24, of Brookline; Paul R. Harmel, '23, of Cleveland; Raymond S. Fanning, '23, of Chattanooga, Tenn.

THIS debate Monday evening at 8.15, and open to the public, will be the first in the history of the two institutions. The subject will be the League of Nations, Oxford to advocate and Harvard to combat the immediate entrance of this country into the league. The Oxford team comprises Edward Marjoribanks, a Conservative; M. C. Hollis, a Liberal, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is an active force in the English Labor party. All three are personally enthusiastic for the cause.

Marjoribanks was educated at Eton, where he became captain of the school, was double first at Oxford in classics, rowed in a Christ Church boat for four years and also rowed at Henley. He has been secretary of the Canning Club (the butt of Mr. Max Beerbohm's "Zuleika Dobson") and president of the Carlton Club, both of which are conservative political clubs. At Oxford he has been secretary-librarian and is now president of the Oxford Union Debating Society. He is a nephew of the Marchioness of Aberdeen who came to America on a mission for Ireland sometime ago, and he is also heir presumptive to Lord Tweedmouth. His mother is an American from Nashville, Tenn., a granddaughter of N. S. Brown, who was ambassador to Russia when Alaska was sold to America. Hollis was educated at Balliol College, and is secretary of the Oxford Union Debating Society. Lindsay, educated at Worcester, is a former president of the Union.

Of the Harvard speakers, Bowers was president of his freshman debating team, figuring conspicuously in the triangular debate. Harmell took part in the varsity triangular debate and the debate against Bates two years ago, and Fanning has been prominent in the varsity triangular debates of the last two years as well as in the debate against Syracuse last year. The remaining three speakers of the Harvard team, Alfred Zinn, '25; E. G. Wesson, '25, and Paul W. Williams, '25, are called "alternates," according to the American collegiate custom, and will assist in the preparation of the subject and be held in readiness for possible substitution.

Former Governor Samuel W. McCall will be the presiding officer at the debate. Governor Cox, originally selected to be in the chair, has another engagement on that date and was forced to reconsider. Mr. McCall will also attend the banquet which the Harvard Club of Boston will give the two teams the evening of the debate. Tomorrow Mr. McCall will dine at the Union Club with representatives of both teams to discuss arrangements for the debate. Although in the matter of having the audience award the decision, of limiting each speaker to fifteen minutes, and allowing no rebuttal, the English debating practice has been followed entirely, it is doubtful whether the Harvard team will alter its style of presentation of material to match the more conversational English manner.

Transcript Oct 6

OXFORD'S TEAM ARRIVES TODAY

Debaters Will Be Guests of McCall and See Game at the Stadium

Herald 10/7

AUDIENCE TO JUDGE ARGUMENTS MONDAY

The Oxford University team which will debate with Harvard Monday night in Symphony hall on the League of Nations, will arrive in Boston at noon today. Former Gov. McCall, who will preside, has invited representatives of both teams to luncheon at the Union Club for discussion of parliamentary procedure. The visitors will then be guests at the Holy Cross football game in the Stadium.

Final arrangements for the conducting of the debate were agreed on yesterday by Richard S. Bowers, president of the Harvard debating council, and the Institution of International Education, which has been representing the Oxford team.

OXFORD SYSTEM OF JUDGING

The audience will be sole judge of the relative merits of the two sides, in deference to the parliamentary usage of the Oxonians. Ballots, provided with each program as the audience enters the hall, will be quickly collected at the conclusion of the debate and counted in the presence of the audience, so that the decision can be announced from the stage within a few minutes after the final speech.

Arthur H. Marlow, vice-consul of Great Britain, and Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard have agreed to act as official tellers for Oxford and Harvard, respectively.

Among those who have accepted the council's invitation to sit on the stage are President of the Overseers of Harvard George Wigglesworth, Consul-General Thomas P. Porter and Vice-Consul Marlow of Great Britain, and Consul J. C. Joseph Flamand of France.

Herald Oct 7

OXFORD TEAM OF DEBATERS DUE TODAY

Amer 10/7

To accommodate those who wish to hear the debate between Harvard and Oxford Universities on the League of Nations in Symphony Hall Monday night, it will be necessary to place seats on the stage.

A lively and brilliant verbal contest is anticipated and it is very evident that public interest in debating has not lessened since the famous Lodge-Lowell clash on the same subject in the same hall.

As previously announced, the audience will be sole judge of the relative methods of the two sides, in deference to the parliamentary usage of the Oxonians.

Ballots will be provided with each program as the audience enters the hall and will be quickly collected at the conclusion of the debate, and counted in the presence of the audience so that the decision can be announced from the stage within a few minutes after the final speech.

Arthur H. Marlow, Vice-Consul of Great Britain, and Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard have agreed to act as official tellers for Oxford and Harvard respectively.

Former Governor Samuel W. McCall will preside. The Oxford team was due in Boston today in time to attend the football game at Soldier's Field.

American Oct 7

Crim Oct 8

Right:—THE OXFORD DEBATING TEAM

Will conclude its American visit when it meets the University team at Symphony Hall, Monday night. Kenneth Lindsay will take the place of Mir Mahmood, who was on the team which was defeated by Bates College on September 26.

Left to Right:—M. C. Hollis, Mir Mahmood, Edward Marjoribanks.

—Photo Kahill Studio

Crimson Oct 8

OXFORD TEAM IN BOSTON

Ready for Debate With Harvard Monday

Post Oct 8

The Oxford University debating team won't be a bit put out if the Harvard debating team argues them to a forensic standstill on the League of Nations issue in Symphony Hall, Monday night. Arrived in Boston late yesterday afternoon from New Haven they declared that the primary purpose of their discussions is to get "the American point of view." The doleful sympathy and compassion showered upon them by Americans when, occasionally, they lost the decision in a debate, was quite incomprehensible to their English stoicism, nonchalance and good nature.

Nor did they seem overcome with awe when they were told that Symphony Hall's 2600 seats were practically sold out for the contest. The statement by F. E. Bowman, '24, secretary of the Oxford University Debating Council, that the Boston audience would be an "appreciative one," and information from other sources indicating that there is considerable space over the eye-brows of Boston intellectuals, failed to create the slightest stir in the extremely pleasant and extremely good looking faces of the youthful English students.

Contrasted to this unconcerned air was the determined business-like attitude of the Harvard Debating team. While their English opponents last night were being entertained at a popular musical comedy in Boston the Harvard team was studiously preparing for tomorrow night's contest. When the Oxford guests arrived from New Haven hours out of schedule, and discovered at the last minute that they were too late to take in the football game at the Stadium they continued to motor through Cambridge and Boston taking in the sights. Richard S. Bowers, president of the Harvard University Debating Council, and the captain of the Harvard team, wasted all the time that was necessary but not a whit more, going through the courteous formalities, and then pleading an engagement, left the party to do its motoring in the comuany of other members of the Harvard Debating Council who are,—it was significant to note—NOT members of the debating team. These latter were not to be seen during the day.

Old Story to Visitors

Of course the Oxford debaters, on the other hand, have gone through their subjects before [illegible] this very same subject. The Harvard team comes fresh to the scene. The question for debate is worded as follows: "Resolved, That the United States should join immediately the League of Nations." The Oxford team takes the affirmative, the Harvard team the negative. There are three speakers on each side, each speaker to be allowed 15 minutes, and following, what is said to be the English custom, there is no rebuttal.

The visitors from Oxford found the American pronunciation, "quite all right," and thought American slang "most amusing." They were especially amused with the "wealth of modern little things" that exist in American hotels. "I was quite astonished to find in my New York hotel," said young Lindsay, "that I could put my clothes into one side of the door soiled, and turn it around and find it all cleaned again on the other side."

"In some places you wouldn't have gotten your own clothes back," some American booster remarked.

"Oh, I got mine back all right," Lindsay testified.

"Were you surprised?" came another inquiry.

"No, I had faith in that door."

Driving through Boston downtown streets they seemed to be amazed with the "American madness for display." "Almost ostentatious," said Lindsay. They were interested in the dome on the Christian Science Church, in the golden dome on the Massachusetts State House, in the queerness of Boston's streets. A reporter wanted to know if London had streets as narrow and as busy as School street.

"Heaps," Lindsay averred.

Post Oct 8

[82]

Ready for the Oxonians

(Photo by Notman)

The Harvard Team Which Will Meet Oxford in Public Debate in Symphony Hall Monday Evening

Left to Right—Richard S. Bowers, '24, of Brookline; Paul R. Harmel, '23, of Cleveland; Raymond S. Fanning, '23, of Chattanooga, Tenn.

THIS debate Monday evening at 8.15, and open to the public, will be the first in the history of the two institutions. The subject will be the League of Nations, Oxford to advocate and Harvard to combat the immediate entrance of this country into the league. The Oxford team comprises Edward Marjoribanks, a Conservative; M. C. Hollis, a Liberal, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is an active force in the English Labor party. All three are personally enthusiastic for the cause.

Marjoribanks was educated at Eton, where he became captain of the school, was double first at Oxford in classics, rowed in a Christ Church boat for four years and also rowed at Henley. He has been secretary of the Canning Club (the butt of Mr. Max Beerbohm's "Zuleika Dobson") and president of the Carlton Club, both of which are conservative political clubs. At Oxford he has been secretary-librarian and is now president of the Oxford Union Debating Society. He is a nephew of the Marchioness of Aberdeen who came to America on a mission for Ireland sometime ago, and he is also heir presumptive to Lord Tweedmouth. His mother is an American from Nashville, Tenn., a granddaughter of N. S. Brown, who was ambassador to Russia when Alaska was sold to America. Hollis was educated at Balliol College, and is secretary of the Oxford Union Debating Society. Lindsay, educated at Worcester, is a former president of the Union.

Of the Harvard speakers, Bowers was president of his freshman debating team, figuring conspicuously in the triangular debate. Harmell took part in the varsity triangular debate and the debate against Bates two years ago, and Fanning has been prominent in the varsity triangular debates of the last two years as well as in the debate against Syracuse last year. The remaining three speakers of the Harvard team, Alfred Zinn, '25; E. G. Wesson, '25, and Paul W. Williams, '25, are called "alternates," according to the American collegiate custom, and will assist in the preparation of the subject and be held in readiness for possible substitution.

Former Governor Samuel W. McCall will be the presiding officer at the debate. Governor Cox, originally selected to be in the chair, has another engagement on that date and was forced to reconsider. Mr. McCall will also attend the banquet which the Harvard Club of Boston will give the two teams the evening of the debate. Tomorrow Mr. McCall will dine at the Union Club with representatives of both teams to discuss arrangements for the debate. Although in the matter of having the audience award the decision, of limiting each speaker to fifteen minutes, and allowing no rebuttal, the English debating practice has been followed entirely, it is doubtful whether the Harvard team will alter its style of presentation of material to match the more conversational English manner.

Transcript Oct 5

Trans 10/6

OXFORD'S TEAM ARRIVES TODAY

Debaters Will Be Guests of McCall and See Game at the Stadium

Herald 10/7

AUDIENCE TO JUDGE ARGUMENTS MONDAY

The Oxford University team which will debate with Harvard Monday night in Symphony hall on the League of Nations, will arrive in Boston at noon today. Former Gov. McCall, who will preside, has invited representatives of both teams to luncheon at the Union Club for discussion of parliamentary procedure. The visitors will then be guests at the Holy Cross football game in the Stadium.

Final arrangements for the conducting of the debate were agreed on yesterday by Richard S. Bowers, president of the Harvard debating council, and the Institution of International Education, which has been representing the Oxford team.

OXFORD SYSTEM OF JUDGING

The audience will be sole judge of the relative merits of the two sides, in deference to the parliamentary usage of the Oxonians. Ballots, provided with each program as the audience enters the hall, will be quickly collected at the conclusion of the debate and counted in the presence of the audience, so that the decision can be announced from the stage within a few minutes after the final speech.

Arthur H. Marlow, vice-consul of Great Britain, and Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard have agreed to act as official tellers for Oxford and Harvard, respectively.

Among those who have accepted the council's invitation to sit on the stage are President of the Overseers of Harvard George Wigglesworth, Consul-General Thomas P. Porter and Vice-Consul Marlow of Great Britain, and Consul J. C. Joseph Flamand of France.

Herald Oct 7

OXFORD TEAM OF DEBATERS DUE TODAY

Amer 10/7

To accommodate those who wish to hear the debate between Harvard and Oxford Universities on the League of Nations in Symphony Hall Monday night, it will be necessary to place seats on the stage.

A lively and brilliant verbal contest is anticipated and it is very evident that public interest in debating has not lessened since the famous Lodge-Lowell clash on the same subject in the same hall.

As previously announced, the audience will be sole judge of the relative methods of the two sides, in deference to the parliamentary usage of the Oxonians.

Ballots will be provided with each program as the audience enters the hall and will be quickly collected at the conclusion of the debate, and counted in the presence of the audience so that the decision can be announced from the stage within a few minutes after the final speech.

Arthur H. Marlow, Vice-Consul of Great Britain, and Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard have agreed to act as official tellers for Oxford and Harvard respectively.

Former Governor Samuel W. McCall will preside. The Oxford team was due in Boston today in time to attend the football game at Soldier's Field.

American Oct 7

OXFORD TEAM IN BOSTON

Ready for Debate With Harvard Monday

Post Oct 8

The Oxford University debating team won't be a bit put out if the Harvard debating team argues them to a forensic standstill on the League of Nations issue in Symphony Hall, Monday night. Arrived in Boston late yesterday afternoon from New Haven they declared that the primary purpose of their discussions is to get "the American point of view." The doleful sympathy and compassion showered upon them by Americans when, occasionally, they lost the decision in a debate, was quite incomprehensible to their English stoicism, nonchalance and good nature.

Nor did they seem overcome with awe when they were told that Symphony Hall's 2600 seats were practically sold out for the contest. The statement by F. E. Bowman, '24, secretary of the Oxford University Debating Council, that the Boston audience would be an "appreciative one," and information from other sources indicating that there is considerable space over the eye-brows of Boston intellectuals, failed to create the slightest stir in the extremely pleasant and extremely good looking faces of the youthful English students.

Contrasted to this unconcerned air was the determined business-like attitude of the Harvard Debating team. While their English opponents last night were being entertained at a popular musical comedy in Boston the Harvard team was studiously preparing for tomorrow night's contest. When the Oxford guests arrived from New Haven hours out of schedule, and discovered at the last minute that they were too late to take in the football game at the Stadium they continued to motor through Cambridge and Boston taking in the sights. Richard S. Bowers, president of the Harvard University Debating Council, and the captain of the Harvard team, wasted all the time that was necessary but not a whit more, going through the courteous formalities, and then pleading an engagement, left the party to do its motoring in the company of other members of the Harvard Debating Council who are,—it was significant to note—NOT members of the debating team. These latter were not to be seen during the day.

Old Story to Visitors

Of course the Oxford debaters, on the other hand, have gone through their subjects before real audiences in contests with other American colleges on this very same subject. The Harvard team comes fresh to the scene. The question for debate is worded as follows: "Resolved, That the United States should join immediately the League of Nations." The Oxford team takes the affirmative, the Harvard team the negative. There are three speakers on each side, each speaker to be allowed 15 minutes, and following, what is said to be the English custom, there is no rebuttal.

The visitors from Oxford found the American pronunciation, "quite all right," and thought American slang "most amusing." They were especially amused with the "wealth of modern little things" that exist in American hotels. "I was quite astonished to find in my New York hotel," said young Lindsay, "that I could put my clothes into one side of the door soiled, and turn it around and find it all cleaned again on the other side."

"In some places you wouldn't have gotten your own clothes back," some American booster remarked.

"Oh, I got mine back all right," Lindsay testified.

"Were you surprised?" came another inquiry.

"No, I had faith in that door."

Driving through Boston downtown streets they seemed to be amazed with the "American madness for display." "Almost ostentatious," said Lindsay. They were interested in the dome on the Christian Science Church, in the golden dome on the Massachusetts State House, in the queerness of Boston's streets. A reporter wanted to know if London had streets as narrow and as busy as School street.

"Heaps," Lindsay averred.

Post Oct 8

Right:—THE OXFORD DEBATING TEAM

Will conclude its American visit when it meets the University team at Symphony Hall, Monday night. Kenneth Lindsay will take the place of Mir Mahmood, who was on the team which was defeated by Bates College on September 26

Left to Right:—M. C. Hollis, Mir Mahmood, Edward Marjoribanks.

—Photo Kahill Studio

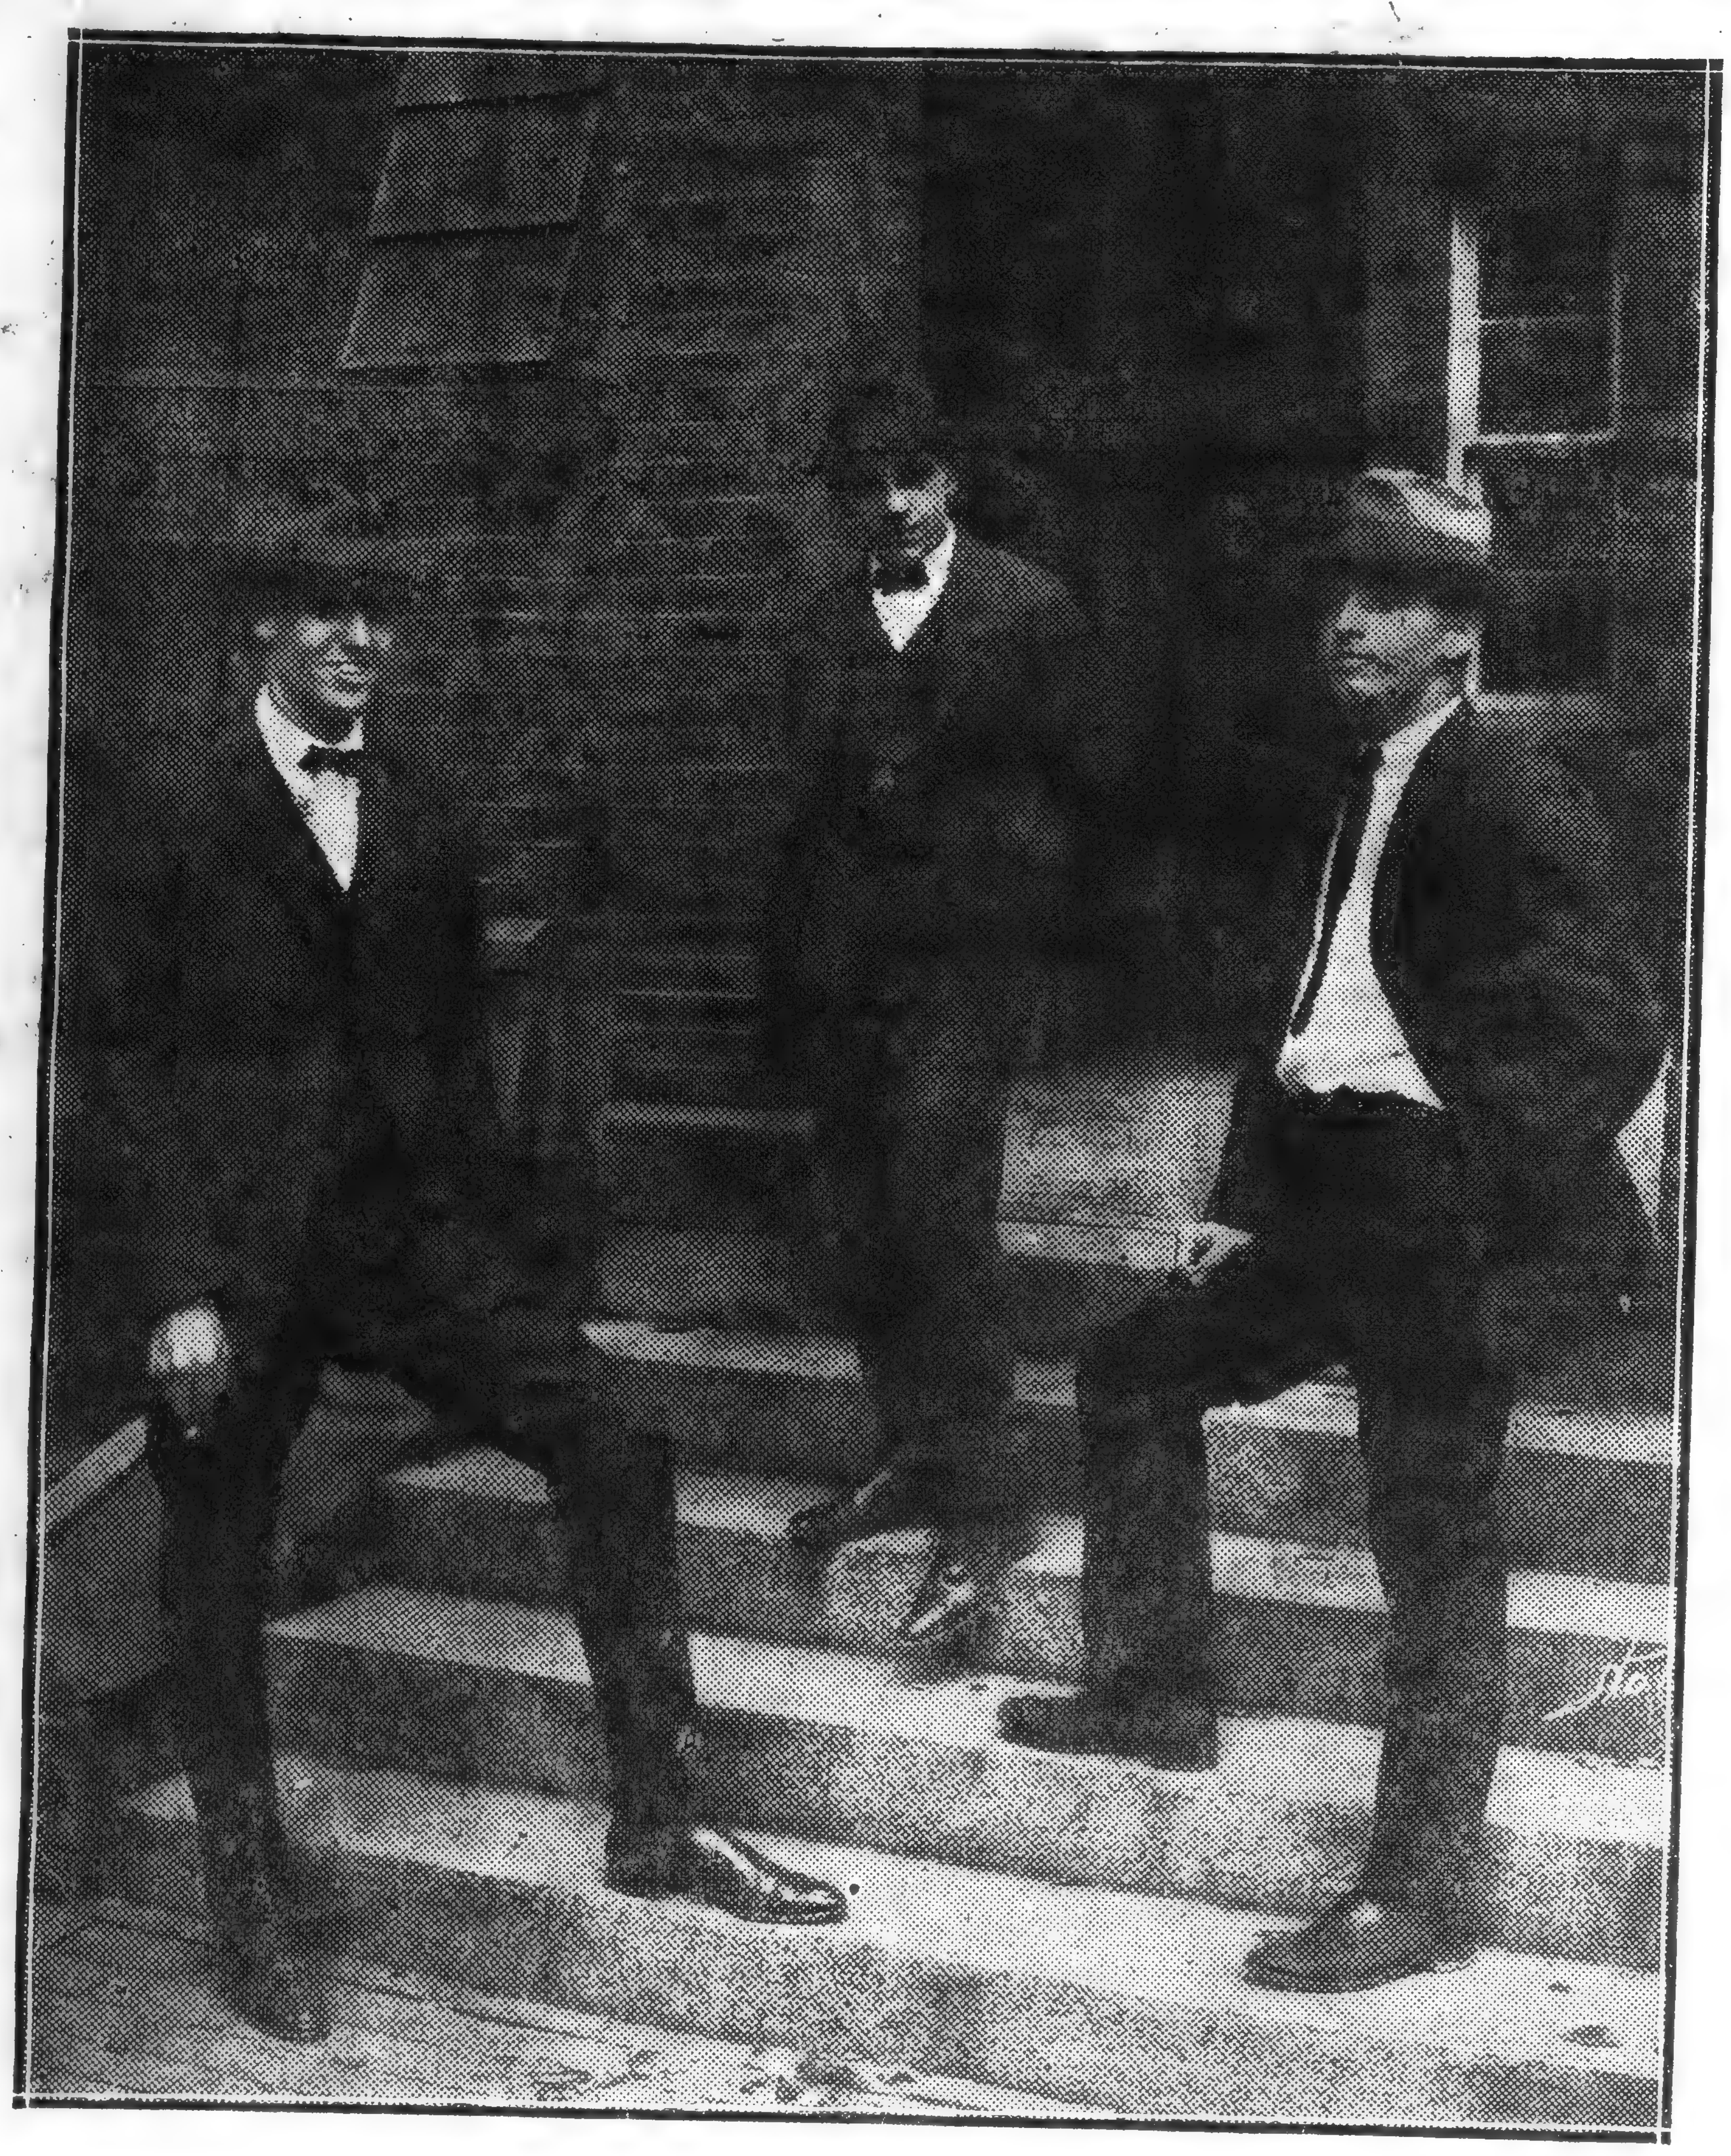
Crimson Oct 8

[82]

Ready for the Oxonians



(Photo by Notman)

The Harvard Team Which Will Meet Oxford in Public Debate in Symphony Hall Monday Evening

Left to Right—Richard S. Bowers, '24, of Brookline; Paul R. Harmel, '23, of Cleveland; Raymond S. Fanning, '23, of Chattanooga, Tenn.

THIS debate Monday evening at 8.15, and open to the public, will be the first in the history of the two institutions. The subject will be the League of Nations, Oxford to advocate and Harvard to combat the immediate entrance of this country into the league. The Oxford team comprises Edward Marjoribanks, a Conservative; M. C. Hollis, a Liberal, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is an active force in the English Labor party. All three are personally enthusiastic for the cause.

Marjoribanks was educated at Eton, where he became captain of the school, was double first at Oxford in classics, rowed in a Christ Church boat for four years and also rowed at Henley. He has been secretary of the Canning Club (the butt of Mr. Max Beerbohm's "Zuleika Dobson") and president of the Carlton Club, both of which are conservative political clubs. At Oxford he has been secretary-librarian and is now president of the Oxford Union Debating Society. He is a nephew of the Marchioness of Aberdeen who came to America on a mission for Ireland sometime ago, and he is also heir presumptive to Lord Tweedmouth. His mother is an American from Nashville, Tenn., a granddaughter of N. S. Brown, who was ambassador to Russia when Alaska was sold to America. Hollis was educated at Balliol College, and is secretary of the Oxford Union Debating Society. Lindsay, educated at Worcester, is a former president of the Union.

Of the Harvard speakers, Bowers was president of his freshman debating team, figuring conspicuously in the triangular debate. Harmell took part in the varsity triangular debate and the debate against Bates two years ago, and Fanning has been prominent in the varsity triangular debates of the last two years as well as in the debate against Syracuse last year. The remaining three speakers of the Harvard team, Alfred Zinn, '25; E. G. Wesson, '25, and Paul W. Williams, '25, are called "alternates," according to the American collegiate custom, and will assist in the preparation of the subject and be held in readiness for possible substitution.

Former Governor Samuel W. McCall will be the presiding officer at the debate. Governor Cox, originally selected to be in the chair, has another engagement on that date and was forced to reconsider. Mr. McCall will also attend the banquet which the Harvard Club of Boston will give the two teams the evening of the debate. Tomorrow Mr. McCall will dine at the Union Club with representatives of both teams to discuss arrangements for the debate. Although in the matter of having the audience award the decision, of limiting each speaker to fifteen minutes, and allowing no rebuttal, the English debating practice has been followed entirely, it is doubtful whether the Harvard team will alter its style of presentation of material to match the more conversational English manner.

Transcript Oct 6

OXFORD'S TEAM ARRIVES TODAY

Debaters Will Be Guests of McCall and See Game at the Stadium

AUDIENCE TO JUDGE ARGUMENTS MONDAY

The Oxford University team which will debate with Harvard Monday night in Symphony hall on the League of Nations, will arrive in Boston at noon today. Former Gov. McCall, who will preside, has invited representatives of both teams to luncheon at the Union Club for discussion of parliamentary procedure. The visitors will then be guests at the Holy Cross football game in the Stadium.

Final arrangements for the conducting of the debate were agreed on yesterday by Richard S. Bowers, president of the Harvard debating council, and the Institution of International Education, which has been representing the Oxford team.

OXFORD SYSTEM OF JUDGING

The audience will be sole judge of the relative merits of the two sides, in deference to the parliamentary usage of the Oxonians. Ballots, provided with each program as the audience enters the hall, will be quickly collected at the conclusion of the debate and counted in the presence of the audience, so that the decision can be announced from the stage within a few minutes after the final speech.

Arthur H. Marlow, vice-consul of Great Britain, and Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard have agreed to act as official tellers for Oxford and Harvard, respectively.

Among those who have accepted the council's invitation to sit on the stage are President of the Overseers of Harvard George Wigglesworth, Consul-General Thomas P. Porter and Vice-Consul Marlow of Great Britain, and Consul J. C. Joseph Flamand of France.

Herald Oct 7

OXFORD TEAM OF DEBATERS DUE TODAY

To accommodate those who wish to hear the debate between Harvard and Oxford Universities on the League of Nations in Symphony Hall Monday night, it will be necessary to place seats on the stage.

A lively and brilliant verbal contest is anticipated and it is very evident that public interest in debating has not lessened since the famous Lodge-Lowell clash on the same subject in the same hall.

As previously announced, the audience will be sole judge of the relative methods of the two sides, in deference to the parliamentary usage of the Oxonians.

Ballots will be provided with each program as the audience enters the hall and will be quickly collected at the conclusion of the debate, and counted in the presence of the audience so that the decision can be announced from the stage within a few minutes after the final speech.

Arthur H. Marlow, Vice-Consul of Great Britain, and Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard have agreed to act as official tellers for Oxford and Harvard respectively.

Former Governor Samuel W. McCall will preside. The Oxford team was due in Boston today in time to attend the football game at Soldier's Field.

American Oct 7

OXFORD TEAM IN BOSTON

Ready for Debate With Harvard Monday

Post

The Oxford University debating team won't be a bit put out if the Harvard debating team argues them to a forensic standstill on the League of Nations issue in Symphony Hall, Monday night. Arrived in Boston late yesterday afternoon from New Haven they declared that the primary purpose of their discussions is to get "the American point of view." The doleful sympathy and compassion showered upon them by Americans when, occasionally, they lost the decision in a debate, was quite incomprehensible to their English stoicism, nonchalance and good nature.

Nor did they seem overcome with awe when they were told that Symphony Hall's 2600 seats were practically sold out for the contest. The statement by F. E. Bowman, '24, secretary of the Oxford University Debating Council, that the Boston audience would be an "appreciative one," and information from other sources indicating that there is considerable space over the eye-brows of Boston intellectuals, failed to create the slightest stir in the extremely pleasant and extremely good looking faces of the youthful English students.

Contrasted to this unconcerned air was the determined business-like attitude of the Harvard Debating team. While their English opponents last night were being entertained at a popular musical comedy in Boston the Harvard team was studiously preparing for tomorrow night's contest. When the Oxford guests arrived from New Haven hours out of schedule, and discovered at the last minute that they were too late to take in the football game at the Stadium they continued to motor through Cambridge and Boston taking in the sights. Richard S. Bowers, president of the Harvard University Debating Council, and the captain of the Harvard team, wasted all the time that was necessary but not a whit more, going through the courteous formalities, and then pleading an engagement, left the party to do its motoring in the company of other members of the Harvard Debating Council who are,—it was significant to note—NOT members of the debating team. These latter were not to be seen during the day.

Old Story to Visitors

Of course the Oxford debaters, on the other hand, have gone through their subjects before real audiences in contests with other American colleges on this very same subject. The Harvard team comes fresh to the scene. The question for debate is worded as follows: "Resolved, That the United States should join immediately the League of Nations." The Oxford team takes the affirmative, the Harvard team the negative. There are three speakers on each side, each speaker to be allowed 15 minutes, and following, what is said to be the English custom, there is no rebuttal.

The visitors from Oxford found the American pronunciation, "quite all right," and thought American slang "most amusing." They were especially amused with the "wealth of modern little things" that exist in American hotels. "I was quite astonished to find in my New York hotel," said young Lindsay, "that I could put my clothes into one side of the door soiled, and turn it around and find it all cleaned again on the other side."

"In some places you wouldn't have gotten your own clothes back," some American booster remarked.

"Oh, I got mine back all right," Lindsay testified.

"Were you surprised?" came another inquiry.

"No, I had faith in that door."

Driving through Boston downtown streets they seemed to be amazed with the "American madness for display." "Almost ostentatious," said Lindsay. They were interested in the dome on the Christian Science Church, in the golden dome on the Massachusetts State House, in the queerness of Boston's streets. A reporter wanted to know if London had streets as narrow and as busy as School street.

"Heaps," Lindsay averred.

Post Oct 8

Right:—THE OXFORD DEBATING TEAM

Will conclude its American visit when it meets the University team at Symphony Hall, Monday night. Kenneth Lindsay will take the place of Mir Mahmood, who was on the team which was defeated by Bates College on September 26. Left to Right:—M. C. Hollis, Mir Mahmood, Edward Marjoribanks.

—Photo Kahill Studio

Crimson Oct 8

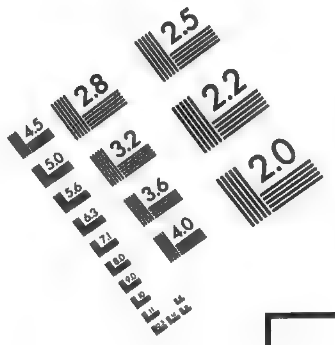
[82]

Isadora Duncan

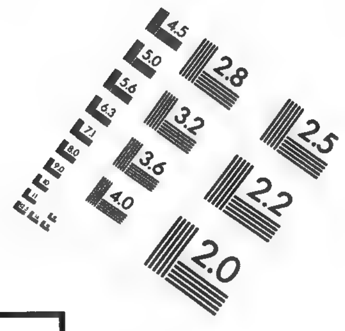
REDUCTION RATIO

14x

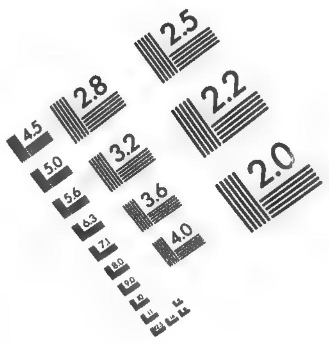
PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



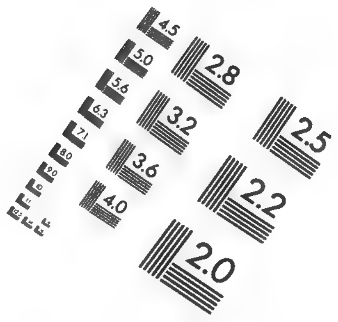
2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
5.0
3.2
2.0
5.6
3.6
6.3
4.0
7.1



4.5
2.8
5.0
5.6
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0



2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
5.0
3.2
2.0
5.6
3.6
4.0

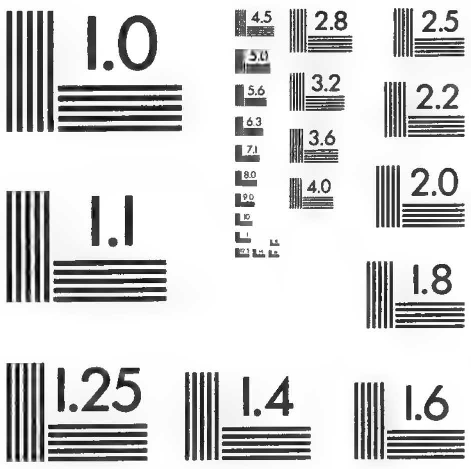


4.5
5.0
2.8
5.6
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



1.0
4.5
2.8
2.5
5.0
3.2
5.6
2.2
6.3
3.6
7.1
4.0
2.0
1.1
1.8
1.25
1.4
1.6

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

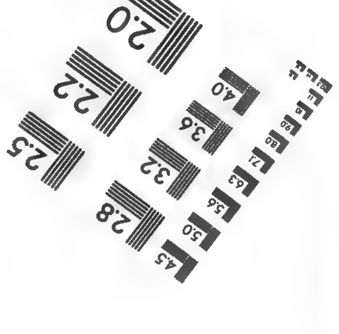
1.0 mm

1.5 mm

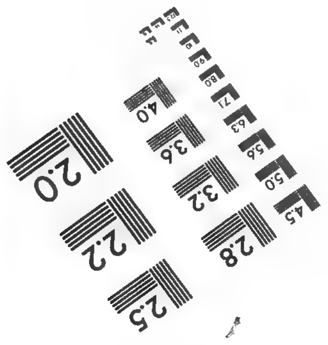
2.0 mm

2.5 mm

A5



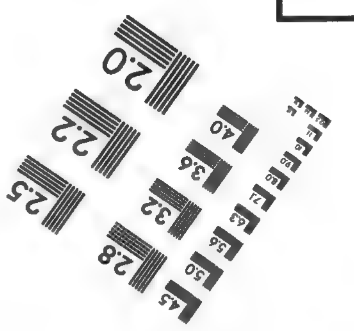
2.0
2.2
4.0
2.5
3.6
3.2
2.8
5.0
4.5



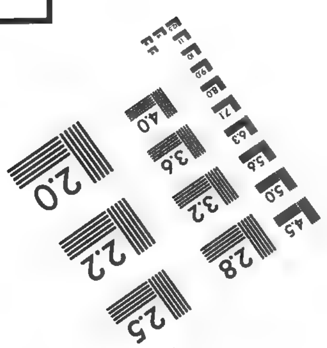
2.0
4.0
3.6
3.2
2.2
2.8
4.5
2.5

A4

A3



2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8
4.5



2.0
4.0
3.6
3.2
2.2
2.8
4.5
2.5

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

"I'VE LOVED SERGE SINCE 10,000 B. C.," SAYS ISADORA DUNCAN, IN HUB WITH POET HUSBAND—NEW IDEAS ON MARRIAGE

He Was a Soldier and She a Dancing Girl on the Nile When "Struck by Love" 11,922 Years Ago---Favors no Education for Children Under 12

Isadora Duncan, premier interpretative dancer of the world, who denies that she is a dancer and says that she is an "interpreter of life," surrounded by some of her charming pupils of the school for dancing which she recently founded in Russia by the special permission of the Soviet government. (Underwood.)
(Insert) Isadora Duncan, who has just returned from Russia with her brand new poet-husband, at the door of the little cottage which she used as a studio in Russia.

An action picture of the fair Isadora Duncan taken during one of her interpretative dances, showing the bare feet and corsetless figure which she advocates as a universal costume for women. Symphony Hall audiences witnessed her terpsichorean skill last week. (Genthe photo.)

Isadora Duncan, who made even blase Paris gasp at her daring ideas, has invaded Boston.

This is her first visit since 1915, when her unconventional views on love were the talk of the town.

Has she tamed down since then?

Whew! . . . Not Isadora.

The famous dancer threw all caution to the winds and in an amazingly frank talk with a Sunday Post representative kept things humming.

And at the same time her brand new poet hubbie, Serge Yessenin, threw a few bombshells of his own into the startling conversation.

By George Comstock

Isadorea and Serge—the much discussed newly married couple—were in the drawing room of car No. 2, the Federal Express, rushing through the darkness towards Boston one night this week.

There was Isadora Duncan, generally considered the world's premier interpretative dancer, who gives her age at 38, and who has created a furore in the press of three continents for years by her unconventional attitude towards society, marriage and sex and her newly acquired Russian poet-husband, Serge Alexandrovitch Yessenin, 28 years old, blonde, handsome.

Numerous bags and articles of luggage, spotted with labels from throughout Europe, crowded the little room, and in another car there was a French maid and an interpreter—all speeding to Boston where Miss Duncan would dance at Symphony Hall.

The Boston Sunday Post man knocked at the door of the compartment as the train swerved around a curve. Isadora herself opened the door. She was wearing a black velvet dress, gray suede pumps with gray silk stockings, a small black velvet hat pulled closely over her bobbed henna red hair, and, around her throat, a barbarically colored scarf of gold and black.

She introduced her husband. He rose from his seat by the window, bowed stiffly in the European fashion, extended his hand and murmured politely, "Philadelphia!"

"He is learning to speak English," interposed Miss Duncan with pride.

"Philadelphia to you, Sir" the reporter responded.

Played With Him on Nile Banks

Serge seemed pleased with this exchange of greetings and seated himself beside his wife.

This young man, who has married the famous dancer after she has proclaimed for years that she is unalterably opposed to marriage, looks even younger than the 28 years which he professes. He is very blond, almost Swedish, with a strange pallor over his face, accentuated by a heavy coat of powder that he also lavishes on his hair.

Despite his gray suit and cream-colored spats, a football coach would probably say that he is a "husky lad," for he stands 5 feet 10 inches in height, and weighs 175 pounds of what appears to be all muscle. If Serge ever decides to give up being a leading Russian poet, and has the desire, he can readily find many fields of labor open to him.

For the rest, he is eager, animated, likeable.

Miss Duncan appeared tired as she took her husband's hand in hers and leaned her head wearily against the green cushions. The curtains were tightly drawn in the little stateroom, only the lights shining from the polished walls.

"I have loved Serge since 10,000 years B. C." Miss Duncan said impressively. "Together we played on the banks of the Nile in the day of old; I was a dancing girl and he was a soldier. Of course I recognized him when I saw him in Russia."

"Then you fell in love at first sight?" ventured the reporter.

The question annoyed Miss Duncan. She repeated "fell in love" in a horrified voice, her blue eyes flashed. Then she turned to her husband and began to talk into his ear. Evidently she was repeating the impertinent question asked by the reporter.

Miss Duncan, it might be said, admits that she speaks five words of Russian, while her husband boasts an English vocabulary of six, including "Philadelphia". This, of course, has hindered their thorough discussion of certain topics. However, through long practice they have devised a language that takes in elements of English, French and Russian, in which they converse to their own satisfaction and the bewilderment of spectators. Many papers throughout the country have referred to this mode of expression as the Duncan "Love language".

(Latest photograph of Serge Yessenin, Isadora Duncan's poet husband, will be found in today's pictorial section.)

Serge finally understood the "fell in love" question. It appeared to annoy him also, for he became voluble, poured forth a torrent of Russian words, waved his hands—and Miss Duncan was helpless.

"Struck by Love"

She hurriedly summoned the interpreter.

When that gentleman arrived on the scene he listened patiently to Serge for a minute, persuaded him to sit down again, and explained to the reporter: "He says that people no longer fall in love. That is a phrase from a novel. The proper thing to say is that a person is struck by love, struck in the eye first and then in the other senses."

"Well, were you struck by love at first sight, Miss Duncan," she was asked.

"Immediately," she replied with a satisfied air, and Serge nodded his confirmation.

"I do not believe in marriage" Miss Duncan went on "I think that it is a worn out tradition that should be done away with; the proper union is a union of the spirits, which is above the dictates of mere man made law.

"While it is true that I have married, although I said for years that I would never do so, it was simply to enable me to travel through various countries that still persist in their silly laws.

"There is a new world today, and it is time that America wakes up to the fact and changes her laws to conform with the change in the thoughts of all people."

Miss Duncan is reticent about the details of her romance with her husband.

"Wherever I go," she said, "I am surrounded by people of kindred tastes. When I reached Moscow I soon met many of the younger intellectuals—the people who typify the new and liberated Russia, the people that you do not know over here at all—and where I found Serge. He was the acknowledged leader of the group. Do you need to ask me if I loved him " and she patted the arm of the young man sitting beside her.

Pale With Indignation

They were married in a police station in Moscow last April, she says, and immediately flew by airplane to Berlin, where her sister, Elizabeth Duncan, maintains a school of dancing similar to the many institutions of its kind that Isadora Duncan herself has founded.

From there she and Serge wandered back to France, wonderful dreamy days of honeymoon, Miss Duncan says. But at the French border they were detained because, by her marriage, Miss Duncan had forfeited her American citizenship and automatically became a citizen of Russia, as is her husband. However, through the efforts of several influential men in France, the dancer and the young Russian were permitted to enter.

They tarried in Paris for a while. Isadora Duncan has lived in Paris for long periods of time during her stage career. And then they decided to come to America and sailed on the steamship France.

But when Miss Duncan tells this part of her experience she becomes pale with indignation. They were stopped at Ellis Island, detained for a whole night and day while the State authorities decided whether or not Isadora and her husband, fresh from a long sojourn in Soviet Russia, should be allowed to land. Report said that the State Department was in possession of information that Isadora was an emissary of the Soviet government, a friend of Lenina himself.

Serge took his detention philosophically. He takes everything that way, boyish, smiling—adventures to be told to his friends in Russia on his return

"All Men My Brothers"

Isadora presented herself before the immigration authorities and threatened to leave the United States and never return again. Moved by this threat, or some inner working of the State Department, instructions were issued to allow Miss Duncan to enter this country under the law which allows free entry to visiting artists.

That accounts for her present visit to New England and for the fact that she will make an extended tour of the United States, dancing in many cities.

There were many suppositions advanced that Miss Duncan, regretful of having lost her American citizenship through her marriage, would prevail upon young Serge to make application for citizenship papers here, and that they would remain in this country indefinately.

"No," said Miss Duncan, "I have no intention of making Serge change his citizenship. As for me I am the citizen of no country. I am a citizen of the world and all men are my brothers."

She paused to make a few remarks to Serge, who listened attentively, and then told the interpreter what he thought of it all.

Read "Nick Carter" in Russia

It seemed that, in his youth, he had read many stories about a famous American detective named Nick Carter. These stories had been translated into the Russian and Serge had enjoyed them thoroughly. They were full of such weird names as Chicago, New York, Boston, and he was entranced with the knowledge that he was visiting those wonderful places. A mere matter of citizenship meant nothing to him; life and love, that was the thing to talk about.

Isadora Duncan sat and watched him as he talked, with the proud look in her eyes of a mother enjoying the gambols of an infant prodigy. When Serge smiled she smiled in sympathy.

She said that Serge was the leading poet of Russia and that he was the head of the Imagist group that finds in the peasantry of their native land the inspiring themes for their poetic distillations.

When asked for some of her husband's poems she replied that unfortunately they had never been published in anything but Russian, with the exception of a few short poems that had appeared in some English magazine, the name of which she had forgotten.

She appealed to Serge for aid on this point, but he, too, had completely forgotten the English magazine which had sent him a check for his compositions.

What Hoover Did

Miss Duncan said that Americans were cold (she was born in San Francisco) and that "the Russian audiences are much better. They have feeling, understanding and heart. I really believe that it is the effects of the revolution through which they have just passed.

"Sometimes, in an American theatre, I think that the people in the top gallery—those that applaud so heartily—must be all Russians.

"What is needed here is more freedom of thought and action and less repression. I really think that I will be going back to Russia soon. I have 50 children there. They belong to my school.

"When I first went to Moscow I started a school for children in a building that was furnished me by the Soviet government for the purpose. It was my intention to teach these children the true meaning of life through music and dancing. For a time we had a struggle for the barest necessities of life. The government gave one meal a day to the school and, from the American Relief Administration, I arranged to secure another Mr. Hoover must, indeed, be a wonderful man. I wish that I might meet him.

"And then I left Russia," and here she moved closer to Serge, "and had to leave the school in charge of other hands I understand that the meal which the American Relief Administration has been furnishing the school has been discontinued since my departure. I am anxious to hurry back there to see my children.

"There is nothing in America for me. My tours and dancing hardly pay the hotel bills involved, and my wish, my dream, for America will never be realized.

Teach Life Through Dancing

"I want the government to found a school—a school that will teach life through dancing. In a modest way I have attempted this experiment here in the United States years ago. I trained girls to live and dance, and as soon as I had taught them they would rush to the stage.

"I thought that I was teaching them to live—instead I found that I had simply given them an advertisement that enabled them to place themselves on the stage.

"Many prominent and wealthy men have told me that they are interested in my school and it is possible, even yet, that I will be able to establish it."

Miss Duncan, of course, is credited with having started the entire area of so-called interpretative dancing. She was the first artist of her kind to attempt to portray, through the movement of her dances, any kind of composition from Wagner's music to Shakspere's drama. Now, she says, that people do not appreciate her, but flock to see her imitators.

She became quite agitated over this question, but with the assistance of the interpreter and her husband, finally calmed down.

Her Husband's Ideas on Love

Serge seized this opportunity to tell the interpreter a few plain facts, that were in turn to be told to the reporter.

First there was this question of love—the reporter had mentioned that he understood—a most wonderful theme upon which he had written several of his better poems.

Love just came, burned while it stayed, and, perhaps went away. The idea of life, then, should be to enjoy love during these fleeting hours of its visit.

Russia was that way. That was the idea of the new group of Russian artists to which he belonged.

Yes, he had been in love before. He admitted that freely. Why not. He would tell instances and recount the merits of each case. There was——

But the interpreter, after a glance at Miss Duncan, spoke a few hurried words in Russian and the impetuous young poet subsided.

Those friends of the famous dancer who have doubted the wisdom of her marriage to a young man so much her junior, should be given the opportunity of seeing them together.

Obviously they are devoted. And the husband of the fair Isadora does not content himself with the mere fact that he is Isadora's husband; she is his wife as well. He is Russian, and therefore, he is master.

She submits, pats his head, looks at him adoringly, and seems to glory in her submission.

"I am a mystic. While I slept my soul left my body and ascended into the world where souls meet. It was there that I first met my husband. We fell in love immediately as souls and when we met in the flesh we again loved each other."

The poet broke in upon this thought to inquire of the interpreter exactly how long it would be before the Federal express arrived at Boston. He was, he said, hungry—evidently even a poet has some weaknesses.

He was told that he would only have a few minutes to wait, at which he smiled delightedly, and composed himself, to wait with what fortitude he could command.

"I'm Not a Dancer"

"I do not call myself a dancer," Isadora said. "I believe that I am an interpreter of life. Music is education; and dancing, if rightly carried out, comes naturally. There should be no dances taught; it should all be the spontaneous movement of the body carrying out a thought.

"Corsets, shoes, and, in fact, a great many garments that modern women now wear should be discarded. Women should go barefooted. They should wear loose, flowing dresses that give their bodies perfect freedom."

Isadora, it may be remembered, nearly stunned the street gamins of Athens several years ago, when she appeared before an admiring street throng becomingly attired in a flowing white gown that reached barely to her ankles and exposed her bare feet.

"I do not think that a child should have to go to school before reaching the age of 10 or 12 years. It is quite simple. The death rate for children in their early years is very high. A large percentage of them never survive to reach maturity. Why, then, bore them with the tedium of a modern education" Just let them dance, hear music, and learn to be beautiful."

Miss Duncan says that the Russian authorities, in the present regime, are in hearty accord with this scheme of education. But she shakes her bobbed head dismally; there is little appreciation of real art and the beautiful free life here in America.

Isadora says that despite her own happy love affair she is unhappy. She cannot forget the children, huddled along the Volga River and literally starving by the thousand.

"It all affects me with the deep sorrow that I feel when I hear Beethoven's Ninth Symphony," she said. "I want to make the people of America realise the situation of these poor people.

"When I went to Russia I wanted Mr. Griffith, the great moving picture director, to go with me. Unfortunately at the time he could not leave his work, but I believe, even yet, that if he had, with his wonderful genius, pictured the suffering of the stricken mass of Russia and those pictures could have ben shown in every hamlet and city of this country, it would have brought the truth home in a way that nothing else would have."

There can be no doubt as to Isadora Duncan's sincerity. Her ideas, on marriage, children, education, may seem radical and far fetched, but the seriousness of the woman is always apparent.

Miss Duncan has a fondness for red. Just before she left France for her trip to Russia she apeared at several French theatres wearing red costumes, enlivened with no other touch of color.

She is doing the same thing here now. She says that after a performance, if she appears before an audience, she likes to wrap around her body a red silk flag.

She offers no reason for this. Just sits and pats the hand of her brand new Russian husband.

The porter announced that the train was pulling into Boston.

Much excitement ensued. Interpreter, French maid, Russian husband, Isadora, luggage, all mixed in one confusing mass in the little stateroom.

Isadora said good night.

Serge extended his hand in a hearty grip.

"Philadelphia," he said.

"I'VE LOVED SERGE SINCE 10,000 B. C.," SAYS ISADORA DUNCAN, IN HUB WITH POET HUSBAND—NEW IDEAS ON MARRIAGE

He Was a Soldier and She a Dancing Girl on the Nile When "Struck by Love" 11,922 Years Ago---Favors no Education for Children Under 12

Isadora Duncan, premier interpretative dancer of the world, who denies that she is a dancer and says that she is an "interpreter of life," surrounded by some of her charming pupils of the school for dancing which she recently founded in Russia by the special permission of the Soviet government. (Underwood.)

(Insert) Isadora Duncan, who has just returned from Russia with her brand new poet-husband, at the door of the little cottage which she used as a studio in Russia.

An action picture of the fair Isadora Duncan taken during one of her interpretative dances, showing the bare feet and corsetless figure which she advocates as a universal costume for women. Symphony Hall audiences witnessed her terpsichorean skill last week. (Genthe photo.)

Isadora Duncan, who made even blase Paris gasp at her daring ideas, has invaded Boston.

This is her first visit since 1915, when her unconventional views on love were the talk of the town.

Has she tamed down since then?

Whew! . . . Not Isadora.

The famous dancer threw all caution to the winds and in an amazingly frank talk with a Sunday Post representative kept things humming.

And at the same time her brand new poet hubbie, Serge Yessenin, threw a few bombshells of his own into the startling conversation.

By George Comstock

Isadorea and Serge—the much discussed newly married couple—were in the drawing room of car No. 2, the Federal Express, rushing through the darkness towards Boston one night this week.

There was Isadora Duncan, generally considered the world's premier interpretative dancer, who gives her age at 38, and who has created a furore in the press of three continents for years by her unconventional attitude towards society, marriage and sex and her newly acquired Russian poet-husband, Serge Alexandrovitch Yessenin, 28 years old, blonde, handsome.

Numerous bags and articles of luggage, spotted with labels from throughout Europe, crowded the little room, and in another car there was a French maid and an interpreter—all speeding to Boston where Miss Duncan would dance at Symphony Hall.

The Boston Sunday Post man knocked at the door of the compartment as the train swerved around a curve. Isadora herself opened the door. She was wearing a black velvet dress, gray suede pumps with gray silk stockings, a small black velvet hat pulled closely over her bobbed henna red hair, and, around her throat a barbarically colored scarf of gold and black.

She introduced her husband. He rose from his seat by the window bowed stiffly in the European fashion, extended his hand and murmured politely, "Philadelphia!"

"He is learning to speak English," interposed Miss Duncan with pride.

"Philadelphia to you, Sir" the reporter responded.

Played With Him on Nile Banks

Serge seemed pleased with this exchange of greetings and seated himself beside his wife.

This young man, who has married the famous dancer after she has proclaimed for years that she is unalterably opposed to marriage, looks even younger than the 28 years which he professes. He is very blond, almost Swedish, with a strange pallor over his face, accentuated by a heavy coat of powder that he also lavishes on his hair.

Despite his gray suit and cream-colored spats, a football coach would probably say that he is a "husky lad," for he stands 5 feet 10 inches in height, and weighs 175 pounds of what appears to be all muscle. If Serge ever decides to give up being a leading Russian poet, and has the desire, he can readily find many fields of labor open to him.

For the rest, he is eager, animated, likeable.

Miss Duncan appeared tired as she took her husband's hand in hers and leaned her head wearily against the green cushions. The curtains were tightly drawn in the little stateroom, only the lights shining from the polished walls.

"I have loved Serge since 10 000 years B. C." Miss Duncan said impressively. "Together we played on the banks of the Nile in the day of old; I was a dancing girl and he was a soldier. Of course I recognized him when I saw him in Russia."

"Then you fell in love at first sight?" ventured the reporter.

The question annoyed Miss Duncan. She repeated "fell in love" in a horrified voice, her blue eyes flashed. Then she turned to her husband and began to talk into his ear. Evidently she was repeating the impertinent question asked by the reporter.

Miss Duncan, it might be said, admits that she speaks five words of Russian, while her husband boasts an English vocabulary of six, including "Philadelphia". This, of course, has hindered their thorough discussion of certain topics. However, through long practice they have devised a language that takes in elements of English, French and Russian, in which they converse to their own satisfaction and the bewilderment of spectators. Many papers throughout the country have referred to this mode of expression as the Duncan "Love language".

(Latest photograph of Serge Yessenin, Isadora Duncan's poet husband, will be found in today's pictorial section.)

Serge finally understood the "fell in love" question. It appeared to annoy him also, for he became voluble, poured forth a torrent of Russian words, waved his hands—and Miss Duncan was helpless.

"Struck by Love"

She hurriedly summoned the interpreter.

When that gentleman arrived on the scene he listened patiently to Serge for a minute, persuaded him to sit down again, and explained to the reporter: "He says that people no longer fall in love. That is a phrase from a novel. The proper thing to say is that a person is struck by love, struck in the eye first and then in the other senses."

"Well, were you struck by love at first sight, Miss Duncan," she was asked.

"Immediately," she replied with a satisfied air, and Serge nodded his confirmation.

"I do not believe in marriage" Miss Duncan went on "I think that it is a worn out tradition that should be done away with; the proper union is a union of the spirits, which is above the dictates of mere man made law.

"While it is true that I have married, although I said for years that I would never do so, it was simply to enable me to travel through various countries that still persist in their silly laws.

"There is a new world today, and it is time that America wakes up to the fact and changes her laws to conform with the change in the thoughts of all people."

Miss Duncan is reticent about the details of her romance with her husband.

"Wherever I go," she said, "I am surrounded by people of kindred tastes. When I reached Moscow I soon met many of the younger intellectuals—the people who typify the new and liberated Russia, the people that you do not know over here at all—and where I found Serge. He was the acknowledged leader of the group. Do you need to ask me if I loved him " and she patted the arm of the young man sitting beside her.

Pale With Indignation

They were married in a police station in Moscow last April, she says, and immediately flew by airplane to Berlin, where her sister, Elizabeth Duncan, maintains a school of dancing similar to the many institutions of its kind that Isadora Duncan herself has founded.

From there she and Serge wandered back to France, wonderful dreamy days of honeymoon, Miss Duncan says. But at the French border they were detained because, by her marriage, Miss Duncan had forfeited her American citizenship and automatically became a citizen of Russia, as is her husband. However, through the efforts of several influential men in France, the dancer and the young Russian were permitted to enter.

They tarried in Paris for a while. Isadora Duncan has lived in Paris for long periods of time during her stage career. And then they decided to come to America and sailed on the steamship France.

But when Miss Duncan tells this part of her experience she becomes pale with indignation. They were stopped at Ellis Island, detained for a whole night and day while the State authorities decided whether or not Isadora and her husband, fresh from a long sojourn in Soviet Russia, should be allowed to land. Report said that the State Department was in possession of information that Isadora was an emissary of the Soviet government, a friend of Lenine himself.

Serge took his detention philosophically. He takes everything that way, boyish, smiling—adventures to be told to his friends in Russia on his return

"All Men My Brothers"

Isadora presented herself before the immigration authorities and threatened to leave the United States and never return again. Moved by this threat, or some inner working of the State Department, instructions were issued to allow Miss Duncan to enter this country under the law which allows free entry to visiting artists.

That accounts for her present visit to New England and for the fact that she will make an extended tour of the United States, dancing in many cities.

There were many suppositions advanced that Miss Duncan, regretful of having lost her American citizenship through her marriage, would prevail upon young Serge to make application for citizenship papers here, and that they would remain in this country indefinately.

"No," said Miss Duncan, "I have no intention of making Serge change his citizenship. As for me I am the citizen of no country. I am a citizen of the world and all men are my brothers."

She paused to make a few remarks to Serge, who listened attentively, and then told the interpreter what he thought of it all.

Read "Nick Carter" in Russia

It seemed that, in his youth, he had read many stories about a famous American detective named Nick Carter. These stories had been translated into the Russian and Serge had enjoyed them thoroughly. They were full of such weird names as Chicago, New York, Boston, and he was entranced with the knowledge that he was visiting those wonderful places. A mere matter of citizenship meant nothing to him; life and love, that was the thing to talk about.

Isadora Duncan sat and watched him as he talked, with the proud look in her eyes of a mother enjoying the gambols of an infant prodigy. When Serge smiled she smiled in sympathy.

She said that Serge was the leading poet of Russia and that he was the head of the Imagist group that finds in the peasantry of their native land the inspiring themes for their poetic distillations.

When asked for some of her husband's poems she replied that unfortunately they had never been published in anything but Russian, with the exception of a few short poems that had appeared in some English magazine, the name of which she had forgotten.

She appealed to Serge for aid on this point, but he, too, had completely forgotten the English magazine which had sent him a check for his compositions.

What Hoover Did

Miss Duncan said that Americans were cold (she was born in San Francisco) and that "the Russian audiences are much better. They have feeling, understanding and heart. I really believe that it is the effects of the revolution through which they have just passed.

"Sometimes, in an American theatre, I think that the people in the top gallery—those that applaud so heartily—must be all Russians.

"What is needed here is more freedom of thought and action and less repression. I really think that I will be going back to Russia soon. I have 50 children there. They belong to my school.

"When I first went to Moscow I started a school for children in a building that was furnished me by the Soviet government for the purpose. It was my intention to teach these children the true meaning of life through music and dancing. For a time we had a struggle for the barest necessities of life. The government gave one meal a day to the school and, from the American Relief Administration, I arranged to secure another. Mr. Hoover must, indeed, be a wonderful man. I wish that I might meet him.

"And then I left Russia," and here she moved closer to Serge, "and had to leave the school in charge of other hands. I understand that the meal which the American Relief Administration has been furnishing the school has been discontinued since my departure. I am anxious to hurry back there to see my children.

"There is nothing in America for me. My tours and dancing hardly pay the hotel bills involved, and my wish, my dream, for America will never be realized.

Teach Life Through Dancing

"I want the government to found a school—a school that will teach life through dancing. In a modest way I have attempted this experiment here in the United States years ago. I trained girls to live and dance, and as soon as I had taught them they would rush to the stage.

"I thought that I was teaching them to live—instead I found that I had simply given them an advertisement that enabled them to place themselves on the stage.

"Many prominent and wealthy men have told me that they are interested in my school and it is possible, even yet, that I will be able to establish it."

Miss Duncan, of course, is credited with having started the entire area of so-called interpretative dancing. She was the first artist of her kind to attempt to portray, through the movement of her dances, any kind of composition from Wagner's music to Shakspere's drama. Now, she says, that people do not appreciate her, but flock to see her imitators.

She became quite agitated over this question, but with the assistance of the interpreter and her husband, finally calmed down.

Her Husband's Ideas on Love

Serge seized this opportunity to tell the interpreter a few plain facts, that were in turn to be told to the reporter

First there was this question of love—the reporter had mentioned that he understood—a most wonderful theme upon which he had written several of his better poems.

Love just came, burned while it stayed, and, perhaps went away. The idea of life, then, should be to enjoy love during these fleeting hours of its visit.

Russia was that way. That was the idea of the new group of Russian artists to which he belonged.

Yes, he had been in love before. He admitted that freely. Why not. He would tell instances and recount the merits of each case. There was——

But the interpreter, after a glance at Miss Duncan, spoke a few hurried words in Russian and the impetuous young poet subsided.

Those friends of the famous dancer who have doubted the wisdom of her marriage to a young man so much her junior, should be given the opportunity of seeing them together.

Obviously they are devoted. And the husband of the fair Isadora does not content himself with the mere fact that he is Isadora's husband; she is his wife as well. He is Russian, and, therefore, he is master.

She submits, pats his head, looks at him adoringly, and seems to glory in her submission.

"I am a mystic. While I slept my soul left my body and ascended into the world where souls meet. It was there that I first met my husband. We fell in love immediately as souls and when we met in the flesh we again loved each other."

The poet broke in upon this thought to inquire of the interpreter exactly how long it would be before the Federal express arrived at Boston. He was, he said, hungry—evidently even a poet has some weaknesses.

He was told that he would only have a few minutes to wait, at which he smiled delightedly, and composed himself, to wait with what fortitude he could command.

"I'm Not a Dancer"

"I do not call myself a dancer," Isadora said. "I believe that I am an interpreter of life. Music is education; and dancing, if rightly carried out, comes naturally. There should be no dances taught; it should all be the spontaneous movement of the body carrying out a thought.

"Corsets, shoes, and, in fact, a great many garments that modern women now wear should be discarded. Women should go barefooted. They should wear loose, flowing dresses that give their bodies perfect freedom."

Isadora, it may be remembered, nearly stunned the street gamins of Athens several years ago, when she appeared before an admiring street throng becomingly attired in a flowing white gown that reached barely to her ankles and exposed her bare feet.

"I do not think that a child should have to go to school before reaching the age of 10 or 12 years. It is quite simple. The death rate for children in their early years is very high. A large percentage of them never survive to reach maturity. Why, then, bore them with the tedium of a modern education Just let them dance, hear music, and learn to be beautiful."

Miss Duncan says that the Russian authorities, in the present regime, are in hearty accord with this scheme of education. But she shakes her bobbed head dismally; there is little appreciation of real art and the beautiful free life here in America.

Isadora says that despite her own happy love affair she is unhappy. She cannot forget the children, huddled along the Volga River and literally starving by the thousand.

"It all affects me with the deep sorrow that I feel when I hear Beethoven's Ninth Symphony," she said. "I want to make the people of America realize the situation of these poor people.

"When I went to Russia I wanted Mr. Griffith, the great moving picture director, to go with me. Unfortunately at the time he could not leave his work, but I believe, even yet, that if he had, with his wonderful genius, pictured the suffering of the stricken mass of Russia and those pictures could have been shown in every hamlet and city of this country, it would have brought the truth home in a way that nothing else would have."

There can be no doubt as to Isadora Duncan's sincerity. Her ideas, on marriage, children, education, may seem radical and far fetched, but the seriousness of the woman is always apparent.

Miss Duncan has a fondness for red. Just before she left France for her trip to Russia she apeared at several French theatres wearing red costumes, enlivened with no other touch of color.

She is doing the same thing here now. She says that, after a performance, if she appears before an audience, she likes to wrap around her body a red silk flag.

She offers no reason for this. Just sits and pats the hand of her brand new Russian husband.

The porter announced that the train was pulling into Boston.

Much excitement ensued. Interpreter, French maid, Russian husband, Isadora, luggage, all mixed in one confusing mass in the little stateroom.

Isadora said good night.

Serge extended his hand in a hearty grip.

"Philadelphia," he said.

BOSTON 'TOO DENSE' TO FATHOM ISADORA'S HIGHER LOVE

Adv Oct 22

ARISTOCRACY IS TOO FLIP TOWARD HER

Dancer Declares She Is No Clown to Be Laughed at

SAYS MARRIAGE TAKES FREEDOM

Miss Duncan Leaves Hub After Her Denunciation

By ELIZABETH RINTELS.

Boston is a cold, cold place.

Even a lovely red-haired dancer who has warmed the heart of the icy Russian steppes can do nothing to temper the Back Bay frozen aristocracy.

This is Isadora Duncan's last word about the Hub in her suite at the Copley-Plaza just before she left for the more congenial climate of another and milder city.

The famous dancer who has inaugurated a new school and type of her art was in Boston for three days. She gave two performances. And she saw innumerable reporters. And all—all she exclaims are flip, heartless and unfeeling.

Miss Duncan stood straight and strong as the Valkyrie she interprets. She breathed the fire of her denunciation in ringing tones.

MAKE A JOKE OF HER.

"I have showed you beautiful things. I have told you of beautiful things. And you laugh. You are flip. You make a joke of it. Are there no hearts that know the greatness of tragedy here? Is everything to you funny? I suppose if you went to the funeral of your best friend—that would be your idea of a lark."

The dancer stopped for breath and turned for confirmation of her words to her blond young poet-husband, Sergei Essenin. Now Sergei does not speak English, but rumor has it that he understands his wife's tongue. At any rate, he nodded his solemn agreement.

Miss Duncan took up the tale again with a rush.

"Because a woman wishes to be free—she must be a caricature. I do believe in freedom—every kind. I do not believe in marriage—of any kind. That is not freedom.

"I have lived my life as I believed it was right for me to live it. And I advise every woman to do the same. But because I think as I do—because I am honest and sincere in my purpose and my fulfillment—is there any reason why I should be made the buffoon for an ignorant public?

SAYS SHE'S NO CLOWN.

"I am not a clown—to make merry for the crowd. I am an artist—and I demand the dignity of my art."

It was when Miss Duncan told of her experiences in Russia that she rose to the highest heights of her indignation. She threw out her hands with a little foreign gesture, and her voice dropped as if it were weighed down with sorrow.

"Yes—even when I told you of the tremendous tragedy of Russia—you laugh. Ah—I do not understand. I am half Irish—and I love mirth, perhaps better than most. But I cannot laugh at death and heartbreak and agony.

"I have spoken of my school of dancing in Russia. And there is tragedy—tragedy filled with stark beauty.

"Every day there would come to me young girls, with poor pinched little faces and bodies emaciated from starvation. They had barely a torn cloak to cover them and keep out the bitter Russian winds.

"Every day, they would see those whom they most loved, dying, for lack of fuel that would keep the tiny thin flame of their lives from going out.

"And yet, my girls would come to me and dance madly, ecstatically, while their hearts were breaking. Their love for the beauty of expression almost surpasses belief.

"All this I told, and people laughed."

Miss Duncan has still another grievance against the good people of Boston. She had spoken of a new love—a love of one country for another—of the men and women and little children of one nation for another. That, she believed transcended all patriotism.

HER NEW LOVE.

And then the dancer was quoted as "Explaining a new love that was too complicated to be understood."

"Do you only understand that which you can see with your eyes" she exclaimed, "only the earthy things that explain love in terms of kisses and caresses given between lovers? Is a higher love—a love that embraces all humanity—too complicated for you to understand?

FINDS BOSTON IS HEARTLESS

Isadora Duncan, with her young Russian poet-husband, Serge Yessenen, shown here in a pose of domestic happiness, have shaken the dust of cold, heartless Boston from their feet and departed for a sunnier clime, where the lovely red-haired dancer will be better understood.

BOSTON 'TOO DENSE' TO FATHOM ISADORA'S HIGHER LOVE

Mar 18 '22

ARISTOCRACY IS TOO FLIP TOWARD HER

Dancer Declares She Is No Clown to Be Laughed at

SAYS MARRIAGE TAKES FREEDOM

Miss Duncan Leaves Hub After Her Denunciation

By ELIZABETH RINTELS.

Boston is a cold, cold place.

Even a lovely red-haired dancer who has warmed the heart of the icy Russian steppes can do nothing to temper the Back Bay frozen aristocracy.

This is Isadora Duncan's last word about the Hub in her suite at the Copley-Plaza just before she left for the more congenial climate of another and milder city.

The famous dancer who has inaugurated a new school and type of her art was in Boston for three days. She gave two performances. And she saw innumerable reporters. And all—all she exclaims are flip, heartless and unfeeling.

Miss Duncan stood straight and strong as the Valkyrie she interprets. She breathed the fire of her denunciation in ringing tones.

MAKE A JOKE OF HER.

"I have showed you beautiful things. I have told you of beautiful things. And you laugh. You are flip. You make a joke of it. Are there no hearts that know the greatness of tragedy here? Is everything to you funny? I suppose if you went to the funeral of your best friend—that would be your idea of a lark."

The dancer stopped for breath and turned for confirmation of her words to her blond young poet-husband, Sergei Essenin. Now Sergei does not speak English, but rumor has it that he understands his wife's tongue. At any rate, he nodded his solemn agreement.

Miss Duncan took up the tale again with a rush.

"Because a woman wishes to be free—she must be a caricature. I do believe in freedom—every kind. I do not believe in marriage—of any kind. That is not freedom.

"I have lived my life as I believed it was right for me to live it. And I advise every woman to do the same. But because I think as I do—because I am honest and sincere in my purpose and my fulfillment—is there any reason why I should be made the buffoon for an ignorant public?

SAYS SHE'S NO CLOWN.

"I am not a clown—to make merry for the crowd. I am an artist—and I demand the dignity of my art."

It was when Miss Duncan told of her experiences in Russia that she rose to the highest heights of her indignation. She threw out her hands with a little foreign gesture, and her voice dropped as if it were weighed down with sorrow.

"Yes—even when I told you of the tremendous tragedy of Russia—you laugh. Ah—I do not understand. I am half Irish—and I love mirth, perhaps better than most. But I cannot laugh at death and heartbreak and agony.

"I have spoken of my school of dancing in Russia. And there is tragedy—tragedy filled with stark beauty.

"Every day there would come to me young girls, with poor pinched little faces and bodies emaciated from starvation. They had barely a torn cloak to cover them and keep out the bitter Russian winds.

"Every day, they would see those whom they most loved, dying, for lack of fuel that would keep the tiny thin flame of their lives from going out.

"And yet, my girls would come to me and dance madly, ecstatically, while their hearts were breaking. Their love for the beauty of expression almost surpasses belief.

"All this I told, and people laughed."

Miss Duncan has still another grievance against the good people of Boston. She had spoken of a new love—a love of one country for another—of the men and women and little children of one nation for another. That, she believed transcended all patriotism.

HER NEW LOVE.

And then the dancer was quoted as "Explaining a new love that was too complicated to be understood."

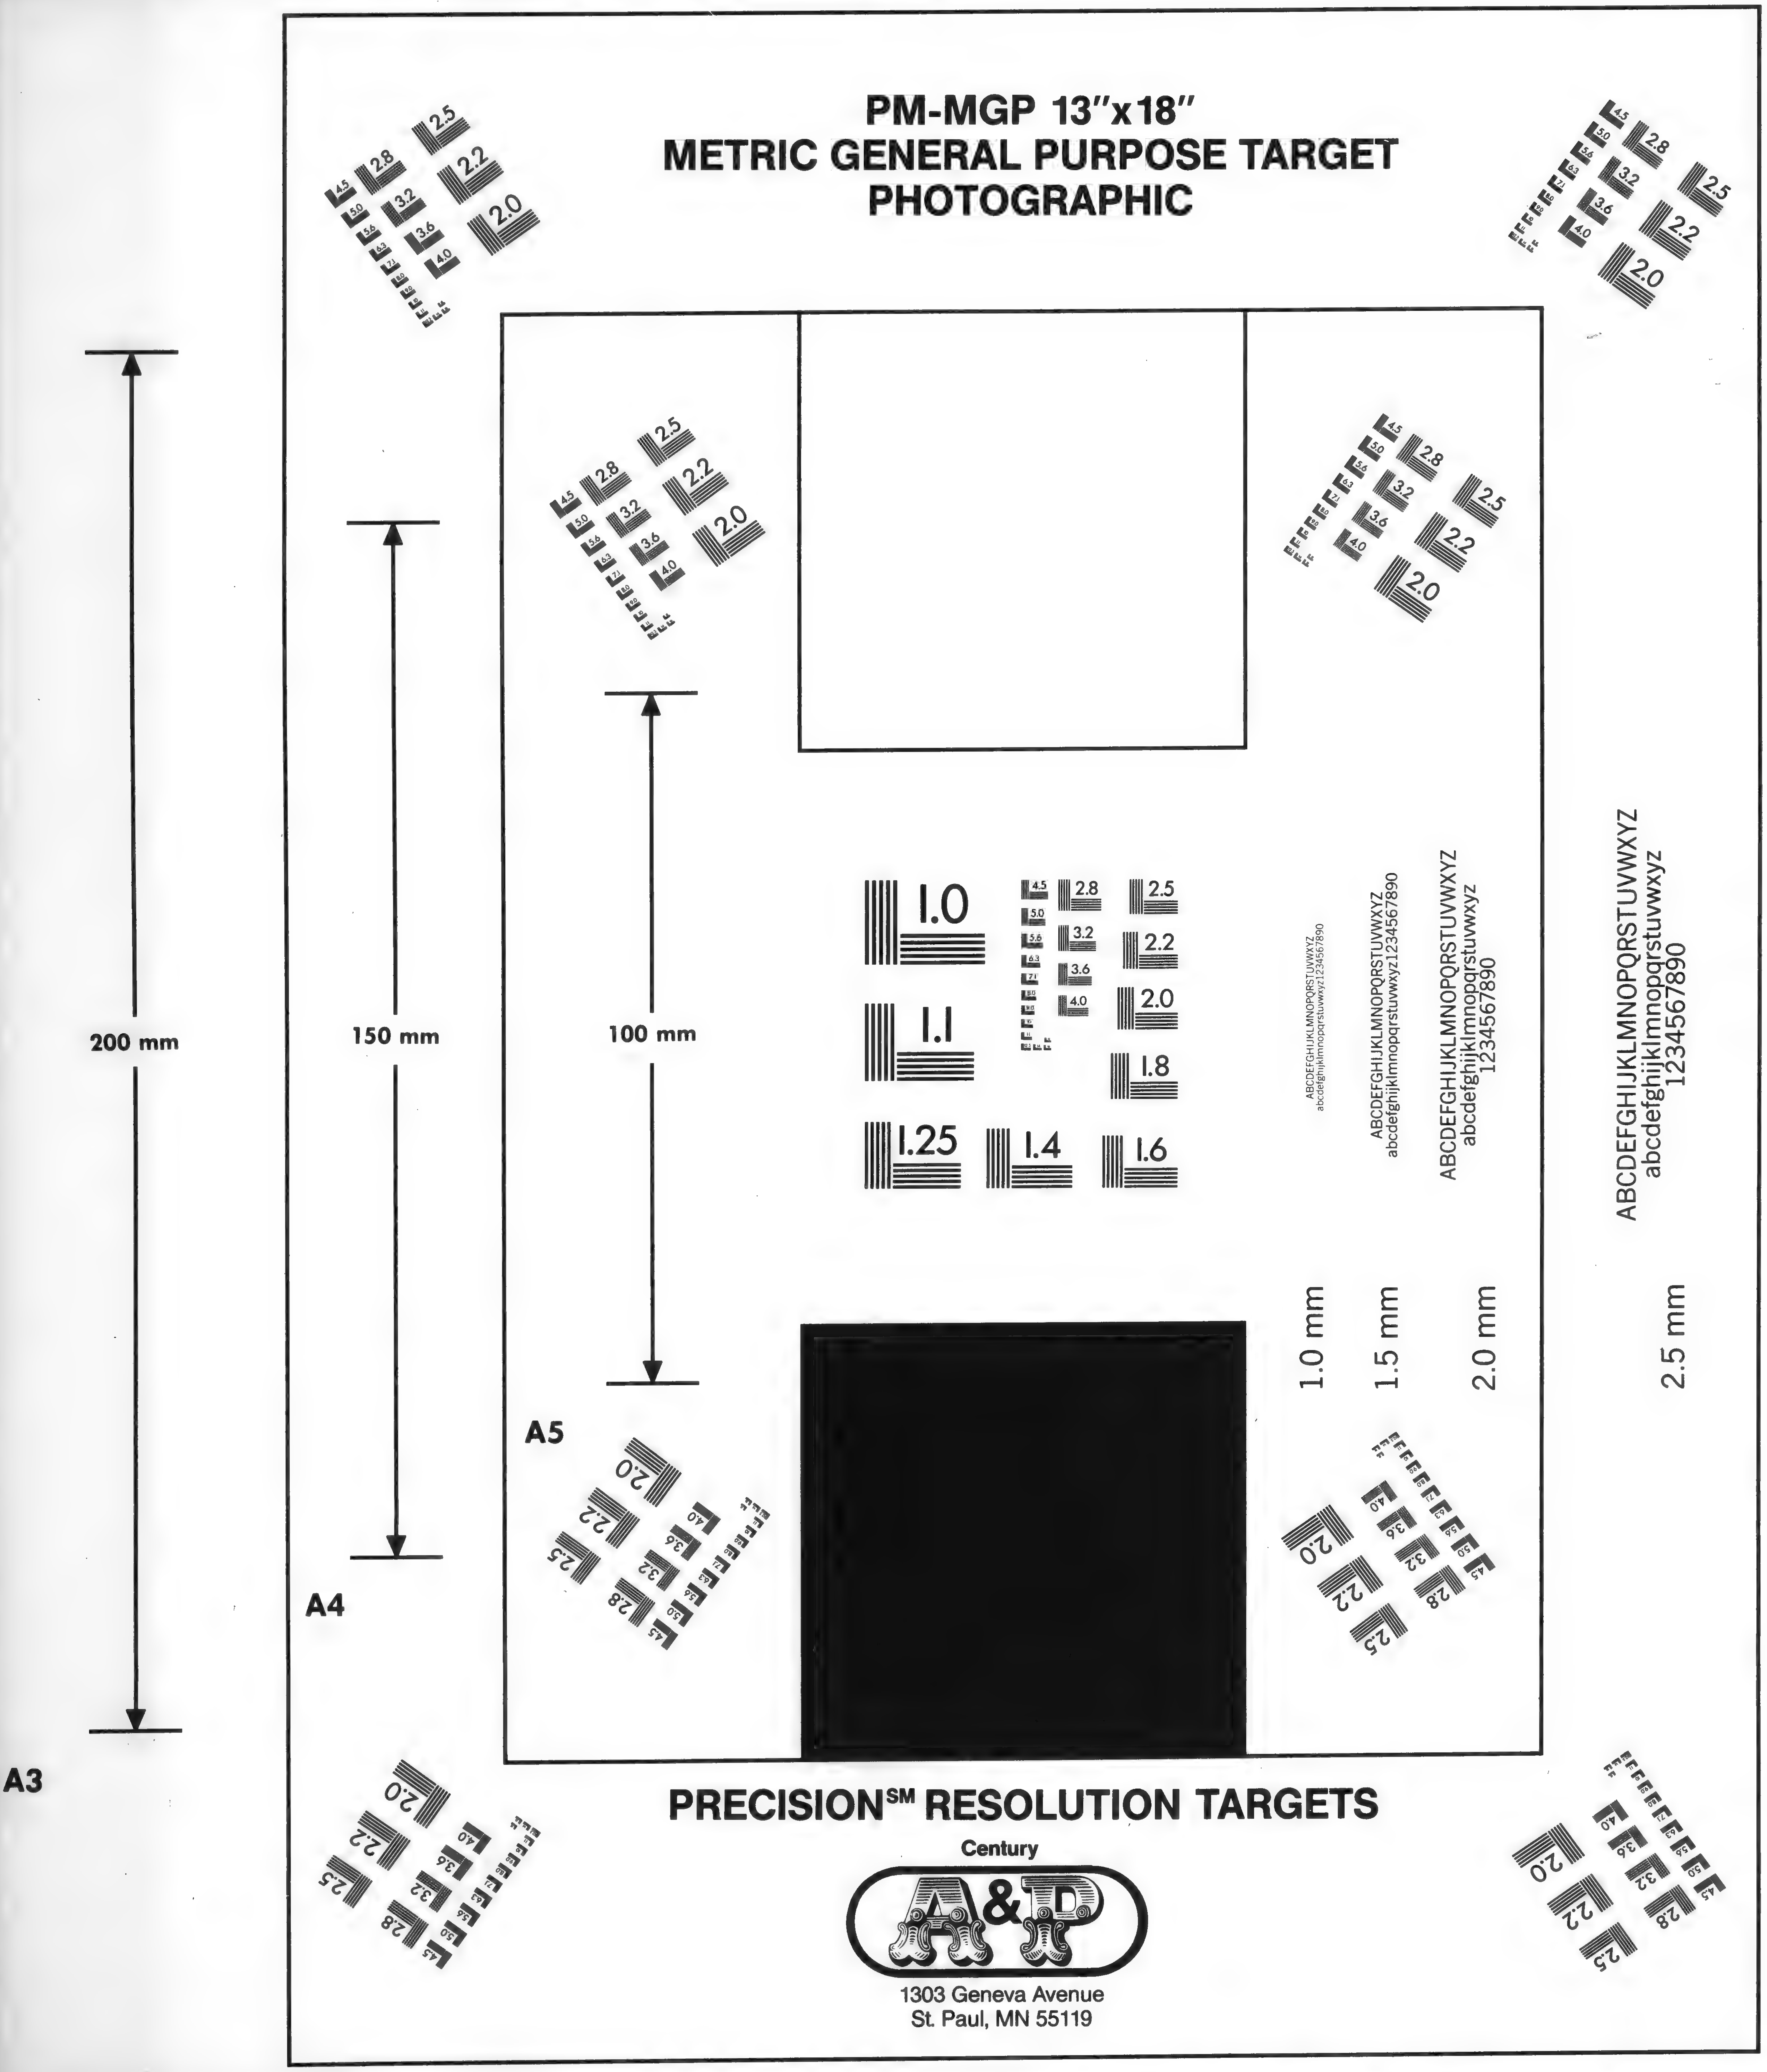
"Do you only understand that which you can see with your eyes" she exclaimed, "only the earthy things that explain love in terms of kisses and caresses given between lovers? Is a higher love—a love that embraces all humanity—too complicated for you to understand?

FINDS BOSTON IS HEARTLESS

Isadora Duncan, with her young Russian poet-husband, Serge Yessenen, shown here in a pose of domestic happiness, have shaken the dust of cold, heartless Boston from their feet and departed for a sunnier clime, where the lovely red-haired dancer will be better understood.

REDUCTION
RATIO
12x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A5
A4
A3
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ISADORA WED TO 'CAVE MAN'

Amer 10/19

Husband of Miss Duncan Numbers His Loves With Trees in Forest

There was a stir in the lobby of the Copley-Plaza Hotel when Isadora Duncan and her poet husband, Serge Alexandrovitch Yessenin, arrived in Boston.

Yessenin's views on love and marriage are quite as unique as those of his famous wife.

Asked now long he had wooed Miss Duncan, the poet replied:

"Immediately."

LOVES THEM ALL.

That his wife is not his first love was admitted by the young Russian in answer to a query as to how many girls he had ever loved.

"Why count the trees of the forest," he said.

He speaks always in figures.

"American girls are handsome," he said, "but you see a box of candy in the window. You can't tell what is in it. But I admit, the wrapping is beautiful, interesting, suggestive of what may be within."

Isadora Duncan hopes Boston will understand her new or rather her own old ideas of life as it should be lived.

"Ah, America, it is wonderful, but it is too conventional," she says.

"And marriage? I do not believe in marriage. I went through a marriage ceremony, yes, because if I lived with a man over here without being married to him, six burly policemen would come to raid my house and throw us into the streets."

"Did you marry because, for the first time in your life, you found a man who understood your ideals?" she was asked.

"Husband," she ejaculated, putting an arm around the blonde-haired boy in the light suit and beautifully fitting spats, "I do not call him my husband. He is a symbol of what Russia has produced, of what the revolution means to life—freedom of thought, action, love, life itself.

"Our union is symbolical of what should take place between Russia and America."

ISADORA DUNCAN EXTOLS SOVIET

Herald — Oct 19

Bolshevism Greatest Thing in 1900 Years, She Tells Reporters

DANCING TO TEACH BROTHERLY LOVE

Isadora Duncan, titian-haired classic dancer, and her 27-year-old impressionistic Russian poet husband, Serge Yessinin, who is 10 years her junior, arrived in Boston from Philadelphia last night. She is to give two performances here this week.

Miss Duncan was born in California. She says she is the great-granddaughter of Gen. William Duncan of revolutionary war game. She married her poet husband last May in a Moscow police station.

IN RUSSIAN COSTUME

In an interview at the Copley-Plaza Hotel, she appeared in a half-barbaric Russian costume. Around her neck was a brilliantly colored orange and black silk scarf.

Instead of the bizarre Russian boots with their little clinking bells, she wore a pair of gray high-heeled French shoes with pearl-gray stockingsto match.

She thinks bolshevism is the biggest thing in the history of the world since the beginning of the Christian era. She says she is going to continue teaching youthful bolshevists how to dance when she gets back to Russia.

She told the reporters she had a special message to the public. She called it "A new love," and as explained yesterday it was just a little too complicated for her newspaper auditors.

As to the government in Russia and its future, she asked that her poet husband be given a chance to explain. Her husband is a dapper blond youth, who smokes cigarettes incessantly. His natural pallor is accentuated by an over-supply of talcum powder.

Mrs. Yessinin confessed she was unable to understand her husband when he began to use fluent Russian. She managed to get in a word here and there, and it required the services of an interpreter to set forth his views to the newspaper reporters.

She admitted that Serge was the leader of a new Russian school of poetry. So did he.

Asked if he would give his frank opinion of the soviet government, he answered through the interpreter: "If I do I will be deported."

At this point Mrs. Yessinin interjected the remark: "You see, he does not want to leave me behind. He is just dying to get back to Russia, but he does not want to leave me behind." Serge evidently did not understand what his wife was saying, for he paid not the slightest attention; he merely kept on talking.

Miss Duncan says she hopes to establish an international school of dancing. It is her desire to begin with the young child and develop a brotherly love through the spirit of the dance.

ISADORA DUNCAN GIVES WAGNER INTERPRETATIONS

Globe

Isadora Duncan, recently returned from Soviet Russia, gave interpretations of Wagner last night at Symphony Hall to a very large audience. A good sized and reasonably competent orchestra, conducted by Nahan Franko of New York, furnished the music for Miss Duncan, and played several numbers, all from Wagner, in the intervals between her appearances. In New York at her first appearances, Miss Duncan made a speech after her final encore which contained among other things a plea for Russia. Last night she confined herself to interpretative dancing to "The Ride of the Valkyries," the "Siegfried Funeral Music," the "Liebestod," and the "Venusberg Bacchanale," with "Traume," and a Brahms Waltz added as encores.

Oct 21

Miss Duncan's endeavor is to convey to the spectator the emotional meaning of the music she interprets through posturing and facial expression. There is grace and beauty in nearly every motion she makes, but it is not always clear that she herself attaches dramatic significance to particular motions. In the "Siegfried Funeral March," which is a string of leading motives having to do with the dead hero of the "Ring" operas, no connection between Miss Duncan's performance and the literal dramatic significance Wagner meant his motives to have could be traced.

In the Bachanale, however, Wagner, who complained of the lack of verisimilitude shown by the Paris Opera ballet at the original performance there, would have been delighted with Miss Duncan. Her interpretation exactly suited the character of the music and the details of the operatic situation in "Tannhauser," act 1. There was no evidence that she had studied Wagner's own curious directions as to how the ballet should behave.

Many in the audience found her graceful Brahms Waltz encore a relief from the emotional strain of her Bacchanale. She was compelled by warm applause to repeat the Waltz.

This afternoon Miss Duncan will interpret two numbers, the long and exacting "Pathetic Symphony," and the stirring "Marche Slave." These appearances are part of what is said to be her farewell tour prior to retirement next March.

U. S. Officials Probe Isadora's Hub Dance

By Universal Service.

Washington, Oct. 24.—Three government departments have ordered complete reports on Isadora Duncan's alleged Bolshevik declarations before a Boston audience Saturday.

Officials said that while they were shocked at the eccentric dancer's reported omission of wearing apparel, they had no supervision over it; but, if she is spreading Red propaganda, as alleged, she will find herself at Ellis Island on her way to a permanent sojourn in Russia, it was stated on high authority.

The Departments of Labor, Justice and State initiated inquiries when they had been advised that Miss Duncan divested herself of a red sash, and waving it above her head shouted, "I am a Red."

Labor officials said that the dancer could not be deported by them until other agencies act. If local authorities convict her of an immoral exhibition, it was said, the Department of Labor can deport her without more ado.

Amer 10/24

[illegible]

commonwealth of Massachusetts distinctly state shall not be displayed on the stages of theatres in this state.

When Miss Duncan and her husband arrived in America the immigration authorities at Ellis Island detained them pending inquiry into certain communistic and bolshevistic opinions which the dancer was supposed to be bringing to this country as an agent for Lenin, Trotsky & Co., Moscow.

In her dressing room last night, following her performance, the ci-devant American, lately from the land of soviets, held an informal reception, at which she expounded her theories to some two-score women, and three men.

URGES WOMEN TO REVOLT

"They are trying to tame Americans," she exclaimed. "America needs a revolution." Then following a long pause, during which her audience gasped, with less emphasis: "Of course, not a revolution with guns. You women can do it. Do away with the conventions. You have a great opportunity. The chance for the revolution is in your hands. Don't do what they tell you you must do. Don't do it.

"I hate conventions. I say damn conventions. Damn all sentimentalities. Damn them all."

A large part of those about her were young girls.

"You can't tame Americans," she continued. "They are wild Indians. I am a wild Indian," running her fingers through her liberally hennaed, bobbed locks. "I am red Indian, little bit of nigger, little bit of everything. My great-grandfather was a general in the revolution. My grandfather fought in the civil war. I am——"

At this point a tall man, with graying hair, pushed his way through the circle surrounding the dancer.

KISSES RADICAL POET

"Why, Percy!" she broke off from her discourse on Americans and genealogy.

Followed murmured greetings, accompanied by much kissing of fingers, cheeks and lips. After which, remembering apparently her newly-acquired husband, who had been sitting amid a collection of grease paints on her dressing table, most of which stuck to his overcoat, she turned to him.

"This is Percy MacKaye, dear, the Communist poet," she said.

Hubby, who speaks no English, looked bored. Miss Duncan reached up to take off his hat. The blond Russian held on to it with both hands.

"The papers have said so much about his hair that he will not take off his hat," she volunteered to the circle of women.

Then, to the group at large:

"This is Percy MacKaye. When they said in New York they wanted to debar me, I said. 'Why don't you deport Percy MacKaye; he is the man who brought communism to America?' "

Percy looked pleased.

And Miss Duncan, remarking that she was now a married woman, and had to go home, shooed her visitors out.

ISADORA BARES BODY AND MIND IN FINAL DANCE

Herald — Oct

Lack of Raiment, Soviet Speech, Shock Her Audience

NO CENSOR OR POLICE TO CURB MISS DUNCAN

Concluding one of the most amazing performances ever witnessed in Boston, Isadora Duncan, modern originator of the classical dance, waved a flaming red scarf which a moment before had been the major part of her costume in a Tschaikowsky program in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon and shouted, "This is red: that is what I am." She shook the symbol of revolt in the faces of the spectators, most of whom were standing, and cried, "Don't let them tame you."

The remarks from the stage followed a dance program, which shocked and disgusted many in the audience because of the dancer's lack of costume. Not a few in the audience were young boys and girls, many of them students in the nearby music and art schools.

Even the musicians in the orchestra, accustomed as many of them are to audacious dancing and theatrical undress of all sorts, expressed astonishment that nothing was done to curb yesterday afternoon performance. The Friday evening program, which caused a quarter of the audience to walk out of the hall because of the exhibition, was not looked on as being of sufficent importance on which to take police or censorship action.

Miss Duncan came on the stage to dance to Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 6. Her costume was rather scant, and the upper left part persisted in slipping down. Many held their breath, for at times it seemed as if the dancer would leave behind what little she had on.

It was in the finale of this number that the spectators saw Miss Duncan at her altogether best. She came out in a dark, transparent gown which left absolutely nothing to the imagination.

No attempt was made on the part of Miss Duncan to add to this gown and hide her nudity when the lights were turned up at the conclusion of the number. She called to Nahan Franko, the conductor, to step on the stage, and the glare of the stage and ceiling lights as she walked from the back to the front of the stage created an astounding effect. The spectators merely gasped and a few applauded frantically.

In the "Marche Slave" number Miss Duncan appeared in an abbreviated red costume and carried a scarf of similar color. Her contortions and writhings finished, she came to the front of the stage, following the applause, and told the audience she would say a few words.

She began by urging those in the hall to be sure to read the latest work of Gorky, the Russian author. Of him she said: "He is a real hero of the revolution."

With utterance of this sentiment came a smattering of applause. She continued by saying: "Gorky refers in his works to three kinds of people, black, grey and red."

Snatching the scarf from about her neck and waving it in front of her, she shouted, "This is red. That is what I am."

ISADORA DUNCAN GIVES RECITAL

Herald

Exhibition of Interpretative Dancing in Symphony Hall

Sat Oct 21

TO PERFORM AGAIN THIS AFTERNOON

By PHILIP HALE

Isadora Duncan with an orchestra conducted by Nahan Franko gave an exhibition of "interpretative" dancing last night in Symphony Hall. There was a large audience.

The composer whose works were chosen for "interpretation" was Wagner. Miss Duncan made these selections for the display of her peculiar art: Ride of the Valkyrie, Siegfried's Funeral Music, Isolde's death and the Bacchanal from "Tannhaeuser."

Those who remember Miss Duncan as she danced when she first visited Boston, gracefully posing, now bringing to mind the art as explained by Lucian, with significant pantomime; now leaping and bounding with the joy of youth in springtime, exulting in her freedom from academic conventions; the incarnation of high spirits yet an interpreter in the dance of gentler emotions and of melancholy moods, rubbed their eyes last night in wonder at the change.

A change not necessarily due to the fast-gliding years; a change in ambition and in methods of expression.

Her choice of subjects for interpretation were unfortunate. How is one, however gifted, to mime the Valkyrie's ride in air, to bring before an audience the funeral procession of the hero; to express in pantomime the outpouring of Isolde's soul in song?

What did one see? A woman on a semi-darkened stage making Y's with upstretched arms; with legs now joined together, now far apart; moving without apparent purpose from one side of the stage to the other, from front to rear and back again. With grimaces that were intended to be revelations of inward and varied feelings. An uninteresting, futile exhibition.

Applauded heartily for these performances she shook hands several times with Mr. Franko, who certainly needed this encouragement. As an extra number in the first part of the entertainment, she mimed Wagner's "Dreams," dreaming while sprawling on the stage, kneeling, standing, and again lying down. Uneasy dreams; unpleasant dreams.

The orchestra, led by Mr. Franko, played the Prelude to "Lohengrin," the Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla, the Prelude to "Tristan and Isolde" and the overture to "Tannhaeuser." He conducted intelligently players who, no doubt from insufficient rehearsal, at times made inopportune sounds and distracting entrances.

This afternoon Tchaikovsky will be interpreted by Miss Duncan: the "Pathetic" symphony and the Marche Slave. The orchestra will also play the "1812" overture and the familiar Andante from a string quartet.

---

lights. These critics lied who spoke of the scantiness of my applause.

REVOLUTION OF ART

"That was all. I spoke of freedom in a spiritual, an artistic sense. I spoke of revolution as a revolution of art, of life itself.

"When I said I was 'red,' I meant this, too in a psychic sense. I did not mean to preach a technical Soviet doctrine. I meant only that they had grasped my gospel of beauty, and that I was glad."

The meaning of the term "red" with which she branded herself was taken, Miss Duncan explained, from the treatise of a Russian psychologist, Malagoy, "Psychic Essay on Red, Black and Gray."

"I wanted to tell Boston people that I was 'red' because I was an artist, a creator," she continued. "That is Malakov's meaning. He says that there are three streams of blood—red, black and gray. And that each stream fits a certain temperament.

"I am red, in that sense. And the people before me—the Back Bay conservatives, impoverished by custom and taboo—they are the gray, the lifeless, the sterile.

"And the black? These are the Boston critics. They are destructive, vicious, ignorant. They strike where they do not understand."

Miss Duncan admitted that the display of her limbs and body affects Boston Puritans. They want to satisfy their baseness without admitting it. They are afraid of truth. A nude body repels them; a suggestively clothed body delights them. They are afraid to call their moral infirmity by its right name.

"I don't know why this Puritan vulgarity should be confined to Boston, but it seems to be. Other cities are not afflicted with a horror for beauty and a smirking taste for burlesque semi-exposures."

Boston is the "tenth circle in Dante's Inferno," according to the brilliant dancer.

"I look upon life as a progression from one sphere to another, as Dante's great poem is conceived," she said.

"And when I come to Boston, I surely think I'm in the tenth or lowest circle! That was supposed to be ice-bound and pervaded by perpetual frost. And 'frost' is just what I get in Boston."

Isadora's Dances Drive Many from Symphony

Trav

"American Needs a Revolution," Says Disgusted Miss Duncan, After Nudities Have Shocked Audience—Kisses Percy MacKay

"America needs a revolution!"

Thus proclaimed Isadora Duncan at the close of her exhibition of interpretive dancing, an exhibition that was so daring that fully a quarter of her audience walked out, audibly expressing their disgust before the end of the program.

To say that the much-talked of dancer, who only entered America after a threatened disbarment by the immigration authorities, shocked the large gathering in Symphony hall last night is to put it mildly.

According to remarks in the lobby at the close of the performance, "no such parade of indecencies has ever been foisted on a Boston public in the name of art."

HER COSTUME SLIPS

The exhibitions which provoked the caustic comment from all sides were interpretive dances of the death scene from Wagner's "Tristan and Isolide," and the "Bacchanal" from "Tannhauser."

In the death dance, Miss Duncan was garbed solely in a flimsy, transparent fluttering robe of crepe de chine, and the costume of her bacchanalian interpretation slipped at will, displaying feminine charms which the laws of the

(Continued on Page Two, Column 6)

MISS DUNCAN'S FINAL DANCES

Her Interpretations of Tschaikovsky Lack Ingenuity

Herald 10/2

MIGHT HINT IN PRINT WHAT SHE IS ABOUT

At her second appearance yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, Miss Isadora Duncan gave an "interpretation" of Tchaikovsky's Pathetic symphony and Slavic March. Mr. Nahan Franko conducted the orchestra, and for his own contribution to the entertainment he led his forces through the same composer's overture, "1812," and the Andante Cantabile from a string quartet. Though the hall was not filled, there was a large audience in attendance.

It is curious that Miss Duncan should not allow a man of Tchaikovsky's calibre credit for knowing what he was about. Tchaikovsky wrote operas, to be interpreted by singers and actors, ballets calling for dancers and mimes, and symphonies for which he held an orchestra sufficient. Why not let him have his way? One may or may not enjoy watching for two long symphonic movements a woman in evident distress of mind; tastes vary. But surely it is safe to submit that the exhibition adds not a jot to the poignancy of Tchaikovsky's music; one may even venture the guess that the composer, were he alive today, would not thank the "interpreter" for her help. The Pathetic symphony does very well alone.

Even if it cried out for aid, where is the dancer to give it? She must be richer in ingenuity than Miss Duncan, a completer mistress of varied and expressive pose, if she is to suggest gloom and woe throughout the lengths of the adagio and the finale without repeating herself to the point of wearying her spectators. And to furnish the necessary relief of the two livelier movements she must show herself a more accomplished dancer in the real meaning of the word; a gambol or two and fluttering cloth as the only symbols of joy should not be overworked. Not that it matters. nobody could do what Miss Duncan sets out to do. The wonder is, why should she want to try?

Since Miss Duncan does choose to "interpret" Tschaikovsky, perhaps it might help her audiences if she would vouchsafe a hint or two on the program as to what she was about. After the Pathetic symphony, too, the illusion of tragedy might prove more enduring if Miss Duncan were to omit the remarkable exit she indulged in yesterday.

R. R. G.

MISS DUNCAN'S DARING 'DANCES'

Adv — Oct 21

By E. F. HARKINS

Whatever else Boston may be, it is no longer Puritanical.

Isadora Duncan proved that at Symphony Hall last night when she appeared more than half nude in her pantomimic interpretation of the Venusberg bacchanale scene from Wagner's "Tannhaeuser."

It is safe to say that Boston never saw such a spectacle before—a woman with bare legs and half her bosom bare, bacchanaling around before what is known as a "mixed" audience—a representative Boston audience, with even clergymen present. And the audience demanded more!

Miss Duncan gracefully hooked her costume up, covering herself once more as women are usually covered on the stage, even classic dancers; and then she gave her first actual dance of the evening, to the music of the Brahms waltz. This first dance came as an encore to the last number on the program. Previous to that it was all pantomime and posing, sandwiched in between orchestral numbers none too well performed.

And in the Love Death scene from "Tristan and Isolde" Miss Duncan wore only a flimsy costume that was transparent even to the naked eye.

Many of those present enjoyed this strictly Continental entertainment. Only applause was heard, at any rate. The dancing was an almost negligible feature. This afternoon, at the same place, Miss Duncan will "dance" to Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic Symphony" music and "Marche Slave."

ISADORA SHOWS BOSTON HER DANCES

Amer 10/21

By FRED J. McISAAC.

Isadora Duncan appeared in our town last night. There was a very large audience at Symphony Hall to witness her interpet a program of Wagner excerpts. An orchestra of fifty pieces, conducted by Nathan Franko, played. The music was good.

After the "Prelude From Lohengrin" had been performed without interference from Miss Duncan, the lights were dimmed and she appeared to interpret the Ride of the Valkyrie from "Die Walkure." As I understand it the Valkyrie was a demi-goddess who rode through the sky on a large horse. Isadora Duncan didn't ride. She didn't even walk. She planted herself in the middle of the stage with her nice, large bare legs spread firmly and moved her arms slowly. It was a good deal like "Camp's daily dozen," except not so much exercise.

Meanwhile the orchestra was playing excitedly and the war-cry of the Valkyrie was sounding. It didn't excite Isadore. She was a placid Valkyrie. If she was interpreting a horse it was a balky horse. Finally she got herself going and she pranced gently around the stage in a sort of mild canter two or three times. Then she stooped over, as though to pick up a quarter, and drew herself up disappointed. The music stopped. She slipped through the curtain. The audience paused a moment to see if it was all over and then applauded mildly, but politely.

Later she interpreted the funeral march from "Gotterdammerung" and the Prelude and Death from "Tristan und Isolde," but I was not there. Where was I? I had gone

---

ISADORA TO BE BARRED IN HUB

Monday Oct 23

No More Performances by the Artist Whose Ideas of Propriety Are Rather Bizarre

Isadora Duncan, the dancer, who shocked patrons of Symphony Hall last week by appearing in a garment that had no non-skid attachment, will not be permitted to make another exposure here. She will be barred by Mayor Curley and his official staff of censors. Miss Duncan's ideas of propriety are entirely too liberal for the Boston she, according to her public statements, so heartily despises.

EXPRESSES HER VIEWS

Undismayed by the criticism which greeted her exposition of the art Terpsichorean during her engagement at Symphony Hall, Isadora yesterday recovered her composure sufficiently to

---

ISADORA INCONTINENT

Trs Oct 23

Excesses That Marred Her Matinee and Affronted the Spectators—The Irritation Behind—More Sculptural Posings to Chaikovsky's "Pathetic Symphony" and an Obvious Miming of His "Slavic March"

TO Isadora continent on Friday evening succeeded Isadora incontinent on Saturday afternoon. Perhaps a less numerous company of spectators in Symphony Hall vexed her; perhaps articles in the newspapers, oftener recalling her ancient prowess than her present powers, added to this irritation. In those circumstances peevish players usually address audiences—superfluously—and for the while Miss Duncan was like-minded. Since her voice is light, she was not too audible to the curious ears that pressed forward to the stage. She was heard, however, to reaffirm her opinions of the present régime in Russia, which are interesting and important only to herself and which seem appreciably remote from the dance. She "passed remarks" also upon her reception in Boston which did no more than underscore the irritation aforesaid, and which her auditors received with obvious merriment. Unfortunately her sayings on this score lacked the wit of a Mansfield aforetime or a Miller in the present, making such complaint. Without it, silence on the part of the aggrieved artist, is commonly counted the wiser way.

Upon this minor excess, which was amusing, Miss Duncan had already laid a major affront which, to not a few looking upon her, was graver offending. On Friday, concerned with the music of Wagner, she was usually arrayed in mantles that she could shape into sculpturesque folds. Or else, as for the Venusberg music in "Tannhäuser," she had worn the chiffon scarves familiar upon her these many years. On Saturday, passing to the music of Chaikovsky, she merged other mantles with other scarves of an exceeding transparency. Furthermore, a stage that had hitherto swum in a concealing haze, was now brightly lighted. The outcome, especially when Isadora answered recalls or stretched a congratulatory hand to the conductor, was a degree of bodily revelation unbecoming to a middle-aged women, too obviously high in flesh. It was the negation of the sculptural beauty that she professes to seek. It was also one more evidence of the irritation that tends more and more to curdle the exploits of these, her final years. Miss Duncan will not accept with resignation the coming of middle age and the inevitable end therewith of her dancing. She gropes after a substitute for it; she releases her rebellion in such excesses as those of Saturday; she dispenses sensation for the sensation's sake. Loudly she sings praises of things Russian; yet she forgets the excellent rule of the State

---

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER ... , OCTOBER 23, 1922

BOSTON CRUDE AND CRUEL DECLARES ISADORA

IT PREFERS SEMI-CLAD INDECENCY TO NUDE ART

Life Here a Horror, Insists Dancer and She's Glad To Get Away

"Boston Critics Ignorant? I Wonder"—Says Isadora

ISADORA DUNCAN last night made public the following:

"To the critics of Boston:

"Your criticism of my dancing in Boston has been nothing less than outrageous abuse. Why is it that I, who have been dancing since [illegible] in every capital in the world, should find censure only here?

"Why is it that, if I can dance before 4000 wildly acclaiming people every night in Paris, I should be denounced here as worthless?

"Why is it that, if the government at Rio De Janeiro begs me to stay with them forever and educate her children by my children by my dancing, I should be dismissed here as 'immoral?'

"Why is it that, when the German government paid 20 p. c. of my salary because I was an 'inspiration' to their public, I should be branded in Boston as a 'vulgarian?'

"Why is it that, when the people of Boston rose in Symphony Hall Saturday afternoon in thrilling response to my art, that only the critics abuse?

"Is it because they are ignorant? I wonder!

"(Signed) ISADORA DUNCAN."

Why all this fuss over Isadora? Is it not belated. When she first visited Boston, in some of her dances there was nothing between her thin, transparent robe and her body. Ah, my boy, she was younger, and no verbal excuse or defence was necessary. She might then have been likened to the woman of whom Swinburne wrote: Her 10/20

"And all her body was more virtuous
Than souls of women fashioned otherwise."

But after a dancer, even when she is an interpreter, a classical interpreter, has passed her 40th year, she, as a rule, should preserve a certain bodily reticence.

ISADORA SHOWS BOSTON HER DANCES

Amer 10/21

By FRED J. McISAAC.

Isadora Duncan appeared in our town last night. There was a very large audience at Symphony Hall to witness her interpet a program of Wagner excerpts. An orchestra of fifty pieces, conducted by Nathan Franko, played. The music was good.

After the "Prelude From Lohengrin" had been performed without interference from Miss Duncan, the lights were dimmed and she appeared to interpret the Ride of the Valkyrie from "Die Walkure." As I understand it the Valkyrie was a demi-goddess who rode through the sky on a large horse. Isadora Duncan didn't ride. She didn't even walk. She planted herself in the middle of the stage with her nice, large bare legs spread firmly and moved her arms slowly. It was a good deal like "Camp's daily dozen," except not so much exercise.

Meanwhile the orchestra was playing excitedly and the war-cry of the Valkyrie was sounding. It didn't excite Isadore. She was a placid Valkyrie. If she was interpreting a horse it was a balky horse. Finally she got herself going and she pranced gently around the stage in a sort of mild canter two or three times. Then she stooped over, as though to pick up a quarter, and drew herself up disappointed. The music stopped. She slipped through the curtain. The audience paused a moment to see if it was all over and then applauded mildly, but politely.

Later she interpreted the funeral march from "Gotterdammerung" and the Prelude and Death from "Tristan und Isolde." but I was not there. Where was I? I had gone

---

ISADORA TO BE BARRED IN HUB

Monday Oct. 23

No More Performances by the Artist Whose Ideas of Propriety Are Rather Bizarre

Isadora Duncan, the dancer, who shocked patrons of Symphony Hall last week by appearing in a garment that had no non-skid attachment, will not be permitted to make another exposure here. She will be barred by Mayor Curley and his official staff of censors. Miss Duncan's ideas of propriety are entirely too liberal for the Boston she, according to her public statements, so heartily despises.

EXPRESSES HER VIEWS

Undismayed by the criticism which greeted her exposition of the art Terpsichorean during her engagement at Symphony Hall, Isadora yesterday recovered her composure sufficiently to

---

ISADORA INCONTINENT

Trs Oct 23

Excesses That Marred Her Matinee and Affronted the Spectators—The Irritation Behind—More Sculptural Posings to Chaikovsky's "Pathetic Symphony" and an Obvious Miming of His "Slavic March"

TO Isadora continent on Friday evening succeeded Isadora incontinent on Saturday afternoon. Perhaps a less numerous company of spectators in Symphony Hall vexed her; perhaps articles in the newspapers, oftener recalling her ancient prowess than her present powers, added to this irritation. In those circumstances peevish players usually address audiences—superfluously—and for the while Miss Duncan was like-minded. Since her voice is light, she was not too audible to the curious ears that pressed forward to the stage. She was heard, however, to reaffirm her opinions of the present régime in Russia, which are interesting and important only to herself and which seem appreciably remote from the dance. She "passed remarks" also upon her reception in Boston which did no more than underscore the irritation aforesaid, and which her auditors received with obvious merriment. Unfortunately her sayings on this score lacked the wit of a Mansfield aforetime or a Miller in the present, making such complaint. Without it, silence on the part of the aggrieved artist, is commonly counted the wiser way.

Upon this minor excess, which was amusing, Miss Duncan had already laid a major affront which, to not a few looking upon her, was graver offending. On Friday, concerned with the music of Wagner, she was usually arrayed in mantles that she could shape into sculpturesque folds. Or else, as for the Venusberg music in "Tannhäuser," she had worn the chiffon scarves familiar upon her these many years. On Saturday, passing to the music of Chaikovsky, she merged other mantles with other scarves of an exceeding transparency. Furthermore, a stage that had hitherto swum in a concealing haze, was now brightly lighted. The outcome, especially when Isadora answered recalls or stretched a congratulatory hand to the conductor, was a degree of bodily revelation unbecoming to a middle-aged women, too obviously high in flesh. It was the negation of the sculptural beauty that she professes to seek. It was also one more evidence of the irritation that tends more and more to curdle the exploits of these, her final years. Miss Duncan will not accept with resignation the coming of middle age and the inevitable end therewith of her dancing. She gropes after a substitute for it; she releases her rebellion in such excesses as those of Saturday; she dispenses sensation for the sensation's sake. Loudly she sings praises of things Russian; yet she forgets the excellent rule of the State

---

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER OCTOBER 23, 1922

BOSTON CRUDE AND CRUEL DECLARES ISADORA

IT PREFERS SEMI-CLAD INDECENCY TO NUDE ART

Life Here a Horror, Insists Dancer and She's Glad To Get Away

"Boston Critics Ignorant? I Wonder"—Says Isadora

ISADORA DUNCAN last night made public the following:

"To the critics of Boston:

"Your criticism of my dancing in Boston has been nothing less than outrageous abuse. Why is it that I, who have been dancing since 1896 in every capital in the world, should find censure only here?

"Why is it that, if I can dance before 4000 wildly acclaiming people every night in Paris, I should be denounced here as worthless?

"Why is it that, if the government at Rio De Janeiro begs me to stay with them forever and educate her children by my children by my dancing, I should be dismissed here as "immoral?"

"Why is it that, when the German government paid 20 p. c. of my salary because I was an "inspiration" to their public, I should be branded in Boston as a "vulgarian?"

"Why is it that, when the people of Boston rose in Symphony Hall Saturday afternoon in thrilling response to my art, that only the critics abuse?

"Is it because they are ignorant? I wonder!.

"(Signed) ISADORA DUNCAN."

Why all this fuss over Isadora? Is it not belated. When she first visited Boston, in some of her dances there was nothing between her thin, transparent robe and her body. Ah, my boy, she was younger, and no verbal excuse or defence was necessary. She might then have been likened to the woman of whom Swinburne wrote: Her 10/26

"And all her body was more virtuous
Than souls of women fashioned otherwise."

But after a dancer, even when she is an interpreter, a classical interpreter, has passed her 40th year, she, as a rule, should preserve a certain bodily reticence.

ISADORA SAYS BOSTON CRUDE AND CRUEL. Isadora Duncan, shown above in a special pose for the Advertiser, charges that Boston is suffering from Puritanical vulgarity and is crude and cruel. She accuses our cultured art patrons of prefering semi-clad indecency to her nude art. The red-haired exponent of Russian art admits that "mismanagement of garments" caused the display of limbs and body that shocked her critics here, but she condemns them as being repelled by nudity, but delighted in burlesque semi-exposures. (Staff photo)

Isadora Duncan, "Red" dancer, will be barred from appearing in the Hub, hereafter, even if she wears an overcoat while dancing. Mayor Curley and his staff of censors, it was stated, will see to it that she gives no more performances here. She is too exciting.

By KATHERINE DONOVAN

"I would rather dance nude in Symphony Hall than strut in half-clothed suggestiveness as the 'Forty Flappers' are doing on another Boston stage.

"Nakedness is truth. It is beauty. It is art. Therefore it can never be vulgar, it can never be immoral.

"I would not wear clothes, if it were not for their warmth. My body is the temple of my art. I expose it, as a shrine, for the worship of beauty."

Thus does Isadore Duncan, flaming-haired apostle of the dance, flaunt the scarlet banner of "artistic revolution" in the faces of her Boston critics, who on Saturday evening withdrew in horror from her exhibition of free dancing, freer thinking, and complete freedom from much clothing in Symphony Hall.

"CHAINED BY PURITANISM"

"I wanted to free the Boston audience from the chains that bound them Saturday afternoon," the lustrous-eyed dancer continued. "I saw them before me, shackled with a thousand links of custom and environment.

"I saw them chained by Puritanism, bound by their Back Bay Brahminism, enslaved and hidebound in mind and body. And they wanted to be free! They cried out for someone to loose their chains.

"When I finished my 'Marche Slave'—the great Russian dance symbolic of the liberation and spiritual freedom of a nation—I saw in these prim Boston faces a gleam of undertanding of my message. I saw tears in the faded eyes of gray-haired women, and the flush of enthusiasm on the cheeks of young men and girls.

"And so, in the exuberance of my joy that they had understood, I cried out to them that they were free!

"I waved my red scarf above my head. I told them that their life as they lived it was unreal. I shouted to them to look up, and see the dawn of a new freedom.

"And they were with me! They cheered and clapped. Their enthusiasm surged across the foot-which horrified her critics, was due to a "mismanagement of garments."

"But I don't care!" she briskly added. "A mere disarrangement of a garment means nothing. Why should I care what part of my body I reveal? Why is one part more evil than another? It is not all—body and soul—an instrument through which the artist expresses his inner message of beauty?

"I don't think they really were shocked; except, of course, the critics. I can't understand that attitude. It is mere vulgarity that makes one part of the body more suggestive than another.

"The body is beautiful. It is real, true, untrammeled. It should arouse, nor horror, but reverence. That is the distinction between vulgarity and art. For the artist places his whole being—body and soul and mind—on the throne of art.

"When I dance, I use my body as a musician uses his instrument, as a painter his brush and palette, as a poet the images of his mind. It does not dawn on me to swathe myself with hampering garments, to bind my limbs and drape my throat. For am I not striving to fuse soul and body in one unified image of beauty?

REVERENCE, NOT VULGARITY

"When I dance, I do not strive to suggest vulgarity, but to inspire reverence. There are dancers right here in Boston, with more clothes on than I, perhaps, but with only one object: to appeal to the lowest instincts of mankind.

"These dancers are vulgar because they conceal and do not reveal. They would be much less suggestive if they were nude. And yet they are allowed to perform because they satisfy the Puritan instinct for concealed lust.

"That is the disease which in-

Waves Red Veil and Shouts, "I'm a Red!"

Closes Engagement Here With Sensational "Back to Nature" Exhibition That Makes Crowd Gasp

Waving aloft a flaming red scarf, which but a few minutes before had been part of her scanty costume, Isadore Duncan, originator of the modern classical dance and advocate of "world love," yesterday shouted, "This is red; that is what I am. Don't let them tame you."

The scene which many designated as the most sensational that ever occurred in Symphony Hall, occurred while Miss Duncan was giving an exhibition dance. Many of the audience, already shocked by her meagre costumes, were preparing to leave the hall when the dancer advanced to the footlights and waved the symbol of anarchy.

The Duncan performance of Friday evening when she appeared in exceptionally scant attire had received not a little publicity. A more or less expectant crowd filled the hall until standing room only remained.

IN SCANTY COSTUME.

Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 6 was the first number which caused gasps. Miss Duncan came on the stage almost en dishabille.

It was on the conclusion of this number that Miss Duncan created a remarkable scene.

She first discarded a light, clinging gown. A dark, transparent robe underneath, which parted at the slightest movement, was her sole remaining garment. In this she went through five minutes more of "classical" dancing, while her audience gasped and stared.

Her right breast was entirely bare, and when the side and footlights were raised, she made not the slightest move to cover her nudity. In their glare, she walked to the front of the stage. A few of the spectators applauded frantically.

An abbreviated red costume and a scarf of similar color clothed her in the next number, the "Marche Slave." It was on the conclusion of this dance that she stopped the orchestra, announcing she wished to make a few remarks.

She began by telling her listeners to be sure to read the latest work of Maxim Gorky acclaiming him "a real hero of the revolution."

"Gorky," she said, "refers to three kinds of people in this work—black, grey and red."

"YOU'RE NOT REAL."

"This is red. That is what I am," she cried, snatching the scarlet scarf from her shoulders and flaunting it in the face of her audience.

"Life here is not real. Those statues overhead are not real. Knock them down; they are not the statues of real Greek Gods. I could hardly dance here. America is wild. Don't let them tame you."

"Thank God the Boston critics don't like me. They like my copies. I give you something from my heart. I give you something real."

Concluding her volcanic oration, she announced that she and her husband were going to appear in Chicago, where they are billed to appear this week. The crowd left the hall, shocked and wondering why the police had not interfered with the wildest exhibition of "back to Nature" dancing that Boston has witnessed.

For remarkable interview with Miss Duncan see Page 13.

Adv 10/22

Theatres that sends dancers into retirement in early thirties. Trans Oct 23

Upon Chaikovsky's "Pathetic Symphony," or behind it, Isadora now set her sculptural posturings and would recall the ancient lightness, grace and loveliness of her dance. In the poses, more or less coordinated to the first, third and last movements of the Symphony, she disclosed clearly enough both the posibilities and the limitations of her new ways. Even with discoverable cuts, the music fills nearly forty minutes. Posturing thereto must, then, gain no little variety, lest it become monotonous. Now, monotony, a lack of variable and viable resource, was the shortcoming of Miss Duncan's dancing days. The very technique that she then professed to disdain would have suggested means that she much needed. Still more, did monotony beset her present posings upon a music in itself long drawn. Wearisome and meaningless to watch became her reiterated lifting of crossed arms; her insistent renewal of certain carriages of the head. Often she maintained a crouching posture, as in the first and the last movements, until it declined from formal beauty and emotional suggestion into a mere carven immobility. Similarly, in the syncopated waltz of the second movement, her effort to renew her young graces in the dance were as futile as they have been elsewhere outside the little pieces from Brahms The nymphs of Boucher whom now Miss Duncan much resembles in the body, may not skip and gambol even upon his golden canvases.

For offset, she did imagine and achieve occasional poses of truly sculpturesque beauty; while the transition from one to another was now and then as fluid as rippling water or as darting as quick flame. To the first movement, for example, she set posturings that clearly recalled the Wingless Victory of the Louvre, of a sudden given motion. As Mœnads strode on Greek relief or vase, so did she take shape and fire from Chaikovsky's mounting march. The crouched figure mantled in scarlet that she bowed over the Adagio at the beginning was a thing of static beauty; while akin was the black-clad figure that brooded over the final measures of despair. As vividly imagined in another vein was the dart of emotional life through Miss Duncan's form when the remembered melody wound out of the first movement, or the mounting in her of the frenzy of the march. Moreover, and contrary to her practice with Wagner, her self-sculpturing often answered to the rhythm, contour and emotional content of the music. So far at least, though within the limitations specified, may her new ways carry her.

Upon the other music of the afternoon Chaikovsky's "Slavic March," Miss Duncan less renewed these sculptural procedures than plied a more ordinary and obvious miming. She bowed and crouched and writhed to the sombre measures of the beginning like a moujik-like captive fettered in woe. As the music warmed, quickened, brightened, she was as that prisoner struggling into freedom, gaining it, exulting therein. As some said, Isadora was so mirroring her notion of Soviet Russia; but as she mimed to the "Slavic March" in exactly the same fashion when the Tsars sat firm in Petrograd, the analogy hardly holds. Any accomplished mime would do neither more nor less with so obviously graphic a music. If he were intelligent, he would also remember that few and far between are the dancers who can rise with grace from a crouched or a recumbent posture—a tenet of the dance, older than Vestris, which somehow, in these latter days, Isadora quite forgets.

H. T. P.

NEW ART FAILS TO IMPRESS

10/21

Post

Isadore Duncan Puzzles by Languor of Her Interpretations

BY OLIN DOWNES

Isadora Duncan, returning to Boston after a lapse of some years, interpreted by dancing and posturing various compositions of Wagner, last night in Symphony Hall. She was accompanied by a large orchestra, directed by Nahan Franko. She was beheld and applauded, in a rather straggling manner, by a large audience which watched her with some amazement, then turned each to his neighbor, and asked, "What do you think of it?"

A DIFFERENT DANCER

For this is not the Isadora Duncan of old. It is unnecessary to describe that artist, because we all know and we all give homage to her accomplishments and to the revolutionary effect of the dances for which she found inspiration in Greek art, and by which she altered the whole development of modern choreography. She embodied at once that which was joyous and noble, youthful and sculpturesque, in her dances.

Now Miss Duncan is not a mere dancer. She is a symbolistic interpretress of music. She interpreted last night the Ride of the Valkyries, Funeral March from Gotterdammerung, the Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde" and the Bacchanale from "Tannhauser." She also interpreted as an encore the short piece "Traume," which Wagner wrote as one of his sketches.

Not Much Action

Interpreting the Ride of the Valkyries, Miss Duncan stood on the stage, making gestures vaguely, signifying, as one supposes, freedom of the skies, the glory of motion, the joyous ride. What one actually saw was a woman in Greek-like garb, which Miss Duncan always wears, with something about the middle suggestive perhaps of the glint of mail on the body of the warrior woman, who seemed to have a limited number of gestures and ideas to guide her, who found herself alone on a big stage with no particular place to go.

The Valkyrie part of it was in the glorious figure of Isadora Duncan herself, who is by nature most nobly planned, who under this particular set of circumstances would have pleased the audience just as well if she had walked up and down the aisle and allowed everybody to gaze their fill.

Her Pupils Absent

Now and again, in the Funeral March, one caught the attitude, the line, the rhythm, of noble grief, but then it, too, was gone, and there were long stretches in which one was rather oblivious to the presence of Miss Duncan, who might, for all the effect she made, have been off the stage.

A composition of many minutes by Wagner is not, we believe, within the possibilities of a single choreographic interpreter. Wagner's music in words for scenery, costumes, the whole paraphernalia of the theatre. Probably this programme in its entirety would not have been attempted by Miss Duncan were it not for the fact that the high intelligence of the American immigration authorities, as we are informed, made it impossible to pursue her original plans in bringing over with her 20 of her best pupils, with whom she would probably have participated in ensembles, and dwelt less on her latest experiments in interpretation.

Something Lacking

There be may be the inception of a new and as yet misunderstood art in Miss Duncan's actions on the stage which she says there is. We cheerfully admit it. Either, however, the new ideas are not as potent and vital as Miss Duncan thinks, or she has not yet perfected them to the place where they carry over the footlights.

The interpretation of the "Liebestod" began with Miss Duncan lying prostrate on the stage and continued with various expressions of agony and grief, which sometimes edified, and more often made the beholder simply uncomfortable. Nor can it be said that in the Bacchanale there was the abandon and the resiliency of former days.

After most of the dances Miss Duncan remained on the stage to lamely sustained applause of the faithful. She stood for minutes before the footlights, forcing Mr. Franko repeatedy to shake her hand. Once she made the orchestra rise, although this gracious act was misplaced, for the orchestra had played wrechedly, with inexcusable slackness of attack, inaccuracy of intonation, and even, in familiar music, frequent fumbling and errors in entrances, with distressing effect.

We yield to none in our admiration for Miss Duncan's art in its original form. We cannot take this new manifestation very seriously. We think of the brutal comment of a low-browed outspoken being who sat near us: "Bunk!"

Isadora Duncan Brings New Educational Ideas

Isadora Duncan, world-famed exponent of the terpsichorean art, and her husband, Serge Yessinin. Miss Duncan will appear at Symphony hall Friday night.

In Boston with New Husband, Who Is a Symbol of New Russia, to Interest People in International School for Children

Traveler Oct 19

By KATHARINE LYONS

Isadora Duncan has arrived in Boston. At 8:15 last evening, accompanied by her young husband, Serge Alexandrovitch Essenine; a French maid and an interpreter, she registered at the Copley-Plaza, and at 8:30 she was surrounded by various representatives of Boston newspapers.

According to the titian, bobbed-haired "interpreter of life," the newspapers to date have failed in expressing her ideals as she would have them.

"I have faith in Boston's supreme mentality," she said smilingly, "and now hope I shall succeed in making myself clear."

HERE ON MISSION

"I have come to America on a mission—a new idea of education—an international school for children. I am not a dancer and I don't propose to teach dancing. I hate the theatre. I want to teach little children how to express spirit through the body as well as the brain. Most children have more intelligence than adults, but up to now they have been taught the routine of life. It is time to break the mould."

It was not easy for Miss Duncan to express in 10 or 20 minutes the views and ideas she has been spending a lifetime making. She does not call herself a "dancer." She is a "teacher of expression—the expression of life."

To make herself clear she pointed to the table in the middle of the room and said "there is more routine of life. A table in the middle of the room and in some homes the same books will be on the same table 10 years hence. Family life is a habit. Wives are a habit. Husbands are a habit. There must be an upheaval—an expression of a new life.

An so the internationally famous Isadora Duncan, having gained results and annexed a husband in Russia, has now come to America to interest us in her international school.

Attired in a black velvet gown with an orange and black silk scarf thrown about her shoulders, looking fatigued after a long train ride, she gave out her ideas between puffs of her cigarette. There were no red Russian boots that flopped about the ankles, but a neat pair of gray pumps that perfectly matched the gray silk stockings. No jewels of any kind adorned this woman, whose unconventional ideas of life have made her the talk of two continents—not even the wedding ring. But her husband was present, and she made him known as such—introducing him as "Serge—a symbol of the new Russia."

There is nothing extraordinary about Serge. He is not the long-haired poet one might expect to see, but a quiet, youthful individual with a wealth of blond locks, a neat looking gray business suit and cream-colored spats. He does not speak English, even to madame, but their interpreter came to the rescue of all concerned.

SERGE FINDS EXPRESSION

"There is a sample of the new Russia," said Isadora, proudly pointing to her husband of one year. It was understood that Serge had also found the expression of a new life and had expressed it through poetical genius. They have found something kindred. And in the great upheaval of Russia there would be others too, but what of America, France, England and these other countries who go on living in the same routine way that has been handed down to them for years and years?

If Isadora succeeds in her mission a new mode of living will be started, beginning with only 100 pupils in every country. The school will be for the rich and the poor—no class distinction. Children will be taught music, dancing and who knows—poetry—and a great international love. All shall work for ideals instead of personal gains.

Miss Duncan recalled the days when she originated the idea of barefoot dancing. "I told the young girls to throw off their shoes and clothes and let their bodies express their being," she said, "and it was thought shocking. But today they dance barefooted on the green, do they not?"

She spoke of her pupils in Russia and laid stress on their remarkable intelligence, claiming it to be the result of revolutionary parentage. Serge also gave forth views on his own country, explaining his confidence in the present government through his interpreter.

"Ask him what he thinks of our American girls," spoke up one of the reporters facetiously.

"Very handsome," was the reply.

He expressed wonder at the fox-trot craze in this country, and said "fox-trot" in English too.

"Why do Americans fox-trot all day?" he asked.

And Isadora answered him, claiming that our fox-trot was a drug of the brain—a vice!

"Ask him what he thinks of our prohibition law," said one of the reporters.

But Serge did not spend time on Ellis Island where he was suspected as an undesirable alien for nothing. He refused to answer on the grounds of fearing deportation.

Waves Red Veil and Shouts, "I'm a Red!"

Closes Engagement Here With Sensational "Back to Nature" Exhibition That Makes Crowd Gasp

Waving aloft a flaming red scarf, which but a few minutes before had been part of her scanty costume, Isadore Duncan, originator of the modern classical dance and advocate of "world love," yesterday shouted, "This is red; that is what I am. Don't let them tame you."

The scene which many designated as the most sensational that ever occurred in Symphony Hall, occurred while Miss Duncan was giving an exhibition dance. Many of the audience, already shocked by her meagre costumes, were preparing to leave the hall when the dancer advanced to the footlights and waved the symbol of anarchy.

The Duncan performance of Friday evening when she appeared in exceptionally scant attire had received not a little publicity. A more or less expectant crowd filled the hall until standing room only remained.

IN SCANTY COSTUME.

Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 6 was the first number which caused gasps. Miss Duncan came on the stage almost en dishabille.

It was on the conclusion of this number that Miss Duncan created a remarkable scene.

She first discarded a light, clinging gown. A dark, transparent robe underneath, which parted at the slightest movement, was her sole remaining garment. In this she went through five minutes more of "classical" dancing, while her audience gasped and stared.

Her right breast was entirely bare, and when the side and footlights were raised, she made not the slightest move to cover her nudity. In their glare, she walked to the front of the stage. A few of the spectators applauded frantically.

An abbreviated red costume and a scarf of similar color clothed her in the next number, the "Marche Slave." It was on the conclusion of this dance that she stopped the orchestra, announcing she wished to make a few remarks.

She began by telling her listeners to be sure to read the latest work of Maxim Gorky acclaiming him "a real hero of the revolution."

"Gorky," she said, "refers to three kinds of people in this work—black, grey and red."

"YOU'RE NOT REAL."

"This is red. That is what I am," she cried, snatching the scarlet scarf from her shoulders and flaunting it in the face of her audience.

"Life here is not real. Those statues overhead are not real. Knock them down; they are not the statues of real Greek Gods. I could hardly dance here. America is wild. Don't let them tame you."

"Thank God the Boston critics don't like me. They like my copies. I give you something from my heart. I give you something real."

Concluding her volcanic oration, she announced that she and her husband were going to appear in Chicago, where they are billed to appear this week. The crowd left the hall, shocked and wondering why the police had not interfered with the wildest exhibition of "back to Nature" dancing that Boston has witnessed.

For remarkable interview with Miss Duncan see Page 13.

Adv 10/22

Theatres that sends dancers into retirement in early thirties.

Trans Oct 23

Upon Chaikovsky's "Pathetic Symphony," or behind it, Isadora now set her sculptural posturings and would recall the ancient lightness, grace and loveliness of her dance. In the poses, more or less coordinated to the first, third and last movements of the Symphony, she disclosed clearly enough both the posibilities and the limitations of her new ways. Even with discoverable cuts, the music fills nearly forty minutes. Posturing thereto must, then, gain no little variety, lest it become monotonous. Now, monotony, a lack of variable and viable resource, was the shortcoming of Miss Duncan's dancing days. The very technique that she then professed to disdain would have suggested means that she much needed. Still more, did monotony beset her present posings upon a music in itself long drawn. Wearisome and meaningless to watch became her reiterated lifting of crossed arms; her insistent renewal of certain carriages of the head. Often she maintained a crouching posture, as in the first and the last movements, until it declined from formal beauty and emotional suggestion into a mere carven immobility. Similarly, in the syncopated waltz of the second movement, her effort to renew her young graces in the dance were as futile as they have been elsewhere outside the little pieces from Brahms The nymphs of Boucher whom now Miss Duncan much resembles in the body, may not skip and gambol even upon his golden canvases.

For offset, she did imagine and achieve occasional poses of truly sculpturesque beauty; while the transition from one to another was now and then as fluid as rippling water or as darting as quick flame. To the first movement, for example, she set posturings that clearly recalled the Wingless Victory of the Louvre, of a sudden given motion. As Mœnads strode on Greek relief or vase, so did she take shape and fire from Chaikovsky's mounting march. The crouched figure mantled in scarlet that she bowed over the Adagio at the beginning was a thing of static beauty; while akin was the black-clad figure that brooded over the final measures of despair. As vividly imagined in another vein was the dart of emotional life through Miss Duncan's form when the remembered melody wound out of the first movement, or the mounting in her of the frenzy of the march. Moreover, and contrary to her practice with Wagner, her self-sculpturing often answered to the rhythm, contour and emotional content of the music. So far at least, though within the limitations specified, may her new ways carry her.

Upon the other music of the afternoon Chaikovsky's "Slavic March." Miss Duncan less renewed these sculptural procedures than plied a more ordinary and obvious miming. She bowed and crouched and writhed to the sombre measures of the beginning like a moujik-like captive fettered in woe. As the music warmed, quickened, brightened, she was as that prisoner struggling into freedom, gaining it, exulting therein. As some said, Isadora was so mirroring her notion of Soviet Russia; but as she mimed to the "Slavic March" in exactly the same fashion when the Tsars sat firm in Petrograd, the analogy hardly holds. Any accomplished mime would do neither more nor less with so obviously graphic a music. If he were intelligent, he would also remember that few and far between are the dancers who can rise with grace from a crouched or a recumbent posture—a tenet of the dance, older than Vestris, which somehow, in these latter days, Isadora quite forgets. H. T. P.

NEW ART FAILS TO IMPRESS

10/21

Post

Isadore Duncan Puzzles by Languor of Her Interpretations

BY OLIN DOWNES

Isadora Duncan, returning to Boston after a lapse of some years, interpreted by dancing and posturing various compositions of Wagner, last night in Symphony Hall. She was accompanied by a large orchestra, directed by Nahan Franko. She was beheld and applauded, in a rather straggling manner, by a large audience which watched her with some amazement, then turned each to his neighbor, and asked, "What do you think of it?"

A DIFFERENT DANCER

For this is not the Isadora Duncan of old. It is unnecessary to describe that artist, because we all know and we all give homage to her accomplishments and to the revolutionary effect of the dances for which she found inspiration in Greek art, and by which she altered the whole development of modern choreography. She embodied at once that which was joyous and noble, youthful and sculpturesque, in her dances.

Now Miss Duncan is not a mere dancer. She is a symbolistic interpretress of music. She interpreted last night the Ride of the Valkyries, Funeral March from Gotterdammerung, the Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde" and the Bacchanale from "Tannhauser." She also interpreted as an encore the short piece "Traume," which Wagner wrote as one of his sketches.

Not Much Action

Interpreting the Ride of the Valkyries, Miss Duncan stood on the stage, making gestures vaguely, signifying, as one supposes, freedom of the skies, the glory of motion, the joyous ride. What one actually saw was a woman in Greek-like garb, which Miss Duncan always wears, with something about the middle suggestive perhaps of the glint of mail on the body of the warrior woman, who seemed to have a limited number of gestures and ideas to guide her, who found herself alone on a big stage with no particular place to go.

The Valkyrie part of it was in the glorious figure of Isadora Duncan herself, who is by nature most nobly planned, who under this particular set of circumstances would have pleased the audience just as well if she had walked up and down the aisle and allowed everybody to gaze their fill.

Her Pupils Absent

Now and again, in the Funeral March, one caught the attitude, the line, the rhythm, of noble grief, but then it, too, was gone, and there were long stretches in which one was rather oblivious to the presence of Miss Duncan, who might, for all the effect she made, have been off the stage.

A composition of many minutes by Wagner is not, we believe, within the possibilities of a single choreographic interpreter. Wagner's music in words for scenery, costumes, the whole paraphernalia of the theatre. Probably this programme in its entirety would not have been attempted by Miss Duncan were it not for the fact that the high intelligence of the American immigration authorities, as we are informed, made it impossible to pursue her original plans in bringing over with her 20 of her best pupils, with whom she would probably have participated in ensembles, and dwelt less on her latest experiments in interpretation.

Something Lacking

There be may be the inception of a new and as yet misunderstood art in Miss Duncan's actions on the stage which she says there is. We cheerfully admit it. Either, however, the new ideas are not as potent and vital as Miss Duncan thinks, or she has not yet perfected them to the place where they carry over the footlights.

The interpretation of the "Liebestod" began with Miss Duncan lying prostrate on the stage and continued with various expressions of agony and grief, which sometimes edified, and more often made the beholder simply uncomfortable. Nor can it be said that in the Bacchanale there was the abandon and the resiliency of former days.

After most of the dances Miss Duncan remained on the stage to lamely sustained applause of the faithful. She stood for minutes before the footlights, forcing Mr. Franko repeatedy to shake her hand. Once she made the orchestra rise, although this gracious act was misplaced, for the orchestra had played wrechedly, with inexcusable slackness of attack, inaccuracy of intonation, and even, in familiar music, frequent fumbling and errors in entrances, with distressing effect.

We yield to none in our admiration for Miss Duncan's art in its original form. We cannot take this new manifestation very seriously. We think of the brutal comment of a low-browed outspoken being who sat near us: "Bunk!"

Isadora Duncan Brings New Educational Ideas

Isadora Duncan, world-famed exponent of the terpsichorean art, and her husband, Serge Yessinin. Miss Duncan will appear at Symphony hall Friday night.

In Boston with New Husband, Who Is a Symbol of New Russia, to Interest People in International School for Children

Traveler Oct 19

By KATHARINE LYONS

Isadora Duncan has arrived in Boston. At 8:15 last evening, accompanied by her young husband, Serge Alexandrovitch Essenine; a French maid and an interpreter, she registered at the Copley-Plaza, and at 8:30 she was surrounded by various representatives of Boston newspapers.

According to the titian, bobbed-haired "interpreter of life," the newspapers to date have failed in expressing her ideals as she would have them.

"I have faith in Boston's supreme mentality," she said smilingly, "and now hope I shall succeed in making myself clear."

HERE ON MISSION

"I have come to America on a mission—a new idea of education—an international school for children. I am not a dancer and I don't propose to teach dancing. I hate the theatre. I want to teach little children how to express spirit through the body as well as the brain. Most children have more intelligence than adults, but up to now they have been taught the routine of life. It is time to break the mould."

It was not easy for Miss Duncan to express in 10 or 20 minutes the views and ideas she has been spending a lifetime making. She does not call herself a "dancer." She is a "teacher of expression—the expression of life."

To make herself clear she pointed to the table in the middle of the room and said "there is more routine of life. A table in the middle of the room and in some homes the same books will be on the same table 10 years hence. Family life is a habit. Wives are a habit. Husbands are a habit. There must be an upheaval—an expression of a new life.

An so the internationally famous Isadora Duncan, having gained results and annexed a husband in Russia, has now come to America to interest us in her international school.

Attired in a black velvet gown with an orange and black silk scarf thrown about her shoulders, looking fatigued after a long train ride, she gave out her ideas between puffs of her cigarette. There were no red Russian boots that flopped about the ankles, but a neat pair of gray pumps that perfectly matched the gray silk stockings. No jewels of any kind adorned this woman, whose unconventional ideas of life have made her the talk of two continents—not even the wedding ring. But her husband was present, and she made him known as such—introducing him as "Serge—a symbol of the new Russia."

There is nothing extraordinary about Serge. He is not the long-haired poet one might expect to see, but a quiet, youthful individual with a wealth of blond locks, a neat looking gray business suit and cream-colored spats. He does not speak English, even to madame, but their interpreter came to the rescue of all concerned.

SERGE FINDS EXPRESSION

"There is a sample of the new Russia," said Isadora, proudly pointing to her husband of one year. It was understood that Serge had also found the expression of a new life and had expressed it through poetical genius. They have found something kindred. And in the great upheaval of Russia there would be others too, but what of America, France, England and these other countries who go on living in the same routine way that has been handed down to them for years and years?

If Isadora succeeds in her mission a new mode of living will be started, beginning with only 100 pupils in every country. The school will be for the rich and the poor—no class distinction. Children will be taught music, dancing and who knows—poetry—and a great international love. All shall work for ideals instead of personal gains.

Miss Duncan recalled the days when she originated the idea of barefoot dancing. "I told the young girls to throw off their shoes and clothes and let their bodies express their being," she said, "and it was thought shocking. But today they dance barefooted on the green, do they not?"

She spoke of her pupils in Russia and laid stress on their remarkable intelligence, claiming it to be the result of revolutionary parentage. Serge also gave forth views on his own country, explaining his confidence in the present government through his interpreter.

"Ask him what he thinks of our American girls," spoke up one of the reporters facetiously.

"Very handsome," was the reply.

He expressed wonder at the fox-trot craze in this country, and said "fox-trot" in English too.

"Why do Americans fox-trot all day?" he asked.

And Isadora answered him, claiming that our fox-trot was a drug of the brain—a vice!

"Ask him what he thinks of our prohibition law," said one of the reporters.

But Serge did not spend time on Ellis Island where he was suspected as an undesirable alien for nothing. He refused to answer on the grounds of fearing deportation.

Isadora Duncan Brings New Educational Ideas

Isadora Duncan, world-famed exponent of the terpsichorean art, and her husband, Serge Yessinin. Miss Duncan will appear at Symphony hall Friday night.

In Boston with New Husband, Who Is a Symbol of New Russia, to Interest People in International School for Children

Traveler Oct 19

By KATHARINE LYONS

Isadora Duncan has arrived in Boston. At 8:15 last evening, accompanied by her young husband, Serge Alexandrovitch Essenine; a French maid and an interpreter, she registered at the Copley-Plaza, and at 8:30 she was surrounded by various representatives of Boston newspapers.

According to the titian, bobbed-haired "interpreter of life," the newspapers to date have failed in expressing her ideals as she would have them.

"I have faith in Boston's supreme mentality," she said smilingly, "and now hope I shall succeed in making myself clear."

HERE ON MISSION

"I have come to America on a mission—a new idea of education—an international school for children. I am not a dancer and I don't propose to teach dancing. I hate the theatre. I want to teach little children how to express spirit through the body as well as the brain. Most children have more intelligence than adults, but up to now they have been taught the routine of life. It is time to break the mould."

It was not easy for Miss Duncan to express in 10 or 20 minutes the views and ideas she has been spending a lifetime making. She does not call herself a "dancer." She is a "teacher of expression—the expression of life."

To make herself clear she pointed to the table in the middle of the room and said "there is more routine of life. A table in the middle of the room and in some homes the same books will be on the same table 10 years hence. Family life is a habit. Wives are a habit. Husbands are a habit. There must be an upheaval—an expression of a new life.

An so the internationally famous Isadora Duncan, having gained results and annexed a husband in Russia, has now come to America to interest us in her international school.

Attired in a black velvet gown with an orange and black silk scarf thrown about her shoulders, looking fatigued after a long train ride, she gave out her ideas between puffs of her cigarette. There were no red Russian boots that flopped about the ankles, but a neat pair of gray pumps that perfectly matched the gray silk stockings. No jewels of any kind adorned this woman, whose unconventional ideas of life have made her the talk of two continents—not even the wedding ring. But her husband was present, and she made him known as such—introducing him as "Serge—a symbol of the new Russia."

There is nothing extraordinary about Serge. He is not the long-haired poet one might expect to see, but a quiet, youthful individual with a wealth of blond locks, a neat looking gray business suit and cream-colored spats. He does not speak English, even to madame, but their interpreter came to the rescue of all concerned.

SERGE FINDS EXPRESSION

"There is a sample of the new Russia," said Isadora, proudly pointing to her husband of one year. It was understood that Serge had also found the expression of a new life and had expressed it through poetical genius. They have found something kindred. And in the great upheaval of Russia there would be others too, but what of America, France, England and these other countries who go on living in the same routine way that has been handed down to them for years and years?

If Isadora succeeds in her mission a new mode of living will be started, beginning with only 100 pupils in every country. The school will be for the rich and the poor—no class distinction. Children will be taught music, dancing and who knows—poetry—and a great international love. All shall work for ideals instead of personal gains.

Miss Duncan recalled the days when she originated the idea of barefoot dancing. "I told the young girls to throw off their shoes and clothes and let their bodies express their being," she said, "and it was thought shocking. But today they dance barefooted on the green, do they not?"

She spoke of her pupils in Russia and laid stress on their remarkable intelligence, claiming it to be the result of revolutionary parentage. Serge also gave forth views on his own country, explaining his confidence in the present government through his interpreter.

"Ask him what he thinks of our American girls," spoke up one of the reporters facetiously.

"Very handsome," was the reply.

He expressed wonder at the fox-trot craze in this country, and said "fox-trot" in English too.

"Why do Americans fox-trot all day?" he asked.

And Isadora answered him, claiming that our fox-trot was a drug of the brain—a vice!

"Ask him what he thinks of our prohibition law," said one of the reporters.

But Serge did not spend time on Ellis Island where he was suspected as an undesirable alien for nothing. He refused to answer on the grounds of fearing deportation.

Theatres that sends dancers into retirement in early thirties.

Trans Oct 23

Upon Chaikovsky's "Pathetic Symphony," or behind it, Isadora now set her sculptural posturings and would recall the ancient lightness, grace and loveliness of her dance. In the poses, more or less coordinated to the first, third and last movements of the Symphony, she disclosed clearly enough both the posibilities and the limitations of her new ways. Even with discoverable cuts, the music fills nearly forty minutes. Posturing thereto must, then, gain no little variety, lest it become monotonous. Now, monotony, a lack of variable and viable resource, was the short-coming of Miss Duncan's dancing days. The very technique that she then professed to disdain would have suggested means that she much needed. Still more, did monotony beset her present posings upon a music in itself long drawn. Wearisome and meaningless to watch became her reiterated lifting of crossed arms; her insistent renewal of certain carriages of the head. Often she maintained a crouching posture, as in the first and the last movements, until it declined from formal beauty and emotional suggestion into a mere carven immobility. Similarly, in the syncopated waltz of the second movement, her effort to renew her young graces in the dance were as futile as they have been elsewhere outside the little pieces from Brahms The nymphs of Boucher whom now Miss Duncan much resembles in the body, may not skip and gambol even upon his golden canvases.

For offset, she did imagine and achieve occasional poses of truly sculpturesque beauty; while the transition from one to another was now and then as fluid as rippling water or as darting as quick flame. To the first movement, for example, she set posturings that clearly recalled the Wingless Victory of the Louvre, of a sudden given motion. As Mœnads strode on Greek relief or vase, so did she take shape and fire from Chaikovsky's mounting march. The crouched figure mantled in scarlet that she bowed over the Adagio at the beginning was a thing of static beauty; while akin was the black-clad figure that brooded over the final measures of despair. As vividly imagined in another vein was the dart of emotional life through Miss Duncan's form when the remembered melody wound out of the first movement, or the mounting in her of the frenzy of the march. Moreover, and contrary to her practice with Wagner, her self-sculpturing often answered to the rhythm, contour and emotional content of the music. So far at least, though within the limitations specified, may her new ways carry her.

Upon the other music of the afternoon Chaikovsky's "Slavic March." Miss Duncan less renewed these sculptural pro cedures than plied a more ordinary and ob vious miming. She bowed and crouched and writhed to the sombre measures of the beginning like a moujik-like captive fettered in woe. As the music warmed, quickened, brightened, she was as that prisoner struggling into freedom, gaining it, exulting therein. As some said, Isadora was so mirroring her notion of Soviet Russia; but as she mimed to the "Slavic March" in exactly the same fashion when the Tsars sat firm in Petrograd, the analogy hardly holds. Any accomplished mime would do neither more nor less with so obviously graphic a music. If he were intelligent, he would also remember that few and far between are the dancers who can rise with grace from a crouched or a recumbent posture—a tenet of the dance, older than Vestris, which somehow, in these latter days, Isadora quite forgets.

H. T. P.

NEW ART FAILS TO IMPRESS

10/21

Post

Isadore Duncan Puzzles by Languor of Her Interpretations

BY OLIN DOWNES

Isadora Duncan, returning to Boston after a lapse of some years, interpreted by dancing and posturing various compositions of Wagner, last night in Symphony Hall. She was accompanied by a large orchestra, directed by Nahan Franko. She was beheld and applauded, in a rather straggling manner, by a large audience which watched her with some amazement, then turned each to his neighbor, and asked, "What do you think of it?"

A DIFFERENT DANCER

For this is not the Isadora Duncan of old. It is unnecessary to describe that artist, because we all know and we all give homage to her accomplishments and to the revolutionary effect of the dances for which she found inspiration in Greek art, and by which she altered the whole development of modern choreography. She embodied at once that which was joyous and noble, youthful and sculpturesque, in her dances.

Now Miss Duncan is not a mere dancer. She is a symbolistic interpretress of music. She interpreted last night the Ride of the Valkyries, Funeral March from Gotterdammerung, the Prelude and Liebestod from "Tristan and Isolde" and the Bacchanale from "Tannhauser." She also interpreted as an encore the short piece "Traume," which Wagner wrote as one of his sketches.

Not Much Action

Interpreting the Ride of the Valkyries, Miss Duncan stood on the stage, making gestures vaguely, signifying, as one supposes, freedom of the skies, the glory of motion, the joyous ride. What one actually saw was a woman in Greek-like garb, which Miss Duncan always wears, with something about the middle suggestive perhaps of the glint of mail on the body of the warrior woman, who seemed to have a limited number of gestures and ideas to guide her, who found herself alone on a big stage with no particular place to go.

The Valkyrie part of it was in the glorious figure of Isadora Duncan herself, who is by nature most nobly planned, who under this particular set of circumstances would have pleased the audience just as well if she had walked up and down the aisle and allowed everybody to gaze their fill.

Her Pupils Absent

Now and again, in the Funeral March, one caught the attitude, the line, the rhythm, of noble grief, but then it, too, was gone, and there were long stretches in which one was rather oblivious to the presence of Miss Duncan, who might, for all the effect she made, have been off the stage.

A composition of many minutes by Wagner is not, we believe, within the possibilities of a single choreographic interpreter. Wagner's music in words for scenery, costumes, the whole paraphernalia of the theatre. Probably this programme in its entirety would not have been attempted by Miss Duncan were it not for the fact that the high intelligence of the American immigration authorities, as we are informed, made it impossible to pursue her original plans in bringing over with her 20 of her best pupils, with whom she would probably have participated in ensembles, and dwelt less on her latest experiments in interpretation.

Something Lacking

There be may be the inception of a new and as yet misunderstood art in Miss Duncan's actions on the stage which she says there is. We cheerfully admit it. Either, however, the new ideas are not as potent and vital as Miss Duncan thinks, or she has not yet perfected them to the place where they carry over the footlights.

The interpretation of the "Liebestod" began with Miss Duncan lying prostrate on the stage and continued with various expressions of agony and grief, which sometimes edified, and more often made the beholder simply uncomfortable. Nor can it be said that in the Bacchanale there was the abandon and the resiliency of former days.

After most of the dances Miss Duncan remained on the stage to lamely sustained applause of the faithful. She stood for minutes before the footlights, forcing Mr. Franko repeatedy to shake her hand. Once she made the orchestra rise, although this gracious act was misplaced, for the orchestra had played wrechedly, with inexcusable slackness of attack, inaccuracy of intonation, and even, in familiar music, frequent fumbling and errors in entrances, with distressing effect.

We yield to none in our admiration for Miss Duncan's art in its original form. We cannot take this new manifestation very seriously. We think of the brutal comment of a low-browed outspoken being who sat near us: "Bunk!"

Waves Red Veil and Shouts, "I'm a Red!"

Closes Engagement Here With Sensational "Back to Nature" Exhibition That Makes Crowd Gasp

Waving aloft a flaming red scarf, which but a few minutes before had been part of her scanty costume, Isadore Duncan, originator of the modern classical dance and advocate of "world love," yesterday shouted, "This is red; that is what I am. Don't let them tame you."

The scene which many designated as the most sensational that ever occurred in Symphony Hall, occurred while Miss Duncan was giving an exhibition dance. Many of the audience, already shocked by her meagre costumes, were preparing to leave the hall when the dancer advanced to the footlights and waved the symbol of anarchy.

The Duncan performance of Friday evening when she appeared in exceptionally scant attire had received not a little publicity. A more or less expectant crowd filled the hall until standing room only remained.

IN SCANTY COSTUME.

Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 6 was the first number which caused gasps. Miss Duncan came on the stage almost en dishabille.

It was on the conclusion of this number that Miss Duncan created a remarkable scene.

She first discarded a light, clinging gown. A dark, transparent robe underneath, which parted at the slightest movement, was her sole remaining garment. In this she went through five minutes more of "classical" dancing, while her audience gasped and stared.

Her right breast was entirely bare, and when the side and footlights were raised, she made not the slightest move to cover her nudity. In their glare, she walked to the front of the stage. A few of the spectators applauded frantically.

An abbreviated red costume and a scarf of similar color clothed her in the next number, the "Marche Slave." It was on the conclusion of this dance that she stopped the orchestra, announcing she wished to make a few remarks.

She began by telling her listeners to be sure to read the latest work of Maxim Gorky acclaiming him "a real hero of the revolution."

"Gorky," she said, "refers to three kinds of people in this work—black, grey and red."

"YOU'RE NOT REAL."

"This is red. That is what I am," she cried, snatching the scarlet scarf from her shoulders and flaunting it in the face of her audience.

"Life here is not real. Those statues overhead are not real. Knock them down; they are not the statues of real Greek Gods. I could hardly dance here. America is wild. Don't let them tame you."

"Thank God the Boston critics don't like me. They like my copies. I give you something from my heart. I give you something real."

Concluding her volcanic oration, she announced that she and her husband were going to appear in Chicago, where they are billed to appear this week. The crowd left the hall, shocked and wondering why the police had not interfered with the wildest exhibition of "back to Nature" dancing that Boston has witnessed.

For remarkable interview with Miss Duncan see Page 13.

Adv 10/22

SCULPTURAL ISADORA

IER PRESENT SUBSTITUTE FOR THE DANCE

Poses, Gestures, Play of Face as Sculptress Upon Herself. Seeking. Gaining. Missing an Abstract Beauty, Quite Apart from the Form and Content of the Music—Rarely Return the Old Litheness, Suppleness, Freedoms—A Well Ordered and Rounded Evening

AS the years mount and Isalora's visits to the United States become fewer, she waxes in consideration for the assembled spectators, in care and pains for seemly surroundings. Returning to Boston at Symphony Hall last evening after longer absence than it were courteous to reckon, she taxed the company with no long and arrogant "waits" after the manner of dancers and mimes who may go nameless. She fulfilled every stipulation of the programme in the order announced; while she even added three extra dances, with no mock-evasion of such necessities, but with every sign of unaffected good will. Within the longets recollection, the stage of Symphony Hall has not been so well arranged for the dance, so pleasingly adapted to the watching eye. A proscenium of agreeable line and neutral hue framed it as a whole, framed also the inset recess of dark green hangings wherein Miss Duncan stood or moved. Since she danced unassisted save by the accompanying orchestra, and since she oftener posed in sculpturesque lines than save free rein to motion the enclosure in no wise lessened her freedom or the illusion upon the spectators. Out of long experience she has devised unobtrusive lights that unfailingly do their office—rare good fortune on such occasions—to wit, the shrouding of Isadora in variously tinted hazes or the clothing of her in a softly luminous brightness.

In turn, the assisting orchestra, although gathered for the occasion, was large enough to make the music of Wagner (which filled the evening) sound sufficiently, if not with manifold operatic and symphonic sonorities. No band, clustered on the floor of a hall beside a stage could probably gain them. This orchestra was also expert and supple enough to give the chosen pieces characteristic, if often halting voice. Mr. Nahan Franko lead it ably, resourcefully, whether it were playing by itself as in the Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Tristan," the Overture to "Tannhäuser" and the closing measures of "Das Rheingold," or whether—a much more exacting task—it was accompanying Isadora in her Wagnerian numbers and failing to keep pace with her. Since the fragment of "Das Rheingold" is largely music of the scene, before unveiled settings and visible action—the outflinging of the rainbow bridge, the risen walls of Valhalla, the intervention of the Rhine-Maidens and the march of the gods toward their cloud-capped towers—the music can never achieve full significance in the concert-hall. Yet it is so rarely played in Boston, it touches so often a moment of power or a moment of beauty that the audience heard it gladly.

Finally and happily, Miss Duncan was in no mood for disquisition, either upon the training of youth or the ordering of the political and the æsthetic State. For once, she seemed to believe that dancers, like good children, should be seen and not hard. Mr. Shaw, as every one knows, has deduced a whole social philosophy from Wagner's texts and music. Isadora hazarded no such pastime, remembering, perhaps, that while Mr. Shaw is unimportant to the eye, he often engages and titillates the ear. Not since her earliest days in Boston has Miss Duncan appeared in such seemly and auspicious circumstance. Undistracted, unannoyed, the spectators could follow their interest or their pleasure in the dance—or in Isadora's present substitutes for it. Applause testified to their satisfaction; while in one respect, as audiences go in Boston, the assembly was singular. For once, a distinctively youthful company filled Symphony Hall.

Miss Duncan, who is frank enough about tell-tale dates, is no longer a young woman except in the bright-eyed wistfulness, the half-eager and half-waiting smile that, under the lights of the stage, still haunt her face. Miss Duncan, as always, is likewise fertile in theories of the dance—theories, a cynic might say, that fructify in the practice of her mounting years. In a sense, then, Isadora no longer dances—or dances only after the work of the evening has made her anew free-motioned and supple. So, for easy analogy, a singer at odds of spirit with relentless time, "limbers up" her voice until at the end of a concert she is again capable of highly ornate and elastic music. Similarly as extra numbers, at the close of the appointed programme, Miss Duncan danced—in the full sense of the word—to the light, flowing measures of two waltzes by Brahms—if recollection holds, exercises from the earliest days of her grace, charm and fancy. She not only renewed these qualities, but in light, elastic, finely modulated motion followed the contours, inflection and rhythm of the music.

When, however, in the preceding piece, the so-called "Bacchanale" from "Tannhäuser," Miss Duncan sought to gain the arrow-like swiftness, the dartings and the the joyous wildness, the exultant beauty of those earlier years, she was far from corybantic. By thought and effort she would summon anew the lithe lightness of old; but the merciless years have perceptibly stiffened it. They halt no less the fine freedom of motion from those other days, when she would ply it afresh to the music of the riding Valkyrs. Even the vivid life of that outflung pose and motion of joy—now part of the working capital of every dancer the world around—no longer vibrates upon air and eye. Eagerness, though it still burn white in Isadora with thought and will to blow the flame, may no longer enkindle a body loth to light, swift, instantly supple motion.

So it is that, nowadays, Miss Duncan most engrosses the eye and quickens the imagination when she is semi-static; most achieves beauty when she seeks it, so to say, in sculptured pose and gesture, in surface and plane, rather than in movement. In her earliest days, no one seems to remember that sculptors strewed her with praise; whereas in these later years the Bourdelles of France and the Barnards of America vie in enthusiasms for her. The reason is not far to seek. Isadora is ceasing, inevitably, to be a dancer in the sense of vivid motion. Instead, she is becoming sculptress, while the medium upon which she works is her own body, her own mantling raiment. For Miss Duncan no longer arrays herself in a few scarves of flying chiffon. Oftener than not last evening, she was clothed from head to foot in far-flung veils and mantles that she might set them flowing in curves and lay plane against or upon plane. Becoming sculptural, she becomes also more independent of the music. More than once yesterday, it was hard to discover its office, except as glamor to listening ears, while she herself held watchings eyes.

For fullest example of these new theories and procedures consider Isadora's present version—to use a convenient term—of the music in "Götterdämmerung" that mourns and exalts the dead Siegfried. She does not translate it as music into another medium, since her poses, gestures and facial play little heed its contours, inflections and rhythm. No more does she suggest by any of the means of miming, the poetic content, in the common phrase, of this music—the pity and fate of the pair that bore the hero, the glory of his deeds in life, the doom overtaking him, a world bereft and mourning, clangorous in wild lament. The music sounds; upon the stage stands Miss Duncan in the vesture, the visage, the carriage of grief. The music proceeds and her body flows from pose to pose of deep lament and stricken woe. Her glance is attuned to them. The music ends; Isadora quits the stage; while the only memory that lingers is of mourning translated into sculptural beauty, of deep grief transmuted into line, plane and mass—all upon the face and the body, in the attitudes and gestures, of her who would so carve them. In a word, Isadora would be masterful and imaginative sculptress, moving those who look upon her handiwork. And the medium of this sculptress is the whole surface of her body, as the spirit within may shape it.

Like-minded was Miss Duncan when the orchestra played the music of Wotan's warrior-maidens, riding the skies above the battles. Everyone knows these clashes and clangors; whirling, rushing figures; wild sweeps and wilder reiterations. Yet in Miss Duncan's poses, gestures, glance there was no discoverable implication of these things. With a music ringing with motion upon every ear, statically she stood in the centre of the stage, posing from sculptural beauty to sculptural beauty, as her imagination curved the surfaces of mantle and body, lining in accord the face above. Such beauty as she gained was altogether abstract—sculpture upon herself, quite apart from a music that in itself visualizes.

When, moreover, Miss Duncan passed to the soliloquy of the transfigured Isolde over the dead Tristan, in the sunset, by the empty sea, among the ruins upon the tumbling terrace of this castle of life and longing and fate, she seemed even to miss this abstract, sculptural beauty. Isolde broods mournfully, yet resignedly—not in Isadora's constricted poses and gorgon-like visage. Isolde illumined, sees the heavens opened and therein felicity for aye and endless. And the glory of the vision suffuses and overwhelms her in a music that, for three generations men have agreed, is of more than mortal penning. Was there so much as hint of this transfiguration in Miss Duncan's self-sculpture? Had it even an abstract beauty of its own?

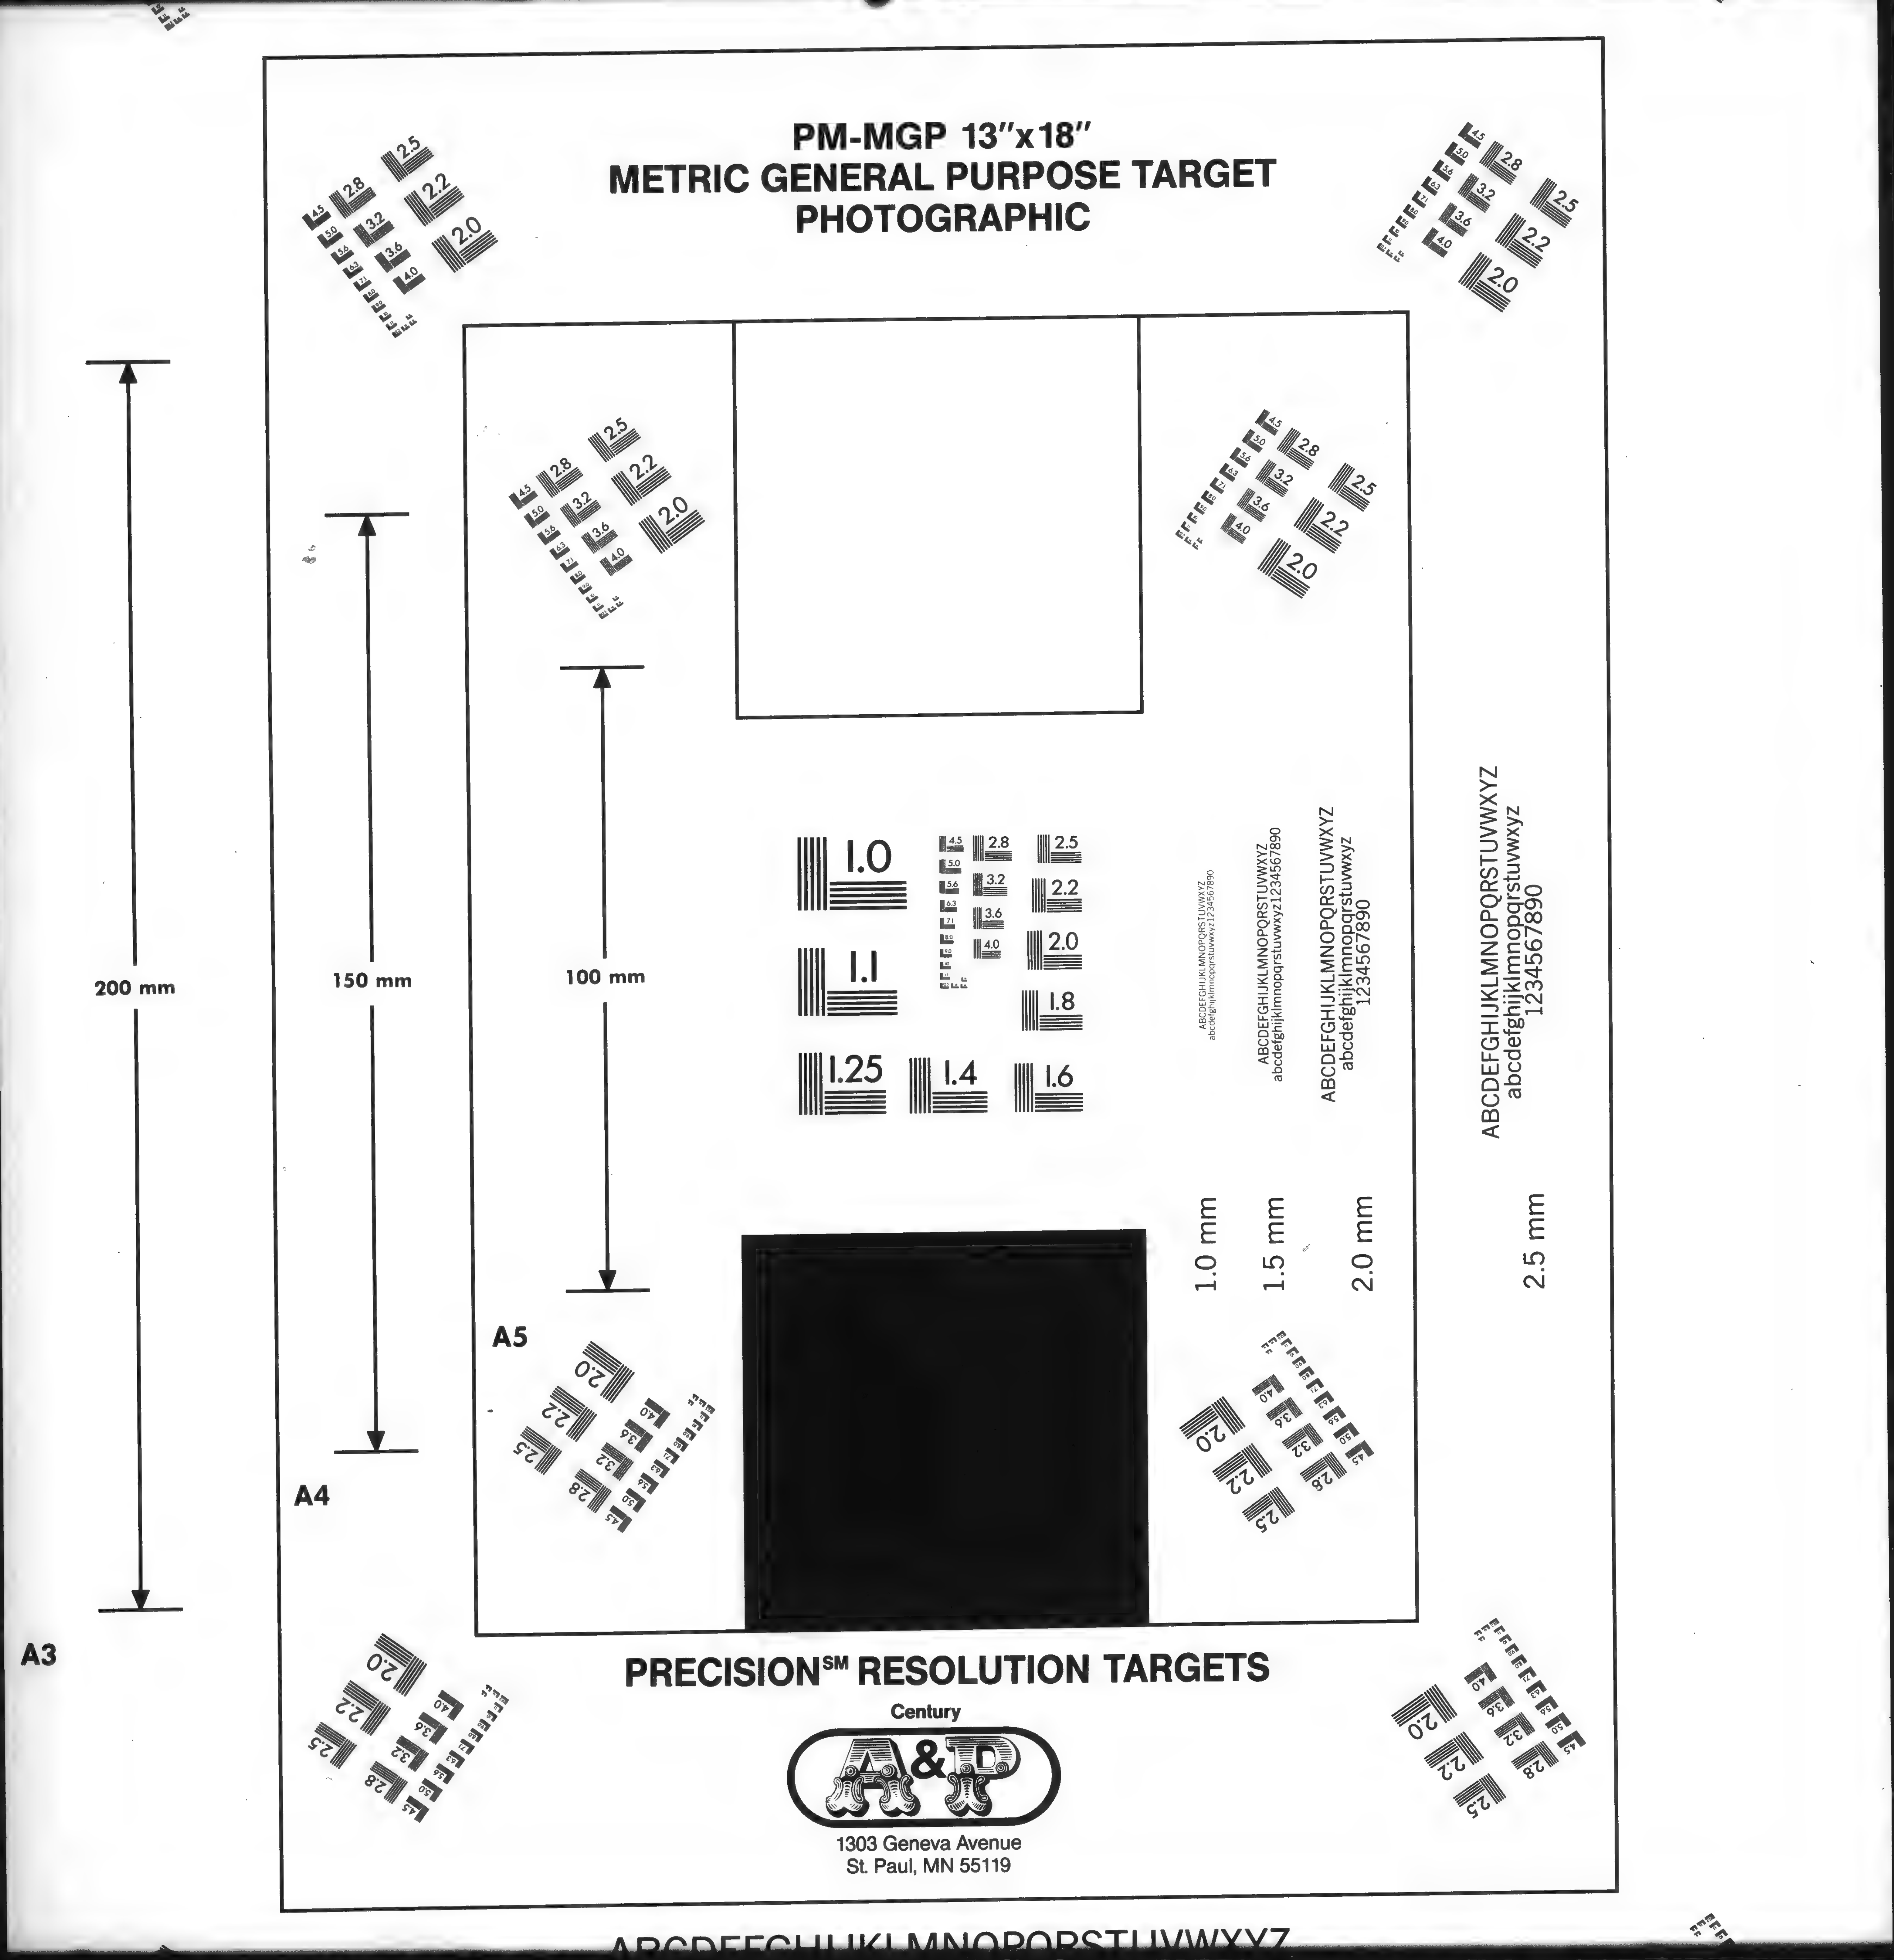
H. T. P

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A5
A4
A3
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

CENSOR TO BAR ISADORA DUNCAN HENCEFORTH FROM BOSTON

Censor 10-22

DANCER ON WAY WEST TO TEST CHICAGO "CULTURE"

Isadora Duncan, classic dancer, who used such a liberal portion of her costume in a flag-waving stunt at Symphony Hall last week that she shocked the audience, will not be allowed to appear in Boston again.

Reports have it that Mayor Curley and his censors will put the ban on further exhibitions of the temperamental star in this city. Her startling remarks and her even more startling costume—or lack of it—were apparently too much for official Boston.

Miss Duncan, "disgusted" at the reception she was accorded here, has left for Chicago. And if the Westerners don't treat her any better than the Bostonians, she said, she will quit her tour abruptly.

The climax to her Boston appearance came when she ran to the front of the stage, delivered a speech of Bolshviki tendencies, and punctuated her remarks by waving a red scarf that a moment before had formed a substantial portion of her not too substantial costume.

"DANCES NOT VULGAR."

To a Boston American reporter the dancer indignantly asserted that this lack of clothes was nothing that should cause criticism.

"A woman appearing in the nude is not vulgar or suggestive," she said. "Is there anything suggestive in my dancing? Just because I appear in some of the dances with little or nothing on, the populace apparently think I should be made to wear more clothes.

"If the critics of Boston had followed my history for the past twenty-six years they would see that I have always advocated freedom of the body. I was the first to dance barefooted. Now the people are learning that the foot is just as beautiful as the hands or eyes or any other part of the body.

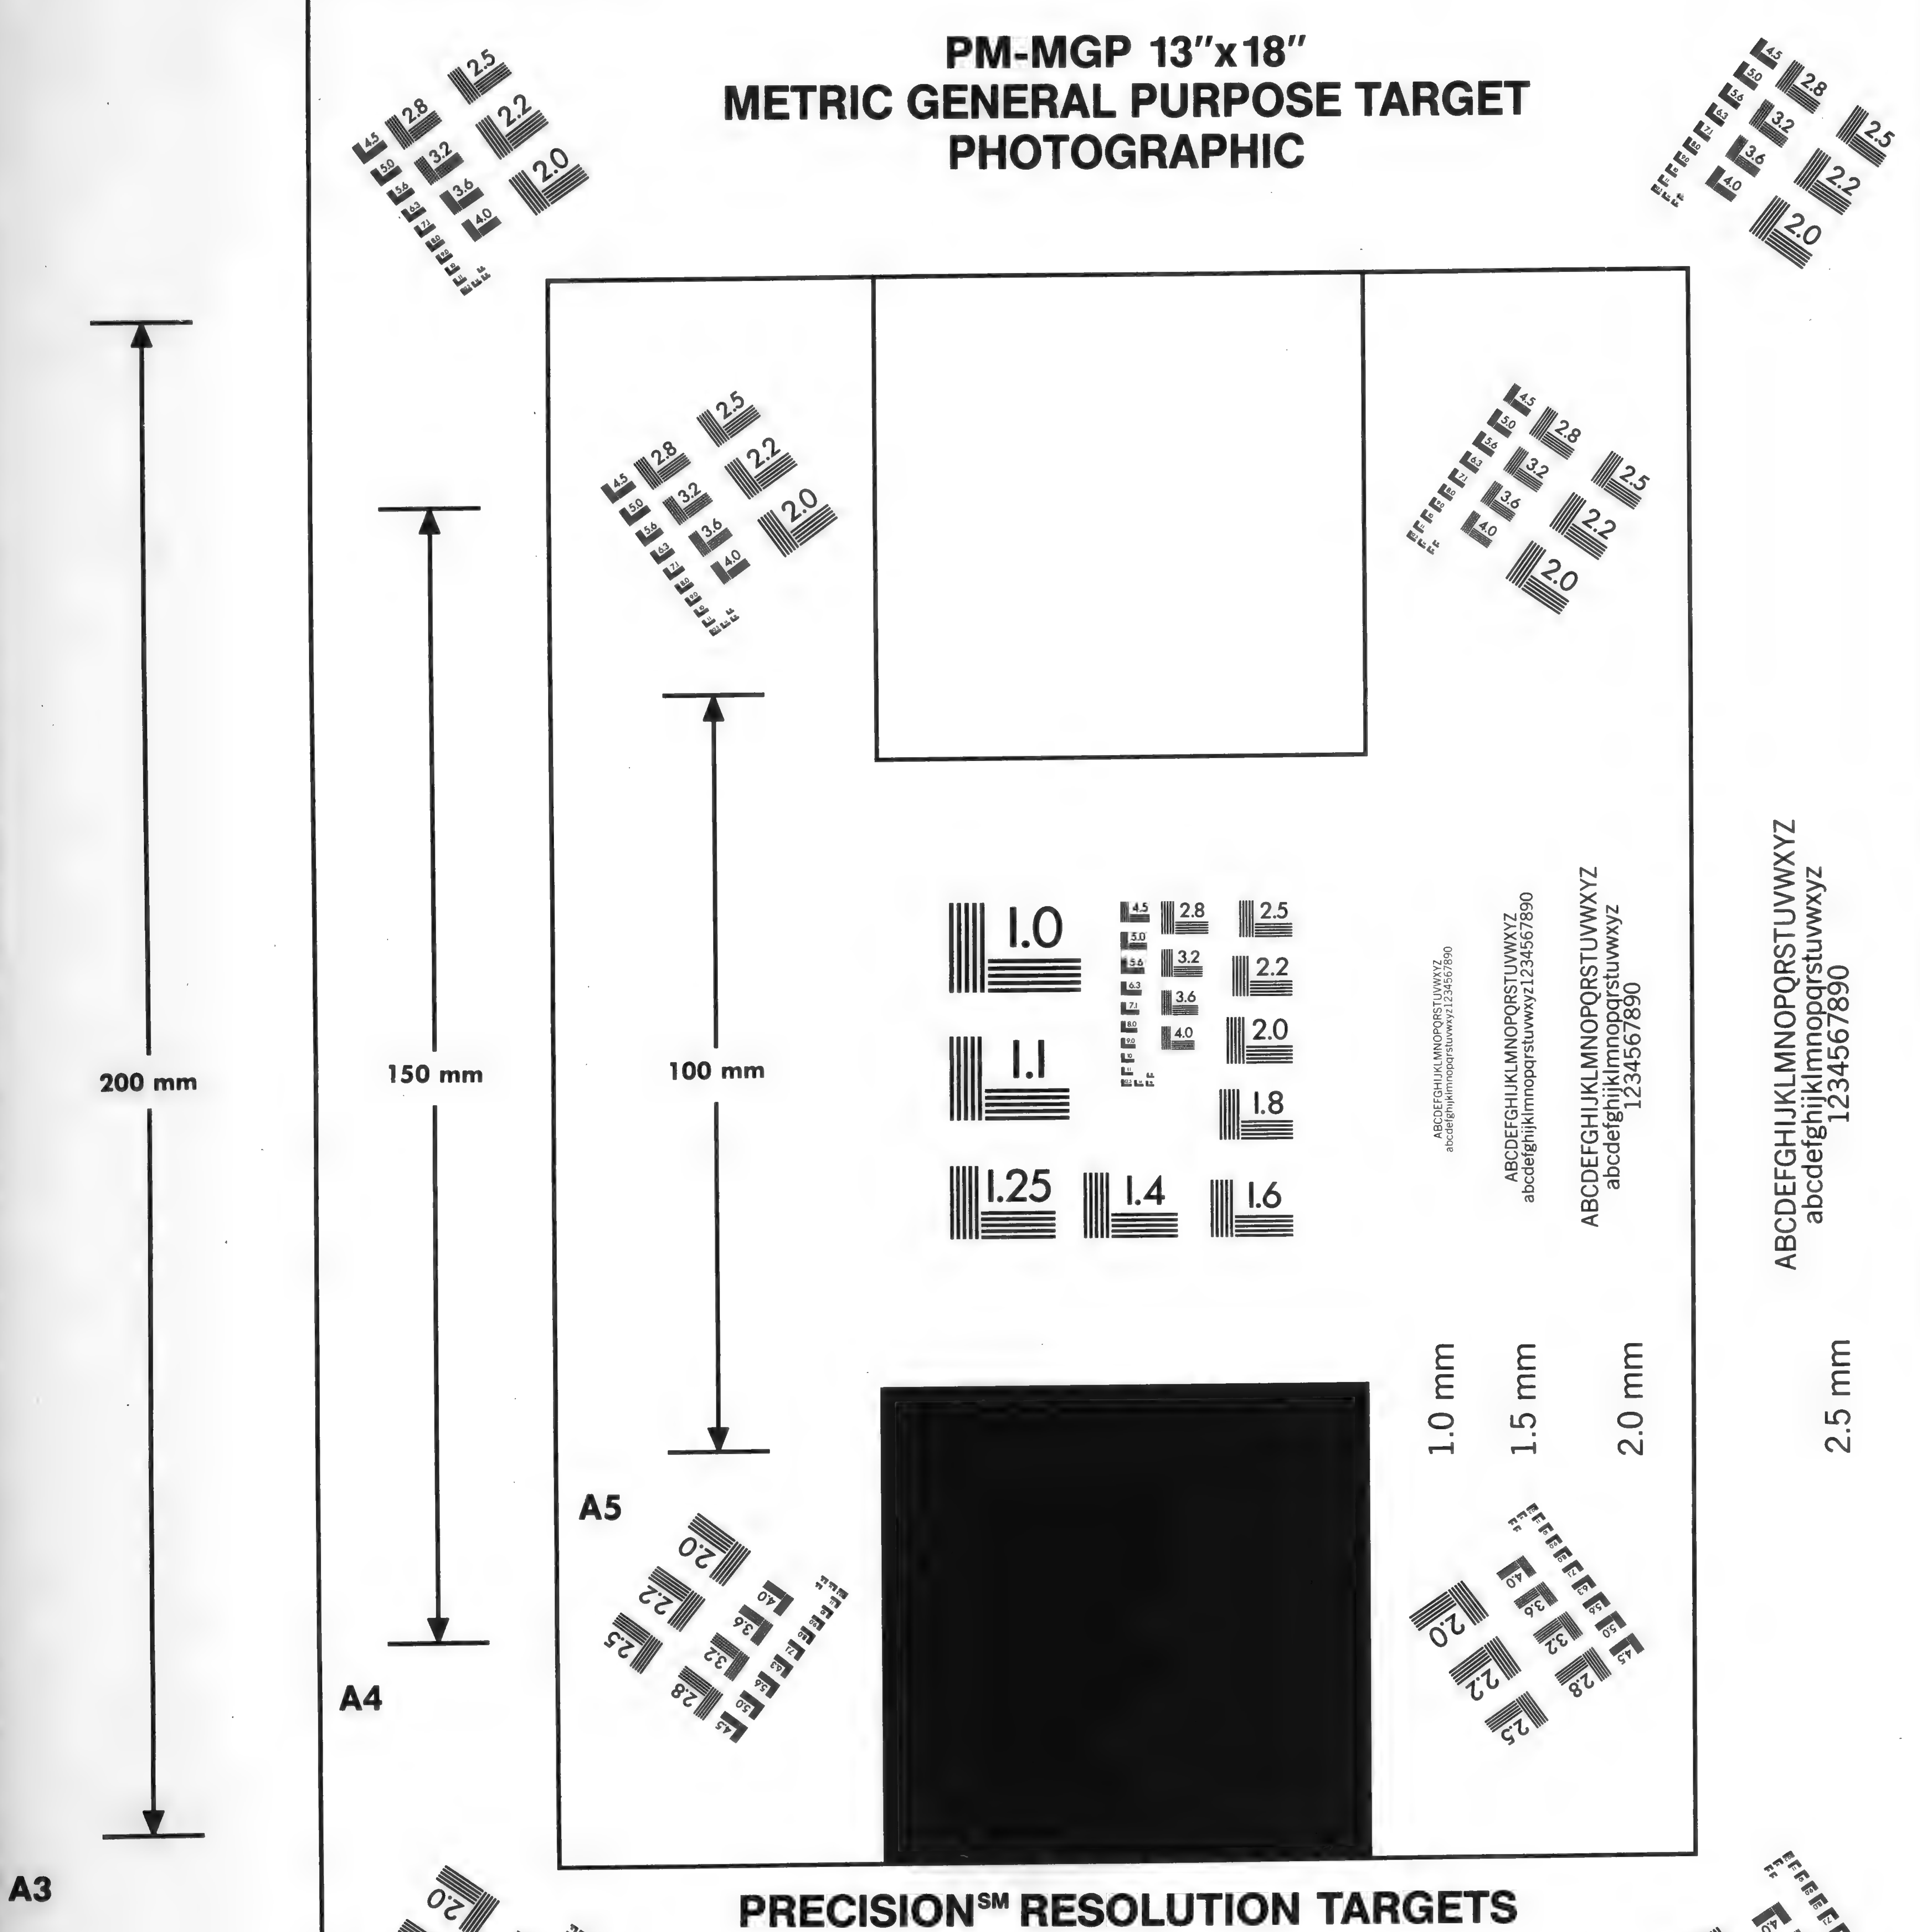
SCORES AMERICANS.

"The people of this country are psychically sick. They believe that they are supreme in everything. We owe to Russia a great deal of our music, literature and culture."

Miss Duncan appeared rather tired and helpless at the station, where she and her husband, manager and maid took the train for Chicago.

REDUCTION
RATIO
12x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
1.0
1.1
1.8
1.25
1.4
1.6
200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A5
A4
A3
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

HARVARD AND OXFORD TO DEBATE TOMORROW

Post Oct 9

Tomorow evening in Symphony Hall, at 8:15, the universities of Harvard and Oxford will meet for the first time in history in a public debate, on the League of Nations, Oxford to advocate and Harvard to combat the immediate entrance of this country into the league.

The Oxford team comprises Edward Marjoribanks, the president, a Conservative; M. C. Hollis, a Liberal, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is an active force in the English Labor party. All three are personally enthusiastic for the cause.

Of the Harvard team the following trio will confront the Oxonians: Richard S. Bowers, president, Paul Harmell and Raymond S. Fanning. The two universities will, in a sense, bespeak the attitudes of England and America toward the question of the league, which has, by the present situation in the Dardanelles, again suddenly come into prominence.

Post Oct 8

OXFORD AND HARVARD TO DEBATE TONIGHT

Debating teams representing Oxford and Harvard universities will meet tonight on the platform of Symphony Hall, Boston, to discuss the subject: "Resolved, That the United States should join immediately the League of Nations." The British team will take the affirmative side, while the Harvard men will defend the position of the United States in remaining out of the international alliance. Final details of the debate have been agreed upon, the English team has arrived in Boston, and everything is ready for the first debate ever held between the two famous universities.

The English method of deciding debates will be followed, the audience balloting on the question and being the sole judge of the merits of the debators. At Bates College, with which the Oxford team debated immediately on arrival in the United States, a combination of the English and American methods was used, and Oxford lost both by votes of the audience and decision of the judges.

Samuel W. McCall, former Governor of Massachusetts, will preside, and many men prominent in university circles will sit on the platform.

Monitor Oct 9

Oct 9

OXFORD DEBATERS IN SIGHT-SEEING TRIP

Herald 10/9

The Oxford debating team, now in Boston, at the Harvard Club, spent most of the morning yesterday in a sight-seeing trip about the city by automobile, though taking time to inspect Symphony hall and to try out its acoustics. In the afternoon they attended the regular Sunday student reception in the home of President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard.

Herald Oct 9

HARVARD AND OXFORD TO DEBATE TOMORROW

Tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall at 8:15, the universities of Harvard and Oxford will meet for the first time in history in a public debate, on the League of Nations, Oxford to advocate and Harvard to combat the immediate entrance of this country into the league.

Herald Oct 8

The Oxford team comprises Edward Marjoribanks, the president, a Conservative; M. C. Hollis, a Liberal, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is an active force in the English Labor party. All three are personally enthusiastic for the cause.

Of the Harvard team the following trio will confront the Oxonians: Richard S. Bowers, president; Paul Harmell and Raymond S. Fanning. The two universities will, in a sense, bespeak the attitudes of England and America toward the question of the league which has, by the present situation in the Dardanelles, again suddenly come into prominence.

Herald Oct 8

Joe Toye Is for League of Nations—No He Isn't

Hears Harvard-Oxford Debate and Learns How to Pronounce Majoribanks—Only Casualty in Affair Was One Wilted Collar

Herald 10/10

By JOE TOYE

Boston this afternoon breathes easier.

It has learned how to pronounce Marjoribanks.

Edward Marjoribanks was one of the Oxford team of debaters that discussed the League of Nations with three bright young men from Harvard.

Marjoribanks isn't pronounced that way at all.

It's "Marzh-banks."

Well, old thing, I went to the debate and listened to all the arguments pro and con and I know all about the League of Nations.

I believe:

FIRST: That we should join the League of Nations.

SECOND: That we should NOT join the League of Nations.

I have heard the League of Nations discussed at Symphony hall.

I have heard the League of Nations discussed at the corner of Dorchester street and Broadway, Southern Boston.

At the debate in Symphony hall the total casualties were a wilted collar, suffered by one of the Harvard debaters, and a twisted necktie sustained by old kid Marzh-banks.

At the debate in Southern Boston the "pro" arguer suffered a wallop on the nose and the "con" arguer has since sported a tin ear.

The result of both debates to date, to wit: this afternoon, is that, so far as the League of Nations is concerned, some are for it and some agin it. Which is exactly the same status quo ante lecture as was before Boston bulged the walls of Symphony hall last evening.

You wouldn't leap to the conclusion beforehand that an Oxford-Harvard debate on the League of Nations would arouse much more than a mild academic interest in our very best intellectual circles. You can imagine my lowbrow surprise when I entered Symphony hall last evening and found the place jammed. I thought for a moment that I had happened in on a John McCormack or Galli-Curci concert. Every seat was taken and late comers lined the walls.

"What," exclaimed the taxi driver "is going on here? Oh, yes," he went on "the limey debate!"

YOUNG PERSONS—EH, WHAT?

Being a newspaper person, I had a seat at ringside, where I could look up at President Lowell's socks and Andrew Peters's Adam's apple. Directly behind me was a young girl and an old lady. The old lady scanned her program and read the names of the Harvard debaters:

Continued from First Page

"R. S. Fanning '23, R. S. Bowers '24, P. R. Harmer '23," she read. "My!" she exclaimed, "aren't they young!"

Which wasn't such a bad line when you come to analyze it.

The young lady with her was telling the old lady all about herself.

"I am to take up research work," she said.

All the girls I know who do that call themselves filing clerks.

Just at this moment, along an aisle between hundreds of chairs on the stage, came Former Gov. McCall, arm in arm with a young man who served as master-of-ceremonies and timekeeper. Then came the bridesmaids, Andrew Peters and President Lowell, and finally the flower girls, venerable professors from our thriving university across the Charles.

They came the debaters, who took their corners. I watched in vain for the coming of the handlers, with towels and water bottles, but they must have been in the wings.

The genial old Governor stood in the centre and all the dignitaries in their dress suits stood at either side of him, before chairs placed there for them. At a signal from Mr. McCall they all sat down, with a click! If they had had a tambourine and had been blacked up it couldn't have been better.

Then the former Governor started to speak. Everybody likes him so everybody gave him much applause. He remarked that if this question had come up 150 years ago between England and America it would have been argued out on Boston Common, in a riot. Then he went on to talk about the terrible mess the world is in today. He had a kind word to say for Greece. As he went on I thought he was one of the Oxford debating team. He spoke of the "clear and mighty voice of England," and asked, regarding the Smyrna situation, "beyond a few pious exclamations, what has America done?"

ALMOST DECLARED WAR

For a while it looked as if the Governor was going to declare war on Turkey right then and there, but at exactly 8:40 he introduced the first speaker, R. S. Fanning of Harvard, a bright young man who is set in his ideas against the League of Nations.

Fanning took a paste at open covenants, openly arrived at, and said there was no such language. He didn't put it in just that quaint way, but that was his inference. He spoke of mandates and said, or rather inferred, that the members of the league were a bunch of porch climbers and second-story workers who would not or could not distinguish between sacred trusts and spoils of war. He accused England and France and Italy of entering into a lot of secret treaties and said that if we went into the league we would go in with the cards stacked against us.

It came Marzh-banks turn to speak, and I expected to see him go over and give Fanning a crack on the jaw and then argue afterwards. But Marzh was a gentleman and the most likable scout in the world.

MARZH A WEE NERVOUS

He did appear a bit nervous, but you shouldn't hold that against him. Maybe he had taken a ride out to City Point that afternoon and had heard some of the league arguments I have listened to. He made a big hit by saying his mother was an American. He started in his argument, but now and then his voice quivered. His argument was well presented. He took Fanning's argument and said that Europe was in a mess; he granted that; therefore the United States should step in and exert its influence.

R. S. Bowers of Harvard stepped to the centre of the ring at exactly 9:21 and what he didn't say about the Versailles treaty wasn't worth saying. If you would believe him you would come to the conclusion that the treaty was good only as fly-paper. At 9:31 he closed his remarks by stating that "American idealism would be helpless against sinister European diplomacy.

NEAT FLING AT JERRY

M. C. Hollis of Oxford was one of the big hits of the evening. He started in at 9:33 and swept the audience right along with him. An engaging young man, keen, clever, a wit, he played with his audience, arresting their laughter or concentration at will. He likened himself to Webster's dictionary, coming before us as British propaganda, and expressed a fear that he would be barred from the public library, a neat fling at James A. (Jeremiah) Watson, the well-known statesman, legislator, councillor, revolutionary hero and Indian chief of Tommy's Rock, Roxbury. One of Mr. Hollis's best little bits was "Mr. Harding does not believe nations should league together but that it is imperative they should associate."

At 10 o'clock Mr. P. R. Hormel of Harvard, who will amount to something in this world of ours, came to the ropes and handed out, in serious tones and with earnestness and conviction, a barrage of facts about the League of Nations that would make any League of Nations shrivel up and wither away in a wisp of pale-green smoke.

What that young man did to the League of Nations was a marvel and a thing worth going many furlongs to hear. I, one of the two men left in

Herald Oct 10

America who remains a disciple of Woodrow the First, went to that hall strong for all leagues, including the National and Twilight.

HORMEL IS BIG GUNS

I heard the gentlemen from Oxford plead in friendly fashion for our help; present logical argument why we should join the league, I saw them win friends for Britain. I saw them nearly put it over.

Then along came this heavy artillery in the form of a serious young man of no great stature physically, P. R. Hormel, who took that audience, gave it a talking to, dealt exclusively with facts, dates, names, places, incidents—the goods—and swept everything before him.

The Oxford team had pointed out what America, with her great influence, could do in the league; how she could change the league to suit herself, and rule the roost.

Then along came Mr. Hormel, who showed that America at the end of the war "at the pinnacle of her influence" lost out at the peace conference.

In a word, he pointed out how Woodrow Wilson went to Europe full of hopes and points and came home with little more than some souvenir postcards and a few trunkfuls of knickknacks for the parlor mantelpiece. Then he inquired mildly how we think we could get anything in Europe now.

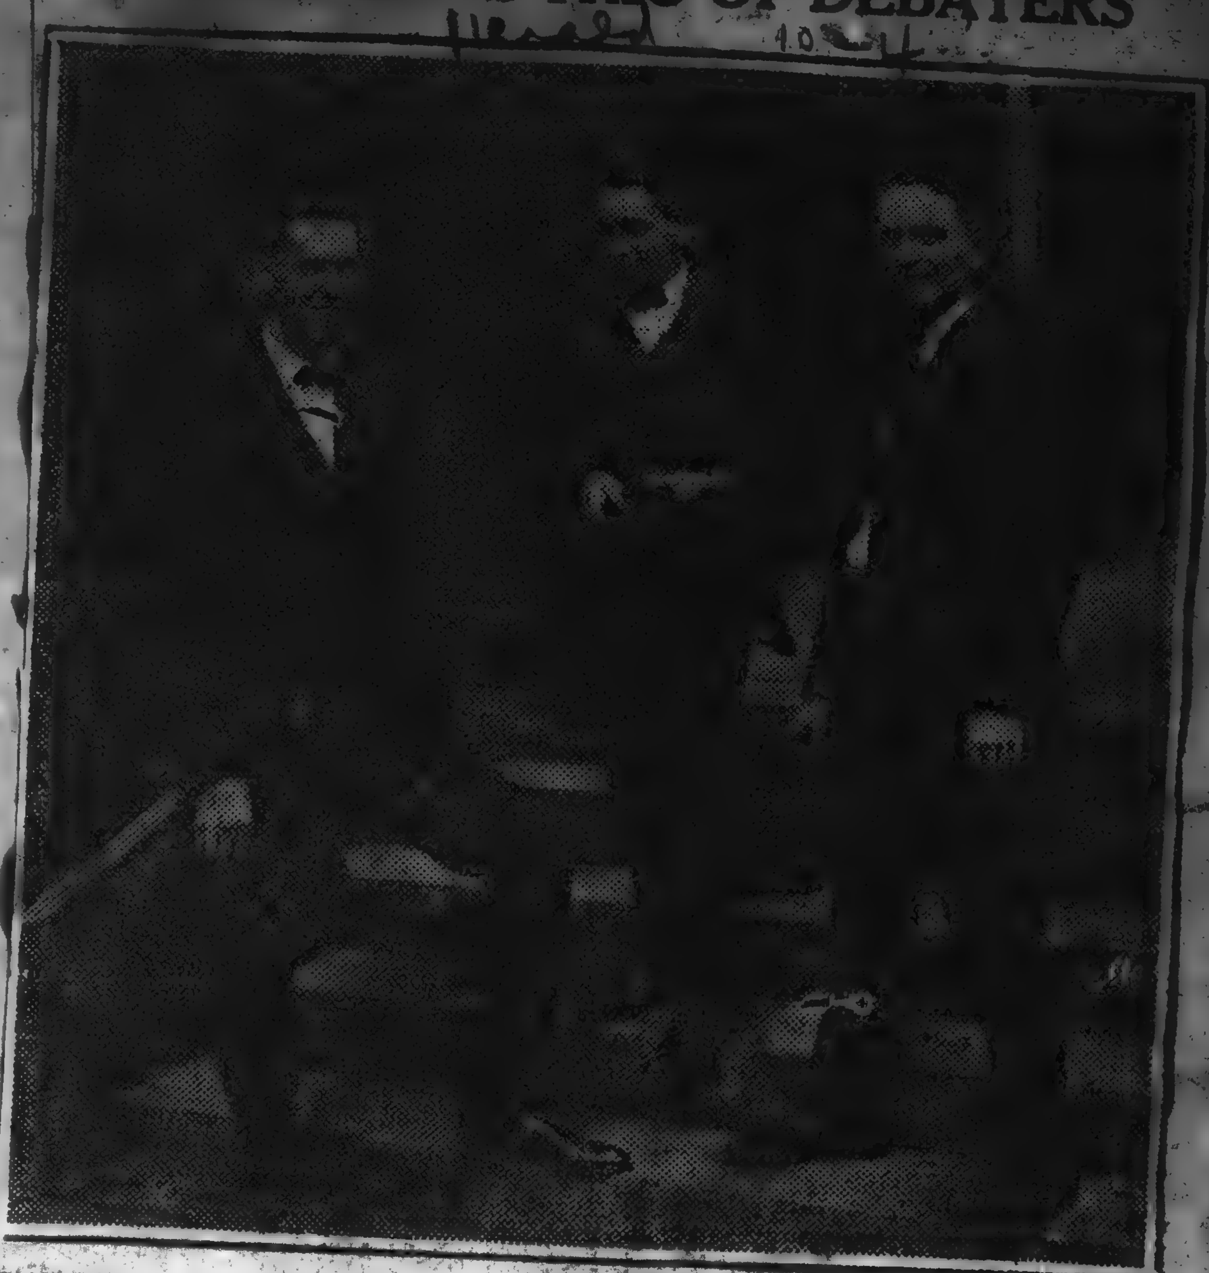
Except possibly in the neck.

P. S.—Harvard won.

P. P. S.—Yale nothing.

HARVARD'S TRIO OF DEBATERS

Herald 10-4



STUDENTS CHOSEN TO MEET THE OXFORD TEAM IN A FORENSIC CONTEST IN SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY EVENING ARE, LEFT TO RIGHT: RICHARD S. BOWERS, PAUL HARMELL AND RAYMOND S. FANNING

Herald Oct 4

HARVARD SELECTS DEBATING TEAM

Bowers, Harmell and Fanning to Meet Oxford Trio

All three of the Harvard men who will debate with Oxford at Symphony hall Oct. 9, have had experience as speakers. Richard S. Bowers '24, of Brookline, president of the team, was likewise president of his freshman debating team, and took a conspicuous part in the triangular debate. Paul Harmell '23, comes from Cleveland, and spoke in the varsity triangular debate and the debate against Bates two years ago. Raymond S. Fanning '23, is from Chattanooga and has been prominent in the varsity triangular debates of the last two years, as well as in the debate against Syracuse last year.

NO ATTLEBORO

EX-GOVERNOR McCALL PRAISES SPEECHES OF SYMPHONY DEBATERS

Crime 10/11

Discussion With Oxford Is "Best Intercollegiate Debate" He Has Witnessed—Compares English and American Method of Delivery

APPROVES METHOD OF AWARDING DECISION BY VOTE

Former Governor Samuel W. McCall, who presided at the debate between the University and Oxford Monday night, said when interviewed for the CRIMSON yesterday that it was "the best intercollegiate debate" that he had ever witnessed. Mr. McCall considered that it was superior even to the debate two years ago between President Lowell and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge '71, in that the debate in 1920 was of a more academic nature, while the one Monday night was "a real fight from start to finish".

"The American style of speech-making", Mr. McCall continued, "was exemplified by the University team, which was not, as some people anticipated, over-formal. Although as a general rule, I believe that the frock-coated orator is best suited to solemn and memorial occasions, I do not think that the University team's manner of delivery was too pedantic. The English style, however, was conversational in the extreme, so much so that their case suffered from their casual treatment, the Oxford team in its efforts to achi[illegible] friendly connection with the audience, all but took its listeners into its lap. The Englishmen almost appeared not to care whether or not they won the debate. Although the Oxford speakers cannot be said to have made a definite attempt at wit, they were certainly bubling over with good spirits.

"I am very enthusiastic", he declared, "over the English system of having the audience render the decision, because this arangement makes the whole debate more exciting and personal, and it also stimulates the listeners to take a greater interest in all the speeches. There is no doubt that it was much to the advantage of the Oxford men to have this system in force, for their conversational mannerisms would have had little weight with judges whose task it was to consider substance rather than form.

"Many listeners were probably somewhat in doubt as to how they ought to vote, because no statement was made as to whether the decision was to be on the merits of the style of presentation or upon the merits of the question itself. I understand that the reason no such statement was announced was that the University team wished the decision to be on the first named basis, while the Oxford team, in the favor of their cause, very naturally wanted the award made on the last named considerations. This ambiguity as to the purpose of the voting undoubtedly led many people to vote according to their preconceived ideas on the subject, and not on the comparative merits of the two teams. The Englishmen, nevertheless, had a better chance of winning here than at any other place where they have debated, because Boston numbers among its intellectuals a large [illegible] of people who are warm advocates of our joining the League of Nations.

"On the whole", concluded Mr. McCall, "the University debaters presented the question in a most logical and methodical manner, their team work was excellent, and they justly deserved the verdict of the audience".

Oct 10

[83]

HARVARD AND OXFORD T
Post DEBATE TOMORROW Oct 8

Tomorow evening in Symphony Hall, at 8:15, the universities of Harvard and Oxford will meet for the first time in history in a public debate, on the League of Nations, Oxford to advocate and Harvard to combat the immediate entrance of this country into the league.

The Oxford team comprises Edward Marjoribanks, the president, a Conservative; M. C. Hollis, a Liberal, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is an active force in the English Labor party. All three are personally enthusiastic for the cause.

Of the Harvard team the following trio will confront the Oxonians: Richard S. Bowers, president, Paul Harmell and Raymond S. Fanning. The two universities will, in a sense, bespeak the attitudes of England and America toward the question of the league, which has, by the present situation in the Dardanelles, again suddenly come into prominence.

Post Oct 8

OXFORD AND HARVARD TO DEBATE TONIGHT

Debating teams representing Oxford and Harvard universities will meet tonight on the platform of Symphony Hall, Boston, to discuss the subject: "Resolved, That the United States should join immediately the League of Nations." The British team will take the affirmative side, while the Harvard men will defend the position of the United States in remaining out of the international alliance. Final details of the debate have been agreed upon, the English team has arrived in Boston, and everything is ready for the first debate ever held between the two famous universities.

The English method of deciding debates will be followed, the audience balloting on the question and being the sole judge of the merits of the debators. At Bates College, with which the Oxford team debated immediately on arrival in the United States, a combination of the English and American methods was used, and Oxford lost both by votes of the audience and decision of the judges.

Samuel W. McCall, former Governor of Massachusetts, will preside, and many men prominent in university circles will sit on the platform.

Monitor Oct 9

Monitor Oct 9

OXFORD DEBATERS IN SIGHT-SEEING TRIP

Herald 10/9

The Oxford debating team, now in Boston, at the Harvard Club, spent most of the morning yesterday in a sight-seeing trip about the city by automobile, though taking time to inspect Symphony hall and to try out its acoustics. In the afternoon they attended the regular Sunday student reception in the home of President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard.

Herald Oct 9

HARVARD AND OXFORD TO DEBATE TOMORROW

Tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall at 8:15, the universities of Harvard and Oxford will meet for the first time in history in a public debate, on the League of Nations, Oxford to advocate and Harvard to combat the immediate entrance of this country into the league.

The Oxford team comprises Edward Marjoribanks, the president, a Conservative; M. C. Hollis, a Liberal, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is an active force in the English Labor party. All three are personally enthusiastic for the cause.

Of the Harvard team the following trio will confront the Oxonians: Richard S. Bowers, president; Paul Harmell and Raymond S. Fanning. The two universities will, in a sense, bespeak the attitudes of England and America toward the question of the league which has, by the present situation in the Dardanelles, again suddenly come into prominence.

Herald Oct 8

Joe Toye Is for League of Nations—No He Isn't

Hears Harvard-Oxford Debate and Learns How to Pronounce Majoribanks—Only Casualty in Affair Was One Wilted Collar

Herald 10/10

By JOE TOYE

Boston this afternoon breathes easier.

It has learned how to pronounce Marjoribanks.

Edward Marjoribanks was one of the Oxford team of debaters that discussed the League of Nations with three bright young men from Harvard.

Marjoribanks isn't pronounced that way at all.

It's "Marzh-banks."

Well, old thing, I went to the debate and listened to all the arguments pro and con and I know all about the League of Nations.

I believe:

FIRST: That we should join the League of Nations.

SECOND: That we should NOT join the League of Nations.

I have heard the League of Nations discussed at Symphony hall.

I have heard the League of Nations discussed at the corner of Dorchester street and Broadway, Southern Boston.

At the debate in Symphony hall the total casualties were a wilted collar, suffered by one of the Harvard debaters, and a twisted necktie sustained by old kid Marzh-banks.

At the debate in Southern Boston the "pro" arguer suffered a wallop on the nose and the "con" arguer has since sported a tin ear.

The result of both debates to date, to wit: this afternon, is that, so far as the League of Nations is concerned, some are for it and some agin it. Which is exactly the same status quo ante lecture as was before Boston bulged the walls of Symphony hall last evening.

You wouldn't leap to the conclusion beforehand that an Oxford-Harvard debate on the League of Nations would arouse much more than a mild academic interest in our very best intellectual circles. You can imagine my lowbrow surprise when I entered Symphony hall last evening and found the place jammed. I thought for a moment that I had happened in on a John McCormack or Galli-Curci concert. Every seat was taken and late comers lined the walls.

"What," exclaimed the taxi driver "is going on here? Oh, yes," he went on "the limey debate!"

YOUNG PERSONS—EH, WHAT?

Being a newspaper person, I had a seat at ringside, where I could look up at President Lowell's socks and Andrew Peters's Adam's apple. Directly behind me was a young girl and an old lady. The old lady scanned her program and read the names of the Harvard debaters:

Continued from First Page

"R. S. Fanning '23, R. S. Bowers '24, P. R. Harmer '23," she read. "My!" she exclaimed, "aren't they young!"

Which wasn't such a bad line when you come to analyze it.

The young lady with her was telling the old lady all about herself.

"I am to take up research work," she said.

All the girls I know who do that call themselves filing clerks.

Just at this moment, along an aisle between hundreds of chairs on the stage, came Former Gov. McCall, arm in arm with a young man who served as master-of-ceremonies and timekeeper. Then came the bridesmaids, Andrew Peters and President Lowell, and finally the flower girls, venerable professors from our thriving university across the Charles.

They came the debaters, who took their corners. I watched in vain for the coming of the handlers, with towels and water bottles, but they must have been in the wings.

The genial old Governor stood in the centre and all the dignitaries in their dress suits stood at either side of him, before chairs placed there for them. At a signal from Mr. McCall they all sat down, with a click! If they had had a tambourine and had been blacked up it couldn't have been better.

Then the former Governor started to speak. Everybody likes him so everybody gave him much applause. He remarked that if this question had come up 150 years ago between England and America it would have been argued out on Boston Common, in a riot. Then he went on to talk about the terrible mess the world is in today. He had a kind word to say for Greece. As he went on I thought he was one of the Oxford debating team. He spoke of the "clear and mighty voice of England," and asked, regarding the Smyrna situation, "beyond a few pious exclamations, what has America done?"

ALMOST DECLARED WAR

For a while it looked as if the Governor was going to declare war on Turkey right then and there, but at exactly 8:40 he introduced the first speaker, R. S. Fanning of Harvard, a bright young man who is set in his ideas against the League of Nations.

Fanning took a paste at open covenants, openly arrived at, and said there was no such language. He didn't put it in just that quaint way, but that was his inference. He spoke of mandates and said, or rather inferred, that the members of the league were a bunch of porch climbers and second-story workers who would not or could not distinguish between sacred trusts and spoils of war. He accused England and France and Italy of entering into a lot of secret treaties and said that if we went into the league we would go in with the cards stacked against us.

It came Marzh-banks turn to speak, and I expected to see him go over and give Fanning a crack on the jaw and then argue afterwards. But Marzh was a gentleman and the most likable scout in the world.

MARZH A WEE NERVOUS

He did appear a bit nervous, but you shouldn't hold that against him. Maybe he had taken a ride out to City Point that afternoon and had heard some of the league arguments I have listened to. He made a big hit by saying his mother was an American. He started in his argument, but now and then his voice quivered. His argument was well presented. He took Fanning's argument and said that Europe was in a mess; he granted that; therefore the United States should step in and exert its influence.

R. S. Bowers of Harvard stepped to the centre of the ring at exactly 9:21 and what he didn't say about the Versailles treaty wasn't worth saying. If you would believe him you would come to the conclusion that the treaty was good only as fly-paper. At 9:31 he closed his remarks by stating that "American idealism would be helpless against sinister European diplomacy.

NEAT FLING AT JERRY

M. C. Hollis of Oxford was one of the big hits of the evening. He started in at 9:38 and swept the audience right along with him. An engaging young man, keen, clever, a wit, he played with his audience, arresting their laughter or concentration at will. He likened himself to Webster's dictionary, coming before us as British propaganda, and expressed a fear that he would be barred from the public library, a neat fling at James A. (Jeremiah) Watson, the well-known statesman, legislator, councillor, revolutionary hero and Indian chief of Tommy's Rock, Roxbury. One of Mr. Hollis's best little bits was "Mr. Harding does not believe nations should league together but that it is imperative they should associate."

At 10 o'clock Mr. P. R. Hormel of Harvard, who will amount to something in this world of ours, came to the ropes and handed out, in serious tones and with earnestness and conviction, a barrage of facts about the League of Nations that would make any League of Nations shrivel up and wither away in a wisp of pale-green smoke.

What that young man did to the League of Nations was a marvel and a thing worth going many furlongs to hear. I, one of the two men left in America who remains a disciple of Woodrow the First, went to that hall strong for all leagues, including the National and Twilight.

HORMEL IS BIG GUNS

I heard the gentlemen from Oxford plead in friendly fashion for our help; present logical argument why we should join the league, I saw them win friends for Britain. I saw them nearly put it over.

Then along came this heavy artillery in the form of a serious young man of no great stature physically, P. R. Hormel, who took that audience, gave it a talking to, dealt exclusively with facts, dates, names, places, incidents—the goods—and swept everything before him.

The Oxford team had pointed out what America, with her great influence, could do in the league; how she could change the league to suit herself, and rule the roost.

Then along came Mr. Hormel, who showed that America at the end of the war "at the pinnacle of her influence" lost out at the peace conference.

In a word, he pointed out how Woodrow Wilson went to Europe full of hope and points and came home with little more than some souvenir postcards and a few trunkfuls of knickknacks for the parlor mantelpiece. Then he inquired mildly how we think we could get anything in Europe now.

Except possibly in the neck.

P. S.—Harvard won.
P. P. S.—Yale nothing.

Herald Oct 10

HARVARD'S TRIO OF DEBATERS

Herald 10-4

STUDENTS CHOSEN TO MEET THE OXFORD TEAM IN A FORENSIC CONTEST IN SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY EVENING ARE, LEFT TO RIGHT: RICHARD S. BOWERS, PAUL HARMELL AND RAYMOND S. FANNING

Herald Oct 4

HARVARD SELECTS DEBATING TEAM

Bowers, Harmell and Fanning to Meet Oxford Trio

All three of the Harvard men who will debate with Oxford at Symphony hall Oct. 9, have had experience as speakers. Richard S. Bowers '24, of Brookline, president of the team, was likewise president of his freshman debating team, and took a conspicuous part in the triangular debate. Paul Harmell '23, comes from Cleveland, and spoke in the varsity triangular debate and the debate against Bates two years ago. Raymond S. Fanning '23, is from Chattanooga and has been prominent in the varsity triangular debates of the last two years, as well as in the debate against Syracuse last year.

NO. ATTLEBORO

EX-GOVERNOR McCALL PRAISES SPEECHES OF SYMPHONY DEBATERS

Crimson 10/11

Discussion With Oxford Is "Best Intercollegiate Debate" He Has Witnessed—Compares English and American Method of Delivery

APPROVES METHOD OF AWARDING DECISION BY VOTE

Former Governor Samuel W. McCall, who presided at the debate between the University and Oxford Monday night, said when interviewed for the CRIMSON yesterday that it was "the best intercollegiate debate" that he had ever witnessed. Mr. McCall considered that it was superior even to the debate two years ago between President Lowell and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge '71, in that the debate in 1920 was of a more academic nature, while the one Monday night was "a real fight from start to finish".

"The American style of speech-making", Mr. McCall continued, "was exemplified by the University team, which was not, as some people anticipated over-formal. Although as a general rule, I believe that the frock-coated orator is best suited to solemn and memorial occasions, I do not think that the University team's manner of delivery was too pedantic. The English style, however, was conversational in the extreme so much so that their case suffered from their casual treatment, the Oxford team in its efforts to achieve a friendly connection with the audience, all but took its listeners into its lap. The Englishmen almost appeared not to care whether or not they won the debate. Although the Oxford speakers cannot be said to have made a definite attempt at wit, they were certainly bubling over with good spirits.

"I am very enthusiastic", he declared, "over the English system of having the audience render the decision, because this arangement makes the whole debate more exciting and personal, and it also stimulates the listeners to take a greater interest in all the speeches. There is no doubt that it was much to the advantage of the Oxford men to have this system in force, for their conversational mannerisms would have had little weight with judges whose task it was to consider substance rather than form.

"Many listeners were probably somewhat in doubt as to how they ought to vote, because no statement was made as to whether the decision was to be on the merits of the style of presentation or upon the merits of the question itself. I understand that the reason no such statement was announced was that the University team wished the decision to be on the first named basis, while the Oxford team, in the favor of their cause, very naturally wanted the award made on the last named considerations. This ambiguity as to the purpose of the voting undoubtedly led many people to vote according to their preconceived ideas on the subject, and not on the comparative merits of the two teams. The Englishmen, nevertheless, had a better chance of winning here than at any other place where they have debated, because Boston numbers among its intellectuals a large number of people who are warm advocates of our joining the League of Nations.

"On the whole", concluded Mr. McCall, "the University debaters presented the question in a most logical and methodical manner, their team work was excellent, and they justly deserved the verdict of the audience".

Crimson Oct 10

[83]

HARVARD AND OXFORD TO DEBATE TOMORROW

Oct 8

Tomorow evening in Symphony Hall, at 8:15, the universities of Harvard and Oxford will meet for the first time in history in a public debate, on the League of Nations, Oxford to advocate and Harvard to combat the immediate entrance of this country into the league.

The Oxford team comprises Edward Marjoribanks, the president, a Conservative; M. C. Hollis, a Liberal, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is an active force in the English Labor party. All three are personally enthusiastic for the cause.

Of the Harvard team the following trio will confront the Oxonians: Richard S. Bowers, president, Paul Harmell and Raymond S. Fanning. The two universities will, in a sense, bespeak the attitudes of England and America toward the question of the league, which has, by the present situation in the Dardanelles, again suddenly come into prominence.

Post Oct 8

OXFORD AND HARVARD TO DEBATE TONIGHT

Debating teams representing Oxford and Harvard universities will meet tonight on the platform of Symphony Hall, Boston, to discuss the subject: "Resolved, 'That the United States should join immediately the League of Nations." The British team will take the affirmative side, while the Harvard men will defend the position of the United States in remaining out of the international alliance. Final details of the debate have been agreed upon, the English team has arrived in Boston, and everything is ready for the first debate ever held between the two famous universities.

The English method of deciding debates will be followed, the audience balloting on the question and being the sole judge of the merits of the debators. At Bates College, with which the Oxford team debated immediately on arrival in the United States, a combination of the English and American methods was used, and Oxford lost both by votes of the audience and decision of the judges.

Samuel W. McCall, former Governor of Massachusetts, will preside, and many men prominent in university circles will sit on the platform.

Monitor

Monitor Oct 9

OXFORD DEBATERS IN SIGHT-SEEING TRIP

The Oxford debating team, now in Boston, at the Harvard Club, spent most of the morning yesterday in a sightseeing trip about the city by automobile, though taking time to inspect Symphony hall and to try out its acoustics. In the afternoon they attended the regular Sunday student reception in the home of President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard.

Herald Oct 9

HARVARD AND OXFORD TO DEBATE TOMORROW

Tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall at 8:15, the universities of Harvard and Oxford will meet for the first time in history in a public debate, on the League of Nations, Oxford to advocate and Harvard to combat the immediate entrance of this country into the league.

The Oxford team comprises Edward Marjoribanks, the president, a Conservative; M. C. Hollis, a Liberal, and Kenneth Lindsay, who is an active force in the English Labor party. All three are personally enthusiastic for the cause.

Of the Harvard team the following trio will confront the Oxonians: Richard S. Bowers, president; Paul Harmell and Raymond S. Fanning. The two universities will, in a sense, bespeak the attitudes of England and America toward the question of the league which has, by the present situation in the Dardanelles, again suddenly come into prominence

Herald Oct 8

Joe Toye Is for League of Nations—No He Isn't

Hears Harvard-Oxford Debate and Learns How to Pronounce Majoribanks—Only Casualty in Affair Was One Wilted Collar

By JOE TOYE

Boston this afternoon breathes easier.

It has learned how to pronounce Marjoribanks.

Edward Marjoribanks was one of the Oxford team of debaters that discussed the League of Nations with three bright young men from Harvard.

Marjoribanks isn't pronounced that way at all.

It's "Marzh-banks."

Well, old thing, I went to the debate and listened to all the arguments pro and con and I know all about the League of Nations.

I believe:

FIRST: That we should join the League of Nations.

SECOND: That we should NOT join the League of Nations.

I have heard the League of Nations discussed at Symphony hall.

I have heard the League of Nations discussed at the corner of Dorchester street and Broadway, Southern Boston.

At the debate in Symphony hall the total casualties were a wilted collar, suffered by one of the Harvard debaters, and a twisted necktie sustained by old kid Marzh-banks.

At the debate in Southern Boston the "pro" arguer suffered a wallop on the nose and the "con" arguer has since sported a tin ear.

The result of both debates to date, to wit: this afternoon, is that, so far as the League of Nations is concerned, some are for it and some agin it. Which is exactly the same status quo ante lecture as was before Boston bulged the walls of Symphony hall last evening.

You wouldn't leap to the conclusion beforehand that an Oxford-Harvard debate on the League of Nations would arouse much more than a mild academic interest in our very best intellectual circles. You can imagine my lowbrow surprise when I entered Symphony hall last evening and found the place jammed. I thought for a moment that I had happened in on a John McCormack or Galli-Curci concert. Every seat was taken and late comers lined the walls.

"What," exclaimed the taxi driver "is going on here? Oh, yes," he went on "the limey debate!"

YOUNG PERSONS—EH, WHAT?

Being a newspaper person, I had a seat at ringside, where I could look up at President Lowell's socks and Andrew Peters's Adam's apple. Directly behind me was a young girl and an old lady. The old lady scanned her program and read the names of the Harvard debaters:

Continued from First Page

"R. S. Fanning '23, R. S. Bowers '24 P. R. Harmer '23," she read. "My!" she exclaimed, "aren't they young!"

Which wasn't such a bad line when you come to analyze it.

The young lady with her was telling the old lady all about herself.

"I am to take up research work," she said.

All the girls I know who do that call themselves filing clerks

Just at this moment, along an aisle between hundreds of chairs on the stage, came Former Gov. McCall, arm in arm with a young man who served as master-of-ceremonies and timekeeper. Then came the bridesmaids, Andrew Peters and President Lowell, and finally the flower girls, venerable professors from our thriving university across the Charles.

They came the debaters, who took their corners. I watched in vain for the coming of the handlers, with towels and water bottles, but they must have been in the wings.

The genial old Governor stood in the centre and all the dignitaries in their dress suits stood at either side of him, before chairs placed there for them. At a signal from Mr. McCall they all sat down, with a click! If they had had a tambourine and had been blacked up it couldn't have been better.

Then the former Governor started to speak. Everybody likes him so everybody gave him much applause. He remarked that if this question had come up 150 years ago between England and America it would have been argued out on Boston Common, in a riot. Then he went on to talk about the terrible mess the world is in today. He had a kind word to say for Greece. As he went on I thought he was one of the Oxford debating team. He spoke of the "clear and mighty voice of England," and asked, regarding the Smyrna situation, "beyond a few pious exclamations, what has America done?"

ALMOST DECLARED WAR

For a while it looked as if the Governor was going to declare war on Turkey right then and there, but at exactly 8:40 he introduced the first speaker, R. S. Fanning of Harvard, a bright young man who is set in his ideas against the League of Nations.

Fanning took a paste at open covenants, openly arrived at, and said there was no such language. He didn't put it in just that quaint way, but that was his inference. He spoke of mandates and said, or rather inferred, that the members of the league were a bunch of porch climbers and second-story workers who would not or could not distinguish between sacred trusts and spoils of war. He accused England and France and Italy of entering into a lot of secret treaties and said that if we went into the league we would go in with the cards stacked against us

It came Marzh-banks turn to speak, and I expected to see him go over and give Fanning a crack on the jaw and then argue afterwards. But Marzh was a gentleman and the most likable scout in the world

MARZH A WEE NERVOUS

He did appear a bit nervous, but you shouldn't hold that against him. Maybe he had taken a ride out to City Point that afternoon and had heard some of the league arguments I have listened to. He made a big hit by saying his mother was an American. He started in his argument, but now and then his voice quivered. His argument was well presented. He took Fanning's argument and said that Europe was in a mess; he granted that; therefore the United States should step in and exert its influence.

R. S. Bowers of Harvard stepped to the centre of the ring at exactly 9:21 and what he didn't say about the Versailles treaty wasn't worth saying. If you would believe him you would come to the conclusion that the treaty was good only as fly-paper. At 9:31 he closed his remarks by stating that "American idealism would be helpless against sinister European diplomacy.

NEAT FLING AT JERRY

M. C. Hollis of Oxford was one of the big hits of the evening. He started in at 9:38 and swept the audience right along with him. An engaging young man, keen, clever, a wit, he played with his audience, arresting their laughter or concentration at will. He likened himself to Webster's dictionary, coming before us as British propaganda, and expressed a fear that he would be barred from the public library, a neat fling at James A. (Jeremiah) Watson, the well-known statesman, legislator, councillor, revolutionary hero and Indian chief of Tommy's Rock, Roxbury. One of Mr. Hollis's best little bits was "Mr. Harding does not believe nations should league together but that it is imperative they should associate."

At 10 o'clock Mr. P. R. Hormel of Harvard, who will amount to something in this world of ours, came to the ropes and handed out, in serious tones and with earnestness and conviction, a barrage of facts about the League of Nations that would make any League of Nations shrivel up and wither away in a wisp of pale-green smoke.

What that young man did to the League of Nations was a marvel and a thing worth going many furlongs to hear. I, one of the two men left in

Herald Oct 10

America who remains a disciple of Woodrow the First, went to that hall strong for all leagues, including the National and Twilight.

HORMEL IS BIG GUNS

I heard the gentlemen from Oxford plead in friendly fashion for our help; present logical argument why we should join the league, I saw them win friends for Britain. I saw them nearly put it over.

Then along came this heavy artillery in the form of a serious young man of no great stature physically, P. R. Hormel, who took that audience, gave it a talking to, dealt exclusively with facts, dates, names, places, incidents—the goods—and swept everything before him.

The Oxford team had pointed out what America, with her great influence, could do in the league; how she could change the league to suit herself and rule the roost.

Then along came Mr. Hormel, who showed that America at the end of the war "at the pinnacle of her influence" lost out at the peace conference

In a word, he pointed out how Woodrow Wilson went to Europe full of hopes and points and came home with little more than some souvenir postcards and a few trunkfuls of knickknacks for the parlor mantelpiece. Then he inquired mildly how we think we could get anything in Europe now

Except possibly in the neck.

P. S.—Harvard won.

P. P. S.—Yale nothing.

HARVARD'S TRIO OF DEBATERS

Herald 10-4

STUDENTS CHOSEN TO MEET THE OXFORD TEAM IN A FORENSIC CONTEST IN SYMPHONY HALL ON MONDAY EVENING ARE, LEFT TO RIGHT: RICHARD S. BOWERS, PAUL HARMELL AND RAYMOND S. FANNING

Herald Oct 4

HARVARD SELECTS DEBATING TEAM

Bowers, Harmell and Fanning to Meet Oxford Trio

All three of the Harvard men who will debate with Oxford at Symphony hall Oct. 9, have had experience as speakers. Richard S. Bowers '24, of Brookline, president of the team, was likewise president of his freshman debating team and took a conspicuous part in the triangular debate. Paul Harmell '23, comes from Cleveland, and spoke in the varsity triangular debate and the debate against Bates two years ago. Raymond S. Fanning '23, is from Chattanooga and has been prominent in the varsity triangular debates of the last two years, as well as in the debate against Syracuse last year.

NO. ATTLEBORO

EX-GOVERNOR McCALL PRAISES SPEECHES OF SYMPHONY DEBATERS

Crimson 10/11

Discussion With Oxford Is "Best Intercollegiate Debate" He Has Witnessed—Compares English and American Method of Delivery

APPROVES METHOD OF AWARDING DECISION BY VOTE

Former Governor Samuel W. McCall, who presided at the debate between the University and Oxford Monday night, said when interviewed for the CRIMSON yesterday that it was "the best intercollegiate debate" that he had ever witnessed. Mr. McCall considered that it was superior even to the debate two years ago between President Lowell and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge '71, in that the debate in 1920 was of a more academic nature, while the one Monday night was "a real fight from start to finish".

"The American style of speech-making", Mr. McCall continued, "was exemplified by the University team, which was not, as some people anticipated over-formal. Although as a general rule I believe that the frock-coated orator is best suited to solemn and memorial occasions, I do not think that the University team's manner of delivery was too pedantic. The English style, however, was conversational in the extreme so much so that their case suffered from their casual treatment, the Oxford team in its efforts to achieve a friendly connection with the audience, all but took its listeners into its lap. The Englishmen almost appeared not to care whether or not they won the debate. Although the Oxford speakers cannot be said to have made a definite attempt at wit, they were certainly bubbling over with good spirits.

"I am very enthusiastic", he declared "over the English system of having the audience render the decision, because this arangement makes the whole debate more exciting and personal, and it also stimulates the listeners to take a greater interest in all the speeches. There is no doubt that it was much to the advantage of the Oxford men to have this system in force, for their conversational mannerisms would have had little weight with judges whose task it was to consider substance rather than form.

"Many listeners were probably somewhat in doubt as to how they ought to vote, because no statement was made as to whether the decision was to be on the merits of the style of presentation or upon the merits of the question itself. I understand that the reason no such statement was announced was that the University team wished the decision to be on the first named basis, while the Oxford team, in the favor of their cause, very naturally wanted the award made on the last named considerations. This ambiguity as to the purpose of the voting undoubtedly led many people to vote according to their preconceived ideas on the subject, and not on the comparative merits of the two teams. The Englishmen, nevertheless, had a better chance of winning here than at any other place where they have debated, because Boston numbers among its intellectuals a large number of people who are warm advocates of our joining the League of Nations. On the whole", concluded Mr. McCall, "the University debaters presented the question in a most logical and methodical manner, their team work was excellent, and they justly deserved the verdict of the audience".

Crimson Oct 10

[83]

FILMED AS BOUND

WILL THEY ARGUE OR ORATE TOMORROW?

Oxford and Harvard Debaters Have Been Holding Secret Practice for Clash of Brains and Voices at Symphony Hall

Globe Oct 8

NEW YORK, Oct 7—The debating team of Oxford University, which has come to this country to bring the League of Nations before the collegiate and public notice, is looking forward to the debate tomorrow evening in Cambridge, when the Harvard team will argue against the League.

To the three members of the team, Edward Majoribanks, M. C. Hollis and Kenneth M. Lindsay, the trip to Cambridge and nearby Boston will be particularly interesting, because of the reputation which Harvard has of being one of the two universities which are known throughout the British Empire, and because of anticipation of a visit to Boston, where everything is traditionally unique to their minds.

The writer found the debating trio at the Cornell Club after they had been awarded a tie at the Columbia talking match. Majoribanks was a tall, handsome youth, a member of the Leander boating contingent at Oxford, which includes those who get into the trials crew, but do not make the varsity.

M. C. Hollis, second member of the team, was of a different type. He is known at Oxford as a clever writer and is more of the student category than his associates.

ducation Surprises Them

onneth M. Lindsay, a member of team from Oxford which recent- went to Sweden to play association ball seems to be a medium between his athletic and scholastic colleagues. He was on the varsity at Oxford and his great desire is to see Harvard and Oxford clash at that game on this continent or his. Magboll Mahwood, a native of India, may debate in place of Lindsay. Lindsay was the spokesman of the trio.

"We have debated at three different American colleges and each has been different from the others. We went to Swarthmore, Bates and Columbia. I was surprised to see the coeducational system at Swarthmore, but I like the plan for it seems to work naturally and to produce a fine college and friendly spirit.

"At Columbia we were conscious of the fact that we were talking against the biggest university in the country, and Bates likewise represented a different type of college.

"It has been a great experience to meet American students, for we have been enabled to analyze and better understand the differences between them and us. They are much the same as we in athletics, for Oxford and Cambridge are comparable in rivalry to Harvard and Yale. But here we find many men working their way through college, and that is unheard of in England.

Saw Football Game

"Your idea is obviously that which will soon become internationally current," he went on, "for your men are kept much more in touch with National affairs than ours. I don't know whether or not the working students bring about a higher class of scholarship, for in England we have more leisure and are enabled to talk things over. Labor and working collegians have a hard time in breaking into the upper strata in England."

Mr Lindsay was unwilling to express an opinion of American universities in general, because, as he said, he had not yet visited Harvard, Yale and Princeton. But he has already recognized the great difference between the systems of England and America.

At home, it seems, there are only Oxford and Cambridge in the National outlook. Each of the several colleges of each university has a strong corporative interest, but all join against each other in athletic and other activities. At the end of the athletic season, however, the university team which will oppose the other is a composite of the best men of all college teams.

"I don't know what to think of your football," continued Mr Lindsay, "although last week I saw Pennsylvania play in a match. It is something like our Rugby, but rather rougher; and we have not the organized cheering sections to cheer on the teams. The game that I saw consisted mostly in indiscriminate pushing, although I must say that the two open plays which brought scores were very pretty, indeed.

They Have Drinking Clubs

The club and fraternity system of Britain and American collegians are entirely different, Mr Lindsay assures us. Nearly all of the English clubs are carried on for specific purposes, such as the pursuit of literary, topics, art, politics, or even—most frankly—drinking. There is no horseplay, with pushing of pennies along the street when initiation comes. The only discriminatory elements of English collegiate life comes when one is a freshman. He may not ask an upper classman to tea, and if he becomes "conky" he may be ducked in the nearest pond.

The English debaters are enjoying their American trip. They never realized that the skyline of Manhattan could be so icomparable, that the lights of Broadway could be so bright, that the American people could be so hospitable and friendly, even when visitors touch upon a delicate subject. But they are looking forward to their trip to Boston. Boston is supposed to speak a different language, to eat different foods, to do different things, according to the traditions which have penetrated even so far as England. But they come without qualms; they have seen many diversified sections of our country, and each has treated them warmly and nobly. They know now that Boston and Cambridge will do the same.

OXFORD-HARVARD DEBATE TOMORROW

From the beginning of the controversy in this country on whether or not the United States should enter the League of Nations, Symphony Hall has been the scene of debates on the subject and of mass meetings for and against our entrance.

Pres A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge more than three years ago engaged in a debate there, which is still remembered, and in the campaign of 1920 Ex-Secretary of War Newton D. Baker delivered a notable address, which was one of the most eloquent pleas for America's participation in the League made during the campaign.

Tomorrow evening, on the same platform, another debate on the same subject will take place. Three undergraduates of Oxford, the best the great English university could produce, are to meet a Harvard team again to discuss the League. The Oxford men will argue for the immediate entrance of the United States and Harvard will take the negative.

English Custom Decides

Last year a Bates team journeyed to London and lost the argument. On Sept 26, this year, Oxford met Bates at Lewiston and lost. In England the custom of debate is to have the winner decided by a vote of the audience, and Bates lost by a vote of 250 to 90. At Lewiston a combination of the American system of having three judges decide and the English system was used and Bates won, 2 to 1 by the judges' decision and 1301 to 115 by the vote of the audience.

That Oxford should have chosen Bates as her first opponent, when she initiated those debates, is not peculiar, for Bates has been the acknowledged leader of American colleges in the debating field for several years. Her debating teams have won more than 40 of the last 50 contests in which they have engaged, a record that would have brought her considerable fame if attained on the gridiron.

Tomorrow night, in Symphony Hall, the English custom will be used entirely. On each program a ballot is attached which will be collected at the conclusion of the arguments, and the winner announced. Ex-Gov Samuel W. McCall probably will preside.

Harvard Team Members

The Harvard team members have been diligently practising their speeches for some time now, after having been selected by competitive tests. They are Richard S. Bowers, '24, of Brookline, president of the Debating Council; Paul R. Harmel, '23, of Euclid Beach, O, a part of Cleveland, who debated against Princeton two years ago and won his case, and Raymond S. Fanning, '23, of Chattanooga, Tenn, who has been prominent in debates at Harvard through his college course.

Edward Majoribanks of Christ College, president of the Oxford Union, is the leader of the English team. The other two speakers will probably be Maqboll Mahmood, a native of India, and M. C. Hollis of Belliol College. K. M. Lindsay of Worcester College is one of the regular speakers and may be substituted for Mr Mahmood. He did not take part in the Bates debate because he did not arrive in this country in time.

Different Debating Styles

A marked difference in the styles of delivery was noted in England last year and at Lewiston. In England the speakers pattern themselves after the parliamentary custom while the Americans use as their model the practice of attorneys at the bar. The Englishmen a more conversational, are supposed to appeal more to the emotions and sentiments of their hearers than the Americans, following the lines of politicians, while the Americans are supposed to stick closer to logical reasoning.

The Americans' delivery was described as less easy but more forcible and determined. But while the English rarely raised their voices above a conversational tone, the Americans often pitched their voices to emphasize a point. Persuasion and eloquence were the weapons of the English and force and logic the weapons of the Americans, according to the descriptions of the former debates. The English had less team work than the Americans.

Whatever the systems used by the combatants, will be well proven tomorrow night, on a subject which is supposed to be dead but steadily declines to remain dead. That American and English college debating teams should argue on the League of Nations is one indication that there is still doubt in the minds of Americans whether we should stay out of the league.

DOES A GLANCE TELL WHICH ARE THE HARVARD AND OXFORD DEBATERS?

(Copyright, Kahill Studios, Portland, Me)

THE HARVARD TRIO

Left to Right—Richard S. Bowers, Paul Harmell, Raymon S. Fanning

(Copyright, Kahill Studios, Portland, Me)

THREE OXFORD DEBATERS

Left to Right—M. C. Hollis, Mir Mahmood, Edward Majoribanks

Globe
Oct 8

[84]

WILL THEY ARGUE OR ORATE TOMORROW?

Oxford and Harvard Debaters Have Been Holding Secret Practice for Clash of Brains and Voices at Symphony Hall

Globe Oct 8

NEW YORK, Oct 7—The debating team of Oxford University, which has come to this country to bring the League of Nations before the collegiate and public notice, is looking forward to the debate tomorrow evening in Cambridge, when the Harvard team will argue against the League.

To the three members of the team, Edward Majoribanks, M. C. Hollis and Kenneth M. Lindsay, the trip to Cambridge and nearby Boston will be particularly interesting, because of the reputation which Harvard has of being one of the two universities which are known throughout the British Empire, and because of anticipation of a visit to Boston, where everything is traditionally unique to their minds.

The writer found the debating trio at the Cornell Club after they had been awarded a tie at the Columbia talking match. Majoribanks was a tall, handsome youth, a member of the Leander boating contingent at Oxford, which includes those who get into the trials crew, but do not make the varsity.

M. C. Hollis, second member of the team, was of a different type. He is known at Oxford as a clever writer and is more of the student category than his associates.

oeducation Surprises Them

Kenneth M. Lindsay, a member of e team from Oxford which recent- went to Sweden to play association tball seems to be a medium between his athletic and scholastic colleagues. He was on the varsity at Oxford and his great desire is to see Harvard and Oxford clash at that game on this continent or his. Magboll Mahwood, a native of India, may debate in place of Lindsay. Lindsay was the spokesman of the trio.

"We have debated at three different American colleges and each has been different from the others. We went to Swarthmore, Bates and Columbia. I was surprised to see the coeducational system at Swarthmore, but I like the plan for it seems to work naturally and to produce a fine college and friendly spirit.

"At Columbia we were conscious of the fact that we were talking against the biggest university in the country, and Bates likewise represented a different type of college.

"It has been a great experience to meet American students, for we have been enabled to analyze and better understand the differences between them and us. They are much the same as we in athletics, for Oxford and Cambridge are comparable in rivalry to Harvard and Yale. But here we find many men working their way through college, and that is unheard of in England.

Saw Football Game

"Your idea is obviously that which will soon become internationally current," he went on, "for your men are kept much more in touch with National affairs than ours. I don't know whether or not the working students bring about a higher class of scholarship, for in England we have more leisure and are enabled to talk things over. Labor and working collegians have a hard time in breaking into the upper strata in England."

Mr Lindsay was unwilling to express an opinion of American universities in general, because, as he said, he had not yet visited Harvard, Yale and Princeton. But he has already recognized the great difference between the systems of England and America.

At home, it seems, there are only Oxford and Cambridge in the National outlook. Each of the several colleges of each university has a strong corporative interest, but all join against each other in athletic and other activities. At the end of the athletic season, however, the university team which will oppose the other is a composite of the best men of all college teams.

"I don't know what to think of your football," continued Mr Lindsay, "although last week I saw Pennsylvania play in a match. It is something like our Rugby, but rather rougher; and we have not the organized cheering sections to cheer on the teams. The game that I saw consisted mostly in indiscriminate pushing, although I must say that the two open plays which brought scores were very pretty, indeed.

They Have Drinking Clubs

The club and fraternity system of Britain and American collegians are entirely different, Mr Lindsay assures us. Nearly all of the English clubs are carried on for specific purposes, such as the pursuit of literary, topics, art, politics, or even—most frankly—drinking. There is no horseplay, with pushing of pennies along the street when initiation comes. The only discriminatory elements of English collegiate life comes when one is a freshman. He may not ask an upper classman to tea, and if he becomes "conky" he may be ducked in the nearest pond.

The English debaters are enjoying their American trip. They never realized that the skyline of Manhattan could be so icomparable, that the lights of Broadway could be so bright, that the American people could be so hospitable and friendly, even when visitors touch upon a delicate subject. But they are looking forward to their trip to Boston. Boston is supposed to speak a different language, to eat different foods, to do different things, according to the traditions which have penetrated even so far as England. But they come without qualms; they have seen many diversified sections of our country, and each has treated them warmly and nobly. They know now that Boston and Cambridge will do the same.

OXFORD-HARVARD DEBATE TOMORROW

From the beginning of the controversy in this country on whether or not the United States should enter the League of Nations, Symphony Hall has been the scene of debates on the subject and of mass meetings for and against our entrance.

Pres A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge more than three years ago engaged in a debate there, which is still remembered, and in the campaign of 1920 Ex-Secretary of War Newton D. Baker delivered a notable address, which was one of the most eloquent pleas for America's participation in the League made during the campaign.

Tomorrow evening, on the same platform, another debate on the same subject will take place. Three undergraduates of Oxford, the best the great English university could produce, are to meet a Harvard team again to discuss the League. The Oxford men will argue for the immediate entrance of the United States and Harvard will take the negative.

English Custom Decides

Last year a Bates team journeyed to London and lost the argument. On Sept 26, this year, Oxford met Bates at Lewiston and lost. In England the custom of debate is to have the winner decided by a vote of the audience, and Bates lost by a vote of 250 to 90. At Lewiston a combination of the American system of having three judges decide and the English system was used and Bates won, 2 to 1 by the judges' decision and 1301 to 115 by the vote of the audience.

That Oxford should have chosen Bates as her first opponent, when she initiated those debates, is not peculiar, for Bates has been the acknowledged leader of American colleges in the debating field for several years. Her debating teams have won more than 40 of the last 50 contests in which they have engaged, a record that would have brought her considerable fame if attained on the gridiron.

Tomorrow night, in Symphony Hall, the English custom will be used entirely. On each program a ballot is attached which will be collected at the conclusion of the arguments, and the winner announced. Ex-Gov Samuel W. McCall probably will preside.

Harvard Team Members

The Harvard team members have been diligently practising their speeches for some time now, after having been selected by competitive tests. They are Richard S. Bowers, '24, of Brookline, president of the Debating Council; Paul R. Harmel, '23, of Euclid Beach, O, a part of Cleveland, who debated against Princeton two years ago and won his case, and Raymond S. Fanning, '23, of Chattanooga, Tenn, who has been prominent in debates at Harvard through his college course.

Edward Majoribanks of Christ College, president of the Oxford Union, is the leader of the English team. The other two speakers will probably be Maqboll Mahmood, a native of India, and M. C. Hollis of Belliol College. K. M. Lindsay of Worcester College is one of the regular speakers and may be substituted for Mr Mahmood. He did not take part in the Bates debate because he did not arrive in this country in time.

Different Debating Styles

A marked difference in the styles of delivery was noted in England last year, and at Lewiston. In England the speakers pattern themselves after the parliamentary custom while the Americans use as their model the practice of attorneys at the bar. The Englishmen are more conversational, are supposed to appeal more to the emotions and sentiments of their hearers than the Americans, following the lines of politicians, while the Americans are supposed to stick closer to logical reasoning.

The Americans' delivery was described as less easy but more forcible and determined. But while the English rarely raised their voices above a conversational tone, the Americans often pitched their voices to emphasize a point. Persuasion and eloquence were the weapons of the English and force and logic the weapons of the Americans, according to the descriptions of the former debates. The English had less team work than the Americans.

Whatever the systems used by the combatants, will be well proven tomorrow night, on a subject which is supposed to be dead but steadily declines to remain dead. That American and English college debating teams should argue on the League of Nations is one indication that there is still doubt in the minds of Americans whether we should stay out of the league.

DOES A GLANCE TELL WHICH ARE THE HARVARD AND OXFORD DEBATERS?

(Copyright, Kahill Studios, Portland, Me)

THE HARVARD TRIO

Left to Right—Richard S. Bowers, Paul Harmell, Raymon S. Fanning

(Copyright, Kahill Studios, Portland, Me)

THREE OXFORD DEBATERS

Left to Right—M. C. Hollis, Mir Mahmood, Edward Majoribanks

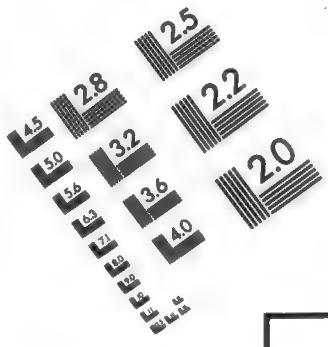
Globe Oct 8

[84]

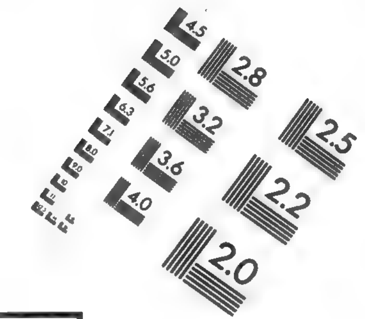
FILMED AS BOUND

REDUCTION
RATIO
14x

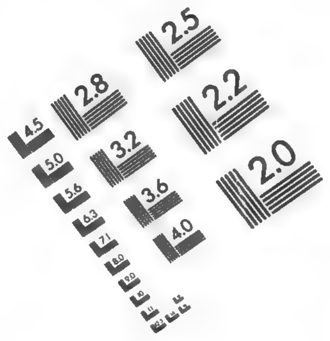
PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



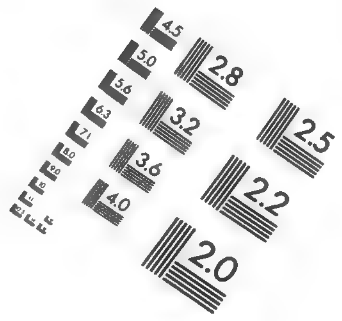
2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
5.0
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0



4.5
5.0
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
4.0
2.2
2.0



2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
5.0
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0

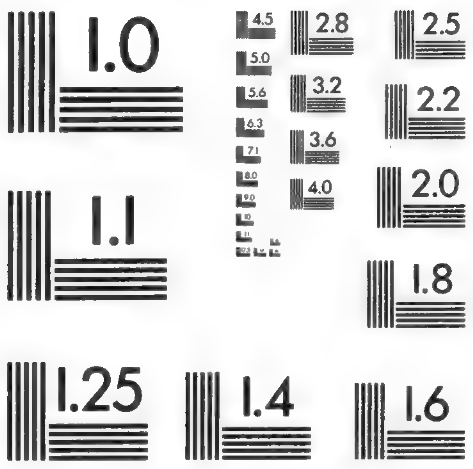


4.5
5.0
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
4.0
2.2
2.0

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



1.0
4.5
2.8
2.5
5.0
5.6
3.2
2.2
6.3
3.6
2.0
4.0
1.1
1.8
1.25
1.4
1.6

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

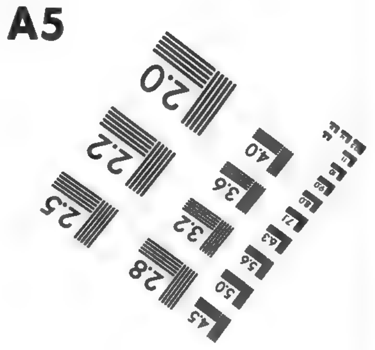
1.0 mm

1.5 mm

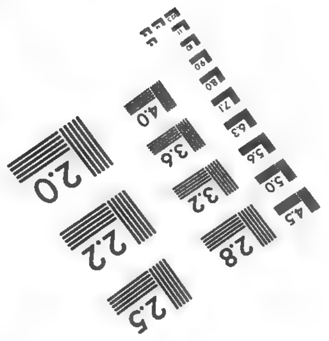
2.0 mm

2.5 mm

A5



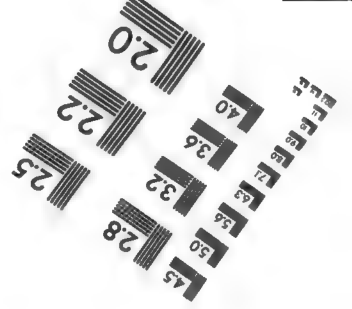
2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8
5.0
4.5



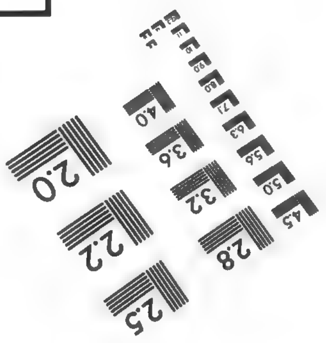
2.0
4.0
3.6
3.2
2.2
5.0
2.8
2.5
4.5

A4

A3



2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8
5.0
4.5



4.0
3.6
3.2
2.0
5.0
2.2
2.8
4.5
2.5

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

HARVARD DEFEATS OXFORD IN DEBATE

Monitor 10/10

Boston Audience Names Winner in Debate on League of Nations

The majority of an audience which packed Symphony Hall, Boston, last night, to hear debating teams from Oxford and Harvard universities discuss the subject, "Resolved: That the United States should join immediately the League of Nations," voted that the United States should not join. The verdict was given by the audience after the English fashion.

The sentiment of the audience was so divided that local pride, the desire to see the "home team" win and the wish to uphold the United States in her stand upon the League question were probably almost as much determining factors as the wit and eloquence of the British and the dogged earnestness and display of cold facts exhibited by the Americans. As it was, the vote stood 1614 for the negative, the side taken by Harvard, while the affirmative, supported by Oxford, received 1000. At least 886 persons did not vote.

Symphony Hall, which housed the historic debate three years ago on the same subject, when A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard, took the affirmative against Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, was filled to capacity, even the stage holding its quota, giving the debaters the mere rim of the platform. The tables of the debaters stood at either side of the stage, Oxford on the audience's right and Harvard on its left. Two large flags of America and Britain, standing at the tables, were the only decorations of the hall.

Samuel W. McCall, former Governor of Massachusetts, presided at the debate, and introduced the speakers. His speech was so much in favor of the United States' entry into the international alliance, at least according to the views of the Oxonians, that Edward Marjoribanks, their first speaker, thanked the former Governor, declaring that his words more than made up for the absence of one of the Britons.

The first speaker for Harvard was R. S. Fanning. By clear, logical reasoning he attempted to show that European diplomacy was, as it had always been, sinister and secret, that the United States, if it should enter the League, would but add to the confusion of European intrigue, and that through a separate course, though with hearty co-operation extended to Great Britain, it could be of the greatest aid to world peace.

He was followed by Mr. Majoribanks, who, with his hands on his hips, declared that nations could no longer exist in splendid isolation, and urged that America now exhibit that idealism which she had always shown, to look and work for better things, and to aid the whole world in its progress by joining the League. He quoted from Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, pointing out that as Lincoln had urged what was best for the country as a whole, and not a single section, so should America today stand for what is best for the whole world.

R. S. Bowers of Harvard was the second negative speaker. He pointed

(Continued on Page 4, Column 1)

INDEX OF THE NEWS

Mon

HARVARD DEFEATS OXFORD IN DEBATE

(Continued from Page 1)

the finger of scorn at the Versailles Treaty, declared it to be the cause of all Europe's troubles and the League of Nations no more than a sham to protect that Treaty, recalled fact after fact to show the League's failure, and said that, should the United States join, all its idealism would be helpless against the sinister politics of European diplomacy.

Sallies Bring Laughter

M. C. Hollis was the second Oxonian to speak. Of all the debaters he was the most skillful with his audience. Gales of laughter and applause swept through them at his sallies, his pointed remarks, his clear logic.

P. R. Harmel concluded for the Harvard team. His sharp rebuttal of many Oxford points was one of the most brilliant events of the evening.

Debating Methods Differ

The problem which faced the more than 3500 people in the audience at the conclusion of the debate was not an easy one. The two teams had approached the subject from entirely different angles. The usually idealistic Americans had taken the more practical and present view of the situation, pointing to the failures of the League of Nations, the sinister, secret diplomacy of Europe, the broken pledges made in the last great war, and the "balance of power which does not balance" existing in Europe today, which, they claimed, the League was formed solely to maintain. On the other hand, the Britons had fared forth into more idealistic fields, pleaded with the audience for America's aid in straightening out the present European snarl, which they did not deny existed, in strengthening the present League of Nations, which they did not claim was perfect, and in leading the world to see all international problems in the light of American idealism and justice.

Even the oratorical methods of the two sides had been different. The Americans had relied on facts, cold and sometimes unpleasant, with which they had seemed equipped in unlimited number. Their delivery had been unembellished. They had not indulged in flights of oratory or even humor. They had been intense, eager and earnest. They had been out to win. The Englishmen had been much more evidently at their ease. They had held the audience in the palm of their hands—had rocked it alternately with laughter and applause. They had urged and exhorted America to lend her aid to world affairs; had pictured the future as it could be with America's co-operation in international affairs, as well as the possible results of another war. Their appeal had been more personal, they had spoken as to their friends, or as a member of Parliament addressing the House of Commons, while the Americans had adopted more the method of the American lawyer, fighting his case in court.

"Home Team" Favored

While the audience was as thoroughly appreciative a group as ever listened to a debate in which the issue was so sharp, while it had never once failed to catch the subtle meaning of each smallest point the speakers made, unstinted in its applause for both sides, and evidently sincere in its desire to vote for the side which it considered best as debaters only, it was, when the time came to cast the ballots, a perplexed audience. Composed of students from the many colleges about Boston or those of advanced years, the parents of the college men and women and those really interested in so broad and vital a question as the international question at stake, with a large percentage of women, there was a natural tendency to vote for the "home team" and the stand upon the League question which the United States has taken.

The Oxford team was also handicapped in that one of its members, K. M. Lindsay of Worcester College, was absent, though the time was divided so that Edward Marjoribanks of Christ Church College and M. C. Hollis of Balliol College were given the same amount as R. S. Fanning '23, R. S. Bowers '24, and P. R. Harmel '23, who represented Harvard.

Mr. McCall's Speech

In introducing the first speaker and prefacing in general the debate, Mr. McCall said:

The curtain has not yet gone down on that stupendous tragedy that began eight years ago. One result of the World War that caused all Christendom to rejoice was that the Turk was driven out of Europe. Yet today we see Turkey defiantly issuing an ultimatum to her former conquerors and demanding again to be an European power. All honor to that little hero nation in the eastern Mediterranean which for three years bore the burden put upon her by the Allies and struggled to save Asia Minor from becoming another Armenia. Greece was summoned into danger and then betrayed by those whose battles she was fighting.

She stood as she stood at Thermopylæ and at Salamis for western as against Asiatic civilization, and although she was at last overwhelmed by a cruel foe and thousands of Christians as a result were murdered, she towers today far above those who betrayed her. The nations who have been and are in an unspeakable alliance with the unspeakable Turk have forfeited all claim to the good will of America.

World Forgets Soon

The war ended only four years ago and yet we are already forgetting. It was a war so vast and made so horrible by all the resources of civilization that all agreed that it was the first duty of the world to make a repetition of it impossible. Since that time invention has prepared the way for more frightful horrors and has put new poison gases and other deadly resources at the service of the devil.

The short cut to the obliteration of civilization is to have another world war. Either war will destroy the race or the race must destroy war. What are we going to do about it? Are we to rely upon the isolated and spasmodic action of the divided nations upon a question in which all have the common interest of self-preservation? I know the isolated action of a great nation can accomplish much, especially if it is action that means business. And amid that welter of international anarchy that holds sway beyond the Dardanelles and threatens to engulf Europe, the one word of hope for the world was spoken by the clear and mighty voice of England.

But beyond some pious observations what has the United States done? And yet we could almost see the burning of Smyrna, could almost hear the groans and shrieks. Many of the victims were our fellow-countrymen. What is the use of a nation's being great and strong if it shall not sternly raise its voice, backed by its power, to prevent such infamies? It is a pious thing to bury the victims, but it is far better to have prevented their being murdered.

And here is the question upon which we may look for light this evening: Shall we enter the existing League of Nations, or a league with reservations or the association of nations which Mr. Harding foresaw, but which to the rest of us has thus far been visible only to the eye of faith, or shall we go it alone? Nothing could be baser than to consider a question like this in the light of party politics and of the nonpartisan discussion of it we are certain tonight.

Negative Side Given

R. S. Fanning of Harvard opened the debate on the negative side. He said:

To promote international co-operation and to achieve international peace and security, America is asked to join the League of Nations. Over 100 years ago these aims were embodied by America and England in the disarmament treaty of 1817, and the 100 years' peace which followed that treaty are a testimony of the good faith of these nations. It is, therefore, eminently fitting that a proposal to extend these aims should be brought here by the men from Oxford.

It is significant to note, however, that on the centenary of Anglo-American peace, both these nations were at war, and the war in which they were fighting is a testimonial to conditions which have made a centenary of peace impossible between the other nations of the world. The nations of Europe control the League through their membership on it; they furthermore are the League because any decision of the League can only become effective when backed individually by its members, and those members are the nations of Europe.

Trusts Are Violated

We all remember the conditions of European diplomacy before 1914, and what we shall endeavor to show here tonight is that there has been no change in those conditions, and that the United States cannot in justice to the high ideals of her citizens, to her own security and peace and to the smaller nations of the world who look to her for example and help, join the present League of Nations.

In the first place, America can't be a partner to violated trusts. After the Treaty of Paris we heard a good deal about the new régime in foreign affairs that was to start immediately, and one of the newest features was to be open covenants, openly arrived at. Primarily the new day was to be inaugurated by a new method of handling the conquered territories of the central powers. We witnessed the birth of the idea of mandates, and these territories were to be handled as a sacred trust of civilization under the supervision of the League. Yet hardly had the supervision begun before plans began to arise as to the administration of this sacred trust. These territories were treated as conquered lands always have been treated.

Treatment of Mandates

The treatment of the mandates demonstrates that it is difficult to distinguish between sacred trusts and spoils of war. Is America to become a partner in these violated trusts? Not only in the handling of these trusts, but in diplomatic relations between the nations has the old régime come back. America cannot in justice to her own security and peace become a partner in and a victim of this new and invigorated balance of power. Alliances have been formed until today Europe represents exactly what she did in 1914, and that is a system of alliances and an unstable balance of power that has resulted in a powder barrel situation. Is America to become the plaything of this unbalanced balance, and to enter the League as merely one more item of a balance that always eventually falls?

The old régime has also come back in its most utterly objectionable form—that is in secret diplomacy and intrigue. Since 1917 open covenants, openly arrived at, have become almost as scarce as they were before 1914. "Open covenants, openly arrived at," is therefore a myth which does not exist in Europe.

"Europe Is League"

It does not want to exist as shown by a vote taken in the League of Nations Assembly on a question of changing Article 18. If we entered the League America would not only allow herself to be a plaything of the balance of power, but she would be entering the game with the cards stacked against her on account of those secret coalitions and alliances. And there are plenty of secret treaties, made since the war, which we know nothing about.

In justice to the nations that look to America as an aid and an example America cannot allow herself to become accesssory to violence and injustice. Is an American officer with drawn sword to stand guard at every portal of civilization? The war in Asia Minor was begun by an invasion of Asia Minor by Grecian armies, and this invasion was sanctioned definitely and explicitly by the allied governments at San Remo. Both sides were backed by official members of the League; there was suffering and savagery, yet this League of Nations said never a word. Finally, the allied governments in conference a few weeks ago committed the climax of crime, and that was by handing Armenia back to the unspeakable Turk. This is the Europe of today and the Europe of today is the League.

Turkish Situation Cited

Mr. Marjoribanks led off for the Oxonians by making friends at once of the audience when he told them he was proud, after seeing the United States and having experienced its hospitality, that his mother was an American. He pointed out that in the United States and England, where laws are observed and people do not make war whenever the whim is upon them, it is hard for them to realize the condition of other countries and understand how hard it is for them to improve. The prevalent argument in the United States against entering the League he likened to some ancient ape objecting to walking on two feet. "I trust I do not insult my honorable friends when I suggest that that same most estimable ape may have been their political ancestor," he said, and added:

The unspeakable Turk has now shown us on what a slender thread the civilization of the world depends, but apparently forced the European powers to give him what he wanted. But England and America together can defy the Turk. All over the world economic relations, trade and commerce have made the peoples one as never before, and here we come into conflict with the Monroe Doctrine, which was all very well when America found it her duty to develop her own continent. But today the nations are now dependent on each other, have common economic interests, and need a function to control those interests on a permanent basis. That sort of a function we hope will be performed by the League.

America is very dependent on the markets of Europe, and if Europe suffered America would suffer too. It is of paramount importance that America should see to it that European affairs are put on a stable basis again, and shall not sink into ruin and collapse. That needs some permanent organization like the League of Nations.

I should also like to present the league as a great moral ideal—an ideal that began 2400 years ago with Plato and has come down to us through the "Holy Alliance" and the "Peace of God." There has been no nation in the history of the world of such potential force and influence as the United States, and of the present nations in the world the United States alone can make this ideal a practical issue, and by interfering in human affairs can bring it to realization.

In answer to the objections against the League, I would say that it would willingly change its constitution if only America could see her way to join. To the statement that the League is weak, I can only reply that it is in its beginning. We should have had a very different story to tell if America had entered the League. The time is not too late now, but it is precious; that is why we are appealing to America to join immediately. It is true that the League does not fulfill the ideals of its leaders, but how is it possible to make all those panic-stricken and war-stricken nations agree on a program?

Already a League

I do not appeal to America to come in for the sake of what the League is, but for the sake of what England and America can make it. They say that the League is a super-state, which interferes with the dignity and rights of sovereign nations. The League is merely an agreement between states that are free in their relations.

The League of Nations is no super-state, and if we can achieve it, I think each nation can enjoy a greater independence and a freer liberty. For economic and military reasons, it is absolutely necessary for America to join. I have tried to hold up the moral ideal, and I would like to say that no country in the world is so admirably suited to help in the development of that ideal as America.

America is suited also in another respect, for she is in two senses a league of nations already. You are free from all our national and narrow prejudices. Italians, Germans, English, and the rest—you live all together, you have a nationalist pride and you have a high idea of American citizenship. You do not keep these virtues and practices to yourself, but share them with all mankind. In another sense you are a league of nations, because you provide in your Constitution for local government and for a central organization. If you can extend those principles to the rest of the world, you will have a league of nations that will satisfy the world.

Harvard Resumes

Mr. Bowers of Harvard, who took up the negative of the question at this point, declared that the League lacks unanimity of purpose, and that should America enter, it would but strengthen one faction or another, and add but little toward the peace of the world. He said:

America might be willing to join if her altruistic purposes could be achieved, but most European nations have shown too plainly by their policies and conduct that they are not prepared to help America to that goal. Single-handed America cannot accomplish the object set forth in the preamble to the Covenant.

America as a member of the league would meet the sinister influences which she encountered in the peace conference of 1919—influences which would only serve to negative the efficacy of her entrance into the League. America as a member of the council chamber at Geneva would have to ward off the conspiracies of every self-seeking nation in the League. America took her place at the peace table determined that the high ideals with which she entered the war should be written into the treaty of peace.

She strove to embody those ideals, yet how futile was her attempt. Canton was wrested away from defenseless China and practically handed over to Japan. The map of Europe was altered to promote the interests of the victorious powers. America resisted every article of the treaty which denied the ideals I have mentioned, but she could not penetrate the wall of diplomacy and intrigue.

European Discord

Whatever punishment we may think the central powers deserved, we cannot make a network of boundary lines and expect Europe to live in peace.

Every boundary so drawn is the theater of a possible war. The Treaty of Versailles has done this and paved the way for European discord. It is inconceivable that any proposed revision of the Treaty would ever receive unanimous support. Suppose the sentiment of the League were in favor of returning Shantung to China, would Japan be in favor of such a proposal? And yet unless Japan was, it would be impossible for the decision to go into effect. The United States would be equally helpless and unable to help Europe. Now while we find the League powerless to change the Treaty which is the source of Europe's troubles, we find that the League is the very instrument used by the powers to carry out those same provisions.

In the words of Lansing, the League is an instrument mostly conceived and destined to carry out the provisions of the Treaty of Versailles. It is a guarantor of the Treaty, and it stands not for progress but for international stagnation. If the United States were to join the League it appears that she would only help the League in perpetuating the woes of Europe. Do the people of America want the armies and forces of this country to be used in maintaining those deplorable conditions in Europe?

Article Ten Discussed

At this point Mr. Hollis, for Oxford, took up the affirmative side. He said:

The England of George V is not the England of George III. The view of England today is that peace is better than war. Experience has shown me that that is also the point of view of America.

Why do you not join the League of Nations? It is not because you are going to be outvoted by six votes to one by the British Empire. If it is, it would not be a good argument, because it is not true.

He declared he did not believe the United States would not enter the League because of Article X, because, he said, every member of the League has declared his willingness to scrap Article X if only the United States will join. He continued:

To hear some of the arguments about Article X, one might imagine that it was a question where the secretary-general or some equally sinister person of the League sends a postcard with the postmark of Geneva on it to the President of the United States, saying, "We have arranged for a war with the Jugo-slavs next Tuesday; please supply 70,000 troops."

The last speaker seemed to assume that every United States statesman was going to be outwitted every time by every statesman from Europe. I do not think so meanly of you. Will it be a fact that the United States would always be fighting in Europe about things in which it is not the least interested? Canada has belonged to the League for four years. Has it had to send a single soldier or a single dollar to Europe in order to fight in any wars in which it was not concerned? Not a single one.

Stability Needed

For trade you must have stability, for stability you must have security, and you must be willing under the circumstances to enforce that stability. If you still doubt it, there is your own record in the last war to refute your doubts, on which we are not asking you now to turn your backs, but which we are asking you to develop.

By the Monroe Doctrine you laid it down that the Spanish empire should not extend into South America. America by entering the League of Nations would have made it possible to have laid it down that the Turkish empire should not extend to the south of Europe.

It canot be that you stay out of the League of Nations because it is a guarantor of the status quo and because it is wrapped up with the Versailles Treaty. We who support the League of Nations do not all of us support the Versailles Treaty, that treaty that Lord Curzon described as "a peace that passeth all understanding."

Nations Must "Associate"

I would argue that it is ludicrously unfair to throw into the face of the League of Nations that it is a mere bevy of Mandarins sitting pleasantly upon the status quo. However contemptuously you may feel about the League of Nations, you must feel that it is either big enough to come into or big enough to stay out of.

The strongest argument that America should come into the League of Nations, without laying too much stress upon the personal equation, it would be almost true to say, is that if everybody believed in the League of Nations we should not need to have one.

Even President Harding, though he thinks that nations should not league together, believes that it is absolutely imperative that they should associate. It was a pity there was so much to do when he got to the White House that he could not do anything about it. It is not splendid to sit isolated and well fed while women and children are starving. But America's record shows that it believes that this condition should not be. We are willing to change every word in the Covenant if you will show us a good reason.

Brilliant Rebuttal Follows

Mr. Harmel followed with his brilliant rebuttal, which closed the debate. Referring to a statement by one of the speakers on the affirmative side, he declared that America's entrance into the League would create an Anglo-Saxon predominance in world affairs. In this regard he said:

Admitting for the moment that an Anglo-Saxon predominance could keep the peace of the world, do we desire such a predominance? Can we intrust the destinies of all nations, small and large, to a single race or single class of people?

We remember Wilson going over with his 14 points ringing in the ears of the world, and before he left Paris these 14 points were a mere scrap of paper, so vitiated tht they were hardly recognizable. This at a time when America was at the pinnacle of its influence, and at a time most propitious for the adoption of those 14 principles.

The second speaker from Oxford said that Canada has not sent one soldier into Europe. But he didn't tell you why.

The reason is that the League of Nations has made no attempt to stop the wars in Europe. He also said that the Treaty of Sèvres has been changed. But has that treaty been changed by the League of Nations? No, it has been changed by the Supreme Council of the allied powers of Europe. This shows that the affairs of Europe are not run by the League of Nations but by the Supreme Council.

Service Outside League

I purpose to show, in concluding the case of the negative, that the United States, while in profound sympathy with Europe and with the world, can serve the world far more effectively by remaining outside the League of Nations. In the broader humanitarian activities of the League the United States can continue to participate.

He concluded:

The great service which is open to America outside the League of Nations, is to lead a tired and distressed world into a new and brighter area of international democracy. America has shown the way to international peace. Let us hope America outside the League can lead the nations of the world to a newer, brighter era of international relationship.

Oxford Union Is Training Place For Future British Statesmen

Four Presidents of Famous Society Have Become Prime Ministers in Past Century

By STANLEY HIGH

The Oxonians who met Harvard in debate last night in Symphony Hall have been trained in what is, doubtless, the most famous university forensic proving ground in the world, the Oxford Union Debating Society. While Cambridge has produced many of England's poets, Oxford has produced the statesmen, and it is in the Oxford Union that the development of forensic art which later may be revealed in the House of Commons is first begun.

From the point of view of an American college, it is a strange and rather incomprehensible phenomenon that the union, being entirely a debating society, should be, by all odds, the largest and most powerful organization in the university. But English University men take their debating as a serious part of their preparation for participation in politics, and the questions in the Oxford Union are hotly, even bitterly, contested by men who are, themselves, firmly convinced of the righteousness of their partisanship.

The Oxford Union was founded in 1823. At the present time its membership totals something over 2000 men. Women are excluded from membership but are permitted a balcony participation in the debates. The floor is organized in much the manner of the House of Commons; the meetings are most formal and the question under discussion is settled by vote of the house.

Distinguished Leaders

It is the usual custom to select two speakers to represent each side of the particular question under consideration, and as the final speaker some distinguished representative of one side or the other, who concludes the case. The division takes place after the speech of "the Right Honorable Visitor."

It is interesting that the president of the union, which is considered as one of the highest offices in Oxford, is chosen following a debate. The two contenders for the office meet on the floor of the house in discussion of some question. At the conclusion a vote is taken and the member receiving the majority is declared elected to the presidency. Edward Marjoribanks, Oxford's first speaker last evening, was president of the Oxford Union during the concluding term of last year. Prior to his election an American, Ralph Carson, was president of the union, an unusual distinction, since in the history of the organization only two foreigners have held the presidency. Mr. Carson, by the way, won his election from Mr. Marjoribanks who debated on the question, "That in the Present State of Affairs the Principles of Conservatism Are of Paramount Importance to the Country," Mr. Marjoribanks speaking for the affirmative and Mr. Carson for the negative.

The president of the Oxford Union follows in a distinguished succession. During the past 100 years four presidents of the union have become prime ministers of Great Britain, and the following distinguished Englishmen have held the office: William E. Gladstone, Viscount Bryce, Lord Milner, Lord Curzon, Sir John Sumner, Lord Birkenhead, Hilaire Belloc, and many others.

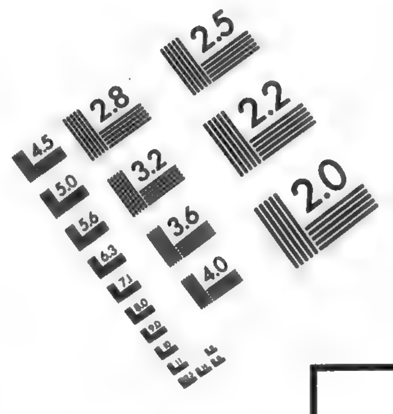
Belief in League

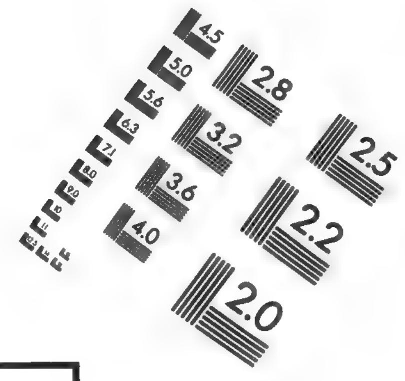
A belief in the League of Nations such as the Oxford men expressed last night is not a conviction conjured up to serve the purposes of debate; it is a genuine ideal with the great majority of English university men. Sentiment in favor of the League is almost unanimous at Oxford. In fact, a miniature League of Nations, directed by Prof. Gilbert Murray, has been organized in the university, with some 35 nations represented in membership by student-citizens of those nations. Germany has been admitted to membership, and because there are no German students in Oxford, an American student has served for Germany.

In practically all of the universities of England similar miniature Leagues have been organized. The young men of England, two years ago, hailed the League as the organized expression of the ideals for which they had fought. And although events since then have somewhat tempered the belief in the immediate possibilities of the League they have in no way shaken the faith in the idea or in its ultimate success.

REDUCTION
RATIO
12x

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

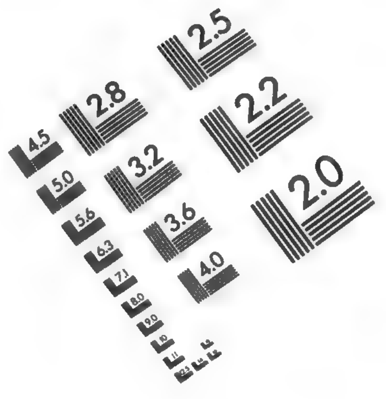


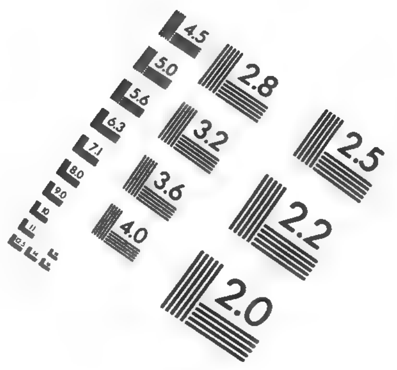


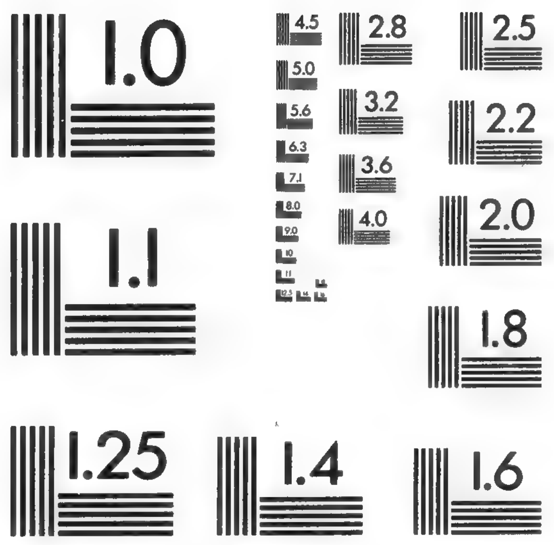
200 mm

150 mm

100 mm







ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

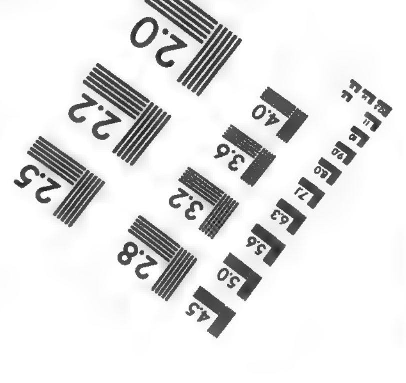
1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

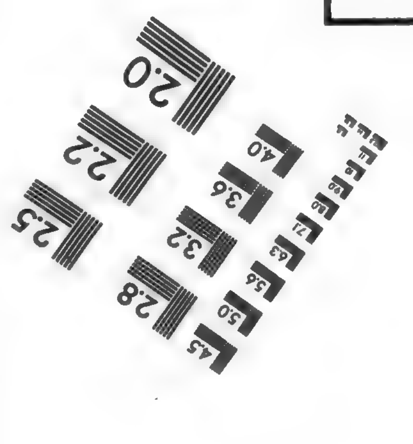
2.5 mm

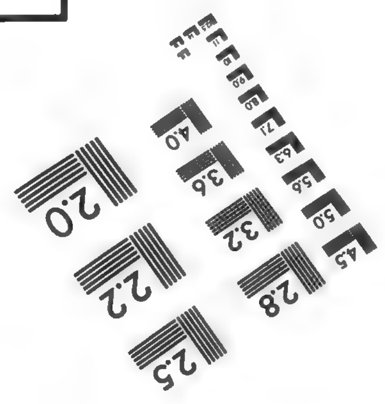
A5



A4

A3





PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

HARVARD DEFEATS OXFORD IN DEBAT

Monitor 10/10

Boston Audience Names Winne in Debate on League of Nations

The majority of an audience which packed Symphony Hall, Boston, last night, to hear debating teams from Oxford and Harvard universities discuss the subject, "Resolved: That the United States should join immediate the League of Nations," voted that th United States should not join. Th verdict was given by the audienc after the English fashion.

The sentiment of the audience was so divided that local pride, the desire to see the "home team" win and the wish to uphold the United States in her stand upon the League question were probably almost as much determining factors as the wit and eloquence of the British and the dogged earnestness and display of cold facts exhibited by the Americans. As it was, the vote stood 1614 for the negative, the side taken by Harvard, while the affirmative, supported by Oxford, received 1000. At least 886 persons did not vote.

Symphony Hall, which housed the historic debate three years ago on the same subject, when A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard, took the affirmative against Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, was filled to capacity, even the stage holding its quota, giving the debaters the mere rim of the platform. The tables of the debaters stood at either side of the stage, Oxford on the audience's right and Harvard on its left. Two large flags of America and Britain, standing at the tables, were the only decorations of the hall.

Samuel W. McCall, former Governor of Massachusetts, presided at the debate, and introduced the speakers. His speech was so much in favor of the United States' entry into the international alliance, at least according to the views of the Oxonians, that Edward Marjoribanks, their first speaker, thanked the former Governor, declaring that his words more than made up for the absence of one of the Britons.

The first speaker for Harvard was R. S. Fanning. By clear, logical reasoning he attempted to show that European diplomacy was, as it had always been, sinister and secret, that the United States, if it should enter the League, would but add to the confusion of European intrigue, and that through a separate course, though with hearty co-operation extended to Great Britain, it could be of the greatest aid to world peace.

He was followed by Mr. Majoribanks, who, with his hands on his hips, declared that nations could no longer exist in splendid isolation, and urged that America now exhibit that idealism which she had always shown, to look and work for better things, and to aid the whole world in its progress by joining the League. He quoted from Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, pointing out that as Lincoln had urged what was best for the country as a whole, and not a single section, so should America today stand for what is best for the whole world.

R. S. Bowers of Harvard was the second negative speaker. He pointed

(Continued on Page 4, Column 1)

INDEX OF THE NEWS

Monitor Oct 10

SENTENCES
LL BE IMPOSED

System for Drinking Drivers Adopted for pden County Cases

FIELD, Mass., Oct. 10—Superior Court sits here in for Hampden County cases, f more uniform as well as ntences for driving while influence of liquor and vioprohibition laws will go on. Judge Webster Thayer, the announcement, followerence with the judges of courts, said that the tre-ncrease in the number of e docket made action nec-
"bring about a beneficial n this unwarrantable and e condition of our crim-
"

peration of automobiles
r the influence of intoxiors is of the greatest im-all the people of the Com-
' said Judge Thayer. "In is kind, there is a greater n the sentences imposed other class of cases.

few judges in the district impose a jail sentence in while others will impose g from $50 to $200. Bes want of uniformity, there appeals taken to the urt. One objection to a e in every case is the fact gislature has refused by lming vote to amend the hat every man convicted se should go to jail.

the amendment received 66 votes. The whole dis-hat time was to the effect man convicted ought not jail but that some should ers not. That question left with the presiding being true, a clear line ion must be drawn by the stice, between those cases dants should be sent to en a fine should be im-line of distinction should fixedness about it. It o be varied nor changed social, or financial inhould be so uniform and that every man who wheel of an automobile the influence of intoxicat-hould understand, that if takes a chance on going l under the policy estab-
e judges of the district man takes the chance ail if he operates an auto-under the influence of liquors. That policy is as here is injury or immi-

to person or substantial perty, a sentence of im-in jail will be imposed eeks upward, according to the gravity of the of wise a fine of $100 will b

"To this policy of the district court I am wil my approval, and I sh in the Superior Court manner as I have alrea in regard to the dispos
pealed cases for the vio liquor law. This policy immediate effect."

WOOL TAX Q
PUT TO MR.

Opposition to Flat pressed by Manuf

The flat tax of 31 ce on wool, in the new Ta exclude lower priced wo
United States and forc moderate circumstances prices for clothing this else wear shoddy, declare Woolen Manufacturers A
Boston, which has called
Cabot Lodge, seeking r
United States Senator
chusetts, to explain why the wool schedule in the

Arthur Wheelock, t
tion's director, in his Senator, emphasizes th sents a group of protec
he believes there is no
for the flat tax which ris
as 200 to 250 per cent of cheap wools and drops
25 to 30 per cent of wools used in clothing people of wealth. He the tariff will deprive t people of an adequate su

Mr. Lodge is asked pa explain why he voted ag called Lenroot amendm
the tax to 60 per cent
other specified questio
"When you faced the ch solidarity in Congress a and burdensome tax clothing for the people, sacrifice the interests of
in order to keep your intact?"

RUBBER STOCK
HAVE RED

LONDON, Oct. 10—An sign in the crude rubbe the reduction of stocks of London. In the week 28 imports amounted to deliveries to 1471, ther stocks 1056 tons and lea mately 71,168, compared year ago.

Exports from Britain t far this year are 8510 much as for the whole ports to America to the were 15,673 tons, compa for the similar period o many and Austria hav slightly more than las tons, compared with 521

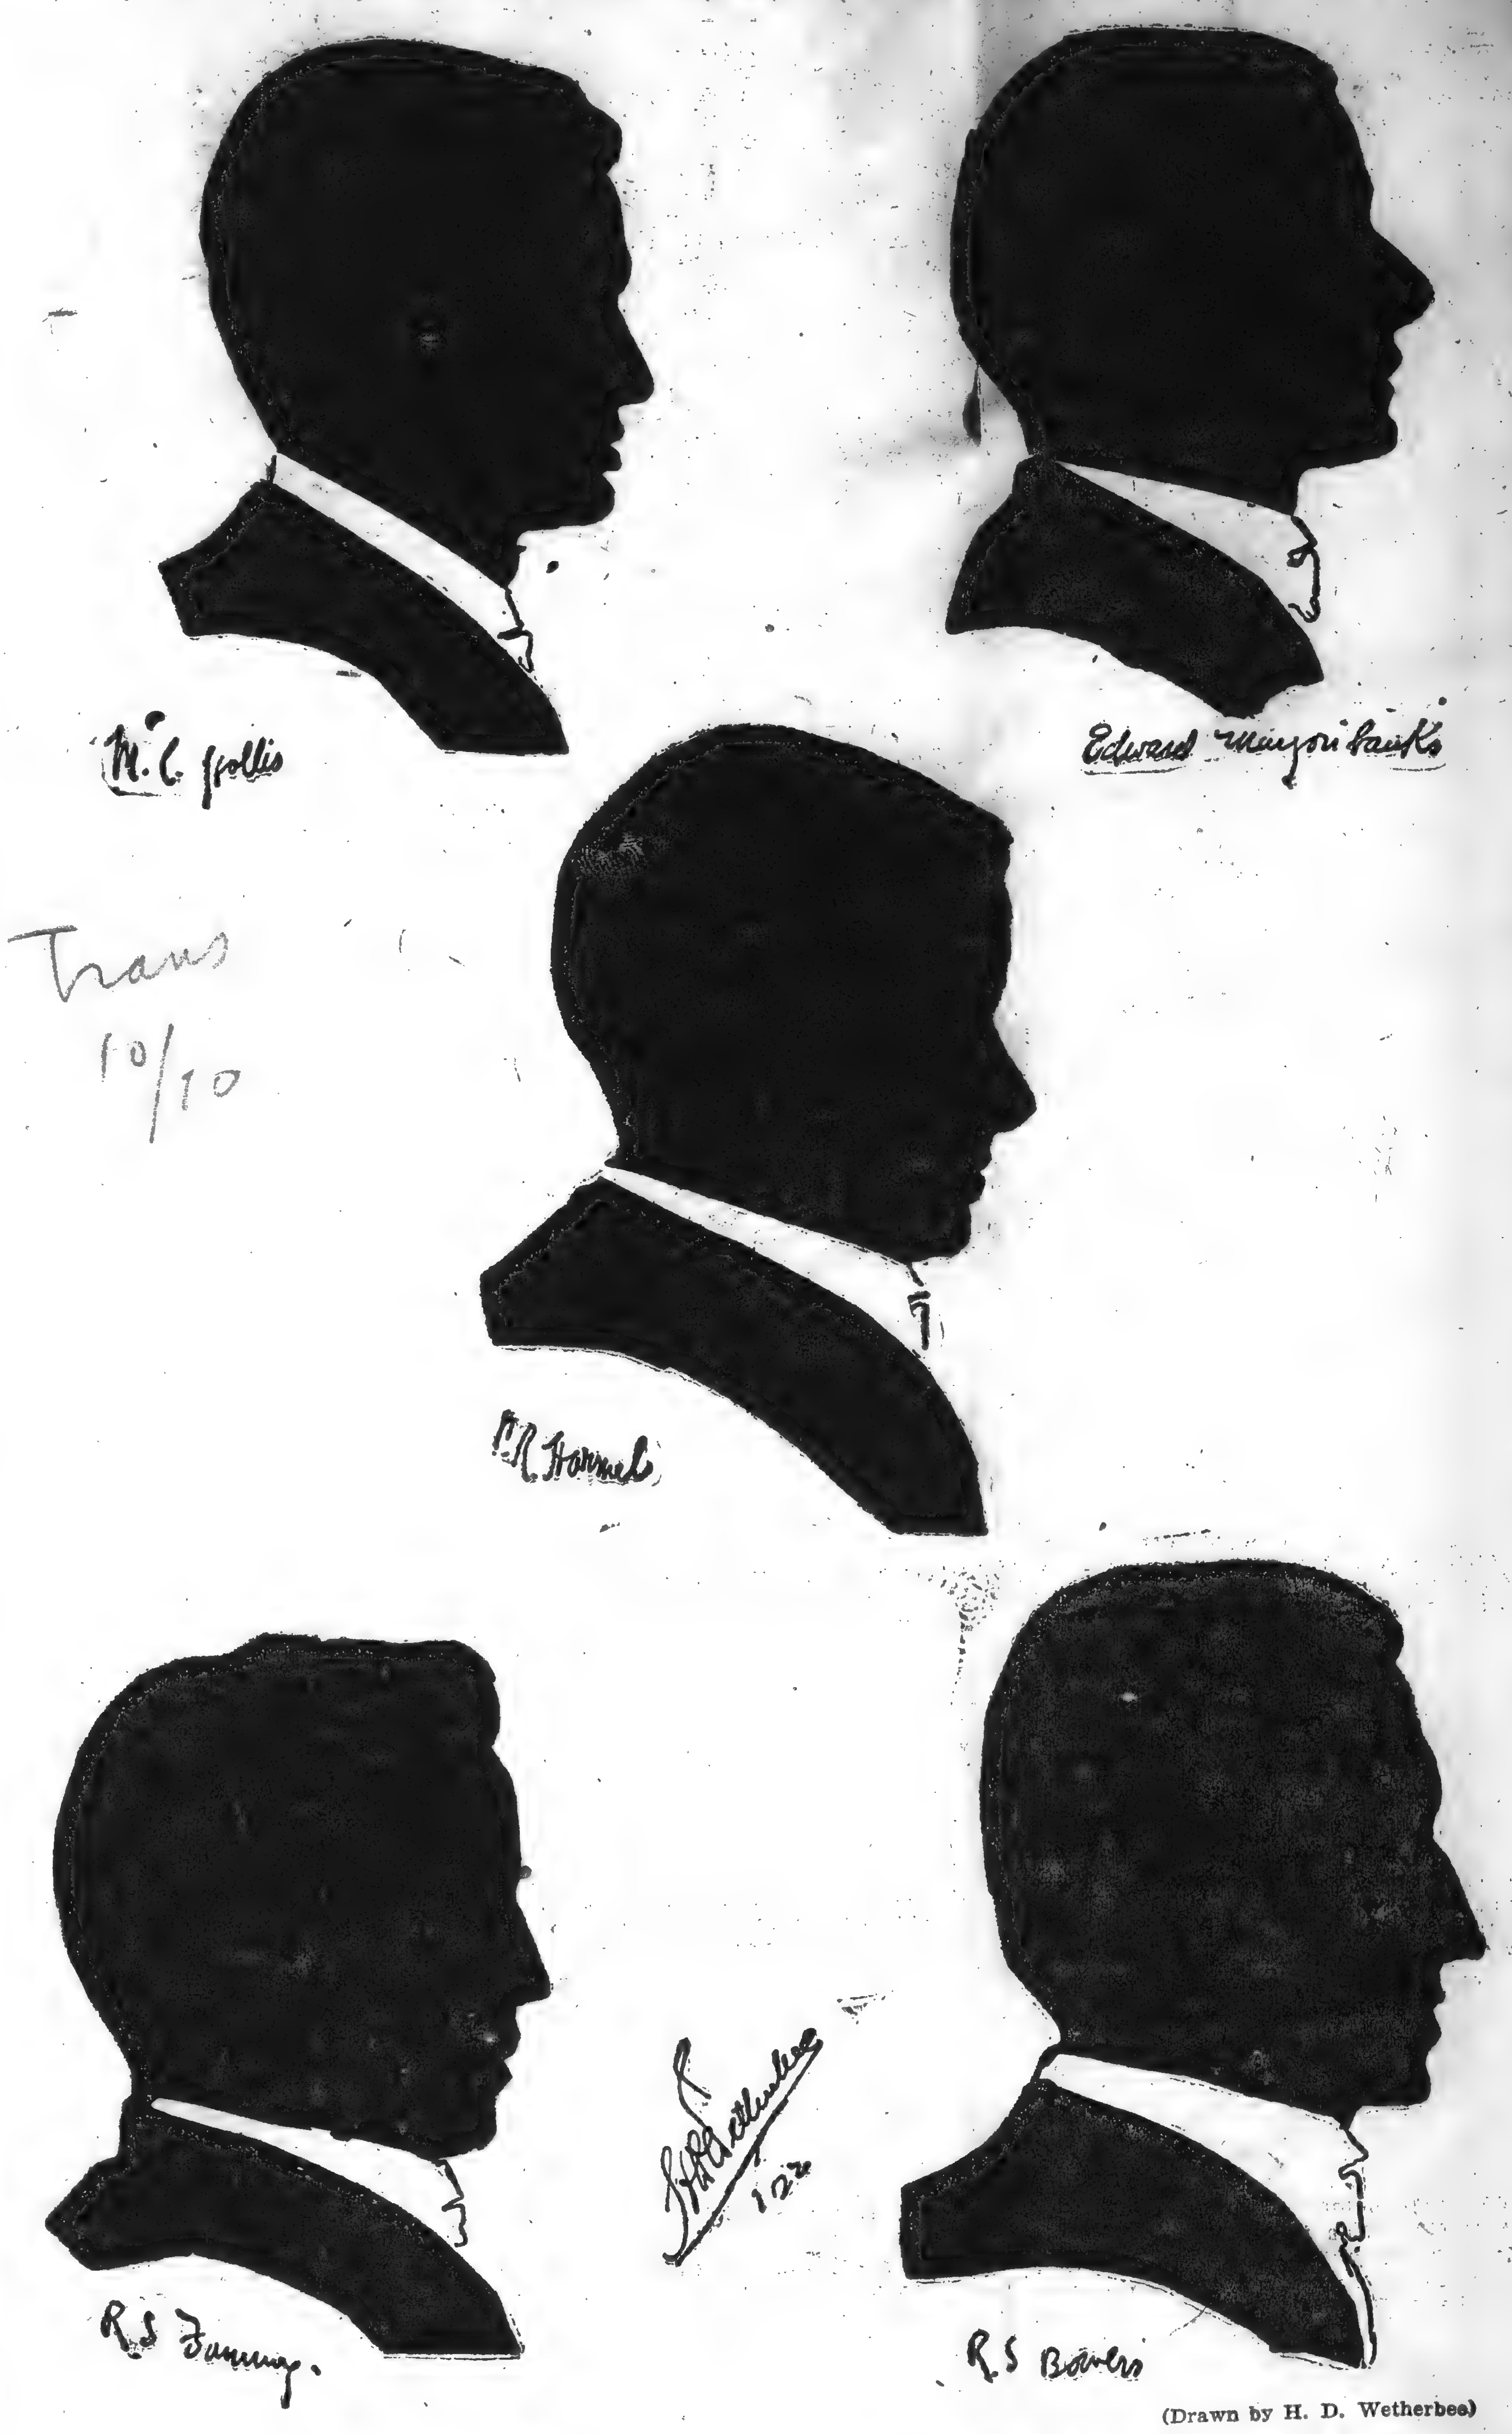
Victor and Vanquished

Trans 10/10



(Drawn by H. D. Wetherbee)

The Members of the Harvard and Oxford Debating Teams Which Met Last Night in Symphony Hall

TOP ROW—Left to Right—M. C. Hollis, Oxford, and Edward Marjoribanks, Oxford.
CENTRE—P. R. Harmel, Harvard.
BELOW—R. S. Fanning and R. S. Bowers, Harvard.

By its vote last evening, an audience of nearly three thousand men and women decided that the Oxford team, urging America's entry into the League of Nations, had not made out its case. The "score" was Harvard 1614, Oxford 1000. This first international intercollegiate debate was a brilliant affair and the visitors were given every encouragement The Oxonians were handicapped by the sudden illness of Kenneth Lindsay, one of their team, and the one most depended upon to lead the affirmative side to a possible victory. He was forced to remain in bed at the Faulkner Hospital. He has been ill for some time and up to the last moment insisted that he would take part in the debate.

As to the debate itself there was a marked difference in the speaking manner of the two sides. The Harvard men were entirely serious while the Englishmen livened up the debate with an occasional witty turn that caught the audience.

In point of fact there were a great many League of Nation enthusiasts in that audience—many of those who have been advocating the league from the beginning—and they appreciated the points made by the young Englishmen. Ex-Governor Samuel W. McCall's remarks, as presiding officer, pleased these people immensely and the first Oxford man to speak, Edward Marjoribanks, thanked the Governor, saying that the loss of Mr. Lindsay was "more than made up by the Governor."

"I know," said the former Governor, "the isolated action of a great nation can accomplish much, especially if it is action that means business. And amid that welter of international anarchy that holds sway beyond the Dardanelles and threatens to engulf Europe, the one word of hope for the world was spoken by the clear and mighty voice of England. But beyond some pious observations what has the United States done? And yet we could almost see the burning of Smyrna, could almost hear the groans and shrieks of the dying. Many of them were our fellow-Christians; some of them were our fellow-countrymen.

"What is the use of a nation's being great and strong if it shall not sternly raise its voice, backed by its power, to prevent such infamies? It is a pious thing to bury the dead but it is far better to have prevented their being murdered."

Transcript Oct 10

HARVARD WINS DEBATE AGAINST LEAGUE

10/10 Amer

Oxford University of England went down to defeat before the debating team of Harvard University.

The audience at Symphony Hall who heard the teams from both universities debate on the advisability of the United States joining the League of Nations voted for Harvard by a majority of more than 600.

The vote taken at the conclusion of the arguments resulted in Harvard 1,614, Oxford 1,000.

The visitors took the affirmative side, but their arguments in favor of America joining the League failed to convince the audience. The hall was packed to capacity.

McCALL PRESIDES.

Former Governor Samuel W. McCall was presiding officer, and the tellers of the ballots were Arthur H. Marlow, British vice-consul, and Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard.

The speakers for the visiting Oxonians were Edward Marjoribanks, the president of the team, a Conservative; M. C. Hollis, a Liberal. Kenneth Lindsay, an active worker in the English Labor party, the third member of the team, was taken suddenly ill and was unable to participate in the debate.

Harvard was represented by Richard S. Bowers, president; Paul Harmell and Raymond S. Fanning. All three Harvard men have been prominent in representing their college in debates during the past two years.

OXFORD ARGUES.

Marjoribanks delivered the first address on the affirmative side. He began by twitting President McCall and the first Harvard speaker on having contributed to the case for Oxford. He reminded the audience of the difference between law-abiding countries like the United States and Great Britain and the other peoples of the world who were in the habit of making peace or war according to their interests.

U. S. INTER-DEPENDENT.

He declared:

"The unspeakable Turk has never shown us on what a slender thread the civilization of the world depends, but apparently forced the European powers to give him what he wanted. But England and America together can defy the Turk.

"All over the world economic relations, trade and commerce have made the peoples one as never before, and here we come into conflict with the Monroe doctrine, which was all very well when America found it her duty to develop her own continent.

"But today the nations are now dependent on each other, have common economic interests, and need a function to control those interests on a permanent basis. That sort of a function we hope will be performed by the league.

WOULD ALSO SUFFER.

"America is very dependent on the markets of Europe, and if Europe suffered America would suffer too. It is of paramount importance that America should see to it that European affairs are put on a stable basis again, and shall not sink into ruin and collapse. That needs some permanent organization like the League of Nations."

Fanning opened the debate on the negative side. "To promote international co-operation and to achieve international peace and security," he said, "America is asked to join the League of Nations.

HARVARD OPPOSES.

"In justice to the nations that look to America as an aid and an example America cannot allow herself to become accessory to violence and injustice. Is an American officer with drawn sword to stand guard at every portal of civilization?

"The war in Asia Minor was begun by an invasion of Asia Minor by Grecian armies and this invasion was sanctioned definitely and explicitly by the allied governments at San Remo. Both sides were backed by official members of the League; there was suffering and savagery, yet this League of Nations said never a word.

CITE TURK SITUATION.

"Finally the allied governments in conference a few weeks ago committed the climax of crime, and that was by handing Armenia back to the unspeakable Turk. This is the Europe of today and the Europe of today is the league.

"But as long as membership in this league means becoming a partner in violated trust, becoming a plaything of an unbalanced balance of power, of secret alliances and coalitions that honeycomb Europe just so long must America decline to be embroiled is such a league of such nations."

American Oct 10

LEAGUE DEBATE IS WON BY HARVARD

Oxford Worsted in Argument According to Judgment of Audience at Symphony Hall

Post 10/10

© Louis Fabian Bachrach

EX-GOVERNOR McCALL
Who presided at the League of Nations debate.

Post Oct 10

In Symphony Hall, where Senator Lodge and A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard University, held their historic debate on the League of Nations three years ago, students from Harvard and Oxford Universities debated the same question last night.

At the previous debate many believed that the weight of the argument was in favor of the United States entering the league. Last night the audience voted, at the close of the debate, that the arguments were in favor of the United States staying out of the league, and Harvard won by a vote of 1614 to 1000.

BOTH TEAMS ALERT

The Harvard debaters, who spoke against the league, represented strongly the well known characteristics of the average American. They were intense, eager, earnest, incisive and well prepared with facts and arguments to meet their opponents from across the seas.

The latter appeared just as intensely English as the Harvard men seemed characteristically American. In fact they surprised many in the audience by their agreeable wit, sparkling epigrams and genial, charming humor. They lacked the intensity, the incisive speech the earnestness, the eagerness to win that the Harvard debaters showed, but they made up for it with a grace of speech, a charm of manner and a delightful humor and polish that contrasted strongly with the plainness and simplicity of the Americans.

What each lacked the other side appeared to have. Although the Harvard team had the facts by the cartload and the argument appeared to be strongly in their favor, the Oxford men showed such resiliency of mind and such adroitness in handling their side that it seemed as if they might finally convince the Americans, provided they had them alone over a cup of tea.

The Two Arguments

The Oxford men based their argument on the military, economic and moral necessity of the United States joining the league. The Harvard men argued that the United States should stay out because our attempt to impose our ideas on Europe at the time of the peace treaty ended in utter failure and because we have been able to accomplish more through the disarmament conference than the league has been able to do through its activities.

Oxford argued that in adopting the Monroe Doctrine in this hemisphere the United States set up the so-called super State here that the League of Nations would set up over the whole world. Thy also contended that trade and economic pressure would in the end compel us to come in because foreign trade rested upon stability and stability could be obtained only by the exertion of force to secure it. They closed with a very fine plea to American idealism.

Europe from the dawn of history had looked to the golden West, said they, for the Elysian fields for the El Dorado, for the escape from the ills and troubles of life and was America to deny that escape when she had it within her gift to grant it? Was this boon to humanity to be forever denied?

The Harvard men had the fine, high idealism of a young race all through their argument. The Oxford men showed the practical ideals of an older race.

Oxford Man Ill

The unfortunate illness of K. M. Lindsay of Worcester College, who was to speak third for Oxford, prevented his appearance at the debate so that the Oxford men were handicapped at the start by the loss of their team mate. They were allowed, however, to divide the 45 minutes allowed each side between them, while the Harvard men took 15 minutes each.

Lindsay was reported very ill at the Faulkner Hospital in Jamaica Plain last night. So far as could be determined his illness was due to indigestion, with which he had been bothered ever since he arrived here. His temperature was reported at 104 and it was said that his illness had been aggravated by depression over the condition of his mother, who is undergoing an operation in London.

The question was, Resolved: That the United States should join immediately the League of Nations. The Oxford team which took the affirmative side consisted of Edward Majoribanks of Christ Church and M. C. Hollis of Baliol College. The Harvard team that took the negative side consisted of R. S. Fanning '23, R. S. Bowers '24 and P. R. Harmel '23. Samuel W. McCall, former Governor of Massachusetts, presided. He was introduced by Rudolph Berle, the Harvard debating coach. Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard College and Arthur H. Marlow, British vice-consul at Boston, counted the votes for Harvard and Oxford respectively.

HARVARD DEFEATS OXFORD TEAM IN DEBATE ON LEAGUE

Audience Decides Arguments Opposing U. S. Entry Into Union Are Best —Vote Is 1614 to 1000

Herald 10/10

CAN'T BECOME EMBROILED IN EUROPE, SAY WINNERS

Oxford Debater Ill from Worry Over His Mother

At midnight Kenneth M. Lindsay of the Oxford debating team was reported as "resting comfortably" at the Faulkner Hospital, where he is ill with acute indigestion induced by worry over his mother, who is to undergo a serious operation in London. He sent three of his nurses to the debate.

Herald Oct10

Harvard University debating council scored a brilliant forensic victory last night in a debate with representatives of the Oxford Union Society of Oxford University, on the question, "That the United States should join immediately the League of Nations." The vote of the audience, on which the decision was rendered, was 1614 for the negative side, taken by the representatives of Harvard, to 1000 for the affirmative, debated by the Oxonians.

The debate was held in Symphony Hall before an audience that packed the auditorium to the doors, many of the men and women who attended being compelled to stand.

OXFORD DEBATER ILL

It was a brilliant affair and while the decision was against the visitors from the oldest university in England, the reception and encouragement they received from time to time during their efforts, will linger for a long time in their memory.

The Oxonians were handicapped by the sudden illness of Kenneth Lindsay, one of their team, and the one most depended upon to lead the affirmative side to a possible victory. He was forced to remain in bed at the Faulkner Hospital. He has been ill for some time and up to the last moment insisted that he would take part in the debate, but the hospital authorities prevailed.

The illness of Lindsay probably will prevent the departure of the English team from Boston until today. They go direct to Princeton, where they will debate a team representing that institution.

It is estimated that nearly 3500 persons were in the building when former Gov. McCall led the opposing debating team on to the platform. Members of the Harvard faculty and men and women prominent in the educational and social life of the city were on the stage. The members of both debating teams were given a splendid reception, the Englishmen being made to feel at home by the greeting given them by the large audience.

Both the debaters from Oxford made eloquent appeals to the people of the United States to come into the League of Nations "for the sake of the civilized world." Although they were handicapped by the fact that they were only two against three of Harvard's ablest debaters, they sturdily went about their arguments, evidently with the belief in their minds and hearts that by an appeal to the humanitarian instincts of the audience they could get it to see their point of view.

During the argument of Maurice C. Hollis of Balliol College, Oxford, he made a reference to former President Wilson, declaring that "A little Wilson is a dangerous thing, and I am not going to embark upon it."

There was the semblance of a hiss from somewhere in the hall, but the incident otherwise went unnoticed.

FLAGS DECORATE HALL

Flags of the United States and of England on either side of the platform were the only decoration. A large part of the audience was composed of women, and they responded with a will to the salient points made by either side in the debate.

To offset the brilliancy of the appeal made by the Oxford men, the quickness of the Harvard debaters was noticeable to a degree. This was particularly emphasized when R. S. Fanning of the Harvard team began his argument.

Referring to the remark of former Gov. McCall, the chairman of the evening, that the nations who betrayed England and who either are or were in an alliance with the unspeakable Turk, have forfeited all claims to the good will of America, Mr. Fanning said:

"The worst example [illegible]

[86]

REDUCTION

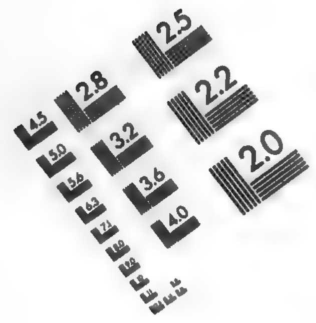
RATIO

15x

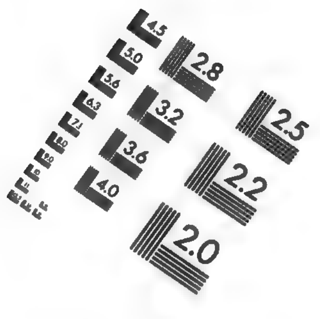
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.5 mm

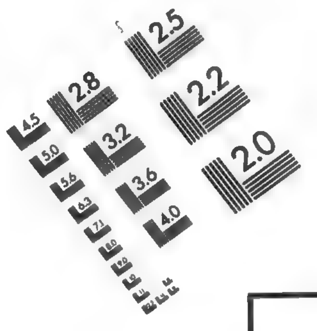


2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
5.0
3.2
5.6
3.6
2.0
4.0

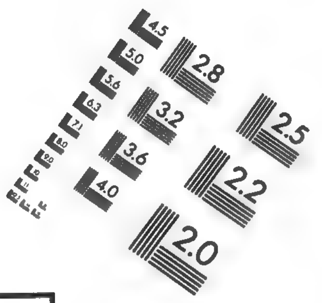


4.5
5.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
2.5
2.2
4.0
2.0

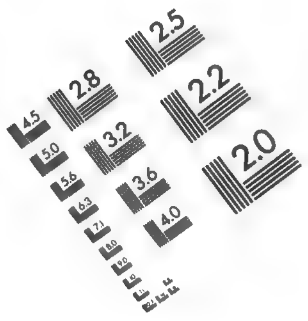
PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



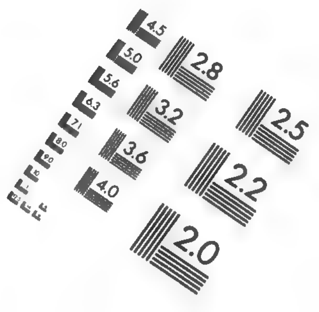
2.5
2.8
4.5
2.2
5.0
3.2
3.6
2.0
4.0



4.5
5.0
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0



2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
3.2
5.0
3.6
2.0
4.0

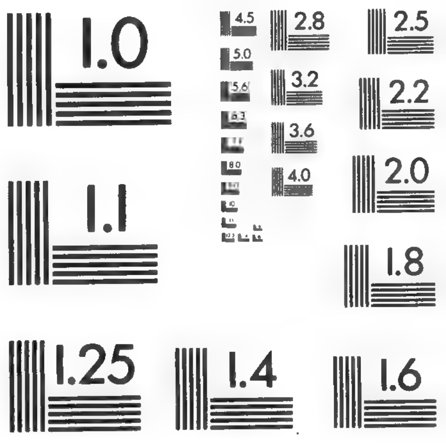


4.5
5.0
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



1.0
4.5
2.8
2.5
5.0
3.2
2.2
3.6
2.0
4.0
1.1
1.8
1.25
1.4
1.6

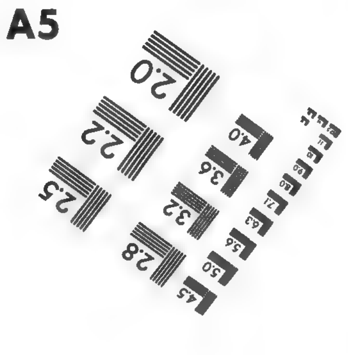
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
1.5 mm

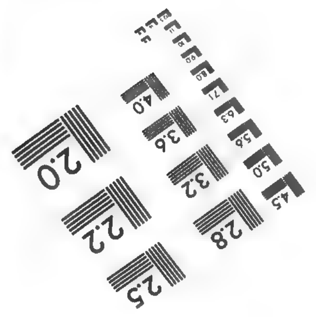
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
2.5 mm

A5



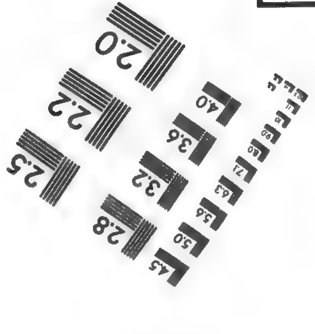
2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8
4.5



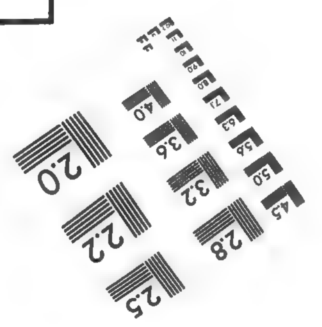
4.0
2.0
3.6
2.2
3.2
5.0
2.8
4.5
2.5

A4

A3



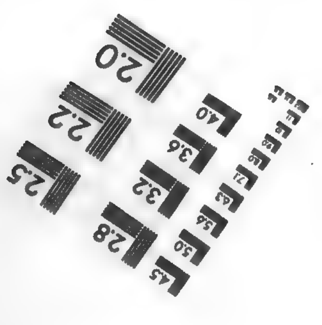
2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8
4.5



4.0
2.0
3.6
2.2
3.2
2.8
2.5
4.5

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119



2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8
4.5

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
4.5 mm

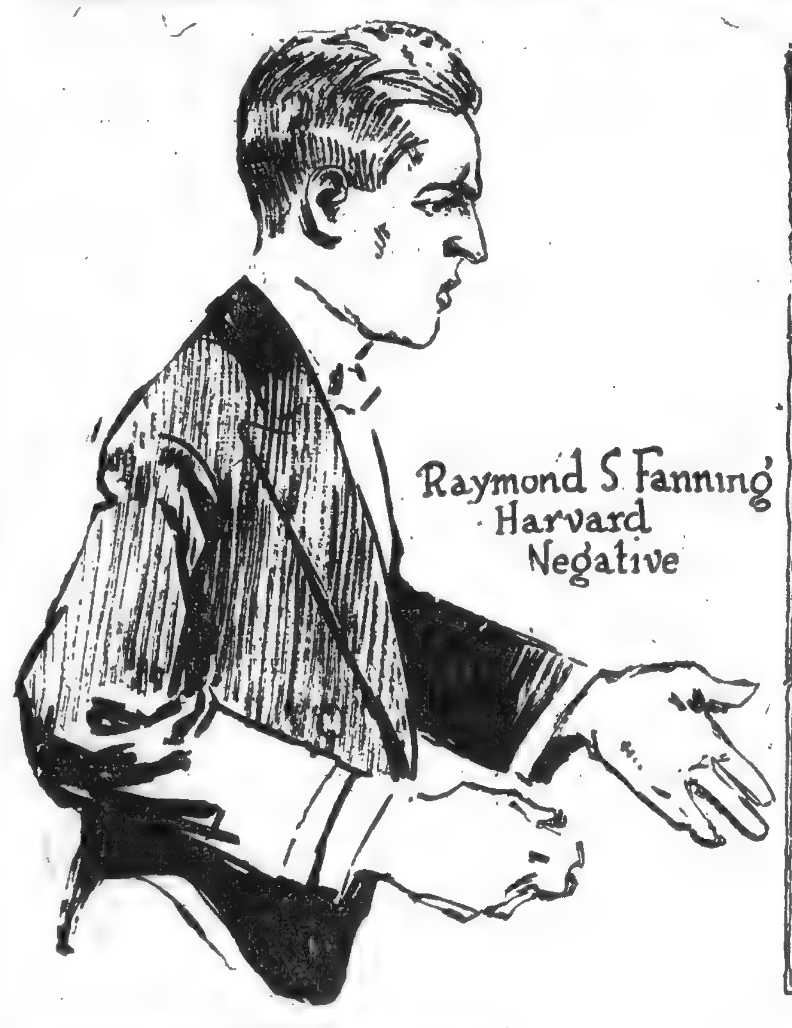
4.0
2.0
3.6
2.2
3.2
5.0
2.8
4.5
2.5

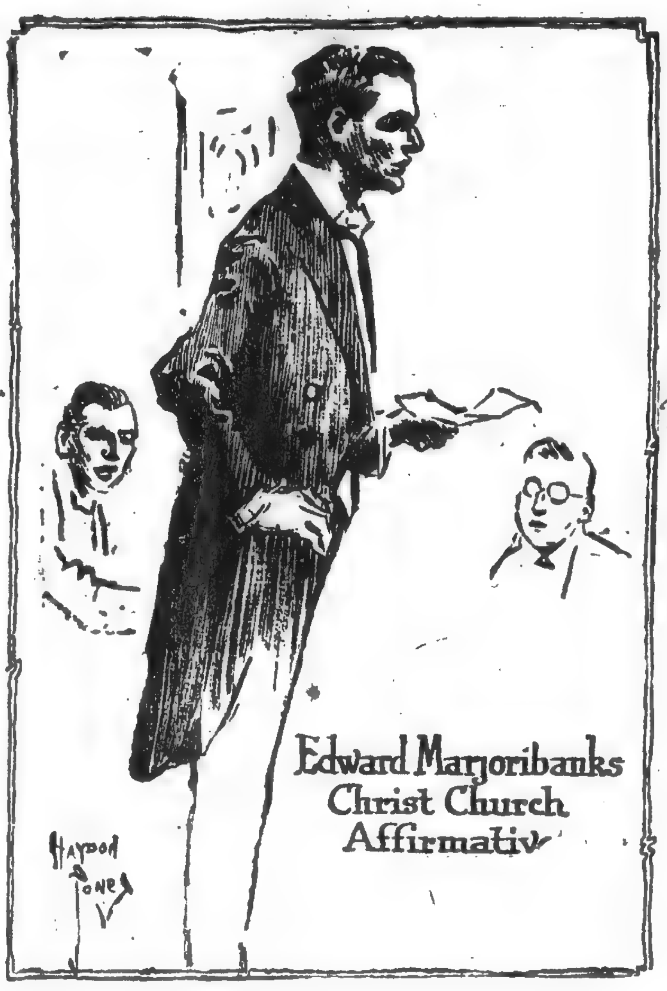
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
3.5 mm

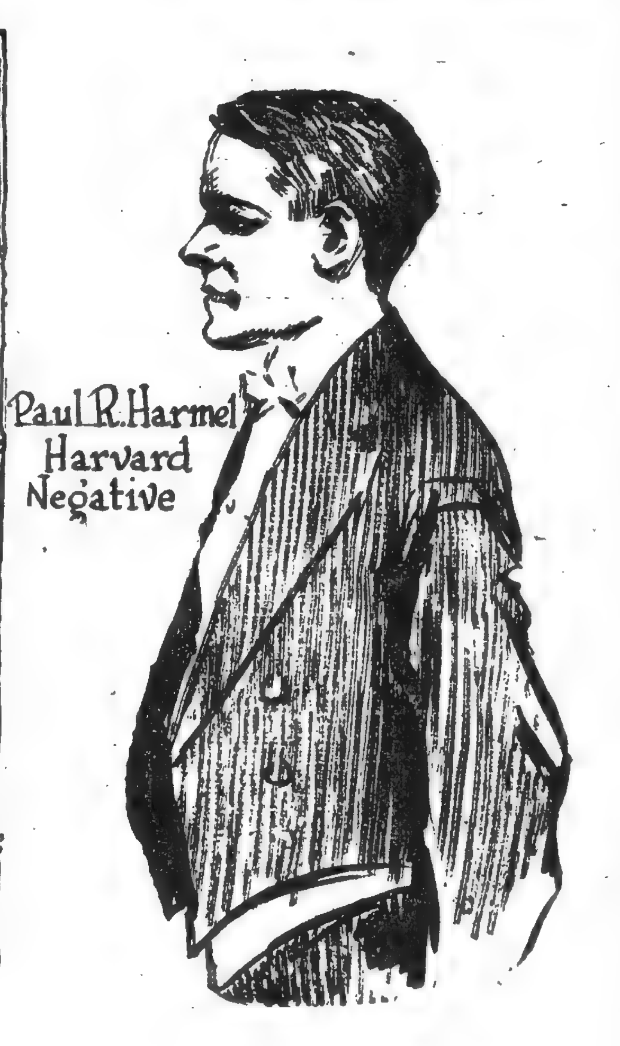
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
3.0 mm

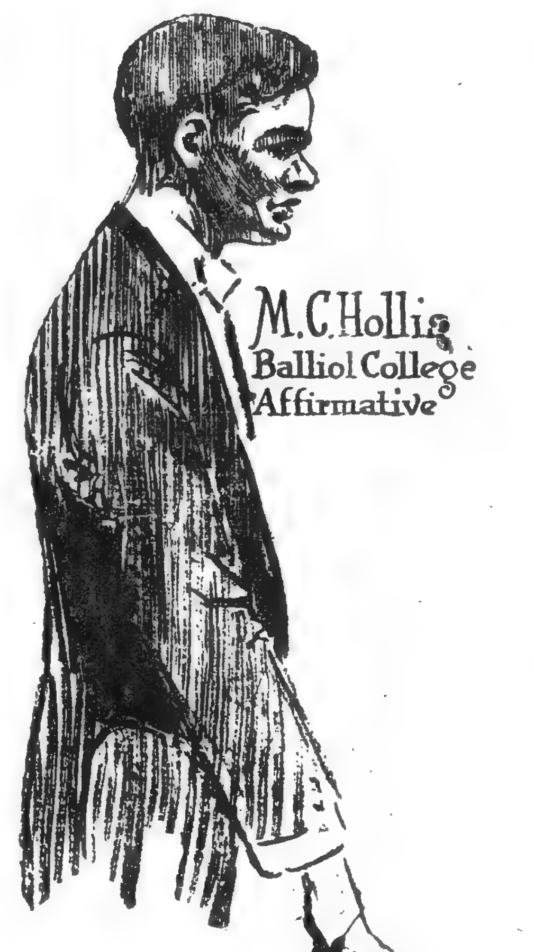
3500 Attend Harvard-Oxford Debate on League in Symphony Hall

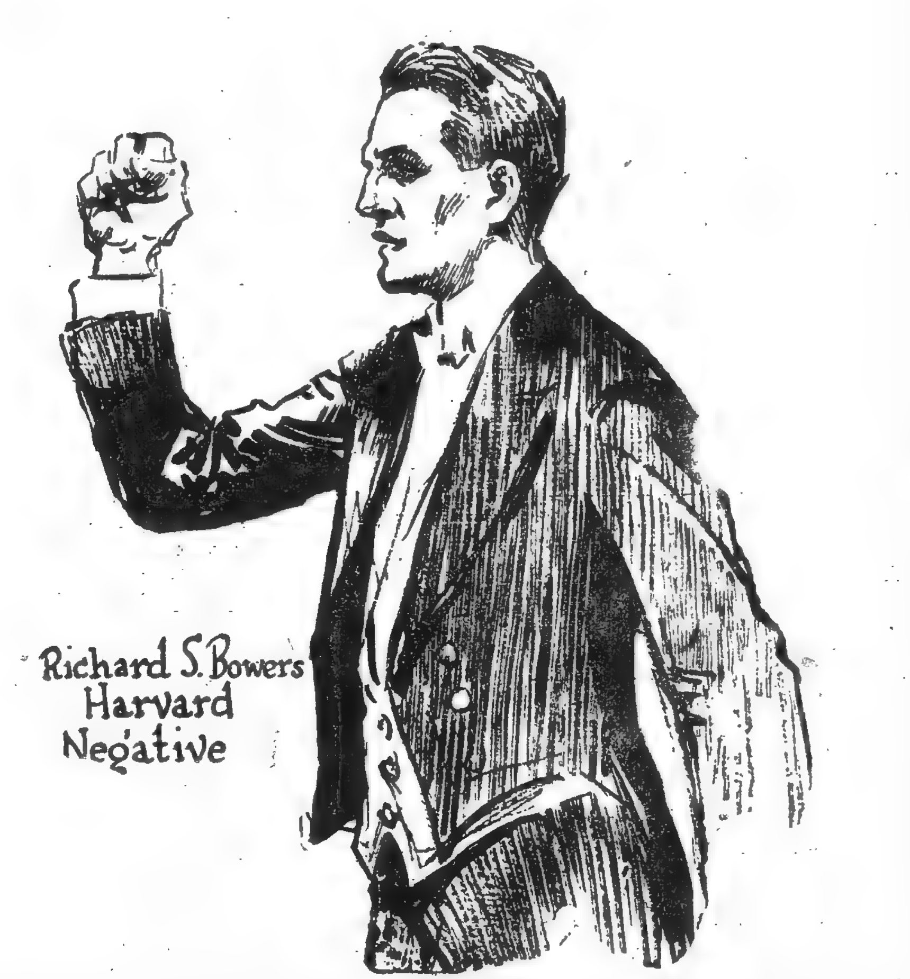
SKETCHES OF OXFORD AND HARVARD DEBATERS :: :: By Haydon Jones











Harvard Defeats Oxford Team In League Debate

(Continued from Page One)

the conditions in Asia Minor is that the war in Asia Minor was begun by an invasion of Asia Minor by Grecian armies, and this invasion was sanctioned explicitly by the allied governments in conference at San Remo. The climax came when Armenia was handed back to the unspeakable Turk."

Former Gov. McCall was given a fine reception when he started the argumentative duel between the representatives of the two great universities on either side of the Atlantic.

McCALL'S SPEECH

He said in part: "The curtain has not yet gone down on that stupendous tragedy that began eight years ago. One result of the world war that caused all christendom to rejoice was that the Turk was driven out of Europe. Yet today we see Turkey defiantly issuing an ultimatum to her former conquerors and demanding again to be an European power. All honor to that little hero nation in the eastern Mediterranean which for three years bore the burden put upon her by the allies and struggled to save Asia Minor from becoming another Armenia. Greece was summoned into danger and then betrayed by those whose battles she was fighting. She stood as she stood at Thermopylae and at Salamis for western as against Asiatic civilization, and although she was at last overwhelmed by a cruel foe and thousands of Christians as a result were murdered, she towers today far above those who betrayed her. The nations who have been and are in an unspeakable alliance with the unspeakable Turk have forfeited all claim to the good-will of America.

"The war ended only four years ago and yet we are already forgetting. It was a war so vast and made so horrible by all the resources of civilization that all agreed that it was the first duty of the world to make a repetition of it impossible. Since that time invention has prepared the way for more frightful horrors and has put new poison gases and other deadly resources at the service of the devil.

"WHAT HAS U. S. DONE?"

"The short-cut to race suicide today and to the obliteration of civilization is to have another world war. Either war will destroy the race or the race must destroy war. What are we going to do about it? Are we to rely upon the isolated and spasmodic action of the divided nations upon a queston in which all have the common interest of self-preservation? I know the isolated action of a great nation can accomplish much, especially if it is action that means business. And amid that welter of international anarchy that holds sway beyond the Dardanelles and threatens to engulf Europe, the one word of hope for the world was spoken by the clear and mighty voice of England.

"But beyond some pious observations what has the United States done? And yet we could almost see the burning of Smyrna, could almost hear the groans and shrieks of the dying. Many of them were our fellow-Christians; some of them were our fellow-countrymen. What is the use of a nation's being great and strong if it shall not sternly raise its voice, backed by its power, to prevent such infamies? It is a pious thing to bury the dead, but it is far better to have prevented their being murdered.

"And here is the question upon which we may look for light this evening: Shall we enter the existing League of Nations, or a league with reservations or the association of nations which Mr. Harding foresaw, but which to the rest of us has thus far been visible only to the eye of faith, or shall we go it alone? Nothing could be baser than to consider a question like this in the light of party politics and of the non-partisan discussion of it we are certain tonight."

Edward Marjoribanks, the first speaker for Oxford, his mother an American woman, made friends with the audience right from the start when he declared that when he thought of the amazing hospitality shown the Oxford representatives during their sojourn in this country, "it makes me proud that my mother was an American."

M. C. Hollis of Oxford caused much amusement at the outset of his debate when he declared that he was glad to come to the only city in America that has a record of having a tea party, and that he suposed he would be considered as like unto Webster's dictionary—come to America as British propaganda. "I am sure that it is the main defect of America," said he, "that she hasn't enough British propaganda."

FANNING FIRST SPEAKER

R. S. Fanning of Harvard '23 opened the debate on the negative side. "To promote international co-operation and to achieve international peace and security," he said, "America is asked to join the League of Nations. Over 100 years ago these aims were embodied by America and England in the disarmament treaty of 1817, and the 100 years' peace which followed that treaty are a testimonial of the good faith of these nations. It is, therefore, eminently fitting that a proposal to extend these aims should be brought here by the men from Oxford.

"It is significant to note, however, that on the centenary of Anglo-American peace, both these nations were at war, and the war in which they were fighting is a testimonial to conditions which have made a centenary of peace impossible between the other nations of the world. The nations of Europe control the league through their membership on it; they furthermore are the league because any decision of the league can only become effective when backed individually by its members, and those members are the nations of Europe. We all remember the conditions of European diplomacy before 1914, and what we shall endeavor to show here tonight is that there has been no change in those conditions, and that the United States cannot in justice to the high ideals of her citizens, to her own security and peace and to the smaller nations of the world who look to her for example and help, join the present League of Nations.

"In the first place, America can't be a partner to violated trusts. After the treaty of Paris we heard a good deal about the new regime in foreign affairs that was to start immediately, and one of the newest features was to be open covenants, openly arrived at. Primarily the new day was to be inaugurated by a new method of handling the conquered territories of the central powers. We witnessed the birth of the idea of mandates, and these territories were to be handled as a sacred trust of civilization under the supervision of the league. Yet hardly had the supervision begun before plans began to arise as to the administration of this sacred trust. These territories were treated as conquered lands always have been treated.

OLD REGIME RETURNS

"The treatment of the mandates demonstrates that it is difficult to distinguish between sacred trusts and spoils of war. Is America to become a partner in these violated trusts? Not only in the handling of these trusts, but in diplomatic relations between the nations has the old regime come back. America cannot in justice to her own security and peace become a partner in and a victim of this new and invigorated balance of power. Alliances have been formed until today Europe represents exactly what she did in 1914, and that is a system of alliances and an unstable balance of power that has resulted in a powder barrel situation. Is America to become the plaything of this unbalanced balance, and to enter the league as merely one more item of a balance that always eventually falls?

"The old regime has also come back in its most utterly objectionable form—that is in secret diplomacy and intrigue. Since 1917 open covenants, openly arrived at, have become almost as scarce as they were before 1914. 'Open covenants, openly arrived at,' is therefore a myth which does not exist in Europe. It does not want to exist as shown by a vote taken in the League of Nations assembly on a question of changing article 18. If we entered the league America would not only allow herself to be a plaything of the balance of power but she would be entering the game with the cards stacked against her on account of those secret coalitions and alliances. And there are plenty of secret treaties, made since the war, which we know nothing about.

"In justice to the nations that look to America as an aid and an example America cannot allow herself to become accessory to violence and injustice. Is an American officer with drawn sword to stand guard at every portal of civilization? The war in Asia Minor was begun by an invasion of Asia Minor by Grecian armies and this invasion was sanctioned definitely and explicitly by the allied governments at San Remo. Both sides were backed by official members of the league; there was suffering and savagery, yet this League of Nations said never a word. Finally the allied governments in conference a few weeks ago committed the climax of crime, and that was by handing Armenia back to the unspeakable Turk. This is the Europe of today and the Europe of today is the league.

"But gentlemen will say that America can change all this if she will but enter the league and use her influence there. Yet the aims of other nations are as high as our own, and we have seen their efforts to go in and combat these forces of international diplomacy, we have seen them forced to take sides on every question; we have seen them forced to follow national interests on every side and human interests never. We have seen new enmities made and new hates arise. In a situation of this sort America would be forced to resort to log-rolling. National interests can never coincide fully, and we might expect that if America entered the league she would time and again find herself without an ally. Change your methods before you request our aid. America is exerting pressure for reform. America would be the first to hold up the hand of co-operation. But as long as membership in this league means becoming a partner to violated trust, becoming a plaything of an unbalanced balance of power, of secret alliances and coalitions that honeycomb Europe, just so long must America decline to be embroiled in such a league of such nations."

OXFORD MAN OPENS

Edward Marjoribanks, representing Oxford, then delivered the first address on the affirmative side. He began by twitting President McCall and the first Harvard speaker on having contributed to the case for Oxford. He reminded the audience of the difference between law-abiding countries like the United States and Great Britain and the other peoples of the world who were in the habit of making peace or war according to their interests.

As to the League of Nations, the speaker conjured up the image of an ancient ape objecting to the custom of walking on two feet, since he regarded it as much more safe and so much more conservative to walk on four. "I trust," said Mr. Marjoribanks, "that I do not insult my honorable friends when I say that that very estimable ape was their political ancestor. That cause did not prevail and I do not think that in the long run the old cause of nationalism will prevail. For this old system we must substitute a higher ideal. The great motive of and sanction for the League of Nations is the prevention of war. If the last war was a terrible thing, the next will be more terrible still. It is surely reasonable for us to appeal to you to join in some strong association of nations to make such horrors impossible.

"The unspeakable Turk has now shown us on what a slender thread the civilization of the world depends, but apparently forced the European powers to give him what he wanted. But England and America together can defy the Turk. All over the world economic relations, trade and commerce have made the peoples one as never before, and here we come into conflict with the Monroe doctrine, which was all very well when America found it her duty to develop her own continent. But today the nations are now dependent on each other, have common economic interests, and need a function to control those interests on a permanent basis. That sort of a function we hope will be performed by the league.

"America is very dependent on the markets of Europe, and if Europe suffered America would suffer too. It is of paramount importance that America should see to it that European affairs are put on a stable basis again, and shall not sink into ruin and collapse. That needs some permanent organization like the League of Nations.

IS MORAL IDEAL

"I should also like to present the league as a great moral ideal—an ideal that began 2400 years ago with Plato and has come down to us through the 'Holy Alliance' and the 'Peace of God.' There has been no nation in the history of the world of such potential force and influence as the United States, and of the present nations in the world the United States alone can make this ideal a practical issue, and by interfering in human affairs can bring it to realization.

"In answer to the objections against the league, I would say that it would willingly change its constitution if only America could see her way to join. To the statement that the league is weak, I can only reply that it is in its beginning. We should have had a very different story to tell if America had entered the league. The time is not too late now, but it is precious; that is why we are appealing to America to join immediately. It is true that the league does not fulfil the ideals of its leaders, but how is it possible to make all those panic-stricken and war-stricken nations agree on a program?

"I do not appeal to America to come in for the sake of what the league is, but for the sake of what England and America can make it. They say that the league is a super-state, which interferes with the dignity and rights of sovereign nations. The league is merely an agreement between states that are free in their relations.

"The League of Nations is no superstate, and if we can achieve it, I think each nation can enjoy a greater independence and a freer liberty. For economic and military reasons, it is absolutely necessary for America to join. I have tried to hold up the moral ideal, and I would like to say that no country in the world is so admirably suited to help in the development of that ideal as America.

"America is suited also in another respect, for she is in two senses a league of nations already. You are free from all our national and narrow prejudices. Italians, Germans, English and the rest—you live all together, you have a nationalist pride and you have a high idea of American citizenship. You do not keep these virtues and practices to yourself but share them with all mankind. In another sense you are a league of nations, because you provide in your constitution for local government and for a central organization. If you can extend those principles to the rest of the world, you will have a League of Nations that will satisfy the world."

The speaker closed by quoting from Lincoln's address at Gettysburg.

SECOND HARVARD SPEAKER

R. S. Bowers '24, of Harvard, continued the argument for the negative. "The League of Nations," he said, "lacks unanimity of purpose, and were the United States to enter, instead of promoting unanimity of purpose it would merely strengthen one faction or another, and whether or not it would strengthen that faction which promoted the best ideals of the league, there would be no means of knowing. America would find herself only another factor in the European turmoil. America might be willing to join if her altruistic purposes could be achieved, but most European nations have shown too plainly by their policies and conduct that they are not prepared to help America to that goal. Single handed, America cannot accomplish the object set forth in the preamble to the covenant.

"The league, from its very character, is not susceptible of being the means towards those lofty ends. No one can doubt the sincere desire of America to help Europe. America has always been ready to make sacrifices in behalf of the more urgent needs of Europe, but we do not feel that America can help the league by joining, first because if America entered her efforts would be negatived by European diplomacy and intrigues and then because the United States would not be able to reach the root of the trouble, which is the treaty of Versailles. The League of Nations is itself unable to do that.

"America as a member of the league would meet the sinister influences which she encountered in the peace conference of 1919—influences which would only serve to negative the efficacy of her entrance into the league. America as a member of th council chamber at Geneva would have to ward off the conspiracies of every self-seeking nation in the league. America took her place at the peace table determined that the high ideals with which she entered the war should be written into the treaty of peace. She strove to embody those ideals, yet how futile was her attempt. Canton was wrested away from defenceless China and practically handed over to Japan. The map of Europe was altered to promote the interests of the victorious powers. America resisted every article of the treaty which denied the ideals I have mentioned, but, she could not penetrate the wall of diplomacy and intrigue.

"What proof more is required to show that if she entered the league she would only find herself as another factor in the European discord and not in a position to help Europe? It was in trying to help Europe that America encountered her great obstacle in the treaty of Versailles. That treaty was responsible for a multitude of ills and the League of Nations is virtually powerless to alter its decree. I could quote from Reginald McKenna, showing that the economic instability of Europe is due to the treaty of Versailles. John Keynes echoed that opinion in his book on the economic consequences of the peace, and Nitti, former premier of Italy, has issued a book entitled 'The Wreck of Europe,' in which he states that Europe is being wrecked by the treaty of Versailles and faces a new and more terrible war. The provisions of the treaty which have been most disastrous to Europe have been those relating to reparations and to the conquered territory. The French-English question has added confusion in Europe, and all of it had its origin in the treaty of Versailles.

"That treaty became a gross violation of self-determination when Hungary was partitioned and parts of it were given to the neighboring countries. In all such cases the principle of self-determination was grossly violated. Whatever punishment we may think the central powers deserved, we cannot make a network of boundary lines and expect Europe to live in peace.

"Every boundary so drawn is the theatre of a possible war. The treaty of Versailles has done this and paved the way for European discord. It is inconceivable that any proposed revision of the treaty would ever receive unanimous support. Suppose the sentiment of the league were in favor of returning Shantung to China, would Japan be in favor of such a proposal? And yet unless Japan was, it would be impossible for the decision to go into effect. The United States would be equally helpless and unable to help Europe. Now while we find the league powerless to change the treaty which is the source of Europe's troubles, we find that the league is the very instrument used by the powers to carry out those same provisions.

"In the words of Lansing the league is an instrument mostly conceived and destined to carry out the provisions of the treaty of Versailles. It is a guarantor of the treaty, and it stands not for progress but for international stagnation. If the United States were to join the league it appears that she would only help the league in perpetuating the woes of Europe. Do the people of America want the armies and forces of this country to be used in maintaining those deplorable conditions in Europe?

"The entrance of the United States into the league would involve a plague, and sooner or later it would mean the sending of troops to Europe. In the present condition of Europe the dictates of morality must be re-enforced with arms. Only bayonets can command respect. America cannot ignore these factors eager as she may be to favor Europe as regards international co-operation. The lessons of the peace conference have taught us only too well that against smooth and sinister diplomacy of the old world, American idealism is ineffective. The league is the very instrument employed by the powers to carry out those provisions. With her eyes fastened upon the welfare of Europe and the prosperity of the world, with her ideals so firmly rooted that she refuses to sacrifice them in unavailing effort, America cannot afford to enter the League of Nations."

NOT ENGLAND OF OLD

Maurice C. Hollis of Balliol College, Oxford, followed Bowers of Harvard. He spoke in part as follows:

"The England of George V is not the England of George III. The point of England today is that peace is better than war. Experience has shown me that that is also the point of view of America.

"Why do you not join the League of Nations? It is not because you are going to be outvoted by six votes to one by the British empire. If it is, it would not be a good argument, because it is not true."

The speaker also declared that he did not believe the United States would not enter the league because of Article X, because, he said, the league is unanimous in declaring that it is willing to dispose of Article X if only the United States will join.

"Even as it stands, is Article X an invention of the devil?" he asked. "To hear some of the arguments about Article X, one might imagine that it was a question where the secretary-general or some equally sinister person of the league sends a postcard with the postmark of Geneva on it to the President of the United States, saying, 'We have arranged for a war with the Jugo-Slavs next Tuesday, please supply 70,000 troops.'

"The last speaker seemed to assume that every United States statesman was going to be outwitted every time by every statesman from Europe. I do not think so meanly of you. Will it be a fact that the United States would always be fighting in Europe about things in which it is not the least interested? Canada has belonged to the league for four years. Has it had to send a single soldier or a single dollar to Europe in order to fight in any wars in which it was not concerned? Not a single one.

"For trade you must have stability, for stability you must have security, and you must be willing under the circumstances to enforce that stability. If you stilll doubt it, there is your own record in the last war to refute your doubts, on which we are not asking you now to turn your backs, but which we are asking you to develop.

"By the Monroe Doctrine you laid it down that the Spanish empire should not extend into South America. America by entering the League of Nations would have made it possible to have laid it down that the Turkish empire should not extend to the south of Europe.

"It cannot be that you stay out of the League of Nations because it is a guarantor of the status quo and because it is wrapped up with the Versailles treaty. We who support the League of Nations do not all of us support the Versailles treaty, that treaty that Lord Curzon described as 'a peace that passeth all understanding.'

DISCUSSES HARDING

"I would argue that it is ludicrously unfair to throw into the face of the League of Nations that it is a mere bevy of Mandarins sitting pleasantly upon the status quo. However contemptuously you may feel about the League of Nations, you must feel that it is either big enough to come into or big enough to stay out of.

"The strongest argument that America should come into the League of Nations, without laying too much stress upon the personal equation, it would be almost true to say, is that if everybody believed in the League of Nations we should not need to have one. Even President Harding, though he thinks that nations should not league together, believes that it is absolutely imperative that they should associate. It was a puty there was so much to do when he got to the White House that he could not do anything about it. It is not splendid to sit isolated and well fed while women and children are starving. But America's record shows that it believes that this condition should not be. We are willing to change every word in the covenant if you will show us a good reason."

P. R. Harmel of Harvard closed the debate.

He declared, referring to one of the arguments of the Oxford men that if the United States were in the League of Nations England and this country could have defied the Turks, that "the inference is that if the United States entered the League of Nations there would be an Anglo-Saxon predominance in the world, and that predominance would be relied upon to keep the peace.

"Admitting for the moment that an Anglo-Saxon predominance could keep the peace of the world, do we desire such a predominance? Can we entrust the destinies of all nations, small and large, to a single race or single class of people?"

"LEAGUE NOT IN CONTROL"

The speaker declared that the Harvard debaters had shown that conditions in Europe are caused by the existence of the old regime of secret diplomacy and the treaty of Versailles. He quoted from a report of the committee at Geneva in which the committee decided unanimously in favor of the principles set out in article X.

Refuting the argument of the Oxonians that America's entry into the league would "at one moment reform a Europe that is held strictly to the policies of the old diplomacy," the speaker declared:

"We remember Wilson going over with his 14 points ringing in the ears of the world, and before he left Paris these 14 points were a mere scrap of paper, so vitiated that they were hardly recognizable. This at a time when America was at the pinnacle of its influence, and at a time most propitious for the adoption of those 14 principles.

"The second speaker from Oxford said that Canada has not sent one soldier into Europe. But he didn't tell you why. The reason is that the League of Nations has made no attempt to stop the wars in Europe. He also said that the treaty of Sèvres has been changed. But has that treaty been changed by the League of Nations? No, it has been changed by the supreme council of the allied powers of Europe. This shows that the affairs of Europe are not run by the League of Nations, but by the supreme council.

"It shall be my purpose in concluding the case of the negative that the United States, while in profound sympathy with Europe and with the world, can serve the world far more effectively by remaining outside the League of Nations. In the broader humanitarian activities of the league the United States can continue to participate."

Here the speaker referred to the part the United States took in considering the problems of the opium trade, the white slave traffic and other world social problems, and declared that America can continue to give financial aid to the league in its world wide activities. He discussed the great success of the United States in settling disputes between Chile and Peru, the Shantung question, and in other cases where the league had failed. He referred also to the success of the Washington conference.

"The great service that is open to America," said he, "outside the League of Nations, is to lead a tired and distressed world into a new and brighter area of international democracy. America has shown the way to international peace. Let us hope America outside the league can lead the nations of the world to a newer, brighter era of international relationship."

The official tellers were British vice-Consul Arthur H. Marlow and Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard.

After the debate the Harvard Debating Council gave the Oxford team a reception and supper at the Harvard Club. The following guests of honor on the stage were also invited: Former Gov. McCall, Mayor Curley and former Mayor Peters, Consul-General Grey of Great Britain and Vice-Consul Marlow, French Consul J. C. Joseph Flamand, and George Wigglesworth, president of the board of overseers at Harvard, and Dean Greenough.

REDUCTION RATIO

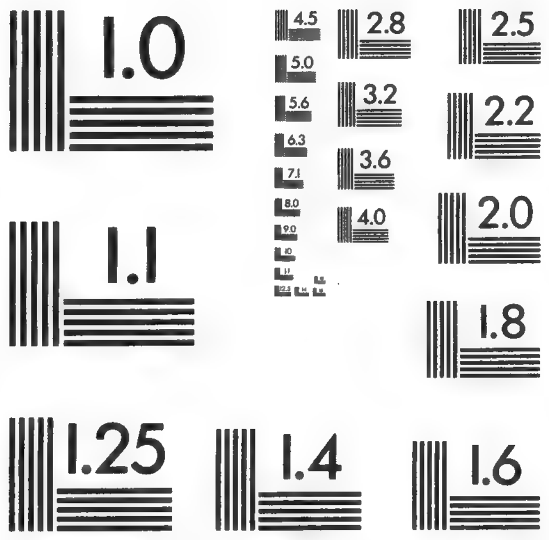
12x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm

A5

A4

A3

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

3500 Attend Harvard-Oxford Debate on League in Symp

Harvard Defeats Oxford Team In League Debate

(Continued from Page One)

the conditions in Asia Minor is that the war in Asia Minor was begun by an invasion of Asia Minor by Grecian armies, and this invasion was sanctioned explicitly by the allied governments in conference at San Remo. The climax came when Armenia was handed back to the unspeakable Turk."

Former Gov. McCall was given a fine reception when he started the argumentative duel between the representatives of the two great universities on either side of the Atlantic.

McCALL'S SPEECH

He said in part: "The curtain has not yet gone down on that stupendous tragedy that began eight years ago. One result of the world war that caused all christendom to rejoice was that the Turk was driven out of Europe. Yet today we see Turkey defiantly issuing an ultimatum to her former conquerors and demanding again to be an European power. All honor to that little hero nation in the eastern Mediterranean which for three years bore the burden put upon her by the allies and struggled to save Asia Minor from becoming another Armenia. Greece was summoned into danger and then betrayed by those whose battles she was fighting. She stood as she stood at Thermopylae and at Salamis for western as against Asiatic civilization, and although she was at last overwhelmed by a cruel foe and thousands of Christians as a result were murdered, she towers today far above those who betrayed her. The nations who have been and are in an unspeakable alliance with the unspeakable Turk have forfeited all claim to the good-will of America.

"The war ended only four years ago and yet we are already forgetting. It was a war so vast and made so horrible by all the resources of civilization that all agreed that it was the first duty of the world to make a repetition of it impossible. Since that time invention has prepared the way for more frightful horrors and has put new poison gases and other deadly resources at the service of the devil.

"WHAT HAS U. S. DONE?"

"The short-cut to race suicide today and to the obliteration of civilization is to have another world war. Either war will destroy the race or the race must destroy war. What are we going to do about it? Are we to rely upon the isolated and spasmodic action of the divided nations upon a queston in which all have the common interest of self-preservation? I know the isolated action of a great nation can accomplish much, especially if it is action that means business. And amid that welter of international anarchy that holds sway beyond the Dardanelles and threatens to engulf Europe, the one word of hope for the world was spoken by the clear and mighty voice of England.

"But beyond some pious observations what has the United States done? And yet we could almost see the burning of Smyrna, could almost hear the groans and shrieks of the dying. Many of them were our fellow-Christians; some of them were our fellow-countrymen. What is the use of a nation's being great and strong if it shall not sternly raise its voice, backed by its power, to prevent such infamies? It is a pious thing to bury the dead, but it is far better to have prevented their being murdered.

"And here is the question upon which we may look for light this evening: Shall we enter the existing League of Nations, or a league with reservations or the association of nations which Mr. Harding foresaw, but which to the rest of us has thus far been visible only to the eye of faith, or shall we go it alone? Nothing could be baser than to consider a question like this in the light of party politics and of the non-partisan discussion of it we are certain tonight."

Edward Marjoribanks, the first speaker for Oxford, his mother an American woman, made friends with the audience right from the start when he declared that when he thought of the amazing hospitality shown the Oxford representatives during their sojourn in this country, "it makes me proud that my mother was an American."

M. C. Hollis of Oxford caused much amusement at the outset of his debate when he declared that he was glad to come to the only city in America that has a record of having a tea party, and that he suposed he would be considered as like unto Webster's dictionary—come to America as British propaganda. "I am sure that it is the main defect of America," said he, "that she hasn't enough British propaganda."

FANNING FIRST SPEAKER

R. S. Fanning of Harvard '23 opened the debate on the negative side. "To promote international co-operation and to achieve international peace and security," he said, "America is asked to join the League of Nations. Over 100 years ago these aims were embodied by America and England in the disarmament treaty of 1817, and the 100 years' peace which followed that treaty are a testimonial of the good faith of these nations. It is, therefore, eminently fitting that a proposal to extend these aims should be brought here by the men from Oxford.

"It is significant to note, however, that on the centenary of Anglo-American peace, both these nations were at war, and the war in which they were fighting is a testimonial to conditions which have made a centenary of peace impossible between the other nations of the world. The nations of Europe control the league through their membership on [illegible] they furthermore are the league because any decision of the league can only become effective when backed individually by its members, and those members are the nations of Europe. We all remember the conditions of European diplomacy before 1914, and what we shall endeavor to show here tonight is that there has been no change in those conditions, and that the United States cannot in justice to the high ideals of her citizens, to her own security and peace and to the smaller nations of the world who look to her for example and help, join the present League of Nations.

"In the first place, America can't be a partner to violated trusts. After the treaty of Paris we heard a good deal about the new regime in foreign affairs that was to start immediately, and one of the newest features was to be open covenants, openly arrived at. Primarily the new day was to be inaugurated by a new method of handling the conquered territories of the central powers. We witnessed the birth of the idea of mandates, and these territories were to be handled as a sacred trust of civilization under the supervision of the league. Yet hardly had the supervision begun before plans began to arise as to the administration of this sacred trust. These territories were treated as conquered lands always have been treated.

OLD REGIME RETURNS

"The treatment of the mandates demonstrates that it is difficult to distinguish between sacred trusts and spoils of war. Is America to become a partner in these violated trusts? Not only in the handling of these trusts, but in diplomatic relations between the nations has the old regime come back. America cannot in justice to her own security and peace become a partner in and a victim of this new and invigorated balance of power. Alliances have been formed until today Europe represents exactly what she did in 1914, and that is a system of alliances and an unstable balance of power that has resulted in a powder barrel situation. Is America to become the plaything of this unbalanced balance, and to enter the league as merely one more item of a balance that always eventually falls?

"The old regime has also come back in its most utterly objectionable form—that is in secret diplomacy and intrigue. Since 1917 open covenants, openly arrived at, have become almost as scarce as they were before 1914. 'Open covenants, openly arrived at,' is therefore a myth which does not exist in Europe. It does not want to exist as shown by a vote taken in the League of Nations assembly on a question of changing article 18. If we entered the league America would not only allow herself to be a plaything of the balance of power but she would be entering the game with the cards stacked against her on account of those secret coalitions and alliances. And there are plenty of secret treaties made since the war, which we know nothing about.

"In justice to the nations that look to America as an aid and an example America cannot allow herself to become accessory to violence and injustice. Is an American officer with drawn sword to stand guard at every portal of civilization? The war in Asia Minor was begun by an invasion of Asia Minor by Grecian armies and this invasion was sanctioned definitely and explicitly by the allied governments at San Remo. Both sides were backed by official members of the league; there was suffering and savagery, yet this League of Nations said never a word. Finally the allied governments in conference a few weeks ago committed the climax of crime, and that was by handing Armenia back to the unspeakable Turk. This is the Europe of today and the Europe of today is the league.

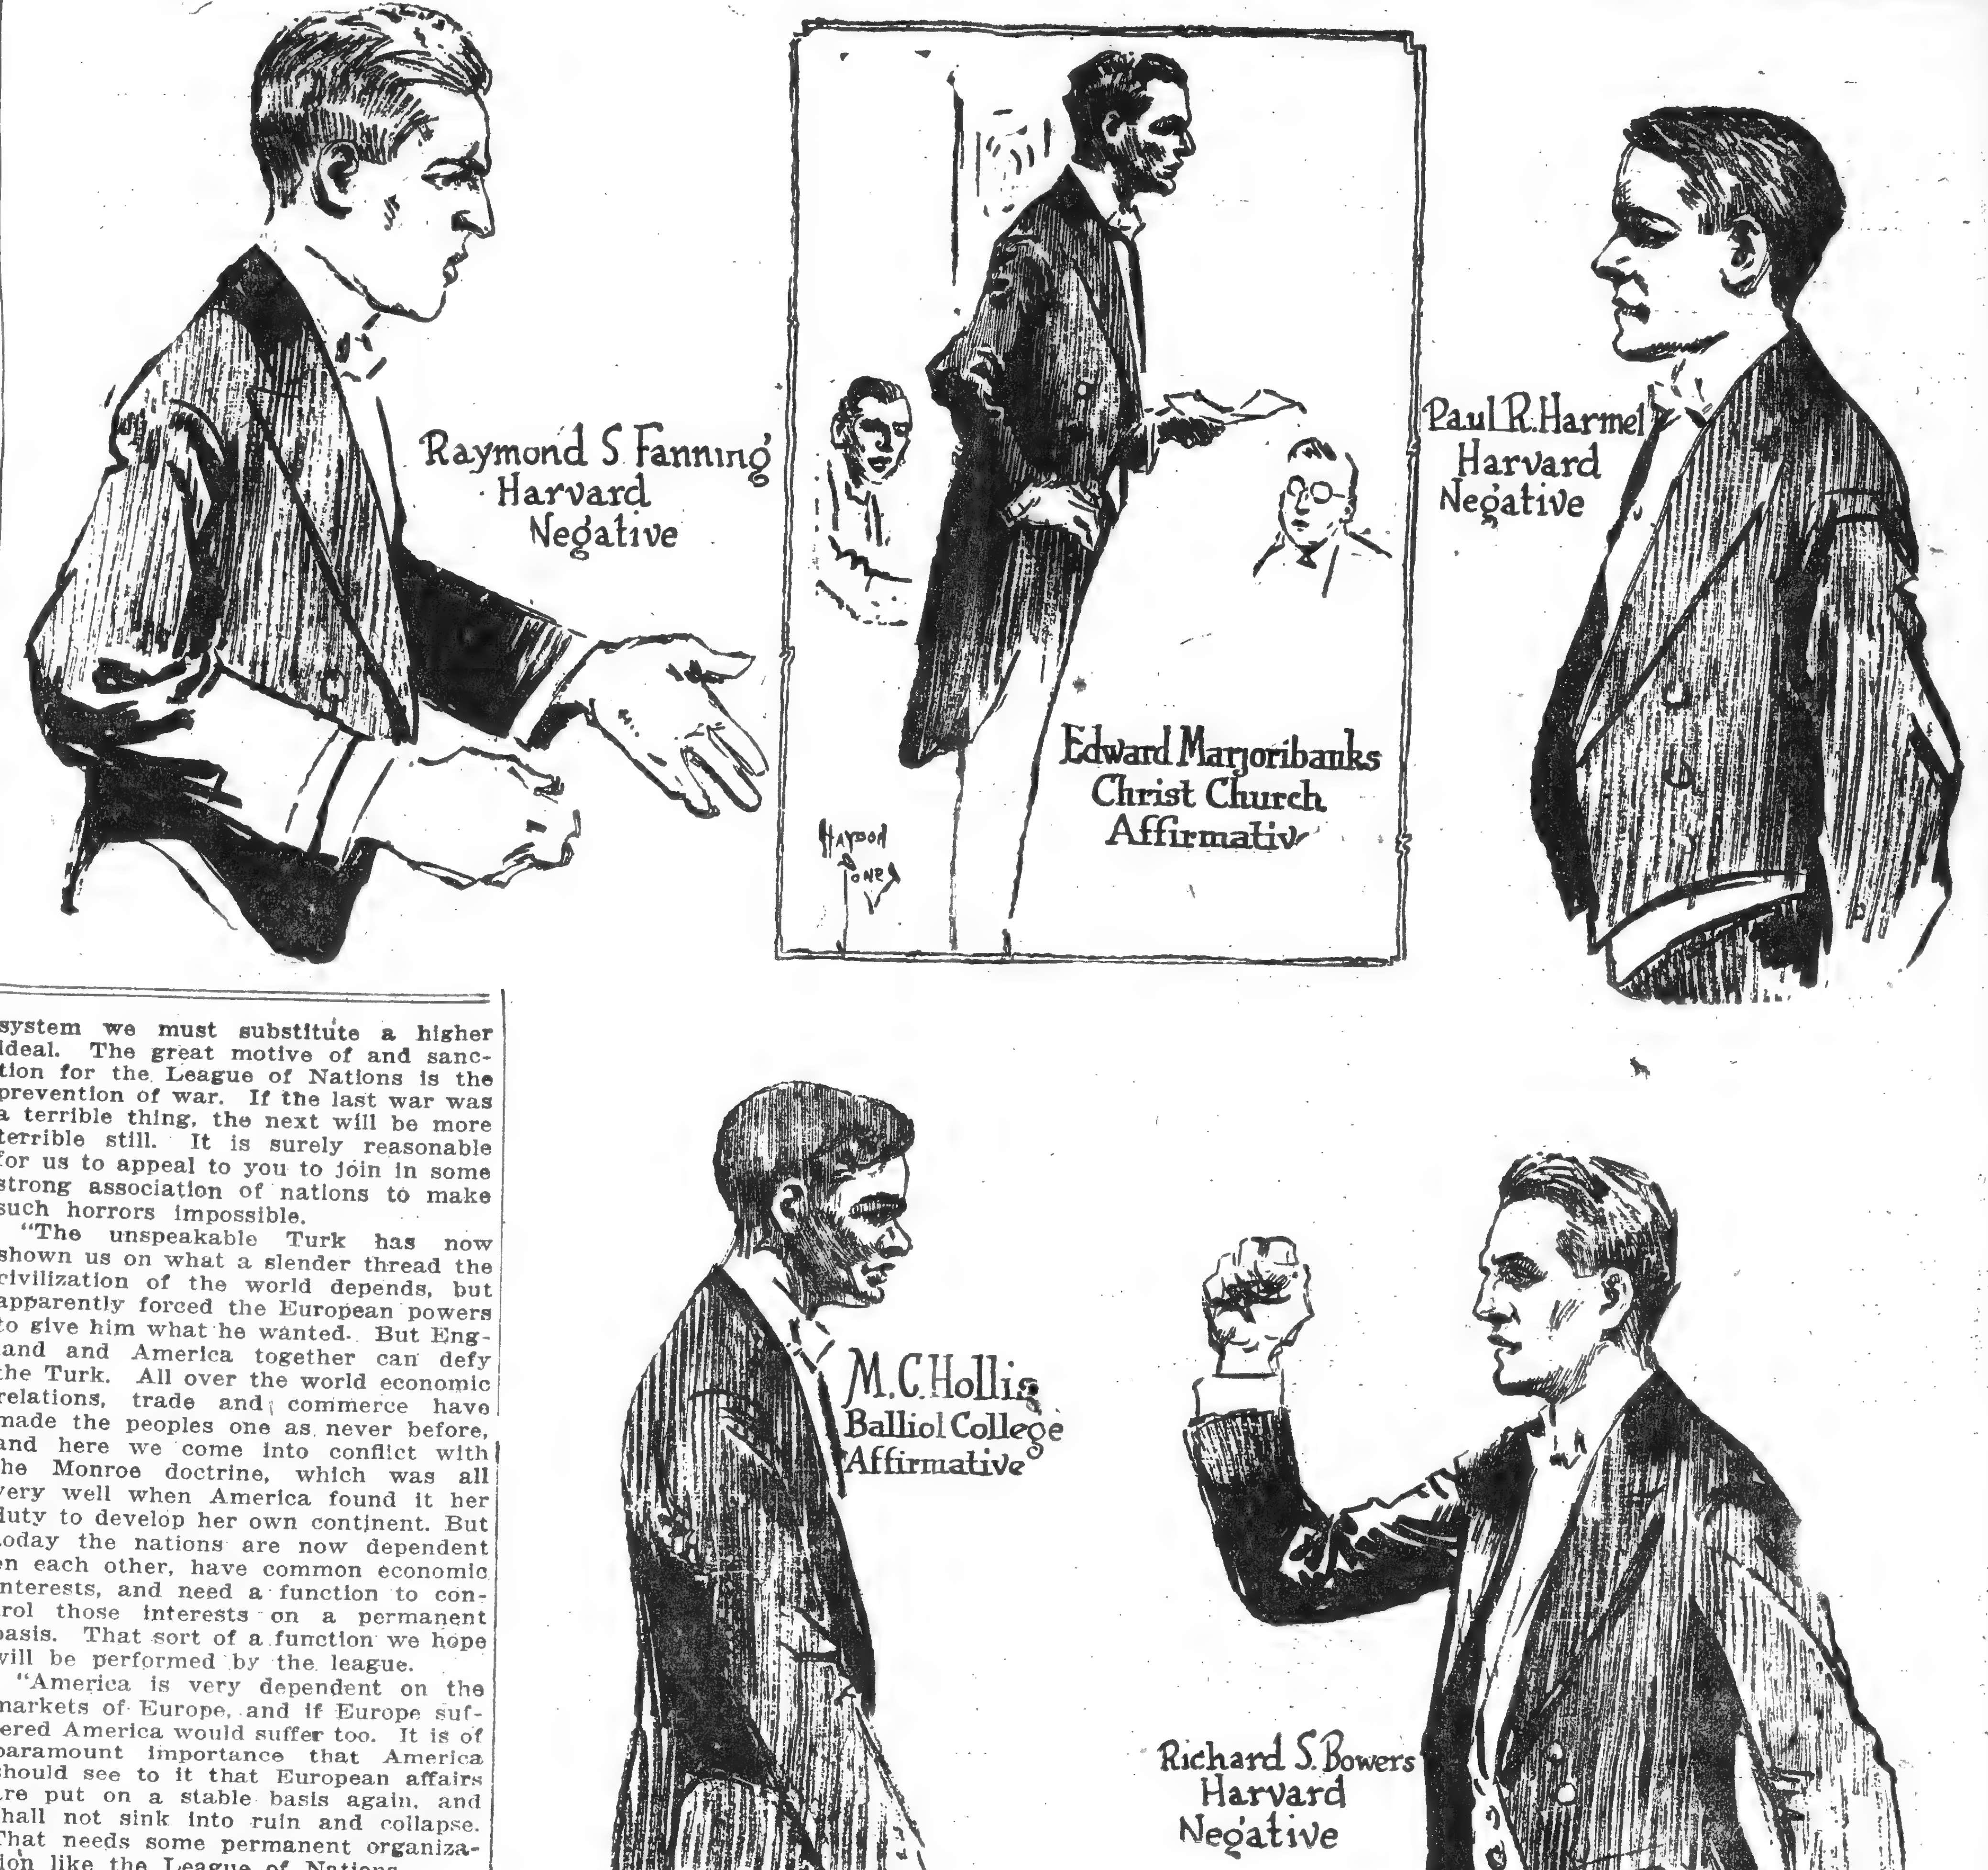
"But gentlemen will say that America can change all this if she will but enter the league and use her influence there. Yet the aims of other nations are as high as our own, and we have seen their efforts to go in and combat these forces of international diplomacy, we have seen them forced to take sides on every question; we have seen them forced to follow national interests on every side and human interests never. We have seen new enmities made and new hates arise. In a situation of this sort America would be forced to resort to log-rolling. National interests can never coincide fully, and we might expect that if America entered the league she would time and again find herself without an ally. Change your methods before you request our aid. America is exerting pressure for reform. America would be the first to hold up the hand of co-operation. But as long as membership in this league means becoming a partner to violated trust, becoming a plaything of an unbalanced balance of power, of secret alliances and coalitions that honeycomb Europe, just so long must America decline to be embroiled in such a league of such nations."

OXFORD MAN OPENS

Edward Marjoribanks, representing Oxford, then delivered the first address on the affirmative side. He began by twitting President McCall and the first Harvard speaker on having contributed to the case for Oxford. He reminded the audience of the difference between law-abiding countries like the United States and Great Britain and the other peoples of the world who were in the habit of making peace or war according to their interests.

As to the League of Nations, the speaker conjured up the image of an ancient ape objecting to the custom of walking on two feet, since he regarded it as much more safe and so much more conservative to walk on four. "I trust," said Mr. Marjoribanks, "that I do not insult my honorable friends when I say that that very estimable ape was their political ancestor. That cause did not prevail and I do not think that in the long run the old cause of nationalism will prevail. For this old system we must substitute a higher ideal. The great motive of and sanction for the League of Nations is the prevention of war. If the last war was a terrible thing, the next will be more terrible still. It is surely reasonable for us to appeal to you to join in some strong association of nations to make such horrors impossible.

SKETCHES OF OXFORD AND HARVARD DEBATERS :: :: By Haydon Jones



"The unspeakable Turk has now shown us on what a slender thread the civilization of the world depends, but apparently forced the European powers to give him what he wanted. But England and America together can defy the Turk. All over the world economic relations, trade and commerce have made the peoples one as never before, and here we come into conflict with the Monroe doctrine, which was all very well when America found it her duty to develop her own continent. But today the nations are now dependent on each other, have common economic interests, and need a function to control those interests on a permanent basis. That sort of a function we hope will be performed by the league.

"America is very dependent on the markets of Europe, and if Europe suffered America would suffer too. It is of paramount importance that America should see to it that European affairs are put on a stable basis again, and shall not sink into ruin and collapse. That needs some permanent organization like the League of Nations.

IS MORAL IDEAL

"I should also like to present the league as a great moral ideal—an ideal that began 2400 years ago with Plato and has come down to us through the 'Holy Alliance' and the 'Peace of God.' There has been no nation in the history of the world of such potential force and influence as the United States, and of the present nations in the world the United States alone can make this ideal a practical issue, and by interfering in human affairs can bring it to realization.

"In answer to the objections against the league, I would say that it would willingly change its constitution if only America could see her way to join. To the statement that the league is weak, I can only reply that it is in its beginning. We should have had a very different story to tell if America had entered the league. The time is not too late now, but it is precious; that is why we are appealing to America to join immediately. It is true that the league does not fulfil the ideals of its leaders, but how is it possible to make all those panic-stricken and war-stricken nations agree on a program?

"I do not appeal to America to come in for the sake of what the league is, but for the sake of what England and America can make it. They say that the league is a super-state, which interferes with the dignity and rights of sovereign nations. The league is merely an agreement between states that are free in their relations.

"The League of Nations is no superstate, and if we can achieve it, I think each nation can enjoy a greater independence and a freer liberty. For economic and military reasons, it is absolutely necessary for America to join. I have tried to hold up the moral ideal, and I would like to say that no country in the world is so admirably suited to help in the development of that ideal as America.

"America is suited also in another respect, for she is in two senses a league of nations already. You are free from all our national and narrow prejudices. Italians, Germans, English and the rest—you live all together, you have a nationalist pride and you have a high idea of American citizenship. You do not keep these virtues and practices to yourself but share them with all mankind. In another sense you are a league of nations, because you provide in your constitution for local government and for a central organization. If you can extend those principles to the rest of the world, you will have a League of Nations that will satisfy the world."

The speaker closed by quoting from Lincoln's address at Gettysburg.

SECOND HARVARD SPEAKER

R. S. Bowers '24, of Harvard, continued the argument for the negative. "The League of Nations," he said, "lacks unanimity of purpose, and were the United States to enter, instead of promoting unanimity of purpose it would merely strengthen one faction or another, and whether or not it would strengthen that faction which promoted the best ideals of the league, there would be no means of knowing. America would find herself only another factor in the European turmoil. America might be willing to join if her altruistic purposes could be achieved, but most European nations have shown too plainly by their policies and conduct that they are not prepared to help America to that goal. Single handed, America cannot accomplish the object set forth in the preamble to the covenant.

"The league, from its very character, is not susceptible of being the means towards those lofty ends. No one can doubt the sincere desire of America to help Europe. America has always been ready to make sacrifices in behalf of the more urgent needs of Europe, but we do not feel that America can help the league by joining, first because if America entered her efforts would be negatived by European diplomacy and intrigues and then because the United States would not be able to reach the root of the trouble, which is the treaty of Versailles. The League of Nations is itself unable to do that.

"America as a member of the league would meet the sinister influences which she encountered in the peace conference of 1919—influences which would only serve to negative the efficacy of her entrance into the league. America as a member of th council chamber at Geneva would have to ward off the conspiracies of every self-seeking nation in the league. America took her place at the peace table determined that the high ideals with which she entered the war should be written into the treaty of peace. She strove to embody those ideals, yet how futile was her attempt. Canton was wrested away from defenceless China and practically handed over to Japan. The map of Europe was altered to promote the interests of the victorious powers. America resisted every article of the treaty which denied the ideals I have mentioned, but she could not penetrate the wall of diplomacy and intrigue.

"What proof more is required to show that if she entered the league she would only find herself as another factor in the European discord and not in a position to help Europe? It was in trying to help Europe that America encountered her great obstacle in the treaty of Versailles. That treaty was responsible for a multitude of ills and the League of Nations is virtually powerless to alter its decree. I could quote from Reginald McKenna, showing that the economic instability of Europe is due to the treaty of Versailles. John Keynes echoed that opinion in his book on the economic consequences of the peace, and Nitti, former premier of Italy, has issued a book entitled 'The Wreck of Europe,' in which he states that Europe is being wrecked by the treaty of Versailles and faces a new and more terrible war. The provisions of the treaty which have been most disastrous to Europe have been those relating to reparations and to the conquered territory. The French-English question has added confusion in Europe, and all of it had its origin in the treaty of Versailles.

"That treaty became a gross violation of self-determination when Hungary was partitioned and parts of it were given to the neighboring countries. In all such cases the principle of self-determination was grossly violated. Whatever punishment we may think the central powers deserved, we cannot make a network of boundary lines and expect Europe to live in peace.

"Every boundary so drawn is the theatre of a possible war. The treaty of Versailles has done this and paved the way for European discord. It is inconceivable that any proposed revision of the treaty would ever receive unanimous support. Suppose the sentiment of the league were in favor of returning Shantung to China, would Japan be in favor of such a proposal? And yet unless Japan was, it would be impossible for the decision to go into effect. The United States would be equally helpless and unable to help Europe. Now while we find the league powerless to change the treaty which is the source of Europe's troubles, we find that the league is the very instrument used by the powers to carry out those same provisions.

"In the words of Lansing the league is an instrument mostly conceived and destined to carry out the provisions of the treaty of Versailles. It is a guarantor of the treaty, and it stands not for progress but for international stagnation. If the United States were to join the league it appears that she would only help the league in perpetuating the woes of Europe. Do the people of America want the armies and forces of this country to be used in maintaining those deplorable conditions in Europe?

"The entrance of the United States into the league would involve a plague, and sooner or later it would mean the sending of troops to Europe. In the present condition of Europe the dictates of morality must be re-enforced with arms. Only bayonets can command respect. America cannot ignore these factors eager as she may be to favor Europe as regards international co-operation. The lessons of the peace conference have taught us only too well that against smooth and sinister diplomacy of the old world, American idealism is ineffective. The league is the very instrument employed by the powers to carry out those provisions. With her eyes fastened upon the welfare of Europe and the prosperity of the world, with her ideals so firmly rooted that she refuses to sacrifice them in unavailing effort, America cannot afford to enter the League of Nations."

NOT ENGLAND OF OLD

Maurice C. Hollis of Balliol College, Oxford, followed Bowers of Harvard. He spoke in part as follows:

"The England of George V is not the England of George III. The point of England today is that peace is better than war. Experience has shown me that that is also the point of view of America.

"Why do you not join the League of Nations? It is not because you are going to be outvoted by six votes to one by the British empire. If it is, it would not be a good argument, because it is not true."

The speaker also declared that he did not believe the United States would not enter the league because of Article X, because, he said, the league is unanimous in declaring that it is willing to dispose of Article X if only the United States will join.

"Even as it stands, is Article X an invention of the devil?" he asked. "To hear some of the arguments about Article X, one might imagine that it was a question where the secretary-general or some equally sinister person of the league sends a postcard with the postmark of Geneva on it to the President of the United States, saying, 'We have arranged for a war with the Jugo-Slavs next Tuesday, please supply 70,000 troops.'

"The last speaker seemed to assume that every United States statesman was going to be outwitted every time by every statesman from Europe. I do not think so meanly of you. Will it be a fact that the United States would always be fighting in Europe about things in which it is not the least interested? Canada has belonged to the league for four years. Has it had to send a single soldier or a single dollar to Europe in order to fight in any wars in which it was not concerned? Not a single one.

"For trade you must have stability, for stability you must have security, and you must be willing under the circumstances to enforce that stability. If you stilll doubt it, there is your own record in the last war to refute your doubts, on which we are not asking you now to turn your back are asking you to devel

"By the Monroe Doc down that the Spanish not extend into South A by entering the League have made it possible down that the Turkish not extend to the south
"It cannot be that you
League of Nations beca
antor of the status quo is wrapped up with treaty. We who supp
of Nations do not all of Versailles treaty, that t
Curzon described as passeth all understandi

DISCUSSES HA

"I would argue that unfair to throw into t League of Nations tha bevy of Mandarins sit upon the status quo.
temptuously you may League of Nations, you it is either big enough big enough to stay out
"The strongest argume should come into the tions, without laying to upon the personal equat almost true to say, is th believed in the League should not need to ha
President Harding, tho that nations should not believes that it is absolu that they should associ puty there was so much got to the White House not do anything about splendid to sit isolated an women and children are America's record shows that this condition shoul are willing to change eve covenant if you will sh reason."
P. R. Harmel of Harv debate.
He declared, referring arguments of the Oxfor the United States were of Nations England and could have defied the Tu inference is that if the entered the League of would be an Anglo-Saxon in the world, and that would be relied upon to k
"Admitting for the mo
Anglo-Saxon predominan
the peace of the world, such a predominance? C
the destinies of all natio large, to a single race or people?"

"LEAGUE NOT IN C

The speaker declared vard debaters had show tions in Europe are caus istence of the old regime plomacy and the treaty
He quoted from a report o tee at Geneva in which decided unanimously in principles set out in artic
Refuting the argument
lans that America's en league would "at one mom
Europe that is held st policies of the old dipl
speaker declared:
"We remember Wilson with his 14 points ringing of the world, and before these 14 points were a n paper, so vitiated that the recognizable. This at a
America was at the pinna fluence, and at a time m for the adoption of those 1
"The second speaker said that Canada has not dier into Europe. But I you why. The reason is tha of Nations has made n
stop the wars in Europe.
that the treaty of Sèvr changed. But has that changed by the League
No, it has been changed
preme council of the allie Europe. This shows that Europe are not run by th
Nations, but by the supre
"It shall be my purpose
the case of the negative tha
States, while in profound sy Europe and with the world the world far more effect maining outside the League
In the broader humanitari of the league the United continue to participate."
Here the speaker referred the United States took in the problems of the opium white slave traffic and othe cial problems, and declared ica can continue to give fina the league in its world wid
He discussed the great suc
United States in settling tween Chile and Peru, th question, and in other case league had failed. He refe the success of the Washi ference.
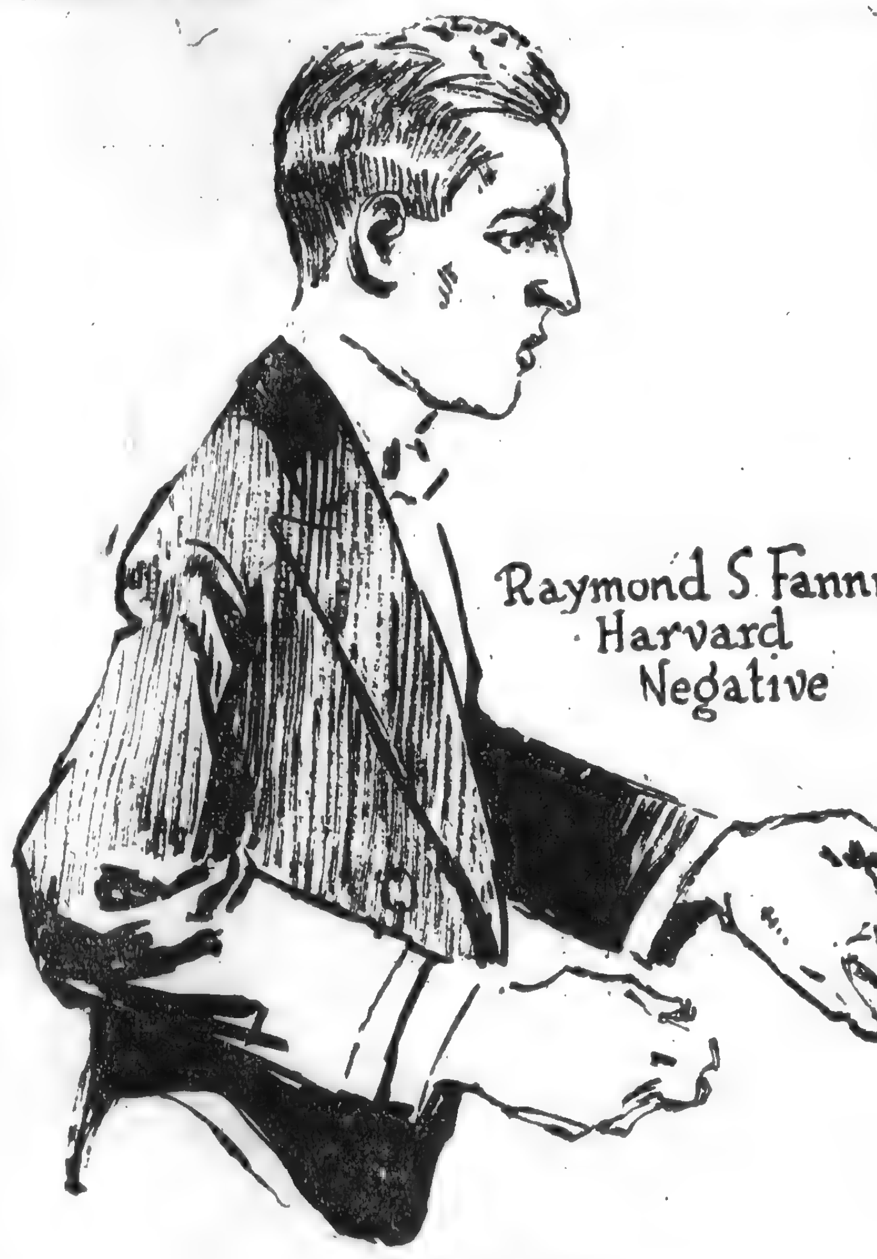
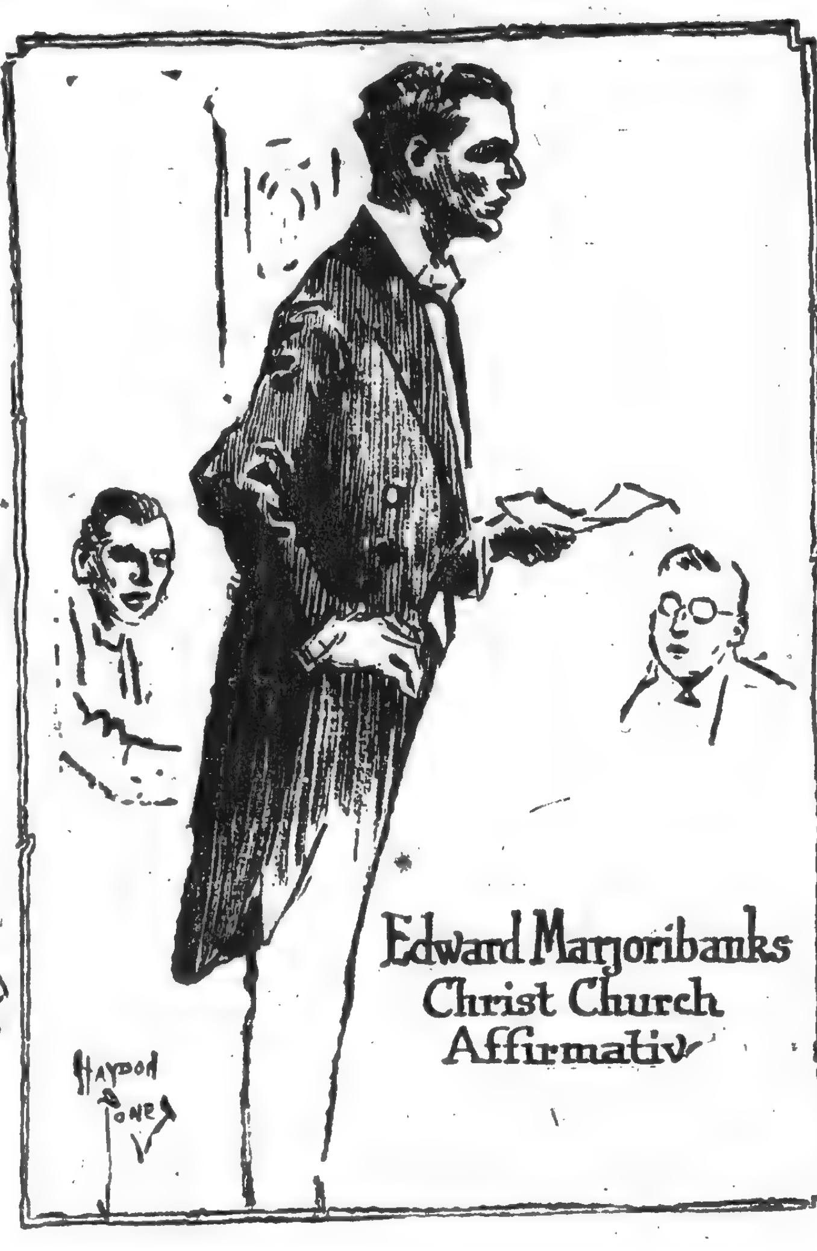
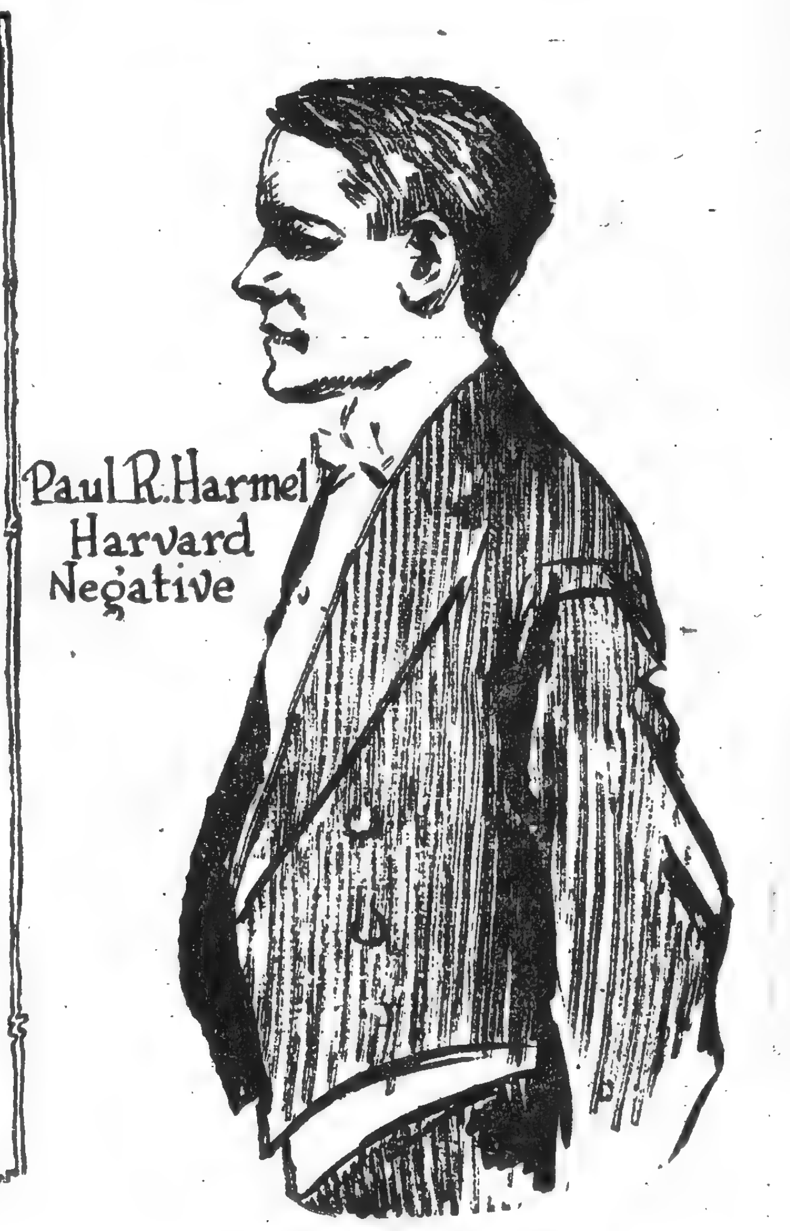
"The great service that

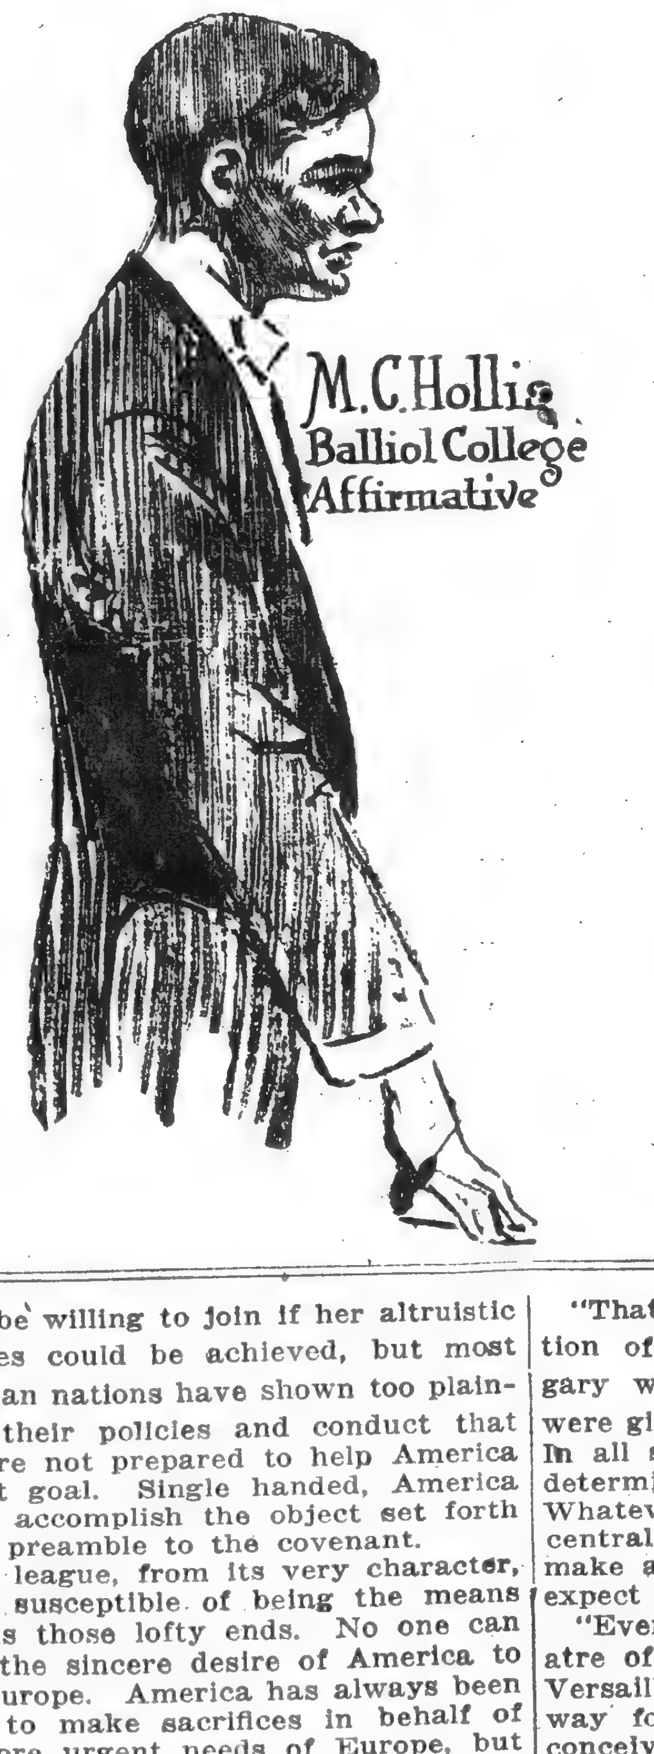
Attend Harvard-Oxford Debate on League in Symphony Hall

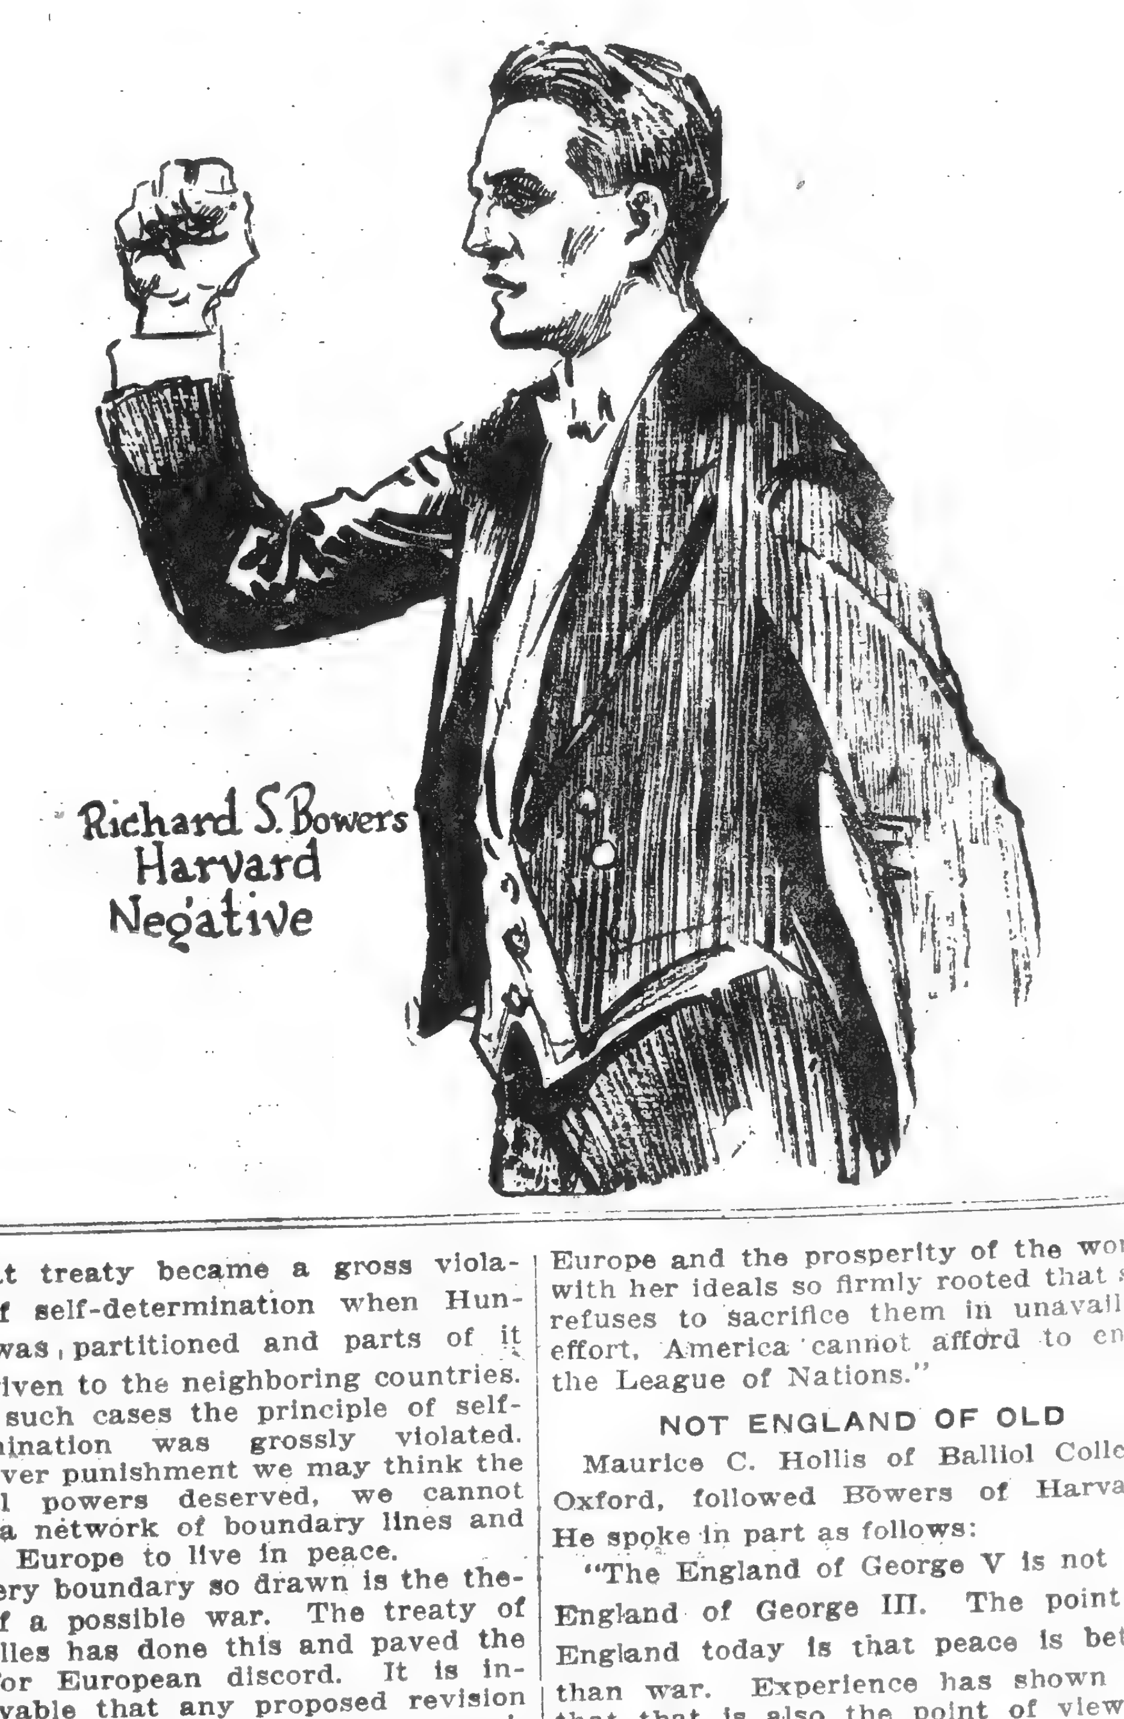
SKETCHES OF OXFORD AND HARVARD DEBATERS :: :: By Haydon Jones











ts Oxford
gue Debate

ked individually by its members, those members are the nations of
ope. We all remember the condi-
s of European diplomacy before and what we shall endeavor to v here tonight is that there has no change in those conditions, and the United States cannot in jus-to the high ideals of her citizens, to own security and peace and to the llar nations of the world who look her for example and help, join the ent League of Nations.

n the first place, America can't be rtner to violated trusts. After the ty of Paris we heard a good deal ut the new regime in foreign afs that was to start immediately, one of the newest features was to open covenants, openly arrived at.
narily the new day was to be inurated by a new method of handling conquered territories of the central ers. We witnessed the birth of the of mandates, and these terries were to be handled as acred trust of civilization under the ervision of the league. Yet hardly the supervision begun before plans an to arise as to the administration his sacred trust. These territories treated as conquered lands als have been treated.

OLD REGIME RETURNS

The treatment of the mandates onstrates that it is difficult to dis-uish between sacred trusts and ls of war. Is America to become a tner in these violated trusts? Not in the handling of these trusts, in diplomatic relations between the ons has the old regime come back.
rica cannot in justice to her own rity and peace become a partner nd a victim of this new and in-orated balance of power. Alliances been formed until today Europe esents exactly what she did in 1914, that is a system of alliances and unstable balance of power that has lted in a powder barrel situation.
merica to become the plaything of unbalanced balance, and to enter league as merely one more item of alance that always eventually falls?
The old regime has also come back ts most utterly objectionable form—t is in secret diplomacy and intrigue.
ce 1917 open covenants, openly ard at, have become almost as scarce they were before 1914. 'Open enants, openly arrived at,' is there-a myth which does not exist in rope. It does not want to exist as wn by a vote taken in the League Nations assembly on a question of nging article 18. If we entered the gue America would not only allow herto be a plaything of the balance of er but she would be entering the ne with the cards stacked against on account of those secret coalis and alliances. And there are nty of secret treaties, made since war, which we know nothing about.
In justice to the nations that look
America as an aid and an example erica cannot allow herself to become essory to violence and injustice. Is American officer with drawn sword stand guard at every portal of civil-tion? The war in Asia Minor was un by an invasion of Asia Minor by cian armies and this invasion was ctioned definitely and explicitly by allied governments at San Remo.
th sides were backed by official mbers of the league; there was suf-ing and savagery, yet this League Nations said never a word. Finally allied governments in conference a weeks ago committed the climax crime, and that was by handing menia back to the unspeakable Turk.
is is the Europe of today and the rope of today is the league.

'But gentlemen will say that America change all this if she will but enter league and use her influence there.
t the aims of other nations are as h as our own, and we have seen ir efforts to go in and combat these nes of international diplomacy, we e seen them forced to take sides on ry question; we have seen them ced to follow national interests on ry side and human interests never.
have seen new enmities made and w hates arise. In a situation of this t America would be forced to resort log-rolling. National interests can ver coincide fully, and we might ext that if America entered the league would time and again find herself hout an ally. Change your methods ore you request our aid. America is rting pressure for reform. America uld be the first to hold up the hand co-operation. But as long as memrship in this league means becoming partner to violated trust, becoming a ything of an unbalanced balance of wer, of secret alliances and coalitions at honeycomb Europe, just so long ust America decline to be embroiled such a league of such nations."

OXFORD MAN OPENS

Edward Marjoribanks, representing xford, then delivered the first address the affirmative side. He began by witting President McCall and the first arvard speaker on having contributed the case for Oxford. He reminded e audience of the difference between w-abiding countries like the United ates and Great Britain and the other eoples of the world who were in the abit of making peace or war accord-g to their interests.

As to the League of Nations, the peaker conjured up the image of an ncient ape objecting to the custom of alking on two feet, since he regarded as much more safe and so much more onservative to walk on four. "I trust," aid Mr. Marjoribanks, "that I do not nsult my honorable friends when I ay that that very estimable ape was heir political ancestor. That cause id not prevail and I do not think that the long run the old cause of naionalism will prevail. For this old system we must substitute a higher ideal. The great motive of and sanction for the League of Nations is the prevention of war. If the last war was a terrible thing, the next will be more terrible still. It is surely reasonable for us to appeal to you to join in some strong association of nations to make such horrors impossible.

"The unspeakable Turk has now shown us on what a slender thread the civilization of the world depends, but apparently forced the European powers to give him what he wanted. But England and America together can defy the Turk. All over the world economic relations, trade and commerce have made the peoples one as never before, and here we come into conflict with the Monroe doctrine, which was all very well when America found it her duty to develop her own continent. But today the nations are now dependent on each other, have common economic interests, and need a function to control those interests on a permanent basis. That sort of a function we hope will be performed by the league.

"America is very dependent on the markets of Europe, and if Europe suffered America would suffer too. It is of paramount importance that America should see to it that European affairs are put on a stable basis again, and shall not sink into ruin and collapse. That needs some permanent organization like the League of Nations.

IS MORAL IDEAL

"I should also like to present the league as a great moral ideal—an ideal that began 2400 years ago with Plato and has come down to us through the 'Holy Alliance' and the 'Peace of God.' There has been no nation in the history of the world of such potential force and influence as the United States, and of the present nations in the world the United States alone can make this ideal a practical issue, and by interfering in human affairs can bring it to realization.

"In answer to the objections against the league, I would say that it would willingly change its constitution if only America could see her way to join. To the statement that the league is weak, I can only reply that it is in its beginning. We should have had a very different story to tell if America had entered the league. The time is not too late now, but it is precious; that is why we are appealing to America to join immediately. It is true that the league does not fulfil the ideals of its leaders, but how is it possible to make all those panic-stricken and war-stricken nations agree on a program?

"I do not appeal to America to come in for the sake of what the league is, but for the sake of what England and America can make it. They say that the league is a super-state, which interferes with the dignity and rights of sovereign nations. The league is merely an agreement between states that are free in their relations.

"The League of Nations is no superstate, and if we can achieve it, I think each nation can enjoy a greater independence and a freer liberty. For economic and military reasons, it is absolutely necessary for America to join. I have tried to hold up the moral ideal, and I would like to say that no country in the world is so admirably suited to help in the development of that ideal as America.

"America is suited also in another respect, for she is in two senses a league of nations already. You are free from all our national and narrow prejudices. Italians, Germans, English and the rest—you live all together, you have a nationalist pride and you have a high idea of American citizenship. You do not keep these virtues and practices to yourself but share them with all mankind. In another sense you are a league of nations, because you provide in your constitution for local government and for a central organization. If you can extend those principles to the rest of the world, you will have a League of Nations that will satisfy the world."

The speaker closed by quoting from Lincoln's address at Gettysburg.

SECOND HARVARD SPEAKER

R. S. Bowers '24, of Harvard, continued the argument for the negative. "The League of Nations," he said, "lacks unanimity of purpose, and were the United States to enter, instead of promoting unanimity of purpose it would merely strengthen one faction or another, and whether or not it would strengthen that faction which promoted the best ideals of the league, there would be no means of knowing. America would find herself only another factor in the European turmoil. America might be willing to join if her altruistic purposes could be achieved, but most European nations have shown too plainly by their policies and conduct that they are not prepared to help America to that goal. Single handed, America cannot accomplish the object set forth in the preamble to the covenant.

"The league, from its very character, is not susceptible of being the means towards those lofty ends. No one can doubt the sincere desire of America to help Europe. America has always been ready to make sacrifices in behalf of the more urgent needs of Europe, but we do not feel that America can help the league by joining, first because if America entered her efforts would be negatived by European diplomacy and intrigues and then because the United States would not be able to reach the root of the trouble, which is the treaty of Versailles. The League of Nations is itself unable to do that.

"America as a member of the league would meet the sinister influences which she encountered in the peace conference of 1919—influences which would only serve to negative the efficacy of her entrance into the league. America as a member of th council chamber at Geneva would have to ward off the conspiracies of every self-seeking nation in the league. America took her place at the peace table determined that the high ideals with which she entered the war should be written into the treaty of peace. She strove to embody those ideals, yet how futile was her attempt. Canton was wrested away from defenceless China and practically handed over to Japan. The map of Europe was altered to promote the interests of the victorious powers. America resisted every article of the treaty which denied the ideals I have mentioned, but she could not penetrate the wall of diplomacy and intrigue.

"What proof more is required to show that if she entered the league she would only find herself as another factor in the European discord and not in a position to help Europe? It was in trying to help Europe that America encountered her great obstacle in the treaty of Versailles. That treaty was responsible for a multitude of ills and the League of Nations is virtually powerless to alter its decree. I could quote from Reginald McKenna, showing that the economic instability of Europe is due to the treaty of Versailles. John Keynes echoed that opinion in his book on the economic consequences of the peace, and Nitti, former premier of Italy, has issued a book entitled 'The Wreck of Europe,' in which he states that Europe is being wrecked by the treaty of Versailles and faces a new and more terrible war. The provisions of the treaty which have been most disastrous to Europe have been those relating to reparations and to the conquered territory. The French-English question has added confusion in Europe, and all of it had its origin in the treaty of Versailles.

"That treaty became a gross violation of self-determination when Hungary was partitioned and parts of it were given to the neighboring countries. In all such cases the principle of self-determination was grossly violated. Whatever punishment we may think the central powers deserved, we cannot make a network of boundary lines and expect Europe to live in peace.

"Every boundary so drawn is the theatre of a possible war. The treaty of Versailles has done this and paved the way for European discord. It is inconceivable that any proposed revision of the treaty would ever receive unanimous support. Suppose the sentiment of the league were in favor of returning Shantung to China, would Japan be in favor of such a proposal? And yet unless Japan was, it would be impossible for the decision to go into effect. The United States would be equally helpless and unable to help Europe. Now while we find the league powerless to change the treaty which is the source of Europe's troubles, we find that the league is the very instrument used by the powers to carry out those same provisions.

"In the words of Lansing the league is an instrument mostly conceived and destined to carry out the provisions of the treaty of Versailles. It is a guarantor of the treaty, and it stands not for progress but for international stagnation. If the United States were to join the league it appears that she would only help the league in perpetuating the woes of Europe. Do the people of America want the armies and forces of this country to be used in maintaining those deplorable conditions in Europe?

"The entrance of the United States into the league would involve a plague, and sooner or later it would mean the sending of troops to Europe. In the present condition of Europe the dictates of morality must be re-enforced with arms. Only bayonets can command respect. America cannot ignore these factors eager as she may be to favor Europe as regards international co-operation. The lessons of the peace conference have taught us only too well that against smooth and sinister diplomacy of the old world, American idealism is ineffective. The league is the very instrument employed by the powers to carry out those provisions. With her eyes fastened upon the welfare of Europe and the prosperity of the world, with her ideals so firmly rooted that she refuses to sacrifice them in unavailing effort, America cannot afford to enter the League of Nations."

NOT ENGLAND OF OLD

Maurice C. Hollis of Balliol College, Oxford, followed Bowers of Harvard. He spoke in part as follows:

"The England of George V is not the England of George III. The point of England today is that peace is better than war. Experience has shown me that that is also the point of view of America.

"Why do you not join the League of Nations? It is not because you are going to be outvoted by six votes to one by the British empire. If it is, it would not be a good argument, because it is not true."

The speaker also declared that he did not believe the United States would not enter the league because of Article X, because, he said, the league is unanimous in declaring that it is willing to dispose of Article X if only the United States will join.

"Even as it stands, is Article X an invention of the devil?" he asked. "To hear some of the arguments about Article X, one might imagine that it was a question where the secretary-general or some equally sinister person of the league sends a postcard with the postmark of Geneva on it to the President of the United States, saying, 'We have arranged for a war with the Jugo-Slavs next Tuesday, please supply 70,000 troops.'

"The last speaker seemed to assume that every United States statesman was going to be outwitted every time by every statesman from Europe. I do not think so meanly of you. Will it be a fact that the United States would always be fighting in Europe about things in which it is not the least interested? Canada has belonged to the league for four years. Has it had to send a single soldier or a single dollar to Europe in order to fight in any wars in which it was not concerned? Not a single one.

"For trade you must have stability, for stability you must have security, and you must be willing under the circumstances to enforce that stability. If you stilll doubt it, there is your own record in the last war to refute your doubts, on which we are not asking you now to turn your backs, but which we are asking you to develop.

"By the Monroe Doctrine you laid it down that the Spanish empire should not extend into South America. America by entering the League of Nations would have made it possible to have laid it down that the Turkish empire should not extend to the south of Europe.

"It cannot be that you stay out of the League of Nations because it is a guarantor of the status quo and because it is wrapped up with the Versailles treaty. We who support the League of Nations do not all of us support the Versailles treaty, that treaty that Lord Curzon described as 'a peace that passeth all understanding.'

DISCUSSES HARDING

"I would argue that it is ludicrously unfair to throw into the face of the League of Nations that it is a mere bevy of Mandarins sitting pleasantly upon the status quo. However contemptuously you may feel about the League of Nations, you must feel that it is either big enough to come into or big enough to stay out of.

"The strongest argument that America should come into the League of Nations, without laying too much stress upon the personal equation, it would be almost true to say, is that if everybody believed in the League of Nations we should not need to have one. Even President Harding, though he thinks that nations should not league together, believes that it is absolutely imperative that they should associate. It was a puty there was so much to do when he got to the White House that he could not do anything about it. It is not splendid to sit isolated and well fed while women and children are starving. But America's record shows that it believes that this condition should not be. We are willing to change every word in the covenant if you will show us a good reason."

P. R. Harmel of Harvard closed the debate.

He declared, referring to one of the arguments of the Oxford men that if the United States were in the League of Nations England and this country could have defied the Turks, that "the inference is that if the United States entered the League of Nations there would be an Anglo-Saxon predominance in the world, and that predominance would be relied upon to keep the peace.

"Admitting for the moment that an Anglo-Saxon predominance could keep the peace of the world, do we desire such a predominance? Can we entrust the destinies of all nations, small and large, to a single race or single class of people?"

"LEAGUE NOT IN CONTROL"

The speaker declared that the Harvard debaters had shown that conditions in Europe are caused by the existence of the old regime of secret diplomacy and the treaty of Versailles. He quoted from a report of the committee at Geneva in which the committee decided unanimously in favor of the principles set out in article X.

Refuting the argument of the Oxonians that America's entry into the league would "at one moment reform a Europe that is held strictly to the policies of the old diplomacy," the speaker declared:

"We remember Wilson going over with his 14 points ringing in the ears of the world, and before he left Paris these 14 points were a mere scrap of paper, so vitiated that they were hardly recognizable. This at a time when America was at the pinnacle of its influence, and at a time most propitious for the adoption of those 14 principles.

"The second speaker from Oxford said that Canada has not sent one soldier into Europe. But he didn't tell you why. The reason is that the League of Nations has made no attempt to stop the wars in Europe. He also said that the treaty of Sévres has been changed. But has that treaty been changed by the League of Nations? No, it has been changed by the supreme council of the allied powers of Europe. This shows that the affairs of Europe are not run by the League of Nations, but by the supreme council.

"It shall be my purpose in concluding the case of the negative that the United States, while in profound sympathy with Europe and with the world, can serve the world far more effectively by remaining outside the League of Nations. In the broader humanitarian activities of the league the United States can continue to participate."

Here the speaker referred to the part the United States took in considering the problems of the opium trade, the white slave traffic and other world social problems, and declared that America can continue to give financial aid to the league in its world wide activities. He discussed the great success of the United States in settling disputes between Chile and Peru, the Shantung question, and in other cases where the league had failed. He referred also to the success of the Washington conference.

"The great service that is open to America," said he, "outside the League of Nations, is to lead a tired and distressed world into a new and brighter area of international democracy. America has shown the way to international peace. Let us hope America outside the league can lead the nations of the world to a newer, brighter era of international relationship."

The official tellers were British vice-Consul Arthur H. Marlow and Dean Chester N. Greenough of Harvard.

After the debate the Harvard Debating Council gave the Oxford team a reception and supper at the Harvard Club. The following guests of honor on the stage were also invited: Former Gov. McCall, Mayor Curley and former Mayor Peters, Consul-General Grey of Great Britain and Vice-Consul Marlow, French Consul J. C. Joseph Flamand, and George Wigglesworth, president of the board of overseers at Harvard, and Dean Greenough.

HARVARD DEBATERS WIN OVER OXFORD

~~Globe~~ Oct 10

Audience Votes U. S. Should Not Enter League—English Team Loses Member by Illness

The Harvard-Oxford debate at Symphony Hall last evening on the League of Nations was decided in favor of the Harvard team on a ballot vote by the audience. The hall was jammed with people.

The interest in the debate was almost as keen as on the night of the famous debate on the same subject in the same hall between Pres Lowell of Harvard and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge in the Spring of 1919. At that time Pres Lowell took the other side of the question, urging it as a duty on the part of the United States to join the League of Nations.

Last evening the Harvard debaters insisted that the United States should keep out of the League of Nations.

Continued on the Sixth P

(Copyright Kahill Studios, Portland Me.)

Harvard team which won in debate with Oxford. Left to Right—Richard S Bowers, Paul Harmell, Raymond S. Fanning.

The debate was a little unfair in that the Englishmen were handicapped by the loss of one man—K. M. Lindsay—who was taken to the Franklin Hospital, Jamaica Plain, in the afternoon suffering with a severe attack of indigestion. However, his teammates—Edward Marjoribanks of Christ Church, Oxford, and M. C. Hollis of Balliol College, proved a host in themselves and gave the Harvard men a stiff forensic battle. In one respect they were way ahead of the Harvard men—in their sense of humor.

The Harvard men were entirely serious while the Englishmen livened up the debate with an occasional witty turn that caught the audience.

In point of fact there were a great many League of Nation enthusiasts in that audience—many of those who have been advocating the league from the beginning—and they appreciated the points made by the young Englishmen as keenly as they appreciated the points scored by Pres Lowell in that other debate.

Ex-Gov Samuel W. McCall's introductory remarks pleased these people immensely for he spoke so hotly on the League of Nations that the first Oxford man to speak, Edward Marjoribanks, thanksd the Governor, saying that the loss of Mr Lindsay was "more than made up by the Governor."

This young man turned a clever one also in opening when he commented on his pleasure in being in the only city in the country that held a "historic tea party."

The platform was crowded—largely with students—but there were also a number of prominent citizens seated in the front row on either side of Chairman Samuel W. McCall. There were Ex-Mayor Peters, Consul General Grey of Great Britain and Vice Consul Marlow; the French consul, J. C. Joseph Flamand; George Wigglesworth, president of the board of overseers of Harvard; Dean Greenough, Rev Edward Cummings and others.

The opposing teams were seated at tables at the extreme ends of the platform—the Oxford team on the right facing the audience, and the Harvard team on the left.

The Harvard team consisted of R. S. Fanning, '23; R. S. Bowers, '24; P. R. Harmel, '23—men selected for their eminent qualities in various debates last year.

The official tellers were: Arthur H. Marlow, British vice consul, for Oxford and Dean Greenough for Harvard. To equalize somewhat the discrepancy in speakers on the Oxford team, its members were each allowed 22½ minutes and the Harvard men, each 15 minutes. In point of fact the Oxford men kept inside their time limit and the Harvard men spoke over their time—Harmel fully five minutes beyond his limit. W. G. Pierce of Technology was timekeeper.

The Harvard men all seemed rather short in stature, thin, and energetic in their presentation of the subject. The two Oxford men were taller, no stouter, but much more at [illegible]

Globe Oct 10

[87]

nents' remarks. Harmel of Harvard, however, was also quick in this respect and he scored several rather good points on his opponents.

Ex-Gov McCall's Opening

In opening the debate, Ex-Gov McCall said:

"Although these two ancient universities are meeting tonight for the first time in joint debate, it is not to be inferred that the event has been delayed so long from any lack of friendship. Doubtless 150 years ago an encounter of this sort would have been celebrated by a first-class riot on the Common. Yet that we have traveled very far in the direction of good-will is shown by the agreement of both parties that the judges between them tonight shall be the people of this once-rebellious town of Boston.

"This meeting serves to mark an epoch in the relations between the two countries. On the one side we have the oldest of American universities, which, for two generations was the only college in the territory now included in the United States. Its antiquity, its great contributions to the development of the country and of its institutions and its progressive leadership fairly mark it tonight as the worthy representative of America.

"On the other side we have the great university about whose name cluster so many of the glories of England. It was Oxford of which Matthew Arnold said: 'Beautiful city, so venerable, so lovely, steeped in sentiment, as she lies there, spreading her gardens to the moonlight and whispering from her towers the last enchantments of the middle age.' The representatives from both schools have a noble background.

"To the men who have come across the sea and the men of Harvard—I know you will expect me to speak your word of hearty welcome.

"So much for the disputants. Now a word for the subject. Whatever may be your opinion upon its merits, I think we shall all agree that there is no more vital question before the world today. The curtain has not yet gone down on that stupendous tragedy that began eight years ago. One result of the World War that caused all Christendom to rejoice was that the Turk had been driven out of Europe. Yet today we see Turkey defiantly issuing an ultimatum to her former conquerors and demanding again to be an European power. All honor to that little hero Nation in the Eastern Mediterranean which for three years bore the burden put upon her by the Allies and struggled to save Asia Minor from becoming another Armenia.

"Greece was summoned into danger and then betrayed by those whose battles she was fighting. She stood as she stood at Thermopylae and at Salamis for Western as against Asiatic civilization, and although she was at last overwhelmed by a cruel foe and thousands of Christians as a result were murdered, she towers today far above those who betrayed her.

"The Nations who have been and are in an unspeakable alliance with the unspeakable Turk have forfeited all claim to the good-will of America.

Duty of the United States

by all the resources of civilization that all agreed that it was the first duty of the world to make a repetition of it impossible.

"Since that time invention has prepared the way for more frightful horrors and has put new poison gases and other deadly resources at the service of the devil.

"The short-cut to race suicide today and to the obliteration of civilization is to have another World War. Either war will destroy the race or the race must destroy war. What are we going to do about it? Are we to rely upon the isolated and spasmodic action of the divided Nations upon a question in which all have the common interest of self-preservation?

"I know the isolated action of a great Nation can accomplish much, especially if it is action that means business. And amid that welter of international anarchy that holds sway beyond the Dardanelles and threatens to engulf Europe, the one word of hope for the world was spoken by the clear and mighty voice of England. But beyond some pious observations what has the United States done? And yet we could almost see the burning of Smyrna, could almost hear the groans and shrieks of the dying. Many of them were our fellow-Christians; some of them were our fellow-countrymen.

"What is the use of a Nation's being great and strong if it shall not sternly raise its voice, backed by its power, to prevent such infamies? It is a pious thing to bury the dead but it is far better to have prevented their being murdered.

"And here is the question upon which we may look for light this evening—Shall we enter the existing League of Nations or a league with reservations or the association of Nations which Mr Harding foresaw, but which to the rest of us has thus far been visible only to the eye of faith, or shall we go it alone? Nothing could be baser than to consider a question like this in the light of party politics and of the nonpartisan discussion of it we are certain tonight."

Fanning Leads Off for Harvard

Curiously enough both teams used pretty much the same arguments for different purposes. The Englishmen took the world events since the war to prove that the United States should enter the League and the Harvard men took the same events to prove that the United States was much better off outside the League.

R. S. Fanning, for Harvard, led off. He first commented on the peace between England and the United States that had lasted for over 100 years in spite of which, however, both Nations found themselves in wars before the 100 years were up.

He maintained that it would be impossible for the United States to enter into the kind of diplomacy and intrigue that characterized the nations of Europe before 1914 and which had not changed in the least since 1914.

Since the war every ideal that America had fought for had been shattered.

It was a record of broken trusts. Open covenants had been scorned; mandates had been ignored and secret treaties had been entered into in spite of the existing League of Nations. The worst of these was the treaty between France and Turkey entered into while the Treaty of Sevres was being negotiated. The whole thing had come back to the old idea of balance of power, and the United States cannot be a partner in any such balances.

Edward Marjoribanks, for Oxford, first thanked America for its cordiality. He said he was in despair because of the illness of Mr Lindsay, until he heard Gov McCall speak. With such an ally, he had no fear.

Looking at the thing historically, he said it was noteworthy that the English-speaking Nations had respect for arbitration, but it was not so much with some of the other peoples of the world. But it was encouraging to note that private law was once the rule, but it had been succeeded by common justice. The great object of the League of Nations was to prevent war—make war impossible—as impossible as the old private feuds. If the last war was terrible, the next would be more so. Had America joined the League of Nations, the Turk would not now be rampant in Europe.

So, looking on the League of Nations from a political point of view, from a commercial and economic point of view, and from the standpoint of a great moral ideal, he did not see why the United States should not come into the League. In point of fact he said the United States had taught the world the value of a League of Nations by its own history and form of government.

R. S. Bowers of Harvard said the League of Nations lacked unanimity of purpose. If the United States joined the League it would merely strengthen one faction against another and it could never hope in the face of European intrigue to uphold its ideals. That had been fully demonstrated by her experience at Paris in 1919 during the negotiation of the Treaty of Versailles. Anyway, he regarded that treaty as an obstacle in the way of a League of Nations—if its terms were to be fulfilled.

Hollis Pleases With Wit

M. C. Hollis of Oxford said that like Webster's Dictionary he supposed he was British propaganda. (Laughter.) He thought the main defect of England was lack of American propaganda, as the main defect of America was lack of British propaganda. American propaganda in Great Britain was confined to brands of cereals and Fords. He said before he went to Oxford he had been to school at Eton, where the boys wore dark coats as a sign of mourning for George III, and he would like Americans to realize that George III was dead.

He said England wants peace and that is why she wants the League of Nations. Some Americans were afraid if they were in the League of Nations the Secretariat of the League might drop a postcard in the box at Geneva some morning to the Secretary of State of the United States in which he would casually remark that a war had been arranged with Jugo-Slovakia for next Thursday and the United States would supply 75,000 troops. He said President Harding apparently does not believe nations should be leagued together, although he realizes the necessity of their associating together.

P. R. Harmel insisted that the affairs of Europe today were run by the Supreme Council of the League of Nations and badly run by that body, and that they would be run by the same body if the United States were in the League. The United States would be more of an influence in the world for peace and happiness if it kept out of the League.

The Oxford men were dined by the Harvard team at the Harvard Club after the debate. They were to leave on the 1 o'clock train this morning for Princeton, N J, but decided to remain over on account of Mr Lindsay's illness.

The ballot vote showed 1614 for the Harvard debaters and 1000 for Oxford.

HARVARD DEBATERS WIN OVER OXFORD

Globe Oct 10

Audience Votes U. S. Should Not Enter League—English Team Loses Member by Illness

The Harvard-Oxford debate at Symphony Hall last evening on the League of Nations was decided in favor of the Harvard team on a ballot vote by the audience. The hall was jammed with people.

The interest in the debate was almost as keen as on the night of the famous debate on the same subject in the same hall between Pres Lowell of Harvard and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge in the Spring of 1919. At that time Pres Lowell took the other side of the question, urging it as a duty on the part of the United States to join the League of Nations.

Last evening the Harvard debaters insisted that the United States should keep out of the League of Nations.

Continued on the Sixth P

(Copyright Kahill Studios, Portland Me.)

Harvard team which won in debate with Oxford. Left to Right—Richard S. Bowers, Paul Harmell, Raymond S. Fanning.

The debate was a little unfair in that the Englishmen were handicapped by the loss of one man—K. M. Lindsay—who was taken to the Franklin Hospital, Jamaica Plain, in the afternoon suffering with a severe attack of indigestion. However, his teammates—Edward Marjoribanks of Christ Church, Oxford, and M. C. Hollis of Balliol College, proved a host in themselves and gave the Harvard men a stiff forensic battle. In one respect they were way ahead of the Harvard men—in their sense of humor.

The Harvard men were entirely serious while the Englishmen livened up the debate with an occasional witty turn that caught the audience.

In point of fact there were a great many League of Nation enthusiasts in that audience—many of those who have been advocating the league from the beginning—and they appreciated the points made by the young Englishmen as keenly as they appreciated the points scored by Pres Lowell in that other debate.

Ex-Gov Samuel W. McCall's introductory remarks pleased these people immensely, for he spoke so hotly on the League of Nations that the first Oxford man to speak, Edward Marjoribanks, thanksd the Governor, saying that the loss of Mr Lindsay was "more than made up by the Governor."

This young man turned a clever one also in opening when he commented on his pleasure in being in the only city in the country that held a "historic tea party."

The platform was crowded—largely with students—but there were also a number of prominent citizens seated in the front row on either side of Chairman Samuel W. McCall. There were Ex-Mayor Peters, Consul General Grey of Great Britain and Vice Consul Marlow; the French consul, J. C. Joseph Flamand; George Wigglesworth, president of the board of overseers of Harvard; Dean Greenough, Rev Edward Cummings and others.

The opposing teams were seated at tables at the extreme ends of the platform—the Oxford team on the right, facing the audience, and the Harvard team on the left.

The Harvard team consisted of R. S. Fanning, '23; R. S. Bowers, '24; P. R. Harmel, '23—men selected for their eminent qualities in various debates last year.

The official tellers were, Arthur H. Marlow, British vice consul, for Oxford and Dean Greenough for Harvard. To equalize somewhat the discrepancy in speakers on the Oxford team, its members were each allowed 22½ minutes and the Harvard men, each 15 minutes. In point of fact the Oxford men kept inside their time limit and the Harvard men spoke over their time—Harmel fully five minutes beyond his limit. W. G. Pierce of Technology was timekeeper.

The Harvard men all seemed rather short in stature, thin, and energetic in their presentation of the subject. The two Oxford men were taller, no stouter, but much more at ease in their methods of speaking, and more impromptu, especially in the [illegible] points fr[illegible] nents' remarks. Harmel of Harvard, however, was also quick in this respect and he scored several rather good points on his opponents.

Ex-Gov McCall's Opening

In opening the debate, Ex-Gov McCall said:

"Although these two ancient universities are meeting tonight for the first time in joint debate, it is not to be inferred that the event has been delayed so long from any lack of friendship. Doubtless 150 years ago an encounter of this sort would have been celebrated by a first-class riot on the Common. Yet that we have traveled very far in the direction of good-will is shown by the agreement of both parties that the judges between them tonight shall be the people of this once-rebellious town of Boston.

"This meeting serves to mark an epoch in the relations between the two countries. On the one side we have the oldest of American universities, which, for two generations was the only college in the territory now included in the United States. Its antiquity, its great contributions to the development of the country and of its institutions and its progressive leadership fairly mark it tonight as th eworthy representative of America.

"On the other side we have the great university about whose name cluster so many of the glories of England. It was Oxford of which Matthew Arnold said: 'Beautiful city, so venerable, so lovely, steeped in sentiment, as she lies there, spreading her gardens to the moonlight and whispering from her towers the last enchantments of the middle age.' The representatives from both schools have a noble background.

"To the men who have come across the sea and the men of Harvard—I know you will expect me to speak your word of hearty welcome.

"So much for the disputants. Now a word for the subject. Whatever may be your opinion upon its merits, I think we shall all agree that there is no more vital question before the world today. The curtain has not yet gone down on that stupendous tragedy that began eight years ago. One result of the World War that caused all Christendom to rejoice was that the Turk had been driven out of Europe. Yet today we see Turkey defiantly issuing an ultimatum to her former conquerors and demanding again to be an European power. All honor to that little hero Nation in the Eastern Mediterranean which for three years bore the burden put upon her by the Allies and struggled to save Asia Minor from becoming another Armenia.

"Greece was summoned into danger and then betrayed by those whose battles she was fighting. She stood as she stood at Thermopylae and at Salamis for Western as against Asiatic civilization, and although she was at last overwhelmed by a cruel foe and thousands of Christians as a result were murdered, she towers today far above those who betrayed her.

"The Nations who have been and are in an unspeakable alliance with the unspeakable Turk have forfeited all claim to the good-will of America.

Duty of the United States

"The war ended only four years ago [illegible] already forgetting. It by all the resources of civilization that all agreed that it was the first duty of the world to make a repetition of it impossible.

"Since that time invention has prepared the way for more frightful horrors and has put new poison gases and other deadly resources at the service of the devil.

"The short-cut to race suicide today and to the obliteration of civilization is to have another World War. Either war will destroy the race or the race must destroy war. What are we going to do about it? Are we to rely upon the isolated and spasmodic action of the divided Nations upon a question in which all have the common interest of self-preservation?

"I know the isolated action of a great Nation can accomplish much, especially if it is action that means business. And amid that welter of international anarchy that holds sway beyond the Dardanelles and threatens to engulf Europe, the one word of hope for the world was spoken by the clear and mighty voice of England. But beyond some pious observations what has the United States done? And yet we could almost see the burning of Smyrna, could almost hear the groans and shrieks of the dying. Many of them were our fellow-Christians; some of them were our fellow-countrymen.

"What is the use of a Nation's being great and strong if it shall not sternly raise its voice, backed by its power, to prevent such infamies? It is a pious thing to bury the dead but it is far better to have prevented their being murdered.

"And here is the question upon which we may look for light this evening—Shall we enter the existing League of Nations or a league with reservations or the association of Nations which Mr Harding foresaw, but which to the rest of us has thus far been visible only to the eye of faith, or shall we go it alone? Nothing could be baser than to consider a question like this in the light of party politics and of the nonpartisan discussion of it we are certain tonight."

Fanning Leads Off for Harvard

Curiously enough both teams used pretty much the same arguments for different purposes. The Englishmen took the world events since the war to prove that the United States should enter the League and the Harvard men took the same events to prove that the United States was much better off outside the League.

R. S. Fanning, for Harvard, led off. He first commented on the peace between England and the United States that had lasted for over 100 years in spite of which, however, both Nations found themselves in wars before the 100 years were up.

He maintained that it would be impossible for the United States to enter into the kind of diplomacy and intrigue that characterized the nations of Europe before 1914 and which had not changed in the least since 1914.

Since the war every ideal that America had fought for had been shattered.

It was a record of broken trusts. Open covenants had been scorned; mandates had been ignored and secret treaties had been entered into in spite of the existing League of Nations. The worst of these was the treaty between France and Turkey entered into while the Treaty of Sevres was being negotiated. The whole thing had come back to the old idea of balance of power, and the United States cannot be a partner in any such balances.

Edward Marjoribanks, for Oxford, first thanked America for its cordiality. He said he was in despair because of the illness of Mr Lindsay, until he heard Gov McCall speak. With such an ally, he had no fear.

Looking at the thing historically, he said it was noteworthy that the English-speaking Nations had respect for arbitration, but it was not so much with some of the other peoples of the world. But it was encouraging to note that private law was once the rule, but it had been succeeded by common justice. The great object of the League of Nations was to prevent war—make war impossible as impossible as the old private feuds. If the last war was terrible, the next would be more so. Had America joined the League of Nations, the Turk would not now be rampant in Europe.

So, looking on the League of Nations from a political point of view, from a commercial and economic point of view, and from the standpoint of a great moral ideal, he did not see why the United States should not come into the League. In point of fact he said the United States had taught the world the value of a League of Nations by its own history and form of government.

R. S. Bowers of Harvard said the League of Nations lacked unanimity of purpose. If the United States joined the League it would merely strengthen one faction against another and it could never hope in the face of European intrigue to uphold its ideals. That had been fully demonstrated by her experience at Paris in 1919 during the negotiation of the Treaty of Versailles. Anyway, he regarded that treaty as an obstacle in the way of a League of Nations—if its terms were to be fulfilled.

Hollis Pleases With Wit

M. C. Hollis of Oxford said that like Webster's Dictionary he supposed he was British propaganda. (Laughter.) He thought the main defect of England was lack of American propaganda, as the main defect of America was lack of British propaganda. American propaganda in Great Britain was confined to brands of cereals and Fords. He said before he went to Oxford he had been to school at Eton, where the boys wore dark coats as a sign of mourning for George III, and he would like Americans to realize that George III was dead.

He said England wants peace and that is why she wants the League of Nations. Some Americans were afraid if they were in the League of Nations the Secretariat of the League might drop a postcard in the box at Geneva some morning to the Secretary of State of the United States in which he would casually remark that a war had been arranged with Jugo-Slovakia for next Thursday and the United States would supply 75,000 troops. He said President Harding apparently does not believe nations should be leagued together, although he realizes the necessity of their associating together.

P. R. Harmel insisted that the affairs of Europe today were run by the Supreme Council of the League of Nations and badly run by that body, and that they would be run by the same body if the United States were in the League. The United States would be more of an influence in the world for peace and happiness if it kept out of the League.

The Oxford men were dined by the Harvard team at the Harvard Club after the debate. They were to leave on the 1 o'clock train this morning for Princeton, N J, but decided to remain over on account of Mr Lindsay's illness.

The ballot vote showed 1614 for the Harvard debaters and 1000 for Oxford.

Globe Oct 10

[87]

WOULD ABOLISH U.S. SHIP BOARD

Government Should Retire from Marine Business, Banker Says

OPPOSES FINANCING BY "SPECIAL FUND"

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 9—At he opening session of the Investnent Bankers Association of Amer-ca here this morning the address of welcome was made by Paul Shoup, vice-president of the Southern Pa-ific Company. He was followed by Howard F. Beebe, president of the Bankers Association, who presented his annual address, touching on the conomic conditions of the country.

"The financing of state and municipal vork has not had the same difficult roblems confronting industrial and ublic utility enterprises," said Presi-ent Beebe, "with the result that work those fields has proceeded at a rapid ace. Tendencies toward extravagance re apparent and all our influences hould be used to discourage unwise xpenditures.

"SPECIAL FUND" A MENACE

"The financing of public work through pecial fund' and special limited tax sues is, in my opinion, a serious mene, for, under the belief that property ll not be generally taxed, authority given by the voters for expenditures money in amounts and ways which uld not be countenanced if under the cumstances it were possible to tax perty therefor in the usual way.

The failure to meet these obligations,
wever, by the state or municipality, uld have serious consequences to genl credit, and I believe that if the payers are unwilling to stand arely back of public works by sub-ting themselves to the possibility of ation they should not authorize such tures in the public name."

mong other points stressed by Mr.
be were:

Government loans to foreign countries in the 'frozen credit' class, and it vident that it is going to be difficult many of these debtor nations to even the interest on these loans under sting conditions in their respective ntries. Our government has found necessary to employ a substantial tion of its receipts in the payment nterest on the debt created to make sible these loans.

The tariff efforts of Congress have with little approval from men of

RED CROSS GETS RELIEF STARTED

Chairman Payne Cables Athens and Paris to Use Funds in Levant

ANNUAL SESSION OPENS IN CAPITAL

WASHINGTON, Oct. 9—The American Red Cross, in annual convention here, took active steps tonight for the relief of refugees in the near east.

Acting upon authorization by the organization's executive committee given during the day, Chairman John Barton Payne dispatched cables to Athens and Paris, directing the immediate use of funds for the purchase of supplies for the sufferers. Chairman Payne also announced that Dr. A. Ross Hill, vice-chairman and director of foreign operations, will sail Friday to take charge of the expanded relief efforts.

THANKED BY HARDING

The executive committee, it was announced at the opening of the convention, had placed in the chairman's hands all the organization's funds and facilities, advising him to use them as he deemed advisable. That action brought an expression of gratitude from President Harding, who further informed the convention in a message of greeting of his satisfaction at the willingness of the agency to co-operate in near east relief and again extend a helping hand across the seas. Approval of the committee's action also was given by the convention through adoption of resolutions.

In signally expanding the agency's foreign relief operations, Chairman Payne cabled the American committee at Athens to draw on the relief fund to the extent of $100,000 immediately. The fund should be used, the cable directed, to purchase "urgent supplies" for the refugees in Greece. Instruction also was given that the committee obtain, if possible, a warehouse in the Piraeus for the Red Cross.

To the Greek Red Cross at Athens Chairman Payne sent a message stating that a commission would be on hand

Chan

Herald Oct 10

HARVARD DEBATERS WIN OVER OXFORD

~~Globe Oct 10~~

Audience Votes U. S. Should Not Enter League—English Team Loses Member by Illness

he Harvard-Oxford debate at Symony Hall last evening on the League Nations was decided in favor of the arvard team on a ballot vote by the dience. The hall was jammed with ople.

he interest in the debate was almost keen as on the night of the famous bate on the same subject in the same ll between Pres Lowell of Harvard and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge in the Spring of 1919. At that time Pres Lowell took the other side of the question, urging it as a duty on the part of the United States to join the League of Nations.

Last evening the Harvard debaters insisted that the United States should keep out of the League of Nations.

Continued on the Sixth P

(Copyright Kahill Studios, Portland Me.)

Harvard team which won in debate with Oxford. Left to Right—Richard S Bowers, Paul Harmell, Raymond S. Fanning.

he debate was a little unfair in tha Englishmen were handicapped b
the loss of one man—K. M. Lindsay—who was taken to the Franklin Hospital, Jamaica Plain, in the afternoon suffering with a severe attack of indigestion. However, his teammates—Edward Marjoribanks of Christ Church, Oxford, and M. C. Hollis of Balliol College, proved a host in themselves an gave the Harvard men a stiff forensi battle. In one respect they were way ahead of the Harvard men—in their sense of humor.

The Harvard men were entirely seriou while the Englishmen livened up the debate with an occasional witty turn tha caught the audience.

In point of fact there were a great many League of Nation enthusiasts in that audience—many of those who have been advocating the league from the beginning—and they appreciated the points made by the young Englishmen as keenly as they appreciated the points scored by Pres Lowell in that other debate.

Ex-Gov Samuel W. McCall's introductory remarks pleased these people immensely for he spoke so hotly on the League of Nations that the first Oxford man to speak, Edward Marjoribanks, thanksd the Governor, saying that the loss of Mr Lindsay was "more than made up by the Governor."

This young man turned a clever on also in opening when he commented o his pleasure in being in the only city in the country that held a "historic tea party."

The platform was crowded—largely with students—but there were also a number of prominent citizens seated in the front row on either side of Chairman Samuel W. McCall. There were Ex-Mayor Peters, Consul General Grey of Great Britain and Vice Consul Marlow; the French consul, J. C. Joseph Flamand; George Wigglesworth, president of the board of overseers of Harvard; Dean Greenough, Rev Edwar Cummings and others.

The opposing teams were seated a tables at the extreme ends of the platform—the Oxford team on the right facing the audience, and the Harvar team on the left.

The Harvard team consisted of R. S Fanning, '23; R. S. Bowers, '24; P. R Harmel, '23—men selected for their eminent qualities in various debates las year.

The official tellers were: Arthur H Marlow, British vice consul, for Oxford and Dean Greenough for Harvard. To equalize somewhat the discrepancy in speakers on the Oxford team, its members were each allowed 22½ minutes and the Harvard men, each 15 minutes. In point of fact the Oxford men kept inside their time limit and the Harvard men spoke over their time—Harmel fully five minutes beyond his limit. W. G. Pierce of Technology was timekeeper.

The Harvard men all seemed rather short in stature, thin, and energetic in their presentation of the subject. The two Oxford men were [illegible]

nents' remarks. Harmel of Harvard, however, was also quick in this respect and he scored several rather good points on his opponents.

Ex-Gov McCall's Opening

In opening the debate, Ex-Gov McCall said:

"Although these two ancient universities are meeting tonight for the first time in joint debate, it is not to be inferred that the event has been delayed so long from any lack of friendship. Doubtless 150 years ago an encounter of this sort would have been celebrated by a first-class riot on the Common. Yet that we have traveled very far in the direction of good-will is shown by the agreement of both parties that the judges between them tonight shall be the people of this once-rebellious town of Boston.

"This meeting serves to mark an epoch in the relations between the two countries. On the one side we have the oldest of American universities, which, for two generations was the only college in the territory now included in the United States. Its antiquity, its great contributions to the development of the country and of its institutions and its progressive leadership fairly mark it tonight as th eworthy representative of America.

"On the other side we have the great university about whose name cluster so many of the glories of England. It was Oxford of which Matthew Arnold said: 'Beautiful city, so venerable, so lovely, steeped in sentiment, as she lies there, spreading her gardens to the moonlight and whispering from her towers the last enchantments of the middle age.' The representatives from both schools have a noble background.

"To the men who have come across the sea and the men of Harvard—I know you will expect me to speak your word of hearty welcome.

"So much for the disputants. Now a word for the subject. Whatever may be your opinion upon its merits, I think we shall all agree that there is no more vital question before the world today. The curtain has not yet gone down on that stupendous tragedy that began eight years ago. One result of the World War that caused all Christendom to rejoice was that the Turk had been driven out of Europe. Yet today we see Turkey defiantly issuing an ultimatum to her former conquerors and demanding again to be an European power. All honor to that little hero Nation in the Eastern Mediterranean which for three years bore the burden put upon her by the Allies and struggled to save Asia Minor from becoming another Armenia.

"Greece was summoned into danger and then betrayed by those whose battles she was fighting. She stood as she stood at Thermopylae and at Salamis for Western as against Asiatic civilization, and although she was at last overwhelmed by a cruel foe and thousands of Christians as a result were murdered, she towers today far above those who betrayed her.

"The Nations who have been and are in an unspeakable alliance with the unspeakable Turk have forfeited all claim to the good-will of America.

Duty of the United States

by all the resources of civilization that all agreed that it was the first duty of the world to make a repetition of it impossible.

"Since that time invention has prepared the way for more frightful horrors and has put new poison gases and other deadly resources at the service of the devil.

"The short-cut to race suicide today and to the obliteration of civilization is to have another World War. Either war will destroy the race or the race must destroy war. What are we going to do about it? Are we to rely upon the isolated and spasmodic action of the divided Nations upon a question in which all have the common interest of self-preservation?

"I know the isolated action of a great Nation can accomplish much, especially if it is action that means business. And amid that welter of international anarchy that holds sway beyond the Dardanelles and threatens to engulf Europe, the one word of hope for the world was spoken by the clear and mighty voice of England. But beyond some pious observations what has the United States done? And yet we could almost see the burning of Smyrna, could almost hear the groans and shrieks of the dying. Many of them were our fellow-Christians; some of them were our fellow-countrymen.

"What is the use of a Nation's being great and strong if it shall not sternly raise its voice, backed by its power, to prevent such infamies? It is a pious thing to bury the dead but it is far better to have prevented their being murdered.

"And here is the question upon which we may look for light this evening—Shall we enter the existing League of Nations or a league with reservations or the association of Nations which Mr Harding foresaw, but which to the rest of us has thus far been visible only to the eye of faith, or shall we go it alone? Nothing could be baser than to consider a question like this in the light of party politics and of the nonpartisan discussion of it we are certain tonight."

Fanning Leads Off for Harvard

Curiously enough both teams used pretty much the same arguments for different purposes. The Englishmen took the world events since the war to prove that the United States should enter the League and the Harvard men took the same events to prove that the United States was much better off outside the League.

R. S. Fanning, for Harvard, led off. He first commented on the peace between England and the United States that had lasted for over 100 years in spite of which, however, both Nations found themselves in wars before the 100 years were up.

He maintained that it would be impossible for the United States to enter into the kind of diplomacy and intrigue that characterized the nations of Europe before 1914 and which had not changed in the least since 1914.

Since the war every ideal that America had fought for had been shattered.

It was a record of broken trusts. Open covenants had been scorned; mandates had been ignored and secret treaties had been entered into in spite of the existing League of Nations. The worst of these was the treaty between France and Turkey entered into while the Treaty of Sevres was being negotiated. The whole thing had come back to the old idea of balance of power, and the United States cannot be a partner in any such balances.

Edward Marjoribanks, for Oxford, first thanked America for its cordiality. He said he was in despair because of the illness of Mr Lindsay, until he heard Gov McCall speak. With such an ally, he had no fear.

Looking at the thing historically, he said it was noteworthy that the English-speaking Nations had respect for arbitration, but it was not so much with some of the other peoples of the world. But it was encouraging to note that private law was once the rule, but it had been succeeded by common justice. The great object of the League of Nations was to prevent war—make war impossible—as impossible as the old private f uds. If the last war was terrible, the next would be more so. Had America joined the League of Nations, the Turk would not now be rampant in Europe.

So, looking on the League of Nations from a political point of view, from a commercial and economic point of view, and from the standpoint of a great moral ideal, he did not see why the United States should not come into the League. In point of fact he said the United States had taught the world the value of a League of Nations by its own history and form of government.

R. S. Bowers of Harvard said the League of Nations lacked unanimity of purpose. If the United States joined the League it would merely strengthen one faction against another and it could never hope in the face of European intrigue to uphold its ideals. That had been fully demonstrated by her experience at Paris in 1919 during the negotiation of the Treaty of Versailles. Anyway, he regarded that treaty as an obstacle in the way of a League of Nations—if its terms were to be fulfilled.

Hollis Pleases With Wit

M. C. Hollis of Oxford said that like Webster's Dictionary he supposed he was British propaganda. (Laughter.) He thought the main defect of England was lack of American propaganda, as the main defect of America was lack of British propaganda. American propaganda in Great Britain was confined to brands of cereals and Fords. He said before he went to Oxford he had been to school at Eton, where the boys wore dark coats as a sign of mourning for George III, and he would like Americans to realize that George III was dead.

He said England wants peace and that is why she wants the League of Nations. Some Americans were afraid if they were in the League of Nations the Secretariat of the League might drop a postcard in the box at Geneva some morning to the Secretary of State of the United States in which he would casually remark that a war had been arranged with Jugo-Slovakia for next Thursday and the United States would supply 75,000 troops. He said President Harding apparently does not believe nations should be leagued together, although he realizes the necessity of their associating together.

P. R. Harmel insisted that the affairs of Europe today were run by the Supreme Council of the League of Nations and badly run by that body, and that they would be run by the same body if the United States were in the League. The United States would be more of an influence in the world for peace and happiness if it kept out of the League.

The Oxford men were dined by the Harvard team at the Harvard Club after the debate. They were to leave on the 1 o'clock train this morning for Princeton, N J, but decided to remain over on account of Mr Lindsay's illness.

The ballot vote showed 1614 for the Harvard debaters and 1000 for Oxford.

Globe Oct 10

[87]

eptember 28, 1922 MUSICAL COURIER

"IT IS ONLY NATURAL THAT AMERICA SHOULD FOLLOW RUSSIA IN ITS MUSICAL TENDENCIES," SAYS RABINOFF

Russians Are Far Ahead of the Rest of the World in the Exquisiteness of Their Esthetic Conceptions of Music and Drama, He Claims—The Coming of the Ukrainian National Chorus an Important Event

An interesting interview with Max Rabinoff, by birth a Russian and himself a musician, recalled—in connection with his presentation this season of the unusual Ukrainian National Chorus, in its first American tour—the fact that in 1913 Mr. Rabinoff prophesied that the Russian spirit in music would dominate the immediate future of music in America.

"It is only natural that America should follow Russia in its musical tendencies," says this well known pioneer in presenting Russian art and Russian musical innovations to America. It was Max Rabinoff who introduced the Ballet Russe to America with Pavlowa and Mordkin, embellishing it with the "decor" of such Russian artists as Bakst, Anisfeld, Golovin and Korovin, and who brought the famous Imperial Russian Court Balalaika Orchestra to this country as early as 1912.

"People outside Russia have no idea how far Russians are ahead of the rest of the world in the exquisiteness of their esthetic conceptions of music and drama." Mr. Rabinoff maintains his statement of a decade ago. "They may think that Russia is semi-barbaric in culture, a country of ignorant moujiks and adventurous Cossacks, but it was—and still is—the cradle of a new art that springs directly out of the joy and sorrows of the people, and not from any aristocratic class traditions, such as control the art of Western European nations. Russia still has music messages to give the world?

"It is because the coming of the Ukrainian National Chorus, with its conductor-composer, Alexander Koshetz, will strike new paths for choral art in America that I was impelled to re-enter the American music field—though I have not returned to it strictly in the managerial sense.

"I heard the chorus in five different countries of Europe during the last three years," Mr. Rabinoff continued, "and in each instance it met with triumphs. Nor was that simply because it sang well." Mr. Rabinoff's visionary eyes looked up quizzically, with a touch of that humor that has made him dare many things in art as, for instance, the touring of America and Canada with the Boston Grand Opera Company combined with the complete Pavlowa Ballet Russe for its incidental ballet.

"How do they differ from other choruses?" he was asked.

"It is that indefinite word 'chorus' that has made me decide to present, in addition to the chorus, a solo artist who will represent the best in Russian song." Mr. Rabinoff digressed for a moment to emphasize the fact that the concerts of the Ukrainian National Chorus will let America hear Russian vocal art as a whole. "America has been forging ahead in choral singing—everybody got into the spirit of it during the war. So I feel this is the moment to let them realize how this impulse may be turned into the finest of fine arts. No, it's not just educational. But it is an example of what a nation may do in conserving its art impulse and bringing it abreast of modern tenets in the arts.

Vigor of Nationalism.

"The Ukraine, the southland of the former Russian empire that stretches like a crescent above the Black Sea and crowns the Crimea, has distinct traits in its music. The Ukrainian songs are an inspiring panorama of life—and how can any listener remain indifferent to such things? I am sure that this music will stir American composers to emulation and will be a great thing for the country. We Slavs are emotional people and therefore fundamentally different in our art expressions from other Europeans. So, too, Americans are an emotional race. Both breathe the same atmosphere, the Slav has the same esthetic conceptions of an average American. That is why I believe that America will echo Europe in welcoming the rare art of the Ukrainian National Chorus, by means of which it brings to us a remarkable new music literature.

"No, I don't believe in a star system. That is the reason I have left my prima donnas, Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja and Mme. Nina Koshetz, to the last; and also why Prof. Alexander Koshetz, eminent pedagogue, composer and editor, has given his remarkable musicianship to these forty-two singers, proving a genius in obtaining from the human voice musical effects that will amaze you.

"I take pleasure in introducing Mlle. Slobodskaja to the American public because I have rarely heard so beautiful a voice. I take equal pleasure in presenting Mme. Koshetz—whom you know is a niece of Alexander Koshetz—because she, too, is a great interpreter of Russian songs, with a voice that mirrors the moods of the Russian people."

The coming of the Ukrainian National Chorus in this all-Russian Festival program will—if America repeats the history of its last three years in Europe—mark another milestone by which the artistic taste of Max Rabinoff has been justified.

M.

THE UKRANIAN NATIONAL CHORUS.

center, with folded arms, is Prof. Alexander Koshetz, the conductor. The unmarried women of the chorus distinguished by the floral wreaths which they wear until their marriage.

Musical Courier Sept 28

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

Max Rabinoff will present the Ukrainian National Chorus at Symphony Hall next Friday night. These concerts will be divided into two parts—with the unique art and new music of the Ukrainian Na-

Advertiser Oct 8

Adv 10/8

ional Chorus in its music of the Ukraine, formerly little Russia, and a separate program of Russian opera arias and songs of great Russia, given by two alternating artists of the opera in Russia. Mlle Oda Slobodskaja and Mme Nina Koshetz.

FAVORITE STARS

Advertiser Oct 8

On Friday evening, Oct. 13, in Symphony Hall, the Ukrainian National Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, will be heard for the first time in Boston. The chorus has appeared with success in many European cities and will be assisted by Mme. Slobodskaja, a Russian operatic singer.

Monitor Oct 10

No announcement has yet been made by any of the local choral societies, but their ways and works do not change greatly from year to year. The visit of the Ukrainian Chorus, Oct 13, may rouse emulation among them.

Among the recital givers of this season Paderewski is sure to arouse most interest. He has become already almost a legendary figure to the younger generation. His playing will probably not have the technical perfection of Kreisler, or of some of the other great pianists. But Paderewski had always a way of impressing his personality upon audiences and upon masterpieces that atoned for much of his nervous piano pounding on his last visits to Boston. Globe 9-24

are to have more visiting com- Casella, Siegfried

Globe Sept 24

Friday evening, [illegible] Hall, a first concert here by the celebrated Ukrainian Choir of Russian peasants, two score strong, schooled and led by Alexander Koshetz. Up and down Europe they have wandered for two years and everywhere the body and color of their voices, their instinctive and acquired skill and zest in song, their sincere conveyance of mood, sentiment, emotion, have praised them alike with the expert and with the simple. Now they come to America. Two solo-singers will assist the chorus—Miss Slobodskaja, of the opera houses of Petrograd and Moscow, and Mme Koshetz, heard and liked at the Symphony Concerts last winter.

Trans Sept 30

Transcript Sept 30

UKRAINIAN CHOIR

On Friday evening, Oct. 13, the Ukrainian National Chorus will give its first concert in Boston at Symphony Hall.

The Ukrainian National Chorus has been triumphantly touring Western Europe for the past three years, like troubadours of old, recruiting their history, their faith, their festival songs, in a way that the Western world has recently revived in its pageantry, but not on the concert stage.

They sing entirely "a capella" under Alexander Koshetz, conductor-composer, of Ukrainia. The voices respond like a "human symphony orchestra," as all Europe has called them, the voices revealing the various tone qualities of an orchestra. Globe 10/1

Globe Oct 1

Friday at 8:15, Ukrainian National Chorus, assisted by Oda Slobodskaya, soprano. "Doomsday," "Our Lady of Potchaev," "There Was a Widow," "Behind the Mountain," "Yahill's Daughter," "Cuckoo, Grey Cuckoo" and "Shtshedryk," Russian folks songs.

Aria from "Russian and Ludmila" and "Hebrew Song, from the Tragedy," "Prince Kholmsky," Glinka; "I Love Him Still" and "Look Pretty Maiden," Dargomijsky; "On the Hills of Georgia" and "The Sea," Rimsky-Korsakoff; "Desire," Cui.

"The Queen of the Seas" and "Complaint of Yaroslavna," Borodine; "Oriental Romance" and "The Dream," Glazounoff; "O, Sing Not Lovely Maiden," Rachmaninoff; "So Soon Forgotten" and "Had I Only Known," Tchaikowsky.

"The High Mountain," "I Wish to Go to the Meadow," "Poor Hawthorne," "A Violin is Playing in the Street," "I Sat Spinning, Spinning," "The Young Monk," "Lullaby," "The Flute Player," "Kosa" and "Mushrooms" Russian Folk Songs. Globe 10/8

Friday at 8:15, Ukrainian National Chorus, assisted by Nina Koshetz, soprano, and Oda Slobodskaya, soprano.

Globe Oct 8

UKRAINIAN CHORUS 10/8

The Ukrainian National Chorus is to appear in Boston Symphony Hall on Friday evening, October 13. It is conducted by a famous musician, Alexander Koshetz. The soloists are Mlle. Oda Slobodaskaja, leading soprano of the Petrograd Opera, and Mme Nina Koshetz, leading soprano of the Moscow Opera. The programs typify Ukrainian life. Adv

Advertiser Oct 8

As the World Wags

By PHILIP HALE 10/11

~~Herald~~

So the famous Ukrainian national chorus will sing here next Friday night the chorus that "sounds like a choir of violins, a symphony orchestra, or again like a gigantic organ.

Ukrainian. It's a sonorous, noble word. The first time we saw the word "Ukraine" it was in a piece that we learned, alas, imperfectly, to spout in school.

"Bring forth the horse!" The horse was brought.
In truth he was a noble steed,
A Tartar of the Ukraine breed

These lines lodged securely in the memory. So did the lines from "Damon and Pythias" with E. L. Davenport as Damon.

"Lucullus, bring forth my steed!"
"Master, in hope to save thy life, I slew thy steed."

Herald Oct 11

Choir from Ukraine

For next Friday evening, a novel concert, good to anticipate, is announced for Symphony Hall. The Ukrainian National Chorus will give it; Alexander Koshetz will lead it; Mme. Slobodskaja from opera houses at Petrograd and Moscow will be the assisting singer. The choir comprises thirty or forty peasants from towns or villages in Little Russia, assembled and long schooled by the directing Koshetz. They sing hymns, folk-tunes, miscellaneous choral pieces. Of recent years they have journeyed from the Ukraine to Vienna and Berlin, London, Paris and minor cities. Almost with one accord, connoisseurs and less tutored listeners, fellow-Russians or Western Europeans, have praised the remarkable voices, the remarkable skill, the beauty, the power, the felt and conveyed emotion within these peasants. Wherever there is choral singing, there has the Ukrainian choir made deep impression. This autumn Max Rabinoff, resuming management, has brought it to the United States with visits to New York and Boston for beginning. To the peasants he has joined a new singer from Russian opera houses—Mme. Slobodskaja, a protégée of Stravinsky. She will be heard in no less than fourteen pieces—songs and operatic numbers from Glinka and Dargomyshsky through Chaikóvsky and Rakhmaninov. The choir will sing as many more pieces of their singular, engrossing music. —Trans 10/7

Transcript Oct 7

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

A vocal Symphony concert will be given by the Ukrainian chorus at Symphony hall, Friday evening, Oct. 13. Max Rabinoff, former impressario of the Boston Grand Opera Company, who introduced Pavlowa and her ballet russe to America, will this season present the Ukrainian national chorus in a series of concerts in this country after a tremendous tour of triumph throughout Europe. These concerts will be divided into two parts—with the unique art and new music of the Ukrainian national chorus in its music of the Ukraine, formerly little Russia, and a separate program of Russian opera arias and songs of great Russia, given by two alternating artists of the opera in Russia, Mlle. Oda Slobodakaja and Mme. Nina Koshetz. Herald 10/8 exotic Cio-Cio-San in Tamaki Miura.

Herald Oct 8

---

THE UKRAINIAN CHORUS

Max Rabinoff, true to his traditions of presenting gala performances, this former impresario of the Boston Grand Opera Company, who introduced Pavlowa and her Ballet Russe to America, will this season present the Ukrainian National Chorus in a series of concerts in this country after a tremendous tour of thriumph throughout Europe. These concerts will be divided into two parts—with the unique art and new music of the Ukrainian National Chorus in its music of the Ukraine, formerly little Russia, and a separate program of Russian opera arias and songs of great Russia, given by two alternating artists of the opera in Russia, Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja and Mme. Nina Koshetz.

Amer 10/7

Nina Koshetz.

The combination will be most unusual, a far richer ensemble and a far more brilliant scene, with the chorus in native dress, than the average concert presents. A new folk music by a "symphony" of human voices such as America has never heard, a feast of the great Russians by a great interpretative artist—the concert will be a "composite of Russian vocal art."

American Oct 7

eptember 28, 1922 — MUSICAL COURIER

"IT IS ONLY NATURAL THAT AMERICA SHOULD FOLLOW RUSSIA IN ITS MUSICAL TENDENCIES," SAYS RABINOFF

Russians Are Far Ahead of the Rest of the World in the Exquisiteness of Their Esthetic Conceptions of Music and Drama, He Claims—The Coming of the Ukrainian National Chorus an Important Event

An interesting interview with Max Rabinoff, by birth a Russian and himself a musician, recalled—in connection with his presentation this season of the unusual Ukrainian National Chorus, in its first American tour—the fact that in 1913 Mr. Rabinoff prophesied that the Russian spirit in music would dominate the immediate future of music in America.

"It is only natural that America should follow Russia in its musical tendencies," says this well known pioneer in presenting Russian art and Russian musical innovations to America. It was Max Rabinoff who introduced the Ballet Russe to America with Pavlowa and Mordkin, embellishing it with the "decor" of such Russian artists as Bakst, Anisfeld, Golovin and Korovin, and who brought the famous Imperial Russian Court Balalaika Orchestra to this country as early as 1912.

"People outside Russia have no idea how far Russians are ahead of the rest of the world in the exquisiteness of their esthetic conceptions of music and drama." Mr. Rabinoff maintains his statement of a decade ago. "They may think that Russia is semi-barbaric in culture, a country of ignorant moujiks and adventurous Cossacks, but it was—and still is—the cradle of a new art that springs directly out of the joy and sorrows of the people, and not from any aristocratic class traditions, such as control the art of Western European nations. Russia still has music messages to give the world?

"It is because the coming of the Ukrainian National Chorus, with its conductor-composer, Alexander Koshetz, will strike new paths for choral art in America that I was impelled to re-enter the American music field—though I have not returned to it strictly in the managerial sense.

"I heard the chorus in five different countries of Europe during the last three years," Mr. Rabinoff continued, "and in each instance it met with triumphs. Nor was that simply because it sang well." Mr. Rabinoff's visionary eyes looked up quizzically, with a touch of that humor that has made him dare many things in art as, for instance, the touring of America and Canada with the Boston Grand Opera Company combined with the complete Pavlowa Ballet Russe for its incidental ballet.

"How do they differ from other choruses?" he was asked.

"It is that indefinite word 'chorus' that has made me decide to present, in addition to the chorus, a solo artist who will represent the best in Russian song." Mr. Rabinoff digressed for a moment to emphasize the fact that the concerts of the Ukrainian National Chorus will let America hear Russian vocal art as a whole. "America has been forging ahead in choral singing—everybody got into the spirit of it during the war. So I feel this is the moment to let them realize how this impulse may be turned into the finest of fine arts. No, it's not just educational. But it is an example of what a nation may do in conserving its art impulse and bringing it abreast of modern tenets in the arts.

VIGOR OF NATIONALISM.

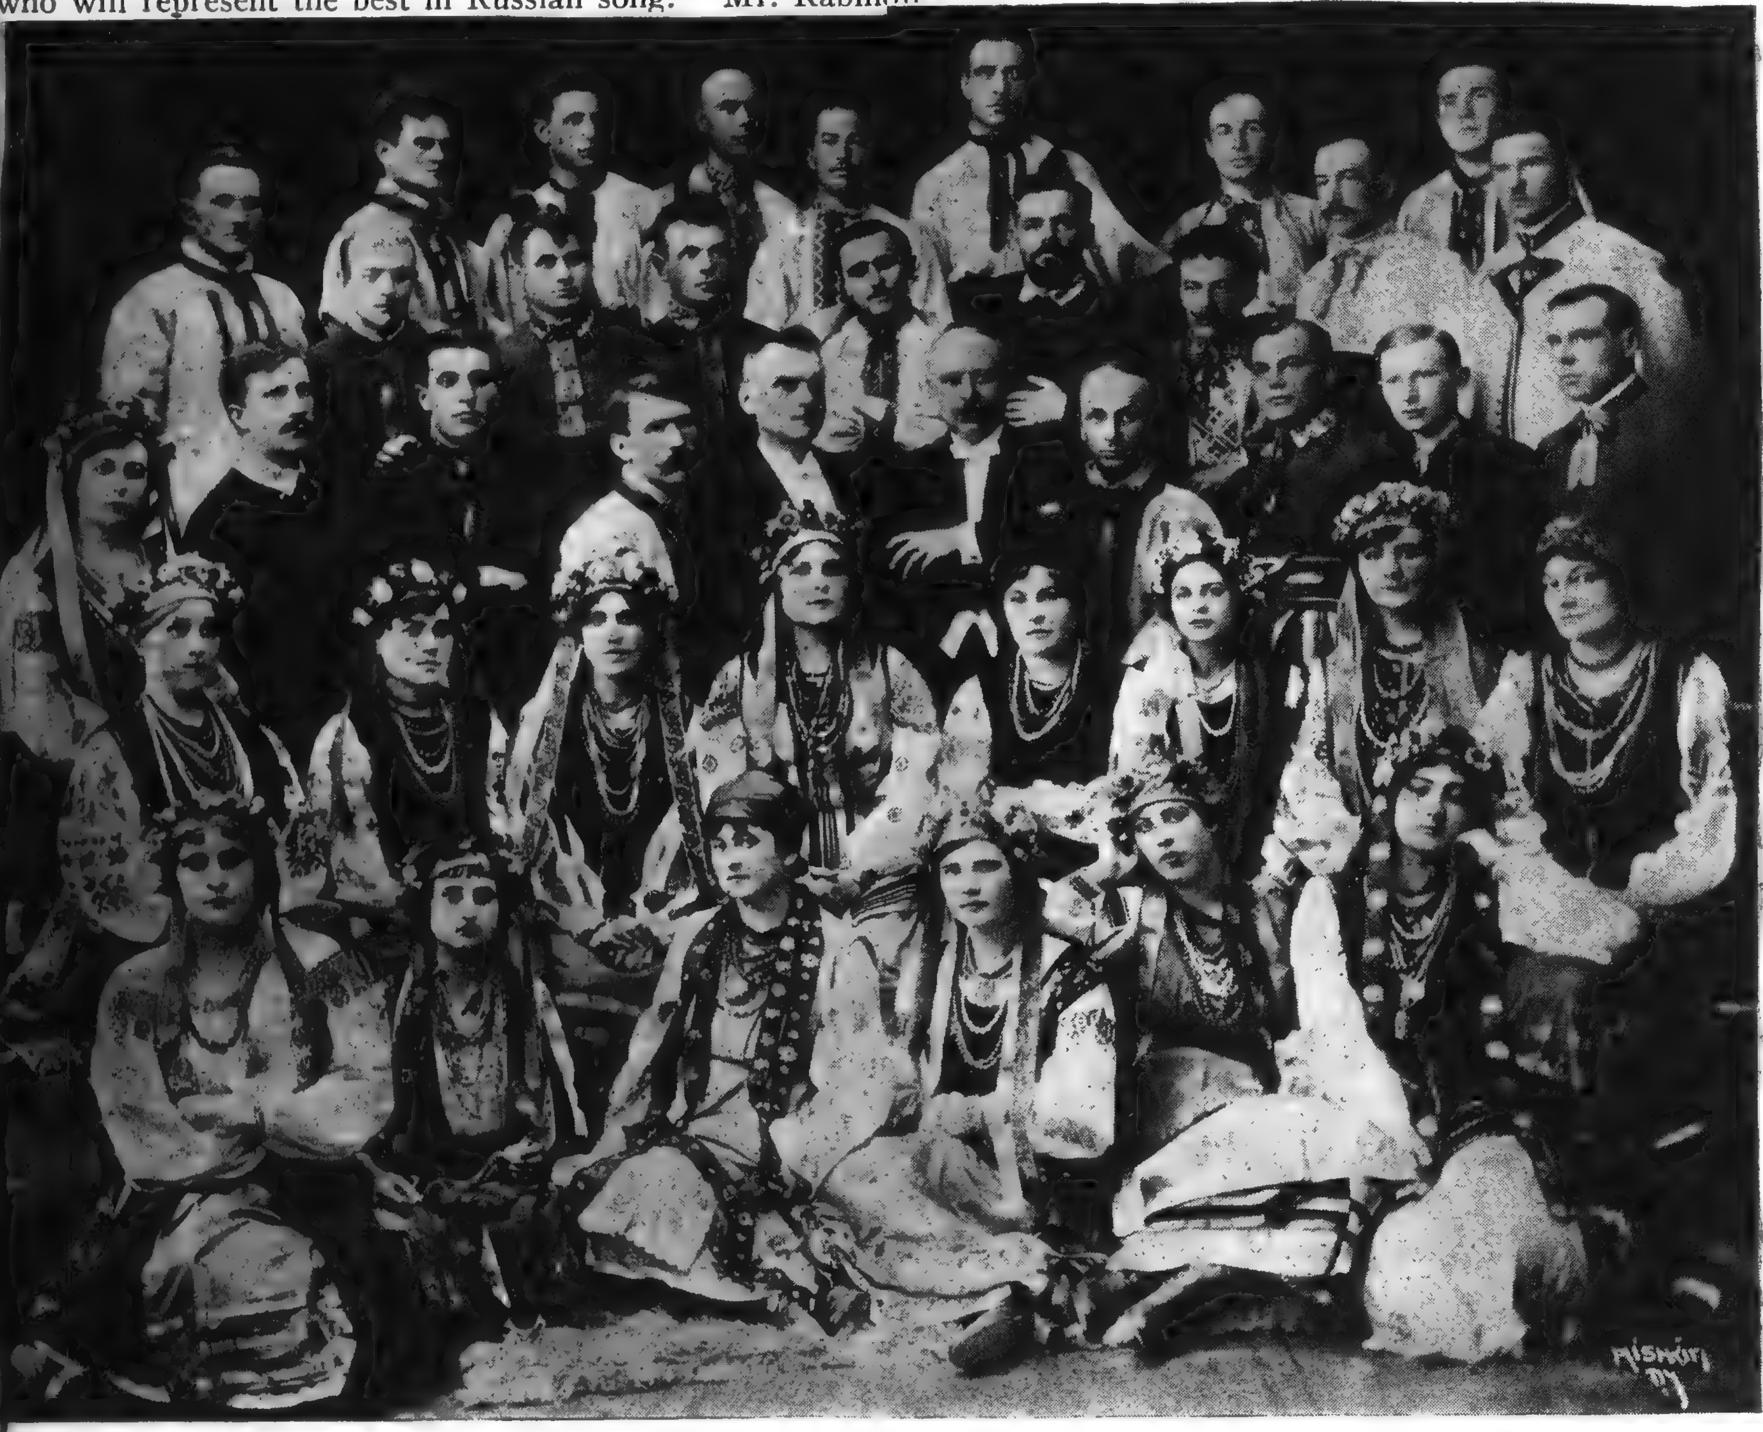
"The Ukraine, the southland of the former Russian empire that stretches like a crescent above the Black Sea and crowns the Crimea, has distinct traits in its music. The Ukrainian songs are an inspiring panorama of life—and how can any listener remain indifferent to such things? I am sure that this music will stir American composers to emulation and will be a great thing for the country. We Slavs are emotional people and therefore fundamentally different in our art expressions from other Europeans. So, too, Americans are an emotional race. Both breathe the same atmosphere, the Slav has the same esthetic conceptions of an average American. That is why I believe that America will echo Europe in welcoming the rare art of the Ukrainian National Chorus, by means of which it brings to us a remarkable new music literature.

"No, I don't believe in a star system. That is the reason I have left my prima donnas, Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja and Mme. Nina Koshetz, to the last; and also why Prof. Alexander Koshetz, eminent pedagogue, composer and editor, has given his remarkable musicianship to these forty-two singers, proving a genius in obtaining from the human voice musical effects that will amaze you.

"I take pleasure in introducing Mlle. Slobodskaja to the American public because I have rarely heard so beautiful a voice. I take equal pleasure in presenting Mme. Koshetz—whom you know is a niece of Alexander Koshetz—because she, too, is a great interpreter of Russian songs, with a voice that mirrors the moods of the Russian people."

The coming of the Ukrainian National Chorus in this all-Russian Festival program will—if America repeats the history of its last three years in Europe—mark another milestone by which the artistic taste of Max Rabinoff has been justified.

M.



THE UKRANIAN NATIONAL CHORUS.
e center, with folded arms, is Prof. Alexander Koshetz, the conductor. The unmarried women of the choru distinguished by the floral wreaths which they wear until their marriage.

Musical Courier Sept 28

---

are promised for the

No announcement has yet been made by any of the local choral societies, but their ways and works do not change greatly from year to year. The visit of the Ukrainian Chorus, Oct 13, may rouse emulation among them.

Among the recital givers of this season Paderewski is sure to arouse most interest. He has become already almost a legendary figure to the younger generation. His playing will probably not have the technical perfection of Kreisler, or of some of the other great pianists. But Paderewski had always a way of impressing his personality upon audiences and upon masterpieces that atoned for much of his nervous piano pounding on his last visits to Boston.

are to have more visiting com- Casella, Siegfried

Globe 9-24

Globe Sept 24

Friday evening, in Symphony Hall, a first concert here by the celebrated Ukrainian Choir of Russian peasants, two score strong, schooled and led by Alexander Koshetz. Up and down Europe they have wandered for two years and everywhere the body and color of their voices, their instinctive and acquired skill and zest in song, their sincere conveyance of mood, sentiment, emotion, have praised them alike with the expert and with the simple. Now they come to America. Two solo-singers will assist the chorus—Miss Slobodskaja, of the opera houses of Petrograd and Moscow, and Mme Koshetz, heard and liked at the Symphony Concerts last winter.

Trans Sept 30

Transcript Sept 30

Choir from Ukraine

For next Friday evening, a novel concert, good to anticipate, is announced for Symphony Hall. The Ukrainian National Chorus will give it; Alexander Koshetz will lead it; Mme. Slobodskaja from opera houses at Petrograd and Moscow will be the assisting singer. The choir comprises thirty or forty peasants from towns or villages in Little Russia, assembled and long schooled by the directing Koshetz. They sing hymns, folk-tunes, miscellaneous choral pieces. Of recent years they have journeyed from the Ukraine to Vienna and Berlin, London, Paris and minor cities. Almost with one accord, connoisseurs and less tutored listeners, fellow-Russians or Western Europeans, have praised the remarkable voices, the remarkable skill, the beauty, the power, the felt and conveyed emotion within these peasants. Wherever there is choral singing, there has the Ukrainian choir made deep impression. This autumn Max Rabinoff, resuming management, has brought it to the United States with visits to New York and Boston for beginning. To the peasants he has joined a new singer from Russian opera houses—Mme. Slobodskaja, a protégée of Stravinsky. She will be heard in no less than fourteen pieces—songs and operatic numbers from Glinka and Dargomyzhsky through Chaikovsky and Rakhmaninov. The choir will sing as many more pieces of their singular, engrossing music.

Trans 10/7

Transcript Oct 7

UKRAINIAN CHOIR

On Friday evening, Oct. 13, the Ukrainian National Chorus will give its first concert in Boston at Symphony Hall.

The Ukrainian National Chorus has been triumphantly touring Western Europe for the past three years, like troubadours of old, recruiting their history, their faith, their festival songs, in a way that the Western world has recently revived in its pageantry, but not on the concert stage.

They sing entirely "a capella" under Alexander Koshetz, conductor-composer, of Ukrainia. The voices respond like a "human symphony orchestra," as all Europe has called them, the voices revealing the varicus tone qualities of an orchestra.

Globe Oct 1

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

A vocal Symphony concert will be given by the Ukrainian chorus at Symphony hall, Friday evening, Oct. 13. Max Rabinoff, former impressario of the Boston Grand Opera Company, who introduced Pavlowa and her ballet russe to America, will this season present the Ukrainian national chorus in a series of concerts in this country after a tremendous tour of triumph throughout Europe. These concerts will be divided into two parts—with the unique art and new music of the Ukrainian national chorus in its music of the Ukraine, formerly little Russia, and a separate program of Russian opera arias and songs of great Russia, given by two alternating artists of the opera in Russia, Mlle. Oda Slobodakaja and Mme. Nina Koshetz.

Herald Oct 8

Friday at 8:15, Ukrainian National Chorus, assisted by Oda Slobodskaya, soprano. "Doomsday," "Our Lady of Potchaev," "There Was a Widow," "Behind the Mountain," "Yahill's Daughter," "Cuckoo, Grey Cuckoo" and "Shtshedryk," Russian folks songs.

Aria from "Russian and Ludmila" and "Hebrew Song, from the Tragedy," "Prince Kholmsky," Glinka; "I Love Him Still" and "Look Pretty Maiden," Dargomijsky; "On the Hills of Georgia" and "The Sea," Rimsky-Korsakoff; "Desire," Cui.

"The Queen of the Seas" and "Complaint of Yaroslavna," Borodine; "Oriental Romance" and "The Dream," Glazounoff; "O, Sing Not Lovely Maiden," Rachmaninoff; "So Soon Forgotten" and "Had I Only Known," Tchaikowsky.

"The High Mountain," "I Wish to Go to the Meadow," "Poor Hawthorne," "A Violin is Playing in the Street," "I Sat Spinning, Spinning," "The Young Monk," "Lullaby," "The Flute Player," "Kosa" and "Mushrooms", Russian Folk Songs.

Globe 10/8

Friday at 8:15, Ukrainian National Chorus, assisted by Nina Koshetz, soprano, and Oda Slobodskaya, soprano.

Globe Oct 8

---

exotic Cio-Cio-San in Tamaki Miura.

THE UKRAINIAN CHORUS

Max Rabinoff, true to his traditions of presenting gala performances, this former impresario of the Boston Grand Opera Company, who introduced Pavlowa and her Ballet Russe to America, will this season present the Ukrainian National Chorus in a series of concerts in this country after a tremendous tour of thriumph throughout Europe. These concerts will be divided into two parts—with the unique art and new music of the Ukrainian National Chorus in its music of the Ukraine, formerly little Russia, and a separate program of Russian opera arias and songs of great Russia, given by two alternating artists of the opera in Russia, Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja and Mme. Nina Koshetz.

Amer 10/7

Nina Koshetz.

The combination will be most unusual, a far richer ensemble and a far more brilliant scene, with the chorus in native dress, than the average concert presents. A new folk music by a "symphony" of human voices such as America has never heard, a feast of the great Russians by a great interpretative artist—the concert will be a "composite of Russian vocal art."

American Oct 7

UKRAINIAN CHORUS 10/8

The Ukrainian National Chorus is to appear in Boston Symphony Hall on Friday evening, October 13. It is conducted by a famous musician, Alexander Koshetz. The soloists are Mlle. Oda Slobodaskaja, leading soprano of the Petrograd Opera, and Mme Nina Koshetz, leading soprano of the Moscow Opera. The programs typify Ukrainian life. Adv

Advertiser Oct 8

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

Max Rabinoff will present the Ukrainian National Chorus at Symphony Hall next Friday night. These concerts will be divided into two parts—with the unique art and new music of the Ukrainian Na-

Adv 10/8

Advertiser Oct 8

Adv 8/8

ional Chorus in its music of the Ukraine, formerly little Russia, and a separate program of Russian opera arias and songs of great Russia, given by two alternating artists of the opera in Russia, Mlle Odo Slobodskaja and Mme Nina Koshetz.

FAVORITE STARS

Advertiser Oct 8

On Friday evening, Oct. 13, in Symphony Hall, the Ukrainian National Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, will be heard for the first time in Boston. The chorus has appeared with success in many European cities and will be assisted by Mme. Slobodskaja, a Russian operatic singer.

Monitor Oct 10

As the World Wags

By PHILIP HALE 10/11

~~Herald~~

So the famous Ukrainian nationa horus will sing here next Friday night he chorus that "sounds like a choir o iolins, a symphony orchestra, or agair ike a gigantic organ.

Ukrainian. It's a sonorous, noble word. The first time we saw the word "Ukraine" it was in a piece that we earned, alas, imperfectly, to spout in school.

"'Bring forth the horse!' The horse
was brought.
In truth he was a noble steed,
A Tartar of the Ukraine breed

These lines lodged securely in the memory. So did the lines from "Damon and Pythias" with E. L. Davenport as Damon.

"Lucullus, bring forth my steed!"
"Master, in hope to save thy life, I slew thy steed."

Herald Oct 11

[88]

Trans 10/2

To Sing of Ukrainia

(Photo by Underwood & Underwood)

AMONG the passengers on the S. S. Caronia at New York were the Ukrainian National Chorus, composed of fifty young men and women, who for the past three years have been singing in the capitals of Europe. They come here for a tour of the United States, Canada and Mexico.

This photograph, taken on board the ship just before it docked, shows Max Rabinoff American representative of the chorus centre, and Alexander Kossetz, European composer and conductor of the chorus, surrounded by the women members of the chorus in their national costumes.

Transcript Oct 2

UKRAINIANS GIVE CONCERT

Herald 10/14

National Chorus Makes Excellent Impression in Symphony Hall

ORGANIZATION HIGHLY TRAINED

By PHILIP HALE

Max Rabinoff brought the Ukrainian National Chorus led by Alexander Koshetz, to Symphony Hall last night. Miss Oda Slobodskaja, soprano, sang two groups of songs, accompanied by Nicholas Stember, pianist. There was a very large and enthusiastic audience.

For once the praise of the passionate press agent seemed reasonable, even cool. Seldom, if ever, have we heard a chorus so firmly and at the same time so musically controlled. A chorus may have precision of attack, pure intonation, a decent regard for dynamic contrasts and gradations, and yet be without a vivifying soul.

These Ukrainians have been admirably trained. They have a strongly developed rhythmic sense. They have a legato line in sustained passages that accomplished solo singers might envy. Their command of nuances and their variety of expression are remarkable. They sing with unaffected spirit; their emotion is not content with the following of the conductor's wishes; it is apparently unfeigned and spontaneous.

Although they have given concerts in many European cities and might faithfully accomplish now a perfunctory task, they sing with a freshness, a zest and an emotional intensity that show no sign of physical or mental weariness. Possibly it is because in a strange land they have their own country in mind and are thus inspired, unlike the exiles by the waters of Babylon who asked how they could sing the songs of Zion.

The program of the choral numbers was varied and interesting; interesting musically to layman and folk-lorist alike. It included hymns and canticles, Christmas carols, sung as serenades beneath windows, Spring songs containing hints at the survival of paganism. The names of Leontovich, Demootsky, Stetzenko, Lyssenko, Barvinski-Koshetz were on the program as arrangers, adapters; some of the most charming selections were signed Koshetz.

And often in these songs, now melancholy but not gloomy, gay but not frivolous, solemn but not depressing, Mr. Koshetz brought from this chorus surprising, impressive, but not extravagant orchestral effects.

Miss Slobodskaja, evidently an experienced singer, has a voice that pleased when she did not use full force. Unfortunately she too often abused her vocal strength, forced her voice, so that her upper tones recalled Tennyson's shrill-edged shriek of a mother dividing the shuddering night. When she sang simply in songs of tender nature her voice was appealing. She did not show a great command of nuances, alternating for the most part between fortissimo and piano. The composers represented by her were, according to the program, Dargomijsky, Glinka, Tchaikovsky, Cui, Glazounov, Moussorgsky and Rimsky-Korsakov.

Herald Oct 14

REMARKABLE AND RARE

IMPENDING UKRAINIANS IN FOLK-SONG

At Trans 10/9

The Choir to Be Heard in Boston Next Friday Makes No Small Stir in New York—Pieces and Performance — The Background, the Method and the Songs—A Singular Music of Soil and Spirit

WITH equal curiosity and satisfaction Russian and non-Russian hearers listened to the Ukrainian National Chorus in New York last Friday evening. Then and there it gave its first concert on this side of the Atlantic—"an exhibition," according to The New York Herald, of "intensely characteristic choral singing, distinguished by strongly marked racial traits and by an art as singular as it is compelling." About these traits, this art and the occasion in general Mr. Deems Taylor contributes more particulars to The World. Here they are:

> The Ukrainians are a small mixed chorus of sixty-odd voices under the leadership of Alexander Koshetz and they have been brought to an extraordinary degree of perfection. The singers appeared in the peasant costumes of Little Russia—a flaming and exotic swirl of scarlet, canary yellow, black, turquoise, orange, white and peacock green; the women with dazzling floral headdresses, the men in solid green and blue and brown kaftans, and everybody wearing bright red or yellow boots. But they had something for the ear as well as the eye, as their first numbers proved. For they sang with a precision and finish, a perfection of diction and command of dynamics such as are seldom heard here. Professor Koshetz has his singers under as absolute control as it is given to any choral conductor to possess, and if there were flaws in the performance he and not his chorus must be held accountable for them.
>
> Two groups of Ukrainian folk-songs comprised the choral pieces—one at the beginning and one at the end of the programme. Both were superbly done. The chorus has amazing volume of tone, considering its numbers, a fact due, probably, to the curious metallic—a most brassy—quality of most of the voices. They seemed to be untrained voices, not particularly agreeable individually, perhaps, but they blended marvellously, with enormous carrying power and a range of expression that was more than ample for the folk-music they sing.
>
> The chorus seems somewhat limited as to vocal color. It sang everything with much the same quality tone; while the conductor relied for his effects chiefly upon changes in pace and rhythm and upon a wonderful range of shading that went from a blaring fortissimo to a humming pianissimo that was to be felt rather than heard. This chorus has been called "a vocal orchestra," and the term is a happy one; but "organ" is the better word—an organ perfectly played and with a perfect swell-box, but not quite enough stops. Polished as its work was, one missed the variety in tone and quality that is at the command of such choruses as St. Olaf's and the great Toronto Choir.
>
> A part of the impression was undoubtedly due to the skilful arrangements of the various folk-songs. These had been made by several Russian musicians, including Leontovich, Stetzenko and Lyssenko. A large proportion of them, and some of the best, were made by Professor Koshetz himself. They are all well written for the voices, harmonized with dignified simplicity, and have the massiveness and telling quality that are born only of masterly part-writing.

"There was considerable singing with closed mouths," continues Mr. Henderson in The Herald, "and in this the listener quickly heard the effects which persuaded European critics to call this organization a human orchestra. The sound and gradations were those of a remarkable body of strings and wood winds. The dynamics were extraordinary. The sudden fortes struck like blows. The swells were like the heave of the deep sea. The diminishing chords at the ends of some numbers were magical. In religious canticles, in melancholy narratives, in reckless outbreaks of gayety the chorus disclosed a fitness of style, an adequacy of expression and a profound unanimity of feeling that aroused genuine emotion among the listeners."

Folk-Song That Teems

Equal pleasure in degree and kind, Bostonians may anticipate when the Ukrainian Chorus repeats at Symphony Hall next Friday evening its concert in New York. Plainly it deserves informed, receptive ears. To that end Professor Koshetz, the director, has written a note about Ukrainian folk-song parts of which as translated for Musical America by Florence Wilkins follow: "Ukrainia," the director writes, "means, literally, border marshes. Geographically this land of nearly sixty million persons caps the Black Sea and spreads like a large crescent over the Crimea. Ukrainia is the southland of the former Russian Empire—the "Italy of Russia'—with a people of a warmer temperament than the North Russians. . . .

"Ukrainian folk-songs are full of a wonderful tenderness and sympathy, of sweet melancholy; yet they are never powerless or weak, but are always full of cheerfulness, buoyancy, with a very distinctive humor. They fairly bubble over with merriment at times. The rich nature of the Ukraine, the mild climate, the abundance of sunshine, the sweep of meadows and golden fields, the wealth of resources, the gardens and orchards, the quiet waters of the rivers and the blue horizon of the Black Sea are reflected as in a mirror in the songs, lending them a soft and colorful melodiousness, filled with an inarticulate melancholy—of horizons lost in the haze of distance, with the mellowness of the moonlit nights and the warmth of the sunshine with the smell of gardens and meadows in bloom.

"Especially rich in fine shadings of emotions are the love-songs. So plentiful are they that it can be said that in no other tongue has love been sung about as it has in the Ukrainian. However, the emotions are not merely personal. Every moment of his life the Ukrainian links and identifies with the lovely Nature surrounding him. Not a moment of these emotions or of the whole drama of the song but has its embellishment and symbol from some phase of Nature. Nature actually seems to live the same life as the poet. It rejoices, grieves, loves, suffers, weeps, thirsts, awaits. . . .

"This strong amalgamation of man with Nature, which always has a poetic form, does not give to the melody of the Ukrainian songs that erratic vigor, bordering on the uncouth, which is proper to the music of Great Russia. On the contrary, a deep appreciation of form, of architectonics, of measure, lend to the design of the tunes the gracefulness of a complete construction of the musical phrase, a purity of architectural form and style, and always rhythm that is clearly defined. All this is enhanced in a vapory sort of elegy, a kind of mist of sadness which comes as a result of the tragic and stormy history of this people.

"The Ukraine, with no definite or strong borders, has throughout history been a prey for neighbors. As the natural route from Asia into Europe, and therefore the path along which the barbaric tribes marched into Europe in mediæval times, it became thereby the scene of an endless bloody struggle in which the Ukrainian people had to defend their country against the inroads of the Orient. The whole history of the Ukrainians is that of an heroic stand against their enemies. And it has left its traces on the mentality of the people, giving to their songs that depth and fineness of feeling which can be acquired only through suffering. These historical conflicts have also imparted to the songs a wealth of subject matter. Therefore it is not to be wondered at that in Ukrainian music, outside of its own peulciar diatonics, we often find pentatonics, also the old Grecian scale and derivatives from it. In spite of these influences their folk-song has remained national in character, in which real Ukrainian re-creation has assimilated this foreign material to herself.

"The characteristic trait of the Ukrainian songs is their polyphony. A deep-seated, inborn sense of beauty, a reaching after harmony, an excess of soulful musical health and strength, have found an outlet in the rich polyphonics of the songs. Moreover, this music was aided by the absence of foreign or outside factors and influences, such as instrumental music or the use of church organs, which in Western Europe lulled to sleep popular creations of vocal harmony. The Ukrainians, seeking beauty and fulness of sound, created in the long run a rich polyphony. They discovered for themselves their own counterpoint, their peculiar harmony, altogether different from that of the Western schools, and the laws of this counterpoint and harmony have not yet been ascertained.

"With the exception of the prehistoric melodies, all the songs of the Ukraine are sung polyphonically. Every melody is surrounded with colorful and capricious counterpoint, or natural harmony, for several voices. And this counterpoint, as well as the harmony, is not fixed or unchanging. On the contrary, with every verse the song takes on new combinations of sounds, the product of the vital creative invention of the singer. So that it is possible to take these combinations down only on a phonograph record, because they are so varied. The singer himself is unable to repeat what he sang just a few minutes before."

Chosen Pieces

Here, finally, for the curious in suc things, is a list of the seventeen pieces tha the Ukrainians will sing at Symphony Ha next Friday. They will use of course the own language; but a programme-book wi supply translations of every text wit many a quotation from the music. Afte each number in the subjoined schedul is the name of the musician who has ar ranged it:

Doomsday	Demootsk
Our Lady of Potchaev	Leontovich
There Was a Widow	Koshetz
Behind the Mountain	Leontovich
Yahill's Daughter	Koshetz
Cuckoo, Grey Cuckoo	Stetzenko
Shtshedryk	Lenotovich
The High Mountain	Lyssenko
I wish to Go to the Meadow	Koshetz
Poor Hawthorn	Kotshetz
A Violin Is Playing in the Street	Koshetz
I Sat Spinning, Spinning	Lenotovich
The Young Monk	Koshetz
	Barvinski-Koshetz
Lullaby	Leontovich
The Flute Player	Leontovich
Kosa	Lyssenko
Mushrooms

Transcript Oct 9

Ukrainers Yet Like Ourselves

Trans Oct 11

GEORGE CREEL has confessed that when he was made chief of President Wilson's Committee on Public Information he believed the Ukraine was a musical instrument. A comfortable, dinner-jacketed American audience filled Carnegie Hall last Friday and heard the Ukrainian National Chorus demonstrate that Mr. Creel's idea was more or less right. In their peasant costumes of blazing red, green, blue, yellow, white and orange, they looked as exotic and unfamiliar as the flowers of a tropical jungle; but their regimented singing was marked by a musicianship which put them at once into the ageless, sexless, international category of fine art, even though theirs is an individualized performance which has its roots deep in their native soil.

For most Americans few places are further off than the Ukraine; few costumes more outlandish than these barber-pole bursts of color. Yet before the chorus had sung more than six measures every one could see the essential kinship between these foreigners and ourselves. Though they sang with the voices of disciplined angels, in everything else they were but a transplanted New England singing school, or the Oskaloosa Methodist Church choir, or the Arizona University Glee Club. The tall, sleepy basso with the straggling mustache; the pretty girl who doesn't care whether she sings well or not; the angular spinster who makes the production of musical noise a serious business; the too solemn young tenor with his mind on the girls when it isn't on himself—all were there, and recognizable, even though miraculously translated into costumes of crashing color and a hay-feverish language. [The New York Globe

Transcript Oct 11

UKRAINE CHORUS CHARMS BOSTON

Adv 10-14

Singing beautiful arrangements of their folk songs and other music, the Ukrainian National Chorus delighted a Symphony Hall audience last evening. Prof. Alexander Koshetz conducted with exquisite feeling for every mood and the chorus caught his slightest suggestion.

Garbed in quaintly vivid costumes, the Ukrainians interpreted with irresistible feeling the sometimes desperately gay, and always wistfully melancholy music of their land.

Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja, the soloist, who is from the Petrograd opera, gave to her selections a dramatic power which fascinatingly enhanced their intrinsically great value. Her voice proved delicately responsive to many phases of musical emotion. Now strongly clear, as though explaining by quality of sound the thought of the composer, and now questioningly sweet, it stirred her hearers.

A picturesque tribute was given when the chorus first appeared. They were showered with flowers by members of the audience.

Advertiser Oct 14

INSTRUMENTAL VOICES

UNIQUE QUALITY IN UKRAINIAN SONG

Trans

A Choir Like No Other Sings Its Own Folk-Pieces—The Leader Who Has Made It, the Audience That Heard It, the Singer Assisting It—An Evening Novel and Many-Sided

Oct 14

EVIDENTLY not too many of the sons and the daughters of the Ukraine have migrated to Boston. Else there would have been more of them in Symphony Hall last evening to greet the Ukrainian National Chorus and to divide the audience in fairer proportion between themselves and their fellow-Russians on the one hand; while on the other went the connoisseurs and quidnuncs of music, native to this town and more than usually eager for new, strange, warmly heralded experiences. As it was, the scattered Ukrainian fringe strewed the edge

Transcript (Adv) Oct 14

[89]

cond for tional s will opera ll be prises
s or and shets.
neous have and cities.
s and s or e re-
. the eyed rever Ukras au-ment, with egin-new me.
She eces inka vsky
g as en-

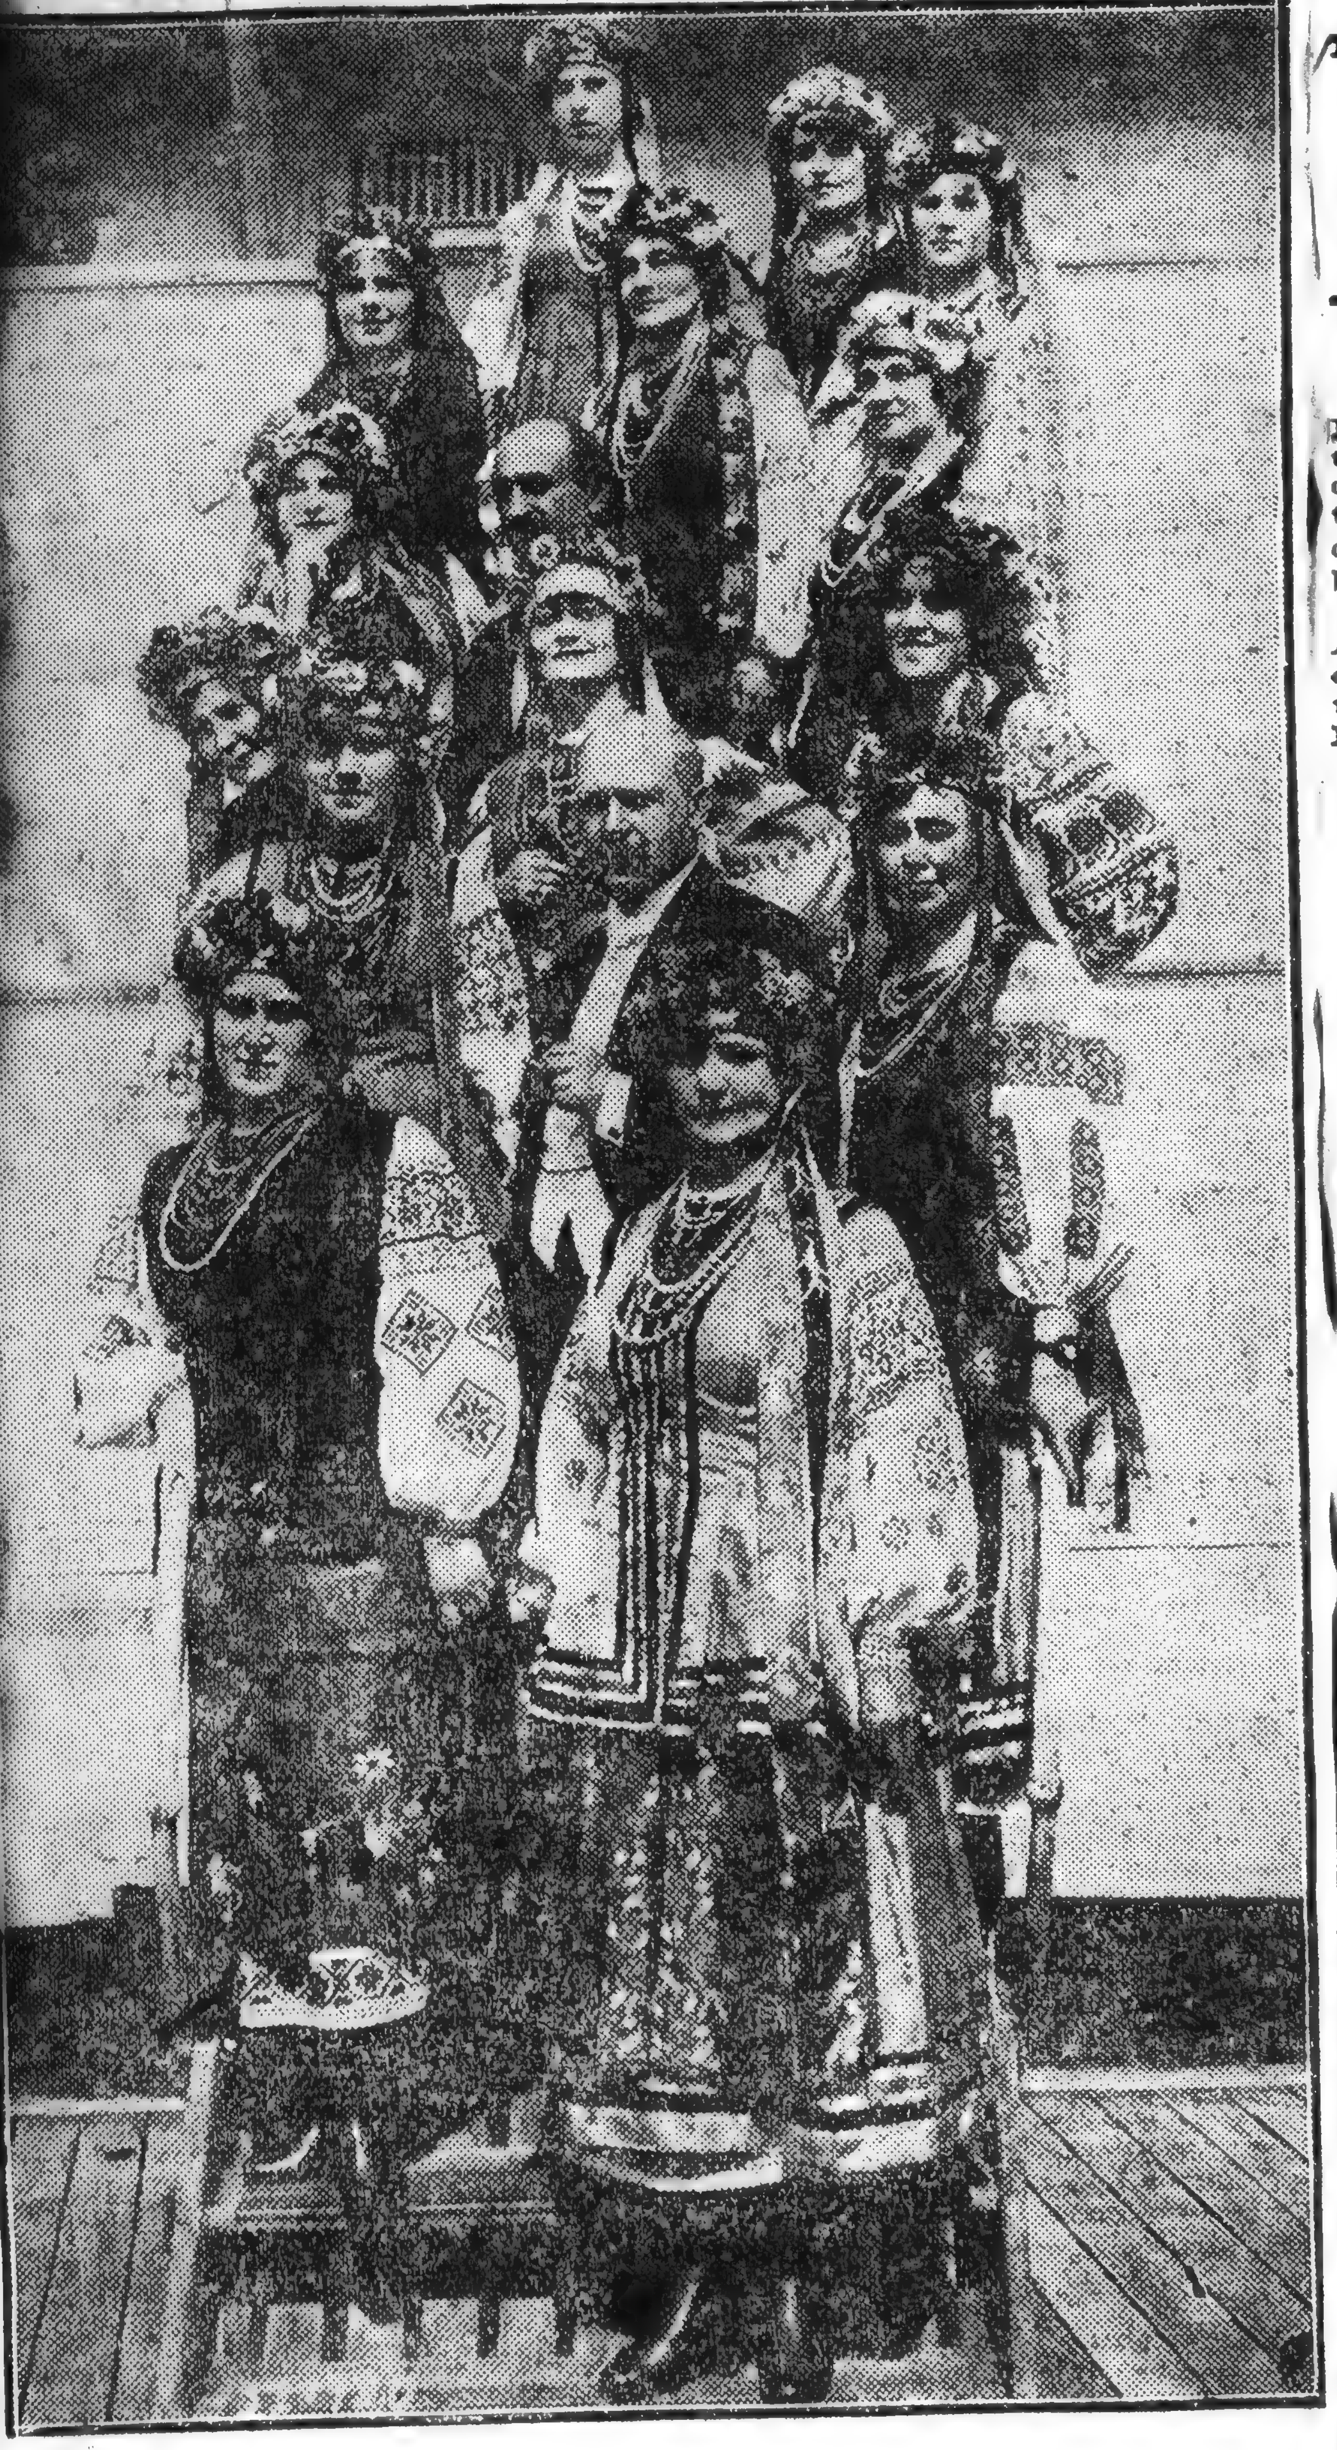
Trans 10/2

To Sing of Ukrainia



(Photo by Underwood & Underwood)

AMONG the passengers on the S. S. Caronia at New York were the Ukrainian National Chorus, composed of fifty young men and women, who for the past three years have been singing in the capitals of Europe. They come here for a tour of the United States, Canada and Mexico.

This photograph, taken on board the shi just before it docked, shows Max Rabinoff American representative of the chorus centre, and Alexander Kossetz, Europea composer and conductor of the chorus, sur rounded by the women members of th chorus in their national costumes.

Transcript Oct 2

UKRAINIANS GIVE CONCERT

Herald 10/14

National Chorus Makes Excellent Impression in Symphony Hall

ORGANIZATION HIGHLY TRAINED

By PHILIP HALE

Max Rabinoff brought the Ukrainian National Chorus led by Alexander Koshetz, to Symphony Hall last night. Miss Oda Slobodskaja, soprano, sang two groups of songs, accompanied by Nicholas Stember, pianist. There was a very large and enthusiastic audience.

For once the praise of the passionate press agent seemed reasonable, even cool. Seldom, if ever, have we heard a chorus so firmly and at the same time so musically controlled. A chorus may have precision of attack, pure intonation, a decent regard for dynamic contrasts and gradations, and yet be without a vivifying soul.

These Ukrainians have been admirably trained. They have a strongly developed rhythmic sense. They have a legato line in sustained passages that accomplished solo singers might envy. Their command of nuances and their variety of expression are remarkable. They sing with unaffected spirit; their emotion is not content with the following of the conductor's wishes; it is apparently unfeigned and spontaneous. Although they have given concerts in many European cities and might faithfully accomplish now a perfunctory task, they sing with a freshness, a zest and an emotional intensity that show no sign of physical or mental weariness. Possibly it is because in a strange land they have their own country in mind and are thus inspired, unlike the exiles by the waters of Babylon who asked how they could sing the songs of Zion.

The program of the choral numbers was varied and interesting; interesting musically to layman and folk-lorist alike. It included hymns and canticles, Christmas carols, sung as serenades beneath windows, Spring songs containing hints at the survival of paganism. The names of Leontovich, Demootsky, Stetzenko, Lyssenko, Barvinski-Koshetz were on the program as arrangers, adapters; some of the most charming selections were signed Koshetz.

And often in these songs, now melancholy but not gloomy, gay but not frivolous, solemn but not depressing, Mr. Koshetz brought from this chorus surprising, impressive, but not extravagant orchestral effects.

Miss Slobodskaja, evidently an experienced singer, has a voice that pleased when she did not use full force. Unfortunately she too often abused her vocal strength, forced her voice, so that her upper tones recalled Tennyson's shrill-edged shriek of a mother dividing the shuddering night. When she sang simply in songs of tender nature her voice was appealing. She did not show a great command of nuances, alternating for the most part between fortissimo and piano. The composers represented by her were, according to the program, Dargomijsky, Glinka, Tchaikovsky, Cui, Glazounov, Moussorgsky and Rimsky-Korsakov.

Herald Oct 14

REMARKABLE AND RARE

IMPENDING UKRAINIANS IN FOLK-SONG

at Trans 10/9

The Choir to Be Heard in Boston Next Friday Makes No Small Stir in New York—Pieces and Performance — The Background, the Method and the Songs—A Singular Music of Soil and Spirit

WITH equal curiosity and satisfaction Russian and non-Russian hearers listened to the Ukrainian National Chorus in New York last Friday evening. Then and there it gave its first concert on this side of the Atlantic—"an exhibition," according to The New York Herald, of "intensely characteristic choral singing, distinguished by strongly marked racial traits and by an art as singular as it is compelling. About these traits, this art and the occasion in general Mr. Deems Taylor contributes more particulars to The World. Here they are:

> The Ukrainians are a small mixed chorus of sixty-odd voices under the leadership of Alexander Koshetz and they have been brought to an extraordinary degree of perfection. The singers appeared in the peasant costumes of Little Russia—a flaming and exotic swirl of scarlet, canary yellow, black, turquoise, orange, white and peacock green; the women with dazzling floral headdresses, the men in solid green and blue and brown kaftans, and everybody wearing bright red or yellow boots. But they had something for the ear as well as the eye, as their first numbers proved. For they sang with a precision and finish, a perfection of diction and command of dynamics such as are seldom heard here. Professor Koshetz has his singers under as absolute control as it is given to any choral conductor to possess, and if there were flaws in the performance he and not his chorus must be held accountable for them.
>
> Two groups of Ukrainian folk-songs comprised the choral pieces—one at the beginning and one at the end of the programme. Both were superbly done. The chorus has amazing volume of tone, considering its numbers, a fact due, probably, to the curious metallic—a most brassy—quality of most of the voices. They seemed to be untrained voices, not particularly agreeable individually, perhaps, but they blended marvellously, with enormous carrying power and a range of expression that was more than ample for the folk-music they sing.
>
> The chorus seems somewhat limited as to vocal color. It sang everything with much the same quality tone; while the conductor relied for his effects chiefly upon changes in pace and rhythm and upon a wonderful range of shading that went from a blaring fortissimo to a humming pianissimo that was to be felt rather than heard. This chorus has been called "a vocal orchestra," and the term is a happy one; but "organ" is the better word—an organ perfectly played and with a perfect swell-box, but not quite enough stops. Polished as its work was, one missed the variety in tone and quality that is at the command of such choruses as St. Olaf's and the great Toronto Choir.
>
> A part of the impression was undoubtedly due to the skilful arrangements of the various folk-songs. These had been made by several Russian musicians, including Leontovich, Stetzenko and Lyssenko. A large proportion of them, and some of the best, were made by Professor Koshetz himself. They are all well written for the voices, harmonized with dignified simplicity, and have the massiveness and telling quality that are born only of masterly part-writing.

"There was considerable singing with closed mouths," continues Mr. Henderson in The Herald, "and in this the listener quickly heard the effects which persuaded European critics to call this organization a human orchestra. The sound and gradations were those of a remarkable body of strings and wood winds. The dynamics were extraordinary. The sudden fortes struck like blows. The swells were like the heave of the deep sea. The diminishing chords at the ends of some numbers were magical. In religious canticles, in melancholy narratives, in reckless outbreaks of gayety the chorus disclosed a fitness of style, an adequacy of expression and a profound unanimity of feeling that aroused genuine emotion among the listeners."

Folk-Song That Teems

Equal pleasure in degree and kind, Bostonians may anticipate when the Ukrainian Chorus repeats at Symphony Hall next Friday evening its concert in New York. Plainly it deserves informed, receptive ears. To that end Professor Koshetz, the director, has written a note about Ukrainian folk-song parts of which as translated for Musical America by Florence Wilkins follow: "Ukrainia," the director writes, "means, literally, border marshes. Geographically this land of nearly sixty million persons caps the Black Sea and spreads like a large crescent over the Crimea. Ukrainia is the southland of the former Russian Empire—the "Italy of Russia'—with a people of a warmer temperament than the North Russians. . . .

"Ukrainian folk-songs are full of a wonderful tenderness and sympathy, of sweet melancholy; yet they are never powerless or weak, but are always full of cheerfulness, buoyancy, with a very distinctive humor. They fairly bubble over with merriment at times. The rich nature of the Ukraine, the mild climate, the abundance of sunshine, the sweep of meadows and golden fields, the wealth of resources, the gardens and orchards, the quiet waters of the rivers and the blue horizon of the Black Sea are reflected as in a mirror in the songs, lending them a soft and colorful melodiousness, filled with an inarticulate melancholy—of horizons lost in the haze of distance, with the mellowness of the moonlit nights and the warmth of the sunshine with the smell of gardens and meadows in bloom.

"Especially rich in fine shadings of emotions are the love-songs. So plentiful are they that it can be said that in no other tongue has love been sung about as it has in the Ukrainian. However, the emotions are not merely personal. Every moment of his life the Ukrainian links and identifies with the lovely Nature surrounding him. Not a moment of these emotions or of the whole drama of the song but has its embellishment and symbol from some phase of Nature. Nature actually seems to live the same life as the poet. It rejoices, grieves, loves, suffers, weeps, thirsts, awaits. . . .

"This strong amalgamation of man with Nature, which always has a poetic form, does not give to the melody of the Ukrainian songs that erratic vigor, bordering on the uncouth, which is proper to the music of Great Russia. On the contrary, a deep appreciation of form, of architectonics, of measure, lend to the design of the tunes the gracefulness of a complete construction of the musical phrase, a purity of architectural form and style, and always rhythm that is clearly defined. All this is enhanced in a vapory sort of elegy, a kind of mist of sadness which comes as a result of the tragic and stormy history of this people.

"The Ukraine, with no definite or strong borders, has throughout history been a prey for neighbors. As the natural route from Asia into Europe, and therefore the path along which the barbaric tribes marched into Europe in mediæval times, it became thereby the scene of an endless bloody struggle in which the Ukrainian people had to defend their country against the inroads of the Orient. The whole history of the Ukrainians is that of an heroic stand against their enemies. And it has left its traces on the mentality of the people, giving to their songs that depth and fineness of feeling which can be acquired only through suffering. These historical conflicts have also imparted to the songs a wealth of subject matter. Therefore it is not to be wondered at that in Ukrainian music, outside of its own peulciar diatonics, we often find pentatonics, also the old Grecian scale and derivatives from it. In spite of these influences their folk-song has remained national in character, in which real Ukrainian re-creation has assimilated this foreign material to herself.

"The characteristic trait of the Ukrainian songs is their polyphony. A deep-seated, inborn sense of beauty, a reaching after harmony, an excess of soulful musical health and strength, have found an outlet in the rich polyphonics of the songs. Moreover, this music was aided by the absence of foreign or outside factors and influences, such as instrumental music or the use of church organs, which in Western Europe lulled to sleep popular creations of vocal harmony. The Ukrainians, seeking beauty and fulness of sound, created in the long run a rich polyphony. They discovered for themselves their own counterpoint, their peculiar harmony, altogether different from that of the Western schools, and the laws of this counterpoint and harmony have not yet been ascertained.

"With the exception of the prehistoric melodies, all the songs of the Ukraine are sung polyphonically. Every melody is surrounded with colorful and capricious counterpoint, or natural harmony, for several voices. And this counterpoint, as well as the harmony, is not fixed or unchanging. On the contrary, with every verse the song takes on new combinations of sounds, the product of the vital creative invention of the singer. So that it is possible to take these combinations down only on a phonograph record, because they are so varied The singer himself is unable to repeat what he sang just a few minutes before."

Chosen Pieces

Here, finally, for the curious in suc things, is a list of the seventeen pieces tha the Ukrainians will sing at Symphony Ha next Friday. They will use of course the own language; but a programme-book wi supply translations of every text wit many a quotation from the music. Afte each number in the subjoined schedul is the name of the musician who has ar ranged it:

Doomsday	Demootsk
Our Lady of Potchaev	Leontovic
There Was a Widow	Koshetz
Behind the Mountain	Leontovich
Yahill's Daughter	Koshetz
Cuckoo, Grey Cuckoo	Stetzenko
Shtshedryk	Lenotovich
The High Mountain	Lyssenko
I wish to Go to the Meadow	Koshetz
Poor Hawthorn	Kotshetz
A Violin Is Playing in the Street	Koshetz
I Sat Spinning, Spinning	Lenotovich
The Young Monk	Koshetz
Lullaby	Barvinski-Koshetz
The Flute Player	Leontovich
Kosa	Lyssenko
Mushrooms

Transcript Oct 9

Continued on Page

Ukrainers Yet Like Ourselves

Trans Oct 11

GEORGE CREEL has confessed that when he was made chief of President Wilson's Committee on Public Information he believed the Ukraine was a musical instrument. A comfortable, dinner-jacketed American audience filled Carnegie Hall last Friday and heard the Ukrainian National Chorus demonstrate that Mr. Creel's idea was more or less right. In their peasant costumes of blazing red, green, blue, yellow, white and orange, they looked as exotic and unfamiliar as the flowers of a tropical jungle; but their regimented singing was marked by a musicianship which put them at once into the ageless, sexless, international category of fine art, even though theirs is an individualized performance which has its roots deep in their native soil.

For most Americans few places are further off than the Ukraine; few costumes more outlandish than these barber-pole bursts of color. Yet before the chorus had sung more than six measures every one could see the essential kinship between these foreigners and ourselves. Though they sang with the voices of disciplined angels, in everything else they were but a transplanted New England singing school, or the Oskaloosa Methodist Church choir, or the Arizona University Glee Club. The tall, sleepy basso with the straggling mustache; the pretty girl who doesn't care whether she sings well or not; the angular spinster who makes the production of musical noise a serious business; the too solemn young tenor with his mind on the girls when it isn't on himself—all were there, and recognizable, even though miraculously translated into costumes of crashing color and a hay-feverish language. [The New York Globe

Transcript Oct 11

UKRAINE CHORUS CHARMS BOSTON

Adv 10-14

Singing beautiful arrangements of their folk songs and other music, the Ukrainian National Chorus delighted a Symphony Hall audience last evening. Prof. Alexander Koshetz conducted with exquisite feeling for every mood and the chorus caught his slightest suggestion.

Garbed in quaintly vivid costumes, the Ukrainians interpreted with irresistible feeling the sometimes desperately gay, and always wistfully melancholy music of their land.

Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja, the soloist, who is from the Petrograd opera, gave to her selections a dramatic power which fascinatingly enhanced their intrinsically great value. Her voice proved delicately responsive to many phases of musical emotion. Now strongly clear, as though explaining by quality of sound the thought of the composer, and now questioningly sweet, it stirred her hearers.

A picturesque tribute was given when the chorus first appeared. They were showered with flowers by members of the audience.

Advertiser Oct 14

INSTRUMENTAL VOICES

UNIQUE QUALITY IN UKRAINIAN SONG

A Choir Like No Other Sings Its Own Folk-Pieces—The Leader Who Has Made It, the Audience That Heard It, the Singer Assisting It—An Evening Novel and Many-Sided

EVIDENTLY not too many of the sons and the daughters of the Ukraine have migrated to Boston. Else there would have been more of them in Symphony Hall last evening tc greet the Ukrainian National Chorus anc to divide the audience in fairer proportion between themselves and their fellow-Russians on the one hand; while on the other went the connoisseurs and quidnuncs o music, native to this town and more than usually eager for new, strange, warmly heralded experiences. As it was, the scattered Ukrainian fringe strewed the edge of the stage with little boquets of flowers in the national colors, tossed or borne thither when the choir first appeared; swelled the applause and kept it ringing; yielded that intimate response to strange singing in a strange tongue (as the rest of us heard it) which was stimulation to singers, in their turn as strangely circumstanced. It would not be the truth to say that this applause was discriminating. True, it was warmer toward the later and more interesting array of folk-songs than it had been to the earlier. Yet it overflowed upon Mme. Oda Slobodskaya, late singer in the opera houses of Petrograd and Moscow, who, in the name of that same truth, was encumbrance rather than enrichment to the concert.

Transcript (Adv) Oct 14

A tall and aquiline lady, dark-haired, white-skinned, with curious ringlets about her ears, like to reversed interrogation points, is Mme. Slobodskaja, a lady also well past her first youth. In these years, she has become routined singer, especially in the operatic numbers she vouchsafed her audience from Glinka's "Russian and Ludmilla," from Dargomyzhsky's "Russalka." High and acid ran her voice; sharp-edged, thinly cut were her phrases and periods; with vehemence she projected them upon her hearers; while so weighted and propelled, they bore no other passion. In imagination, the listener could hear her cleaving the vast spaces of Russian opera houses, winning applause as routined and mechanical as her singing. More to be desired was Mme. Slobodskaja in assorted songs from Cui and Glazunov, from Chaikovsky and Rimsky, from Musorgsky of "Hopák," from Dargomyzhsky yet again. With them she put by rhetoric for sincerity and truth. In them her middle tones gained suavity, body, color; while in half-voice some were even round and warm. She answered to the whipping, whirling rhythms of "Hopák." She followed a scintillant, tripping Chaikovsky through the bright mazes of a song about a girl fluttering after a caparisoned, capricious lover. Otherwise, however, Mme. Slobodskaja's pieces were as uninteresting as she. Once more it appeared how easily many a Russian becomes Italianate when he would compose operatic music; how easy also it is for a Cui or a Glazunov to write songs less in Russian than in international, commonplace.

An incident, an interlude, over-long was Mme. Slobodskaja between the two groups of Ukranian pieces. With them, indeed, in both actual and ironic sense, the concert ended and the concert began; moved so briskly that it was hardly possible to fix eye upon the Ukranian Choir before sound distracted sight. Though sixty was reported as the number of the chorus in New York, no more than forty came hither. Obviously they were peasants or petty bourgeois; obviously they were as divergent—and as unified—in aspect and type as would be forty villagers of New England similarly assembled. With two exceptions, they wore, moreover, their national dress. Upon the women, it began in red top-boots; ascended through skirts and bodices of red, green, canary and other flagrant colors; ended in flowered, ribboned, diadem-like head-dresses. Chains fell loose from necks; while from backs and shoulders descended ribbons wherever there was pinning place. Booted also were the men; but of soberer colors were the trousers and their long, loose coats, flowing from shoulder to knee. Their under-jackets tended to flame; for not yet in fortunate Ukrainia has the male bird abandoned to his mate quite all the primary colors. The exceptions—in ordinary evening dress—were a sounder of the pitch-pipe stationed of necessity, yet with incongruity, in the centre of these peasant peacocks and Mr. Alexander Koshetz, founder and sustainer, teacher and leader of the choir.

Having schooled his singers in pieces familiar to both. the conductor needs between them no music-sheets upon music-stand. Like most Russians in like place—e. g. Sávonov in his days with the Philharmonic Society in New York—he prefers to the baton, the finger, the hand, the arm, the immediate, impinging bodily presence and influence. So conducting, he seemed at first to beat the measure. Then of a sudden a change of rhythm darted from hand and eye. Or with tight fist he hammered out a resounding burst of tone, only to gather the upswelling wave within the outspread circumference of his arms. A bald, tall, stout, middle-aged man is Koshetz, no less and no more, doubtless, upon Ukrainian police-records. Yet upon his choir he works a divining, summoning, compelling will.

For to listen to the Ukrainian Chorus is to perceive speedily that they are untrained singers, except as the conductor has schooled them. Individually, even collectively, they stray from the true pitch; they miss finely differentiated tone; their natural voices, when one or another is heard singly through a few measures, are not remarkable. The sopranos are light and metallic; the basses boom deep, after the mannner of all Russians; over the gamut between are the others' tones distributed. In a word, the virtues of the Ukrainian Choir are the virtues of an ensemble, singularly practiced in singular superiorities. It produces a lusty, strident tone; yet in every part or group of parts that tone is blended, well nigh perfectly. It sings with endless command of pace and rhythm, sustained, diversified, broken, resumed. It excels in contrasts, as when the women's voices rise brightly against the changeless background of the men's; or when a single voice or company of voices mounts and parts the swelling tonal mass. The choir does not much color its speech of song; but it knows every degree of tonal force. It is capable of swift outbursts, thrusts almost, of flaring tone. It can send voices surging over the concert-room like waves. Yet it can dwindle them to nothingness through a succession of broken chords; achieve pianissimi, forty strong, that Mme. Culp, mistress of such paling murmurs, might envy for one.

Whatever the necessity or the prompting of the instant, as one is the Ukrainian Choir; while whatever it sings, a unique quality pervades the singing. Many times the voices sound less human than instrumental—oboe-like, clarinet-like, and so onward through all the acid sweetness of the wood-wind choir. The lighter tones of the men seem as often viola-like; the basses drone like viols. When all concerned hum an accompaniment or a background, so might sound and throb a choir of violoncellos. The most experienced know no such instrumental quality in any other chorus the world around. Innate it probably is; innate and also cultivated; yet however gained, it is magical upon the listener. He hears human voices lifted in song; he hears also orchestral voices sounding through them; and the blending is as inscrutable as any other spell.

Upon seventeen pieces, all sung in the Ukrainian dialect, the choir exercised these powers. A few were pious legends or canticles of the church; a few more serenading songs of Christmas and New Year, since the Ukrainian climate is mild. Others recounted the hard lot of orphaned girls, ill-treated serving-maidens, misunderstood daughters. (They are possible, even in peasant communities.) Through a few more ran amorous undertone; while others seemed but caprices in nonsensical words to music as capricious but by no means nonsensical. Various hands—chief among them Mr. Koshetz's—had harmonized the folk-tunes simply, solidly, with one ear to viable vocal parts, the other to substance and spirit. Sung by the Ukrainian Choir to an audience that, for the most part, merely caught the mood from the music, these pieces seemed to restore folk-song to itself as natural, spontaneous expression of the singer—artless at first, yet becoming artful as individual talents more and more played upon it.

It was as though the tale to be told, the serenade to be sung, the pious office to be hymned, the gay nonsense to be set free, possessed the singer, invented, guided his song. Here he sped, there he stayed, the pace. There he broke and here he sustained the rhythm. Now came the moment to shout, again the moment to murmur. Instinctively his feeling brightened or darkened, lightened or weighted, his tones. The listener was hearing song in creation—rare sensation at Symphony Hall in October of 1922. Yet the creators were forty instead of one; while if the creative act was vocal yet in those Ukranian tones pulsed and fretted instruments, above, around, beneath, within.

H. T. P.

Transcript Oct 14

Maker and Master

Trans Oct 14

Alexander Koshetz

Leader of the Ukrainian National Chorus

Transcript Oct 14

OSTON SUNDAY POST PICTORIAL SECTION

Master Maker

$3000 in Gold to Reward Reader

Each one of these trade marks represents superlative quality of product or service of exceptional character. Do you know what makes each one a leader? Write the Boston Post the "why" of their supremacy. If you so might sound and throb a choir of violoncellos. The most experienced know such instrumental quality in any other chorus [illegible] around. Innate it probably is; innate and also cultivated; yet however gained, it is magical upon the listener. He hears human voices lifted in song; he hears also orchestral voices sounding through them; and the blending is as inscrutable as any other spell.

Post Oct 15

Upon seventeen pieces, all sung in the Ukrainian dialect, the choir exercised these powers. A few were pious legends or [illegible]

[illegible] but caprices in nonsensical words to music as capricious but by no means nonsensical. Various hands—chief among them Mr. Koshetz's—had harmonized the folk-tunes simply, solidly, with one ear to viable vocal parts, the other to substance and spirit. Sung by the Ukrainian Choir to an audience that, for the most part, merely caught the mood from the music, these pieces seemed to restore folk-song to itself as natural, spontaneous expression of the singer—artless at first, yet becoming artful as individual talents more and more played upon it.

It was as though the tale to be told, the serenade to be sung, the pious office to be hymned, the gay nonsense to be set free, possessed the singer, invented, guided his song. Here he sped, there he stayed, the pace. There he broke and here he sustained the rhythm. Now came the moment to shout, again the moment to murmur. Instinctively his feeling brightened or darkened, lightened or weighted, his tones. The listener was hearing song in creation—rare sensation at Symphony Hall in October of 1922. Yet the creators were forty instead of one; while if the creative act was vocal yet in those Ukranian tones pulsed and fretted instruments, above, around, beneath, within.

H. T. P.

Transcript Oct 14

Alexander Koshetz

Leader of the Ukrainian National Chorus

Transcript Oct 14

Oct 14

BOSTON SUNDAY POST PICTORIAL SECTION OCTOBER 15, 1922

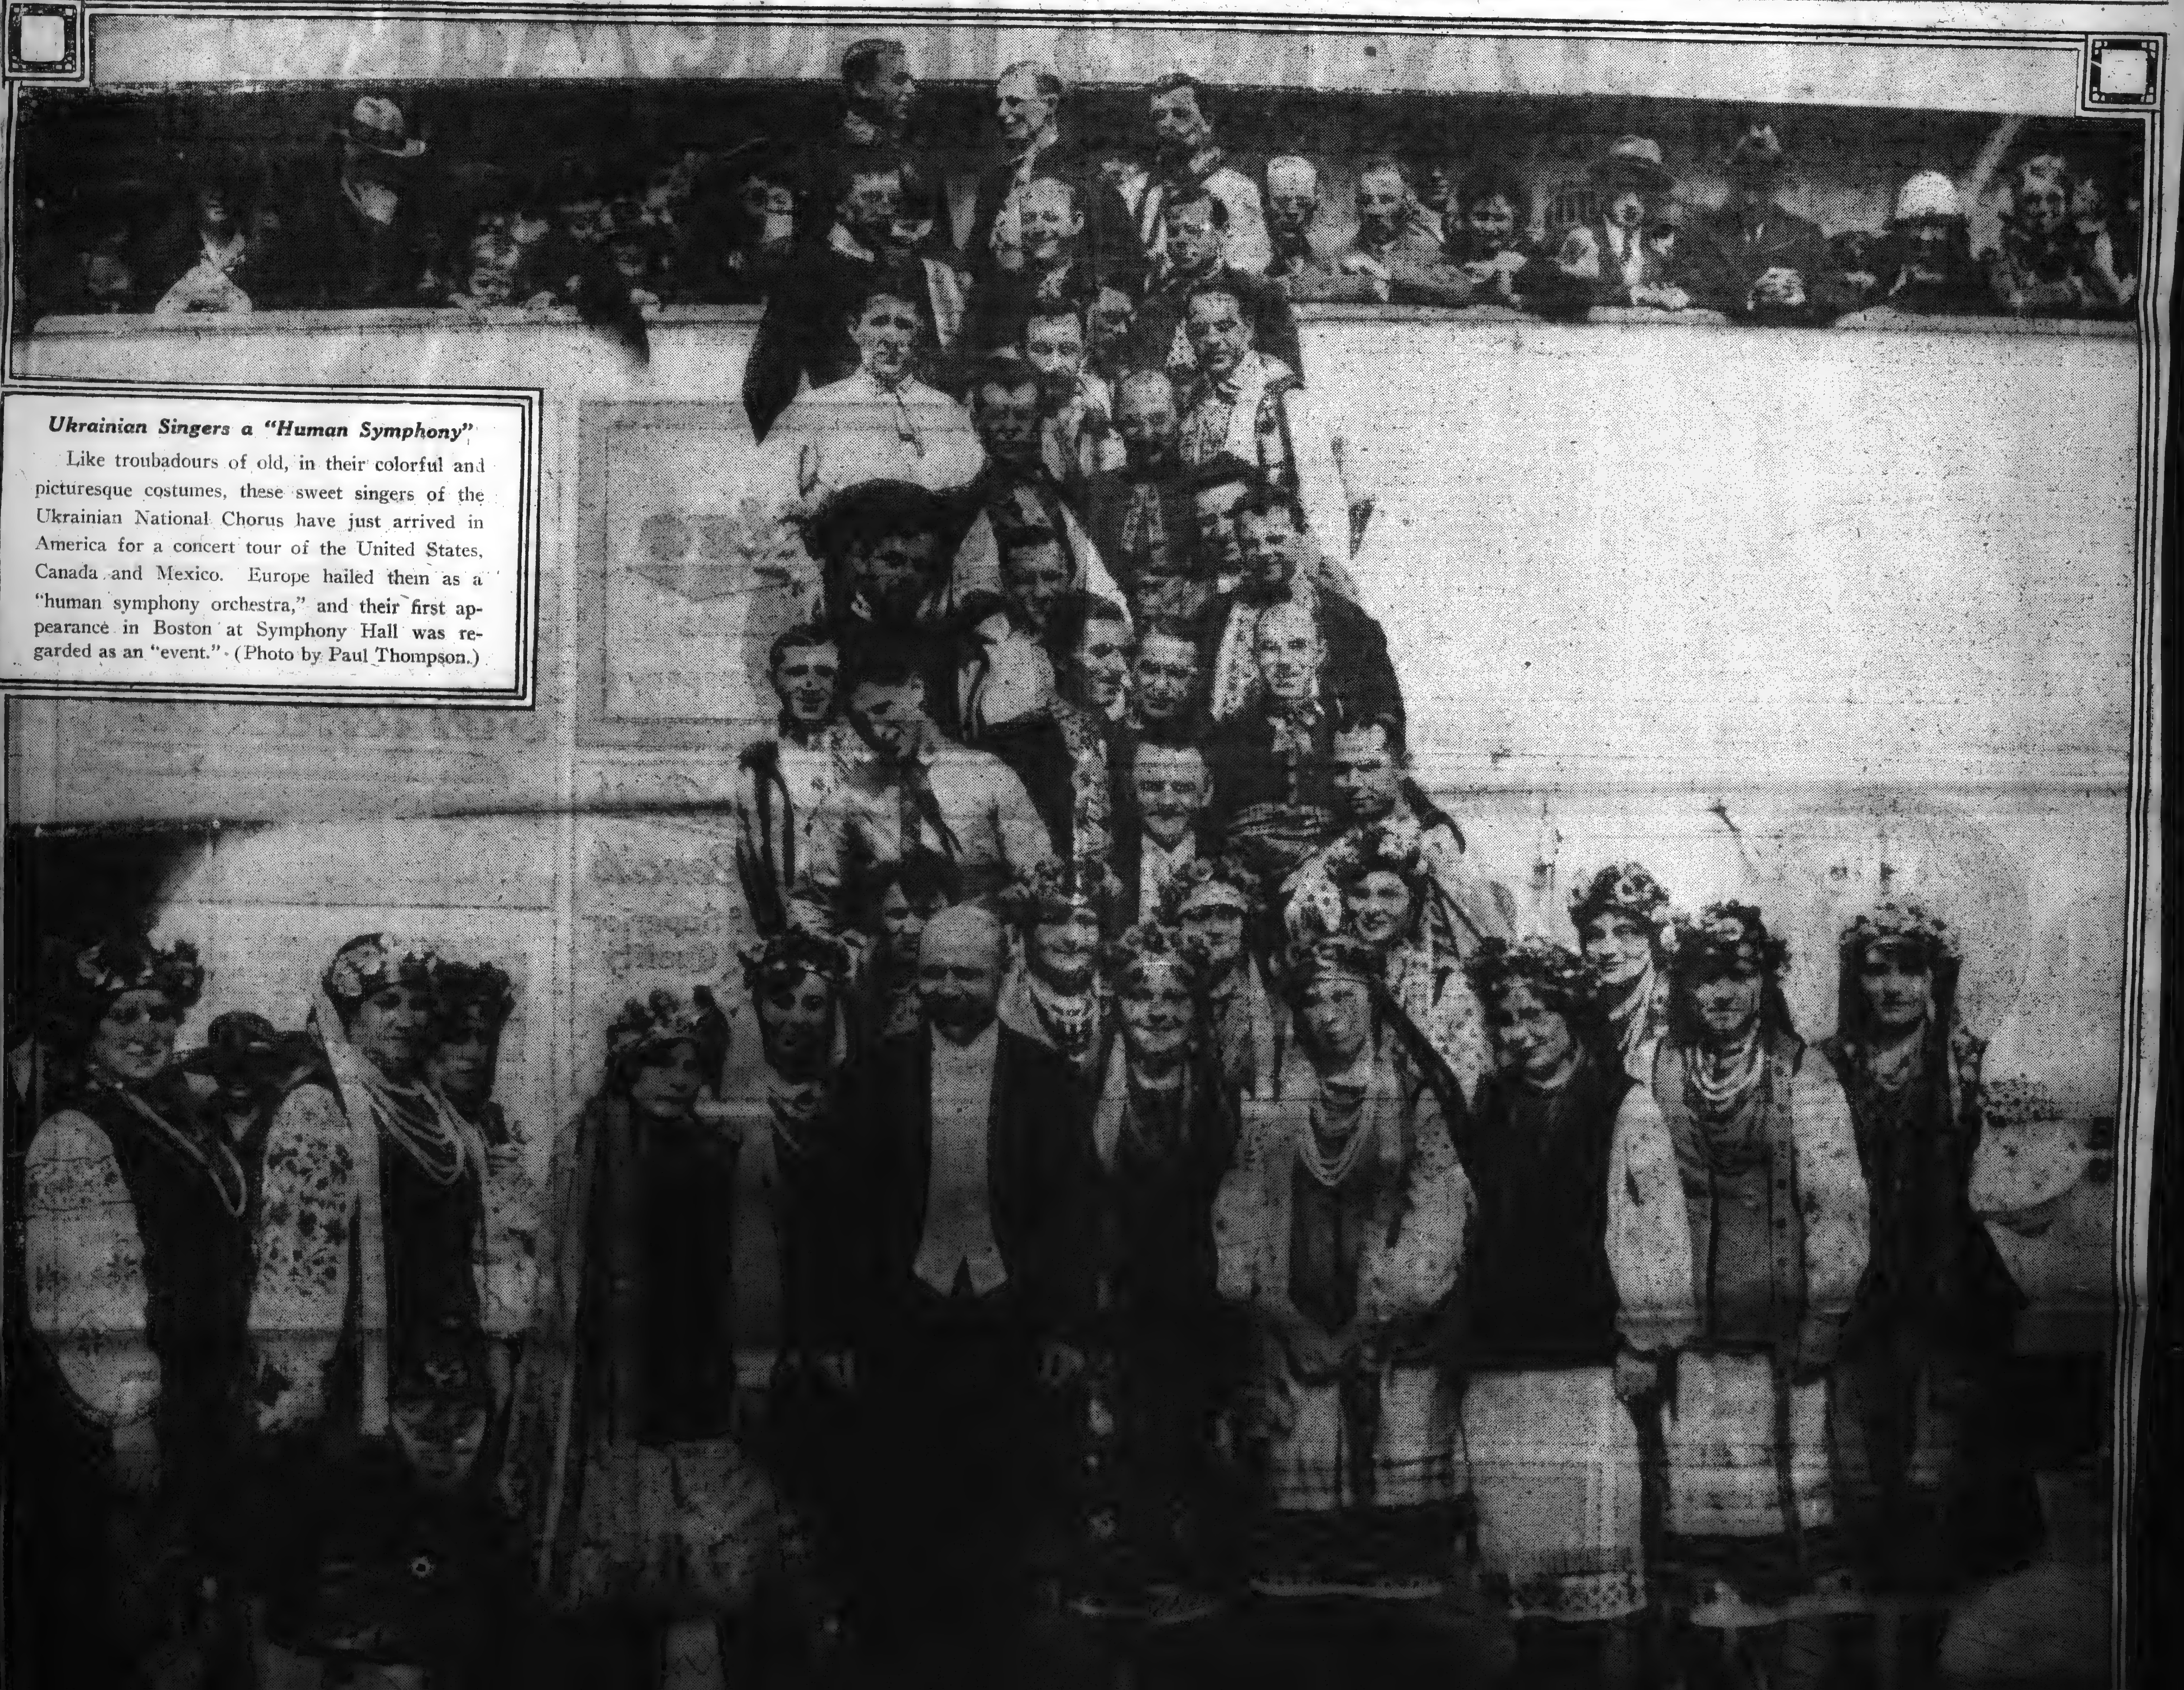
THE "HUMAN SYMPHONY" FROM UKRAINIA



Ukrainian Singers a "Human Symphony"

Like troubadours of old, in their colorful and picturesque costumes, these sweet singers of the Ukrainian National Chorus have just arrived in America for a concert tour of the United States, Canada and Mexico. Europe hailed them as a "human symphony orchestra," and their first appearance in Boston at Symphony Hall was regarded as an "event." (Photo by Paul Thompson.)

so might sound and throb a choir of violoncellos. The most experienced know such instrumental quality in any other chorus [illegible] around. Innate it probably is; innate and also cultivated; yet however gained, it is magical upon the listener. He hears human voices lifted in song; he hears also orchestral voices sounding through them; and the blending is as inscrutable as any other spell.

Upon seventeen pieces, all sung in the Ukrainian dialect, the choir exercised these powers. A few were pious legends [illegible]

[illegible] but caprices in nonsensical words to music as capricious but by no means nonsensical. Various hands—chief among them Mr. Koshetz's—had harmonized the folk-tunes simply, solidly, with one ear to viable vocal parts, the other to substance and spirit. Sung by the Ukrainian Choir to an audience that, for the most part, merely caught the mood from the music, these pieces seemed to restore folk-song to itself as natural, spontaneous expression of the singer—artless at first, yet becoming artful as individual talents more and more played upon it.

It was as though the tale to be told, the serenade to be sung, the pious office to be hymned, the gay nonsense to be set free, possessed the singer, invented, guided his song. Here he sped, there he stayed, the pace. There he broke and here he sustained the rhythm. Now came the moment to shout, again the moment to murmur. Instinctively his feeling brightened or darkened, lightened or weighted, his tones. The listener was hearing song in creation—rare sensation at Symphony Hall in October of 1922. Yet the creators were forty instead of one; while if the creative act was vocal yet in those Ukranian tones pulsed and fretted instruments, above, around, beneath, within.

H. T. P.

Transcript Oct 14

Alexander Koshetz

Leader of the Ukrainian National Chorus

Transcript Oct 14

THE "HUMAN SYMPHONY" FROM UKRAINIA

Ukrainian Singers a "Human Symphony"

Like troubadours of old, in their colorful and picturesque costumes, these sweet singers of the Ukrainian National Chorus have just arrived in America for a concert tour of the United States, Canada and Mexico. Europe hailed them as a "human symphony orchestra," and their first appearance in Boston at Symphony Hall was regarded as an "event." (Photo by Paul Thompson.)

Sunday afternoon, Oct. 15, in Symphony Hall, for the beginning of a new series of Sunday concerts, a recital by Mischa Elman, the violinist, lately returned from a year of European applause. Warmth of tone, energy of mood and expression, a susceptible temperament, and the will to play upon audience as well as violin mark him. As often as not a true sensibility to music also guides him. Trans 9-23

Transcript Sept 23

AT SYMPHONY HALL

The season of Sunday concerts in Symphony Hall will open on October 15th with the appearance of Mischa Elman. This will be an event of additional interest in that it will mark the return to this country of the celebrated Russian violinist after an absence of two years. This interval Mr. Elman has spent in the Old World, touring in the Orient during the season of 1920-21 and in Western Europe during the season of 1921-22. He had not been heard in the European capitals since the extraordinary concerts of his childhood. Amer 9-23.

"DOWN TO THE SEA"

American Sept 23

MISCHA ELMAN Trav

The season of Sunday concerts in Symphony Hall will open on Oct. 15 with the appearance of Mischa Elman. This will mark the return to this country of the celebrated Russian violinist after an absence of two years.

This concert will open the season of Sunday concerts which will take place each week through the winter and spring. The series will include appearances of the greatest singers, violinists, pianists, choral concerts and orchestral concerts of importance. 9-23

Sept 23
Traveler

ELMAN CONCERT Adv

Mischa Elman is to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday, October 15. The occasion will mark the return of the eminent Russian violinist after an absence of two years. This concert will open the season of Sunday concerts at Symphony Hall. 9-24

Advertiser Sept 24

ELMAN OPENS SUNDAY CONCERTS

Amer 9/30

The season of Sunday concerts in Symphony Hall will open on Sunday afternoon, October 15, with the appearance of Mischa Elman. This concert will be of particular interest in that the great Russian violinist has not been heard in this country for two seasons, having spent the season of 1920-21 in a tour of Japan and the Far East, and last season in a tour of Europe, which included concerts in the principal cities of England, France, Germany, Belgium and Scandinavia. His European audiences immediately repeated the American verdict, "The greatest of them all."

KIETH'S THEATRE

American Sept 30

ELMAN OPENS SUNDAY CONCERTS

Amer 9/30

The season of Sunday concerts in Symphony Hall will open on Sunday afternoon, October 15, with the appearance of Mischa Elman. This concert will be of particular interest in that the great Russian violinist has not been heard in this country for two seasons, having spent the season of 1920-21 in a tour of Japan and the Far East, and last season in a tour of Europe, which included concerts in the principal cities of England, France, Germany, Belgium and Scandinavia. His European audiences immediately repeated the American verdict, "The greatest of them all."

KIETH'S THEATRE

American Sept 30

Herald 9/24

MISCHA E

Herald Sept 23

ELMAN'S RETURN

The season of Sunday concerts in Symphony Hall will open on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 15, with the appearance of Mischa Elman. The great Russian violinist has not been heard in this country for two seasons, having spent the season of 1920-21 in a tour of Japan and the far east, and last season in a tour of Europe. The Sunday afternoon series will be given weekly through the winter and spring, and will include appearances of the greatest singers, violinists and pianists in America. 10/12

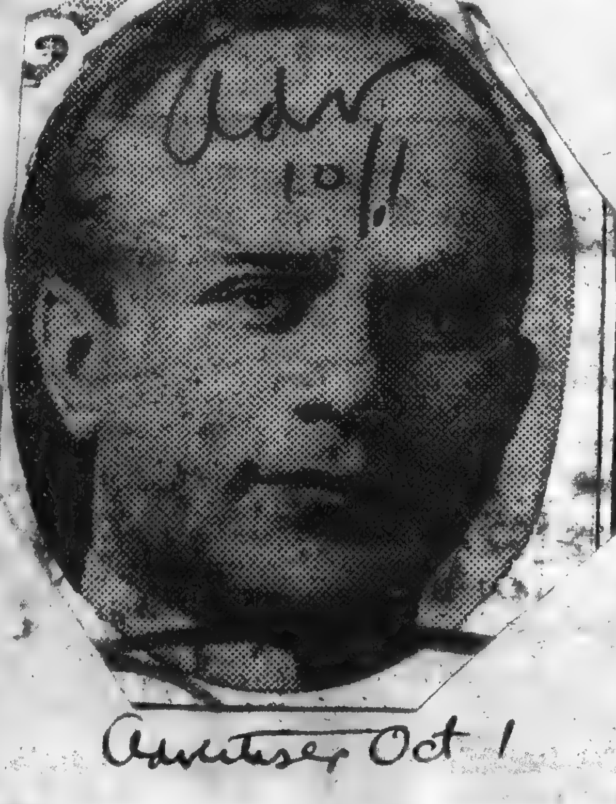
PEOPLE'S SYMPHONY

Herald Oct 12

ELMAN CONCERT

On Sunday afternoon, October 15, the Sunday series of concerts will begin in Symphony Hall with the appearance of Mischa Elman, who spent the last two seasons abroad. The season of 1920-21 he devoted to a tour of Japan and the Far East. Last season he gave concerts in Europe. Adv 10-1

Advertiser Oct 1



Adv 10/1

Advertiser Oct 1

Elman to Open Sunday Concerts

On Sunday afternoon, Oct. 15, at 3:30, the Sunday series of concerts will begin in Symphony Hall with the appearance of Mischa Elman. This concert will be in the nature of a welcome to the great Russian violinist, in that he has spent the last two seasons in the Old World. The season of 1920-21 he devoted to a tour of Japan and the far East. Last season he gave concerts and appeared with orchestras in the capitals of England, France, Belgium, Germany and Scandinavia. He had not been heard in Europe since his remarkable tour as a boy prodigy some years ago, and his return as the mature artist whom America so well knows made him probably the most distinctive figure of the musical season.

Advertiser Oct 1

---

music-drama has been put by in both citi

When Mr. Elman, the violinist, retur to Symphony Hall on Sunday afterno Oct. 15, after a year of applause in Europ he will play these pieces: Trans Oct

Sonata in D major..........Hän
Concerto in A minor, No. 5..........Vieuxtem
Chaconne for Violin (Alone)..........Ba
Suite for Violin arranged from Incidental Music to Shakspeare's Comedy, "Much Ado About Nothing"..........Korngo
Nocturne..........Chopin-Wilheln
Jota..........Sarasa

Transcript Oct 5

Mischa Elman will play at Symphony Hall Oct 15 for the first time in two years, during which he has toured Europe and Asia. Globe 10/1

Globe Oct 1

Elman and Heifetz for Violinists—Titta Ruffo for Resounding Singer—Jewish and Gentile Music from the Temple Choirs—Mr. Hutcheson's Series of Piano-Recitals—Rising Youngsters

Trans 10-7

SUNDAY afternoon, Oct. 15, in Symphony Hall, for the beginning of a new series of Sunday concerts, a recital by Mischa Elman, the violinist, lately returned from a year of European applause. Warmth of tone, energy of mood and expression, a susceptible temperament, and the will to play upon audience as well as violin mark him. As often as not a true sensibility to music also guides him. A sonata of Händel; a concerto of Vieuxtemps; Bach's Chaconne; lesser pieces by Korngold and Sarasate fill the programme. Trans 10-7

Transcript Oct 7

Globe 10-8

Mischa Elman's Program

Mischa Elman, lately returned to America after two years of concert touring in the Old World, will open the series of Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall next Sunday, Oct 15, at 3:30. The great Russian violinist will be heard in the following program: Sonata in D major, Haendel; Concerto No 5, in A minor, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; Suite, "Viel Larmen um Nichts," Op 11, Korngold; Nocturne, Chopin-Wilhelm'; "Jota" Sarasate.

Globe Oct 8

ELMAN PROGRAM

Mischa Elman, lately returned to America after two years of concert touring in the old world, will open the series of Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony hall next Sunday, Oct. 15, at 3:30. The great Russian violinist will be heard in the following program:

Sonata, D major..........Handel
Concerto, No. 5, A minor..........Vieuxtemps
Chaconne for violin (unaccompanied). Bach
Suite, "Viel Laermen um Nichts," Op. 11, ...Korngold
Nocturne..........Chopin-Wilhelmj
Jota..........Sarasate

Herald Oct 8

Herald Oct 8

ELMAN PROGRAM Adv Oct 8

Mischa Elman will open the series of Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall next Sunday. The great Russian violinist will be heard in the following program:

Sonata, D major..........Haendel
Concerto, No. 5, A minor..........Vieuxtemps
Chaconne for violin (unaccompanied). Bach
Suite, "Viel Larmen um Nichts" Op. 11..........Korngold
Nocturne..........Chopin-Wilhelmj
Jota..........Sarasate

Advertiser Oct 8

On Sunday afternoon, Oct. 15, the first of the series of Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall will be given by Mischa Elman, violinist. He will play Handel's Sonata in D major, Vieuxtemps' fifth concerto in A minor, Bach's Chaconne for violin alone, a "Romantic" Suite by Korngold, the youthful Viennese, and pieces by Chopin and Sarasate. Monitor

Monitor Oct 10

Adv Oct 13

Elman Returning After Long Tour

Mischa Elman, the "Little Giant" among the violin stars, will make his first appearance here in two years at Symphony Hall next Sunday. On his long European tour he achieved a succession of remarkable triumphs. It was in Boston, 15 years ago, that he scored his first big American success as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra. He was then in his 'teens.

MISCHA ELMAN

His program on Sunday will include the Handel sonata in D, Vieuxtemps' concerto No. 5, in A major; Bach's chaconne, unaccompanied; the Chopin-Wilhelmj "Nocturne," Saraste's "Jota" and Korngold's novel "Much Ado About Nothing" suite.

Advertiser Oct 13

Mr. Elman Returns Trans 10/14

The concerts of Sunday afternoons in Symphony Hall begin tomorrow with a recital by Mischa Elman, the violinist, lately returned from a year of European applause. Warmth of tone, energy of mood and expression, a susceptible temperament, and the will to play upon audience as well as violin mark him. As often as not a true sensibility to music also guides him. A sonata of Händel; a concerto of Viextemps; Bach's Chaconne; lesser pieces by Korngold and Sarasate fill the programme.

Transcript Oct 14

Elman Tomorrow

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30, Mischa Elman, the great violinist, will open the series of Sunday afternoon concerts. He will be heard in the following program: Amer 10-14

Sonata in D major..........Haendel
Concerto No. 5 in A minor..........Vieuxtemps
Chaconne (unaccompanied)..........Bach
Suite from the Incidental Music to "Much Ado About Nothing"..Korngold
Nocturne..........Chopin-Wilhelmj
Jota..........Sarasate

American Oct 14

Elman to Open Concert Series

Trav 10-14

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30 Mischa Elman, the great violinist, will open the series of Sunday afternoon concerts.

Traveler Oct 14

Concert and Recital Programs for the Current Week

Globe 10/15

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30, Mischa Elman, violinist. Sonata in D major, Haendel; Concerto, No. 5, in A minor, Vieuxtemps; "Chaconne," Bach; Suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," Korngold; Nocturne, Chopin - Wilheim; "Jota," Sarasate.

Globe Oct 15

Elman Recital at Symphony Hall Today

Amer 10/15

MISCHA ELMAN, the great Russian violinist, will open the season of Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall today. This concert marks his return to Boston after two years' absence. The program:

Sonata in D Major..........Handel
Concerto, No. 5 in A Minor..........Vieuxtemps
Chaconne (unaccompanied)..........Bach
Suite, "Much Ado About Nothing"..Korngold
Nocturne..........Chopin-Wilhelmj
Jota..........Sarasate

American Oct 15

Herald

ELMAN TODAY Oct 15

Mischa Elman, violinist, will open the season of Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony hall today at 3:30 P. M.

For this concert, which will mark his return to Boston after two years' absence in Europe, the program is as follows:

Sonata in D major..........Handel
Concerto, No. 5, in A minor..Vieuxtemps
Chaconne..........Bach
Suite from the Incidental Music to "Much Ado About Nothing"..Korngold
Nocturne..........Chopin-Wilhelmj
Jota..........Sarasate

Herald Oct 15

MISCHA ELMAN RECITAL

Mischa Elman, whose appeal to his great public seems to gain rather than lose with the years, gave a concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall which crowded the hall to overflowing and kept the violinist playing encores until long after his programme proper had concluded. Post Oct 16

Of the compositions announced in advance to be performed there were Handel's D major sonata, Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach unaccompanied Chaconne, a suite from incidental music by Erich Korngold to Shakespere's "Much Ado About Nothing," Nocturne, Chopin, Wilhelmj and Jota Srasate. In these compositions Elman showed the authority as well as the unique warmth and richness of tone which has come to him with the years. He played the broad melodies of Handel and the majestic sonorities of Bach with an equal enthusiasm. In Vieuxtemps' music he was the virtuoso, exulting in pyrotechnics and also his ability to move the heart in melodies of a songful nature.

The Korngold music, little known here, is one of the earlier compositions of the youthful genius whose opera, "Die Tote Stadt," introduced the soprano Marie Jeritza to American audiences last season at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. These are short, fanciful pieces, not too pretentious, piquant in manner and effective for the violin. Post Oct 16

The audience received them with evident pleasure, and it is quite possible that Mr. Elman, in practically introducing these pieces here, did violinists in general the service of adding another concert piece to their repertoire.

Post Oct 16

MISCHA ELMAN PLAYS IN SYMPHONY HALL

Does Difficult Stunts With Usual Skill

Globe Oct 16

Mischa Elman, recently returned from a tour around the world, gave his first Boston concert of the new season yesterday afternoon to an enthusiastic audience that filled Symphony Hall. As in the case of Heifetz's return last season there was considerable curiosity as to whether the violinist's technique or musicianship had changed during his absence from America.

Yesterday's program, with the Handel D major sonata, the Bach Chaconne, and a suite from incidental music for Shakspere's "Much Ado About Nothing," by the young Viennese composer Erich Korngold, offered more music of interest for its own sake than has been customary at Mr Elman's recitals. Those obsessed with technical problems of violin playing had their fill of difficult stunts in the Vieuxtemps A minor concerto and Sarasate's "Jota."

Mr Elman has long been renowned as a violinist with an extraordinary technical mastery of his instrument, and in particular as a producer from it of a luscious quality of tone. These attributes were in evidence yesterday, to the delight of his admirers, although it should be noted that his intonation in difficult passages was not quite secure. Such florid passages for violin recall Dr Johnson's remark about the dog trained to walk upon its hind legs. They are not well done, but it is remarkable that they should be done at all.

Another Johnsonian dictum came to mind yesterday apropos of such show passages. He was told at a concert that they were difficult to perform. "Would that they were impossible," was his retort. They are not music, these dreary pages of double stopping, harmonics, etc, etc. They were composed to permit performers to show off.

As a musician, Mr Elman's Bach and Handel showed him to lack the imagination needed to seize and reproduce a composer's emotion. One little circumstance may be taken as typical of his way of playing the classics. He plays rubato in every slow passage, and quickens his pace every time a technical difficulty appears. His style of interpretation is suited to such pieces as "The Rosary." But for Bach it will not suffice. Hence the chaconne became yesterday another dreary show piece, full of difficulties toilfully surmounted, rousing one's respectful admiration of the performer's control over his instrument, but saying nothing to one's imagination.

RAILROAD VETE

Globe Oct 16

Sunday afternoon, Oct. 15, in Symphony Hall, for the beginning of a new series of Sunday concerts, a recital by Mischa Elman, the violinist, lately returned from a year of European applause. Warmth of tone, energy of mood and expression, a susceptible temperament, and the will to play upon audience as well as violin mark him. As often as not a true sensibility to music also guides him. Trans. 9-23

Transcript Sept 23

AT SYMPHONY HALL

The season of Sunday concerts in Symphony Hall will open on October 15th with the appearance of Mischa Elman. This will be an event of additional interest in that it will mark the return to this country of the celebrated Russian violinist after an absence of two years. This interval Mr. Elman has spent in the Old World, touring in the Orient during the season of 1920-21 and in Western Europe during the season of 1921-22. He had not been heard in the European capitals since the extraordinary concerts of his childhood. Amer 9-23

"DOWN TO THE SEA"

American Sept 23

MISCHA ELMAN Trav

The season of Sunday concerts in Symphony Hall will open on Oct. 15 with the appearance of Mischa Elman. This will mark the return to this country of the celebrated Russian violinist after an absence of two years.

This concert will open the season of Sunday concerts which will take place each week through the winter and spring. The series will include appearances of the greatest singers, violinsts, pianists, choral concerts and orchestral concerts of importance. 9-23

Sept 23
Traveler

ELMAN CONCERT Adv

Mischa Elman is to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday, October 15. The occasion will mark the return of the eminent Russian violinist after an absence of two years. This concert will open the season of Sunday concerts at Symphony Hall. 9-24

Advertiser Sept 24

ELMAN OPENS SUNDAY CONCERTS

Amer 9/30

The season of Sunday concerts in Symphony Hall will open on Sunday afternoon, October 15, with the appearance of Mischa Elman. This concert will be of particular interest in that the great Russian violinist has not been heard in this country for two seasons, having spent the season of 1920-21 in a tour of Japan and the Far East, and last season in a tour of Europe, which included concerts in the principal cities of England, France, Germany, Belgium and Scandinavia. His European audiences immediately repeated the American verdict, "The greatest of them all."

KIETH'S THEATRE

American Sept 30

ELMAN OPENS SUNDAY CONCERTS

Amer 9/30

The season of Sunday concerts in Symphony Hall will open on Sunday afternoon, October 15, with the appearance of Mischa Elman. This concert will be of particular interest in that the great Russian violinist has not been heard in this country for two seasons, having spent the season of 1920-21 in a tour of Japan and the Far East, and last season in a tour of Europe, which included concerts in the principal cities of England, France, Germany, Belgium and Scandinavia. His European audiences immediately repeated the American verdict, "The greatest of them all."

KIETH'S THEATRE

American Sept 30

Herald 9/24

MISCHA El

Herald Sept 23

ELMAN'S RETURN

The season of Sunday concerts in Symphony Hall will open on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 15, with the appearance of Mischa Elman. The great Russian violinist has not been heard in this country for two seasons, having spent the season of 1920-21 in a tour of Japan and the far east, and last season in a tour of Europe. The Sunday afternoon series will be given weekly through the winter and spring, and will include appearances of the greatest singers, violinists and pianists in America.

PEOPLE'S SYMPHONY

Herald Oct 12

ELMAN CONCERT

On Sunday afternoon, October 15, the Sunday series of concerts will begin in Symphony Hall with the appearance of Mischa Elman, who spent the last two seasons abroad. The season of 1920-21 he devoted to a tour of Japan and the Far East. Last season he gave concerts in Europe. Adv 10-1

Advertiser Oct 1

Adv 10/1

Advertiser Oct 1

Elman to Open Sunday Concerts

On Sunday afternoon, Oct. 15, at 3:30, the Sunday series of concerts will begin in Symphony Hall with the appearance of Mischa Elman. This concert will be in the nature of a welcome to the great Russian violinist, in that he has spent the last two seasons in the Old World. The season of 1920-21 he devoted to a tour of Japan and the far East. Last season he gave concerts and appeared with orchestras in the capitals of England, France, Belgium, Germany and Scandinavia. He had not been heard in Europe since his remarkable tour as a boy prodigy some years ago, and his return as the mature artist whom America so well knows made him probably the most distinctive figure of the musical season.

Advertiser Oct 1

---

music-drama has been put by in both citie

When Mr. Elman, the violinist, retur to Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoo Oct. 15, after a year of applause in Europ he will play these pieces: Trans Oct

Sonata in D major..................Hän
Concerto in A minor, No. 5.........Vieuxtem
Chaconne for Violin (Alone).............Ba
Suite for Violin arranged from Incidental Music to Shakspeare's Comedy, "Much Ado About Nothing".....Korngo
Nocturne ....Chopin-Wilheln
Jota ....Sarasa

Transcript Oct 5

Mischa Elman will play at Symphony Hall Oct 15 for the first time in two years, during which he has toured Europe and Asia. Globe 10/1

Globe Oct 1

Elman and Heifetz for Violinists—Titta Ruffo for Resounding Singer—Jewish and Gentile Music from the Temple Choirs—Mr. Hutcheson's Series of Piano-Recitals—Rising Youngsters

Trans 10-7

SUNDAY afternoon, Oct. 15, in Symphony Hall, for the beginning of a new series of Sunday concerts, a recital by Mischa Elman, the violinist, lately returned from a year of European applause. Warmth of tone, energy of mood and expression, a susceptible temperament, and the will to play upon audience as well as violin mark him. As often as not a true sensibility to music also guides him. A sonata of Händel; a concerto of Vieuxtemps; Bach's Chaconne; lesser pieces by Korngold and Sarasate fill the programme. Trans 10-7

Transcript Oct 7

Mischa Elman's Program

Globe 10-8

Mischa Elman, lately returned to America after two years of concert touring in the Old World, will open the series of Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall next Sunday, Oct 15, at 3:30. The great Russian violinist will be heard in the following program: Sonata in D major, Haendel; Concerto No 5, in A minor, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; Suite, "Viel Larmen um Nichts," Op 11, Korngold; Nocturne, Chopin-Wilhelm'; "Jota" Sarasate.

Globe Oct 8

ELMAN PROGRAM

Mischa Elman, lately returned to America after two years of concert touring in the old world, will open the series of Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony hall next Sunday, Oct. 15, at 3:30. The great Russian violinist will be heard in the following program:

Sonata, D major..................Handel
Concerto, No. 5, A minor.......Vieuxtemps
Chaconne for violin (unaccompanied).Bach
Suite, "Viel Laermen um Nichts," Op. 11, Korngold
Nocturne..................Chopin-Wilhelmj
Jota..............................Sarasate

Herald Oct 8

ELMAN PROGRAM

Mischa Elman will open the series of Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall next Sunday. The great Russian violinist will be heard in the following program:

Sonata, D major .... Haendel
Concerto, No. 5, A minor ....Vieuxtemps
Chaconne for violin (unaccompanied) .Bach
Suite, 'Viel Larmen um Nichts'' Op. 11 ....Korngolu
Nocturne .... Chopin-Wilhelmj
Jota .... Sarasato

Advertiser Oct 8

On Sunday afternoon, Oct. 15, the first of the series of Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall will be given by Mischa Elman, violinist. He will play Handel's Sonata in D major Vieuxtemps' fifth concerto in A minor Bach's Chaconne for violin alone, a "Romantic" Suite by Korngold, the youthful Viennese, and pieces by Chopin and Sarasate.

Monitor Oct 10

Elman Returning After Long Tour

Adv Oct. 13

Mischa Elman, the "Little Giant" among the violin stars, will make his first appearance here in two years at Symphony Hall next Sunday. On his long European tour he achieved a succession of remarkable triumphs. It was in Boston, 15 years ago, that he scored his first big American success as soloist with the Symphony Orchestra. He was then in his 'teens.

MISCHA ELMAN

His program on Sunday will include the Handel sonata in D, Vieuxtemps' concerto No. 5, in A major; Bach's chaconne, unaccompanied; the Chopin-Wilhelmj "Nocturne," Saraste's "Jota" and Korngold's novel "Much Ado About Nothing" suite.

Advertiser Oct 13

Mr. Elman Returns

Trans 10/14

The concerts of Sunday afternoons in Symphony Hall begin tomorrow with a recital by Mischa Elman, the violinist, lately returned from a year of European applause. Warmth of tone, energy of mood and expression, a susceptible temperament, and the will to play upon audience as well as violin mark him. As often as not a true sensibility to music also guides him. A sonata of Händel; a concerto of Viextemps; Bach's Chaconne; lesser pieces by Korngold and Sarasate fill his programme.

Transcript Oct 14

Elman Tomorrow

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30, Mischa Elman, the great violinist, will open the series of Sunday afternoon concerts. He will be heard in the following program: Amer 10-14

Sonata in D major..................Haendel
Concerto No. 5 in A minor......Vieuxtemps
Chaconne (unaccompanied) ....Bach
Suite from the Incidental Music to "Much Ado About Nothing"..Korngold
Nocturne ....Chopin-Wilhelmj
Jota ....Sarasate

American Oct 14

Elman to Open Concert Series

Trav 10-14

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30 Mischa Elman, the great violinist, will open the series of Sunday afternoon concerts.

Traveler Oct 14

Concert and Recital Programs for the Current Week

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30, Mischa Elman, violinist. Sonata in D major, Haendel; Concerto, No. 5, in A minor, Vieuxtemps; "Chaconne," Bach; Suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," Korngold; Nocturne, Chopin - Wilheim; "Jota," Sarasate.

Globe Oct 15

Elman Recital at Symphony Hall Today

MISCHA ELMAN, the great Russian violinist, will open the season of Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall today. This concert marks his return to Boston after two years' absence. The program:

Sonata in D Major ....Handel
Concerto, No. 5 in A Minor .....Vieuxtemps
Chaconne (unaccompanied) ....Bach
Suite, "Much Ado About Nothing"..Korngold
Nocturne ....Chopin-Wilhelmj
Jota ....Sarasate

American Oct 15

ELMAN TODAY

Mischa Elman, violinist, will open the season of Sunday afternoon concerts in Symphony hall today at 3:30 P. M.

For this concert, which will mark his return to Boston after two years' absence in Europe, the program is as follows:

Sonata in D major...............Handel
Concerto, No. 5, in A minor..Vieuxtemps
Chaconne ....Bach
Suite from the Incidental Music to "Much Ado About Nothing"..Korngold
Nocturne ....Chopin-Wilhelmj
Jota ....Sarasate

Herald Oct 15

MISCHA ELMAN RECITAL

Mischa Elman, whose appeal to his great public seems to gain rather than lose with the years, gave a concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall which crowded the hall to overflowing and kept the violinist playing encores until long after his programme proper had concluded. Post Oct 16

Of the compositions announced in advance to be performed there were Handel's D major sonata, Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach unaccompanied Chaconne, a suite from incidental music by Erich Korngold to Shakespere's "Much Ado About Nothing," Nocturne, Chopin, Wilhelmj and Jota Srasate. In these compositions Elman showed the authority as well as the unique warmth and richness of tone which has come to him with the years. He played the broad melodies of Handel and the majestic sonorities of Bach with an equal enthusiasm. In Vieuxtemps' music he was the virtuoso, exulting in pyrotechnics and also his ability to move the heart in melodies of a songful nature.

The Korngold music, little known here, is one of the earlier compositions of the youthful genius whose opera, "Die Tote Stadt," introduced the soprano Marie Jeritza to American audiences last season at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. These are short, fanciful pieces, not too pretentious, piquant in manner and effective for the violin. Post Oct 16

The audience received them with evident pleasure, and it is quite possible that Mr. Elman, in practically introducing these pieces here, did violinists in general the service of adding another concert piece to their repertoire.

Post Oct 16

MISCHA ELMAN PLAYS IN SYMPHONY HALL

Does Difficult Stunts With Usual Skill

Globe Oct 16

Mischa Elman, recently returned from a tour around the world, gave his first Boston concert of the new season yesterday afternoon to an enthusiastic audience that filled Symphony Hall. As in the case of Heifetz's return last season there was considerable curiosity as to whether the violinist's technique or musicianship had changed during his absence from America.

Yesterday's program, with the Handel D major sonata, the Bach Chaconne, and a suite from incidental music for Shakspere's "Much Ado About Nothing," by the young Viennese composer Erich Korngold, offered more music of interest for its own sake than has been customary at Mr Elman's recitals. Those obsessed with technical problems of violin playing had their fill of difficult stunts in the Vieuxtemps A minor concerto and Sarasate's "Jota."

Mr Elman has long been renowned as a violinist with an extraordinary technical mastery of his instrument, and in particular as a producer from it of a luscious quality of tone. These attributes were in evidence yesterday, to the delight of his admirers, although it should be noted that his intonation in difficult passages was not quite secure. Such florid passages for violin recall Dr Johnson's remark about the dog trained to walk upon its hind legs. They are not well done, but it is remarkable that they should be done at all.

Another Johnsonian dictum came to mind yesterday apropos of such show passages. He was told at a concert that they were difficult to perform. "Would that they were impossible," was his retort. They are not music, these dreary pages of double stopping, harmonics, etc, etc. They were composed to permit performers to show off.

As a musician, Mr Elman's Bach and Handel showed him to lack the imagination needed to seize and reproduce a composer's emotion. One little circumstance may be taken as typical of his way of playing the classics. He plays rubato in every slow passage, and quickens his pace every time a technical difficulty appears. His style of interpretation is suited to such pieces as "The Rosary." But for Bach it will not suffice. Hence the chaconne became yesterday another dreary show piece, full of difficulties toilfully surmounted, rousing one's respectful admiration of the performer's control over his instrument, but saying nothing to one's imagination.

RAILROAD VETERANS

Globe Oct 16

[91]

MISCHA ELMAN RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

Amer 10/16

Both sides of Symphony Hall were lined with people who stood throughout a long recital yesterday afternoon for the privilege of listening to one of the most popular musicians who comes to Boston just as often as the musical season comes around. Few artists share with Mischa Elman the ability to crowd that auditorium beyond its seating capacity.

His program opened with the Handel Sonata in D major followed by the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach Chaconne, which was unaccompanied; the Korngold incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing"; the Chopin-Wilhelmj Nocturne and the Sarasate "Jota."

A very decided factor in the success of Mr. Elman's recital was the playing of Josef Bonime, his accompanist, who is so far out of the ordinary that his work will be remembered with pleasure for a long time. It is rare indeed that one hears such perfect accord as he unfailingly gave the violinist.

The Korngold music was picturesque and interesting and the audience liked it immensely, but it was in the Chopin Nocturne that Mr. Elman's finest bits of interpretation and tone color were revealed.

American Oct 16

MISCHA ELMAN IN SYMPHONY HALL

Violinist's Performance Stirs Enthusiasm

Herald Oct 16

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave a recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Josef Bonime, pianist. He was greeted by an audience which filled the hall. His first number was Handel's Sonata in D major. Other numbers on the program were: Concerto No. 5, in A major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," work 2, Korngold, including "Maid in Bridal Array," "Grotesque Funeral March," "Garden Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Nocturne," Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota," Sarasate.

Mr. Elman was in excellent mood to respond readily to the enthusiasm with which the audience greeted him and his playing of each selection was such as to warrant the hearty applause accorded him. He played with the superb mastery of tone and ease of technique that places him among the foremost of modern violinists. There was tenderness and passion and abandon as well as the mechanical precision of fingers and bow.

All the numbers pleased, but the one that drew the greatest applause was "Chaconne," which he played without accompaniment. Mr. Bonime accompanied with sympathy and skill in the other numbers.

Mr. Elman will give his second recital in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19.

Herald Oct 16

ISADORA WILL BE BARRED IN BOSTON

Post 10/23

Continued from Page 1

spill forth more vials of wrath upon the heads of those who disagreed with her dancing, display of physical charms, and her attitude in general on the question of marriage, free love, and all the psychic complexes of sex.

Taking all Boston into her confidence, she explained that her art was symbolic of but one thing, the freedom of woman, and her emancipation from the hidebound conventions that are warp and woof of New England Puritanism, Isadora divined the hectic response of her audience as a tribute to the nimbleness of her little white toes and "No. 4's," but said nothing of the furore created by such little accidents as the slipping of her tunic.

"To expose one's body is art, concealment is vulgar," said the Henna haired woman who does most of her rhapsodizing while in her bare feet. "When I dance my object is to inspire reverence, and not suggest anything vulgar. I do not appeal to the lowest instincts of mankind as some of these half clad chorus girls are doing at the present time in Boston."

Her Views of Bostonians

Among the many indictments of Bostonians from the fair Isadora these few are choice samples:

"They are afraid of the truth.

"They want to satisfy baseness without admitting it.

"A suggestively clothed body delights them.

"There is a Puritanical instinct for concealed lust.

"All Puritan vulgarity centres in Boston.

"The Back Bay conservatives are impoverished by custom and taboo; they are the lifeless and sterile of this country."

At 2:57 p. m., by the clock, Isadora Duncan, accompanied by her husband, and her entourage, swept through the portals of the Copley-Plaza, and in her eyes there was a gleam, not of sadness, but of joy—she was bidding adieu to Boston. In her right hand she carried a large brown bag, which bulged suspiciously, as if it might have contained a lot of the Hub's money.

Elman

[illegible] Elman has ever played the violin in Boston as he played it yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall, it was in the distant year when he made his beginning in the United States with the Symphony Orchestra, following them with opportune and yet more revealing recitals. In 1922, memory runs faint and cloudy with impressions so remote; but strong, clear, unspotted and undiminishing, went yesterday the virtues of the violinist. Through two seasons, Mr. Elman has little frequented American concert-halls. A part of this time he spent in reflective leisure and ripening study; more he gave to a European tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Trans Oct 16

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much Ado about Nothing," when that comedy of Shakspeare was lately revived at the Residenz Theatre in Munich. (A "cubistic" revival deriding English-speaking folk labelled it). Mr. Kreisler first played the four numbers here, near two years ago. By the token of yesterday, they please another violinist also. The "Grotesque Funeral March" has discoverable, if mild, tonal humors, not for a moment comparable with a similar mocking piano-piece by Lord Berners. The final "Hornpipe" does not lack homely savor in running rhythms. The "Garden Scene," like such episodes in the play, both beautifies and bites. The "Bridal Piece" at the beginning barely escapes commonplace. All four, it is easy to hear, are also music to tempt a violinist's ranging skill, so deployed and contrasted. Finally, a Nocturne of Chopin as Wilhelmj re-spun and muted it for the violin and a Spanish dance—this time a Jota—of Sarasate. Few better than him have made tone-poems in little of these exercises in virtuosity, kept the pungency of the original dance through all the sauces of display.

Händel gave Mr. Elman two melodies to sing—one of exhaling grace in fineness of ascendant line; the other unfolding more amply, gathering, as it moved, a larger beauty. He played both in a tone as limpid, unbroken, serene and poised as is the music itself. Yet within was the sentiment that gave life to an abstract loveliness and the sensibility that for the instant, by some fine shading or light inflection, made it warm and pulsing. Händel also proffered the violinist two Allegros of running figures; Mr. Elman caught them from the composer's hand; gave them the mingled verve and evenness that composer cheerfully left to violinist, rounded them with the big-wigged Händelian flourish. With the Chaconne of Bach Mr. Elman shone in a reticence that was ripened wisdom. He did not try to make the music sound as though a full choir of violins, divided and sub-divided, were playing it. He did not obtrude a violin making its own bass, as though that were a grateful process to twentieth-century ears. He did not etch out the counterpoint as do some violinists, mistaking themselves for map-makers of music. No more did he drive forward the Chaconne with a persistent magniloquence, as though Bach must be always in the pulpit. Rather, this Bach was weaving an intricate pattern for the violin, finding and giving pleasure in the threading; soliloquizing, as it were, through gentle, musing, moody, creative process; ending, not with Händelian flourish, but serenely simple and content. The Chaconne as show-piece most of us know to weariness. The Chaconne as intimate meditation over variations and over an instrument is new version according to Elman and plausible version according to Bach. Best of all, Mr. Elman mature is no longer Mr. Elman emphatic, showy.

Yet the violinist has lost no whit of the animating, the projecting faculty—in present and in past his crowning gift—that makes his Händel sound as though, elate, he were reading the measures for the first time; that lends his Bach the note of personal communion between violinist and composer. Rather, when it touches such music as Vieuxtemps's Concerto, it becomes the virtuoso's power to glamor, to exalt whatever music he transmits—and most when the music is in direst need thereof. The Belgian spins fine his transitions into instrumental song. From Mr. Elman they fell upon the ear like the touch of caressing fingers, wandering, desultory, sensuously penetrating. Vieuxtemps's melodies easily cloy with sweetness; Mr. Elman distilled them into a beauty that not once clotted and clouded into sentimentality. Vieuxtemps contrives fiddling ornaments, Mr. Elman seemed to improvise them. On the printed page, the Concerto is violinist's exercise. Yesterday it sounded like violinist's rhapsody: yet in the matured Elman as finely controlled as glorified. It was this mingled zest and measure that applauded him through Sarasate's displayful dance; this channeling of sentiment within the grooves of beauty of tone and subtlety of accent that praised him through Wilhelmj's whispering nocturne. As for the whimsies of Korngold, a violinist, like the rest of us, may have his caprices—and more than half persuade the bystanders into his own enjoyment.

Transcript Oct 16

"Talked Back" to Mrs. Charles E. Hughes

Evidently this is one parrot who hasn't the least bit of respect for Secretaries of State. He's a pet on the U. S. S. Maryland, and Mrs. Hughes became acquainted with him when she was returning from the exposition at Rio Janeiro. (Wide World.)

A Lionized Baby

All Washington's fond of this li'l feller, a late arrival at the National Zoo—particularly Mlle. Antonine Goodrich, a pretty visitor to the American capital, who hails from Montreal, Canada. (Wide World.)

Post Oct 15

---

would require 10 days for the trip from Boston to Duluth. In would, therefore, be necessary to have a fleet of at least 12 vessels in continuous operation to make this service attractive to the New England manufacturer, and this would mean a very large investment for the ships alone. The eastbound cargo would be confined almost exclusively to grain and grain products."

"It would not," Mr. Chandler remarks, "be practicable to bring grain to Boston for shipment to the interior. The local rates from Boston, exclusive of insurance charges, are so high that grain could be carried only a short dis-

verted into finished products and these products sent to destinations throughout New England at the same rate as the milled products from the point of origin to the final destination, plus the nominal milling in transit charge. On short onstructed to make larger deliveries o steamers and are only equipped with ne loading spout from which outbound ars can be loaded. The total capacity

had $165,000,000 to $180,000,000 expended upon it. The figure of $1,000,000,000 for the St. Lawrence canal is the cost expected to be reached before the ultimate finish, since Colonel Hugh Cooper's figures would estimate $453.-

both sides of the river, would furnish us with more reliable and authoritative forecasts of what actually would happen and should be done for power dis-

Post Oct 22

[92]

MISCHA ELMAN RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

Amer 10/16

Both sides of Symphony Hall were lined with people who stood throughout a long recital yesterday afternoon for the privilege of listening to one of the most popular musicians who comes to Boston just as often as the musical season comes around. Few artists share with Mischa Elman the ability to crowd that auditorium beyond its seating capacity.

His program opened with the Handel Sonata in D major followed by the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach Chaconne, which was unaccompanied; the Korngold incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing"; the Chopin-Wilhelmj Nocturne and the Sarasate "Jota."

A very decided factor in the success of Mr. Elman's recital was the playing of Josef Bonime, his accompanist, who is so far out of the ordinary that his work will be remembered with pleasure for a long time. It is rare indeed that one hears such perfect accord as he unfailingly gave the violinist.

The Korngold music was picturesque and interesting and the audience liked it immensely, but it was in the Chopin Nocturne that Mr. Elman's finest bits of interpretation and tone color were revealed.

American Oct 16

MISCHA ELMAN IN SYMPHONY HALL

Violinist's Performance Stirs Enthusiasm

Herald Oct 16

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave a recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Josef Bonime, pianist. He was greeted by an audience which filled the hall. His first number was Handel's Sonata in D major. Other numbers on the program were: Concerto No. 5, in A major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," work 2, Korngold, including "Maid in Bridal Array," "Grotesque Funeral March," "Garden Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Nocturne," Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota," Sarasate.

Mr. Elman was in excellent mood to respond readily to the enthusiasm with which the audience greeted him and his playing of each selection was such as to warrant the hearty applause accorded him. He played with the superb mastery of tone and ease of technique that places him among the foremost of modern violinists. There was tenderness and passion and abandon as well as the mechanical precision of fingers and bow.

All the numbers pleased, but the one that drew the greatest applause was "Chaconne," which he played without accompaniment. Mr. Bonime accompanied with sympathy and skill in the other numbers.

Mr. Elman will give his second recital in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19.

Herald Oct 16

ISADORA WILL BE BARRED IN BOSTON

Post 10/23

Continued from Page 1

spill forth more vials of wrath upon the heads of those who disagreed with her dancing, display of physical charms, and her attitude in general on the question of marriage, free love, and all the psychic complexes of sex.

Taking all Boston into her confidence, she explained that her art was symbolic of but one thing, the freedom of woman, and her emancipation from the hidebound conventions that are warp and woof of New England Puritanism, Isadora divined the hectic response of her audience as a tribute to the nimbleness of her little white toes and "No. 4's," but said nothing of the furore created by such little accidents as the slipping of her tunic.

"To expose one's body is art, concealment is vulgar," said the Henna haired woman who does most of her rhapsodizing while in her bare feet. "When I dance my object is to inspire reverence, and not suggest anything vulgar. I do not appeal to the lowest instincts of mankind as some of these half clad chorus girls are doing at the present time in Boston."

Her Views of Bostonians

Among the many indictments of Bostonians from the fair Isadora these few are choice samples:

"They are afraid of the truth.

"They want to satisfy baseness without admitting it.

"A suggestively clothed body delights them.

"There is a Puritanical instinct for concealed lust.

"All Puritan vulgarity centres in Boston.

"The Back Bay conservatives are impoverished by custom and taboo; they are the lifeless and sterile of this country."

At 2:57 p. m., by the clock, Isadora Duncan, accompanied by her husband, and her entourage, swept through the portals of the Copley-Plaza, and in her eyes there was a gleam, not of sadness, but of joy—she was bidding adieu to Boston. In her right hand she carried a large brown bag, which bulged suspiciously, as if it might have contained a lot of the Hub's money.

"Talked Back" to Mrs. Charles E. Hughes

Evidently this is one parrot who hasn't the least bit of respect for Secretaries of State. He's a pet on the U. S. S. Maryland, and Mrs. Hughes became acquainted with him when she was returning from the exposition at Rio Janeiro. (Wide World.)

A Lionized Baby

All Washington's fond of this li'l feller, a late arrival at the National Zoo—particularly Mlle. Antonine Goodrich, a pretty visitor to the American capital, who hails from Montreal, Canada. (Wide World.)

Post Oct 15

---

would require 10 days for the trip from Boston to Duluth. In would, therefore, be necessary to have a fleet of at least 12 vessels in continuous operation to make this service attractive to the New England manufacturer, and this would mean a very large investment for the ships alone. The eastbound cargo would be confined almost exclusively to grain and grain products."

"It would not," Mr. Chandler remarks, "be practicable to bring grain to Boston for shipment to the interior. The local rates from Boston, exclusive of insurance charges, are so high that grain could be carried only a short distance when it would be met with a verted into finished products and these products sent to destinations throughout New England at the same rate as the milled products from the point of origin to the final destination, plus the nominal milling in transit charge. On short onstructed to make larger deliveries o steamers and are only equipped with ne loading spout from which outbound ars can be loaded. The total capacity

had $165,000,000 to $180,000,000 expended upon it. The figure of $1,000,000,000 for the St. Lawrence canal is the cost expected to be reached before the ultimate finish, since Colonel Hugh Cooper's figures would estimate $453.-

both sides of the river, would furnish us with more reliable and authoritative forecasts of what actually would happen and should be done for power dis-

Post Oct 22

Elman

If Mr. Elman has ever played the violin in Boston as he played it yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall, it was in the distant year when he made his beginnings in the United States with the Symphony Orchestra, following them with opportune and yet more revealing recitals. In 1922, memory runs faint and cloudy with impressions so remote; but strong, clear, unspotted and undiminishing, went yesterday the virtues of the violinist. Through two seasons, Mr. Elman has little frequented American concert-halls. A part of this time he spent in reflective leisure and ripening study; more he gave to a European tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Trans Oct 16

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much Ado about Nothing," when that comedy of Shakspeare was lately revived at the Residenz Theatre in Munich. (A "cubistic" revival deriding English-speaking folk labelled it). Mr. Kreisler first played the four numbers here, near two years ago. By the token of yesterday, they please another violinist also. The "Grotesque Funeral March" has discoverable, if mild, tonal humors, not for a moment comparable with a similar mocking piano-piece by Lord Berners. The final "Hornpipe" does not lack homely savor in running rhythms. The "Garden Scene," like such episodes in the play, both beautifies and bites. The "Bridal Piece" at the beginning barely escapes commonplace. All four, it is easy to hear, are also music to tempt a violinist's ranging skill, so deployed and contrasted. Finally, a Nocturne of Chopin as Wilhelmj re-spun and muted it for the violin and a Spanish dance—this time a Jota—of Sarasate. Few better than him have made tone-poems in little of these exercises in virtuosity, kept the pungency of the original dance through all the sauces of display.

Händel gave Mr. Elman two melodies to sing—one of exhaling grace in fineness of ascendant line; the other unfolding more amply, gathering, as it moved, a larger beauty. He played both in a tone as limpid, unbroken, serene and poised as is the music itself. Yet within was the sentiment that gave life to an abstract loveliness and the sensibility that for the instant, by some fine shading or light inflection, made it warm and pulsing. Händel also proffered the violinist two Allegros of running figures; Mr. Elman caught them from the composer's hand; gave them the mingled verve and evenness that composer cheerfully left to violinist, rounded them with the big-wigged Händelian flourish. With the Chaconne of Bach Mr. Elman shone in a reticence that was ripened wisdom. He did not try to make the music sound as though a full choir of violins, divided and sub-divided, were playing it. He did not obtrude a violin making its own bass, as though that were a grateful process to twentieth-century ears. He did not etch out the counterpoint as do some violinists, mistaking themselves for map-makers of music. No more did he drive forward the Chaconne with a persistent magniloquence, as though Bach must be always in the pulpit. Rather, this Bach was weaving an intricate pattern for the violin, finding and giving pleasure in the threading; soliloquizing, as it were, through gentle, musing, moody, creative process; ending, not with Händelian flourish, but serenely simple and content. The Chaconne as show-piece most of us know to weariness. The Chaconne as intimate meditation over variations and over an instrument is new version according to Elman and plausible version according to Bach. Best of all, Mr. Elman mature is no longer Mr. Elman emphatic, showy.

Yet the violinist has lost no whit of the animating, the projecting faculty—in present and in past his crowning gift—that makes his Händel sound as though, elate, he were reading the measures for the first time; that lends his Bach the note of personal communion between violinist and composer. Rather, when it touches such music as Vieuxtemps's Concerto, it becomes the virtuoso's power to glamor, to exalt whatever music he transmits—and most when the music is in direst need thereof. The Belgian spins fine his transitions into instrumental song. From Mr. Elman they fell upon the ear like the touch of caressing fingers, wandering, desultory, sensuously penetrating. Vieuxtemps's melodies easily cloy with sweetness; Mr. Elman distilled them into a beauty that not once clotted and clouded into sentimentality. Vieuxtemps contrives fiddling ornaments; Mr. Elman seemed to improvise them. On the printed page, the Concerto is violinist's exercise. Yesterday it sounded like violinist's rhapsody; yet in the matured Elman as finely controlled as glorified. It was this mingled zest and measure that applauded him through Sarasate's displayful dance; this channeling of sentiment within the grooves of beauty of tone and subtlety of accent that praised him through Wilhelmj's whispering nocturne. As for the whimsies of Korngold, a violinist, like the rest of us, may have his caprices—and more than half persuade the bystanders into his own enjoyment.

[92]

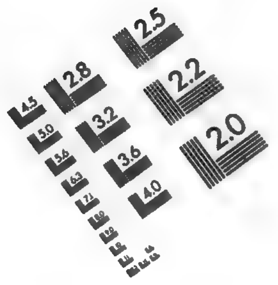
Transcript Oct 16

REDUCTION
RATIO
17x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

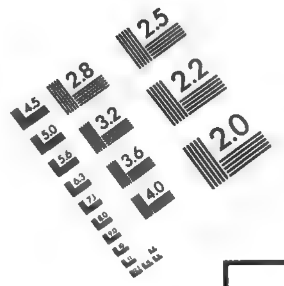
1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890



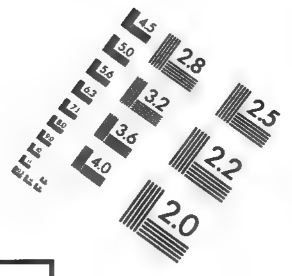
2.5
2.2
2.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

2.5
2.2
2.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

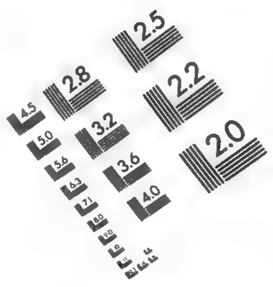
PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



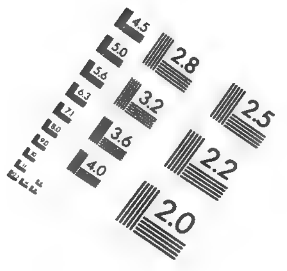
2.5
2.2
2.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6



2.5
2.2
2.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6



2.5
2.2
2.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

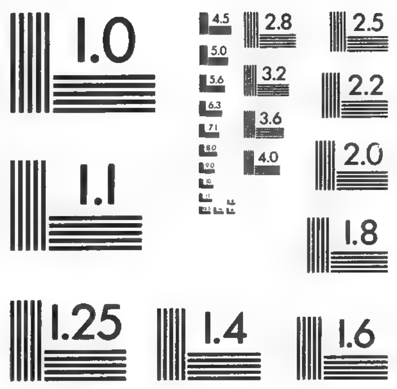


2.5
2.2
2.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1

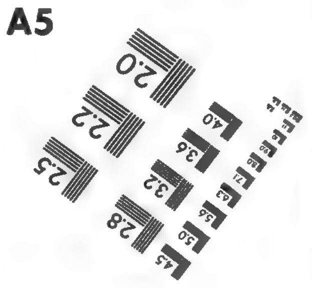
1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

A5

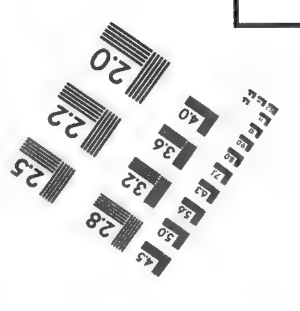


2.5
2.2
2.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

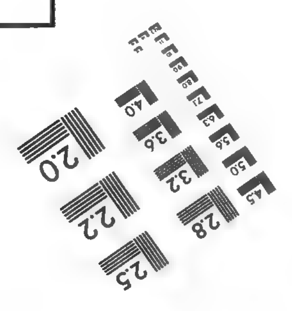
2.5
2.2
2.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

A4

A3



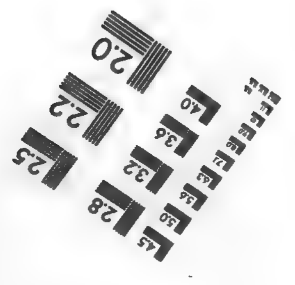
2.5
2.2
2.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6



2.5
2.2
2.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119



2.5
2.2
2.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

2.5
2.2
2.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

MISCHA ELMAN RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

Amer 10/16

Both sides of Symphony Hall were lined with people who stood throughout a long recital yesterday afternoon for the privilege of listening to one of the most popular musicians who comes to Boston just as often as the musical season comes around. Few artists share with Mischa Elman the ability to crowd that auditorium beyond its seating capacity.

His program opened with the Handel Sonata in D major followed by the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach Chaconne, which was unaccompanied; the Korngold incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing"; the Chopin-Wilhelmj Nocturne and the Sarasate "Jota."

A very decided factor in the success of Mr. Elman's recital was the playing of Josef Bonime, his accompanist, who is so far out of the ordinary that his work will be remembered with pleasure for a long time. It is rare indeed that one hears such perfect accord as he unfailingly gave the violinist.

The Korngold music was picturesque and interesting and the audience liked it immensely, but it was in the Chopin Nocturne that Mr. Elman's finest bits of interpretation and tone color were revealed.

American Oct 16

MISCHA ELMAN IN SYMPHONY HALL

Violinist's Performance Stirs Enthusiasm

Herald Oct 16

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave a recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Josef Bonime, pianist. He was greeted by an audience which filled the hall. His first number was Handel's Sonata in D major. Other numbers on the program were: Concerto No. 5, in A major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," work 2, Korngold, including "Maid in Bridal Array," "Grotesque Funeral March," "Garden Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Nocturne," Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota," Sarasate.

Mr. Elman was in excellent mood to respond readily to the enthusiasm with which the audience greeted him and his playing of each selection was such as to warrant the hearty applause accorded him. He played with the superb mastery of tone and ease of technique that places him among the foremost of modern violinists. There was tenderness and passion and abandon as well as the mechanical precision of fingers and bow.

All the numbers pleased, but the one that drew the greatest applause was "Chaconne," which he played without accompaniment. Mr. Bonime accompanied with sympathy and skill in the other numbers.

Mr. Elman will give his second recital in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19.

Herald Oct 16

Mr. Elman has ever played the violin in Boston as he played it yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall, it was in the distant year when he made his beginnings in the United States with the Symphony Orchestra, following them with opportune and yet more revealing recitals. In 1922, memory runs faint and cloudy with impressions so remote; but strong, clear, unspotted and undiminishing, went yesterday the virtues of the violinist. Through two seasons, Mr. Elman has little frequented American concert-halls. A part of this time he spent in reflective leisure and ripening study; more he gave to a European tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Trans Oct 16

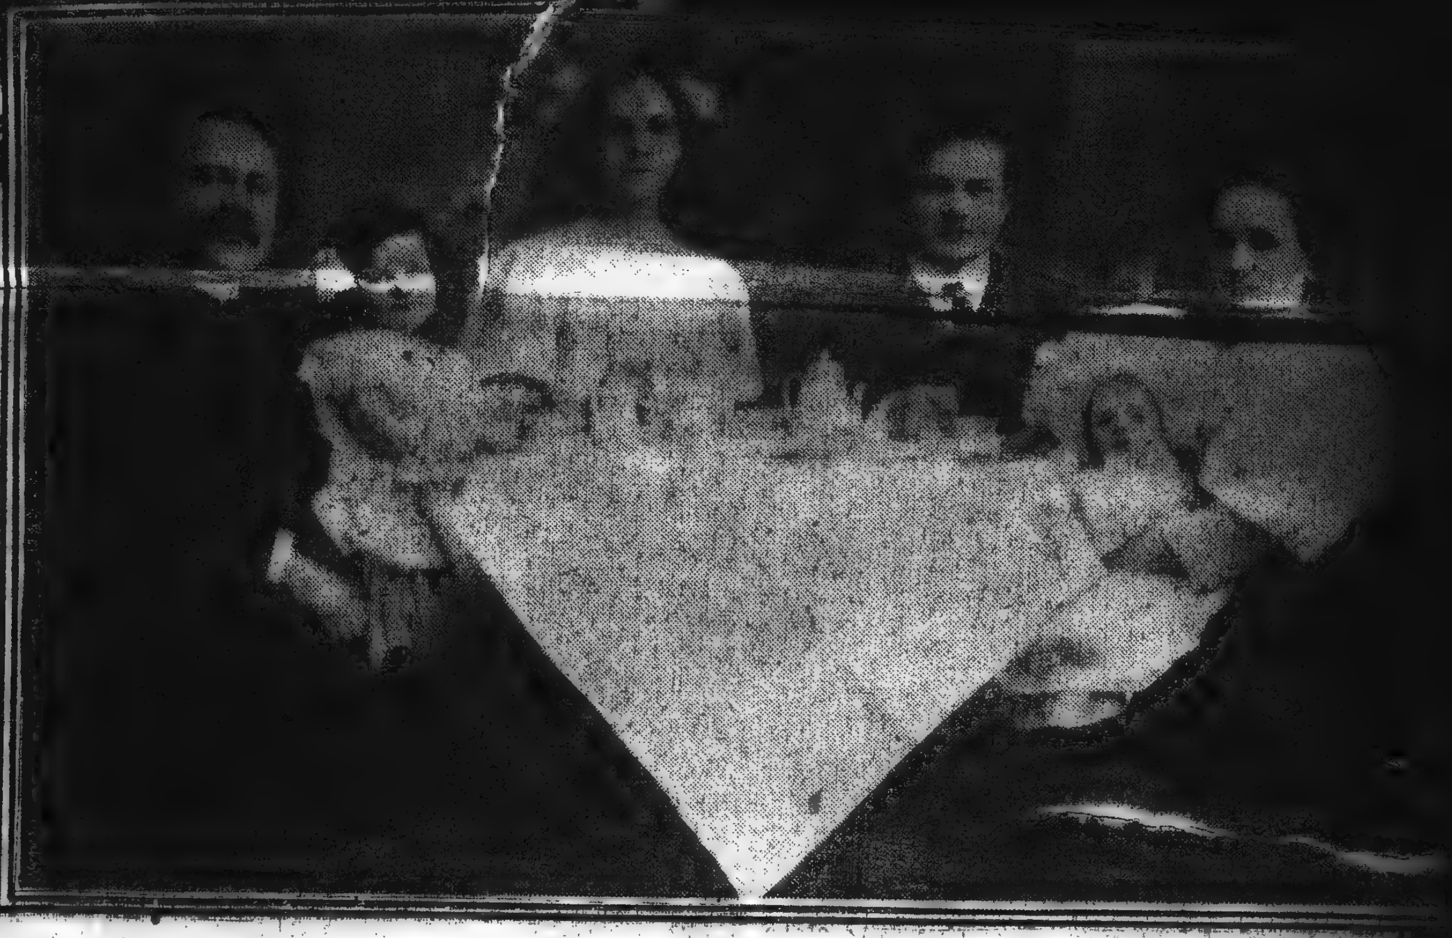
Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much

---

Post Oct 15

Mischa Elman to Open Season's Concerts

After an absence of two seasons, the great Russian violinist returns to America, and, if all is well, Symphony Hall will once more resound to his vigorous strains and marvellous technique. Famous today the world over at 31, he won his first laurels at the age of 5. He is shown here at the age of about 20, with his sisters, at home.



When the Photographers First Began to Hound Him

At the age of 18 Mischa Elman made his first tour of Europe, where he was acclaimed as a prodigy. His American debut was made in 1908 with the Russian Symphony Orchestra in New York, since which time he has toured America seven seasons. His home now is in London, but this photograph was taken in his Russian home. His father and mother are seen at either end of the table, and his three sisters in between.

Elman, the "Child Prodigy" 20 Years Ago, With His Father

It was about this time, when Mischa Elman was 10 or 11, that he sold some of his clothes to buy a railroad ticket from Odessa, his Russian home, to Elizabethgrad, where Leopold Auer was giving a violin concert. Auer says of this incident: "After the performance a little boy, rather poorly clad, approached me and asked for the privilege of playing for me. He played a few selections, and I quickly recognized him as a youthful prodigy!"

MISCHA ELMAN RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

Both sides of Symphony Hall were lined with people who stood throughout a long recital yesterday afternoon for the privilege of listening to one of the most popular musicians who comes to Boston just as often as the musical season comes around. Few artists share with Mischa Elman the ability to crowd that auditorium beyond its seating capacity.

His program opened with the Handel Sonata in D major followed by the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach Chaconne, which was unaccompanied; the Korngold incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing"; the Chopin-Wilhelmj Nocturne and the Sarasate "Jota."

A very decided factor in the success of Mr. Elman's recital was the playing of Josef Bonime, his accompanist, who is so far out of the ordinary that his work will be remembered with pleasure for a long time. It is rare indeed that one hears such perfect accord as he unfailingly gave the violinist.

The Korngold music was picturesque and interesting and the audience liked it immensely, but it was in the Chopin Nocturne that Mr. Elman's finest bits of interpretation and tone color were revealed.

American Oct 16

MISCHA ELMAN IN SYMPHONY HALL

Violinist's Performance Stirs Enthusiasm

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave a recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Josef Bonime, pianist. He was greeted by an audience which filled the hall. His first number was Handel's Sonata in D major. Other numbers on the program were: Concerto No. 5, in A major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," work 2, Korngold, including "Maid in Bridal Array," "Grotesque Funeral March," "Garden Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Nocturne," Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota," Sarasate.

Mr. Elman was in excellent mood to respond readily to the enthusiasm with which the audience greeted him and his playing of each selection was such as to warrant the hearty applause accorded him. He played with the superb mastery of tone and ease of technique that places him among the foremost of modern violinists. There was tenderness and passion and abandon as well as the mechanical precision of fingers and bow.

All the numbers pleased, but the one that drew the greatest applause was "Chaconne," which he played without accompaniment. Mr. Bonime accompanied with sympathy and skill in the other numbers.

Mr. Elman will give his second recital in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19.

Herald Oct 16

Elman the [illegible]

[illegible] Mr. Elman has ever played the violin in Boston as he played it yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall, it was in the distant year when he made his beginnings in the United States with the Symphony Orchestra, following them with opportune and yet more revealing recitals. In 1922, memory runs faint and cloudy with impressions so remote; but strong, clear, unspotted and undiminishing, went yesterday the virtues of the violinist. Through two seasons, Mr. Elman has little frequented American concert-halls. A part of this time he spent in reflective leisure and ripening study; more he gave to a European tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much

---

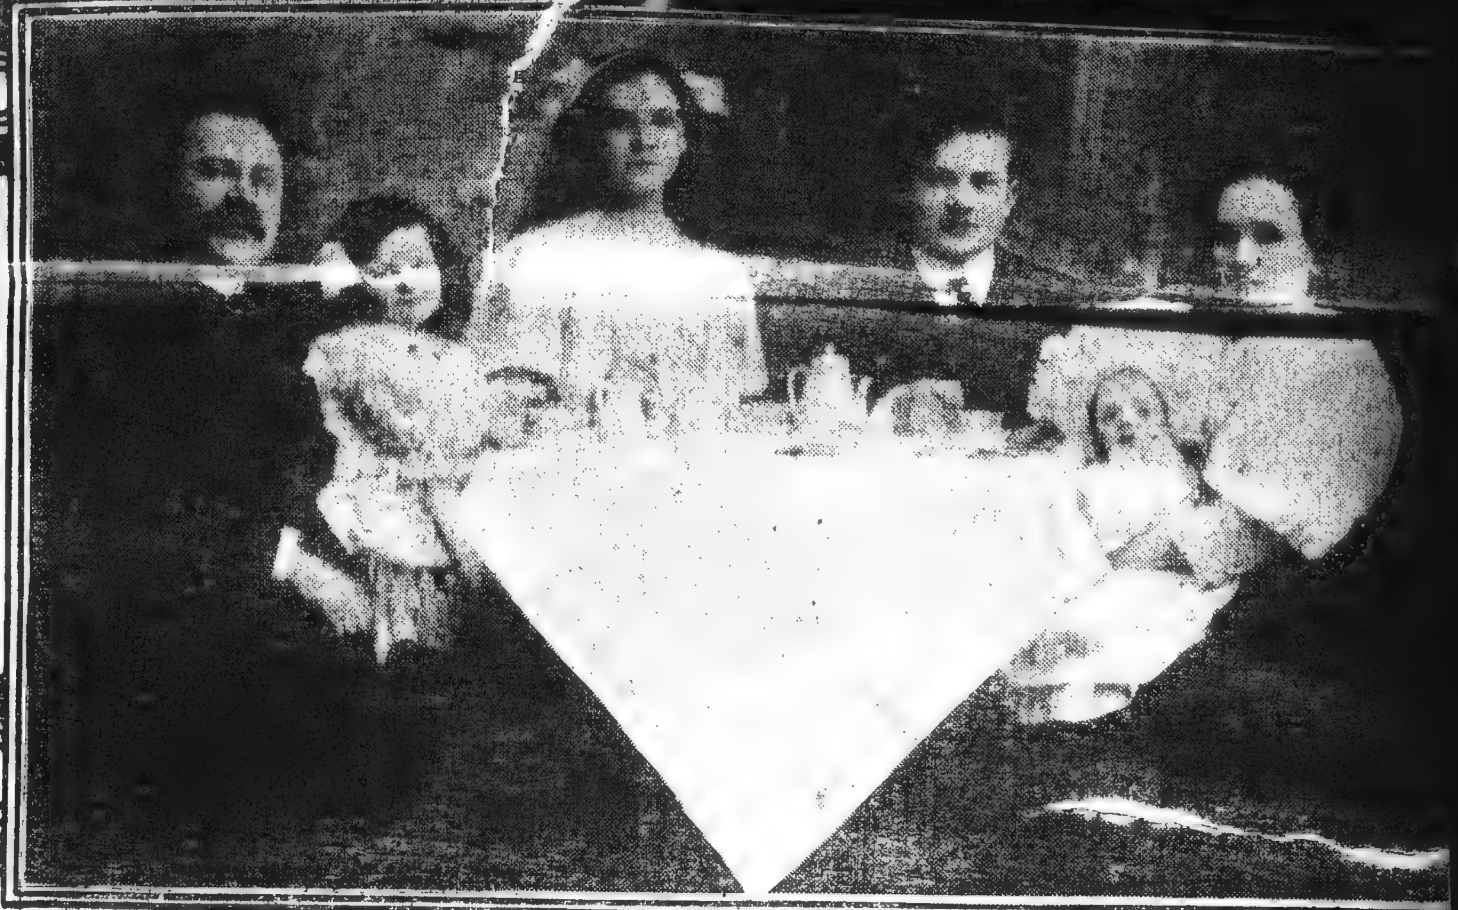
Mischa Elman to Open Season's Concerts

After an absence of two seasons, the great Russian violinist returns to America, and, if all is well, Symphony Hall will once more resound to his vigorous strains and marvellous technique. Famous today the world over at 31, he won his first laurels at the age of 5. He is shown here at the age of about 20, with his sisters, at home.

Post Oct 15

Elman, the "Child Prodigy" 20 Years Ago, With His Father

It was about this time, when Mischa Elman was 10 or 11, that he sold some of his clothes to buy a railroad ticket from Odessa, his Russian home, to Elizabethgrad, where Leopold Auer was giving a violin concert. Auer says of this incident: "After the performance a little boy, rather poorly clad, approached me and asked for the privilege of playing for me. He played a few selections and I quickly recognized him as a youthful prodigy!"



When the Photographers First Began to Hound Him

At the age of 13 Mischa Elman made his first tour of Europe, where he was acclaimed as a prodigy. His American debut was made in 1908 with the Russian Symphony Orchestra in New York, since which time he has toured America seven seasons. His home now is in London, but this photograph was taken in his Russian home. His father and mother are seen at either end of the table, and his three sisters in between.

MISCHA ELMAN SAW "DREAM GIRL" IN LOUVRE---MET HER IN NEW YORK

Famous Violinist a Detemined Bachelor---Resisted 68 of London's Prettiest Blondes---and Fell Before American Brunette

On the walls of the Louvre Mischa Elman says he first gazed upon the face of his "ideal girl."

She was "The Girl With the Broken [illegible] painting by Jean Baptiste Greuze.

She had a "baby-doll stare" and blonde hair.

Now he has met another girl—this time a flesh and blood ideal girl—and he is so sure of it that he is going to marry her.

But she's a brunette and is lots different from the other one.

BY. RUTH SNYDER

Six months ago, Mischa Elman, the violin virtuoso, declared that he was tired of being a bachelor. He was 31 and it was about time he got married So straightway he sat down and told the world the ideal type of girl he was looking for.

He was in England at the time, playing at Queen's Hall, London. Immediately he was swamped with letters, telegrams and requests for interviews.

Sixty-eight blonde young English misses. who fondly imagined they resembled his ideal, besieged him with offers of marriage.

Then he came back to America, and Cupid, with his tricky bow and arrow, immediately set about to erase th- IDEA from IDEAL and add OVE to the last letter.

Love Conquers

Love rules and Mischa Elman has announced his engagement to Miss Mildred Stone of New York.

Does she measure up to the ideal he set for himself 18 years ago?

Mischa Elman has been a great violinist ever since he was 13 years old. Even at 5 he exhibited marvellous talent. When he made his debut at St. Petersburg in 1904 he created quite a furore. His first appearance in New York was in 1908, when he made his triumphant appearance with the Russian Symphony Orchestra.

But ever since 1904 he has kept a picture of his ideal girl before him. Eighteen years of worship at the shrine of an ideal.

And this ideal is represented in a picture—in pictures. His ideal girl is the girl who posed for the famous paintings of Jeane Baptiste Greuze—"The Broken Jug," "The Girl With Lamb," "The Sisters," etc.

Mischa Elman, himself, revealed the secret of the strange fascination this picture has for him. Bear in mind, this was only last April.

Has Boyhood Romance

"It is based on a boyhood sentiment," he said at that time. "When I first went to England, 17 years ago, I met an English girl with whom I fell in love. She measured up to all the requirements of an artist's bride, but because we were both too young—indeed we were little more than children—and because I had vowed to my father to remain unmarried for 20 years—the romance died. She married later and disappeared.

"For years, as I grew older, I carried her image in my heart and one day, in Paris, as I was going through the galleries of the Louvre, I suddenly saw her face staring out at me from a beautiful canvas.

"My first impression was that it must be an actual portrait of my lost love. But the little brass inscription plate with the painter's name and the date, 1725-1805, made me realize that it was only a startling likeness."

He later learned that the girl who had posed for these paintings was the wife of the artist, who also served as his model.

The portrait of the "Girl With the Broken Pitcher" represents a blonde girl—distinctly a baby type—a pre-Victorian type of the entirely feminine ideal. The woman who posed for the picture is declared by experts to have the face of a child, a "baby-doll" in modern parlance. It is the face of a girl who is pretty, but deficient in brains, according to art critics.

Madame Greuze, the woman who posed for the paintings, was an inspiration to her husband in his art, but proved to be a very poor housewife.

When Mischa Elman returned to this country the latter part of June, he is declared as saying:

"It is true that the modern woman, with her cigarettes and her make-ups, is rather distasteful to me. I am not used to it, that's all. I was brought up to admire the delicate, incompetent woman of the '90s. Today woman is independently able to take care of herself, but less attractive to the strong, protective longing of the male. Man wishes to be the superior; he wishes to dominate."

And then he went up to Lake Placid to rest from his European tour. He met Mildred Stone, who was staying with her brother-in-law, Rudolph Polk, another violinist.

Mildred is 5 ft. 8 in. tall, weighs 110 pounds. She is 23 years old.

But does she measure up to the standard, the "ideal" which was built long ago in Mischa Elman's mind?

I asked her opinion today.

"I don't know. You would have to ask Mischa that," she modestly declared. "Of course, everyone has his or her ideal. But it is not merely the superficial. The man who outwardly lives up to our ideals seldom is the man we fall in love with. The real ideal we are looking for is the inner man."

With which she adroitly turned the conversation from herself to the man in question.

"Mischa Knows Girls"

"Mischa has been all around the world and has had plenty of girls to study. He knows girls," Mrs. Stone, the mother of Mildred, explained in her broken English. Miss Stone is of Rumanian descent.

But Mildred is a brunette.

And Mischa was looking for a blonde.

Mischa's ideal was the pre-Victorian type.

Mildred is a typical flapper—bobbed hair, earrings and a flapperish lilt to her laughing voice. One can almost hear her laughing at the havoc Cupid has done to Mischa's ideal.

The girl of the picture was the baby type. Mildred's face is not of the baby type—it is far too intelligent.

But——

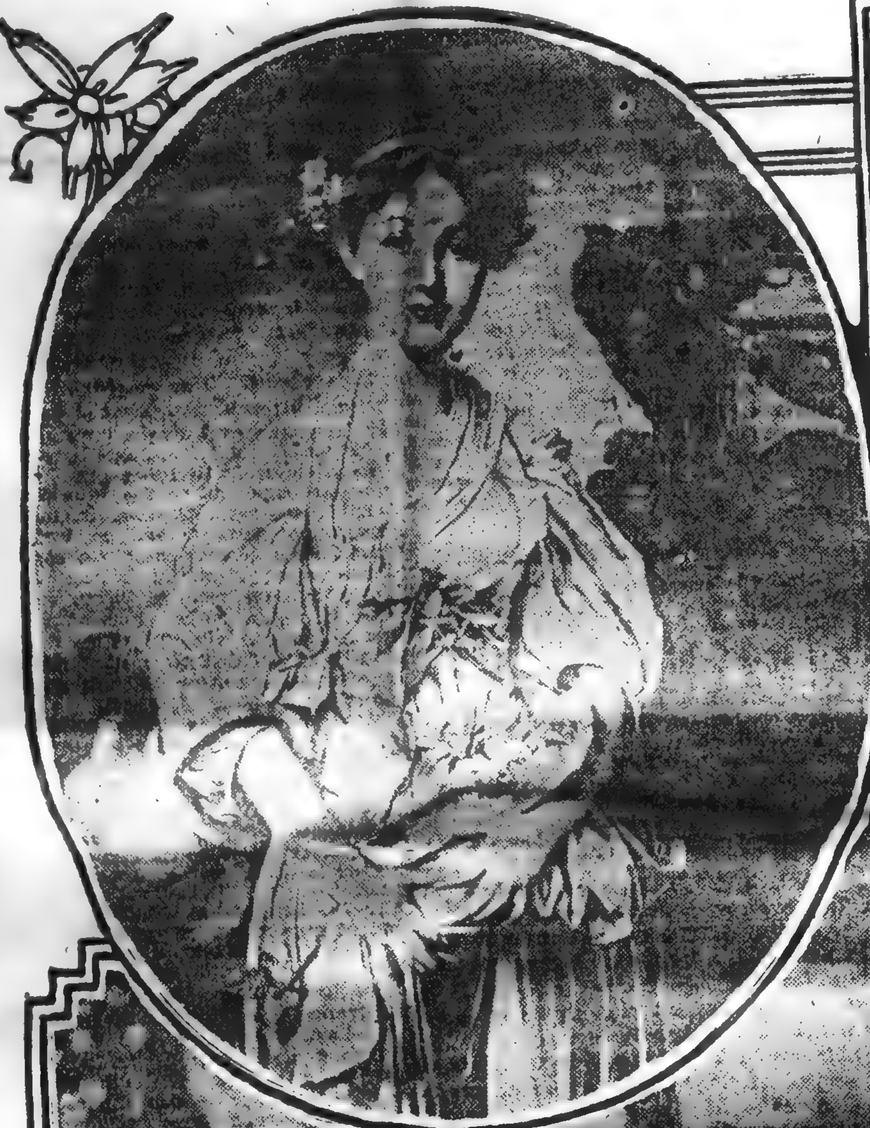
"Mischa likes the baby type of girl," she explained. "He likes a girl to be girlish."

Mr. Elman wants a home girl.

How about Mildred?

"Oh, I guess I can be domesticated," she laughed softly.

But, all the same, Mildred loves outdoor life. She likes to swim, play tennis, golf and ride.



Here is Mischa Elman's fiancee, Mildred Stone. A girl who is in direct contrast to Mischa's avowed ideal, a pronounced brunette, instead of the blonde girl of his dreams. (International photo.)

Mischa Elman, the young Russian violinist, who dreamed of an ideal sweetheart for years. His ideal he found in the famous painting by Grueze (upper left), named the "Girl With the Broken Pitcher." Then Mischa fell in love. (Bain photo.)

Miss Mildred Stone, sister-in-law of Rudolph Polk, violinist, whose engagement has been announced to Mischa Elman, famous violinist. Mr. Elman has for some time been reported as looking for the "ideal girl" and his engagement has been repeatedly denied. Miss Stone hails from New York city, where Mr. Elman has his residence. (P. & A. photo.)

MISCHA ELMAN SAW "DREAM GIRL" IN LOUVRE---MET HER IN NEW YORK

Resisted 68 of London's Prettiest Blondes---and Fell Before American Brunette

Famous Violinist a Determined Bachelor---

On the walls of the Louvre Mischa Elman says he first gazed upon the face of his "ideal girl."

She was "The Girl With the Broken [illegible]" a wonderful painting by Jean Baptiste Greuze.

She had a "baby-doll stare" and blonde hair.

Now he has met another girl—this time a flesh and blood ideal girl—and he is so sure of it that he is going to marry her.

But she's a brunette and is lots different from the other one.

BY RUTH SNYDER

Six months ago, Mischa Elman, the violin virtuoso, declared that he was tired of being a bachelor. He was 31 and it was about time he got married. So straightway he sat down and told the world the ideal type of girl he was looking for.

He was in England at the time, playing at Queen's Hall, London. Immediately he was swamped with letters, telegrams and requests for interviews.

Sixty-eight blonde young [illegible] misses who [illegible] sembled his [illegible] offers of marriage.

Then he came back to America, and Cupid, with his tricky bow and arrow, immediately set about to erase the IDEA from IDEAL and add OVE to the last letter.

Love Conquers

Love rules and Mischa Elman has announced his engagement to Miss Mildred Stone of New York.

Does she measure up to the ideal he set for himself 18 years ago?

Mischa Elman has been a great violinist ever since he was 13 years old. Even at 6 he exhibited marvellous talent. When he made his debut at St. Petersburg in 1904 he created quite a furore. His first appearance in New York was in 1908 when he made his triumphant appearance with the Russian Symphony Orchestra.

But ever since 1904 he has kept a picture of his ideal girl before him. Eighteen years of worship at the shrine of an ideal.

And this ideal is represented in a picture—in pictures. His ideal girl is the girl who posed for the famous paintings of Jeane Baptiste Greuze—"The Broken Jug," "The Girl With Lamb," "The Sisters," etc.

Mischa Elman, himself, revealed the secret of the strange fascination this picture has for him. Bear in mind, this was only last April.

Has Boyhood Romance

"It is based on a boyhood sentiment," he said at that time. "When I first went to England, 17 years ago, I met an English girl with whom I fell in love. She measured up to all the requirements of an artist's bride, but because we were both too young—indeed we were little more than children—and because I had vowed to my father to remain unmarried for 20 years—the romance died. She married later and disappeared.

"For years, as I grew older, I carried her image in my heart and one day, in Paris, as I was going through the galleries of the Louvre, I suddenly saw her face staring out at me from a beautiful canvas.

"My first impression was that it must be an actual portrait of my lost love. But the little brass inscription plate with the painter's name and the date, 1725-1805, made me realize that it was only a startling likeness."

He later learned that the girl who had posed for these paintings was the wife of the artist who also served as his model.

The portrait of the "Girl With the Broken Pitcher" represents a blonde girl distinctly a baby type—a pre-Victorian type of the entirely feminine ideal. The woman who posed for the picture is declared by experts to have the face of a child, a "baby-doll" in modern parlance. It is the face of a girl who is pretty, but deficient in brains, according to art [illegible].

Madame Greuze, the woman who posed for the paintings, was an inspiration to her husband in his art, but proved to be a [illegible] poor housewife.

When Mischa Elman [illegible] country the latter part of [illegible] declared as saying:

"It is true that the modern woman, with her cigarettes and her make-ups, is rather distasteful to me. I am not used to it, that's all. I was brought up to admire the delicate, incompetent woman of the '90s. Today [illegible] is independently able to take care of herself, but less attractive in the [illegible] protective longing of the male. Man wishes to be the superior; he wishes to dominate."

And then he went up to Lake Placid to rest from his European tour. He met Mildred Stone [illegible] with her brother-in-law, Rudolph Polk, another violinist.

Mildred is 5 ft. 3 in. tall, weighs 110 pounds. She is 23 years old.

But does she measure up to the standard, the "ideal" which was built long ago in Mischa Elman's mind?

I asked her opinion today.

"I don't know. You would have to ask Mischa that," she modestly declared. "Of course, everyone has his [illegible] or her ideal. But it is not merely the superficial. The man who outwardly [illegible] up to our ideals seldom is the [illegible] we fall in love with. The real [illegible] we are looking for is the inner [illegible]."

[illegible] which she adroitly turned the conversation from herself to the man in question.

"Mischa Knows Girls"

"Mischa has been all around the world and has had plenty of girls to study. He knows girls," Mrs. Stone, the mother of Mildred, explained in her broken English. Miss Stone is of Rumanian descent.

But Mildred is a brunette.

And Mischa was looking for a blonde.

Mischa's ideal was the pre-Victorian type.

Mildred is a typical flapper—bobbed hair, earrings and a flapperish lilt to her laughing voice. One can almost hear her laughing at the havoc Cupid has done to Mischa's ideal.

The girl of the picture was the baby type. Mildred's face is not of the baby type—it is far too intelligent.

But—

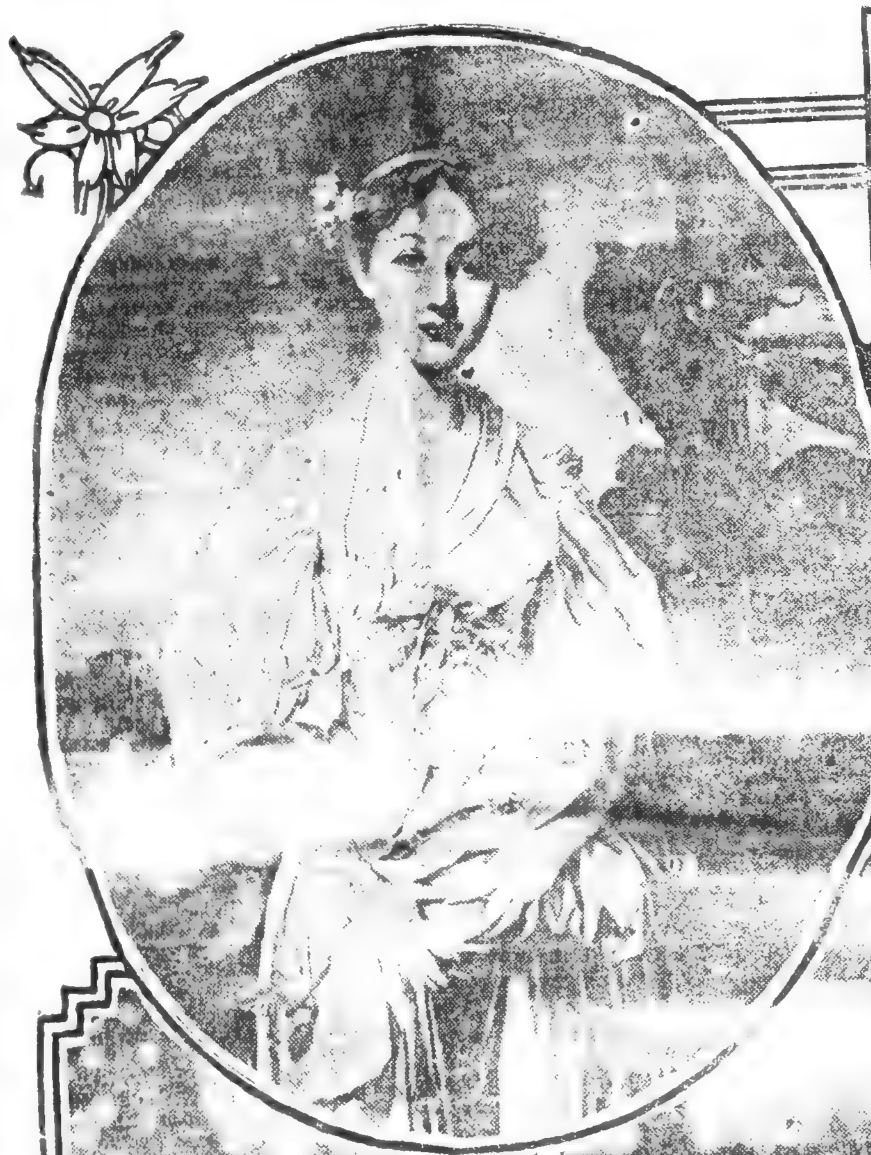
"Mischa likes the baby type of girl," she explained. "He likes a girl to be girlish."

Mr. Elman wants a home girl.

How about Mildred?

"Oh, I guess I can be domesticated," she laughed softly.

But, all the same, Mildred loves outdoor life. She likes to swim, play tennis, golf and ride.



Here is Mischa Elman's fiancee, Mildred Stone. A girl who is in direct contrast to Mischa's avowed ideal, a pronounced brunette, instead of the blonde girl of his dreams. (International photo.)

Mischa Elman, the young Russian violinist, who dreamed of an ideal sweetheart for years. His ideal he found in the famous painting by Grueze (upper left), named the "Girl With the Broken Pitcher." Then Mischa fell in love. (Bain photo.)

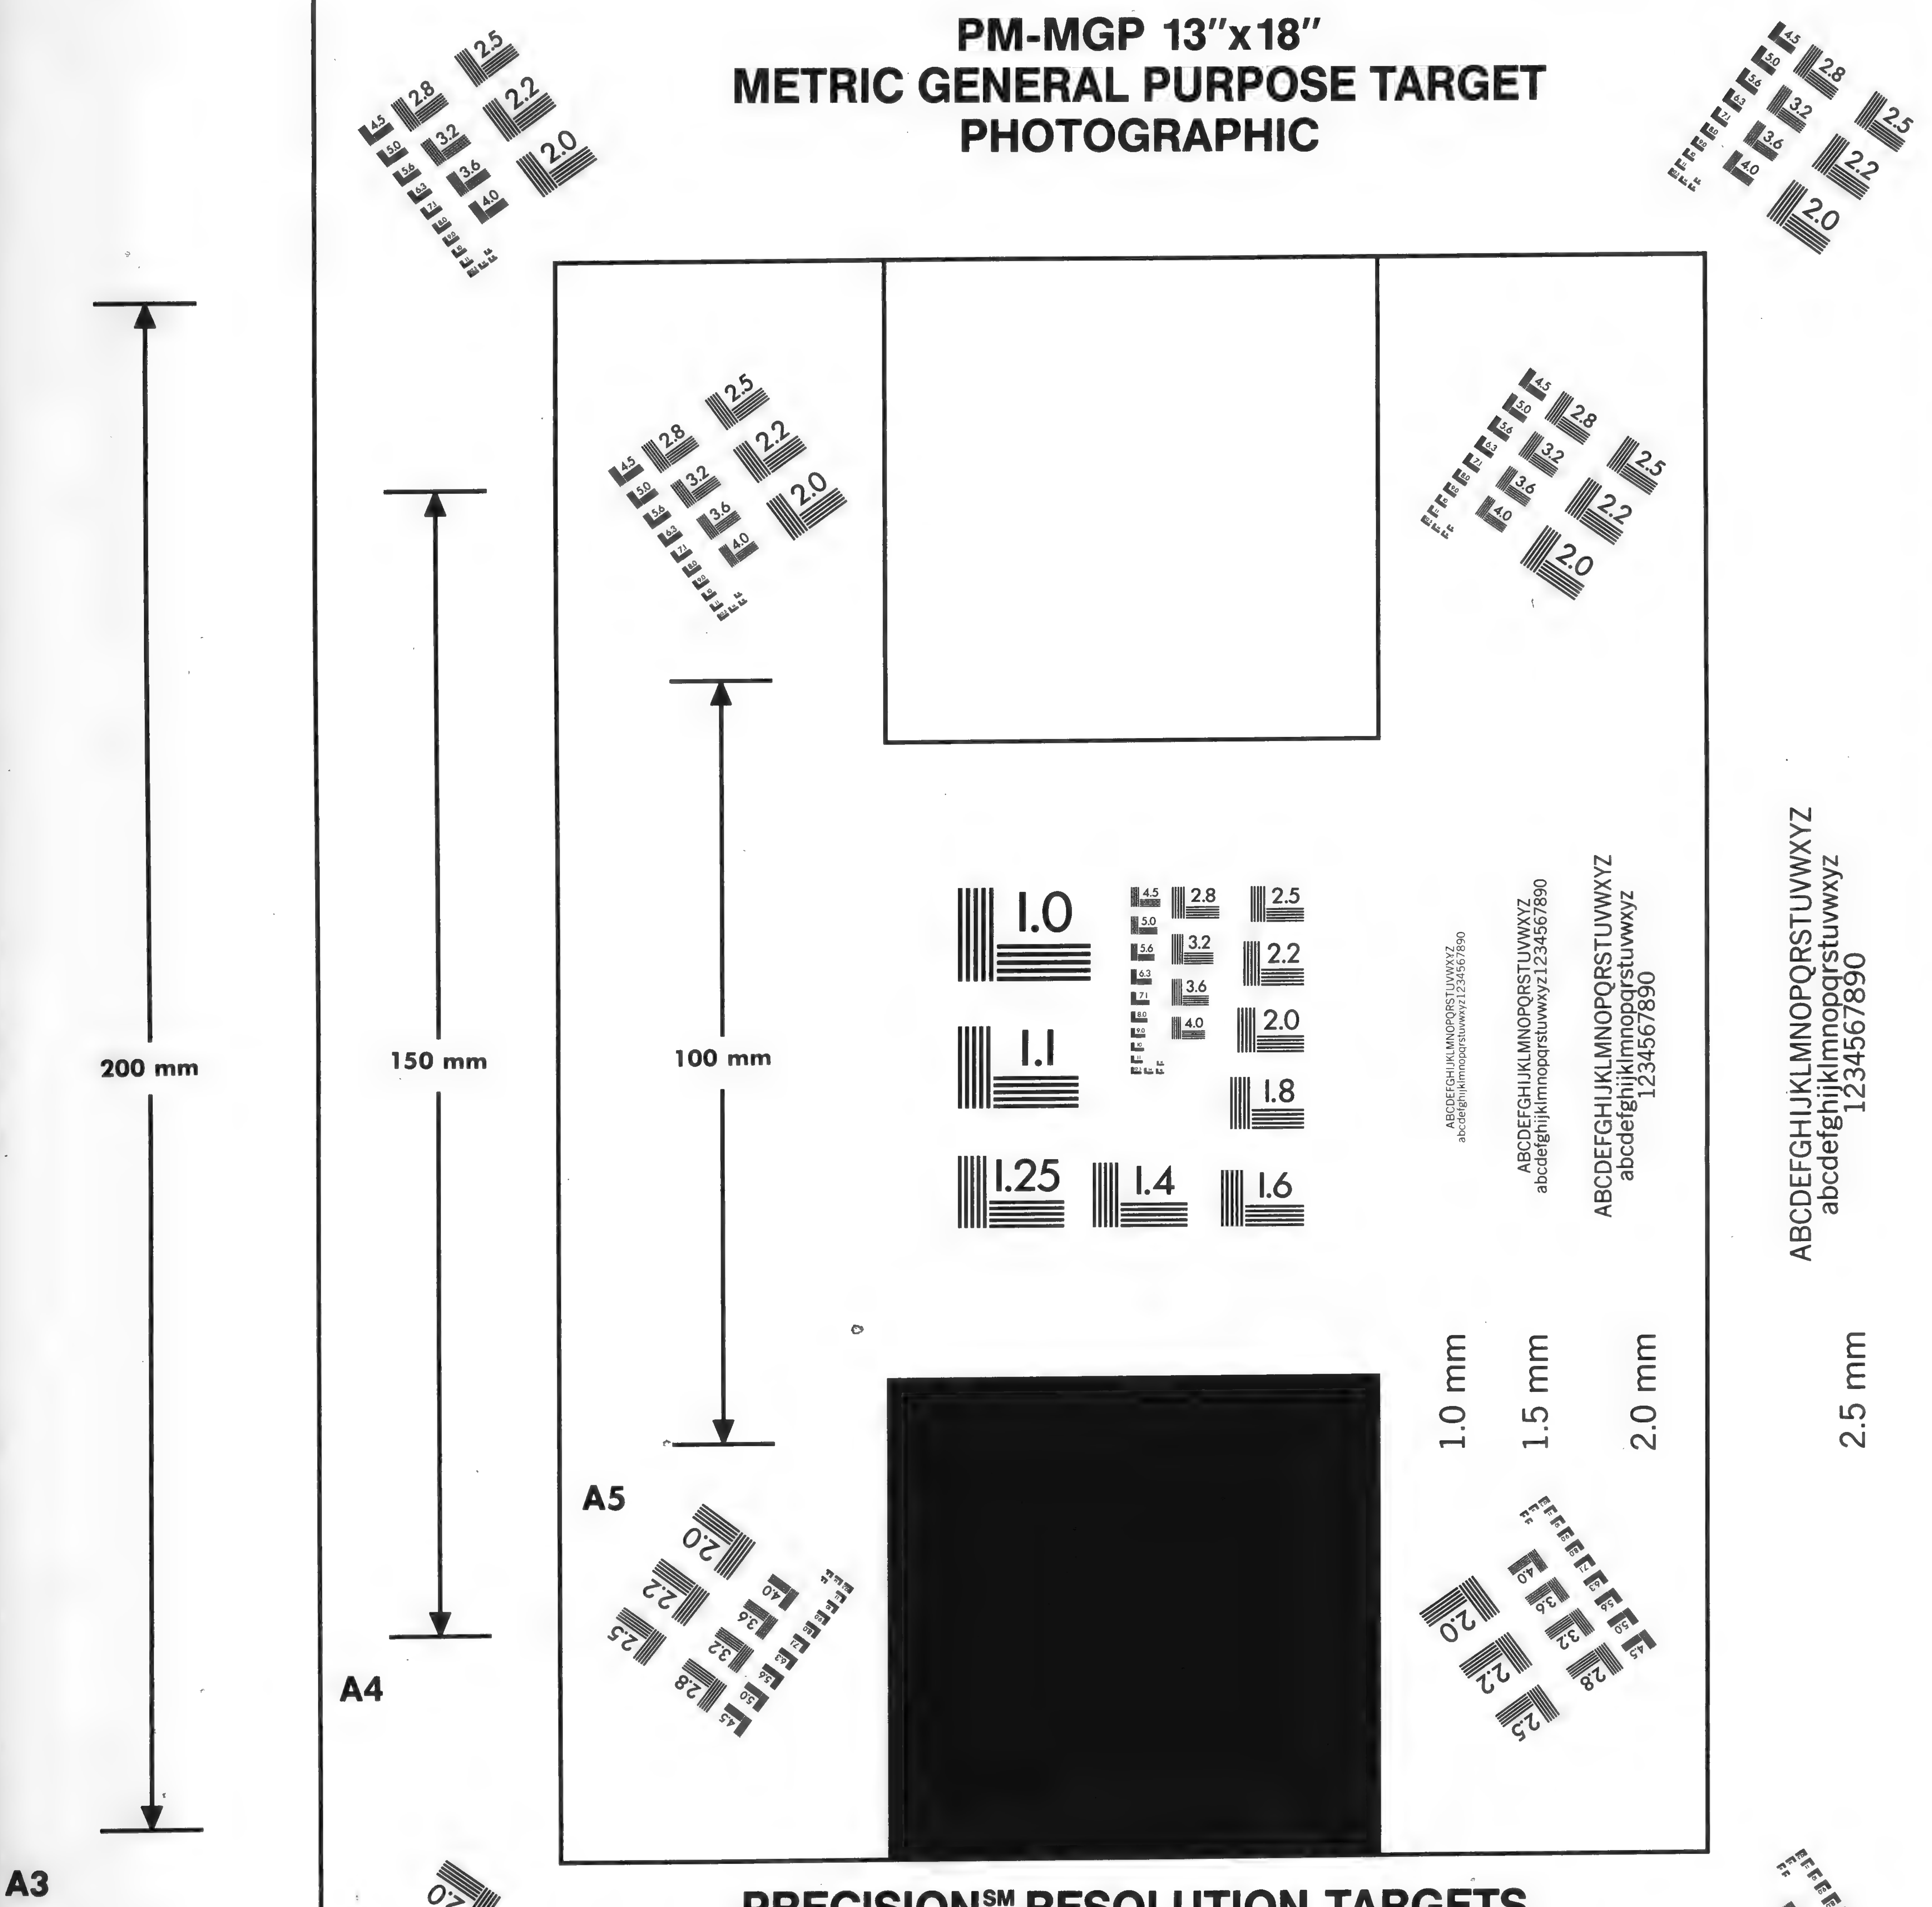
Miss Mildred Stone, sister-in-law of Rudolph Polk, violinist, whose engagement has been announced to Mischa Elman, famous violinist. Mr. Elman has for some time been reported as looking for the "ideal girl" and his engagement has been repeatedly denied. Miss Stone hails from New York city, where Mr. Elman has his residence. (P. & A. photo.)

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
3.6
4.0
2.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
9.0
200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
A5
A4
A3

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

Amer

SYMPHONY

10/16

Both sides of Symphony Hall were lined with people who stood throughout a long recital yesterday afternoon for the privilege of listening to one of the most popular musicians who comes to Boston just as often as the musical season comes around. Few artists share with Mischa Elman the ability to crowd that auditorium beyond its seating capacity.

His program opened with the Handel Sonata in D major followed by the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach Chaconne, which was unaccompanied; the Korngold incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing"; the Chopin-Wilhelmj Nocturne and the Sarasate "Jota."

A very decided factor in the success of Mr. Elman's recital was the playing of Josef Bonime, his accompanist, who is so far out of the ordinary that his work will be remembered with pleasure for a long time. It is rare indeed that one hears such perfect accord as he unfailingly gave the violinist.

The Korngold music was picturesque and interesting and the audience liked it immensely, but it was in the Chopin Nocturne that Mr. Elman's finest bits of interpretation and tone color were revealed.

American Oct 16

Enthusiasm

Herald — Oct 16

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave a recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Josef Bonime, pianist. He was greeted by an audience which filled the hall. His first number was Handel's Sonata in D major. Other numbers on the program were: Concerto No. 5, in A major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," work 2, Korngold, including "Maid in Bridal Array," "Grotesque Funeral March," "Garden Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Nocturne," Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota," Sarasate.

Mr. Elman was in excellent mood to respond readily to the enthusiasm with which the audience greeted him and his playing of each selection was such as to warrant the hearty applause accorded him. He played with the superb mastery of tone and ease of technique that places him among the foremost of modern violinists. There was tenderness and passion and abandon as well as the tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

Herald Oct 16

---

To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Trans Oct 16

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much

---

Post Oct 15

Mischa Elman to Open Season's Concerts

After an absence of two seasons, the great Russian violinist returns to America, and, if all is well, Symphony Hall will once more resound to his vigorous strains and marvellous technique. Famous today the world over at 31, he won his first laurels at the age of 5. He is shown here at the age of about 20, with his sisters, at home.

When the Photographers First Began to Hound Him

At the age of 13 Mischa Elman made his first tour of Europe, where he was acclaimed as a prodigy. His American debut was made in 1908 with the Russian Symphony Orchestra in New York, since which time he has toured America seven seasons. His home now is in London, but this photograph was taken in his Russian home. His father and mother are seen at either end of the table, and his three sisters in between.

Amer

SYMPHONY

10/16

Both sides of Symphony Hall were lined with people who stood throughout a long recital yesterday afternoon for the privilege of listening to one of the most popular musicians who comes to Boston just as often as the musical season comes around. Few artists share with Mischa Elman the ability to crowd that auditorium beyond its seating capacity.

His program opened with the Handel Sonata in D major followed by the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach Chaconne, which was unaccompanied; the Korngold incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing"; the Chopin-Wilhelmj Nocturne and the Sarasate "Jota."

A very decided factor in the success of Mr. Elman's recital was the playing of Josef Bonime, his accompanist, who is so far out of the ordinary that his work will be remembered with pleasure for a long time. It is rare indeed that one hears such perfect accord as he unfailingly gave the violinist.

The Korngold music was picturesque and interesting and the audience liked it immensely, but it was in the Chopin Nocturne that Mr. Elman's finest bits of interpretation and tone color were revealed.

American Oct 16

Enthusiasm

Herald — Oct 16

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave a recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Josef Bonime, pianist. He was greeted by an audience which filled the hall. His first number was Handel's Sonata in D major. Other numbers on the program were: Concerto No. 5, in A major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," work 2, Korngold, including "Maid in Bridal Array," "Grotesque Funeral March," "Garden Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Nocturne," Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota," Sarasate.

Mr. Elman was in excellent mood to respond readily to the enthusiasm with which the audience greeted him and his playing of each selection was such as to warrant the hearty applause accorded him. He played with the superb mastery of tone and ease of technique that places him among the foremost of modern violinists. There was tenderness and passion and abandon as well as the tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them, He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

Herald Oct 16

---

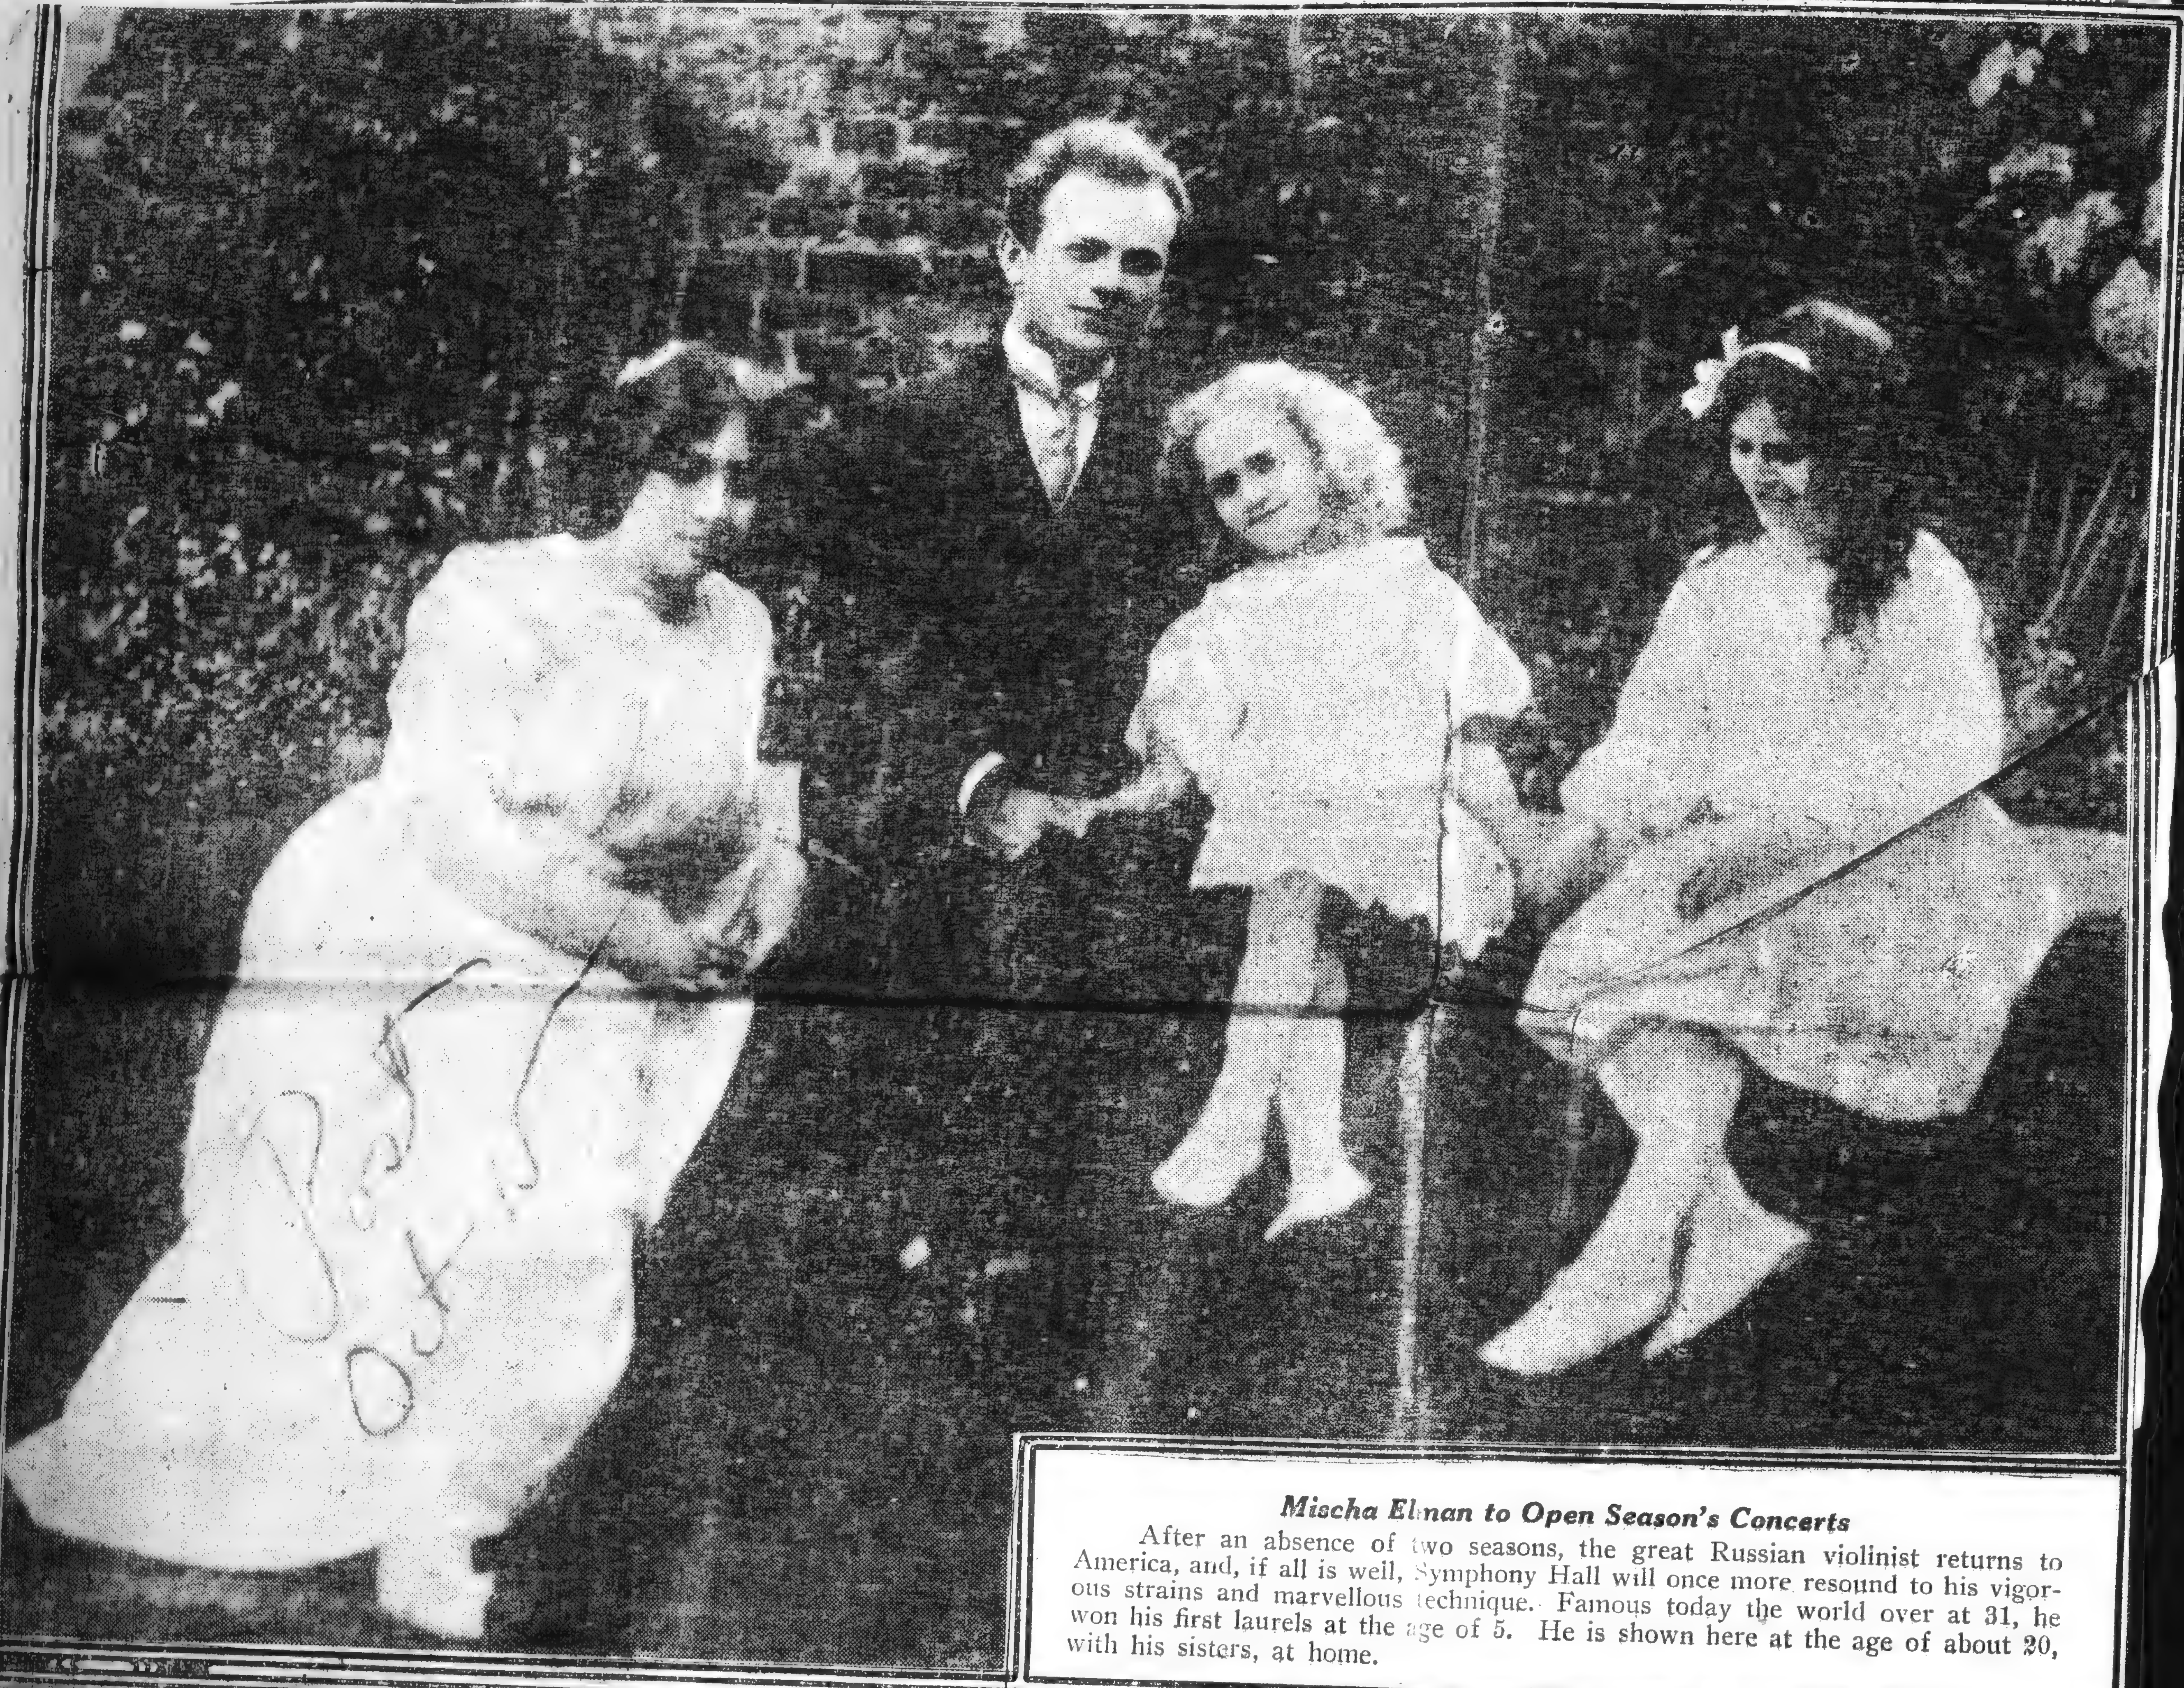
To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Trans Oct 16

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna

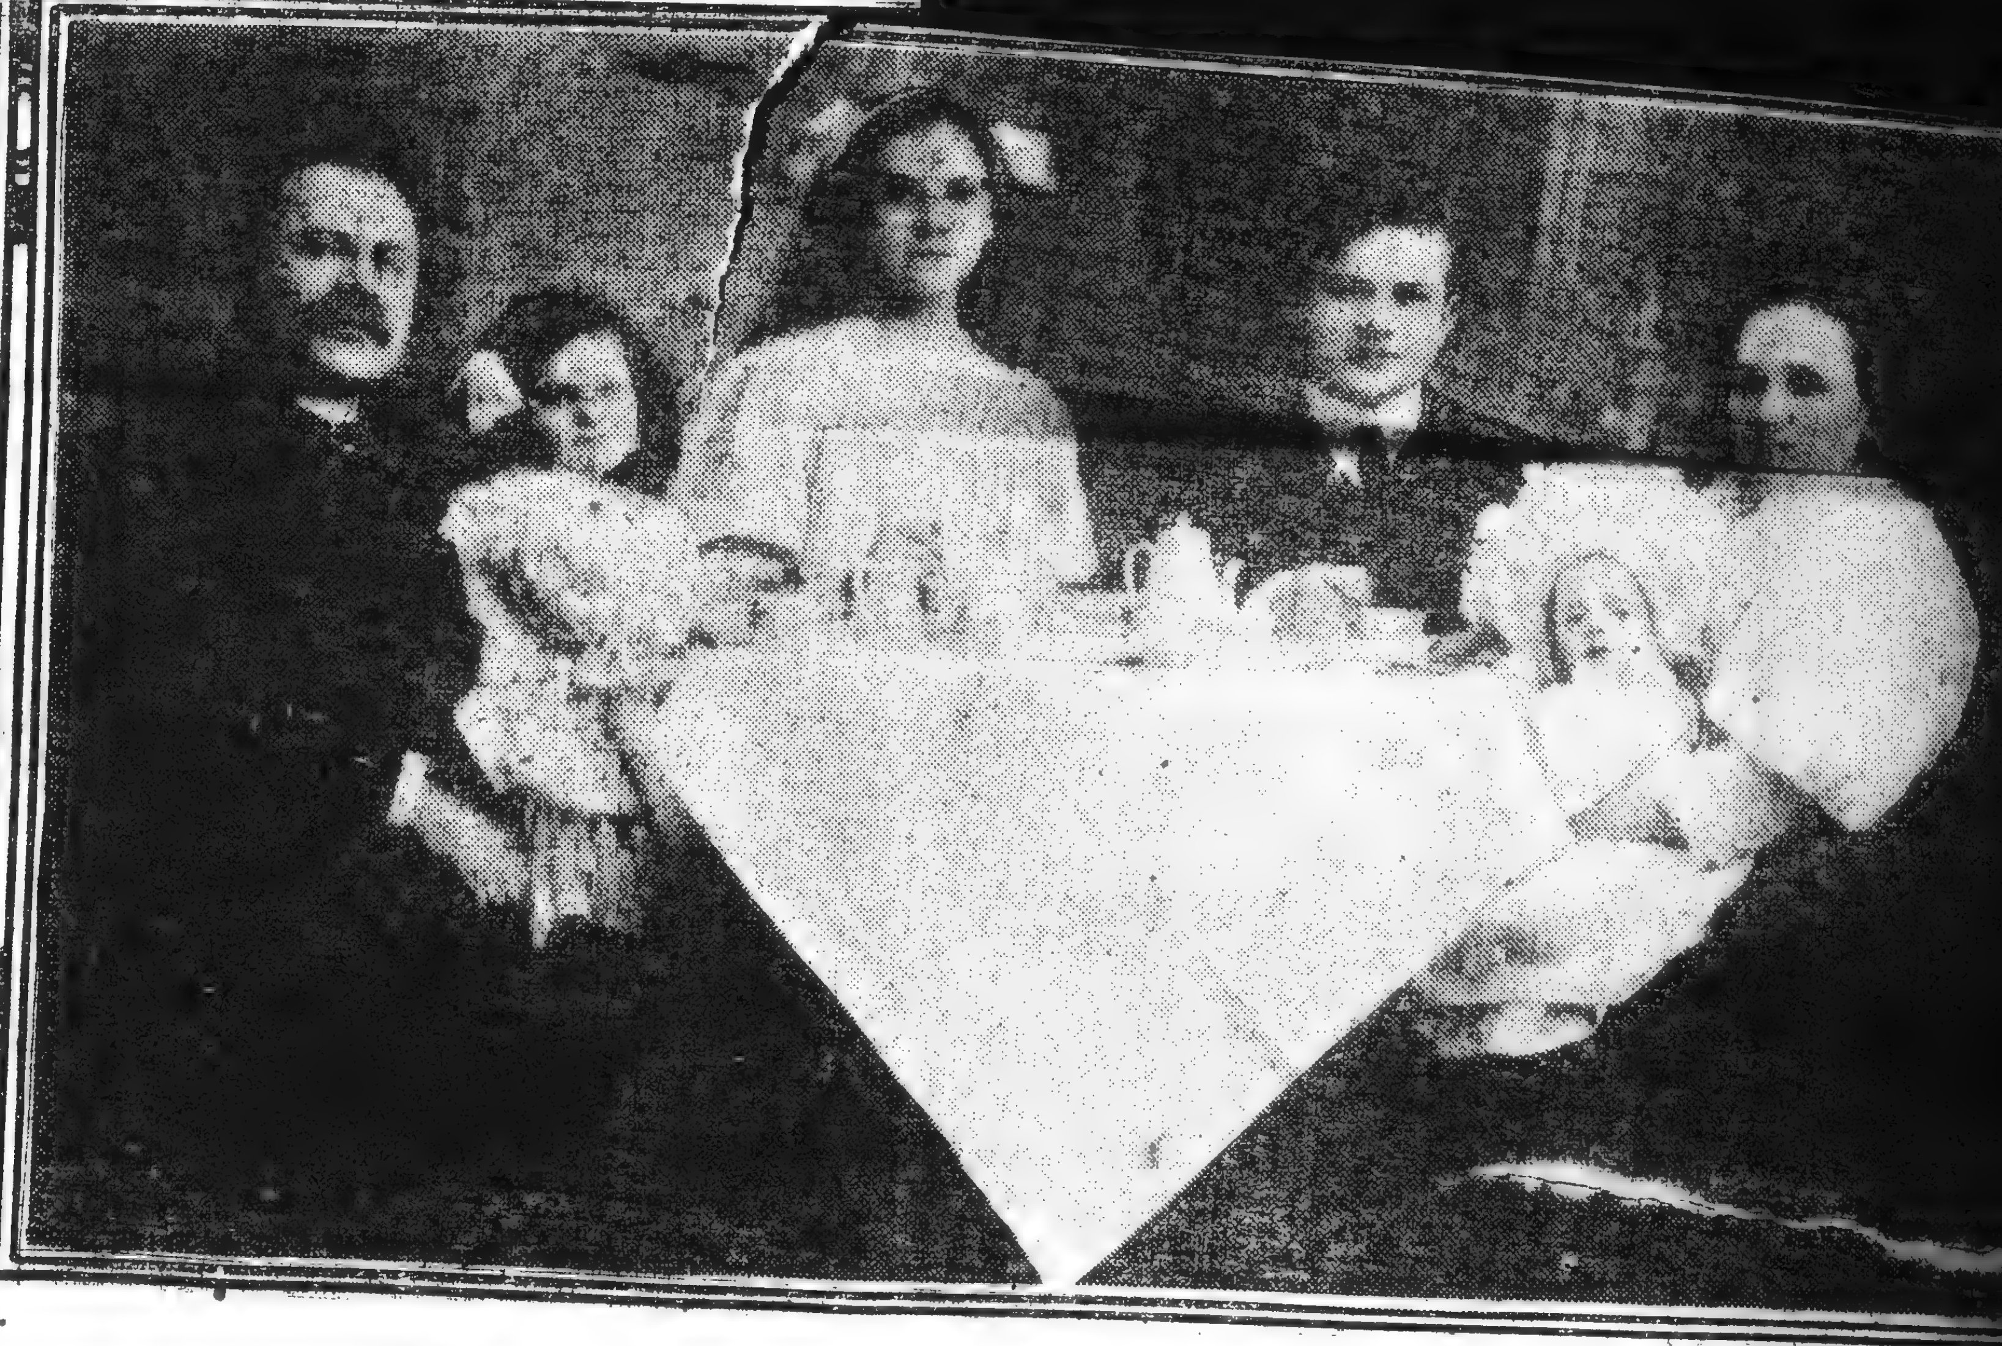
---



Post Oct 16

Mischa Elman to Open Season's Concerts

After an absence of two seasons, the great Russian violinist returns to America, and, if all is well, Symphony Hall will once more resound to his vigorous strains and marvellous technique. Famous today the world over at 31, he won his first laurels at the age of 5. He is shown here at the age of about 20, with his sisters, at home.



When the Photographers First Began to Hound Him

At the age of 13 Mischa Elman made his first tour of Europe, where he was acclaimed as a prodigy. His American debut was made in 1908 with the Russian Symphony Orchestra in New York, since which time he has toured America seven seasons. His home now is in London, but this photograph was taken in his Russian home. His father and mother are seen at either end of the table, and his three sisters in between.

Amer 10/16

SYMPHONY

Both sides of Symphony Hall were lined with people who stood throughout a long recital yesterday afternoon for the privilege of listening to one of the most popular musicians who comes to Boston just as often as the musical season comes around. Few artists share with Mischa Elman the ability to crowd that auditorium beyond its seating capacity.

His program opened with the Handel Sonata in D major followed by the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach Chaconne, which was unaccompanied; the Korngold incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing"; the Chopin-Wilhelmj Nocturne and the Sarasate "Jota."

A very decided factor in the success of Mr. Elman's recital was the playing of Josef Bonime, his accompanist, who is so far out of the ordinary that his work will be remembered with pleasure for a long time. It is rare indeed that one hears such perfect accord as he unfailingly gave the violinist.

The Korngold music was picturesque and interesting and the audience liked it immensely, but it was in the Chopin Nocturne that Mr. Elman's finest bits of interpretation and tone color were revealed.

American Oct 16

Enthusiasm

Herald — Oct 16

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave a recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Josef Bonime, pianist. He was greeted by an audience which filled the hall. His first number was Handel's Sonata in D major. Other numbers on the program were: Concerto No. 5, in A major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," work 2, Korngold, including "Maid in Bridal Array," "Grotesque Funeral March," "Garden Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Nocturne," Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota," Sarasate.

Mr. Elman was in excellent mood to respond readily to the enthusiasm with which the audience greeted him and his playing of each selection was such as to warrant the hearty applause accorded him. He played with the superb mastery of tone and ease of technique that places him among the foremost of modern violinists. There was tenderness and passion and abandon as well as the study; more he gave to a European tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

Herald Oct 16

---

To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Trans Oct 16

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much

---

Post Oct 15

Mischa Elman to Open Season's Concerts

After an absence of two seasons, the great Russian violinist returns to America, and, if all is well, Symphony Hall will once more resound to his vigorous strains and marvellous technique. Famous today the world over at 31, he

When the Photographers First Began to Hound Him

At the age of 13 Mischa Elman made his first tour of Europe, where he was acclaimed as a prodigy. His American debut was made in 1908 with the Russian Symphony Orchestra in New York, since which time he has toured America seven seasons. His home now is in London, but this photograph was taken in his Russian home. His father and mother are seen at either end of the table, and his three sisters in between.

Elman, the "Child Prodigy" 20 Years Ago, With His Father

It was about this time, when Mischa Elman was 10 or 11, that he sold some of his clothes to buy a rail ticket from Odessa, his Russian home, to Elizabethgrad, where Leopold Auer was giving a violin concert. A says of this incident: "After the performance a little boy, rather poorly clad, approached me and asked for privilege of playing for me. He played a few selections, and I quickly recognized him as a youthful prodigy!"

Amer 10/16

SYMPHONY

Both sides of Symphony Hall were lined with people who stood throughout a long recital yesterday afternoon for the privilege of listening to one of the most popular musicians who comes to Boston just as often as the musical season comes around. Few artists share with Mischa Elman the ability to crowd that auditorium beyond its seating capacity.

His program opened with the Handel Sonata in D major followed by the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach Chaconne, which was unaccompanied; the Korngold incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing"; the Chopin-Wilhelmj Nocturne and the Sarasate "Jota."

A very decided factor in the success of Mr. Elman's recital was the playing of Josef Bonime, his accompanist, who is so far out of the ordinary that his work will be remembered with pleasure for a long time. It is rare indeed that one hears such perfect accord as he unfailingly gave the violinist.

The Korngold music was picturesque and interesting and the audience liked it immensely, but it was in the Chopin Nocturne that Mr. Elman's finest bits of interpretation and tone color were revealed.

American Oct 16

Enthusiasm

Herald Oct 16

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave a recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Josef Bonime, pianist. He was greeted by an audience which filled the hall. His first number was Handel's Sonata in D major. Other numbers on the program were: Concerto No. 5, in A major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," work 2, Korngold, including "Maid in Bridal Array," "Grotesque Funeral March," "Garden Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Nocturne," Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota," Sarasate.

Mr. Elman was in excellent mood to respond readily to the enthusiasm with which the audience greeted him and his playing of each selection was such as to warrant the hearty applause accorded him. He played with the superb mastery of tone and ease of technique that places him among the foremost of modern violinists. There was tenderness and passion and abandon as well as the ening study; more he gave to a European tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

Herald Oct 16

---

To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Trans Oct 16

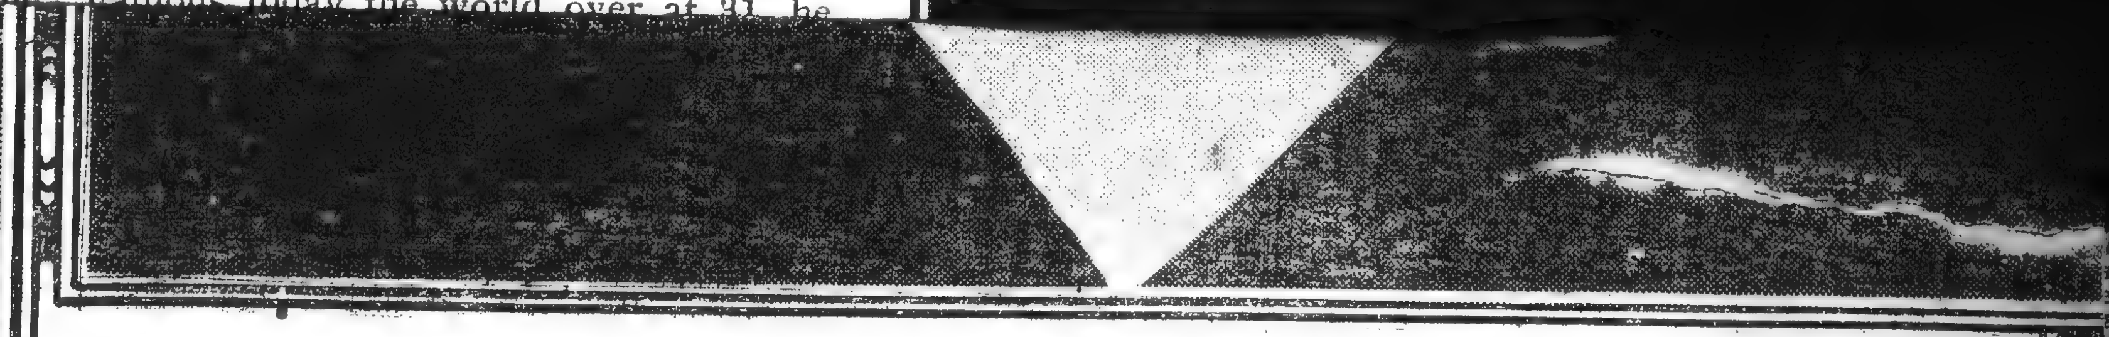
Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much

---

Post Oct 15

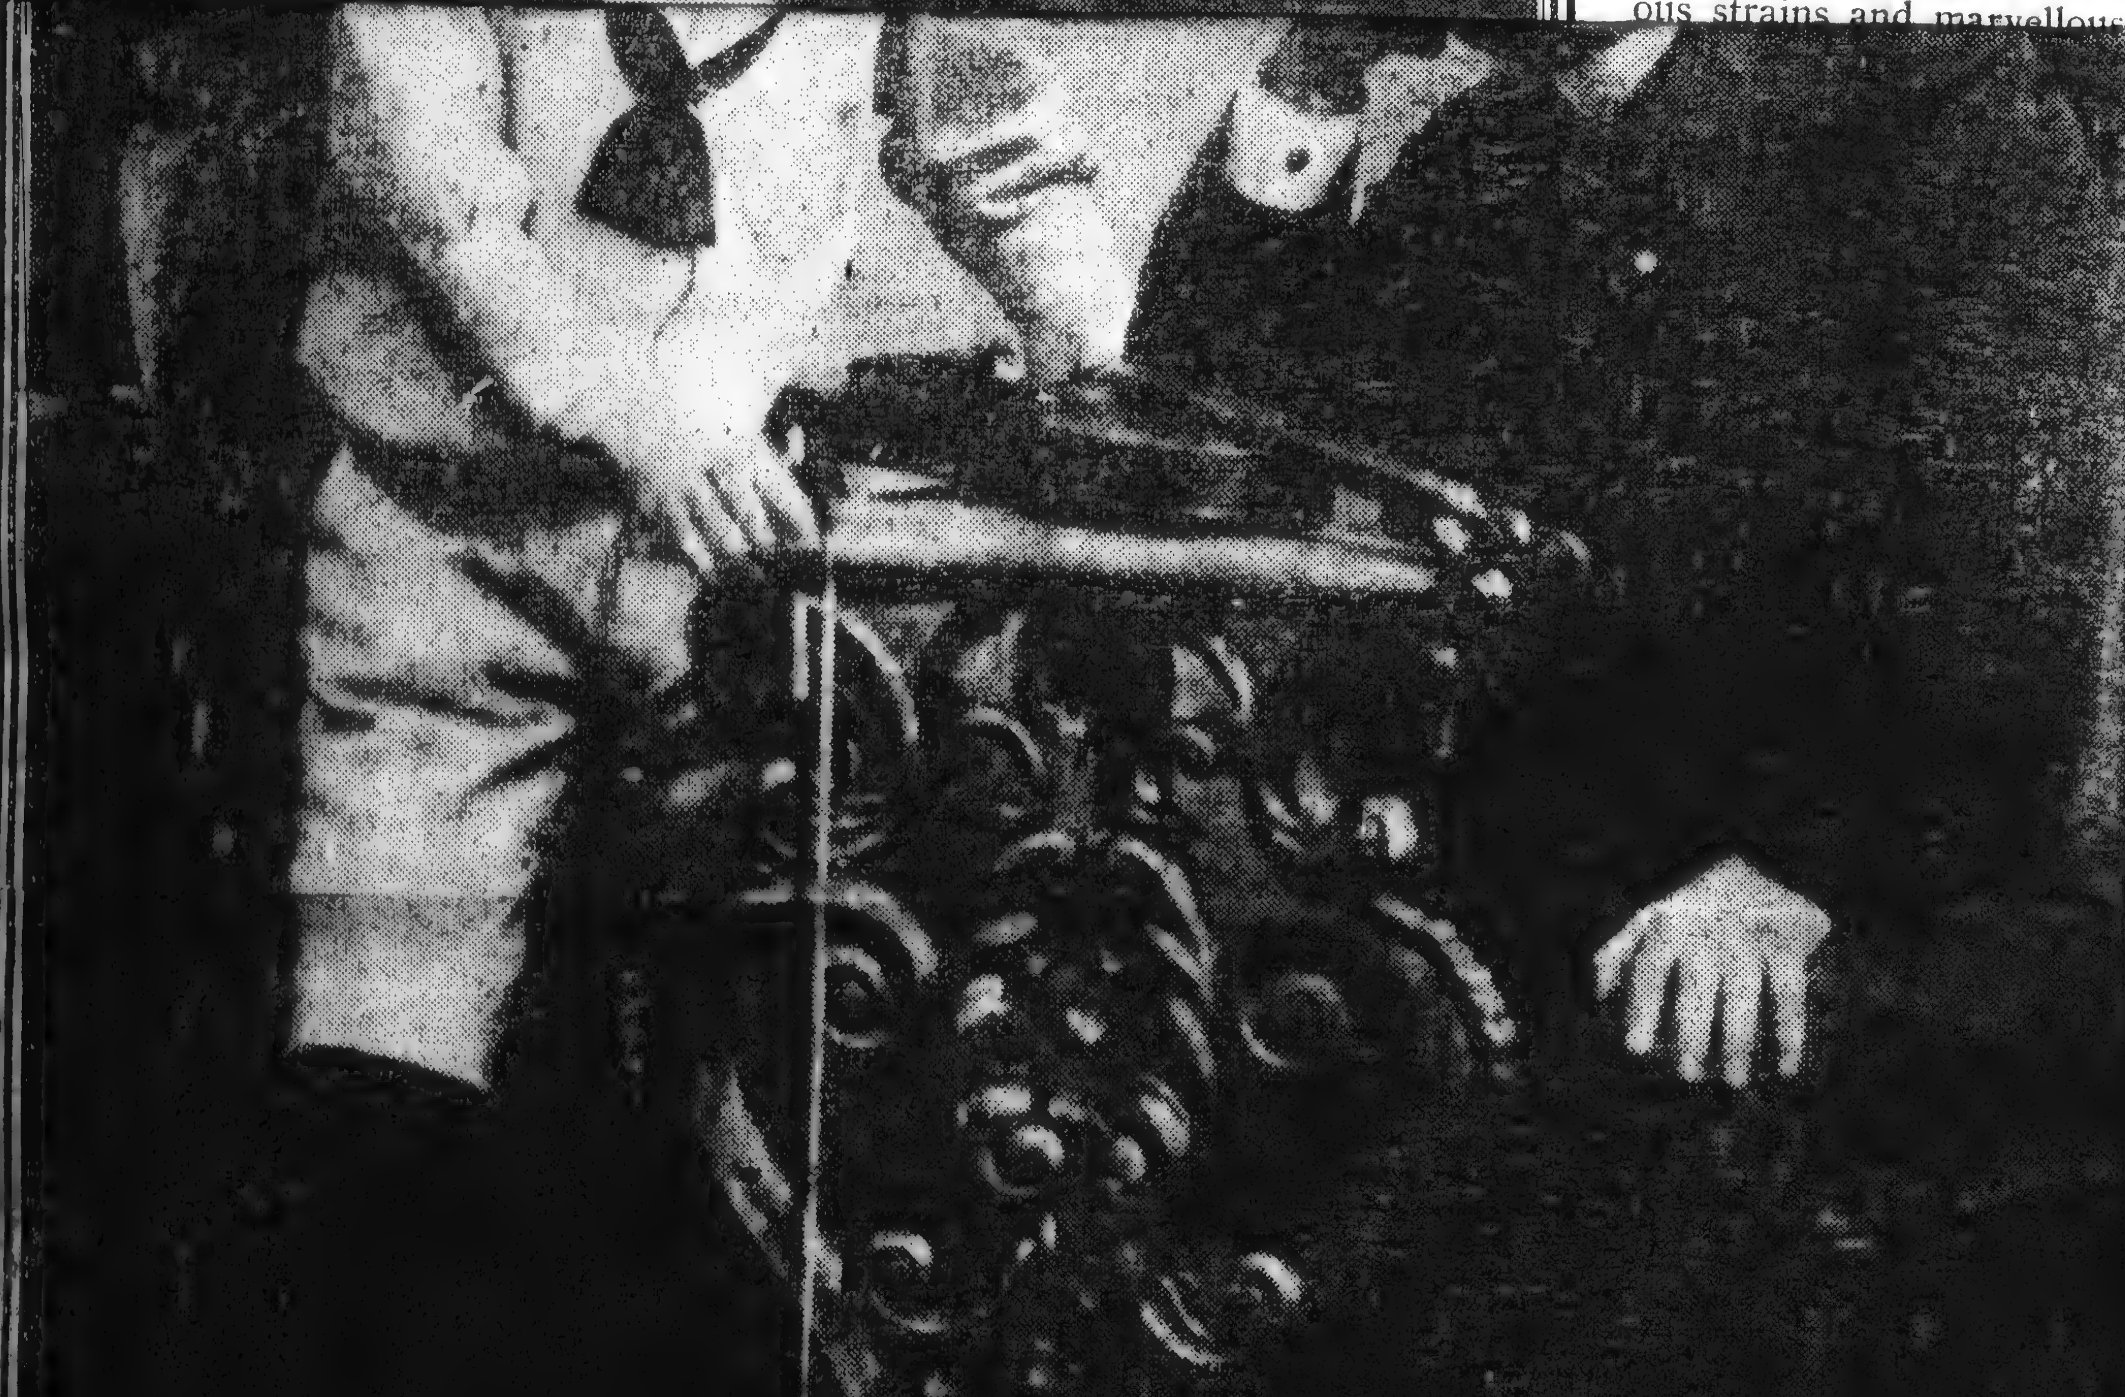
Mischa Elman to Open Season's Concerts

After an absence of two seasons, the great Russian violinist returns to America, and, if all is well, Symphony Hall will once more resound to his vigorous strains and marvellous technique. Famous today the world over at 31, he



When the Photographers First Began to Hound Him

At the age of 13 Mischa Elman made his first tour of Europe, where he was acclaimed as a prodigy. His American debut was made in 1908 with the Russian Symphony Orchestra in New York, since which time he has toured America seven seasons. His home now is in London, but this photograph was taken in his Russian home. His father and mother are seen at either end of the table, and his three sisters in between.



Elman, the "Child Prodigy" 20 Years Ago, With His Father

It was about this time, when Mischa Elman was 10 or 11, that he sold some of his clothes to buy a rail ticket from Odessa, his Russian home, to Elizabethgrad, where Leopold Auer was giving a violin concert. A says of this incident: "After the performance a little boy, rather poorly clad, approached me and asked for privilege of playing for me. He played a few selections, and I quickly recognized him as a youthful prodigy!"

Amer 10/16

SYMPHONY

Both sides of Symphony Hall were lined with people who stood throughout a long recital yesterday afternoon for the privilege of listening to one of the most popular musicians who comes to Boston just as often as the musical season comes around. Few artists share with Mischa Elman the ability to crowd that auditorium beyond its seating capacity.

His program opened with the Handel Sonata in D major followed by the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach Chaconne, which was unaccompanied; the Korngold incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing"; the Chopin-Wilhelmj Nocturne and the Sarasate "Jota."

A very decided factor in the success of Mr. Elman's recital was the playing of Josef Bonime, his accompanist; who is so far out of the ordinary that his work will be remembered with pleasure for a long time. It is rare indeed that one hears such

---

Enthusiasm

Herald — Oct 16

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave a recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Josef Bonime, pianist. He was greeted by an audience which filled the hall. His first number was Handel's Sonata in D major. Other numbers on the program were: Concerto No. 5, in A major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," work 2, Korngold, including "Maid in Bridal Array," "Grotesque Funeral March," "Garden Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Nocturne," Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota," Sarasate.

Mr. Elman was in excellent mood to respond readily to the enthusiasm with which the audience greeted him and his playing of each selection was such as to warrant the hearty applause accorded him. He played with the superb mastery of tone and ease of technique that places him among the foremost of modern violinists. There was tenderness and passion and abandon as well as the ening study; more he gave to a European tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

Herald Oct. 16

---

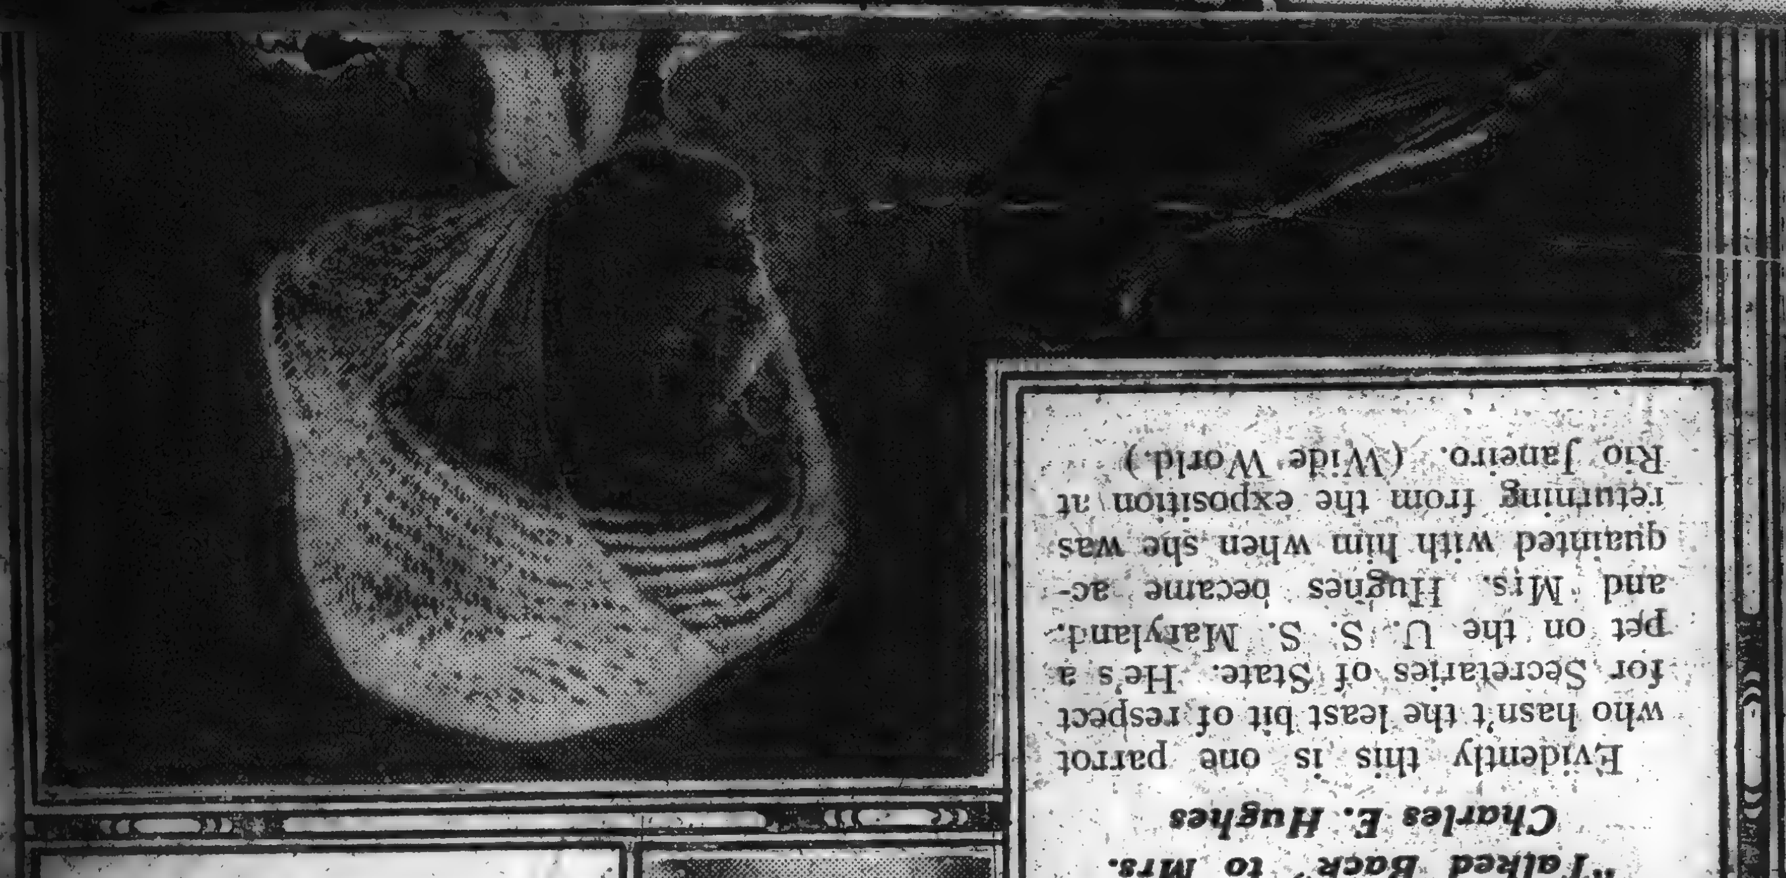
To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Trans Oct 16

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much Ado about Nothing," when that comedy of Shakspeare was lately revived at the Residenz Theatre in Munich. (A "cubistic" revival deriding English-speaking folk labelled it). Mr. Kreisler first played the four numbers here, near two years ago. By the token of yesterday, they please another violinist also. The "Grotesque Funeral March" has discoverable, if mild, tonal humors, not for a moment comparable with a similar mocking piano-piece by Lord Berners. The final "Hornpipe" does not lack homely savor in running rhythms. The "Garden Scene," like such episodes in the play, both beautifies and bites. The "Bridal Piece" at the beginning barely escapes commonplace. All four, it is easy to hear, are also music to tempt a violinist's ranging skill, so deployed and contrasted. Finally, a Nocturne of Chopin as Wilhelmj re-spun and muted it for the violin and a Spanish dance—this time a Jota—of Sarasate. Few better than him have made tone-poems in little of these exercises in virtuosity, kept the pungency of the original dance through all the sauces of display.

Händel gave Mr. Elman two melodies to sing—one of exhaling grace in fineness of ascendant line; the other unfolding more amply, gathering, as it moved, a larger beauty. He played both in a tone as limpid, unbroken, serene and poised as is the music itself. Yet within was the sentiment that gave life to an abstract loveliness and the sensibility that for the instant, by some fine shading or light inflection, made it warm and pulsing. Händel also proffered the violinist two Allegros of running figures; Mr. Elman caught them from the composer's hand; gave them the mingled verve and evenness that composer cheerfully left to violinist, rounded them with the big-wigged Händelian flourish. With the Chaconne of Bach Mr. Elman shone in a reticence that was ripened wisdom. He did not try to make the music sound as though a full choir of violins, divided and sub-divided, were playing it. He did not obtrude a violin making its own bass, as though that were a grateful process to twentieth-century ears. He did not etch out the counterpoint as do some violinists, mistaking themselves for map-makers of music. No more did he drive forward the Chaconne with a persistent magniloquence, as though Bach must be always in the pulpit. Rather, this Bach was weaving an intricate pattern for the violin, finding and giving pleasure

---



"Talked Back" to Mrs. Charles E. Hughes

Evidently this is one parrot who hasn't the least bit of respect for Secretaries of State. He's a pet on the U. S. S. Maryland, and Mrs. Hughes became acquainted with him when she was returning from the exposition at Rio Janeiro. (Wide World.)

A Lionized Baby

All Washington's fond of this li'l feller, a late arrival at the National Zoo—particularly Mlle. Antonine Goodrich, a pretty visitor to the American capital, who hails from Montreal, Canada. (Wide World.)

Post Oct 15

MISCHA ELMAN SAW "DREAM GIRL" IN LOUVRE---MET HER

Famous Violinist a Determined Bachelor---Resisted 68 of London's Prettiest Blondes---and Fell Before A

On the walls of the Louvre Mischa Elman says he first gazed upon the face of his "ideal girl."

She was "The Girl With the Broken Pitcher," a wonderful painting by Jean Baptiste Greuze.

She had a "baby-doll stare" and blonde hair.

Now he has met another girl—this time a flesh and blood ideal girl—and he is so sure of it that he is going to marry her.

But she's a brunette and is lots different from the other one.

BY RUTH SNYDER

Six months ago, Mischa Elman, the violin virtuoso, declared that he was tired of being a bachelor. He was 31 and it was about time he got married. So straightway he sat down and told the world the ideal type of girl he was looking for.

He was in England at the time, playing at Queen's Hall, London. Immediately he was swamped with letters, telegrams and requests for interviews.

Sixty-eight blonde young English misses, who fondly imagined they resembled his ideal, besieged him with offers of marriage.

Then he came back to America, and Cupid, with his tricky bow and arrow, immediately set about to erase the IDEA from IDEAL and add OVE to the last letter.

Love Conquers

Love rules and Mischa Elman has announced his engagement to Miss Mildred Stone of New York.

Does she measure up to the ideal he set for himself 18 years ago?

Mischa Elman has been a great violinist ever since he was 13 years old. Even at 5 he exhibited marvellous talent. When he made his debut at St. Petersburg in 1904 he created quite a furore. His first appearance in New York was in 1908, when he made his triumphant appearance with the Russian Symphony Orchestra.

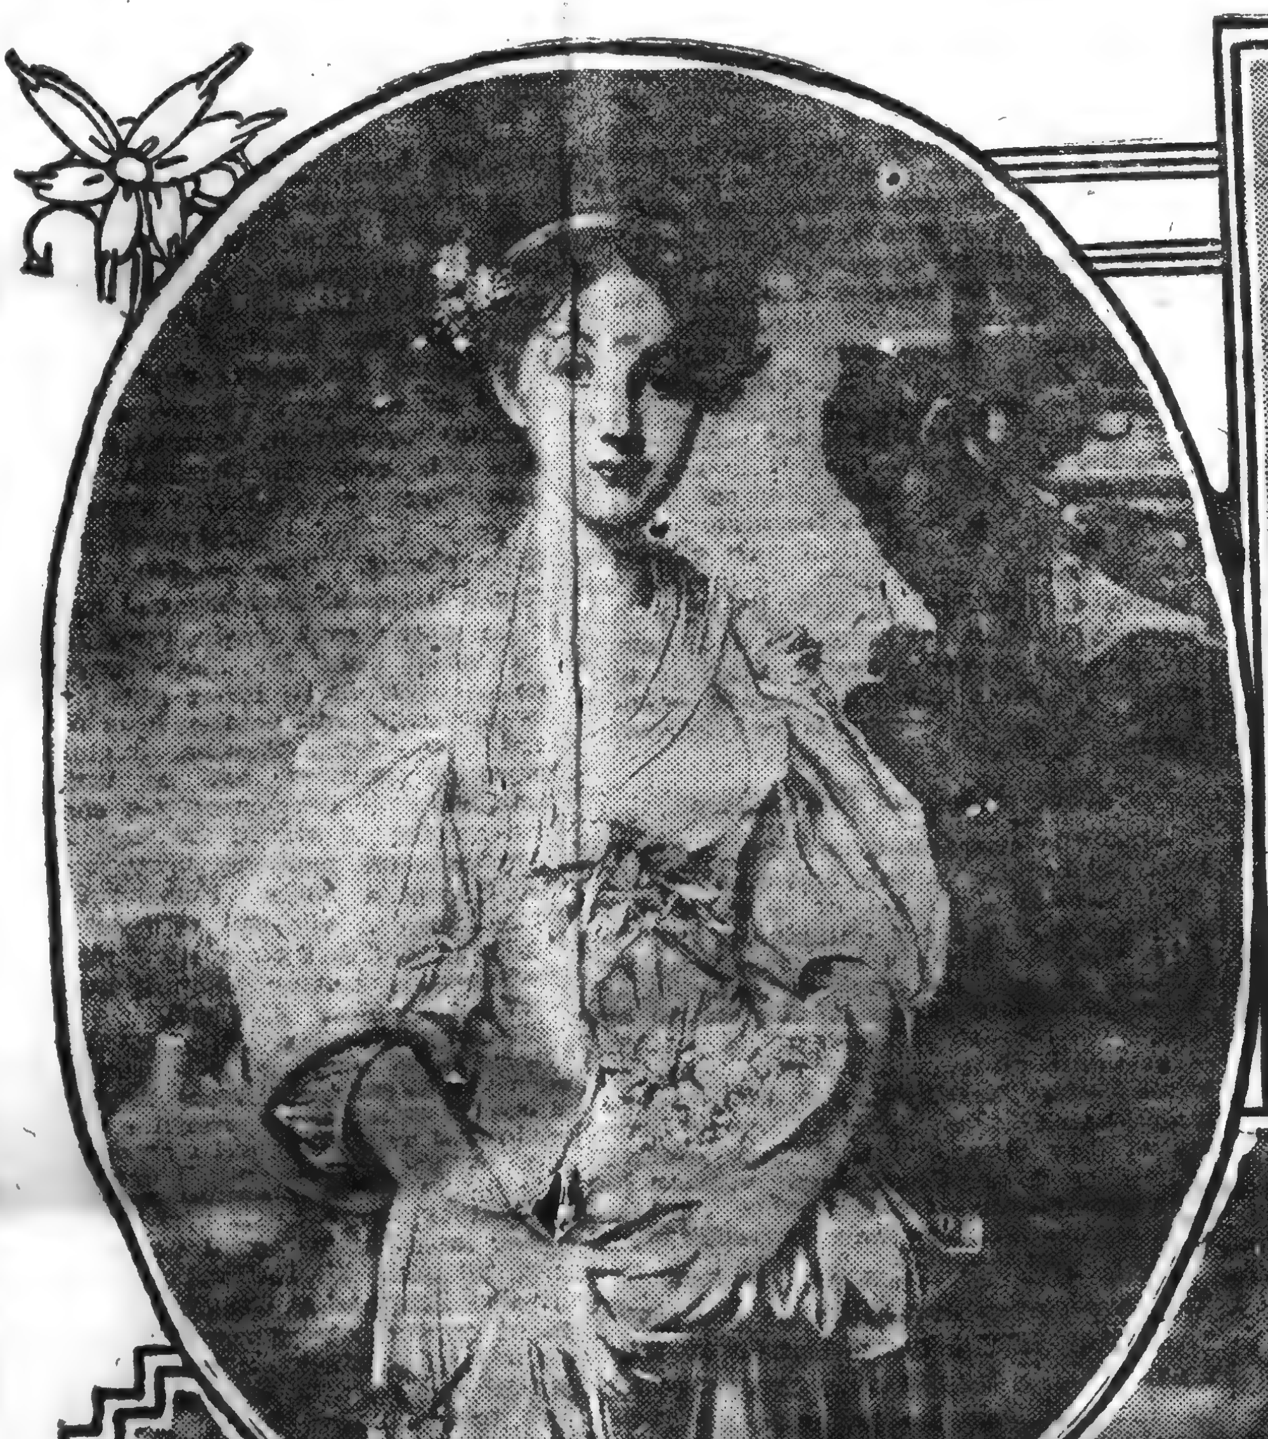
But ever since 1904 he has kept a picture of his ideal girl before him. Eighteen years of worship at the shrine of an ideal.

And this ideal is represented in a picture—in pictures. His ideal girl is the girl who posed for the famous paintings of Jeans Baptiste Greuze—"The Broken Jug," "The Girl With Lamb," "The Sisters," etc.

Mischa Elman, himself, revealed the secret of the strange fascination this picture has for him. Bear in mind, this was only last April.

Has Boyhood Romance

"It is based on a boyhood sentiment," he said at that time. "When I first went to England, 17 years ago, I met an English girl with whom I fell in love. She measured up to all the requirements of an artist's bride, but because we were both too young—indeed we were little more than children—and because I had vowed to my father to remain unmarried for 20 years—the re-



Here is Mischa Elman's fiancee, Mildred Stone. A girl who is in direct contrast to Mischa's avowed ideal, a pronounced brunette, instead of the blonde girl of his dreams. (International photo.)

torian type of the entirely feminine ideal. The woman who posed for the picture is declared by experts to have the face of a child, a "baby-doll" in modern parlance. It is the face of a girl who is pretty, but deficient in brains, according to art critics.

Madame Greuze, the woman who posed for the paintings, was an inspiration to her husband in his art, but proved to be a very poor housewife.

When Mischa Elman returned to this country the latter part of June, he is declared as saying:

"It is true that the modern woman, with her cigarettes and her make-ups, is rather distasteful to me. I am not used to it, that's all. I was brought up to admire the delicate, incompetent woman of the '90s. Today woman is independently able to take care of herself, but less attractive to the strong, protective longing of the male. Man wishes to be the superior; he wishes to dominate."

And then he went up to Lake Placid

Miss Mildred Stone, sister-in-law of Rudolph Elman, famous violinist. Mr. Elman has for some engagement has been repeatedly denied. Mis ask Mischa that," she modestly declared. "Of course, everyone has his or her ideal. But it is not merely the world and study. He the mother

Amer

SYMPHONY

10/16

Both sides of Symphony Hall were lined with people who stood throughout a long recital yesterday afternoon for the privilege of listening to one of the most popular musicians who comes to Boston just as often as the musical season comes around. Few artists share with Mischa Elman the ability to crowd that auditorium beyond its seating capacity.

His program opened with the Handel Sonata in D major followed by the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach Chaconne, which was unaccompanied; the Korngold incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing"; the Chopin-Wilhelmj Nocturne and the Sarasate "Jota."

A very decided factor in the success of Mr. Elman's recital was the playing of Josef Bonime, his accompanist, who is so far out of the ordinary that his work will be remembered with pleasure for a long time. It is rare indeed that one hears such

---

Enthusiasm

Herald Oct 16

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave a recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Josef Bonime, pianist. He was greeted by an audience which filled the hall. His first number was Handel's Sonata in D major. Other numbers on the program were: Concerto No. 5, in A major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," work 2, Korngold, including "Maid in Bridal Array," "Grotesque Funeral March," "Garden Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Nocturne," Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota," Sarasate.

Mr. Elman was in excellent mood to respond readily to the enthusiasm with which the audience greeted him and his playing of each selection was such as to warrant the hearty applause accorded him. He played with the superb mastery of tone and ease of technique that places him among the foremost of modern violinists. There was tenderness and passion and abandon as well as the ening study; more he gave to a European tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

Herald Oct 16

---

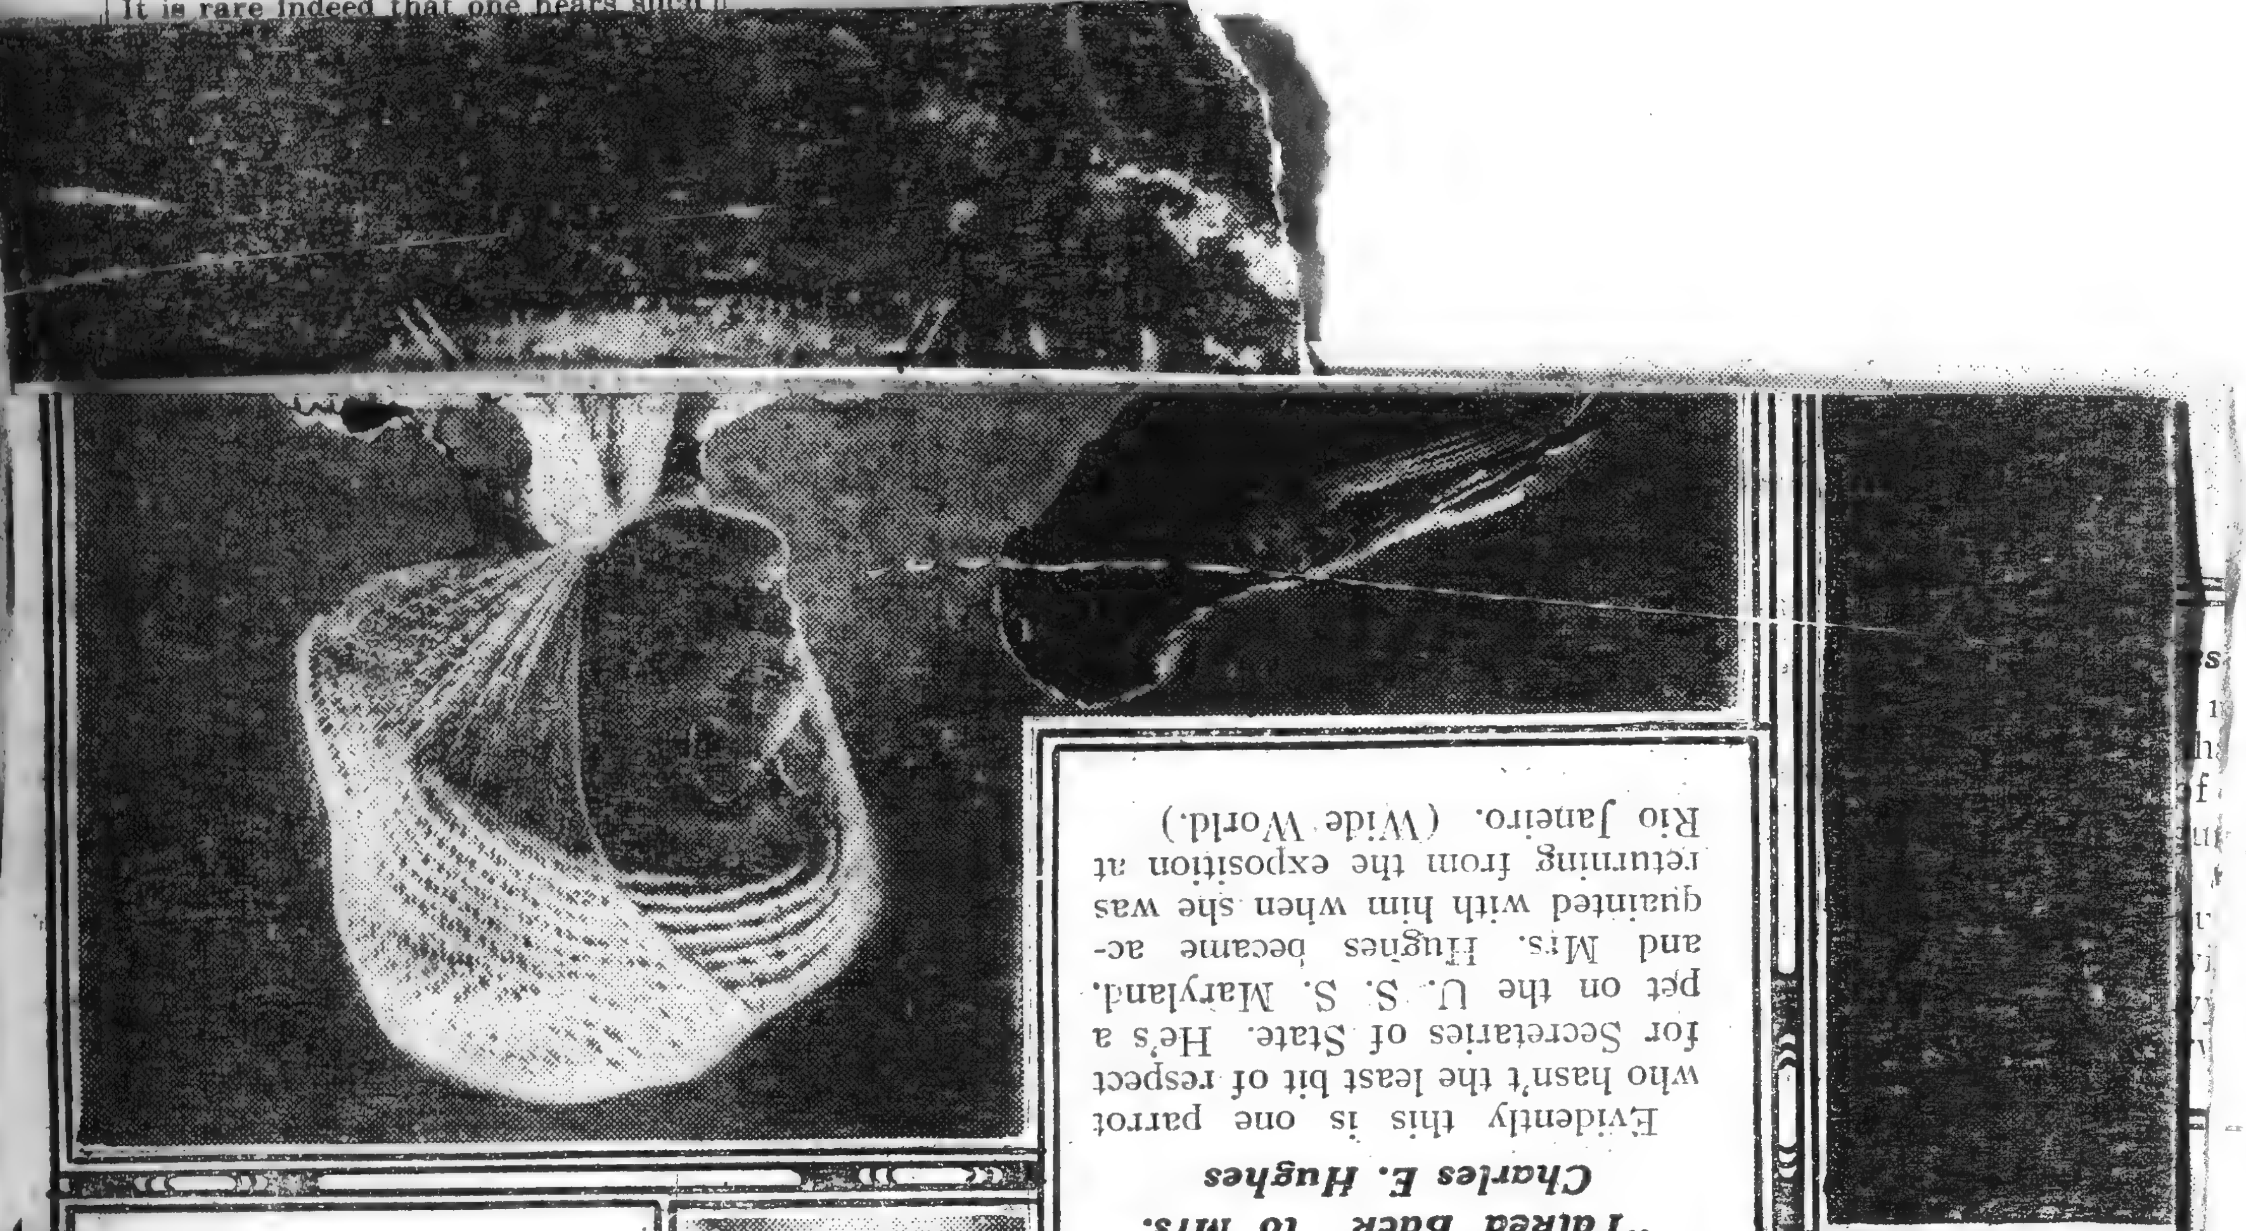
To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Trans Oct 16

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much Ado about Nothing," when that comedy of Shakspeare was lately revived at the Residenz Theatre in Munich. (A "cubistic" revival deriding English-speaking folk labelled it). Mr. Kreisler first played the four numbers here, near two years ago. By the token of yesterday, they please another violinist also. The "Grotesque Funeral March" has discoverable, if mild, tonal humors, not for a moment comparable with a similar mocking piano-piece by Lord Berners. The final "Hornpipe" does not lack homely savor in running rhythms. The "Garden Scene," like such episodes in the play, both beautifies and bites. The "Bridal Piece" at the beginning barely escapes commonplace. All four, it is easy to hear, are also music to tempt a violinist's ranging skill, so deployed and contrasted. Finally, a Nocturne of Chopin as Wilhelmj re-spun and muted it for the violin and a Spanish dance—this time a Jota—of Sarasate. Few better than him have made tone-poems in little of these exercises in virtuosity, kept the pungency of the original dance through all the sauces of display.

Händel gave Mr. Elman two melodies to sing—one of exhaling grace in fineness of ascendant line; the other unfolding more amply, gathering, as it moved, a larger beauty. He played both in a tone as limpid, unbroken, serene and poised as is the music itself. Yet within was the sentiment that gave life to an abstract loveliness and the sensibility that for the instant, by some fine shading or light inflection, made it warm and pulsing. Händel also proffered the violinist two Allegros of running figures; Mr. Elman caught them from the composer's hand; gave them the mingled verve and evenness that composer cheerfully left to violinist, rounded them with the big-wigged Händelian flourish. With the Chaconne of Bach Mr. Elman shone in a reticence that was ripened wisdom. He did not try to make the music sound as though a full choir of violins, divided and sub-divided, were playing it. He did not obtrude a violin making its own bass, as though that were a grateful process to twentieth-century ears. He did not etch out the counterpoint as do some violinists, mistaking themselves for map-makers of music. No more did he drive forward the Chaconne with a persistent magniloquence, as though Bach must be always in the pulpit. Rather, this Bach was weaving an intricate pattern for the violin, finding and giving pleasure in the

---



"Talked Back" to Mrs. Charles E. Hughes

Evidently this is one parrot who hasn't the least bit of respect for Secretaries of State. He's a pet on the U. S. S. Maryland, and Mrs. Hughes became acquainted with him when she was returning from the exposition at Rio Janeiro. (Wide World.)

A Lionized Baby

All Washington's fond of this li'l feller, a late arrival at the National Zoo—particularly Mlle. Antonine Goodrich, a pretty visitor to the American capital. who hails from Montreal, Canada. (Wide World.)

Post Oct 15

MISCHA ELMAN SAW "DREAM GIRL" IN LOUVRE---MET HER

Famous Violinist a Determined Bachelor---Resisted 68 of London's Prettiest Blondes---and Fell Before A

On the walls of the Louvre Mischa Elman says he first gazed upon the face of his "ideal girl."

She was "The Girl With the Broken Pitcher," a wonderful painting by Jean Baptiste Greuze.

She had a "baby-doll stare" and blonde hair.

Now he has met another girl—this time a flesh and blood ideal girl—and he is so sure of it that he is going to marry her.

But she's a brunette and is lots different from the other one.

BY RUTH SNYDER

Six months ago. Mischa Elman, the violin virtuoso, declared that he was tired of being a bachelor. He was 31 and it was about time he got married So straightway he sat down and told the world the ideal type of girl he was looking for.

He was in England at the time, playing at Queen's Hall, London. Immediately he was swamped with letters, telegrams and requests for interviews.

Sixty-eight blonde young English misses, who fondly imagined they resembled his ideal, besieged him with offers of marriage.

Then he came back to America, and Cupid, with his tricky bow and arrow, immediately set about to erase the IDEA from IDEAL and add OVE to the last letter.

Love Conquers

Love rules and Mischa Elman has announced his engagement to Miss Mildred Stone of New York.

Does she measure up to the ideal he set for himself 18 years ago?

Mischa Elman has been a great violinist ever since he was 13 years old. Even at 5 he exhibited marvellous talent. When he made his debut at St. Petersburg in 1904 he created quite a furore. His first appearance in New York was in 1908, when he made his triumphant appearance with the Russian Symphony Orchestra.

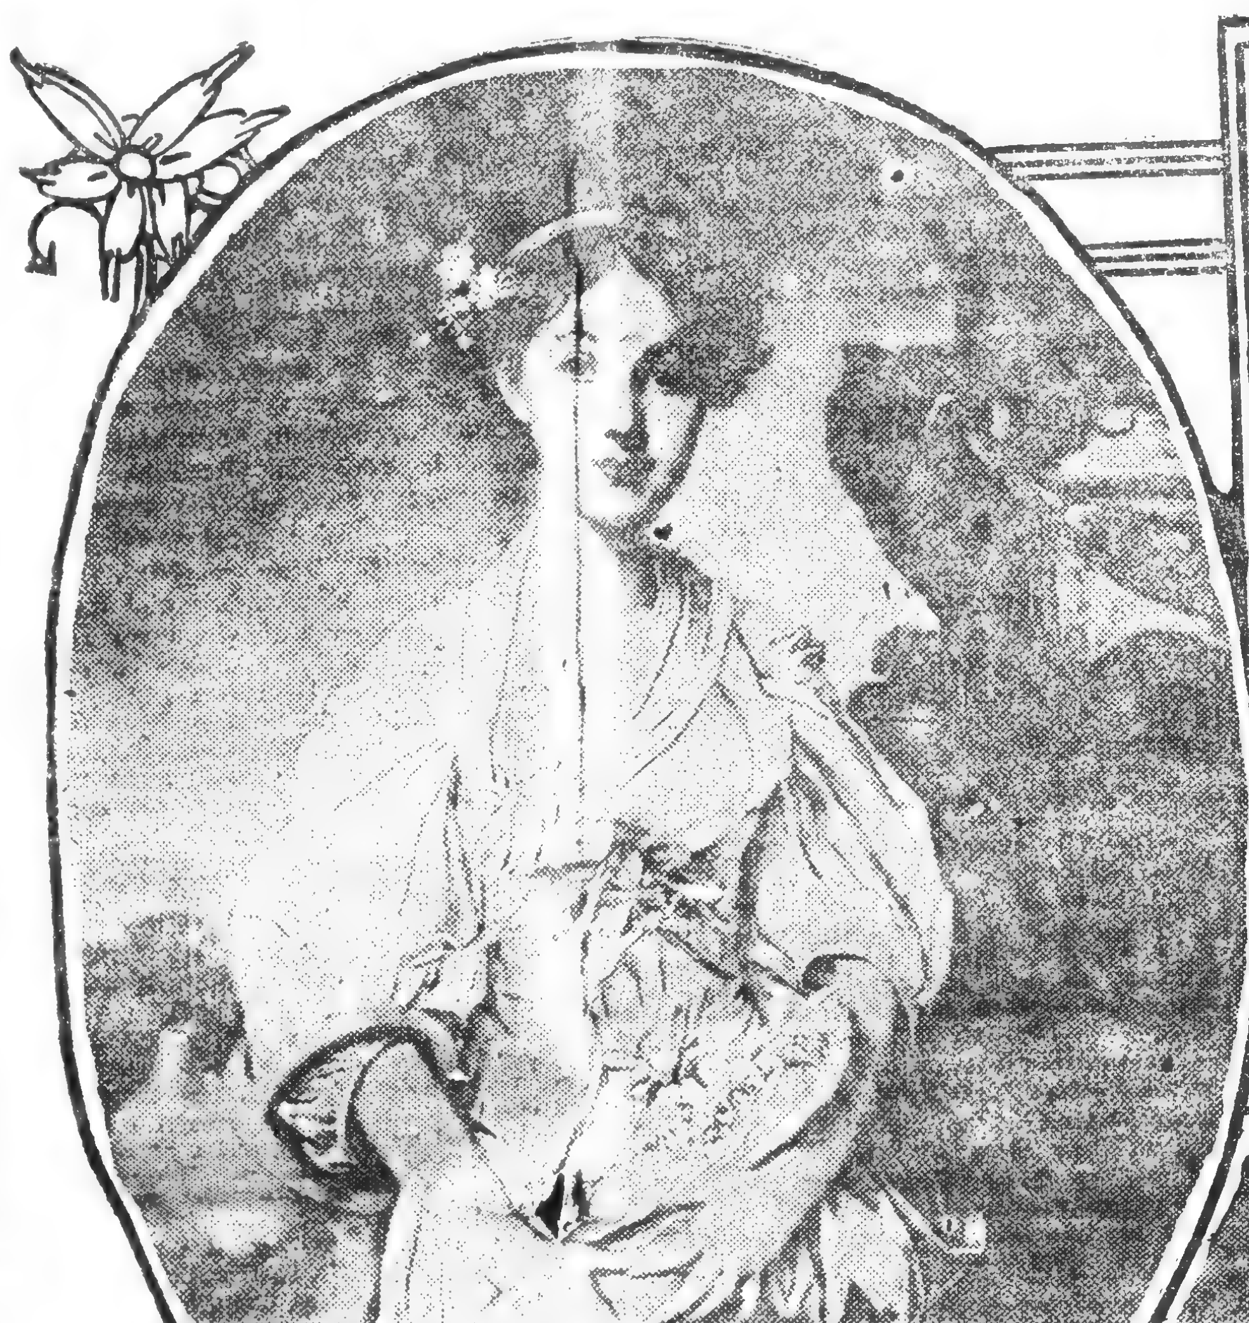
But ever since 1904 he has kept a picture of his ideal girl before him. Eighteen years of worship at the shrine of an ideal.

And this ideal is represented in a picture—in pictures. His ideal girl is the girl who posed for the famous paintings of Jeane Baptiste Greuze—"The Broken Jug," "The Girl With Lamb," "The Sisters," etc.

Mischa Elman, himself, revealed the secret of the strange fascination this picture has for him. Bear in mind, this was only last April.

Has Boyhood Romance

"It is based on a boyhood sentiment," he said at that time. "When I first went to England, 17 years ago, I met an English girl with whom I fell in love. She measured up to all the requirements of an artist's bride, but because we were both too young—indeed we were little more than children—and because I had vowed to my father to remain unmarried for 20 years—the ro-



Here is Mischa Elman's fiancee, Mildred Stone. A girl who is in direct contrast to Mischa's avowed ideal, a pronounced brunette, instead of the blonde girl of his dreams. (International photo.)

torian type of the entirely feminine ideal. The woman who posed for the picture is declared by experts to have the face of a child, a "baby-doll" in modern parlance. It is the face of a girl who is pretty, but deficient in brains, according to art critics.

Madame Greuze, the woman who posed for the paintings, was an inspiration to her husband in his art, but proved to be a very poor housewife.

When Mischa Elman returned to this country the latter part of June, he is declared as saying:

"It is true that the modern woman, with her cigarettes and her make-ups, is rather distasteful to me. I am not used to it, that's all. I was brought up to admire the delicate, incompetent woman of the '90s. Today woman is independently able to take care of herself, but less attractive to the strong, protective longing of the male. Man wishes to be the superior; he wishes to dominate."

And then he went up to Lake Placid

Miss Mildred Stone, sister-in-law of Rudolph Elman, famous violinist. Mr. Elman has for s engagement has been repeatedly denied. Miss ask Mischa that," she modestly declared. "Of course, everyone has his or her ideal. But it is not merely the world and study. H the mother

Elman, violinist, gave a recital
hony hall yesterday afternoon,
nied by Josef Bonime, pianist.
greeted by an audience which hall. His first number was Sonata in D major. Other num-
he program were: Concerto No.
major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne,
uite from the incidental music
h Ado About Nothing," work 2,
, including "Maid in Bridal Ar-
"Grotesque Funeral March,"
Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Noc-
Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota,"

man was in excellent mood to readily to the enthusiasm with audience greeted him and his each selection was such as to the hearty applause accorded played with the superb mas-ne and ease of technique that n among the foremost of mod-ists. There was tenderness
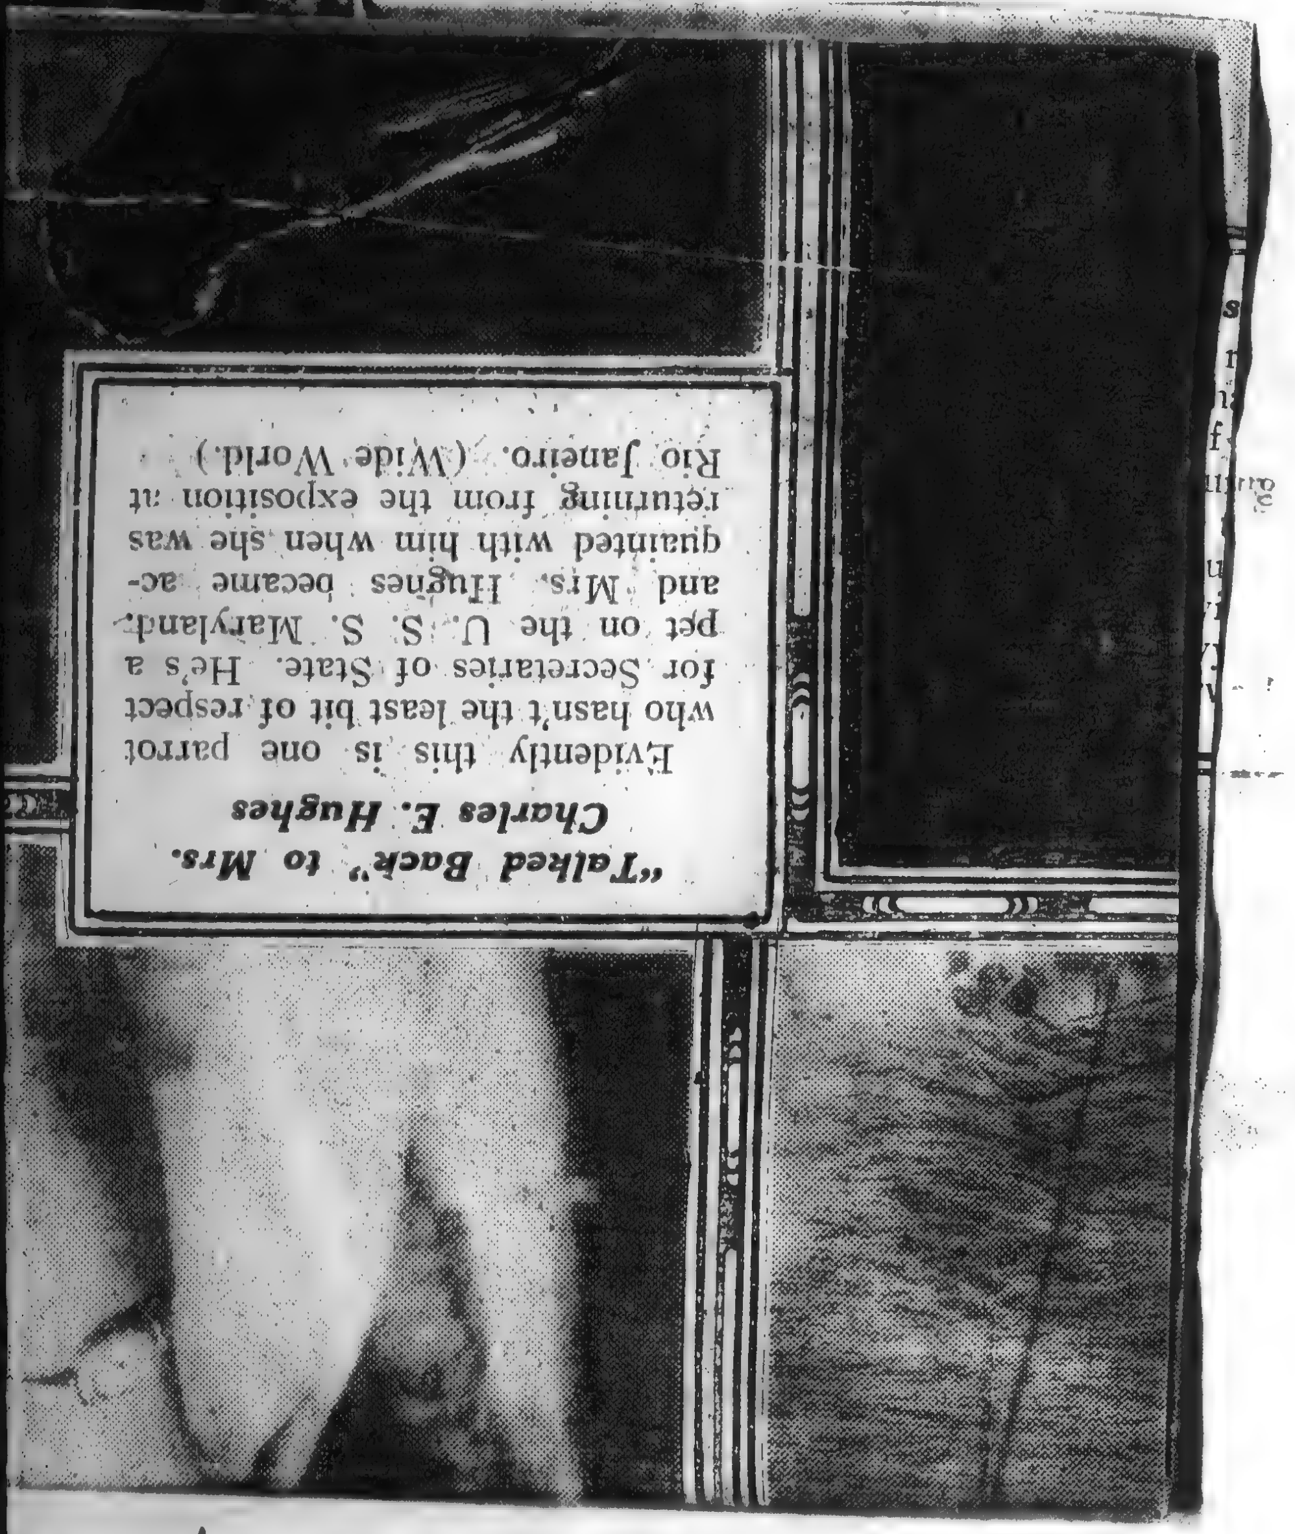
n and abandon as well as the

Herald Oct. 16.



"Talked Back" to Mrs. Charles E. Hughes

Evidently this is one parrot who hasn't the least bit of respect for Secretaries of State. He's a pet on the U. S. S. Maryland, and Mrs. Hughes became acquainted with him when she was returning from the exposition at Rio Janeiro. (Wide World.)

Oct 15

---

exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Trans Oct 16

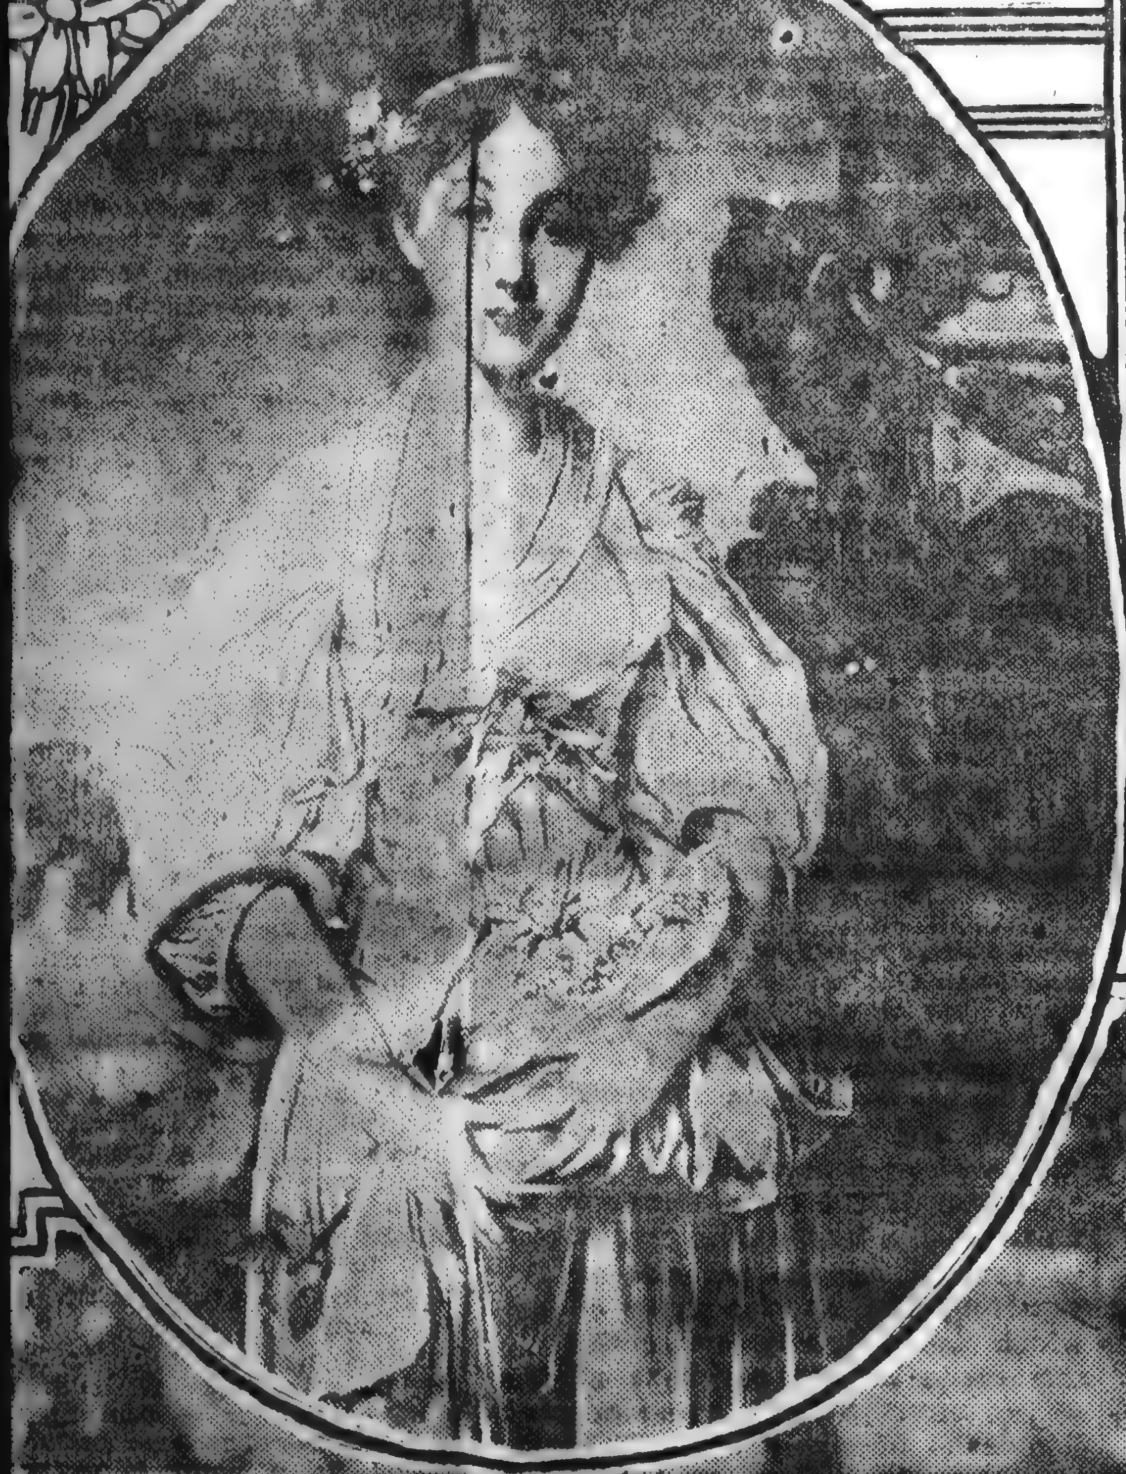
Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much Ado about Nothing," when that comedy of Shakspeare was lately revived at the Residenz Theatre in Munich. (A "cubistic" revival deriding English-speaking folk labelled it). Mr. Kreisler first played the four numbers here, near two years ago. By the token of yesterday, they please another violinist also. The "Grotesque Funeral March" has discoverable, if mild, tonal humors, not for a moment comparable with a similar mocking piano-piece by Lord Berners. The final "Hornpipe" does not lack homely savor in running rhythms. The "Garden Scene," like such episodes in the play, both beautifies and bites. The "Bridal Piece" at the beginning barely escapes commonplace. All four, it is easy to hear, are also music to tempt a violinist's ranging skill, so deployed and contrasted. Finally, a Nocturne of Chopin as Wilhelmj re-spun and muted it for the violin and a Spanish dance—this time a Jota—of Sarasate. Few better than him have made tone-poems in little of these exercises in virtuosity, kept the pungency of the original dance through all the sauces of display.

Händel gave Mr. Elman two melodies to sing—one of exhaling grace in fineness of ascendant line; the other unfolding more amply, gathering, as it moved, a larger beauty. He played both in a tone as limpid, unbroken, serene and poised as is the music itself. Yet within was the sentiment that gave life to an abstract loveliness and the sensibility that for the instant, by some fine shading or light inflection, made it warm and pulsing. Händel also proffered the violinist two Allegros of running figures; Mr. Elman caught them from the composer's hand; gave them the mingled verve and evenness that composer cheerfully left to violinist, rounded them with the big-wigged Händelian flourish. With the Chaconne of Bach Mr. Elman shone in a reticence that was ripened wisdom. He did not try to make the music sound as though a full choir of violins, divided and sub-divided, were playing it. He did not obtrude a violin making its own bass, as though that were a grateful process to twentieth-century ears. He did not etch out the counterpoint as do some violinists, mistaking themselves for map-makers of music. No more did he drive forward the Chaconne with a persistent magniloquence, as though Bach must be always in the pulpit. Rather, this Bach was weaving an intricate pattern for the violin, finding and giving pleasure

---

LMAN SAW "DREAM GIRL" IN LOUVRE---MET HER IN NEW YORK

Violinist a Determined Bachelor---Resisted 68 of London's Prettiest Blondes---and Fell Before American Brunette



Here is Mischa Elman's fiancee, Mildred Stone. A girl who is in direct contrast to Mischa's avowed ideal, a pronounced brunette, instead of the blonde girl of his dreams. (International photo.)

Miss Mildred Stone, sister-in-law of Rudolph Polk, violinist, whose engagement has been announced to Mi Elman, famous violinist. Mr. Elman has for some time been reported as looking for the "ideal girl" and his engagement has been repeatedly denied. Miss Stone hails from New York city, where Mr. Elman has his residence. (P. & A. photo.)

torian type of the entirely feminine ideal. The woman who posed for the picture is declared by experts to have the face of a child, a "baby-doll" in modern parlance. It is the face of a girl who is pretty, but deficient in brains, according to art critics.

Madame Greuze, the woman who posed for the paintings, was an inspiration to her husband in his art, but proved to be a very poor housewife.

When Mischa Elman returned to this country the latter part of June, he is declared as saying:

"It is true that the modern woman, with her cigarettes and her make-ups, is rather distasteful to me. I am not used to it, that's all. I was brought up to admire the delicate, incompetent woman of the '90s. Today woman is independently able to take care of herself, but less attractive to the strong, protective longing of the male. Man wishes to be the superior; he wishes to dominate."

And then he went up to Lake Placid to rest from his European tour. He met Mildred Stone, who was staying with her brother-in-law, Rudolph Polk ask Mischa that," she modestly declared. "Of course, everyone has his or her ideal. But it is not merely the superficial. The man who outwardly lives up to our ideals seldom is the world and has had plenty of girls to study. He knows girls," Mrs. Stone, the mother of Mildred, explained in her broken English. Miss Stone is of Rumanian descent.

The girl of the picture was the baby type. Mildred's face is not of the baby type—it is far too intelligent.

But——

"Mischa likes the baby type of girl," she explained. "He likes a girl to be

Elman, violinist, gave a recital
hony hall yesterday afternoon,
nied by Josef Bonime, pianist.
greeted by an audience which hall. His first number was Sonata in D major. Other num-
he program were: Concerto No.
major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne,
ite from the incidental music
Ado About Nothing," work 2, including "Maid in Bridal Ar-
Grotesque Funeral March,"
Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Noc-
Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota."

man was in excellent mood to readily to the enthusiasm with audience greeted him and his
each selection was such as to he hearty applause accorded played with the superb mas-
ne and ease of technique that among the foremost of mod-ists. There was tenderness
n and abandon as well as the

Herald Oct 1

---

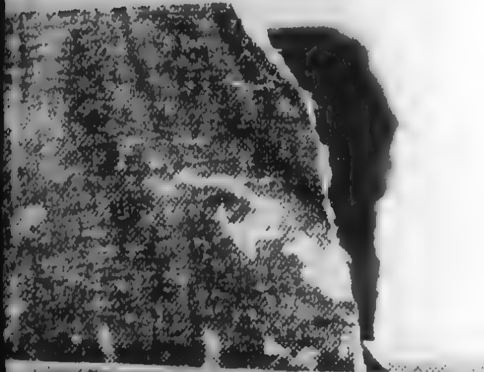
exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

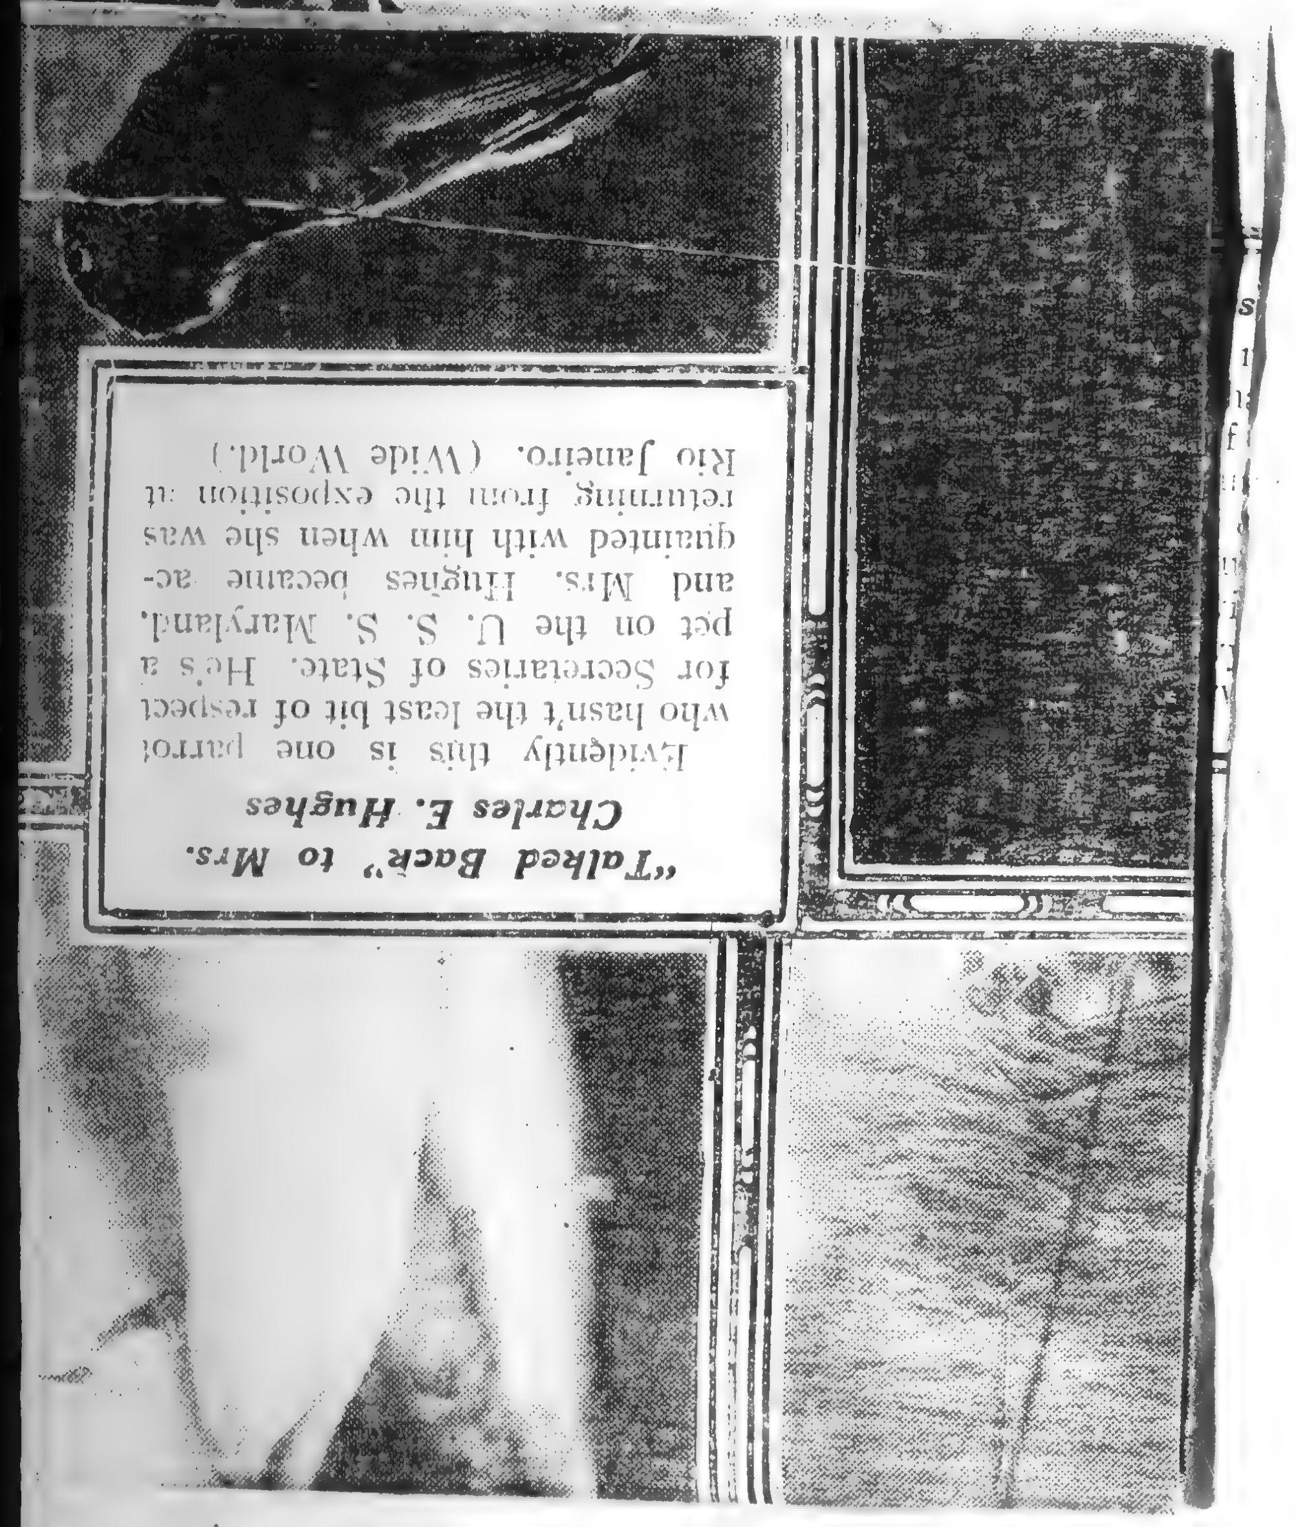
To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much Ado about Nothing," when that comedy of Shakspeare was lately revived at the Residenz Theatre in Munich. (A "cubistic" revival deriding English-speaking folk labelled it). Mr. Kreisler first played the four numbers here, near two years ago. By the token of yesterday, they please another violinist also. The "Grotesque Funeral March" has discoverable, if mild, tonal humors, not for a moment comparable with a similar mocking piano-piece by Lord Berners. The final "Hornpipe" does not lack homely savor in running rhythms. The "Garden Scene," like such episodes in the play, both beautifies and bites. The "Bridal Piece" at the beginning barely escapes commonplace. All four, it is easy to hear, are also music to tempt a violinist's ranging skill, so deployed and contrasted. Finally, a Nocturne of Chopin as Wilhelmj re-spun and muted it for the violin and a Spanish dance—this time a Jota—of Sarasate. Few better than him have made tone-poems in little of these exercises in virtuosity, kept the pungency of the original dance through all the sauces of display.

Händel gave Mr. Elman two melodies to sing—one of exhaling grace in fineness of ascendant line; the other unfolding more amply, gathering, as it moved, a larger beauty. He played both in a tone as limpid, unbroken, serene and poised as is the music itself. Yet within was the sentiment that gave life to an abstract loveliness and the sensibility that for the instant, by some fine shading or light inflection, made it warm and pulsing. Händel also proffered the violinist two Allegros of running figures; Mr. Elman caught them from the composer's hand; gave them the mingled verve and evenness that composer cheerfully left to violinist, rounded them with the big-wigged Händelian flourish. With the Chaconne of Bach Mr. Elman shone in a reticence that was ripened wisdom. He did not try to make the music sound as though a full choir of violins, divided and sub-divided, were playing it. He did not obtrude a violin making its own bass, as though that were a grateful process to twentieth-century ears. He did not etch out the counterpoint as do some violinists, mistaking themselves for map-makers of music. No more did he drive forward the Chaconne with a persistent magniloquence, as though Bach must be always in the pulpit. Rather, this Bach was weaving an intricate pattern for the violin, finding and giving pleasure in

---





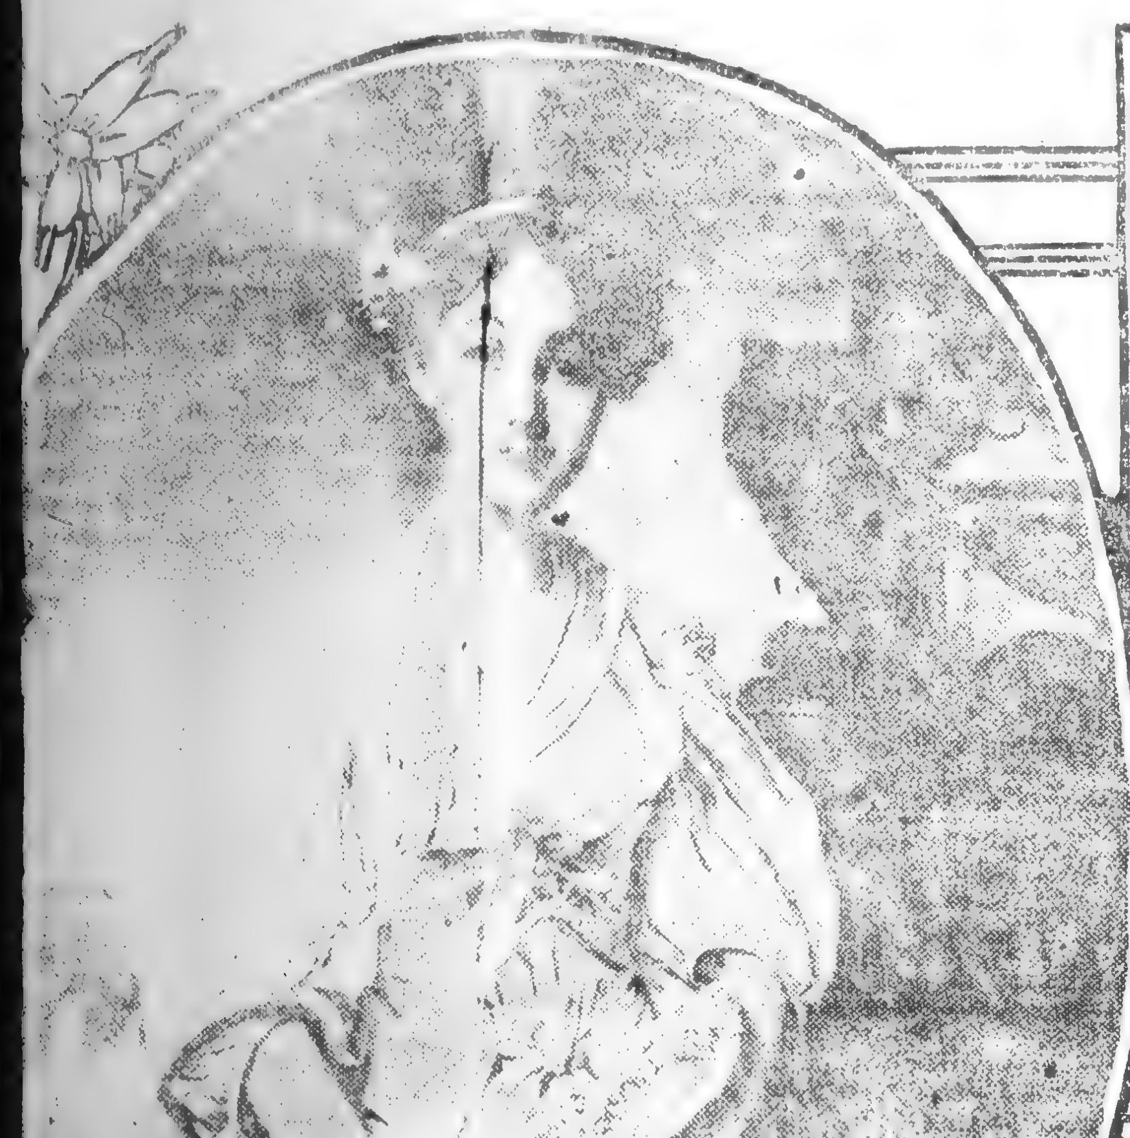
"Talked Back" to Mrs. Charles E. Hughes

Evidently this is one parrot who hasn't the least bit of respect for Secretaries of State. He's a pet on the U. S. S. Maryland, and Mrs. Hughes became acquainted with him when she was returning from the exposition at Rio Janeiro. (Wide World.)

5

LMAN SAW "DREAM GIRL" IN LOUVRE--MET HER IN NEW YORK

iolinist a Detemined Bachelor---Resisted 68 of London's Prettiest Blondes---and Fell Before American Brunette



Here is Mischa Elman's fiancee, Mildred Stone. A girl who is in direct contrast to Mischa's avowed ideal, a pronounced brunette, instead of the blonde girl of his dreams. (International photo.)

Miss Mildred Stone, sister-in-law of Rudolph Polk, violinist, whose engagement has been announced to M Elman, famous violinist. Mr. Elman has for some time been reported as looking for the "ideal girl" an engagement has been repeatedly denied. Miss Stone hails from New York city, where Mr. Elman has his dence. (P. & A. photo.)

torian type of the entirely feminine ideal. The woman who posed for the picture is declared by experts to have the face of a child, a "baby-doll" in modern parlance. It is the face of a girl who is pretty, but deficient in brains, according to art critics.

Madame Greuze, the woman who posed for the paintings, was an inspiration to her husband in his art, but proved to be a very poor housewife.

When Mischa Elman returned to this country the latter part of June, he is declared as saying:

"It is true that the modern woman, with her cigarettes and her make-ups, is rather distasteful to me. I am not used to it, that's all. I was brought up to admire the delicate, incompetent woman of the '90s. Today woman is independently able to take care of herself, but less attractive to the strong, protective longing of the male. Man wishes to be the superior; he wishes to dominate."

And then he went up to Lake Placid to rest from his European tour. He met Mildred Stone, who was staying with her brother-in-law, Rudolph Polk ask Mischa that," she modestly declared. "Of course, everyone has his or her ideal. But it is not merely the superficial. The man who outwardly lives up to our ideals seldom is the world and has had plenty of girls to study. He knows girls," Mrs. Stone, the mother of Mildred, explained in her broken English. Miss Stone is of Rumanian descent.

The girl of the picture was the type. Mildred's face is not of the baby type—it is far too intelligent.

But——

"Mischa likes the baby type of girl," she explained. "He likes a girl to be

Elman, the young Russian violinist

SYMPHONY

Both sides of Symphony Hall were lined with people who stood throughout a long recital yesterday afternoon for the privilege of listening to one of the most popular musicians who comes to Boston just as often as the musical season comes around. Few artists share with Mischa Elman the ability to crowd that auditorium beyond its seating capacity.

His program opened with the Handel Sonata in D major followed by the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach Chaconne, which was unaccompanied; the Korngold incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing"; the Chopin-Wilhelmj Nocturne and the Sarasate "Jota."

A very decided factor in the success of Mr. Elman's recital was the playing of Josef Bonime, his accompanist, who is so far out of the ordinary that his work will be remembered with pleasure for a long time. It is rare indeed that one hears such

---

[illegible] Oct 16

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave a recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Josef Bonime, pianist. He was greeted by an audience which filled the hall. His first number was Handel's Sonata in D major. Other numbers on the program were: Concerto No. 5, in A major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," work 2, Korngold, including "Maid in Bridal Array," "Grotesque Funeral March," "Garden Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Nocturne," Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota," Sarasate.

Mr. Elman was in excellent mood to respond readily to the enthusiasm with which the audience greeted him and his playing of each selection was such as to warrant the hearty applause accorded him. He played with the superb mastery of tone and ease of technique that places him among the foremost of modern violinists. There was tenderness and passion and abandon as well as the time he spent in reflective leisure and ripening study; more he gave to a European tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

Herald Oct. 16

---

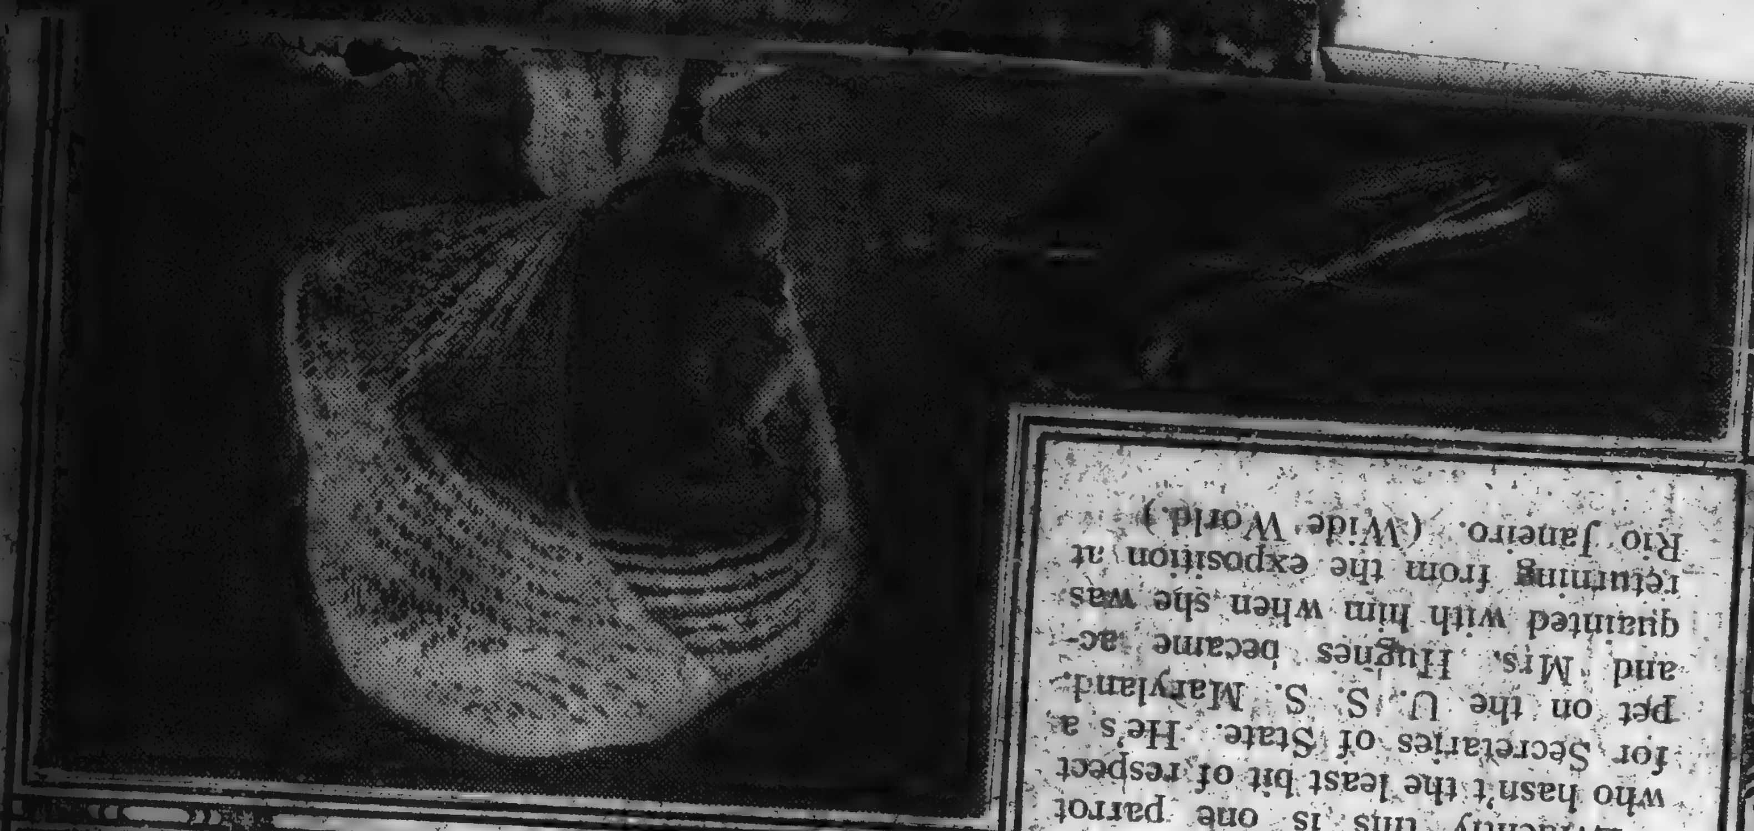
To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Trans Oct 16

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much Ado about Nothing," when that comedy of Shakspeare was lately revived at the Residenz Theatre in Munich. (A "cubistic" revival deriding English-speaking folk labelled it). Mr. Kreisler first played the four numbers here, near two years ago. By the token of yesterday, they please another violinist also. The "Grotesque Funeral March" has discoverable, if mild, tonal humors, not for a moment comparable with a similar mocking piano-piece by Lord Berners. The final "Hornpipe" does not lack homely savor in running rhythms. The "Garden Scene," like such episodes in the play, both beautifies and bites. The "Bridal Piece" at the beginning barely escapes commonplace. All four, it is easy to hear, are also music to tempt a violinist's ranging skill, so deployed and contrasted. Finally, a Nocturne of Chopin as Wilhelmj re-spun and muted it for the violin and a Spanish dance—this time a Jota—of Sarasate. Few better than him have made tone-poems in little of these exercises in virtuosity, kept the pungency of the original dance through all the sauces of display.

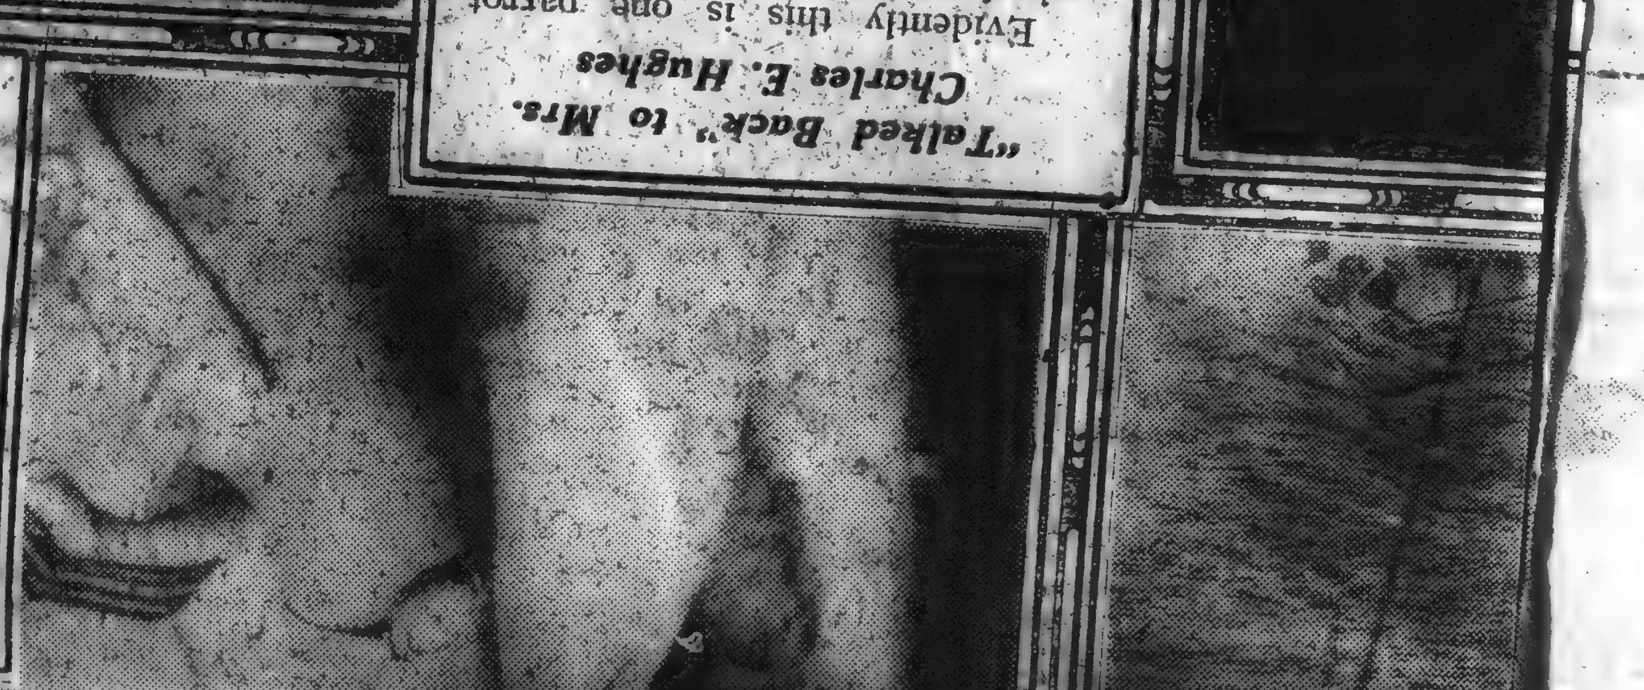
Händel gave Mr. Elman two melodies to sing—one of exhaling grace in fineness of ascendant line; the other unfolding more amply, gathering, as it moved, a larger beauty. He played both in a tone as limpid, unbroken, serene and poised as is the music itself. Yet within was the sentiment that gave life to an abstract loveliness and the sensibility that for the instant, by some fine shading or light inflection, made it warm and pulsing. Händel also proffered the violinist two Allegros of running figures; Mr. Elman caught them from the composer's hand; gave them the mingled verve and evenness that composer cheerfully left to violinist, rounded them with the big-wigged Händelian flourish. With the Chaconne of Bach Mr. Elman shone in a reticence that was ripened wisdom. He did not try to make the music sound as though a full choir of violins, divided and sub-divided, were playing it. He did not

---



"Talked Back" to Mrs. Charles E. Hughes

Evidently this is one parrot who hasn't the least bit of respect for Secretaries of State. He's a pet on the U. S. S. Maryland, and Mrs. Hughes became acquainted with him when she was returning from the exposition at Rio Janeiro. (Wide World.)



A Lionized Baby

All Washington's fond of this li'l feller, a late arrival at the National Zoo—particularly Mlle. Antonine Goodrich, a pretty visitor to the American capital, who hails from Montreal, Canada. (Wide World.)

Post Oct 15

---

offers of marriage.

Then he came back to America, and Cupid, with his tricky bow and arrow, immediately set about to erase the IDEA from IDEAL and add OVE to the last letter.

Love Conquers

Love rules and Mischa Elman has announced his engagement to Miss Mildred Stone of New York.

Does she measure up to the ideal he set for himself 18 years ago?

Mischa Elman has been a great violinist ever since he was 13 years old. Even at 5 he exhibited marvellous talent. When he made his debut at St. Petersburg in 1904 he created quite a furore. His first appearance in New York was in 1908, when he made his triumphant appearance with the Russian Symphony Orchestra.

But ever since 1904 he has kept a picture of his ideal girl before him. Eighteen years of worship at the shrine of an ideal.

And this ideal is represented in a picture—in pictures. His ideal girl is the girl who posed for the famous paintings of Jeane Baptiste Greuze—"The Broken Jug," "The Girl With Lamb," "The Sisters," etc.

Mischa Elman, himself, revealed the secret of the strange fascination this picture has for him. Bear in mind, this was only last April.

Has Boyhood Romance

"It is based on a boyhood sentiment," he said at that time. "When I first went to England, 17 years ago, I met an English girl with whom I fell in love. She measured up to all the requirements of an artist's bride, but because we were both too young—indeed we were little more than children—and because I had vowed to my father to remain unmarried for 20 years—the romance died. She married later and disappeared.

"For years, as I grew older, I carried her image in my heart and one day, in Paris, as I was going through the galleries of the Louvre, I suddenly saw her face staring out at me from a beautiful canvas.

"My first impression was that it must be an actual portrait of my lost love. But the little brass inscription plate with the painter's name and the date, 1725-1805, made me realize that it was only a startling likeness."

He later learned that the girl who had posed for these paintings was the wife of the artist, who also served as his model.

Mischa Elman, the young Russian violinist, who dreamed of an ideal sweetheart for years. His ideal he found in the famous painting by Grueze (upper left), named the "Girl With the Broken Pitcher." Then Mischa fell in love. (Bain photo.)

The portrait of the "Girl With the Broken Pitcher" represents a blonde girl—distinctly a baby type—a pre-Victorian type of the entirely feminine ideal. The woman who posed for the picture is declared by experts to have the face of a child, a "baby-doll" in modern parlance. It is the face of a girl who is pretty, but deficient in brains, according to art critics.

Madame Greuze, the woman who posed for the paintings, was an inspiration to her husband in his art, but proved to be a very poor housewife.

When Mischa Elman returned to this country the latter part of June, he is declared as saying:

"It is true that the modern woman, with her cigarettes and her make-ups, is rather distasteful to me. I am not used to it, that's all. I was brought up to admire the delicate, incompetent woman of the '90s. Today woman is independently able to take care of herself, but less attractive to the strong, protective longing of the male. Man wishes to be the superior; he wishes to dominate."

And then he went up to Lake Placid to rest from his European tour. He met Mildred Stone, who was staying with her brother-in-law, Rudolph Polk, another violinist.

Mildred is 5 ft. 3 in. tall, weighs 110 pounds. She is 23 years old.

But does she measure up to the standard, the "ideal" which was built long ago in Mischa Elman's mind?

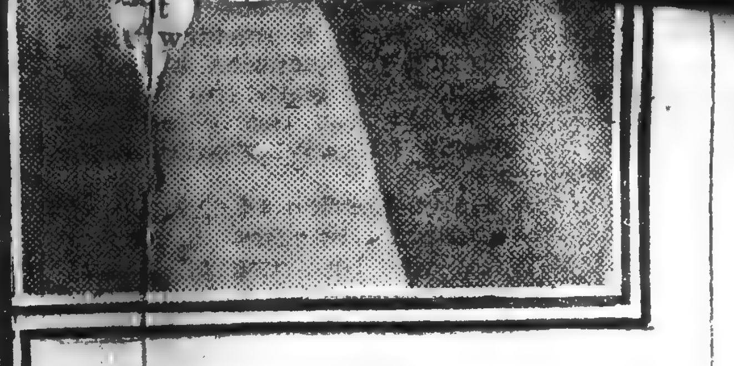
I asked her opinion today.

"I don't know. You would have to ask Mischa that," she modestly declared. "Of course, everyone has his or her ideal. But it is not merely the superficial. The man who outwardly lives up to our ideals seldom is the man we fall in love with. The real ideal we are looking for is the inner man."

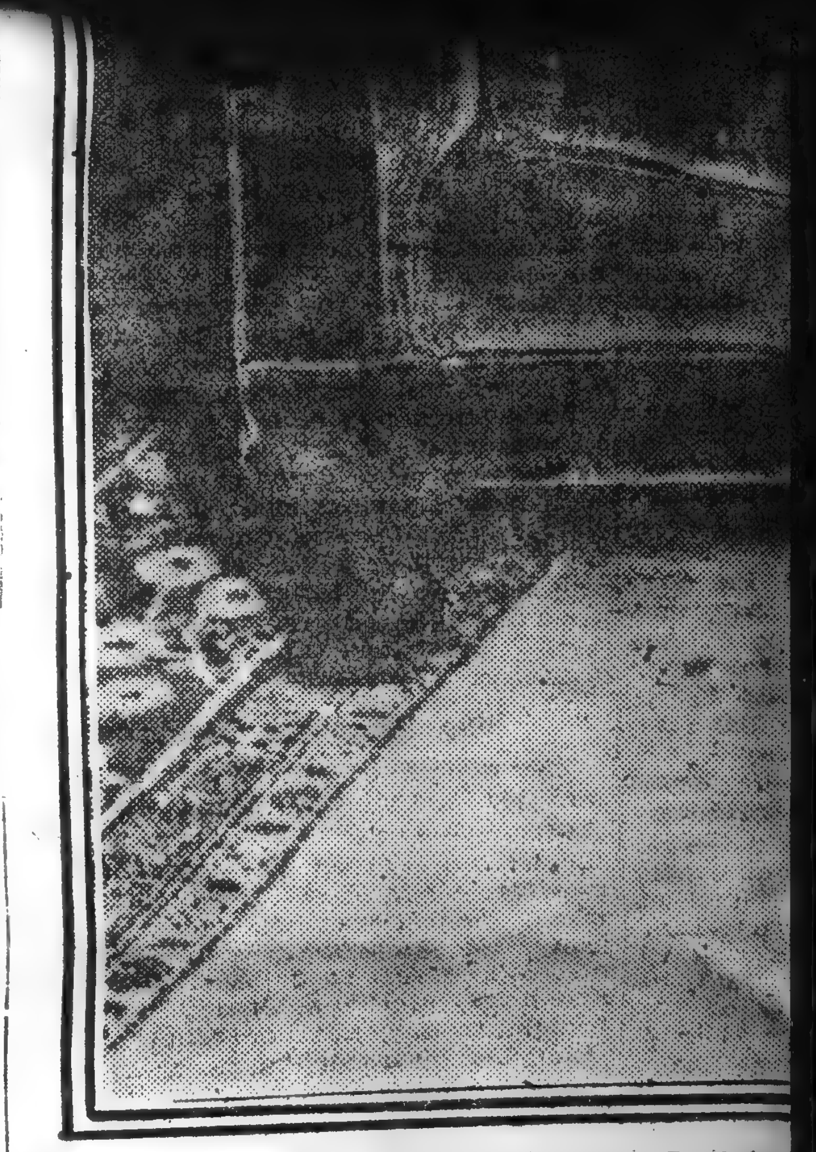
With which she adroitly turned the conversation from herself to the man in question.

"Mischa Knows Girls"

"Mischa has been all around the



Here is Mischa Elman's fiancee, Mildred Stone. A girl who is in direct contrast to Mischa's avowed ideal, a pronounced brunette, instead of the blonde girl of his dreams. (International photo.)



Miss Mildred Stone, sister-in-law of Rudolph Elman, famous violinist. Mr. Elman has for engagement has been repeatedly denied. Miss

SYMPHONY

Both sides of Symphony Hall were lined with people who stood throughout a long recital yesterday afternoon for the privilege of listening to one of the most popular musicians who comes to Boston just as often as the musical season comes around. Few artists share with Mischa Elman the ability to crowd that auditorium beyond its seating capacity.

His program opened with the Handel Sonata in D major followed by the Vieuxtemps Concerto in A minor; the Bach Chaconne, which was unaccompanied; the Korngold incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing"; the Chopin-Wilhelmj Nocturne and the Sarasate "Jota."

A very decided factor in the success of Mr. Elman's recital was the playing of Josef Bonime, his accompanist, who is so far out of the ordinary that his work will be remembered with pleasure for a long time. It is rare indeed that one hears such

---

Herald — Oct 16

Mischa Elman, violinist, gave a recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Josef Bonime, pianist. He was greeted by an audience which filled the hall. His first number was Handel's Sonata in D major. Other numbers on the program were: Concerto No. 5, in A major, Vieuxtemps; Chaconne, Bach; suite from the incidental music to "Much Ado About Nothing," work 2, Korngold, including "Maid in Bridal Array," "Grotesque Funeral March," "Garden Scene" and "Hornpipe" "Nocturne," Chopin-Wilhelmj, and "Jota," Sarasate.

Mr. Elman was in excellent mood to respond readily to the enthusiasm with which the audience greeted him and his playing of each selection was such as to warrant the hearty applause accorded him. He played with the superb mastery of tone and ease of technique that places him among the foremost of modern violinists. There was tenderness and passion and abandon as well as the

Herald Oct 16

A part of this time he spent in reflective leisure and ripening study; more he gave to a European tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much Ado about Nothing," when that comedy of Shakspeare was lately revived at the Residenz Theatre in Munich. (A "cubistic" revival deriding English-speaking folk labelled it). Mr. Kreisler first played the four numbers here, near two years ago. By the token of yesterday, they please another violinist also. The "Grotesque Funeral March" has discoverable, if mild, tonal humors, not for a moment comparable with a similar mocking piano-piece by Lord Berners. The final "Hornpipe" does not lack homely savor in running rhythms. The "Garden Scene," like such episodes in the play, both beautifies and bites. The "Bridal Piece" at the beginning barely escapes commonplace. All four, it is easy to hear, are also music to tempt a violinist's ranging skill, so deployed and contrasted. Finally, a Nocturne of Chopin as Wilhelmj re-spun and muted it for the violin and a Spanish dance—this time a Jota—of Sarasate. Few better than him have made tone-poems in little of these exercises in virtuosity, kept the pungency of the original dance through all the sauces of display.

Händel gave Mr. Elman two melodies to sing—one of exhaling grace in fineness of ascendant line; the other unfolding more amply, gathering, as it moved, a larger beauty. He played both in a tone as limpid, unbroken, serene and poised as is the music itself. Yet within was the sentiment that gave life to an abstract loveliness and the sensibility that for the instant, by some fine shading or light inflection, made it warm and pulsing. Händel also proffered the violinist two Allegros of running figures; Mr. Elman caught them from the composer's hand; gave them the mingled verve and evenness that composer cheerfully left to violinist, rounded them with the big-wigged Händelian flourish. With the Chaconne of Bach Mr. Elman shone in a reticence that was ripened wisdom. He did not try to make the music sound as though a full choir of violins, divided and sub-divided, were playing it. He did not

---

"Talked Back" to Mrs. Charles E. Hughes

Evidently this is one parrot who hasn't the least bit of respect for Secretaries of State. He's a pet on the U. S. S. Maryland, and Mrs. Hughes became acquainted with him when she was returning from the exposition at Rio Janeiro. (Wide World.)

A Lionized Baby

All Washington's fond of this li'l feller, a late arrival at the National Zoo—particularly Mlle. Antonine Goodrich, a pretty visitor to the American capital, who hails from Montreal, Canada. (Wide World.)

Post Oct 15

---

offers of marriage.

Then he came back to America, and Cupid, with his tricky bow and arrow, immediately set about to erase the IDEA from IDEAL and add OVE to the last letter.

Love Conquers

Love rules and Mischa Elman has announced his engagement to Miss Mildred Stone of New York.

Does she measure up to the ideal he set for himself 18 years ago?

Mischa Elman has been a great violinist ever since he was 13 years old. Even at 5 he exhibited marvellous talent. When he made his debut at St. Petersburg in 1904 he created quite a furore. His first appearance in New York was in 1908, when he made his triumphant appearance with the Russian Symphony Orchestra.

But ever since 1904 he has kept a picture of his ideal girl before him. Eighteen years of worship at the shrine of an ideal.

And this ideal is represented in a picture—in pictures. His ideal girl is the girl who posed for the famous paintings of Jeane Baptiste Greuze—"The Broken Jug," "The Girl With Lamb," "The Sisters," etc.

Mischa Elman, himself, revealed the secret of the strange fascination this picture has for him. Bear in mind, this was only last April.

Has Boyhood Romance

"It is based on a boyhood sentiment," he said at that time. "When I first went to England, 17 years ago, I met an English girl with whom I fell in love. She measured up to all the requirements of an artist's bride, but because we were both too young—indeed we were little more than children—and because I had vowed to my father to remain unmarried for 20 years—the romance died. She married later and disappeared.

"For years, as I grew older, I carried her image in my heart and one day, in Paris, as I was going through the galleries of the Louvre, I suddenly saw her face staring out at me from a beautiful canvas.

"My first impression was that it must be an actual portrait of my lost love. But the little brass inscription plate with the painter's name and the date, 1725-1805, made me realize that it was only a startling likeness."

He later learned that the girl who had posed for these paintings was the wife of the artist, who also served as his model.

The portrait of the "Girl With the Broken Pitcher" represents a blonde girl—distinctly a baby type—a pre-Victorian type of the entirely feminine ideal. The woman who posed for the picture is declared by experts to have the face of a child, a "baby-doll" in modern parlance. It is the face of a girl who is pretty, but deficient in brains," according to art critics.

Madame Greuze, the woman who posed for the paintings, was an inspiration to her husband in his art, but proved to be a very poor housewife.

When Mischa Elman returned to this country the latter part of June, he is declared as saying:

"It is true that the modern woman, with her cigarettes and her make-ups, is rather distasteful to me. I am not used to it, that's all. I was brought up to admire the delicate, incompetent woman of the '90s. Today woman is independently able to take care of herself, but less attractive to the strong, protective longing of the male. Man wishes to be the superior; he wishes to dominate."

And then he went up to Lake Placid to rest from his European tour. He met Mildred Stone, who was staying with her brother-in-law, Rudolph Polk, another violinist.

Mildred is 5 ft. 3 in. tall, weighs 110 pounds. She is 23 years old.

But does she measure up to the standard, the "ideal" which was built long ago in Mischa Elman's mind?

I asked her opinion today.

"I don't know. You would have to ask Mischa that," she modestly declared. "Of course, everyone has his or her ideal. But it is not merely the superficial. The man who outwardly lives up to our ideals seldom is the man we fall in love with. The real ideal we are looking for is the inner man."

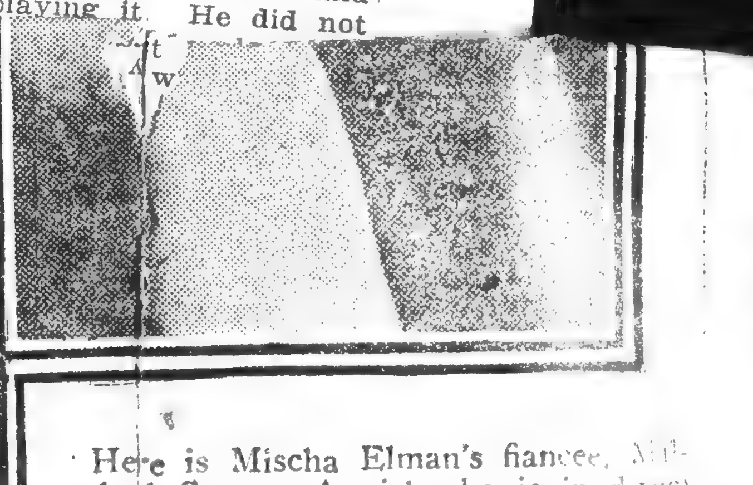
With which she adroitly turned the conversation from herself to the man in question.

"Mischa Knows Girls"

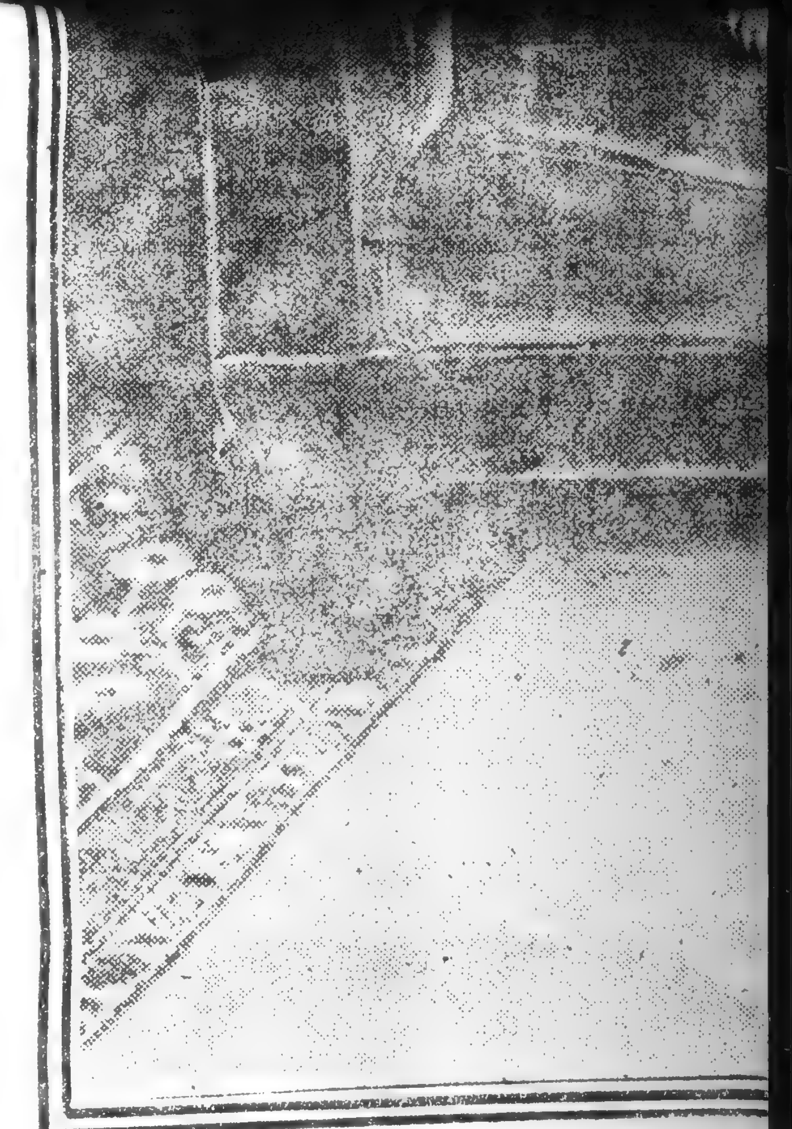
"Mischa has been all around the world a study. the moth broken manian But M And M Mischa type.

Mildre hair, ea her lau hear he has don

Mischa Elman, the young Russian violinist, who dreamed of an ideal sweetheart for years. His ideal he found in the famous painting by Grueze (upper left), named the "Girl With the Broken Pitcher." Then Mischa fell in love. (Bain photo.)



Here is Mischa Elman's fiancee, Mildred Stone. A girl who is in direct contrast to Mischa's avowed ideal, a pronounced brunette, instead of the blonde girl of his dreams. (International photo.)



Miss Mildred Stone, sister-in-law of Rudolph Elman, famous violinist. Mr. Elman has for engagement has been repeatedly denied. Miss siasm

Oct. 16

linist, gave a recital
yesterday afternoon,
of Bonime, pianist,
an audience which first number was major. Other num-
were: Concerto No.
xtemps; Chaconne,
e incidental music
Nothing," work 2,
"Maid in Bridal Ar-
Funeral March,"
"Hornpipe" "Noc-
elmj, and "Jota."

excellent mood to enthusiasm with eted him and his
on was such as to pplause accorded
the superb mas-
of technique that foremost of mod-
was tenderness
on as well as the

Oct. 16

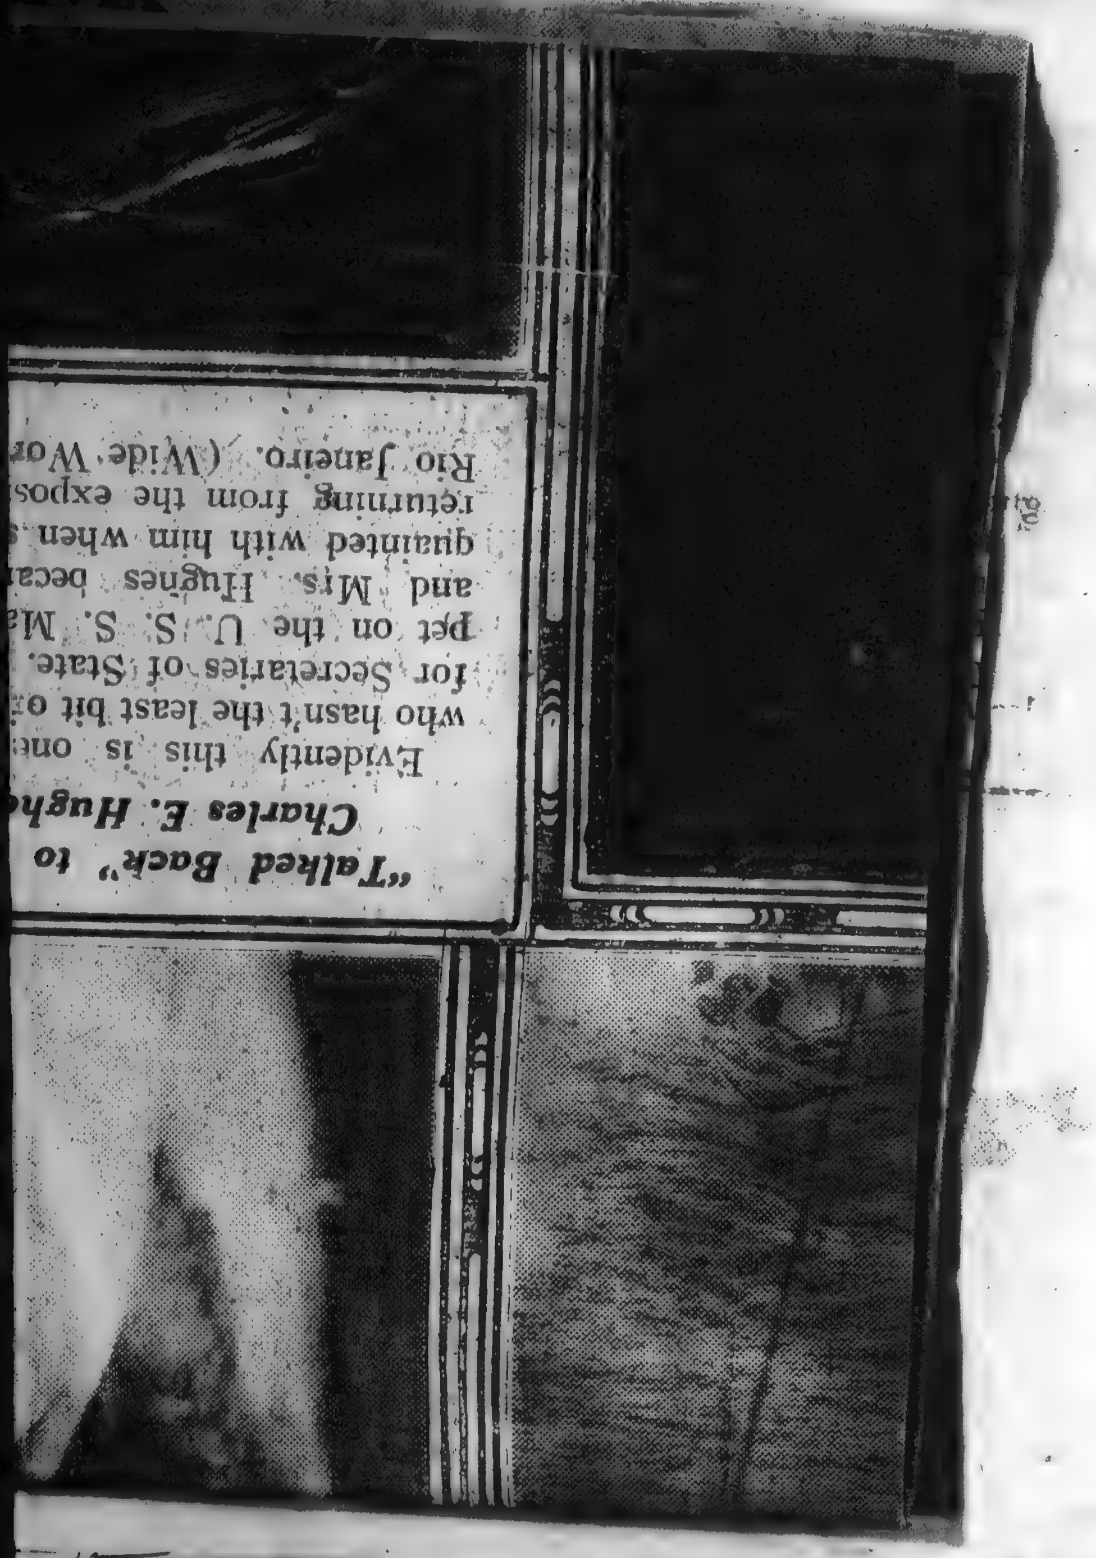
American concert-halls. A part of this time he spent in reflective leisure and ripening study; more he gave to a European tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much Ado about Nothing," when that comedy of Shakspeare was lately revived at the Residenz Theatre in Munich. (A "cubistic" revival deriding English-speaking folk labelled it). Mr. Kreisler first played the four numbers here, near two years ago. By the token of yesterday, they please another violinist also. The "Grotesque Funeral March" has discoverable, if mild, tonal humors, not for a moment comparable with a similar mocking piano-piece by Lord Berners. The final "Hornpipe" does not lack homely savor in running rhythms. The "Garden Scene," like such episodes in the play, both beautifies and bites. The "Bridal Piece" at the beginning barely escapes commonplace. All four, it is easy to hear, are also music to tempt a violinist's ranging skill, so deployed and contrasted. Finally, a Nocturne of Chopin as Wilhelmj re-spun and muted it for the violin and a Spanish dance—this time a Jota—of Sarasate. Few better than him have made tone-poems in little of these exercises in virtuosity, kept the pungency of the original dance through all the sauces of display.

Händel gave Mr. Elman two melodies to sing—one of exhaling grace in fineness of ascendant line; the other unfolding more amply, gathering, as it moved, a larger beauty. He played both in a tone as limpid, unbroken, serene and poised as is the music itself. Yet within was the sentiment that gave life to an abstract loveliness and the sensibility that for the instant, by some fine shading or light inflection, made it warm and pulsing. Händel also proffered the violinist two Allegros of running figures; Mr. Elman caught them from the composer's hand; gave them the mingled verve and evenness that composer cheerfully left to violinist, rounded them with the big-wigged Händelian flourish. With the Chaconne of Bach Mr. Elman shone in a reticence that was ripened wisdom. He did not try to make the music sound as though a full choir of violins, divided and sub-divided, were playing it. He did not

---



"Talked Back" to
Charles E. Hughe

Evidently this is one who hasn't the least bit of
for Secretaries of State.
pet on the U. S. S. Ma
and Mrs. Hughes beca
quainted with him when returning from the expos
Rio Janeiro. (Wide Wor

---

young Russian violinist, who dreamed of an ideal sweetheart for years. His ideal he found g by Grueze (upper left), named the "Girl With the Broken Pitcher." Then Mischa fell in love. (Bain photo.)

alize that it was ss."
at the girl who had posed for these paintings was the wife of the artist, who also served as his model.

The portrait of the "Girl With the Broken Pitcher" represents a blonde girl—distinctly a baby type—a pre-Victorian type of the entirely feminine ideal. The woman who posed for the picture is declared by experts to have the face of a child, a "baby-doll" in modern parlance. It is the face of a girl who is pretty, but deficient in brains, according to art critics.

Madame Greuze, the woman who posed for the paintings, was an inspiration to her husband in his art, but proved to be a very poor housewife.

When Mischa Elman returned to this country the latter part of June, he is declared as saying:

"It is true that the modern woman, with her cigarettes and her make-ups, is rather distasteful to me. I am not used to it, that's all. I was brought up to admire the delicate, incompetent woman of the '90s. Today woman is independently able to take care of herself, but less attractive to the strong, protective longing of the male. Man wishes to be the superior; he wishes to dominate."

And then he went up to Lake Placid to rest from his European tour. He met Mildred Stone, who was staying with her brother-in-law, Rudolph Polk, another violinist.

Mildred is 5 ft. 3 in. tall, weighs 110 pounds. She is 23 years old.

But does she measure up to the standard, the "ideal" which was built long ago in Mischa Elman's mind?

I asked her opinion today.

"I don't know. You would have to ask Mischa that," she modestly declared. "Of course, everyone has his or her ideal. But it is not merely the superficial. The man who outwardly lives up to our ideals seldom is the man we fall in love with. The real ideal we are looking for is the inner man."

With which she adroitly turned the conversation from herself to the man in question.

"Mischa Knows Girls"

"Mischa has been all around the world and has had plenty of girls to study. He knows girls," Mrs. Stone, the mother of Mildred, explained in her broken English. Miss Stone is of Rumanian descent.

But Mildred is a brunette.

And Mischa was looking for a blonde.

Mischa's ideal was the pre-Victorian type.

Mildred is a typical flapper—bobbed hair, earrings and a flapperish lilt to her laughing voice. One can almost hear her laugh'ng at the havoc Cupid has done to Mischa's ideal.

The girl of the picture was the baby type. Mildred's face is not of the baby type—it is far too intelligent.

But——

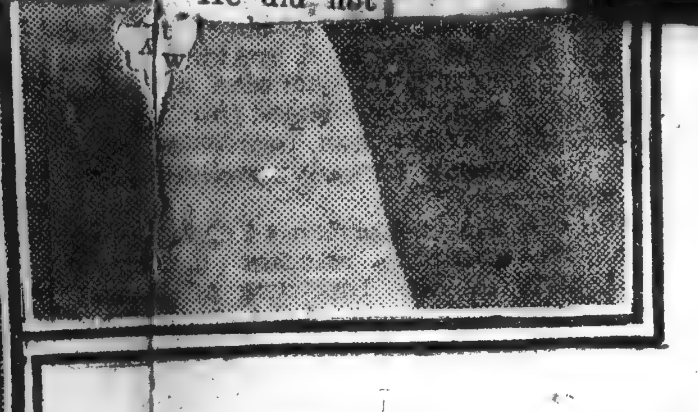
"Mischa likes the baby type of girl," she explained. "He likes a girl to be girlish."

Mr. Elman wants a home girl.

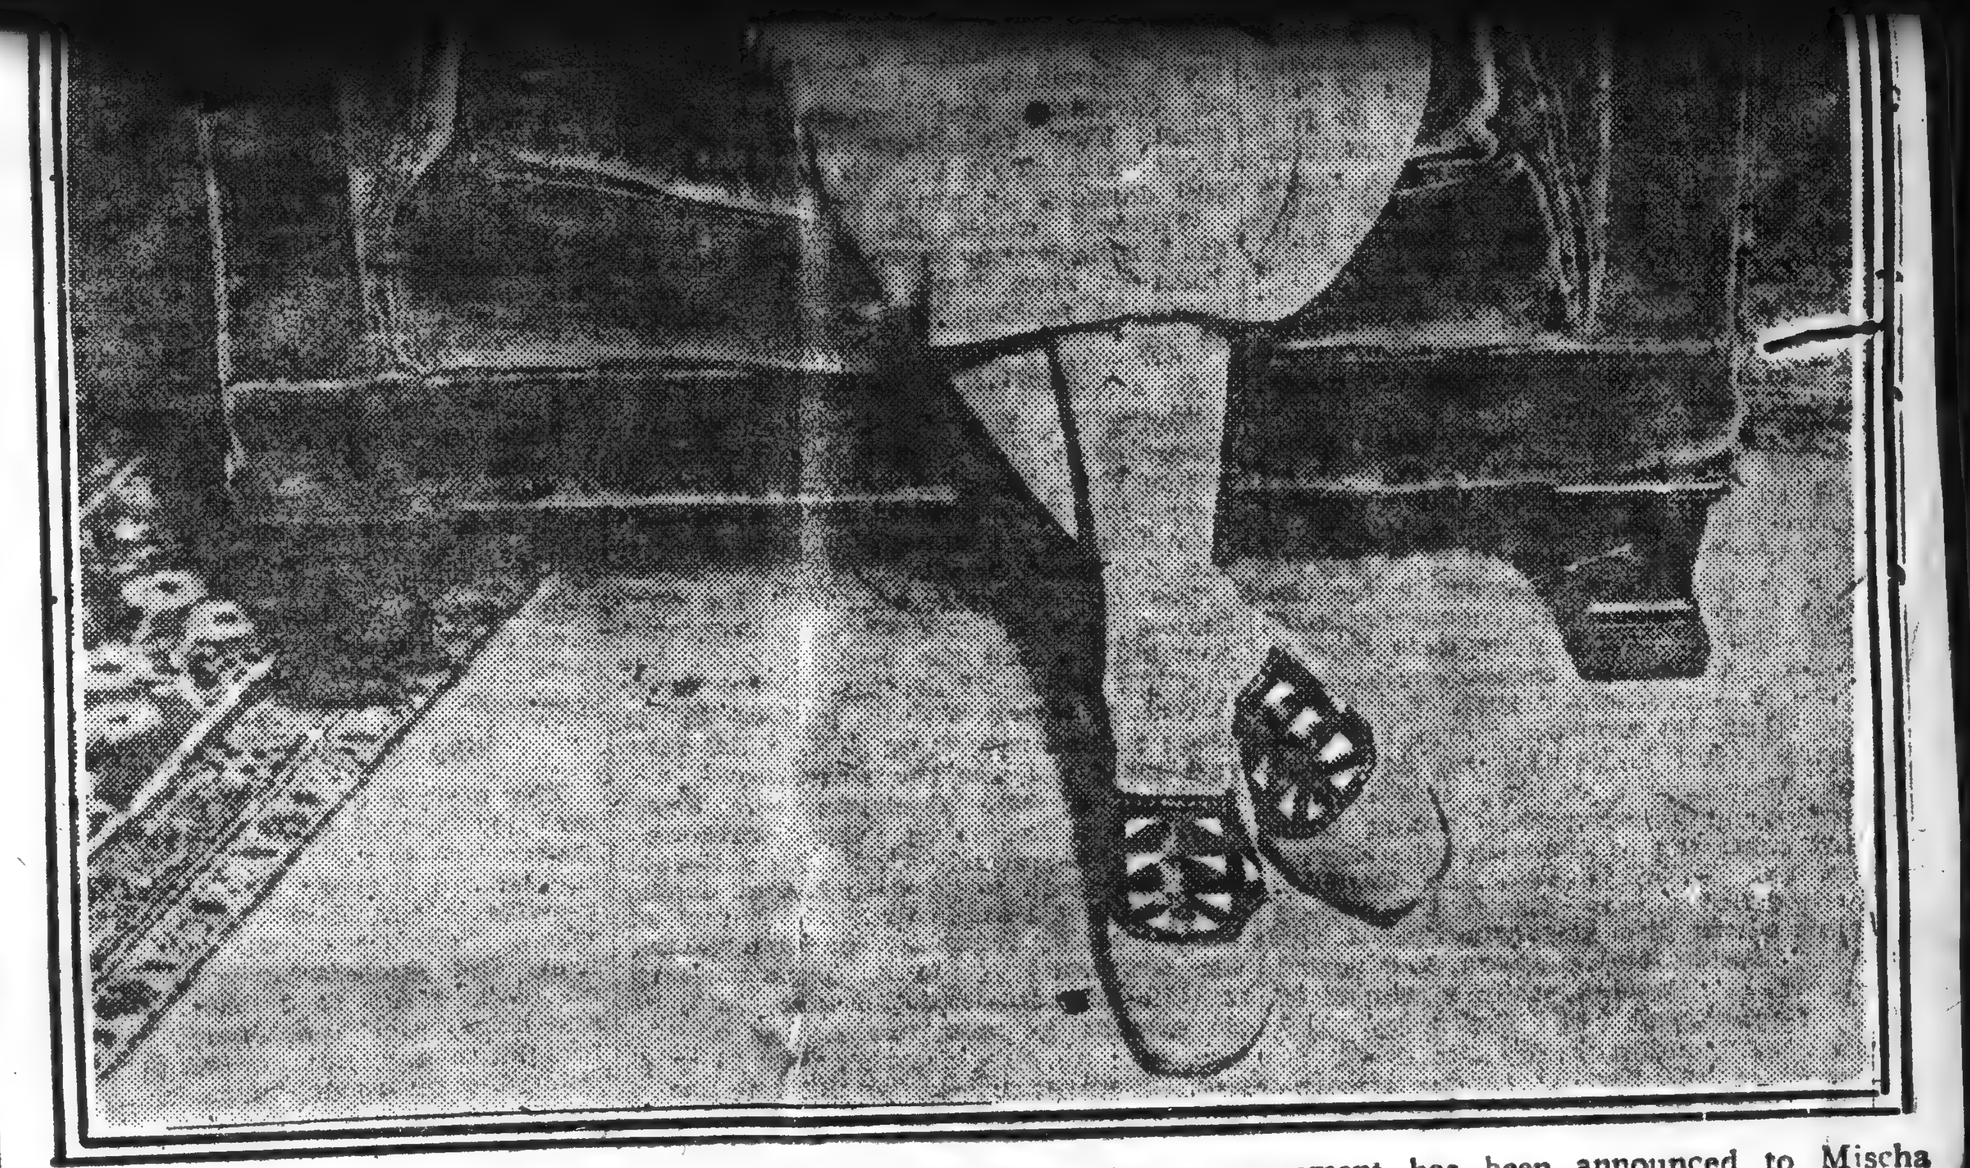
How about Mildred?

"Oh, I guess I can be domesticated," she laughed softly.

But, all the same, Mildred loves outdoor life. She likes to swim, play tennis, golf and ride.



Here is Mischa Elman's fiancee, Mildred Stone. A girl who is in direct contrast to Mischa's avowed ideal, a pronounced brunette, instead of the blonde girl of his dreams. (International photo.)



Miss Mildred Stone, sister-in-law of Rudolph Polk, violinist, whose engagement has been announced to Mischa Elman, famous violinist. Mr. Elman has for some time been reported as looking for the "ideal girl" and his engagement has been repeatedly denied. Miss Stone hails from New York city, where Mr. Elman has his residence. (P. & A. photo.)

usiasm

Oct. 16

olinist, gave a recital
yesterday afternoon,
ef Bonime, pianist.
an audience which first number was major. Other num-
were: Concerto No.
xtemps; Chaconne,
e incidental music
Nothing," work 2,
"Maid in Bridal Ar-
Funeral March,"
"Hornpipe" "Noc-
elmj, and "Jota."

excellent mood to enthusiasm with eted him and his
on was such as to pplause accorded
the superb mas-
of technique that foremost of mod-
was tenderness
on as well as the

Oct. 16

---

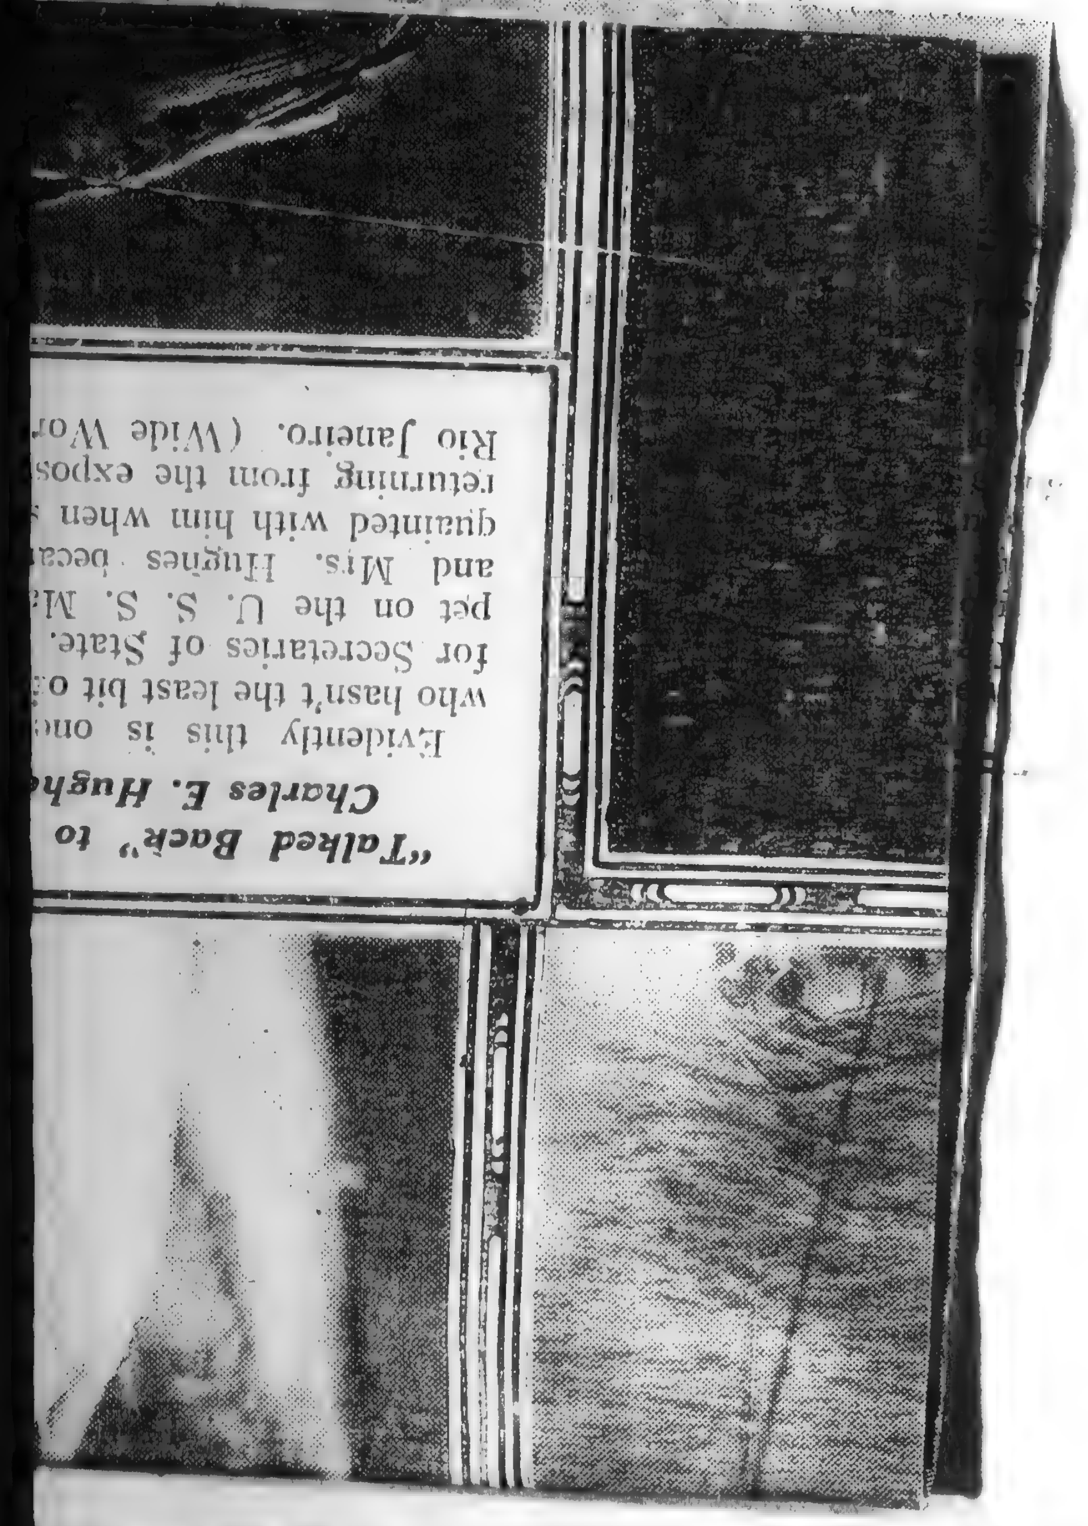
concert-halls. A part of this time he spent in reflective leisure and ripening study; more he gave to a European tour, from London to Vienna and back again, before new audiences, expectant, exacting. The wisdom of such courses now stands doubly clear. In the years when he was annual figure, often twice and three over, in Bostonian concert-halls, he usually assembled smaller and less discerning audiences than the listening company of yesterday. Then and there, persistent faults marred his playing, as though, indeed, he cherished them. He over-sentimentalized songful measures, as one who would wring forth the last drop of edification for the populace. To like end, he underscored rhythms in themselves sharp-set. His tone, musicianship, sensibility suffered under these displayful excesses. He seemed on the way to become Mr. Elman working upon his audiences for his own greater glory, rather than Mr. Elman serving his music and his instrument and letting all else go hang. What should have been the waxing maturity of his early thirties seemed by no means ripening of a remembered youth.

To glance down Mr. Elman's programme was to suspect these new intentions, to anticipate this new quality. It resembled, indeed, his choice of pieces for his recitals of old. A Sonata of Händel led the list—test of the unclouded voice of the violin and of the stripped skill of the violinist; test also of his response, mental and spiritual, to music of pure line, melody, figure. Next the Chaconne of Bach—music, similarly revealing the violinist, yet over which his own individuality, as the composer enkindles it, may more characteristically play. Then the Concerto of Vieuxtemps in A minor—piece that all the voice of the violin and all the recreating arts of the violinist must animate and glorify.

Forthwith, a brief excursion into the moderns, with the Suite of violin-pieces that young master Korngold of Vienna drew from his incidental music to "Much Ado about Nothing," when that comedy of Shakspeare was lately revived at the Residenz Theatre in Munich. (A "cubistic" revival deriding English-speaking folk labelled it). Mr. Kreisler first played the four numbers here, near two years ago. By the token of yesterday, they please another violinist also. The "Grotesque Funeral March" has discoverable, if mild, tonal humors, not for a moment comparable with a similar mocking piano-piece by Lord Berners. The final "Hornpipe" does not lack homely savor in running rhythms. The "Garden Scene," like such episodes in the play, both beautifies and bites. The "Bridal Piece" at the beginning barely escapes commonplace. All four, it is easy to hear, are also music to tempt a violinist's ranging skill, so deployed and contrasted. Finally, a Nocturne of Chopin as Wilhelmj re-spun and muted it for the violin and a Spanish dance—this time a Jota—of Sarasate. Few better than him have made tone-poems in little of these exercises in virtuosity, kept the pungency of the original dance through all the sauces of display.

Händel gave Mr. Elman two melodies to sing—one of exhaling grace in fineness of ascendant line; the other unfolding more amply, gathering, as it moved, a larger beauty. He played both in a tone as limpid, unbroken, serene and poised as is the music itself. Yet within was the sentiment that gave life to an abstract loveliness and the sensibility that for the instant, by some fine shading or light inflection, made it warm and pulsing. Händel also proffered the violinist two Allegros of running figures; Mr. Elman caught them from the composer's hand; gave them the mingled verve and evenness that composer cheerfully left to violinist, rounded them with the big-wigged Händelian flourish. With the Chaconne of Bach Mr. Elman shone in a reticence that was ripened wisdom. He did not try to make the music sound as though a full choir of violins, divided and sub-divided, were playing it. He did not

---



"Talked Back" to Charles E. Hughe

Evidently this is one who hasn't the least bit o
for Secretaries of State.
pet on the U. S. S. Ma
and Mrs. Hughes beca
quainted with him when returning from the expos
Rio Janeiro. (Wide Wor

15 oung Russian violinist, who dreamed of an ideal sweetheart for years. His ideal he found

g by Grueze (upper left), named the "Girl With the Broken Pitcher." Then Mischa fell in love. (Bain photo.)

Here is Mischa Elman's fiancee, Mildred Stone. A girl who is in direct contrast to Mischa's avowed ideal, a pronounced brunette, instead of the blonde girl of his dreams. (International photo.)

Miss Mildred Stone, sister-in-law of Rudolph Polk, violinist, whose engagement has been announced to Mischa Elman, famous violinist. Mr. Elman has for some time been reported as looking for the "ideal girl" and his engagement has been repeatedly denied. Miss Stone hails from New York city, where Mr. Elman has his residence. (P. & A. photo.)

l'ze that it was ss."
at the girl who had posed for these paintings was the wife of the artist, who also served as his model.

The portrait of the "Girl With the Broken Pitcher" represents a blonde girl—distinctly a baby type—a pre-Victorian type of the entirely feminine ideal. The woman who posed for the picture is declared by experts to have the face of a child, a "baby-doll" in modern parlance. It is the face of a girl who is pretty, but deficient in brains," according to art critics.

Madame Greuze, the woman who posed for the paintings, was an inspiration to her husband in his art, but proved to be a very poor housewife.

When Mischa Elman returned to this country the latter part of June, he is declared as saying:

"It is true that the modern woman, with her cigarettes and her make-ups, is rather distasteful to me. I am not used to it, that's all. I was brought up to admire the delicate, incompetent woman of the '90s. Today woman is independently able to take care of herself, but less attractive to the strong, protective longing of the male. Man wishes to be the superior; he wishes to dominate."

And then he went up to Lake Placid to rest from his European tour. He met Mildred Stone, who was staying with her brother-in-law, Rudolph Polk, another violinist.

Mildred is 5 ft. 3 in. tall, weighs 110 pounds. She is 23 years old.

But does she measure up to the standard, the "ideal" which was built long ago in Mischa Elman's mind?

I asked her opinion today.

"I don't know. You would have to ask Mischa that," she modestly declared. "Of course, everyone has his or her ideal. But it is not merely the superficial. The man who outwardly lives up to our ideals seldom is the man we fall in love with. The real ideal we are looking for is the inner man."

With which she adroitly turned the conversation from herself to the man in question.

"Mischa Knows Girls"

"Mischa has been all around the world and has had plenty of girls to study. He knows girls," Mrs. Stone, the mother of Mildred, explained in her broken English. Miss Stone is of Rumanian descent.

But Mildred is a brunette.

And Mischa was looking for a blonde.

Mischa's ideal was the pre-Victorian type.

Mildred is a typical flapper—bobbed hair, earrings and a flapperish lilt to her laughing voice. One can almost hear her laughing at the havoc Cupid has done to Mischa's ideal.

The girl of the picture was the baby type. Mildred's face is not of the baby type—it is far too intelligent.

But——

"Mischa likes the baby type of girl," she explained. "He likes a girl to be girlish."

Mr. Elman wants a home girl.

How about Mildred?

"Oh, I guess I can be domesticated," she laughed softly.

But, all the same, Mildred loves outdoor life. She likes to swim, play tennis, golf and ride.

Isadora Duncan

MUSIC AND THE DANCE

ISADORA DUNCAN TO DANCE IN BOSTON

Trans 9/29

October Brings Her to Symphony Hall—Mr. Monteux Breaks Precedent — Paul Hindemith, Newly Discovered German Composer — Chaliapin Variously — Miss Farrar's Sale—Caruso and Mozart

AFTER all these years Isadora again! Rumor in Europe transforms itself into fact for America. Miss Duncan is crossing the sea. Miss Duncan will go up and down so much of these United States as may still warm to her. More particularly, here in Boston she will dance thrice over—in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Oct. 19; on Friday evening, Oct. 20; on Saturday afternoon, Oct. 21. This time new Russians come in her train—Russians gathered in her brief experience as Soviet schoolmistress of the dance. Perhaps also not all the young "Duncan Dancers," of many a kindling memory, have yet been beguiled, like two or three, into wedlock. Again neutral curtains will frame Isadora. Once more an orchestra will sound for her. And to what will she not dance? For certainty to a symphonic Beethoven and Chaikovsky, an operatic Wagner and Gluck. Three different programmes has she to fill.

The years come, the years go, and only the stupid and the unwary, the callous or the supercilious presume to glance backward. Such, if they choose, may recall the distant days when Miss Duncan first danced in Boston, when Jordan Hall easily held the watching company, when she was not far from youth and near to fame. Of course she returned—to the larger spaces of Symphony Hall and the Boston Opera House, to assemblies in which the public of curiosity abounded above the public of connoisseurs. The curiosity was soon sated; the prosaic even murmured of the years and the flesh. Isadora vanished to Berlin, to Paris, wherever an impulsive or an impecunious will led her. Even when she returned to New York she forgot that Boston was little more than 200 miles away. At last, to us Bostonians she condescends—newcomer again and surely ripened. In vain may doubting Thomases hint that nowadays she only poses. Out upon them! Isadora, like the dance, is ever young.

Transcript Sept 29

ISADORA DUNCAN COMING

Isadora Duncan, the founder of the modern school of dancing, who has not appeared in this country for a considerable time, is returning from Russia with a company of young Russian dancers which she has collected and trained.

Miss Duncan is to make three appearances with her troupe in Symphony Hall, on Thursday evening, Oct. 19; Friday evening, Oct. 20, and Saturday afternoon, Oct. 21. There will be a different programme for each performance.

Globe 10/1

Globe Oct 1

Isadora Duncan is to appear at Symphony Hall Oct 19, 20 and matinee Oct 21 with a company of young Russian dancers whom she has gathered and trained during her late sojourn in Russia.

Globe 10/1

Globe Oct 1

DUNCAN CASE LIKE ALL

Trans — Oct 2

Washington, Oct. 2—Officials of the Department of Labor today maintain that no orders were issued from Washington with respect to Isadora Duncan, and Secretary Davis asserted that the Department had not been advised of the sailing of the dancer to the United States. The Secretary explained that the dancer and all members of her party would be required today to appear before the Board of review and answer all questions ordinarily propounded to other aliens upon their arrival in this country. Should any reason develop why they, in the opinion of the board should be debarred, they will have the right of appeal to the Secretary of Labor. Dr. Davis said that so far as he knew there was no reason at this time why the party should not be admitted.

Transcript Oct 2

BAR OUT ISADORA DUNCAN

Post 10/2

Famous Dancer With Russian Husband Can't Enter U. S.

THINK MARRIAGE TO FOREIGNER REASON

Husband, Young Poet, Powders His Hair in Ancient Style

ISADORA DUNCAN
Famous dancer, who is refused admittance into the United States.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—Isadora Duncan, the dancer, one of the most widely known women in the world, and to whom tribute has been paid by every nobility and aristocracy, is being held at Ellis Island following the refusal of Washington immigration officials to permit her to land.

Mlle. Duncan arrived today on the steamship Paris of the French Line. With her was her new husband, Serge Yessesin, young Russian poet, whom she married recently. He is also being held.

Ellis Island officials refused today to state the reason for the couple's detention. It is believed, however, that the dancer, because of her marriage, has lost her American citizenship, and classed as a Russian, may come under the category of undesirable citizens. Another possibility is that the monthly quota for Russians is exhausted. If this is the case, Mlle. Duncan, who has by her interpretative genius held vast audiences enthralled and whose art is internationally known, will be sent back across the seas.

Had "Soul Romance"

The dancer came out of her suite on the steamer a few minutes before quarantine inspectors boarded the vessel. According to reports she sobbed several minutes when she learned she could not land, and then retired to her suite with Yessesin. The steamship company gave security for her and she spent the night in her cabin. Some time tomorrow forenoon she will be taken to Ellis Island with her husband.

The dancer, asked about her romance, said: "I am a mystic. While I slept my soul left my body and ascended into the world where souls meet. It was there that I met my husband. We fell in love immediately as souls, and when we met in the flesh we again loved each other. Then we were married. It was a love marriage and a marriage, too, that united America and Russia."

The dancer has changed little since 1917, when she left this country to start her school of dancing in Russia. Her husband is very young and has unusually blond hair. He powders his hair it is said, in the same manner tha wigs were powdered in the early 18 century.

Washington Denies Barring Miss Duncan

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1.—Refusal c New York immigration authorities permit the landing of Isadora Duncan the dancer, and her Russian husban and secretary, was not on orders fro Washington, Secretary of Labor Dav said tonight. Other officials of the D partment of Labor, under which th Immigration Bureau operates, said the knew nothing whatever of the case.

"The question of permitting Miss Duncan or others to enter the port of New York is entirely in the hands of th authorities there," said Mr. Davis, wh explained that the Board of Inquiry a New York, which excluded aliens an others, acted on its own initiative.

"This is the first I have heard of Miss Duncan's detention, and no orders to keep her out of the country have been sent from here," he added.

Post Oct 2

BARS RAISED FOR ISADORA

Globe 10-3

She and Poet Husband Allowed to Enter

Dancer Was Held Because of Gossip, Say Officials

Thought She Might Be Soviet Courier

NEW YORK, Oct 2 (By A. P.)—Isadora Duncan and her young poet husband, Serge Yessenin, were permitted to land in the United States today after the Department of Justice had detained them 24 hours to learn whether the dancer, who arrived from Moscow yesterday, was a courier for the Russian Soviet Government.

Isadora was in a bad humor tonight and she didn't reveal much happiness over being allowed by a board of inquiry at Ellis Island to enter the country.

"They held me because I came from Moscow," she said. "What did they ask me? O, they wanted to know if I was a classical dancer. I told them I didn't know, because my dancing is personal. They wanted to know what I looked like when I danced. How did I know? I never saw myself dance."

Why Dancer Was Detained

It was officially stated at Ellis Island that, broadly speaking, the Department of Justice detained the dancer because of her long residence in Russia and gossip that connected her with the Soviet Government, and because it was suspected that she might be a courier for the Soviet on her ostensible dancing tour in this country.

It was a fretful day for Isadora. She was kept so busy and nagged so much, she complained, that she didn't have a bit of nourishment all day except one cup of coffee at breakfast time. First, she said, immigration authorities hauled her around the pier and bothered her with questions about her luggage. Then she was rushed to Ellis Island with her husband and the inquiry took up most of the afternoon.

Her New York lawyer, Nathan S. Goldberger, and her American manager, S. Hunck, worked all day in ignorance. They complained that no one would tell them what charge, if any, had been filed against the dancer. They loafed around the Ellis Island corridors all afternoon, watching the immigrants, the sparrows on the lawn and the Statue of Liberty.

Dancer in Flaming Attire

After a long wait Isadora and her smiling young husband, who is 10 years her junior, walked out of the inquiry chambers and spread the good news. Isadora was petulant and hungry. The roses she carried were drooping and dying and her bobbed henna locks needed brushing. On her feet were bizarre Russian boots and her gown, trimmed with white lambs' wool, was a stunning thing of black and red and gray stripes over an orange bodice.

She had very little to say, but young Serge, who looks quite like an American and much less than his 28 years, was laughing and chatting and having lots of fun swapping some of his knowledge of French and Russia for American slang.

They sat on the upper deck of the Ellis Island ferry—Isadora and Serge—on the way back to Manhattan and their hotel. Isadora gave one bored glance at the famous skyline, softened by the haze of twilight, and turned her head. But Serge gave it his attention. He said it was great. The most beautiful city he had ever seen. He even threatened to write a poem about it.

WHO CAUSED DETENTION OF DANCER NOT KNOWN

WASHINGTON, Oct 2—It was intimated today that Isadora Duncan, the dancer, had been detained by immigration inspectors upon her arrival at New York on information supplied by the Department of Justice and the feeling that she might be a courier from Russia.

If the Department of Justice was responsible, as seems likely, the word went direct to New York rather than through the Bureau of Immigration. The State Department announced it knew nothing of the incident and had taken no action. Director William J. Burns of the Bureau of Investigation declined to make any statement other than he presumed the dancer was detained by the [illegible] Department, which has charge of immigration matters.

Globe Oct 3

MISS DUNCAN, DANCER, DENIED ENTRY TO U. S.

Herald 10/2

Detained at New York with Her Russian Husband and Secretary

SOVIET OPINIONS ALLEGED CAUSE

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

NEW YORK, Oct. 1—Isadora Duncan, modern originator of the classic dance, born in California and claiming to be the great granddaughter of Gen. William Duncan of the revolutionary wars, arrived here today on the French liner Paris from Havre, with her husband, Serge Yessinin, the young Russian poet; Woldemar Wetluguine, a Russian poet, who travels as her secretary; her two children, maid and valet.

She was astonished when the immigration inspector informed her in brief terms that he was going to order the officials on the Paris to detain her and her husband and the secretary on board for the night, to be sent tomorrow morning to Ellis island for examination by the special board of inquiry.

HAD TROUBLE IN FRANCE

It was understood that the instructions came from Washington and had something to do with alleged soviet opinions that had been given by Isadora Duncan abroad. She had some difficulty in getting into France recently, it was said, through the same reasons on her return from Russia. Her last visit to New York was in 1917, when she brought several young girl dancers who were orphans. She has 25 more on the way from Russia now, 10 boys and 15 girls, she said.

At first Miss Duncan said decidedly that she would never go to Ellis island and would sooner return to France on the liner next Wednesday than undergo such humiliation. Later, on being informed that the commissioner of immigration would no doubt give her a fair hearing, she became more reconciled to her fate.

Miss Duncan's secretary issued a statement, in part as follows: "We are the representatives of young Russia. We are not mixing in political questions. It is only in the field of art that we are working. We believe that the soul of Russia and the soul of America are about to understand each other. We are come to America with only one idea—to tell of the Russian conscience and to work for the rapprochement of the two great countries. No politics, no propaganda."

Herald Oct 2

While they had received no direct report from New York, immigration officials here had heard intimations that the Department of Justice had been interested in the case. Assistant Commissioner General Wikon of the Bureau of Immigration called Ellis Island on the long-distance telephone this morning to make inquiries and was informed that after a hearing before a special board of inquiry this afternoon a telegraphic report would be made and forwarded to Washington. At the time Department of Labor offices were closed for the night this report had not been received.

DUNCAN DANCES

Isadora Duncan will give symphonic dance interpretations at Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, assisted by an orchestra led by Nahan Franko. Her all-Wagner program for Friday includes the "Lohengrin" prelude, Valhalla music from "Rheingold," Ride of the Valkyries, "Tannhauser" overture and bacchanale and "Tristan and Isolde" finale. The all-Tschaikowsky program for the Saturday matinee includes the "Pathetic" symphony, "Andante Cantabile" and "Marche Slave."

American Oct 1

[93]

Isadora Duncan

MUSIC AND THE DANCE

ISADORA DUNCAN TO DANCE IN BOSTON

Trans 9/29

October Brings Her to Symphony Hall—Mr. Monteux Breaks Precedent — Paul Hindemith, Newly Discovered German Composer — Chaliapin Variously — Miss Farrar's Sale—Caruso and Mozart

AFTER all these years Isadora again! Rumor in Europe transforms itself into fact for America. Miss Duncan is crossing the sea. Miss Duncan will go up and down so much of these United States as may still warm to her. More particularly, here in Boston she will dance thrice over—in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Oct. 19; on Friday evening, Oct. 20; on Saturday afternoon, Oct. 21. This time new Russians come in her train—Russians gathered in her brief experience as Soviet schoolmistress of the dance. Perhaps also not all the young "Duncan Dancers," of many a kindling memory, have yet been beguiled, like two or three, into wedlock. Again neutral curtains will frame Isadora. Once more an orchestra will sound for her. And to what will she not dance? For certainty to a symphonic Beethoven and Chaikovsky, an operatic Wagner and Gluck. Three different programmes has she to fill.

The years come, the years go, and only the stupid and the unwary, the callous or the supercilious presume to glance backward. Such, if they choose, may recall the distant days when Miss Duncan first danced in Boston, when Jordan Hall easily held the watching company, when she was not far from youth and near to fame. Of course she returned--to the larger spaces of Symphony Hall and the Boston Opera House, to assemblies in which the public of curiosity abounded above the public of connoisseurs. The curiosity was soon sated; the prosaic even murmured of the years and the flesh. Isadora vanished to Berlin, to Paris, wherever an impulsive or an impecunious will led her. Even when she returned to New York she forgot that Boston was little more than 200 miles away. At last, to us Bostonians she condescends--newcomer again and surely ripened. In vain may doubting Thomases hint that nowadays she only poses. Out upon them! Isadora, like the dance, is ever young.

Transcript Sept 29

ISADORA DUNCAN COMING

Isadora Duncan, the founder of the modern school of dancing, who has not appeared in this country for a considerable time, is returning from Russia with a company of young Russian dancers which she has collected and trained.

Miss Duncan is to make three appearances with her troupe in Symphony Hall, on Thursday evening, Oct. 19; Friday evening, Oct. 20, and Saturday afternoon, Oct. 21. There will be a different programme for each performance.

Globe 10/1

Globe Oct 1

Isadora Duncan is to appear at Symphony Hall Oct 19, 20 and matinee Oct 21 with a company of young Russian dancers whom she has gathered and trained during her late sojourn in Russia.

Globe 10/1

Globe Oct 1

DUNCAN CASE LIKE ALL

Trans — Oct 2

Washington, Oct. 2—Officials of the Department of Labor today maintain that no orders were issued from Washington with respect to Isadora Duncan, and Secretary Davis asserted that the Department had not been advised of the sailing of the dancer to the United States. The Secretary explained that the dancer and all members of her party would be required today to appear before the Board of review and answer all questions ordinarily propounded to other aliens upon their arrival in this country. Should any reason develop why they, in the opinion of the board should be debarred, they will have the right of appeal to the Secretary of Labor. Dr. Davis said that so far as he knew there was no reason at this time why the party should not be admitted.

Transcript Oct 2

BAR OUT ISADORA DUNCAN

Post 10/2

Famous Dancer With Russian Husband Can't Enter U. S.

THINK MARRIAGE TO FOREIGNER REASON

Husband, Young Poet, Powders His Hair in Ancient Style

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—Isadora Duncan, the dancer, one of the most widely known women in the world, and to whom tribute has been paid by every nobility and aristocracy, is being held at Ellis Island following the refusal of Washington immigration officials to permit her to land.

Mlle. Duncan arrived today on the steamship Paris of the French Line. With her was her new husband, Serge Yessesin, young Russian poet, whom she married recently. He is also being held.

Ellis Island officials refused today to state the reason for the couple's detention. It is believed, however, that the dancer, because of her marriage, has lost her American citizenship, and classed as a Russian, may come under the category of undesirable citizens. Another possibility is that the monthly quota for Russians is exhausted. If this is the case, Mlle. Duncan, who has by her interpretative genius held vast audiences enthralled and whose art is internationally known, will be sent back across the seas.

Had "Soul Romance"

The dancer came out of her suite on the steamer a few minutes before quarantine inspectors boarded the vessel. According to reports she sobbed several minutes when she learned she could not land, and then retired to her

ISADORA DUNCAN
Famous dancer, who is refused admittance into the United States.

suite with Yessesin. The steamship company gave security for her and she spent the night in her cabin. Some time tomorrow forenoon she will be taken to Ellis Island with her husband.

The dancer, asked about her romance, said: "I am a mystic. While I slept my soul left my body and ascended into the world where souls meet. It was there that I met my husband. We fell in love immediately as souls, and when we met in the flesh we again loved each other. Then we were married. It was a love marriage and a marriage, too, that united America and Russia."

The dancer has changed little since 1917, when she left this country to start her school of dancing in Russia. Her husband is very young and has unusually blond hair. He powders his hair, it is said, in the same manner that wigs were powdered in the early 18th century.

Washington Denies Barring Miss Duncan

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1.—Refusal c New York immigration authorities permit the landing of Isadora Duncan the dancer, and her Russian husban and secretary, was not on orders fro Washington, Secretary of Labor Dav said tonight. Other officials of the D partment of Labor, under which th Immigration Bureau operates, said the knew nothing whatever of the case.

"The question of permitting Miss Duncan or others to enter the port of Nev York is entirely in the hands of th authorities there," said Mr. Davis, wh explained that the Board of Inquiry a New York, which excluded aliens an others, acted on its own initiative.

"This is the first I have heard of Miss Duncan's detention, and no orders to keep her out of the country have been sent from here," he added.

Post Oct 2

BARS RAISED FOR ISADORA

Globe 10-3

She and Poet Husband Allowed to Enter

Dancer Was Held Because of Gossip, Say Officials

Thought She Might Be Soviet Courier

NEW YORK, Oct 2 (By A. P.)—Isadora Duncan and her young poet husband, Serge Yessenin, were permitted to land in the United States today after the Department of Justice had detained them 24 hours to learn whether the dancer, who arrived from Moscow yesterday, was a courier for the Russian Soviet Government.

Isadora was in a bad humor tonight and she didn't reveal much happiness over being allowed by a board of inquiry at Ellis Island to enter the country.

"They held me because I came from Moscow," she said. "What did they ask me? O, they wanted to know if I was a classical dancer. I told them I didn't know, because my dancing is personal. They wanted to know what I looked like when I danced. How did I know? I never saw myself dance."

Why Dancer Was Detained

It was officially stated at Ellis Island that, broadly speaking, the Department of Justice detained the dancer because of her long residence in Russia and gossip that connected her with the Soviet Government, and because it was suspected that she might be a courier for the Soviet on her ostensible dancing tour in this country.

It was a fretful day for Isadora. She was kept so busy and nagged so much, she complained, that she didn't have a bit of nourishment all day except one cup of coffee at breakfast time. First, she said, immigration authorities hauled her around the pier and bothered her with questions about her luggage. Then she was rushed to Ellis Island with her husband and the inquiry took up most of the afternoon.

Her New York lawyer, Nathan S. Goldberger, and her American manager, S. Hunck, worked all day in ignorance. They complained that no one would tell them what charge, if any, had been filed against the dancer. They loafed around the Ellis Island corridors all afternoon, watching the immigrants, the sparrows on the lawn and the Statue of Liberty.

Dancer in Flaming Attire

After a long wait Isadora and her smiling young husband, who is 10 years her junior, walked out of the inquiry chambers and spread the good news. Isadora was petulant and hungry. The roses she carried were drooping and dying and her bobbed henna locks needed brushing. On her feet were bizarre Russian boots and her gown trimmed with white lambs' wool, was a stunning thing of black and red and gray stripes over an orange bodice.

She had very little to say, but young Serge, who looks quite like an American and much less than his 28 years was laughing and chatting and having lots of fun swapping some of his knowledge of French and Russia for American slang.

They sat on the upper deck of the Ellis Island ferry—Isadora and Serge—on the way back to Manhattan and their hotel. Isadora gave one bored glance at the famous skyline, softened by the haze of twilight, and turned her head. But Serge gave it his attention. He said it was great. The most beautiful city he had ever seen. He even threatened to write a poem about it.

WHO CAUSED DETENTION OF DANCER NOT KNOWN

WASHINGTON, Oct 2—It was intimated today that Isadora Duncan, the dancer had been detained by immigration inspectors upon her arrival at New York on information supplied by the Department of Justice and the feeling that she might be a courier from Russia.

If the Department of Justice was responsible, as seems likely, the word went direct to New York rather than through the Bureau of Immigration. The State Department announced it knew nothing of the incident and had taken no action. Director William J. Burns of the Bureau of Investigation declined to make any statement other than he presumed the dancer was detained by the Labor Department, which

Globe Oct 3

While they had received no direct report from New York, immigration officials here had heard intimations that the Department of Justice had been interested in the case. Assistant Commissioner General Wikon of the Bureau of Immigration called Ellis Island on the long-distance telephone this morning to make inquiries and was informed that after a hearing before a special board of inquiry this afternoon a telegraphic report would be made and forwarded to Washington. At the time Department of Labor offices were closed for the night this report had not been received.

MISS DUNCAN, DANCER, DENIED ENTRY TO U. S.

Herald 10/2

Detained at New York with Her Russian Husband and Secretary

SOVIET OPINIONS ALLEGED CAUSE

[Special Dispatch to The Herald]

NEW YORK, Oct. 1—Isadora Duncan, modern originator of the classic dance, born in California and claiming to be the great granddaughter of Gen. William Duncan of the revolutionary wars, arrived here today on the French liner Paris from Havre, with her husband, Serge Yessinin, the young Russian poet; Woldemar Wetluguine, a Russian poet, who travels as her secretary; her two children, maid and valet.

She was astonished when the immigration inspector informed her in brief terms that he was going to order the officials on the Paris to detain her and her husband and the secretary on board for the night, to be sent tomorrow morning to Ellis island for examination by the special board of inquiry.

HAD TROUBLE IN FRANCE

It was understood that the instructions came from Washington and had something to do with alleged soviet opinions that had been given by Isadora Duncan abroad. She had some difficulty in getting into France recently, it was said, through the same reasons on her return from Russia. Her last visit to New York was in 1917, when she brought several young girl dancers who were orphans. She has 25 more on the way from Russia now, 10 boys and 15 girls, she said.

At first Miss Duncan said decidedly that she would never go to Ellis island and would sooner return to France on the liner next Wednesday than undergo such humiliation. Later, on being informed that the commissioner of immigration would no doubt give her a fair hearing, she became more reconciled to her fate.

Miss Duncan's secretary issued a statement, in part as follows: "We are the representatives of young Russia. We are not mixing in political questions. It is only in the field of art that we are working. We believe that the soul of Russia and the soul of America are about to understand each other. We are come to America with only one idea—to tell of the Russian conscience and to work for the rapprochement of the two great countries. No politics, no propaganda."

Herald Oct 2

DUNCAN DANCES

Isadora Duncan will give symphonic dance interpretations at Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, assisted by an orchestra led by Nahan Franko. Her all-Wagner program for Friday includes the "Lohengrin" prelude, Valhalla music from "Rheingold," Ride of the Valkyries, "Tannhauser" overture and bacchanale and "Tristan and Isolde" finale. The all-Tschaikowsky program for the Saturday matinee includes the "Pathetic" symphony, "Andante Cantabile" and "Marche Slave."

American Oct 1

[93]

BAR ISADORA DUNCAN AND RUSSIAN MATE

Dancer, Back From Her School in Soviet Capital, Is Held on Liner in New York

Globe 10/2

Photo by Wide World

DANCER AND POET HELD ON LINER.
Isadora Duncan and her husband, who yesterday were prevented from landing in New York.

Special Dispatch to the Globe

NEW YORK, Oct 1—Isadora Duncan was detained aboard the French liner Paris this afternoon when her ship docked here from Havre. Her passports were admittedly regular, as were those of the classical dancer's young Russian husband, Serge Essenine.

Madame Duncan confessed surprise at being detained, since she has been bill here for concerts as a Russian reli measure for some time. Federal o ficials on board and at the pier decline to say why the pair were held.

A reporter found Madame Duncan sitting disconsolately in the saloon of the ship. She was going ashore when she was stopped, wearing a white felt hat pulled down over a mass of dull red air bobbed at the shoulders. Her feet were in boots that folded just below the knee, fashioned of soft red leather inset with jade green enameled material.

Continued on the Second Page.

"Can you tell me why I am being detained?" the dancer appealed to the reporter. "This man here" (she designated the immigration official) "is im possible. Will you go outside and fi my sister, or my brother, August Daly of the Equity Players?"

The reporter told her that a larg -sized reception committee with flowe and everything were on the pier belo but that red tape was too strong break. "But why am I being held?" s asked again.

The reporter asked if she ever ha anything to do with the Soviet Gover ment, or if her husband was in any wa connected with the Lenine regime.

"I never saw Lenine or Trotsky in a the time I have been conducting school for Russian children in Mosco And my husband is just a young Ru sian poet. He's no politician. W aren't coming here to spread propagan da but to tell Americans how the chil dren over there are being neglected how they live on black bread, and ho last Christmas I saw them dance aroun a pathetic tree in a room five degree below zero."

Globe Oct 2

Isadora Duncan Shut Out of U. S.

Adv 10/2

ISADORA DUNCAN

NEW YORK.—Isadora Duncan, noted dancer, returned yesterday on the Paris, of the French line, accompanied by her new husband, Serge Yessesin. On advice from Washington the immigration authorities said she would not be permitted to land.

By the marriage to the young "imaginative" poet she loses her American citizenship.

Advertiser Oct 2

Taking It Seriously or Isadora the Immured

Trans. Oct 5

ISADORA DUNCAN at Ellis Island! The gods may well laugh. Isadora Duncan, to whom the School of Classical Dancing in America owes its foundation, put in the class with dangerous immigrants!

Here is an American artist of the very first rank, a woman whose art is developed to a subitety almost beyond appreciation, a dancer who puts into her performance not only the exquisite perfection of rhythm and poetry of movement but a vivid and restless imagination that is unsurpassed in the realm of the dance, put in a detention pen; while our immigrant officials tremble in their boots lest she convert her audience to Bolshevism.

And all the trouble seems to have arisen from the simple fact that Miss Duncan has exercised the privilege of marrying whom she pleased and that her husband happens to be a youthful Russian poet. All those who know Miss Duncan know that she is an artist little interested in social and economic problems, and her husband is an artist like her. When we Americans reach a point where we are willing to disown our own—for Miss Duncan is our own—when our own have contributed something priceless to our native art it is surely time to protest. [Anna Fitziu, the Singer, in The New York Times

DOUBTLESS more ridiculous questions could be asked than those that were put to Isadora Duncan by the immigration officials, but offhand one cannot summon any to mind. [F. P. A. in The New York World

Transcript Oct 5

ADMIT DANCER AND POET-MATE

Herald 10/3

Miss Duncan Convinces New York Officials She Is Not a Soviet Courier

ISADORA IS FRETFUL; SERGE ENJOYS DAY

NEW YORK, Oct. 2 (By A. P.)—Isadora Duncan and her young poet husband, Serge Yessenin, were permitted to land in the United States today after the department of justice had detained them 24 hours to learn whether the dancer, who arrived from Moscow yesterday, was a courier for the Russian soviet government.

Isador was in a bad humor tonight and she didn't reveal much happiness over being allowed by a board of inquiry at Ellis island to enter the country. "They held me because I came from Moscow," she said. "What did they ask me? Oh, they wanted to know if I was a classical dancer. I told them I didn't know, because my dancing is personal. They wanted to know what I looked like when I danced. How did I know? I never saw myself dance."

WHY SHE WAS DETAINED

It was officially stated at Ellis island that, broadly speaking, the department of justice detained the dancer because of her long residence in Russia and gossip that connected her with the soviet government, and because it was suspected that she might be a courier for the soviet on her ostensible dancing tour in this country.

It was a fretful day for Isadora. She was kept so busy and nagged so much, she complained, that she didn't have a bit of nourishment al day except one cup of coffee at breakfast time. First, she said, immigration authorities hauled her around the pier and bothered her with questions about her luggage. Then she was rushed to Ellis island with her husband and the inquiry took up most of the afternoon.

Her New York lawyer, Nathan S. Goldberger, and her American manager, S. Hunck, worked all day in ignorance. They complained that no one would tell them what charge, if any, had been filed against the dancer. They loafed around the Ellis island corridors all afternoon, watching the immigrants, the sparrows on the lawn and the Statue of Liberty.

SERGE MAY WRITE A—POEM—

After a long wait Isadora and her smiling young husband, who is 10 years her junior, walked out of the inquiry chambers and spread the good news. Isadora was petulant and hungry. The roses she carried were drooping and dying and her bobbed henna locks needed brushing. On her feet were bizarre Russian boots, and her gown, trimmed with white lambs wool, was a stunning thing of black and red and grey stripes over an orange bodice.

She had very little to say, but young Serge, who looks quite like an American and much less than his 28 years, was laughing and chatting and having lots of fun, swapping some of his knowledge of French and Russian for American slang.

They sat on the upper deck of the Ellis island ferry—Isadora and Serge—on the way back to Manhattan and their hotel. Isadora gave one bored glance at the famous skyline, softened by the haze of twilight, and turned her head. But Serge gave it his attention. He said it was great, the most beautiful city he had ever seen. He even threatened to write a poem about it.

Herald Oct 3

---

advantage.

ISADORA DUNCAN

Amer 10/7

Passports could not be obtained for the troupe of Russian child dancers which Isadora Duncan has trained during her sojourn in Europe and planned to bring to this country to tour with her. Therefore she will dance the entire programs of her coming three appearances in Symphony Hall, Boston, on the evenings of October 19 and 20 and the afternoon of October 21.

These programs will be symphonic in character and a full symphony orchestra under Nahan Franke will provide the music.

American Oct 7

The music from Wagner, to which Miss Duncan will dance at Symphony Hall on Friday evening, Oct. 20, comprises "The Entrance of the Gods Into Valhalla" at the end of "Das Rheingold"; "The Ride of the Valkyrs" at the beginning of the third act of "Die Walküre" and the Overture and Venusberg Scene in "Tannhäuser." No light task in the assimilation of one expressive medium to another. H. T. P.

Trans Oct 11

Transcript Oct 11

Famous Dancer Here Next Week

Adv Oct 13

America's most famous dance interpreter, Isadora Duncan, will return to Boston next week after a five-years' absence. She is to give two dance recitals at Symphony Hall, On Friday night, Oct. 20, she will interpret a Wagner program and at a matinee the following day a Tschaikowsky program.

Isadora Duncan

It was Miss Duncan's intention to bring with her some young women whom she has been training in Russia, but this plan fell through, so the aesthetic dancer will perform alone. She will have the assistance of a Symphony orchestra led by Nahan Franko, who ranks among the foremost conductors in the country.

Advertiser Oct 13

DUNCAN PROGRAM

Her 10/8

Isadora Duncan, the great dancer, who has recently arrived in this country, will make three appearances in Symphony hall, on Thursday and Friday evenings, Oct. 19 and 20, and Saturday afternoon, Oct. 21.

She will interpret symphonic music and excerpts from the music dramas of Wagner. With a symphony orchestra conducted by Nahan Franko to provide the musical part of the program, each performance will be devoted to her own dancing, unassisted. The Thursday program will consist entirely of Tchaikovsky's music and include the "Pathetic" symphony. The Friday performance will be entirely of Wagner, and the Saturday matinee will combine the two composers.

Herald Oct 8

DUNCAN DANCES

Adv 10-11

Isadora Duncan, who has not appeared in this country for years, is returning from Russia with a company of young Russian dancers. She will make three appearances in Symphony Hall, on Thursday evening, October 19; Friday evening, October 20, and Saturday afternoon, October 21.

[94] Advertiser Oct 11

Isadora Duncan having proved to the satisfaction of the Ellis Island officials that she is not a hardened, wild-eyed bolshevist bent on destroying American institutions, will dance here next week. She is still interpreting music: Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony and Slavic March have been added to her repertoire.

In New York she not only shook the hand of Mr. Franko, the conductor; she patted him on the head. Of course she made a speech, introducing her young and courageous husband as "The Walt Whitman of Russia" and saying that her red robe meant "The good red blood of Russia, and the good red blood of America, and the good red blood of all honest people."

The Tribune was deeply impressed. "she constantly suggested the lines of the poet Nekrasov:

'Thou are beggarly,
Thou are plentiful,
Thou are powerful,
O mother Russia.'"

Purists might substitute "art" for "are."

Herald 10/13

Herald Oct 13

BAR ISADORA DUNCAN AND RUSSIAN MATE

Dancer, Back From Her School in Soviet Capital, Is Held on Liner in New York

Globe 10/2

Photo by Wide World

DANCER AND POET HELD ON LINER.
Isadora Duncan and her husband, who yesterday were prevented from landing in New York.

Special Dispatch to the Globe

NEW YORK, Oct 1—Isadora Duncan was detained aboard the French liner Paris this afternoon when her ship docked here from Havre. Her passports were admittedly regular, as were those of the classical dancer's young Russian husband, Serge Essenine.

Madame Duncan confessed surprise at being detained, since she has been bill here for concerts as a Russian reli measure for some time. Federal o ficials on board and at the pier decline to say why the pair were held.

A reporter found Madame Duncan sitting disconsolately in the saloon of the ship. She was going ashore when she was stopped, wearing a white felt hat pulled down over a mass of dull red air bobbed at the shoulders. Her feet were in boots that folded just below the knee, fashioned of soft red leather inset with jade green enameled material.

Continued on the Second Page.

"Can you tell me why I am being detained?" the dancer appealed to the reporter. "This man here" (she designated the immigration official) "is impossible. Will you go outside and fi my sister, or my brother, August Daly of the Equity Players?"

The reporter told her that a larg -sized reception committee with flowe and everything were on the pier belov but that red tape was too strong break. "But why am I being held?" sh asked again.

The reporter asked if she ever ha anything to do with the Soviet Goverr ment, or if her husband was in any wa connected with the Lenine regime.

"I never saw Lenine or Trotsky in a the time I have been conducting school for Russian children in Moscov And my husband is just a young Rus sian poet. He's no politician. W aren't coming here to spread propagan da but to tell Americans how the chil dren over there are being neglected how they live on black bread, and hov last Christmas I saw them dance aroun a pathetic tree in a room five degree below zero."

Globe Oct 2

---

advantage.

ISADORA DUNCAN Amer 10/7

Passports could not be obtained for the troupe of Russian child dancers which Isadora Duncan has trained during her sojourn in Europe and planned to bring to this country to tour with her. Therefore she will dance the entire programs of her coming three appearances in Symphony Hall, Boston, on the evenings of October 19 and 20 and the afternoon of October 21.

These programs will be symphonic in character and a full symphony orchestra under Nahan Franke will provide the music.

American Oct 7

The music from Wagner, to which Miss Duncan will dance at Symphony Hall on Friday evening, Oct. 20, comprises "The Entrance of the Gods Into Valhalla" at the end of "Das Rheingold"; "The Ride of the Valkyrs" at the beginning of the third act of "Die Walküre" and the Overture and Venusberg Scene in "Tannhauser." No light task in the assimilation of one expressive medium to another. H. T. P. Trans Oct 11

Transcript Oct 11

Isadora Duncan Shut Out of U. S.

Adv 10/2

ISADORA DUNCAN

NEW YORK.—Isadora Duncan, noted dancer, returned yesterday on the Paris, of the French line, accompanied by her new husband, Serge Yessesin. On advice from Washington the immigration authorities said she would not be permitted to land.

By the marriage to the young "imaginative" poet she loses her American citizenship.

Advertiser Oct 2

Taking It Seriously or Isadora the Immured

Trans. Oct 5

ISADORA DUNCAN at Ellis Island! The gods may well laugh. Isadora Duncan, to whom the School of Classical Dancing in America owes its foundation, put in the class with dangerous immigrants!

Here is an American artist of the very first rank, a woman whose art is developed to a subltety almost beyond appreciation, a dancer who puts into her performance not only the exquisite perfection of rhythm and poetry of movement but a vivid and restless imagination that is unsurpassed in the realm of the dance, put in a detention pen; while our immigrant officials tremble in their boots lest she convert her audience to Bolshevism.

And all the trouble seems to have arisen from the simple fact that Miss Duncan has exercised the privilege of marrying whom she pleased and that her husband happens to be a youthful Russian poet. All those who know Miss Duncan know that she is an artist little interested in social and economic problems, and her husband is an artist like her. When we Americans reach a point where we are willing to disown our own—for Miss Duncan is our own—when our own have contributed something priceless to our native art it is surely time to protest. [Anna Fitziu, the Singer, in The New York Times

DOUBTLESS more ridiculous questions could be asked than those that were put to Isadora Duncan by the immigration officials, but offhand one cannot summon any to mind. [F. P. A. in The New York World

Transcript Oct 5

Famous Dancer Here Next Week

adv Oct 13

America's most famous dance interpreter, Isadora Duncan, will return to Boston next week after a five-years' absence. She is to give two dance recitals at Symphony Hall, On Friday night, Oct. 20, she will interpret a Wagner program and at a matinee the following day a Tschaikowsky program.

Isadora Duncan

It was Miss Duncan's intention to bring with her some young women whom she has been training in Russia, but this plan fell through, so the aesthetic dancer will perform alone. She will have the assistance of a Symphony orchestra led by Nahan Franke, who ranks among the foremost conductors in the country.

Advertiser Oct 13

DUNCAN PROGRAM

10/8

Isadora Duncan, the great dancer, who has recently arrived in this country, will make three appearances in Symphony hall, on Thursday and Friday evenings, Oct. 19 and 20, and Saturday afternoon, Oct. 21.

She will interpret symphonic music and excerpts from the music dramas of Wagner. With a symphony orchestra conducted by Nahan Franko to provide the musical part of the program, each performance will be devoted to her own dancing, unassisted. The Thursday program will consist entirely of Tchaikovsky's music and include the "Pathetic" symphony. The Friday performance will be entirely of Wagner, and the Saturday matinee will combine the two composers.

Herald Oct 8

DUNCAN DANCES

Adv 10-11

Isadora Duncan, who has not appeared in this country for years, is returning from Russia with a company of young Russian dancers. She will make three appearances in Symphony Hall, on Thursday evening, October 19; Friday evening October 20, and Saturday afternoon October 21.

[94] Advertiser Oct 11

ADMIT DANCER AND POET-MATE

Herald 10/3

Miss Duncan Convinces New York Officials She Is Not a Soviet Courier

ISADORA IS FRETFUL; SERGE ENJOYS DAY

NEW YORK, Oct. 2 (By A. P.)—Isadora Duncan and her young poet husband, Serge Yessenin, were permitted to land in the United States today after the department of justice had detained them 24 hours to learn whether the dancer, who arrived from Moscow yesterday, was a courier for the Russian soviet government.

Isador was in a bad humor tonight and she didn't reveal much happiness over being allowed by a board of inquiry at Ellis island to enter the country. "They held me because I came from Moscow," she said. "What did they ask me? Oh, they wanted to know if I was a classical dancer. I told them I didn't know, because my dancing is personal. They wanted to know what I looked like when I danced. How did I know? I never saw myself dance."

WHY SHE WAS DETAINED

It was officially stated at Ellis island that, broadly speaking, the department of justice detained the dancer because of her long residence in Russia and gossip that connected her with the soviet government, and because it was suspected that she might be a courier for the soviet on her ostensible dancing tour in this country.

It was a fretful day for Isadora. She was kept so busy and nagged so much, she complained, that she didn't have a bit of nourishment al day except one cup of coffee at breakfast time. First, she said, immigration authorities hauled her around the pier and bothered her with questions about her luggage. Then she was rushed to Ellis island with her husband and the inquiry took up most of the afternoon.

Her New York lawyer, Nathan S. Goldberger, and her American manager, S. Hunck, worked all day in ignorance. They complained that no one would tell them what charge, if any, had been filed against the dancer. They loafed around the Ellis island corridors all afternoon, watching the immigrants, the sparrows on the lawn and the Statue of Liberty.

SERGE MAY WRITE A—POEM—

After a long wait Isadora and her smiling young husband, who is 10 years her junior, walked out of the inquiry chambers and spread the good news. Isadora was petulant and hungry. The roses she carried were drooping and dying and her bobbed henna locks needed brushing. On her feet were bizarre Russian boots, and her gown, trimmed with white lambs wool, was a stunning thing of black and red and grey stripes over an orange bodice.

She had very little to say, but young Serge, who looks quite like an American and much less than his 28 years, was laughing and chatting and having lots of fun, swapping some of his knowledge of French and Russian for American slang.

They sat on the upper deck of the Ellis island ferry—Isadora and Serge—on the way back to Manhattan and their hotel. Isadora gave one bored glance at the famous skyline, softened by the haze of twilight, and turned her head. But Serge gave it his attention. He said it was great, the most beautiful city he had ever seen. He even threatened to write a poem about it.

Herald Oct 3

Isadora Duncan having proved to the satisfaction of the Ellis Island officials that she is not a hardened, wild-eyed bolshevist bent on destroying American institutions, will dance here next week. She is still interpreting music: Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony and Slavic March have been added to her repertoire.

In New York she not only shook the hand of Mr. Franko, the conductor; she patted him on the head. Of course she made a speech, introducing her young and courageous husband as "The Walt Whitman of Russia" and saying that her red robe meant "The good red blood of Russia, and the good red blood of America, and the good red blood of all honest people."

The Tribune was deeply impressed. "she constantly suggested the lines of the poet Nekrasov:

'Thou are beggarly,
Thou are plentiful,
Thou are powerful,
O mother Russia.' "

Herald 10/13

Purists might substitute "art" for "are."

Herald Oct 13

PERMIT ISADORA TO LAND

Post 10/13

Thought Dancer Might Be Courier for the Soviets

NEW YORK, Oct. 2 (by the Associated Press).—Isadora Duncan and her young poet husband, Serge Yessenin, were permitted to land in the United States today after the Department of Justice had detained them 24 hours to learn whether the dancer, who arrived from Moscow yesterday, was a courier for the Russian Soviet government.

ISADORA IN BAD HUMOR

Isadore was in a bad humor tonight, and she didn't reveal much happiness over being allowed by a board of inquiry at Ellis Island to enter the country.

"They held me because I came from Moscow," she said. "What did they ask me? Oh, they wanted to know if I was a classical dancer. I told them I didn't know, because my dancing is personal. They wanted to know what I looked like when I danced. How did I know? I never saw myself dance."

Fretful Day for Dancer

It was officially stated at Ellis Island that, broadly speaking, the Department of Justice detained the dancer because of her long residence in Russia and gossip that connected her with the Soviet government, and because it was suspected that she might be a courier for the Soviet on her ostensible dancing tour in this country.

It was a fretful day for Isadora. She was kept so busy and nagged so much, she complained, that she didn't have a bit of nourishment all day except one cup of coffee at breakfast time. First, she said, immigration authorities hauled her around the pier and bothered her with questions about her luggage. Then she was rushed to Ellis Island with her husband, and the inquiry took up most of the afternoon.

Husband Having Time of Life

After a long wait Isadora and her smiling young husband, who is 10 years her junior, walked out of the inquiry chambers and spread the good news. Isadora was petulant and hungry. The roses she carried were drooping and dying, and her bobbed henna locks needed brushing.

She had very little to say, but young Serge, who looks quite like an American and much less than his 23 years, was laughing and chatting and having lots of fun swapping [illegible] of his knowledge of French and Russian for American slang.

They sat on the upper deck of the Ellis Island ferry—Isadora and Serge—on the way back to Manhattan and their hotel. Isadora gave one bored glance at the famous skyline, softened by the haze of twilight, and turned her head. But Serge gave it his attention. He said it was great, the most beautiful city he had ever seen. He even threatened to write a poem about it.

Post Oct 3

Isadora Duncan's Programs

Isadora Duncan, the great dancer, who has recently arrived in this country, will make three appearances in Symphony Hall, Thursday and Friday evenings, Oct 19 and 20, and Saturday afternoon, Oct 21st.

She will interpret symphonic music and excerpts from the music dramas of Wagner. With a symphony orchestra conducted by Nahan Franko to provide the musical part of the program, each performance will be devoted to her own dancing, unassisted.

The Thursday program will consist entirely of Tchaikovsky's music and include the "Pathetic" Symphony. The Friday performance will be entirely of Wagner, and the Saturday matinee will combine the two composers. Globe 10/8

Globe Oct 8

ISADORA DUNCAN AND HUSBAND

Herald 10/4

(Photograph by P. & A. Photos, Inc.)

FAMOUS DANCER AND POET HUSBAND, WHO HAVE BEEN ADMITTED TO THE UNITED STATES AFTER HAVING BEEN HELD UP BY THE IMMIGRATION AUTHORITIES, PENDING INQUIRY AS TO WHETHER THEY MIGHT BE CONCERNED IN SOVIET PROPAGANDA

Herald Oct 4

Miss Duncan Entertains Variously — Her Programmes for Boston—Ruth St. Denis Also Returns—The Braggiottis Again

ACCORDING to the custom of her middle years, Isadora not only dances for her audiences but otherwise entertains them. In both exercises she excelled when she reappeared the other day in New York and here, from The Times, is Mr. Ghase's amusing account of the occasion:

Trans 10-13

Russia has been kind to Isadora Duncan, according to the view of 3000 admirers who filled Carnegie Hall yesterday for the artist's return after five years for an American tour. So slender she looked that it seemed the Isadora of former days who leaped and bounded through the five-step dance and military march of Chaikovsky's "Pathetic Symphony." Later, in his "Slavic March," she walked with lowbent form and bound hands, till the old Prince Luff's thrilling Russian anthem rang out in the music, and the dancer rose with free arms in one of those moments of power, such as when she last danced at the Metropolitan to wartime "Marseillaise."

Miss Duncan's great audience waited to call her back for a speech, which she began by referring to her latest invitation to Russia. She also pointed out the young poet, Serge Yussenin, now her husband, who was quickly recognized on the box tier or outside during promenades, dressed in topboots, long blouse and some yards of flowing scarf at the neck.

"Why must I go to Moscow," the dancer exclaimed, "after illusions that don't exist, when we in America also need the dance for our children. I know the American nervous child, for I was one myself. Soon I hope to show you here fifty Russian children dancing to Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. I can bring that to life in New York—make it more real than Broadway. Why does not America give me a school? That, you understand, is why I accepted the invitation to Moscow."

There was lively applause as she quoted Whitman's "I give you invitations," and continued: "The great symbol of America is Walt Whitman. America has all that Russia has not; why will America not reach out a hand to Russia as I have given my hand?" Answers came from the crowd in the form of cheers, apparently for Russia more than for the poet Yussenin.

The Evening Post is content to record the æsthetic side of the occasion, saying:

"It would appear that 'silent acting to music' would better describe the recital than the term 'dancing,' which, in ordinary usage, is far from adequate to express the emotional and interpretive ability of Miss Duncan's work. The speaking stage and the screen have, indeed, missed a great dramatic actress—but the art of dance is the gainer.

Trans 10-13

"Her programme was most unusual and interesting. The orchestra alone first played Chaikovsky's '1812' overture, after which Miss Duncan interpreted (rather than danced) the four movements of the 'Pathetic Symphony.' It is probable that a short printed explanation of the dance would have proved most helpful; but the artist's remarkable pantomime—her facial expressions and bodily gestures—brought out clearly the spirit and the emotional possibilities of the music. This much-applauded number was followed by the playing of Chaikovsky's 'Andante Cantabile' by the orchestra, and then Miss Duncan danced again—this time to the beautiful but sombre 'Slavic March'—a dance giving full vent to all the emotions—despair, joy, hate, triumph and others, following each other in swift and fleeting succession."

Transcript Oct 13

Items and Announcements

Trans 10/13

Isadora's forthcoming appearances in Boston have been been reduced to two—an evening at Symphony Hall with a "Wagner Programme" on Friday next, Oct. 20, and a matinée in the same room on Saturday, Oct. 21, with a "Chaikovsky Programme." On both occasions, a sufficient orchestra, led by the able Nahan Franko will assist her. On Saturday she will dance to the "Pathetic Symphony" and the "Slavic March"; while the orchestra will play, besides, the overture, "1812" and the slow movement of the fifth symphony. On Friday Miss Duncan will dance to the scenic music of "The Valkyrs' Ride"; to the Prelude and Closing Scene of "Tristan"; to the Apotheosis of Siegfried in "Gotterdämmerung" and to the Venusberg music in "Tannhäuser." The orchestra will play the Overture to that opera, the Prelude to "Lohengrin" and the music that ushers Wotan into Valhalla.

Transcript Oct 13

ISADORA DUNCAN

Trav 10-14

Having returned to America after several years' stay in Europe, during which time she has been particularly active training children in Moscow under the soviet government, Isadora Duncan is to make two appearances in Symphony hall on next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. The symphonic part of the program will be played by a symphony orchestra under Nahan Franko.

Traveler Oct 14

ISADORA DUNCAN

Herald Oct 15

Isadora Duncan will give danced interpretations of symphonic music in Symphony hall Friday evening at 8:15, and Saturday afternoon at 2:30. Her Friday program will be all-Wagner, her Saturday program all-Tchaikovsky. She recently danced to huge audiences in Carnegie hall, New York, presenting the same programs. Her interpretation of the "Pathetic" symphony was said to be strikingly beautiful. To the "Marche Slave" she entered, bowed over, with hands fettered behind her, and where the music turns triumphant, she burst her bonds, with the wild exultation of freedom.

Miss Duncan's return to America is her first appearance here since the world war. She was drawn to Russia by sympathy with conditions there and has lately been training children of Moscow under the soviet government.

In Boston she will present the following programs, the symphonic part to be played by Nahan Franko and a symphony orchestra:

FRIDAY EVENING
All-Wagner program
Prelude from "Lohengrin"
Orchestra
Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla from "Rheingold"
Miss Duncan
The Ride of the Walkyrie
Orchestra
Prelude and Death of Isolde
Orchestra
Overture to "Tannhaeuser," Venusberg
Bacchanal from "Tannhaeuser"
Miss Duncan

SATURDAY AFTERNOON
Symphony Hall, Boston
Overture, "1812"..........Tchaikovsky
Orchestra
Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique"
Miss Duncan
Andante Cantabile,
Orchestra
Marche Slave
Miss Duncan

Herald Oct 15

MISS DUNCAN TO DANCE HERE

Amer 10/14

Having returned to America after several years' stay in Europe, during which time she has been particularly active training children in Moscow under the Soviet government, Isadora Duncan is to make two appearances in Symphony Hall on next Friday evening, October 20, and Saturday afternoon, October 21. The symphonic part of the programs will be played by a symphony orchestra under Nahan Franko.

Isadora Duncan

On Friday only Tchaikovsky's music will be played, and Miss Duncan will dance to the "Pathetic" symphony and the "Marche Slave." When she gave the same program to a huge audience in Carnegie Halllast Saturday she was generally praised as having outstripped her classical interpretations in her new role of tragic Russia. The orchestra will also play the "1812" overture and andante cantabile.

For Saturday Miss Duncan will interpret the following numbers of Wagner: "Entrance of the Gods Into Valhalla," "Tannhauser" overture and bacchanale. The orchestra will play the prelude to "Lohengrin," the "Ride of the Valkyries," and the prelude and ove-death from "Tristan."

Alda Symphony Solist.

Frances Alda, the prima donna soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will be the first soloist of the Boston Symphony season when she appears with the orchestra at its second pair of concerts to be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. She will be heard in the aria "Vissi d'Arte," from Puccini's "La Tosca," and two songs by Josef Marx.

Pierre Monteux will revive at this concert Strauss' mighty tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," based on Nietzschke's "Philosophy of the Superman." He will also present Dvorak's Third Symphony in F major and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Fairy Legend."

American Oct 14

Friday at 8:15 Isadora Duncan, dancer, assisted by an orchestra conducted by Nahan Franko. Interpretations of Wagner. Prelude from "Lohengrin," "Ride of the Valkyries," entrance of the Gods into Valkalla from "Rheingold," funeral marcha from "Gotterdammerung," prelude and death of Isolde from "Tristan and Isolde," overture from "Tannhauser," Venusberg Bacchanal from "Tannhauser."

Saturday at 2.30 Isadora Duncan and orchestra. Interpretations of "1812" Overture, "Pathetique Symphony," "Andante Cantabile," and "Marche Slave," all by Tschaikovsky.

Globe Oct 15

Isadora Duncan

Post

Isadora Duncan will dance interpretations of symphonic music in Symphony Hall next Friday evening, Oct. 20, and Saturday afternoon, Oct. 21, at 2:30. Her Friday programme will be all-Wagner, and her Saturday programme all-Tschaikowsky.

Post Oct 15

AND ISADORA DANCES

Wagner and Chaikovsky Obligingly Providing the Music—The Return of a Celebrated Figure Trans 10/16

The forthcoming appearances of Miss Duncan in Boston have been reduced to two—an evening at Symphony Hall with a "Wagner Programme" on Friday next, Oct. 20, and a matinée in the same room on Saturday, Oct. 21, with a "Chaikovsky Programme." On both occasions, a sufficient orchestra, led by the able Nahan Franko will assist her. On Saturday she will dance to the "Pathetic Symphony" and the "Slavic March"; while the orchestra will play, besides, the overture, "1812" and the slow movement of the fifth symphony. On Friday Miss Duncan will dance to the scenic music of "The Valkyrs' Ride"; to the Prelude and Closing Scene of "Tristan"; to the Apotheosis of Siegfried in "Gotterdämmerung" and to the Venusberg music in "Tannhäuser." The orchestra will play the Overture to that opera, the Prelude to "Lohengrin" and the music that ushers Wotan into Valhalla.

Transcript Oct 16

ISADORA

Oct 15

Perhaps Miss Isadora Duncan is grieved because she is characterized in "Who's Who in the Theatre" as "danseuse" and not "interpretative dancer." Some one was asking not long ago her age. According to "Who's Who in the Theatre" she was born at San Francisco in 1880, and made her first appearance on the stage at Daly's, New York, April 13, 1895, as a fairy in "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Judge Daly says in the life of his brother, that she made her debut as one of the geishas in "The Geisha Girl" at Daly's, Sept. 9, 1896, and on March 12, 1897, danced with two other girls a gypsy dance in the prologue to "Meg Merrilies."

We are under the impression that her first appearance as an "interpreter" was on a lawn at Newport when Mr. John Mullaly led the orchestra. Was it not in 1900 at New York that she first danced "The Rubaiyat"?

The programs of her two entertainments here this week are printed among the announcements. When she danced, or rather interpreted, Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic" Symphony in New York on Oct. 6, it was said that a short printed explanation of the dance would have proved helpful; "but the artist's remarkable pantomime—her facial expressions and bodily gestures—brought out clearly the spirit and the emotional possibilities of the music," and the "Slavic March" gave vent to all the emotions—"despair, joy, hate, triumph and others, following each other in swift and fleeting succession."

The Tribune said: "Although Miss Duncan has appeared before as an interpreter of symphonic music, the character of her dancing hitherto has been conspicuously of the classic type, the suave and harmonious posturings to be found in Grecian sculpture. Yesterday her art assumed a deeper significance and aroused profounder emotions. In place of the Grecian maiden, capering to the music of her own gay piping or playing at ball, an epochal figure confronted the audience, the figure of Russia.

'In every pose and gesture, in the emotional gamut reflected by eloquent facial play, Miss Duncan portrayed the hopes, fears, disillusionments and sufferings of the Russian nation. In the first movement of the Symphony as in the last when, as a stricken mother, trailing sombre robes of mourning, she sorrowed over the bodies of her fallen sons, Miss Duncan's art touched greatness. The two intervening movements, in which she reverted to lighter methods provided contrast. Extraordinarily effective was her rendering of the closing pages of the third movement."

Herald Oct 15

"Enter Madame!"

Isadora Duncan

Dancing, 1896

Dancing, 1922

From a Photograph Taken Since Her Return to the United States

Transcript Oct 14

Duncaniana

Again the Celebrated Dancer Returns to Bostonian Stage—Again Her Ways and Works Stir Debate

Trans 10/16

Reminiscence

SHE had first danced in New York in the late Ethelbert Nevin's studio at Carnegie Hall, where a few appreciative folk recognized her as doing rare and lovely things. Then, with her bits of rose and gray gauze, her ideals and her courage, she sailed away. The progress led to Germany. There she chanced one evening to dance in the studio of Franz von Stück the painter, and the art-world of Munich was talking of her next day. It was there in Munich that Miss Duncan's dancing was estabitished as a definite, significant art; it was also in Germany that she acquired the confidence in her work which enabled her later to start her Paris school, as well as her sister's in Berlin, and prepare to perpetuate "The Dance of the Future."

That "futurist" dance was designed as "a return to simplicity, beauty and truth." As Miss Duncan said in her lectures: "All other arts have recognized that great art must be nude art. Dancing alone has feared the nude." Thus proclaiming it as one of the elements of plastic art, as in practice did the Greeks, Miss Duncan dared to insist upon a freedom from all but the merest illusion of clothes and, to the terror of the prude and the interest of the vulgar, danced with arms and legs bare and uncorseted body, draped only with lightly blowing gauze.

Whatever the technical shortcomings, the new idea was indeed revolutionary in the classic ballet. "All the movements of our modern ballet school are sterile movements because they are unnatural," Isadora argued. "Their purpose is to create the delusion that the law of gravitation does not exist for them. The primary or fundamental movements of the new school of the dance must have within them the seeds from which will evolve all other movements, each in turn to give birth to others in unending sequence of still higher expressions, thoughts and ideas." [The New York Times

Practice and Progress

IT was the fashion once to oppose the school of the ballet to that revival of pure Greek standards initiated by Isadora Duncan. We have not the least hesitation in saying that the conflict was imaginary. If anyone doubts it, let him refer to what is practically the only scientific treatise on dancing ever written, Maurice Emmanuel's "L'Orchestique Grecque." There he will see how modern ballet dancing has slowly been elaborated by the vigorous, patient application to Greek principles. It has been an effort to develop and enrich them, not to abolish them. That it has here and there overreached itself, like all sustained technical disciplines is a charge that need not be disputed. That Isadora Duncan should have recalled it to first principles by a deliberate recurrence to the restricted, but perfect, technique of its original models was a great benefit to it. It is true that while there has been a succession of great ballerinas, Duncan has had no worthy disciples (which simply proves that reactions are rarely creative), but from the union of the ballet and Duncan sprang Fokine, and his disciple Bolm. A ballet like "The Sylphs" represents a true and powerful advance along those classical lines which can alone save dancing from hopping eccentricities. If that particular ballet was rather a pruning away of superfluous complexities than a fresh application of the eternal principles, Fokine showed elsewhere the abundance of his original vigor.

He was (he still is, we may hope) a maste of harmonies because he so rarely trans gressed the laws of his art.

> N'était-il, à la lettre, ce que nous entendons aujourd'hui par un dieu? Il signifiait un plaisir tout à fait exempt de douleur, un mouvement libre et un acte pur.

Monsieur Maurras uses these words o one of the relics on the Acropolis; the can be applied as well to the creations o a Fokine. [The Athenæum, London.

* * *

Now to Russia

IN every pose and gesture, in the emo tional gamut reflected by eloquen facial play, Miss Duncan now portray the hopes, fears, disillusionments and su ferings of the Russian nation. In the firs movement of Chaikovsky's "Pathetic Syn phony," as in the last, when, as a stricke mother, trailing sombre robes of mournin she sorrows over the bodies of her fallen sons, Miss Duncan touched greatness. The two intervening movements in which she reverted to lighter methods provided contrast. Extraordinarily effective was her version of the closing pages of the third movement. Most striking, too, was her interpretation of the Slavic March, in which she depicted the tragedies of serfdom. Entering with hands chained and back bent beneath the weight of tyranny, she finally wrenched the fetters apart with seemingly superhuman efforts, and danced wildly in exultation as freedom triumphant. Throughout the afternoon Miss Duncan constantly suggested the lines of the poet Nekrasov:

Thou are beggarly,
Thou are plentiful,
Thou art infirm,
Thou are powerful,
O mother Russia!

[The New York Tribune

* * *

Dissent

THE duty of any artist, it seems to us, is twofold—to feel and to evoke. He must be moved, and he must be able to arouse emotion. The commonest criticism of any work of art (and if true, the most damning) is that "it doesn't mean anything"—that is, the artist has failed to convey the emotion he feels to the hearer or spectator. Beethoven, they say, used to talk and gesticulate as he composed. But he did not stop at gesticulating. He translated what he felt into terms of sound, and because he had genius, was able to make his hearers feel something too. Sometimes a purely formal work of art, one without conscious emotional intent, can move us by its sheer perfection—a Greek column, for instance, or the soaring beauty of the Woolworth tower. So that perhaps the power to arouse emotion is even more important in an art-work than the emotional state of the artist.

Movements and gestures have an undeniable emotional power. It is exciting to see Anna Pavlova dance, so perfect is the rhythm and pattern of her dancing. A master of pantomime, like Charles Chaplin or Bessie McCoy, can tell a story so vividly with a few gestures that the spectator, seeing, is made to feel. Sheer motion itself is stimulating. It is thrilling to see a drill by the West Point Cadets, to behold the marvellous and sinister unison of those moving arms and legs. But—and here is the crux of our plea—the very thing that makes the West Pointers a moving sight is their preoccupation with form, their innocence of any designs upon the emotions of the spectator. They are marching, not interpreting or expressing anything, and their unconsciousness of any artistic intent is what intensifies our emotions when we see them. There are few more thrillingly beautiful sights in the world than a group of race horses in full stride, or a group of athletes taking a string of hurdles. Both are the apotheosis of grace, rhythm and speed. But suppose the horses and the hurdlers were running, not in the effort to win, but in an attempt to interpret or visualize or symbolize the "Soul of the Race Track" or "The Spirit of Fair Play." Would not the very self-consciousness of their performance tend to destroy its effect upon us?

And that is how we feel about Miss Duncan's dancing. It is not pure form; she performs no steps, conveys no sense of a definite and recurrent pattern. Nor is it pantomime. She tells no definite story that we can discern; there is no sense of the passage of time in her work. She tries to "interpret" the music, to enhance the emotional and spiritual meaning of a composition by means of gestures and facial expressions that convey neither a sense of form nor a feeling of drama—gestures and expressions that to us are the result but not the cause of emotion.

Is there such a thing as abstract dancing? Is there an art without form? A piece of wall paper is a design, an essentially meaningless form that is grasped by the intellect because it possesses balance and, generally, repetition. A painting is either a narrative or a representation. No efforts of cubist or vorticist have yet convinced us that one can successfully paint a pure state of mind. Take music. What we call "absolute" or abstract music is really the most extreme development of formal design. The first movement of a symphony, or a fugue, has a pattern as definite and arbitrary as a piece of linoleum. The symphonic poem abandons the balanced form of absolute music but retains coherence by being written around a narrative or some definite idea. Dramatic music—the music of Richard Wagner above all—is structured entirely upon narrative, portraiture, or pictorial concepts

Miss Duncan, apparently, chooses to rely upon no form beyond the gestures of emotion. She interpreted "The Glorifiction of Siegfried' by crouching in attitudes of despair or standing erect in attitudes of exultation. It seemed inadequate. In our eyes was fixed irrevocably an image—not a memory, merely a scene from our own imagination—of bowed and hooded bearing a shrouded catafalque moonlit forests. What we saw on neither assisted nor stimulated our nation but merely got in the wa interpreted the Ride of the Valkyr manner of one watching the daught Wotan as they rode. We would have ferred not to watch another spectator to see or imagine the Valkyrs themsel In the final scene from "Tristan" Duncan impersonated the crouching despairing Isolde; but we have seen Fremstad do that magnificently, and in the bargain. The music seemed much greater than the dancer; nor did the dancer seem to be expressing anything the music was not saying better.

. . . . In a word the art of in terpretative dancing, as Miss Dun practises it seems to us to be ideal means of expressing one's tions, and a totally inadequate of conveying them. We can have doubt that Miss Duncan felt deeply, that she was expressing those feelin But merely to feel and express is enough. If it were, any one might be great tragic actor by weeping upon stage. The artist must re-create wha he feels, must make the spectator fe it too. To us, this simply did not happe We saw only a woman behaving emotional ly in the presence of great music. [Dea Taylor in The New York World

ISADORA

Oct 5

Perhaps Miss Isadora Duncan is grieved because she is characterized in "Who's Who in the Theatre" as "danseuse" and not "interpretative dancer." Some one was asking not long ago her age. According to "Who's Who in the Theatre" she was born at San Francisco in 1880, and made her first appearance on the stage at Daly's, New York, April 13, 1895, as a fairy in "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Judge Daly says in the life of his brother, that she made her debut as one of the geishas in "The Geisha Girl" at Daly's, Sept. 9, 1896, and on March 12, 1897, danced with two other girls a gypsy dance in the prologue to "Meg Merrilies."

We are under the impression that her first appearance as an "interpreter" was on a lawn at Newport when Mr. John Mullaly led the orchestra. Was it not in 1900 at New York that she first danced "The Rubaiyat"?

The programs of her two entertainments here this week are printed among the announcements. When she danced, or rather interpreted, Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic" Symphony in New York on Oct. 6, it was said that a short printed explanation of the dance would have proved helpful; "but the artist's remarkable pantomime—her facial expressions and bodily gestures—brought out clearly the spirit and the emotional possibilities of the music," and the "Slavic March" gave vent to all the emotions—"despair, joy, hate, triumph and others, following each other in swift and fleeting succession."

The Tribune said: "Although Miss Duncan has appeared before as an interpreter of symphonic music, the character of her dancing hitherto has been conspicuously of the classic type, the suave and harmonious posturings to be found in Grecian sculpture. Yesterday her art assumed a deeper significance and aroused profounder emotions. In place of the Grecian maiden, capering to the music of her own gay piping or playing at ball, an epochal figure confronted the audience, the figure of Russia.

'In every pose and gesture, in the emotional gamut reflected by eloquent facial play, Miss Duncan portrayed the hopes, fears, disillusionments and sufferings of the Russian nation. In the first movement of the Symphony as in the last when, as a stricken mother, trailing sombre robes of mourning, she sorrowed over the bodies of her fallen sons, Miss Duncan's art touched greatness. The two intervening movements, in which she reverted to lighter methods provided contrast. Extraordinarily effective was her rendering of the closing pages of the third movement."

Herald Oct 15

"Enter Madame!"

Isadora Duncan

Dancing, 1896 Dancing, 1922

From a Photograph Taken Since Her Return to the United States

Transcript Oct 14

Duncaniana

Again the Celebrated Dancer Returns to Bostonian Stage—Again Her Ways and Works Stir Debate

Trans 10/16

Reminiscence

SHE had first danced in New York in the late Ethelbert Nevin's studio at Carnegie Hall, where a few appreciative folk recognized her as doing rare and lovely things. Then, with her bits of rose and gray gauze, her ideals and her courage, she sailed away. The progress led to Germany. There she chanced one evening to dance in the studio of Franz von Stück the painter, and the art-world of Munich was talking of her next day. It was there in Munich that Miss Duncan's dancing was established as a definite, significant art; it was also in Germany that she acquired the confidence in her work which enabled her later to start her Paris school, as well as her sister's in Berlin, and prepare to perpetuate "The Dance of the Future."

That "futurist" dance was designed as "a return to simplicity, beauty and truth." As Miss Duncan said in her lectures: "All other arts have recognized that great art must be nude art. Dancing alone has feared the nude." Thus proclaiming it as one of the elements of plastic art, as in practice did the Greeks, Miss Duncan dared to insist upon a freedom from all but the merest illusion of clothes and, to the terror of the prude and the interest of the vulgar, danced with arms and legs bare and uncorseted body, draped only with lightly blowing gauze.

Whatever the technical shortcomings, the new idea was indeed revolutionary in the classic ballet. "All the movements of our modern ballet school are sterile movements because they are unnatural," Isadora argued. "Their purpose is to create the delusion that the law of gravitation does not exist for them. The primary or fundamental movements of the new school of the dance must have within them the seeds from which will evolve all other movements, each in turn to give birth to others in unending sequence of still higher expressions, thoughts and ideas." [The New York Times

* * *

Practice and Progress

IT was the fashion once to oppose the school of the ballet to that revival of pure Greek standards initiated by Isadora Duncan. We have not the least hesitation in saying that the conflict was imaginary. If anyone doubts it, let him refer to what is practically the only scientific treatise on dancing ever written, Maurice Emmanuel's "L'Orchestique Grecque." There he will see how modern ballet dancing has slowly been elaborated by the vigorous, patient application to Greek principles. It has been an effort to develop and enrich them, not to abolish them. That it has here and there overreached itself, like all sustained technical disciplines is a charge that need not be disputed. That Isadora Duncan should have recalled it to first principles by a deliberate recurrence to the restricted, but perfect, technique of its original models was a great benefit to it. It is true that while there has been a succession of great ballerinas, Duncan has had no worthy disciples (which simply proves that reactions are rarely creative), but from the union of the ballet and Duncan sprang Fokine, and his disciple Bolm. A ballet like "The Sylphs" represents a true and powerful advance along those classical lines which can alone save dancing from hopping eccentricities. If that particular ballet was rather a pruning away of superfluous complexities than a fresh application of the eternal principles, Fokine showed elsewhere the abundance of his original vigor.

He was (he still is, we may hope) a maste of harmonies because he so rarely transgressed the laws of his art.

> N'était-il, à la lettre, ce que nous entendons aujourd'hui par un dieu? Il signifiait un plaisir tout à fait exempt de douleur, un mouvement libre et un acte pur.

Monsieur Maurras uses these words o one of the relics on the Acropolis; the can be applied as well to the creations o a Fokine. [The Athenæum, London.

* * *

Now to Russia

IN every pose and gesture, in the emotional gamut reflected by eloquen facial play, Miss Duncan now portray the hopes, fears, disillusionments and sufferings of the Russian nation. In the firs movement of Chaikovsky's "Pathetic Symphony," as in the last, when, as a stricke mother, trailing sombre robes of mournin she sorrows over the bodies of her fallen sons, Miss Duncan touched greatness. The two intervening movements in which she reverted to lighter methods provided contrast. Extraordinarily effective was her version of the closing pages of the third movement. Most striking, too, was her interpretation of the Slavic March, in which she depicted the tragedies of serfdom. Entering with hands chained and back bent beneath the weight of tyranny, she finally wrenched the fetters apart with seemingly superhuman efforts and danced wildly in exultation as freedom triumphant. Throughout the afternoon Miss Duncan constantly suggested the lines of the poet Nekrasov:

Thou are beggarly,
Thou are plentiful,
Thou art infirm,
Thou are powerful,
O mother Russia!

[The New York Tribune

* * *

Dissent

THE duty of any artist, it seems to us, is twofold—to feel and to evoke. He must be moved, and he must be able to arouse emotion. The commonest criticism of any work of art (and if true, the most damning) is that "it doesn't mean anything"—that is, the artist has failed to convey the emotion he feels to the hearer or spectator. Beethoven, they say, used to talk and gesticulate as he composed. But he did not stop at gesticulating. He translated what he felt into terms of sound, and because he had genius, was able to make his hearers feel something too. Sometimes a purely formal work of art, one without conscious emotional intent, can move us by its sheer perfection—a Greek column, for instance, or the soaring beauty of the Woolworth tower. So that perhaps the power to arouse emotion is even more important in an art-work than the emotional state of the artist.

Movements and gestures have an undeniable emotional power. It is exciting to see Anna Pavlova dance, so perfect is the rhythm and pattern of her dancing. A master of pantomime, like Charles Chaplin or Bessie McCoy, can tell a story so vividly with a few gestures that the spectator, seeing, is made to feel. Sheer motion itself is stimulating. It is thrilling to see a drill by the West Point Cadets, to behold the marvellous and sinister unison of those moving arms and legs. But—and here is the crux of our plea—the very thing that makes the West Pointers a moving sight is their preoccupation with form, their innocence of any designs upon the emotions of the spectator. They are marching, not interpreting or expressing anything, and their unconsciousness of any artistic intent is what intensifies our emotions when we see them. There are few more thrillingly beautiful sights in the world than a group of race horses in full stride, or a group of athletes taking a string of hurdles. Both are the apotheosis of grace, rhythm and speed. But suppose the horses and the hurdlers were running, not in the effort to win, but in an attempt to interpret or visualize or symbolize the "Soul of the Race Track" or "The Spirit of Fair Play." Would not the very self-consciousness of their performance tend to destroy its effect upon us?

And that is how we feel about Miss Duncan's dancing. It is not pure form: she performs no steps, conveys no sense of a definite and recurrent pattern. Nor is it pantomime. She tells no definite story that we can discern; there is no sense of the passage of time in her work. She tries to "interpret" the music, to enhance the emotional and spiritual meaning of a composition by means of gestures and facial expressions that convey neither a sense of form nor a feeling of drama—gestures and expressions that to us are the result but not the cause of emotion.

Is there such a thing as abstract dancing? Is there an art without form? A piece of wall paper is a design, an essentially meaningless form that is grasped by the intellect because it possesses balance and, generally, repetition. A painting is either a narrative or a representation. No efforts of cubist or vorticist have yet convinced us that one can successfully paint a pure state of mind. Take music. What we call "absolute" or abstract music is really the most extreme development of formal design. The first movement of a symphony, or a fugue, has a pattern as definite and arbitrary as a piece of linoleum. The symphonic poem abandons the balanced form of absolute music but retains coherence by being written around a narrative or some definite idea. Dramatic music—the music of Richard Wagner above all—is structured entirely upon narrative, portraiture, or pictorial concepts

Miss Duncan, apparently, chooses to rely upon no form beyond the gestures of emotion. She interpreted "The Glorifiction of Siegfried' by crouching in attitudes of despair or standing erect in attitudes of exultation. It seemed inadequate. In our eyes was fixed irrevocably an image—not a memory, merely a scene from our own imagination—of bowed and hooded bearing a shrouded catafalque t moonlit forests. What we saw on th neither assisted nor stimulated our nation but merely got in the wa interpreted the Ride of the Valkyr manner of one watching the daughters Wotan as they rode. We would have p ferred not to watch another spectator to see or imagine the Valkyrs themsel In the final scene from "Tristan" M Duncan impersonated the crouching a despairing Isolde; but we have seen O Fremstad do that magnificently, and a in the bargain. The music seemed alw much greater than the dance; nor did the dancer seem to be expressing anything the music was not saying better.

. . . . In a word the art of i terpretative dancing, as Miss Dun practises it seems to us to be a ideal means of expressing one's em tions, and a totally inadequate mea of conveying them. We can have n doubt that Miss Duncan felt deeply, a that she was expressing those feeling But merely to feel and express is enough. If it were, any one might be great tragic actor by weeping upon th stage. The artist must re-create wh he feels, must make the spectator fe it too. To us, this simply did not happen. We saw only a woman behaving emotionally in the presence of great music. [Dems Taylor in The New York World

[96]

ISADORA

Perhaps Miss Isadora Duncan is grieved because she is characterized in "Who's Who in the Theatre" as "danseuse" and not "interpretative dancer." Some one was asking not long ago her age. According to "Who's Who in the Theatre" she was born at San Francisco in 1880, and made her first appearance on the stage at Daly's, New York, April 13, 1895, as a fairy in "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Judge Daly says in the life of his brother, that she made her debut as one of the geishas in "The Geisha Girl" at Daly's, Sept. 9, 1896, and on March 12, 1897, danced with two other girls a gypsy dance in the prologue to "Meg Merrilies."

We are under the impression that her first appearance as an "interpreter" was on a lawn at Newport when Mr. John Mullaly led the orchestra. Was it not in 1900 at New York that she first danced "The Rubaiyat"?

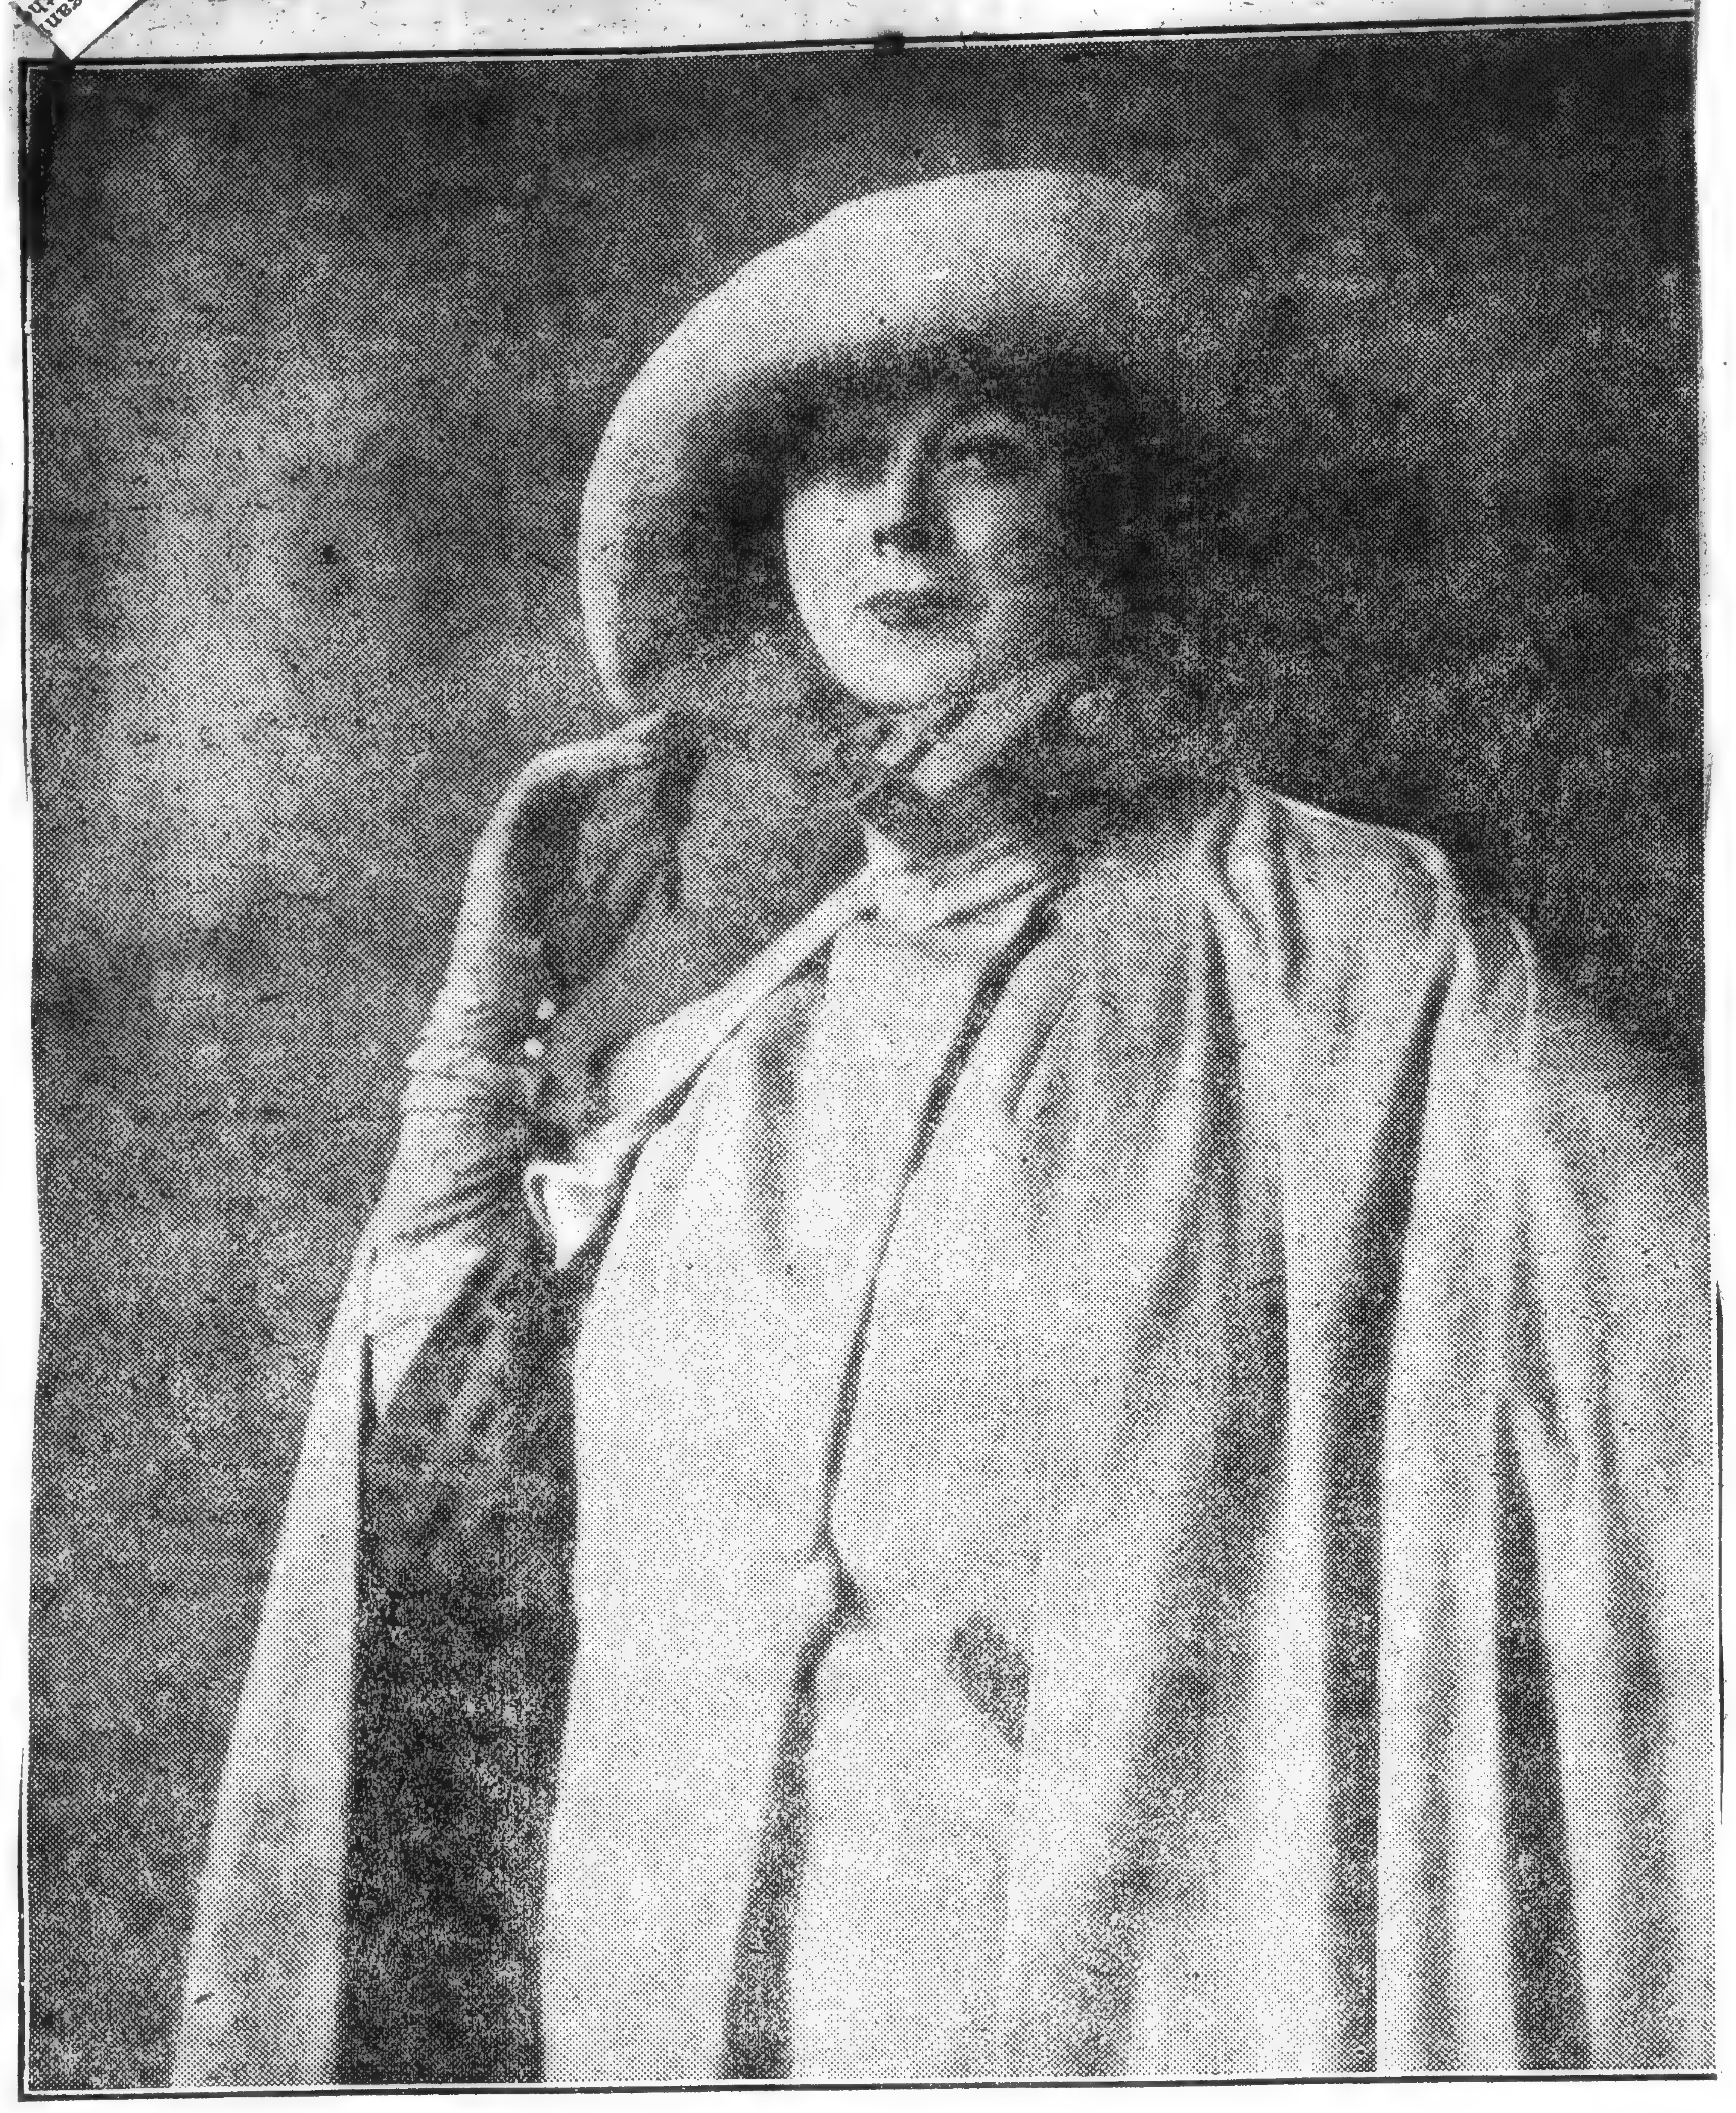
The programs of her two entertainments here this week are printed among the announcements. When she danced, or rather interpreted, Tchaikovsky's "Pathetic" Symphony in New York on Oct. 6, it was said that a short printed explanation of the dance would have proved helpful; "but the artist's remarkable pantomime—her facial expressions and bodily gestures—brought out clearly the spirit and the emotional possibilities of the music," and the "Slavic March" gave vent to all the emotions—"despair, joy, hate, triumph and others, following each other in swift and fleeting succession."

The Tribune said: "Although Miss Duncan has appeared before as an interpreter of symphonic music, the character of her dancing hitherto has been conspicuously of the classic type, the suave and harmonious posturings to be found in Grecian sculpture. Yesterday her art assumed a deeper significance and aroused profounder emotions. In place of the Grecian maiden, capering to the music of her own gay piping or playing at ball, an epochal figure confronted the audience, the figure of Russia.

'In every pose and gesture, in the emotional gamut reflected by eloquent facial play, Miss Duncan portrayed the hopes, fears, disillusionments and sufferings of the Russian nation. In the first movement of the Symphony as in the last when, as a stricken mother, trailing sombre robes of mourning, she sorrowed over the bodies of her fallen sons, Miss Duncan's art touched greatness. The two intervening movements, in which she reverted to lighter methods provided contrast. Extraordinarily effective was her rendering of the closing pages of the third movement."

Herald Oct 15

"Enter Madame!"



Isadora Duncan

Dancing, 1896 Dancing, 1922

From a Photograph Taken Since Her Return to the United States

Transcript Oct 14

Duncaniana

Again the Celebrated Dancer Returns to Bostonian Stage—Again Her Ways and Works Stir Debate

Tra

Reminiscence

She had first danced in New York in the late Ethelbert Nevin's studio at Carnegie Hall, where a few appreciative folk recognized her as doing rare and lovely things. Then, with her bits of rose and gray gauze, her ideals and her courage, she sailed away. The progress led to Germany. There she chanced one evening to dance in the studio of Franz von Stück the painter, and the art-world of Munich was talking of her next day. It was there in Munich that Miss Duncan's dancing was established as a definite, significant art; it was also in Germany that she acquired the confidence in her work which enabled her later to start her Paris school, as well as her sister's in Berlin, and prepare to perpetuate "The Dance of the Future."

That "futurist" dance was designed as "a return to simplicity, beauty and truth." As Miss Duncan said in her lectures: "All other arts have recognized that great art must be nude art. Dancing alone has feared the nude." Thus proclaiming it as one of the elements of plastic art, as in practice did the Greeks, Miss Duncan dared to insist upon a freedom from all but the merest illusion of clothes and, to the terror of the prude and the interest of the vulgar, danced with arms and legs bare and uncorseted body, draped only with lightly blowing gauze.

Whatever the technical shortcomings, the new idea was indeed revolutionary in the classic ballet. "All the movements of our modern ballet school are sterile movements because they are unnatural," Isadora argued. "Their purpose is to create the delusion that the law of gravitation does not exist for them. The primary or fundamental movements of the new school of the dance must have within them the seeds from which will evolve all other movements, each in turn to give birth to others in unending sequence of still higher expressions, thoughts and ideas." [The New York Times

* * *

Practice and Progress

It was the fashion once to oppose the school of the ballet to that revival of pure Greek standards initiated by Isadora Duncan. We have not the least hesitation in saying that the conflict was imaginary. If anyone doubts it, let him refer to what is practically the only scientific treatise on dancing ever written, Maurice Emmanuel's "L'Orchestique Grecque." There he will see how modern ballet dancing has slowly been elaborated by the vigorous, patient application to Greek principles. It has been an effort to develop and enrich them, not to abolish them. That it has here and there overreached itself, like all sustained technical disciplines is a charge that need not be disputed. That Isadora Duncan should have recalled it to first principles by a deliberate recurrence to the restricted, but perfect, technique of its original models was a great benefit to it. It is true that while there has been a succession of great ballerinas, Duncan has had no worthy disciples (which simply proves that reactions are rarely creative), but from the union of the ballet and Duncan sprang Fokine, and his disciple Bolm. A ballet like "The Sylphs" represents a true and powerful advance along those classical lines which can alone save dancing from hopping eccentricities. If that particular ballet was rather a pruning away of superfluous complexities than a fresh application of the eternal principles, Fokine showed elsewhere the abundance of his original vigor.

He was (he still is, we may hope) a maste of harmonies because he so rarely trans gressed the laws of his art.

> N'était-il, à la lettre, ce que nous entendons aujourd'hui par un dieu? Il signifiait un plaisir tout à fait exempt de douleur, un mouvement libre et un acte pur.

Monsieur Maurras uses these words c one of the relics on the Acropolis; the can be applied as well to the creations c a Fokine. [The Athenæum, London.

* * *

Now to Russia

In every pose and gesture. in the emc tional gamut reflected by eloquer facial play, Miss Duncan now portray the hopes, fears, disillusionments and sui ferings of the Russian nation. In the firs movement of Chaikovsky's "Pathetic Sym phony," as in the last, when, as a stricke mother, trailing sombre robes of mournin she sorrows over the bodies of her fallen sons, Miss Duncan touched greatness. The two intervening movements in which she reverted to lighter methods provided contrast. Extraordinarily effective was her version of the closing pages of the third movement. Most striking, too, was her interpretation of the Slavic March, in which she depicted the tragedies of serfdom. Entering with hands chained and back bent beneath the weight of tyranny, she finally wrenched the fetters apart with seemingly superhuman efforts, and danced wildly in exultation as freedom triumphant. Throughout the afternoon Miss Duncan constantly suggested the lines of the poet Nekrasov:

Thou are beggarly,
Thou are plentiful,
Thou art infirm,
Thou are powerful,
O mother Russia!

[The New York Tribune

* * *

Dissent

The duty of any artist, it seems to us, is twofold—to feel and to evoke. He must be moved, and he must be able to arouse emotion. The commonest criticism of any work of art (and if true, the most damning) is that "it doesn't mean anything"—that is, the artist has failed to convey the emotion he feels to the hearer or spectator. Beethoven, they say, used to talk and gesticulate as he composed. But he did not stop at gesticulating. He translated what he felt into terms of sound, and because he had genius, was able to make his hearers feel something too. Sometimes a purely formal work of art, one without conscious emotional intent, can move us by its sheer perfection—a Greek column, for instance, or the soaring beauty of the Woolworth tower. So that perhaps the power to arouse emotion is even more important in an art-work than the emotional state of the artist.

Movements and gestures have an undeniable emotional power. It is exciting to see Anna Pavlova dance, so perfect is the rhythm and pattern of her dancing. A master of pantomime, like Charles Chaplin or Bessie McCoy, can tell a story so vividly with a few gestures that the spectator, seeing, is made to feel. Sheer motion itself is stimulating. It is thrilling to see a drill by the West Point Cadets, to behold the marvellous and sinister unison of those moving arms and legs. But—and here is the crux of our plea—the very thing that makes the West Pointers a moving sight is their preoccupation with form, their innocence of any designs upon the emotions of the spectator. They are marching, not interpreting or expressing anything, and their unconsciousness of any artistic intent is what intensifies our emotions when we see them. There are few more thrillingly beautiful sights in the world than a group of race horses in full stride, or a group of athletes taking a string of hurdles. Both are the apotheosis of grace, rhythm and speed. But suppose the horses and the hurdlers were running, not in the effort to win, but in an attempt to interpret or visualize or symbolize the "Soul of the Race Track" or "The Spirit of Fair Play." Would not the very self-consciousness of their performance tend to destroy its effect upon us?

And that is how we feel about Miss Duncan's dancing. It is not pure form: she performs no steps, conveys no sense of a definite and recurrent pattern. Nor is it pantomime. She tells no definite story that we can discern; there is no sense of the passage of time in her work. She tries to "interpret" the music, to enhance the emotional and spiritual meaning of a composition by means of gestures and facial expressions that convey neither a sense of form nor a feeling of drama—gestures and expressions that to us are the result but not the cause of emotion.

Is there such a thing as abstract dancing? Is there an art without form? A piece of wall paper is a design, an essentially, meaningless form that is grasped by the intellect because it possesses balance and, generally, repetition. A painting is either a narrative or a representation. No efforts of cubist or vorticist have yet convinced us that one can successfully paint a pure state of mind. Take music. What we call "absolute" or abstract music is really the most extreme development of formal design. The first movement of a symphony, or a fugue, has a pattern as definite and arbitrary as a piece of linoleum. The symphonic poem abandons the balanced form of absolute music but retains coherence by being written around a narrative or some definite idea. Dramatic music—the music of Richard Wagner above all—is structured entirely upon narrative, portraiture, or pictorial concepts

Miss Duncan, apparently, chooses to rely upon no form beyond the gestures of emotion. She interpreted "The Glorifiction of Siegfried' by crouching in attitudes of despair or standing erect in attitudes of exultation. It seemed inadequate. In our eyes was fixed irrevocably an image—not a memory, merely a scene from our own imagination—of bowed and hooded bearing a shrouded catafalque i moonlit forests. What we saw on th neither assisted nor stimulated our nation but merely got in the wa interpreted the Ride of the Valkyrs manner of one watching the daughters Wotan as they rode. We would have p ferred not to watch another spectator to see or imagine the Valkyrs themsel In the final scene from "Tristan" Duncan impersonated the crouching despairing Isolde; but we have seen O Fremstad do that magnificently, and si in the bargain. The music seemed al much greater than the dancer; nor did dancer seem to be expressing anything the music was not saying better.

. . . . In a word the art of terpretative dancing, as Miss Du practises it seems to us to be ideal means of expressing one's e tions, and a totally inadequate m of conveying them. We can have doubt that Miss Duncan felt deeply that she was expressing those feelin But merely to feel and express is enough. If it were, any one might be great tragic actor by weeping upon th stage. The artist must re-create wh he feels, must make the spectator fee it too. To us, this simply did not happen We saw only a woman behaving emotiona ly in the presence of great music. [Dee Taylor in The New York World

ISADORA'S POET REAL CAVE MAN

Post Oct 19

Hunts Black Bears, Thinks Football Effeminate, Rages at Dry Law and Admits Wife Not First Love

Isadora Duncan and her "pet poet" were expected to arrive in Boston last night for their first visit to this city since their romantic marriage in Moscow a year and a half ago. They arrived all right, but it wasn't 'Izzy and her husband.' It was Mr. Serge Yessesine and wife, and there is about 175 athletic pounds of Mr. Serge over at th Copley-Plaza to demonstrate to a interested persons just who is th head of the Yessesine-Dunca family.

IZZY NOT WHOLE SHOW

"Miss" Duncan may be the greate dancer of the wide, wide world, b she isn't the whole show in the hone moon suite ocupied by herself and h husband. She dresses Serge "awful cute" and he's got a gentlemanly hab of looking meek and saying nothi when his auburn haired wife has g the floor. He looks as if he wer thinking up something to rhyme wit Nishninovgorod, but he isn't.

The American dancer's "pet Russia poet" may powder his hair, but h stands 5 feet 10 in his clocked sil stockings. He may write poetry, bu he hunts black bears with a lance bac home in the Russian mountains H says that he likes American footba all right, but he thinks the game is little effeminate. They play somethin like it in Moscow, but they don't weig themselves down with headgear an shin guards, and there aren't so man foolish rules against slugging.

Post Oct 19

Preaches Soviet Glories

Serge has got a great line about the glories of Soviet government and the future of free verse. The speech is all in machine-gun Russian, but he puts plenty of pep into it, and it sounds enthusiastic. Isadore slips him the signal, and he's off for ten minutes. Then he looks relieved and relapses into meditation while "Mlle." Duncan does her stuff.

If you want to get a real oration out of the young man, nowever, you want to ask him what he thinks of prohibition. The world lost a great anti-dry orator when somebdy told Mr. Yessesine he was a poet. "Mlle." Duncan's storm signals never slow him up for a minute. The Soviet government never got onto its feet, according to Serge, until it revoked the Russian version of the Volstead act, and premitted light wines, heavy wines, beers, and whatever else you find lying around.

"The climate of Russia makes it essential to drink liquor," asserted the youthful poet. He looked out of the window and shivered. "The climate of Boston," he said, "reminds me a lot of the climate of Russia."

"Right," said the reporter in his best party Russian.

Isadora Not His First Love

"Mlle." Duncan's husband does his best not to gum her game as the head of the family, but he has a habit of frankness which occasionally shows all present who wears the pants in the Yessisine home. He proved his emancipation from feminine rule for sure and certain last night when he made a confession which would ruin an American husband for life.

He admitted that the fair Isadora was by no means nis first love, and he confessed with equal candor that she wasn't his second. While his red-haired wife looked on and made believe she liked it, he counted her predecessors upon his fingers. He put a sort of period on the end of the recitation by swinging the present holder of his affections up off the floor for a brief but strenuous kiss.

She seemed to like it, too. And that's the sort of caveman we well-tamed Americans have been calling Isadora Duncan's "pet poet."

---

hooded forms que through on the stage ed our imagihe way. She Valkyrs in the daughters of ould have pre-spectator but rs themselves.

Tristan" Miss crouching and ave seen Olive ntly, and sing seemed always
; nor did the anything that better.
e art of in-
Miss Duncan
to be the one's emoequate means an have no t deeply, and hose feelings press is no e might be ing upon th e-create wha spectator fee d not happen ing emotional usic. [Deems World

See envelope in front page

Ruffo Oct 22

Resonant Ruffo Trans 10/21

Titta Ruffo, the renowned and resounding baritone, announces for his concert in Symphony Hall at 3.15, next Sunday afternoon, the Seigneur's air from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah"; the sinister soliloquy of the Jacobite butler in Giordano's "Andrea Chénier"; a songful piece from Donizetti's "La Favorita"; Nelusko's legend of the fearsome Adamastor in Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine." In all these numbers he has not been heard hitherto in Boston. Apparently the Neapolitan folk-songs originally announced, have gone by the board; but the duet from Mozart's "Don Juan" has been timely salvaged.

Trans. Oct 21

TITTA RUFFO CONCERT

Tomorrow afternoon at 3:15 o'clock Mr. Titta Ruffo, the baritone from the Metropolitan Opera Company, makes his reappearance in a song recital at Symphony Hall. This will be the first of this season's Steinert concerts at that place. He will be assisted by Miss Yvonne D'Arle, a soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, and by Mr. Alberto Sciaretti, solo-pianist and accompanist. Mr. Ruffo will sing a program of Italian Operatic airs, the "Sei Vindicata Assai" from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah"; the "Monologue" from Giardono's "Andrea Chenier"; "Vien Leonora" from "La Favorita," and "Adamaster" from "L'Africaine." With Miss D'Arle he wil sing the duet "La Ci darem la Mano" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni." Miss D'Arle is announced to sing an aria from "L'Oracolo" by Leoni; a group of three English songs by Kramer and Frank La Forge and two Russian songs by Rimsky-Korsakov and Tschaikowsky. Mr. Sciaretti will play the Spanish Rhapsodie by Liszt. Adv 10-21

Amer Oct 21

Ruffo to Open Steinert Series

Herald 10/21

TITTA RUFFO

Tomorrow afternoon at 3:15 o'clock, Mr. Titta Ruffo, the baritone from the Metropolitan Opera Company, makes his reappearance in a song recital at Symphony Hall. This will be the first of this season's Steinert concerts at that place. He will be assisted by Miss Yvonne D'Arle, a soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, and by Mr. Alberto Sciaretti, solo-pianist and accompanist. Mr. Ruffo will sing a program of Italian operatic airs, the "Sei Vindicata Assai," from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah"; the "Monologue" from Giardono's "Andrea Chenier"; "Vien Leonora" from "La Favorita," and "Adamastor" from "L'Africaine."

Traveler Oct 21

TITTA RUFFO TODAY

Today at 3:15 o'clock, Titta Ruffo, the [illegible] baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, makes his reappearance in a song recital at Symphony Hall. He will be assisted by Yvonne D'Arle, a soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, and Alberto Sciaretti, solo-pianist and accompanist. Mr. Ruffo will sing a programme of Italian operatic airs, the "Sei Vindicata Assai" from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah"; the "Monologue" from Giardono's "Andrea Chenier"; "Vien Leonora" from "La Favorita," and "Adamastor" from "L'Africaine." With Miss D'Arle he will sing the duet "La Ci darem la Mano" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni." Miss D'Arle is announced to sing an aria from "L'Oracolo" by Leoni; a group of three English songs by Kramer and Frank La Forge, and two Russian songs by Rimsky-Korsakov and Tschaikowsky. Mr. Sciaretti will play the [illegible]

Post Oct 22

Ruffo Comes to Open Steinert Concerts

Adv 10/22

TODAY, at 3:15 o'clock, Titta Ruffo, the great Italian baritone, makes his appearance at Symphony Hall as star of the first of this season's Steinert concerts. Ruffo will be assisted by Yvonne D'Arle, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, and Alberto Sciaretti, pianist. Ruffo will sing a program of Italian operatic airs and some new Neapolitan songs. With Miss D'Arle he will sing a duet from Mozart's "Don Giovanni."

Miss D'Arle is announced to sing an aria from "L'Oracolo," by Leoni and other songs. Mr. Sciaretti will play the "Spanish Rhapsodie" by Liszt.

Advertiser Oct 22

TITTA RUFFO

Titta Ruffo, baritone, assisted by Yvonne d'Arle, soprano, and Alberto Sciaretti, pianist, will give the first of the Steinert concerts in Symphony Hall today, at 3:30 P. M. Her 11-22

"Bianca Luce," from "L'Oracolo"..Leoni
Yvonne D'Arle.
"Sei Vindicata Assai," from "Dinorah" Meyerbeer
Titta Ruffo.
Spanish Rhapsody..........................Liszt
Alberto Sciaretti.
Invocation..........................Kramer
Feast of the Lanterns..........La Forge
Song of the Open..........La Forge
Yvonne D'Arle.
"Monologue," from "Andrea Chenier" Giordano
Titta Ruffo.
Intermission.
(a) Aria, "The Snow Maiden" Rimsky-Korsakov
(b) Toujours a Toi........Tchaikovsky
Yvonne D'Arle.
(a) "Vien Leonora," from "La Favorita"..........Donizetti
(b) "Adamastor," from "L'Africaine" Meyerbeer
Titta Ruffo.
Duet, "La Ci darem la Mano," from "Don Giovanni"..........Mozart
Yvonne D'Arle and Titta Ruffo.

Herald Oct 22

RUFFO AND MME D'ARLE PLEASE LARGE AUDIENCE

Titta Ruffo, assisted by Yvonne d'Arle, soprano, and Alberto Sciaretti, pianist, gave the first concert of the Steinert series yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall before a well filled auditorium. Enthusiasm easily evoked, and acknowledged in numerous encores, one or more after every scheduled number, characterized the afternoon.

Mme d'Arle showed in "Bianca Luce" from Leoni's "L'Oracolo", the opening number, easy control of a notably clear and strongly dramatic voice. A group of modern songs by A. Walter Kramer and Frank La Forge indicated that, as is to be expected from members of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Mme d'Arle inclines to a dramatic rather than a purely lyric style of singing. She cares, it would seem, more about making her singing express emotion than she does about sheer beauty of tone for its own sake.

Alberto Sciaretti, besides the accompaniments for the singers, gave a fluent performance of Liszt's "Spanish Rhapsody," and an encore.

Ruffo, as always, took delight, which the audience seemed to share, in acting out his operatic arias with the appropriate gestures. This was especially evident in the encores, among which were "When I Was a Page" from Verdi's "Falstaff," an aria from Massenet's "Panurge," the "Largo al Factotum" from Rossini's "Barber of Seville."

The audience shouted requests for such favorites as the "Prologue" from "I Pagliacci," but Mr Ruffo could not comply with all of them.

In the familiar duet "La ci darem la mano" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Mr Ruffo and Mme d'Arle were vocally at their best. Perhaps they made it a bit more romantic and less lightly graceful than Mozart intended, but after all, good voices may be permitted a few licenses.

The second concert of the Steinert series will be given Nov 5 at Symphony Hall by Emilio deGorgoza and Sophie Braslau.

Globe Oct 23

Ruffo to Sing Here Tomorrow

It was as concert star that Titta Ruffo, famous Italian baritone, first appeared in Boston, and in this same role he returns tomorrow to open the Steinert concert series of Sunday afternoon concerts at Symphony Hall.

Ruffo's first fame was won on the operatic stage in Italy and South America. Wherever he went he was hailed as the most brilliant baritone of the age. The power and the range of his voice have been among the wonders of the lyric world. He is a great actor as well as singer, as he proved when he appeared at the Boston Opera House, but his success in concerts has been so remarkable that he is no longer disposed to confine himself to appearances with an opera company. Adv 10/21

Operatic arias will be a feature of his program tomorrow afternoon. He will also sing some Neapolitan songs offered to him while he was in Italy last summer. Yvonne D'Arle, soprano, and Alberto Sciaretti, pianist, will assist.

Advertiser Oct 21

Titta Ruffo in Boston

Monitor 10-23

Titta Ruffo of the Metropolitan Opera House sang yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. He was assisted by Yvonne D'Arle, soprano, and Alberto Sciaretti, pianist. Mr. Ruffo sang arias from "Dinorah," "Andrea Chenier," "La Favorita," and "L'Africaine," and joined with Miss D'Arle in a duet from "Don Giovanni." Miss D'Arle sang songs by Leoni, Kramer, LaForge, Rimsky-Korsakoff and Tschaikowsky. Mr. Sciaretti played Liszt's Spanish Rhapsody. Mr. Ruffo's singing requires no description. If volume of tone be the end and aim of the vocal art, and the applause of the large audience yesterday would seem to indicate that many people think so, then nothing further need be said. If the music of Meyerbeer, Giordano, and Donizetti, sung for the most part in full voice with all the operatic mannerisms of what we had ventured to think a bygone day, be representative of what is to be expected of an artist of presumably first rank (and the generous applause of the audience testified to that fact) again nothing further need be said. Miss D'Arle charmed by her graceful presence as well as by her musical and sympathetic singing. Mr. Sciaretti played Liszt's seldom-heard Rhapsody accurately and brilliantly, with little warmth or imagination.

Monitor Oct 23

Mr. Ruffo in The Vein Tr Oct 23

Beyond peradventure Titta Ruffo is good company in the concert-room, especially when his spirits are as gamesome as they were yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Like Challapin, he seems glad to come to his audience and would warm it into a reciprocal gladness of expectation. "Make a circle around me, while I sing," he seems to be saying in that quick, wavy gesture of mingled invitation and acknowledgement, quite as though he and the rest of us were gathered in a Neapolitan square. Whatever the chosen number, he spares upon it not one of the necessary powers to the utmost of his giving. The gusto of this enjoyment pervades his singing, quickens hearers into like response. In a hail of clapping the audience demands one, two, three, extra pieces. He bestows them as though he were a cornucopia of song.

More, seemingly, than the appointed items of the day do these additional numbers kindle him. He cannot sing Figaro's monologue about Figaro's busy life (out of "The Barber of Seville"), without play of fingers and a little dancing step at the end, though a morning coat clothe him and Symphony Hall seem inviolably sedate. Out of "L'Africaine" he picks the half-forgotten ballad of Adamastor, wherein the semi-savage Nelusko recounts to the fearful Portuguese sailors the terrors of a strange sea-demon. Forthwith into glance and gesture, as well as tones, comes hint of the fierce narrator, whipping into dread the timorous company upon Vasco's ship. Singing Don Juan's cajoling duet with the hesitant Zerlina—out of Mozart's opera—he cannot forbear a flick or two of amorous invitation. By all odds, Mr. Ruffo is a puissant projecting temperament. He can no more subdue it in the concert-hall than he could (or would) subdue the magnificent sonorities of tone upon tone. The staid and the censorious to the contrary notwithstanding, it is good to hear and to watch. In it is the flame of Italy.

Yesterday, moreover, as Mr. Ruffo does not always choose to do, the play of this temperament respected the voice that bore it and the arts of song that imparted it. Clearly, after the discomforts of last winter, his singing tones have regained full quality and full usage. When they so serve him, there is no questioning the outflung opulence, the sonorous splendors, the intrinsic and the illuding eloquence of his song. He can range to the lower notes of a tenor and keep his voice bell-like, as in divers measures of the air from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah" upon the programme of Sunday. He can also rumble as deep as the fearsome Adamastor of other Meyerbeerian music. Between, lies a voice that rings with a large, masculine, full-throated, keenly penetrating beauty, even if it sometimes goes rough-coated—usually for delineative or dramatizing ends. None the less, Mr. Ruffo can summon the suavities, the finesse of song. He did so, yesterday, in other measures of the seigneur in "Dinorah"; in the air of the amorous nobleman from Donizetti's "La Favorita"; in the adroit, pointed, felicitous phrasing of Mozart's duet. Of course, the suavities are large—like everything else Ruffonian—but they touch the finesse of song when he swells, graduates, checks and consummates a period, a progression, a transition—and there is no flaw upon it. To puissance, furthermore, he may add speed--witness Figaro's darting, scintillating patter.

So doing, however, he is Mr. Ruffo naturally Italianate. More characteristic of him as universal artist acclaimed the world over, was his singing of the baleful soliloquy from Giordano's "Andrea Chénier" and of Nelusko's ballad aforesaid. The soliloquy is the monologue of the servant of the old régime become man of power in the French Revolution. Bitterly he broods upon the past; vengeances he would have in the present. There is love denied as well as other rancors to whet him. As Mr. Ruffo sang, the man, the passion, the music, the scene almost, traversed the hall with a blended force of illusion that Challapin might hardly better. Only a little below fell like puissance and persuasion in Nelusko's ballad—and then largely because the music is intrinsically manufactured and shallow. It is hard to remember when Mr. Ruffo has disclosed himself in Boston to such advantage. Now he was the accomplished singer as fully endowed as practised; again he was the singing-actor, characterizing, passioning in tones up and down a long gamut, yet potent always.

A young singer new to Boston, Miss Yvonne d'Arles of the secondary forces of Metropolitan Opera House, assisted Mr. Ruffo. In the black and white of her spangled frock, in the pretty grace of her manners, she was charmingly youthful to the eye; while the young timbres of her voice gave to the ear like and equal pleasure. Our concert-rooms tend to be middle-aged; good to see and hear are youthful presence and youthful voice entering them. Not that Miss d'Arles is remarkable singer. Indeed, she much needs vocal sophistication as supplement—or even antidote—to her present vocal freshness and surety. The lustrous body, the warmth, the fluidity of her dark, widely ranging tones are good to hear, but upon them she has yet to lay the artfulness that would point and shade them. She follows her music intelligently; she is susceptible to it as such and as voice to mood, passion, picture, but as yet with these things—and naturally enough—she remains elementary. Subtlety, suggestion, design are not yet within her powers. But for yesterday, when she ranged from Rimsky-Korsakov to La Forge, her promise was pleasure.

H. T. P.

Transcript Oct 23

RUFFO GIVES UNUSUAL MUSIC

With Assisting Artists Offers a Varied Program

Herald Oct 23

HOLDS AUDIENCE IN HOLLOW OF HIS HAND

For their concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall, Titta Ruffo, baritone, and his assisting artists, Yvonne d'Arle, soprano, and Alberto Sciaretti, pianist, chose some unusual music. For his solo piece Mr. Sciaretti played Liszt's Spanish Rhapsody. Miss d'Arle sang an excerpt from Leoni's opera "L'Oracolo," an air from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Snow Maiden," songs by Tchaikovsky, Kramer and La Forge, and with Mr. Ruffo, "La ci darem" from "Don Giovanni." And Mr. Ruffo himself sang the romance from the last act of "Dinorah," the monologue of the revolutionary leader in Giordano's "Andrea Chenier," an aria from Donizetti's "La Favorita," "Vien Leonora," and the second big baritone air from Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine." All through the performers were generous with encores.

It was an occasion yesterday. The audience, from the start in jubilant mood, applauded wildly everything and everybody, and the artists, responding in kind, gave of their very best. Mr. Sciaretti, as well as accompanying excellently, offered a brilliant performance of the Spanish Rhapsody, although yesterday, as always, it was clear that Liszt could not ruffle it in Spanish as bravely as he could in the Magyar. And Miss d'Arle pleased with her lovely voice; her Russian air, from the "Snow Maiden," and the Puccini waltz, an encore, she sang far better than anything else. For yesterday her concert bearing did very well, but if she has seriously a concert career in view, Miss d'Arle would do well to cultivate repose.

As for the concert giver, as usual, he sang unevenly. Of the Dinorah song he made hard work, and in the Donizetti air he seemed to find his voice unwieldy.

The dramatic measures from "Andrea Chenier," however, he sang superbly, with glowing tone that, though enormous, he never forced; all in a fine legato, musically throughout, and yet with warmth enough to stir the audience to frenzy. Here was the high moment of the afternoon.

For the rest Mr. Ruffo, in evermounting spirits, sang varyingly well, some of the encores delightfully, the aria from "L'Africaine" effectively, though with something of theatrical exaggeration. Of his extreme loud tones, pushed beyond their limits, Mr. Ruffo gave very few. They are quite unnecessary, he proved, for without them he held the audience in the hollow of his hand.

R. R. G.

Herald Oct 23

[98]

Ruffo Oct 22

Resonant Ruffo

Titta Ruffo, the renowned and resounding baritone, announces for his concert in Symphony Hall at 3.15, next Sunday afternoon the Seigneur's air from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah"; the sinister soliloquy of the Jacobite butler in Giordano's "Andrea Chenier"; a songful piece from Donizetti's "La Favorita"; Nelusko's legend of the fearsome Adamastor in Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine." In all these numbers he has not been heard hitherto in Boston. Apparently the Neapolitan folk-songs originally announced, have gone by the board; but the duet from Mozart's "Don Juan" has been timely salvaged.

Trans. Oct 21

TITTA RUFFO CONCERT

Tomorrow afternoon at 3:15 o'clock Mr. Titta Ruffo, the baritone from the Metropolitan Opera Company, makes his reappearance in a song recital at Symphony Hall. This will be the first of this season's Steinert concerts at that place. He will be assisted by Miss Yvonne D'Arle, a soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, and by Mr. Alberto Sciaretti, solo-pianist and accompanist. Mr. Ruffo will sing a program of Italian Operatic airs, the "Sei Vindicata Assai" from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah"; the "Monologue" from Giardono's "Andrea Chenier"; "Vien Leonora" from "La Favorita," and "Adamaster" from "L'Africaine." With Miss D'Arle he wil sing the duet "La Ci darem la Mano" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni." Miss D'Arle is announced to sing an aria from "L'Oracolo" by Leoni; a group of three English songs by Kramer and Frank La Forge and two Russian songs by Rimsky-Korsakov and Tschaikowsky. Mr. Sciaretti will play the Spanish Rhapsodie by Liszt.

Amer Oct 21

Ruffo to Open Steinert Series

TITTA RUFFO

Tomorrow afternoon at 3:15 o'clock, Mr. Titta Ruffo, the baritone from the Metropolitan Opera Company, makes his reappearance in a song recital at Symphony Hall. This will be the first of this season's Steinert concerts at that place. He will be assisted by Miss Yvonne D'Arle, a soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, and by Mr. Alberto Sciaretti, solo-pianist and accompanist. Mr. Ruffo will sing a program of Italian operatic airs, the "Sei Vindicata Assai," from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah"; the "Monologue" from Giardono's "Andrea Chenier"; "Vien Leonora" from "La Favorita," and "Adamastor" from "L'Africaine."

Traveler Oct 21

TITTA RUFFO TODAY

Today at 3:15 o'clock, Titta Ruffo, the [illegible] baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, makes his reappearance in a song recital at Symphony Hall. He will be assisted by Yvonne D'Arle, a soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, and Alberto Sciaretti, solo-pianist and accompanist. Mr. Ruffo will sing a programme of Italian operatic airs, the "Sei Vindicata Assai" from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah"; the "Monologue" from Giardono's "Andrea Chenier"; "Vien Leonora" from "La Favorita," and "Adamastor" from "L'Africaine." With Miss D'Arle he will sing the duet "La Ci darem la Mano" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni." Miss D'Arle is announced to sing an aria from "L'Oracolo" by Leoni; a group of three English songs by Kramer and Frank La Forge, and two Russian songs by Rimsky-Korsakov and Tschaikowsky. Mr. Sciaretti will play the Spanish Rhapsodie by Liszt.

Post Oct 22

Ruffo Comes to Open Steinert Concerts

TODAY, at 3:15 o'clock, Titta Ruffo, the great Italian baritone, makes his appearance at Symphony Hall as star of the first of this season's Steinert concerts. Ruffo will be assisted by Yvonne D'Arle, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, and Alberto Sciaretti, pianist. Ruffo will sing a program of Italian operatic airs and some new Neapolitan songs. With Miss D'Arle he will sing a duet from Mozart's "Don Giovanni."

Miss D'Arle is announced to sing an aria from "L'Oracolo," by Leoni and other songs. Mr. Sciaretti will play the "Spanish Rhapsodie" by Liszt.

Advertiser Oct 22

TITTA RUFFO

Titta Ruffo, baritone, assisted by Yvonne d'Arle, soprano, and Alberto Sciaretti, pianist, will give the first of the Steinert concerts in Symphony Hall today, at 3:30 P. M.

"Bianca Luce," from "L'Oracolo"..Leoni
Yvonne D'Arle.
"Sei Vindicata Assai," from "Dinorah" Meyerbeer
Titta Ruffo.
Spanish Rhapsody..........................Liszt
Alberto Sciaretti.
Invocation ....Kramer
Feast of the Lanterns..........La Forge
Song of the Open.................La Forge
Yvonne D'Arle.
"Monologue," from "Andrea Chenier" Giordano
Titta Ruffo.
Intermission.
(a) Aria, "The Snow Maiden" Rimsky-Korsakov
(b) Toujours a Toi........Tchaikovsky
Yvonne D'Arle.
(a) "Vien Leonora," from "La Favorita" ....Donizetti
(b) "Adamastor," from "L'Africaine" Meyerbeer
Titta Ruffo.
Duet, "La Ci darem la Mano," from "Don Giovanni" ....Mozart
Yvonne D'Arle and Titta Ruffo.

Herald Oct 22

RUFFO AND MME D'ARLE PLEASE LARGE AUDIENCE

Titta Ruffo, assisted by Yvonne d'Arle, soprano, and Alberto Sciaretti, pianist, gave the first concert of the Steinert series yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall before a well filled auditorium. Enthusiasm easily evoked, and acknowledged in numerous encores, one or more after every scheduled number, characterized the afternoon.

Mme d'Arle showed in "Bianca Luce" from Leoni's "L'Oracolo", the opening number, easy control of a notably clear and strongly dramatic voice. A group of modern songs by A. Walter Kramer and Frank La Forge indicated that, as is to be expected from members of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Mme d'Arle inclines to a dramatic rather than a purely lyric style of singing. She cares, it would seem, more about making her singing express emotion than she does about sheer beauty of tone for its own sake.

Alberto Sciaretti, besides the accompaniments for the singers, gave a fluent performance of Liszt's "Spanish Rhapsody," and an encore.

Ruffo, as always, took delight, which the audience seemed to share, in acting out his operatic arias with the appropriate gestures. This was especially evident in the encores, among which were "When I Was a Page" from Verdi's "Falstaff," an aria from Massenet's "Panurge," the "Largo al Factotum" from Rossini's "Barber of Seville."

The audience shouted requests for such favorites as the "Prologue" from "I Pagliacci," but Mr Ruffo could not comply with all of them.

In the familiar duet "La ci darem la mano" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Mr Ruffo and Mme d'Arle were vocally at their best. Perhaps they made it a bit more romantic and less lightly graceful than Mozart intended, but after all, good voices may be permitted a few licenses.

The second concert of the Steinert series will be given Nov 5 at Symphony Hall by Emilio deGorgoza and Sophie Braslau.

Globe Oct 23

Ruffo to Sing Here Tomorrow

It was as concert star that Titta Ruffo, famous Italian baritone, first appeared in Boston, and in this same role he returns tomorrow to open the Steinert concert series of Sunday afternoon concerts at Symphony Hall.

Ruffo's first fame was won on the operatic stage in Italy and South America. Wherever he went he was hailed as the most brilliant baritone of the age. The power and the range of his voice have been among the wonders of the lyric world. He is a great actor as well as singer, as he proved when he appeared at the Boston Opera House, but his success in concerts has been so remarkable that he is no longer disposed to confine himself to appearances with an opera company.

Operatic arias will be a feature of his program tomorrow afternoon. He will also sing some Neapolitan songs offered to him while he was in Italy last summer. Yvonne D'Arle, soprano, and Alberto Sciaretti, pianist, will assist.

Advertiser Oct 21

Titta Ruffo in Boston

Titta Ruffo of the Metropolitan Opera House sang yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. He was assisted by Yvonne D'Arle, soprano, and Alberto Sciaretti, pianist. Mr. Ruffo sang arias from "Dinorah," "Andrea Chenier," "La Favorita," and "L'Africaine," and joined with Miss D'Arle in a duet from "Don Giovanni." Miss D'Arle sang songs by Leoni, Kramer, LaForge, Rimsky-Korsakoff and Tschaikowsky. Mr. Sciaretti played Liszt's Spanish Rhapsody. Mr. Ruffo's singing requires no description. If volume of tone be the end and aim of the vocal art, and the applause of the large audience yesterday would seem to indicate that many people think so, then nothing further need be said. If the music of Meyerbeer, Giordano, and Donizetti, sung for the most part in full voice with all the operatic mannerisms of what we had ventured to think a bygone day, be representative of what is to be expected of an artist of presumably first rank (and the generous applause of the audience testified to that fact) again nothing further need be said. Miss D'Arle charmed by her graceful presence as well as by her musical and sympathetic singing. Mr. Sciaretti played Liszt's seldom-heard Rhapsody accurately and brilliantly, with little warmth or imagination.

Monitor Oct 23

RUFFO GIVES UNUSUAL MUSIC

With Assisting Artists Offers a Varied Program

Herald Oct 23

HOLDS AUDIENCE IN HOLLOW OF HIS HAND

For their concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall, Titta Ruffo, baritone, and his assisting artists, Yvonne d'Arle, soprano, and Alberto Sciaretti, pianist, chose some unusual music. For his solo piece Mr. Sciaretti played Liszt's Spanish Rhapsody. Miss d'Arle sang an excerpt from Leoni's opera "L'Oracolo," an air from Rimsky-Korsakov's "Snow Maiden," songs by Tchaikovsky, Kramer and La Forge, and with Mr. Ruffo, "La ci darem" from "Don Giovanni." And Mr. Ruffo himself sang the romance from the last act of "Dinorah," the monologue of the revolutionary leader in Giordano's "Andrea Chenier," an aria from Donizetti's "La Favorita," "Vien Leonora," and the second big baritone air from Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine." All through the performers were generous with encores.

It was an occasion yesterday. The audience, from the start in jubilant mood, applauded wildly everything and everybody, and the artists, responding in kind, gave of their very best. Mr. Sciaretti, as well as accompanying excellently, offered a brilliant performance of the Spanish Rhapsody, although yesterday, as always, it was clear that Liszt could not ruffle it in Spanish as bravely as he could in the Magyar. And Miss d'Arle pleased with her lovely voice; her Russian air, from the "Snow Maiden," and the Puccini waltz, an encore, she sang far better than anything else. For yesterday her concert bearing did very well, but if she has seriously a concert career in view, Miss d'Arle would do well to cultivate repose.

As for the concert giver, as usual, he sang unevenly. Of the Dinorah song he made hard work, and in the Donizetti air he seemed to find his voice unwieldy.

The dramatic measures from "Andrea Chenier," however, he sang superbly, with glowing tone that, though enormous, he never forced; all in a fine legato, musically throughout, and yet with warmth enough to stir the audience to frenzy. Here was the high moment of the afternoon.

For the rest Mr. Ruffo, in evermounting spirits, sang varyingly well, some of the encores delightfully, the aria from "L'Africaine" effectively, though with something of theatrical exaggeration. Of his extreme loud tones, pushed beyond their limits, Mr. Ruffo gave very few. They are quite unnecessary, he proved, for without them he held the audience in the hollow of his hand.

R. R. G.

Herald Oct 23

Mr. Ruffo in The Vein Oct 23

Beyond peradventure Titta Ruffo is good company in the concert-room, especially when his spirits are as gamesome as they were yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Like Chaliapin, he seems glad to come to his audience and would warm it into a reciprocal gladness of expectation. "Make a circle around me, while I sing," he seems to be saying in that quick, wavy gesture of mingled invitation and acknowledgement, quite as though he and the rest of us were gathered in a Neapolitan square. Whatever the chosen number, he spares upon it not one of the necessary powers to the utmost of his giving. The gusto of this enjoyment pervades his singing, quickens hearers into like response. In a hail of clapping the audience demands one, two, three, extra pieces. He bestows them as though he were a cornucopia of song.

More, seemingly, than the appointed items of the day do these additional numbers kindle him. He cannot sing Figaro's monologue about Figaro's busy life (out of "The Barber of Seville"), without play of fingers and a little dancing step at the end, though a morning coat clothe him and Symphony Hall seem inviolably sedate. Out of "L'Africaine" he picks the half-forgotten ballad of Adamastor, wherein the semi-savage Nelusko recounts to the fearful Portuguese sailors the terrors of a strange sea-demon. Forthwith into glance and gesture, as well as tones, comes hint of the fierce narrator, whipping into dread the timorous company upon Vasco's ship. Singing Don Juan's cajoling duet with the hesitant Zerlina—out of Mozart's opera—he cannot forbear a flick or two of amorous invitation. By all odds, Mr. Ruffo is a puissant projecting temperament. He can no more subdue it in the concert-hall than he could (or would) subdue the magnificent sonorities of tone upon tone. The staid and the censorious to the contrary notwithstanding, it is good to hear and to watch. In it is the flame of Italy.

Yesterday, moreover, as Mr. Ruffo does not always choose to do, the play of this temperament respected the voice that bore it and the arts of song that imparted it. Clearly, after the discomforts of last winter, his singing tones have regained full quality and full usage. When they so serve him, there is no questioning the outflung opulence, the sonorous splendors, the intrinsic and the illuding eloquence of his song. He can range to the lower notes of a tenor and keep his voice bell-like, as in divers measures of the air from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah" upon the programme of Sunday. He can also rumble as deep as the fearsome Adamastor of other Meyerbeerian music. Between, lies a voice that rings with a large, masculine, full-throated, keenly penetrating beauty, even if it sometimes goes rough-coated—usually for delineative or dramatizing ends. None the less, Mr. Ruffo can summon the suavities, the finesse of song. He did so, yesterday, in other measures of the seigneur in "Dinorah"; in the air of the amorous nobleman from Donizetti's "La Favorita"; in the adroit, pointed, felicitous phrasing of Mozart's duet. Of course, the suavities are large—like everything else Ruffonian—but they touch the finesse of song when he swells, graduates, checks and consummates a period, a progression, a transition—and there is no flaw upon it. To puissance, furthermore, he may add speed--witness Figaro's darting, scintillating patter.

So doing, however, he is Mr. Ruffo naturally Italianate. More characteristic of him as universal artist acclaimed the world over, was his singing of the baleful soliloquy from Giordano's "Andrea Chenier" and of Nelusko's ballad aforesaid. The soliloquy is the monologue of the servant of the old régime become man of power in the French Revolution. Bitterly he broods upon the past; vengeances he would have in the present. There is love denied as well as other rancors to whet him. As Mr. Ruffo sang, the man, the passion, the music, the scene almost, traversed the hall with a blended force of illusion that Chaliapin might hardly better. Only a little below fell like puissance and persuasion in Nelusko's ballad—and then largely because the music is intrinsically manufactured and shallow. It is hard to remember when Mr. Ruffo has disclosed himself in Boston to such advantage. Now he was the accomplished singer as fully endowed as practised; again he was the singing-actor, characterizing, passioning in tones up and down a long gamut, yet potent always.

A young singer new to Boston, Miss Yvonne d'Arles, of the secondary forces of the Metropolitan Opera House, assisted Mr. Ruffo. In the black and white of her spangled frock, in the pretty grace of her manners, she was charmingly youthful to the eye; while the young timbres of her voice gave to the ear like and equal pleasure. Our concert-rooms tend to be middle-aged; good to see and hear are youthful presence and youthful voice entering them. Not that Miss d'Arles is remarkable singer. Indeed, she much needs vocal sophistication as supplement—or even antidote—to her present vocal freshness and surety. The lustrous body, the warmth, the fluidity of her dark, widely ranging tones are good to hear, but upon them she has yet to lay the artfulness that would point and shade them. She follows her music intelligently; she is susceptible to it as such and as voice to mood, passion, picture, but as yet with these things—and naturally enough—she remains elementary. Subtlety, suggestion, design are not yet within her powers. But for yesterday, when she ranged from Rimsky-Korsakov to La Forge, her promise was pleasure.

H. T. P.

Transcript Oct 23

[98]

McCormack Oct 25

Coming and Going, John McCormack

Trans 10-31

AUTUMN, winter and a part of the spring John McCormack, the singer, set aside for rest and study in Europe. Unexpectedly, an obligation not to be put aside, recalls him to the United States for a fortnight, more or less, at the end of this month. In the course of that stay he will sing once in New York, once in Philadelphia, once in Boston—at Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening, Oct. 25. Thereafter, until next May, no audience in America will hear him. A word is enough for the wise—and for the many who would know what voice now blesses the tenor after all the perils, last winter surmounted.

Transcript Oct 3

McCORMACK TO SING IN BOSTON OCT. 25

Oct 4 Herald

John McCormick, the Irish singer, now enroute to America aboard the steamship Olympia, is expected to arrive in this country a week from today. Arrangements have been made for three concerts while here, one in New York, one in Philadelphia and the third in symphony hall the 25th of October. Accounts of his recent concert at Stratford-on-Avon, Eng., where he sang at dedication of the Edwin Booth memorial report that his voice is at its best.

Herald Oct 4.

Avon.

JOHN McCORMACK COMING

Amer 10/7

John McCormack, the Irish singer, is now on the high seas on the steamship Olympic, which is expected to arrive in New York harbor Wednesday, October 11.

Arrangements have been made whereby the great tenor is to give three concerts in America, one in New York, one in Philadelphia, and one in Boston, the latter to take place in Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening, October 25. Shortly after this concert he is to bid America farewell for the time being, and return to Europe.

American Oct 7

McCORMACK COMES FOR CONCERT TOUR

New York, Oct. 10.—John McCormack, world-famous Irish tenor, was expected to land here today on the Olympic. He is to make a short concert tour of the East, giving one concert here, another in Philadelphia and a third in Boston. He will then go back to Europe for an indefinite stay. Amer 10/10

American Oct 10

M'CORMACK TO ARRIVE TODAY

Post

Tenor Will Give Concert in Hub Oct. 25

10/10

The S. S. Olympic, which is expected to arrive in New York harbor today, will bring John McCormack, the great Irish singer, to America for a very short stay. In this time he will give three concerts, one in New York, one in Philadelphia, and one in Boston. The latter is to take place in Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening, Oct. 25. Three days later McCormack will sail for Europe.

Post Oct 10

Trav JOHN McCORMACK 10-14

On Wednesday evening, Oct. 25, in Symphony hall, John McCormack, who returned to America last Wednesday, will give his single concert in Boston. This appearance will be in the nature of a welcome to the great Irish tenor after his illness, from which he has completely recovered, and is in especially fine voice.

Traveler Oct 14

McCormack Returns

On Wednesday evening, October 25, in Symphony Hall, John McCormack, who returned to America last Wednesday, will give his single concert in B[illegible]

Amer Oct 14

---

ones up and down a long nt always.
er new to Boston, Miss
of the secondary forces of era House, assisted Mr.
black and white of her
in the pretty grace of her as charmingly youthful to the young timbres of her e ear like and equal pleas-
rt-rooms tend to be mid-
o see and hear are youth-l youthful voice entering Miss d'Aries is remarkable
she much needs vocal soupplement—or even anti-ent vocal freshness and
trous body, the warmth,
er dark, widely ranging hear, but upon them she he artfulness that would them. She follows her y; she is susceptible to s voice to mood, passion,
t with these things—and
—she remains elementary.
ion, design are not yet
s. But for yesterday,
from Rimsky-Korsakov
promise was pleasure.
H. T. P.

Oct 23

"John" to Reporters Trans 10/13

Mr. McCormack, returning from a long summer of rest and recuperation in England and Scotland, disembarked in New York on Wednesday. Forthwith the reporters surrounded him and here follows, from The World, the gist of what he said to them:

I feel fine now. I was coming home here just to make a few records, and then I planned to go back again about the end of October and stay till April, but I changed my mind. I figured that as long as I was here I might as well prove to the public that I am all right—records won't do that exactly, you know—so I'm going to stay around here until nearly Christmas. Then I'm going back to London and try and get time to work over my German lieder with Sir George Henschel.

I did a lot of work with Lionel Tertis when I was in England. I think he's the greatest artist on stringed instruments going. I'm hoping he will come over here next year. He plays the viola and we used to go over to [illegible] Anderson's house and work together. She loved it. We did quite a few old English arrangements for tenor and viola. They were great. I don't see why we couldn't have a few joint appearances if he comes. You don't know how fine the viola and tenor go together. Trans 10/13

Transcript Oct 13

McCORMACK CONCERT

Amer 10-15

John McCormack will give a concert at Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening, October 25. This concert will be in the nature of a welcome to the great tenor, whose voice is now said to be as fine as ever.

American Oct 15

Herald JOHN McCORMACK Oct 15

Having arrived in America for a short stay, John McCormack will give a single concert in Boston at Symphony hall on Wednesday evening, Oct. 25, previous to his return to Europe. This concert will be in the nature of a welcome to the great tenor, whose voice is now said to be as fine as ever.

Herald Oct 15

Post John McCormack 10-15

Having arrived in America last week for a short stay, John McCormack has arranged to give a single concert in Boston at Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening, Oct. 25, just previous to his return to Europe.

Post Oct 15

Wednesday evening, Oct. 25, in Symphony Hall, a concert by John McCormack, tenor-singer, returned to America; restored (he says) in all his powers; eagerly awaited by a manifold public. His programme will [illegible]. Welcome home!

Transcript Oct 16

John McCormack will make one of three appearances, the other two being in New York and Philadelphia, followed by a return within two weeks of the last of these concerts, to Europe, after which Mr. McCormack will not be heard in America for another year. Jascha Heifetz and many other stars of the highest international reputation will be heard there, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will, as usual, give two Sunday afternoon pension fund concerts. There will be enough Sunday concerts and to spare. The attractions will be as numerous and of as high a quality as heretofore, and there will be no hint of throat-cutting rivalry. Post 10/8

Post Oct 8

McCormack in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Oct. 1 (Special Correspondence)—John McCormack's recital audience overflowed the stage of the Academy of Music and reached its culmination in appreciation not with the Handelian classics, but with the group of archly humorous Irish ballads. Too often Mr. McCormack for his high notes had recourse to his famous pianissimo falsetto. His finest deliverance, in taste and feeling, was that of César Franck's "Panis Angelicus." Rachmaninoff's "To the Children," descanted with painstaking sincerity, immediately preceding the noble Franck air, had a similar appeal of straightforward simplicity—in an illuminative contrast with the melodramatic thrill of "The Star," by Rogers. Monitor 10-24 F. L. W.

Monitor Oct 24

McCormack Sings Here Wednesday

Trav 10-21

John McCormack will sing the following numbers at his concert in Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening, Oct. 25: Arias from Handel's "Semele" and "Alceste," songs by Frank Bridge, Bantock, Rachmaninov, Cesar Franck, J. H. Rogers, Walter Kramer and Edwin Schneider; also a group of Irish folk songs. Mr. Bochco will be assistant violinist.

Traveler Oct 21

Mr. McCormack Restored Trans 10/21

When Mr. McCormack returns to Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening for his first concert in Boston since he regained his familiar powers, he will sing old airs out of Händel's oratorio, "Semele," and Händel's opera. "Alceste"; songs by Bantock, Bridge, Rakhmaninov and Franck; miscellaneous pieces by Kramer, Schneider and Rogers. As heretofore a violinist will provide interludes.

Transcript Oct 21

McCORMACK'S PROGRAM

John McCormack will sing the following songs at his concert in Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening: Arias from Handel's "Semele" and "Alceste," songs by Frank Bridge, Bantock, Rachmaninov, Cesar Franck, Rogers, Kramer and Schneider; also a group of Irish folk songs. Mr. Bochco will be assisting violinist. Her 10-22

Herald Oct 22

McCormack's Programme Post

John McCormack will sing the following numbers at his concert in Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening, Oct. 25: Arias from Handel's "Semele" and "Alceste," songs by Frank Bridge Bantock, Rachmaninov, Cesar Franck, J. H. Rogers, Walter Kramer, and Edwin Schneider; also a group of Irish folk songs. Mr. Bochco will be assisting violinist. 10-22

Post Oct 22

Ror a week now the last seat in Symphony Hall has been sold for John McCormack's concert next Wednesday evening. That is an old story. We mention it only as an example of the popularity of a man whom people like to hear sing and people like to see and know if the opportunity arises.

McCormack is fond of a joke on himself—even a little fonder than he would be of a joke which might hurt the feelings of the other fellow.

He was talking about the range of his voice last time he was in Boston, remarking that his range was nothing remarkable—"thank heaven," he added, to which we assented. Heaven defend us from the top-note, leather-lunged tenor.

JOHN'S TOP NOTE

"And you know," continues John, "the Italians simply insist on high notes in their theatres. They will have them.

"One night I was singing in Italy. It was in the early days, and I felt nervous. I had a right to feel that way. A high note was coming, and I didn't want to bear too hard on it. This displeased the audience. Italian audiences, you see, don't hesitate. You know whether you've pleased them or not.

"The opera was going to be repeated the next week, and I dreaded that repetition and wondered what I'd do.

"I hit on it at last. I told the orchestra conductor, before I went on the stage, to give me every ounce of tone he could get from his band when time for that high note arrived.

"When that time came the orchestra let loose a deafening explosion of tone. I struck an attitude, and opened my mouth. I didn't make a sound, but the audience never knew it. What the ear didn't carry to them the eye and the imagination did. The people went wild.

"'Bravo!, Bis,' and so forth and on. We had to repeat the whole aria again. I opened my mouth and struck a posture heroic and grand. Salvos of applause!!

"I was henceforth the hero of that theatre. I had been nearly mobbed for the note I had sung, but the note I never sang made my reputation!"

Collector of Violins

The best thing about McCormack is his endless capacity for enjoyment of life and the variety and extent of his interests. Just now they say he is fascinated with the piano, and spends hours at that instrument. For years he collected violins. He became interested in their collection when Donald McBeath was his violin soloist on tour. Then McBeath entered the British Air Service, and McCormack's interest in the instrument seemed to flag. Anyhow, he sold his violin collection two years ago, and it brought him a handsome figure.

He had two Stradivari, one Nicolo Amati and one Guarnerius. The Amati which had been the property of the dead and gone virtuoso, Wieniawski, brought $20,000—a moderate price for such an instrument. One of the Strads brought $18,000, the other more. He had also several Tourte bows, worth about $1000 apiece. But now McCormack has sold his fiddles, also his prize cows, and is going in more than ever for paintings.

Post Oct 22

[49]

JOHN McCORMACK, who sings at Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening.

Adv 10/22

Advertiser Oct 22

On Wed eve Oct 25th in Symphony Hall, John McCormack will give a concert. His program traverses arias by Handel (from "Semele" and "Alceste"), songs by Frank Bridge, Bantock, Rachmaninoff, Franck, Rogers Kramer, and Schneider, and Irish folk songs. This will be Mr. McCormack's single concert in Boston, as he returns to Europe three days later. Monitor 10/23

Monitor Oct 23

Music

Mon 10/26

Recital by John McCormack

John McCormack gave his single Boston concert of the season last night before an audience which completely filled Symphony Hall. His program traversed the usual Handel arias, English songs and Irish folk songs, concluding with pieces by American composers, including James H. Rogers and A. Walter Kramer. It is hardly possible to record anything new of Mr. McCormack, yet the singing of so great an artist cannot be lightly passed over. If all the qualities of past years were again to be noted last evening, and they undoubtedly were, the singer being in unusually fine voice, these qualities have deepened and broadened even since his appearance here last spring. Here is a singer who will never be content with past triumphs, a singer who is continually seeking to improve, and yet in Mr. McCormack's case it has seemed that improvement was almost out of the question, so fine has his singing been during the years that are past. Superlatives are dangerous when applied to artistic matters, so changing are our ideas of what constitutes the beautiful, but there is no danger in using them in speaking of him.

Leaving aside his command of the purely technical side of singing, the natural beauty of his voice (for in these things others may perhaps hope to equal, though few to surpass him) there remain his mastery of style, his musicianship, his emotional resources; in these, the greatest qualities, he stands almost alone among singers who have so far appeared before the public. In the difficult arias of Handel as well as in a simple folk song he is a master. In songs of little musical worth, he is no less successful, contriving as he does to fill them with a beauty unsuspected. An art so many sided escapes analysis, yet there is one outstanding feature in all that he does—his sincerity, a much abused word; but one which is eminently applicable to his singing. If examples must be cited let us remark Bantock's "Desolation" and Frank Bridge's "When You Are Old and Grey," two songs which, by the majority of singers, would be pronounced ungrateful, yet which in his hands proved to be among the most effective of the evening. And what a delight to hear the English language sung with such purity of diction that the words could actually be understood without effort, a veritable lesson to all other singers. But why continue? Words of praise if too long continued become fulsome and this is far from our purpose. Suffice it to say that Mr. McCormack is among the most illustrious of singers but above and before this he is a great musician. S. M.

Monitor Oct 26

For the most part it might have been one of Mr. McCormack's usual concerts in Boston. To the last seat, to the last foot of standing room, to the last chair upon a stage reduced to railed pen for singer and accompanist, Symphony Hall was chock-a-block last evening. Never before, it was said, had Mr. McCormack sung hereabouts to quite so many listeners. As usual, they ran the gamut of the frequent and the infrequent in the concert-hall. The eye caught the distinguished composers of "A Pagan Poem" and divers "Character Pieces from Omar Khayyam." It fell also upon many connoisseurs of voices and the arts of song. It lighted upon the socially elect and the socially inconsequent. It discovered that much Irish blood was pulsing for the nonce in Symphony Hall. It ranged over priests of the church; mere curiosity-seekers; and the cook whose skill a dinner-party was only yesterday applauding. Democratic, not to say miscellaneous, are Mr. McCormack's audiences.

That of Wednesday, moreover, bore itself according to every precedent. It listened with courteous interest and applause to the tenor's marvellous singing of two old airs out of Handel and a counterpart thereof by that singular modern, Signor Donaudy. With pleasure, if not with excitement, it heard Mr. McCormack through songs of Bridge, Bantock, Rakhmaninov, and through an Offertory of Franck, redolent of the altar and the organ-loft of Sainte-Clothilde. Thereafter came the Irish folk-pieces, and with them the assembly rose to the sixth heaven of delight. One, two, even three, it added to the appointed list. Last stood the ballads sentimental and upon them the audience easily scaled the seventh region celestial. There it tarried and the singer with it, until it had exacted uncounted extras. It is the custom to say that Mr. McCormack educates audiences—unconscious of a process they would otherwise resent, cradled in it as it were. In the arts of song, he does so surely. Yet with him for interludes, he brings as violinists the mediocrities of old, the nonentity of last evening; and lo! the listeners would have "extras" from them also.

Wherein, then, the differences from past occasion through many a year? First, in the aspect and the bearing of Mr. McCormack himself, visible for the first time, since he beat off death last winter and, for once, rested through a whole summer. He has, indeed, put away superfluous flesh, though he remains a sturdy, strapping, striding figure. But gone, at least for yesterday, were the quick energy of that stride, the eager smiling glance, the general air of expansive well-being and confidence. Gravely Mr. McCormack came to his singing; gravely he accomplished it; gravely he bowed to every plaudit. Within long memory he has not sung more sedulously, more thoughtfully; but quite gone were the old alacrity, the occasional exuberance. For the night at least care and pains rode Mr. McCormack's broad shoulders. For reason evident, two concerts in a week now suffice him.

In the voice as well came to acute ears what seemed momentary evidence of change. Intrinsically, it remains John McCormack's voice as pure and flawless a tenor as ever kind gods blessed upon mortal man. Yet now and then, for no more than the shadow of an instant creeps into it the baritone tinge, unescapable lot of tenors as the years thicken. Once and again, too when the composer set down his highest notes over exacting interval Mr. McCormack's tone drew close to an idealized falsetto—say Monsieur Clément's—cover that the Irishman is not wont to take. Obviously, too, in choice of pieces, Mr. McCormack preferred songs that traversed his middle tones, invited half-voice, demanded few large and open phrases, avoided sustained altitudes. At need, he could summon such expansive flights and periods, but he preferred wisely not to tax himself with them. Always, too, he sang as one taking thought of every note, husbanding his vocal means, most artful in the distribution of them.

Throughout the concert it was in these arts and this finesse of song that Mr. McCormack surpassed himself; from group to group of pieces widening his range over them; from number to number refining upon them. His curving of the first period in Händel's air of sleep was summons to sensuous sensation; his subsequent sustaining of the melodic arc, as in one long breath and sweep of serene tone, was deep, sensuous beauty. His phrasings undulated with the music; upon the velvet of his tones he brushed the fine lustre of his diction. He passed to an "air gai," as eighteenth-century classification went, from Händel's "Alceste," and every ornament became a little flower of vocal finesse; every rhythmic turn a stroke of sensibility. He chose then the imitative air of Donaudy and therein a Kreisler might have envied him the fine-spun tones of transition in perfect rhythmical adjustment. The ear heard the chiselled periods; the reciprocal eye seemed to rest upon Greek marbles as serene, gentle and flawless.

A song of Bridge ensued and Mr. McCormack was renewed master of the wistful coloring of tones. A song of Bantock followed, a song also of Rakmaninov, and in both the singer achieved the stripped power of bare declamation, as finely tempered, of as many lights as swordsman's steel. He turned to Franck's Offertory and the beauty of song laid clasped hands upon the breast of pious ecstasy. Then the folk-pieces; then the sentimental ballads; and through both the singer's art serving simplicities. Now they were simplicities measured, refined. Again homeliness took wing. H. T. P.

Transcript Oct 26

[illegible] to Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening for his first concert in Boston since he regained his familiar powers, he will sing old airs out of Händel's oratorio, "Semele," and Händel's opera. "Alceste"; songs by Bantock, Bridge, Rakhmaninov and Franck; miscellaneous pieces by Kramer, Schneider and Rogers. As heretofore a violinist will provide interludes. Trans

McCormack Oct 25

When Mr. McCormack returns to Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening for his first concert in Boston since he regained his familiar powers, he will sing old airs out of Händel's oratorio, "Semele," and Händel's opera. "Alceste"; songs by Bantock, Bridge, Rakhmaninov and Franck; miscellaneous pieces by Kramer, Schneider and Rogers. As heretofore a violinist will provide interludes. Trans

Coming and Going, John McCormack

Trans —10-3

AUTUMN, winter and a part of the spring John McCormack, the singer, set aside for rest and study in Europe. Unexpectedly, an obligation not to be put aside, recalls him to the United States for a fortnight, more or less, at the end of this month. In the course of that stay he will sing once in New York, once in Philadelphia, once in Boston—at Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening, Oct. 25. Thereafter, until next May, no audience in America will hear him. A word is enough for the wise—and for the many who would know what voice now blesses the tenor after all the perils, last winter surmounted.

Transcript Oct 3

McCORMACK TO SING IN BOSTON OCT. 25

Herald Oct 4

John McCormick, the Irish singer, now enroute to America aboard the steamship Olympia, is expected to arrive in this country a week from today. Arrangements have been made for three concerts while here, one in New York, one in Philadelphia and the third in symphony hall the 25th of October. Accounts of his recent concert at Stratford-on-Avon, Eng., where he sang at dedication of the Edwin Booth memorial report that his voice is at its best.

Herald Oct 4

Avon.

JOHN McCORMACK COMING

Amer 10/7

John McCormack, the Irish singer, is now on the high seas on the steamship Olympic, which is expected to arrive in New York harbor Wednesday, October 11.

Arrangements have been made whereby the great tenor is to give three concerts in America, one in New York, one in Philadelphia, and one in Boston, the latter to take place in Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening, October 25. Shortly after this concert he is to bid America farewell for the time being, and return to Europe.

American Oct 7

McCORMACK COMES FOR CONCERT TOUR

New York, Oct. 10.—John McCormack, world-famous Irish tenor, was expected to land here today on the Olympic. He is to make a short concert tour of the East, giving one concert here, another in Philadelphia and a third in Boston. He will then go back to Europe for an indefinite stay. Amer 10/10

American Oct 10

M'CORMACK TO ARRIVE TODAY

Post

Tenor Will Give Concert in Hub Oct. 25

10/10

The S. S. Olympic, which is expected to arrive in New York harbor today, will bring John McCormack, the great Irish singer, to America for a very short stay. In this time he will give three concerts, one in New York, one in Philadelphia, and one in Boston. The latter is to take place in Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening, Oct. 25. Three days later McCormack will [illegible] sail for Europe.

Post Oct 10

JOHN McCORMACK

Trav 10-14

On Wednesday evening, Oct. 25, in Symphony hall, John McCormack, who returned to America last Wednesday, will give his single concert in Boston. This appearance will be in the nature of a welcome to the great Irish tenor after his illness, from which he has completely recovered, and is in especially fine voice.

Traveler Oct 14

McCormack Returns

On Wednesday evening, October 25, in Symphony Hall, John McCormack, who returned to America last Wednesday, will give his single concert in Boston. Amer 10/14

American Oct 14

"John" to Reporters

Trans 10/13

Mr. McCormack, returning from a long summer of rest and recuperation in England and Scotland, disembarked in New York on Wednesday. Forthwith the reporters surrounded him and here follows, from The World, the gist of what he said to them:

I feel fine now. I was coming home here just to make a few records, and then I planned to go back again about the end of October and stay till April, but I changed my mind. I figured that as long as I was here I might as well prove to the public that I am all right—records won't do that exactly, you know—so I'm going to stay around here until nearly Christmas. Then I'm going back to London and try and get time to work over my German lieder with Sir George Henschel.

I did a lot of work with Lionel Tertis when I was in England. I think he's the greatest artist on stringed instruments going. I'm hoping he will come over here next year. He plays the viola and we used to go over to Mary Anderson's house and work together. She loved it. We did quite a few old English arrangements for tenor and viola. They were great. I don't see why we couldn't have a few joint appearances if he comes. You don't know how fine the viola and tenor go together.

McCormack

—Trans 10/13

Transcript Oct 13

McCORMACK CONCERT

Amer 10-15

John McCormack will give a concert at Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening, October 25. This concert will be in the nature of a welcome to the great tenor, whose voice is now said to be as fine as ever.

American Oct 15

JOHN McCORMACK

Herald Oct 15

Having arrived in America for a short stay, John McCormack will give a single concert in Boston at Symphony hall on Wednesday evening, Oct. 25, previous to his return to Europe. This concert will be in the nature of a welcome to the great tenor, whose voice is now said to be as fine as ever.

Herald Oct 15

John McCormack

Post 10-15

Having arrived in America last week for a short stay, John McCormack has arranged to give a single concert in Boston at Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening, Oct. 25, just previous to his return to Europe.

Post Oct 15

Wednesday evening, Oct. 25, in Symphony Hall, a concert by John McCormack, tenor-singer, returned to America; restored (he says) in all his powers; eagerly awaited by a manifold public. His programme will [illegible]. Welcome home!

Transcript Oct 16

John McCormack will make one of three appearances, the other two being in New York and Philadelphia, followed by a return within two weeks of the last of these concerts, to Europe, after which Mr. McCormack will not be heard in America for another year. Jascha Heifetz and many other stars of the highest international reputation will be heard there, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will, as usual, give two Sunday afternoon pension fund concerts. There will be enough Sunday concerts and to spare. The attractions will be as numerous and of as high a quality as heretofore, and there will be no hint of throat-cutting rivalry.

Post 10-8

Post Oct 8

McCormack in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Oct. 1 (Special Correspondence)—John McCormack's recital audience overflowed the stage of the Academy of Music and reached its culmination in appreciation not with the Handelian classics, but with the group of archly humorous Irish ballads. Too often Mr. McCormack for his high notes had recourse to his famous pianissimo falsetto. His finest deliverance, in taste and feeling was that of César Franck's "Panis Angelicus." Rachmaninoff's "To the Children," descanted with painstaking sincerity, immediately preceding the noble Franck air, had a similar appeal of straightforward simplicity—in an illuminative contrast with the melodramatic thrill of "The Star," by Rogers. Monitor 10-24 F. L. W.

Monitor Oct 21

McCormack Sings Here Wednesday

Trav 10-21

John McCormack will sing the following numbers at his concert in Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening, Oct. 25: Arias from Handel's "Semele" and "Alceste," songs by Frank Bridge, Bantock, Rachmaninoff, Cesar Franck, J. H. Rogers, Walter Kramer and Edwin Schneider; also a group of Irish folk songs. Mr. Bochco will be assistant violinist.

Traveler Oct 21

Mr. McCormack Restored

Trans 10-21

When Mr. McCormack returns to Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening for his first concert in Boston since he regained his familiar powers, he will sing old airs out of Händel's oratorio, "Semele," and Händel's opera. "Alceste"; songs by Bantock, Bridge, Rakhmaninov and Franck; miscellaneous pieces by Kramer, Schneider and Rogers. As heretofore a violinist will provide interludes.

Transcript Oct 21

McCORMACK'S PROGRAM

John McCormack will sing the following songs at his concert in Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening: Arias from Handel's "Semele" and "Alceste," songs by Frank Bridge, Bantock, Rachmaninov, Cesar Franck, Rogers, Kramer and Schneider; also a group of Irish folk songs. Mr. Bocheo will be assisting violinist. Her 10-22

Herald Oct 22

McCormack's Programme

Post

John McCormack will sing the following numbers at his concert in Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening, Oct. 25: Arias from Handel's "Semele" and "Alceste," songs by Frank Bridge Bantock, Rachmaninov, Cesar Franck, J. H. Rogers, Walter Kramer, and Edwin Schneider; also a group of Irish folk songs. Mr. Bocheo will be assisting violinist.

Post Oct 22

Ror a week now the last seat in Symphony Hall has been sold for John McCormack's concert next Wednesday evening. That is an old story. We mention it only as an example of the popularity of a man whom people like to hear sing and people like to see and know if the opportunity arises.

McCormack is fond of a joke on himself—even a little fonder than he would be of a joke which might hurt the feelings of the other fellow.

He was talking about the range of his voice last time he was in Boston, remarking that his range was nothing remarkable—"thank heaven," he added, to which we assented. Heaven defend us from the top-note, leather-lunged tenor.

JOHN'S TOP NOTE

"And you know," continues John "the Italians simply insist on high notes in their theatres. They will have them.

"One night I was singing in Italy. It was in the early days, and I felt nervous. I had a right to feel that way. A high note was coming, and I didn't want to bear too hard on it. This displeased the audience. Italian audiences, you see, don't hesitate. You know whether you've pleased them or not.

"The opera was going to be repeated the next week, and I dreaded that repetition and wondered what I'd do.

"I hit on it at last. I told the orchestra conductor, before I went on the stage, to give me every ounce of tone he could get from his band when time for that high note arrived.

"When that time came the orchestra let loose a deafening explosion of tone. I struck an attitude, and opened my mouth. I didn't make a sound, but the audience never knew it. What the ear didn't carry to them the eye and the imagination did. The people went wild.

"'Bravo! Bis,' and so forth and on. We had to repeat the whole aria again. I opened my mouth and struck a posture heroic and grand. Salvos of applause!!

"I was henceforth the hero of that theatre. I had been nearly mobbed for the note I had sung, but the note I never sang made my reputation!"

Collector of Violins

The best thing about McCormack is his endless capacity for enjoyment of life and the variety and extent of his interests. Just now they say he is fascinated with the piano, and spends hours at that instrument. For years he collected violins. He became interested in their collection when Donald McBeath was his violin soloist on tour. Then McBeath entered the British Air Service, and McCormack's interest in the instrument seemed to flag. Anyhow, he sold his violin collection two years ago, and it brought him a handsome figure.

He had two Stradivari, one Nicolo Amati and one Guarnerius. The Amati which had been the property of the dead and gone virtuoso, Wieinawski, brought $20,000—a moderate price for such an instrument. One of the Strads brought $18,000, the other more. He had also several Tourte bows, worth about $1000 apiece. But now McCormack has sold his fiddles, also his prize cows and is going in more than ever for paintings.

Post Oct 22

JOHN McCORMACK, who sings at Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening.

Adv 10/22

Advertiser Oct 22

On Wed Eve Oct 25 in Symphony Hall, John McCormack will give a concert. His program traverses arias by Handel (from "Semele" and "Alceste"), songs by Frank Bridge, Bantock, Rachmaninoff, Franck, Rogers Kramer, and Schneider, and Irish folk songs. This will be Mr. McCormack's single concert in Boston, as he returns to Europe three days later. Monitor 10/23

Monitor Oct 23

Music

Recital by John McCormack

John McCormack gave his single Boston concert of the season last night before an audience which completely filled Symphony Hall. His program traversed the usual Handel arias, English songs and Irish folk songs, concluding with pieces by American composers, including James H. Rogers and A. Walter Kramer. It is hardly possible to record anything new of Mr. McCormack, yet the singing of so great an artist cannot be lightly passed over. If all the qualities of past years were again to be noted last evening, and they undoubtedly were, the singer being in unusually fine voice, these qualities have deepened and broadened even since his appearance here last spring. Here is a singer who will never be content with past triumphs, a singer who is continually seeking to improve, and yet in Mr. McCormack's case it has seemed that improvement was almost out of the question, so fine has his singing been during the years that are past. Superlatives are dangerous when applied to artistic matters, so changing are our ideas of what constitutes the beautiful, but there is no danger in using them in speaking of him.

Leaving aside his command of the purely technical side of singing, the natural beauty of his voice (for in these things others may perhaps hope to equal, though few to surpass him) there remain his mastery of style, his musicianship, his emotional resources; in these, the greatest qualities, he stands almost alone among singers who have so far appeared before the public. In the difficult arias of Handel as well as in a simple folk song he is a master. In songs of little musical worth, he is no less successful, contriving as he does to fill them with a beauty unsuspected. An art so many sided escapes analysis, yet there is one outstanding feature in all that he does—his sincerity, a much abused word; but one which is eminently applicable to his singing. If examples must be cited let us remark Bantock's "Desolation" and Frank Bridge's "When You Are Old and Grey," two songs which, by the majority of singers, would be pronounced ungrateful, yet which in his hands proved to be among the most effective of the evening. And what a delight to hear the English language sung with such purity of diction that the words could actually be understood without effort, a veritable lesson to all other singers. But why continue? Words of praise if too long continued become fulsome and this is far from our purpose. Suffice it to say that Mr. McCormack is among the most illustrious of singers but above and before this he is a great musician. S. M.

Monitor Oct 26

FOR the most part it might have been one of Mr. McCormack's usual concerts in Boston. To the last seat, to the last foot of standing room, to the last chair upon a stage reduced to railed pen for singer and accompanist, Symphony Hall was chock-a-block last evening. Never before, it was said, had Mr. McCormack sung hereabouts to quite so many listeners. As usual, they ran the gamut of the frequent and the infrequent in the concert-hall. The eye caught the distinguished composers of "A Pagan Poem" and divers "Character-Pieces from Omar Khayyam." It fell also upon many connoisseurs of voices and the arts of song. It lighted upon the socially elect and the socially inconsequent. It discovered that much Irish blood was pulsing for the nonce in Symphony Hall. It ranged over priests of the church; mere curiosity-seekers; and the cook whose skill a dinner-party was only yesterday applauding. Democratic, not to say miscellaneous, are Mr. McCormack's audiences.

That of Wednesday, moreover, bore itself according to every precedent. It listened with courteous interest and applause to the tenor's marvellous singing of two old airs out of Handel and a counterpart thereof by that singular modern, Signor Donaudy. With pleasure, if not with excitement, it heard Mr. McCormack through songs of Bridge, Bantock, Rakhmaninov, and through an Offertory of Franck, redolent of the altar and the organ-loft of Sainte-Clothilde. Thereafter came the Irish folk-pieces, and with them the assembly rose to the sixth heaven of delight. One, two, even three, it added to the appointed list. Last stood the ballads sentimental and upon them the audience easily scaled the seventh region celestial. There it tarried and the singer with it, until it had exacted uncounted extras. It is the custom to say that Mr. McCormack educates audiences—unconscious of a process they would otherwise resent, cradled in it as it were. In the arts of song, he does so surely. Yet with him for interludes, he brings as violinists the mediocrities of old, the nonentity of last evening; and lo! the listeners would have "extras" from them also.

Wherein, then, the differences from past occasion through many a year? First, in the aspect and the bearing of Mr. McCormack himself, visible for the first time, since he beat off death last winter and, for once, rested through a whole summer. He has, indeed, put away superfluous flesh, though he remains a sturdy, strapping, striding figure. But gone, at least for yesterday, were the quick energy of that stride, the eager smiling glance, the general air of expansive well-being and confidence. Gravely Mr. McCormack came to his singing; gravely he accomplished it; gravely he bowed to every plaudit. Within long memory he has not sung more sedulously, more thoughtfully; but quite gone were the old alacrity, the occasional exuberance. For the night at least care and pains rode Mr. McCormack's broad shoulders. For reason evident, two concerts in a week now suffice him.

In the voice as well came to acute ears what seemed momentary evidence of change. Intrinsically, it remains John McCormack's voice as pure and flawless a tenor as ever kind gods blessed upon mortal man. Yet now and then, for no more than the shadow of an instant creeps into it the baritone tinge, unescapable lot of tenors as the years thicken. Once and again, too when the composer set down his highest notes over exacting interval Mr. McCormack's tone drew close to an idealized falsetto—say Monsieur Clément's—cover that the Irishman is not wont to take. Obviously, too, in choice of pieces, Mr. McCormack preferred songs that traversed his middle tones, invited half-voice, demanded few large and open phrases, avoided sustained altitudes. At need, he could summon such expansive flights and periods, but he preferred wisely not to tax himself with them. Always, too, he sang as one taking thought of every note, husbanding his vocal means, most artful in the distribution of them.

Throughout the concert it was in these arts and this finesse of song that Mr. McCormack surpassed himself; from group to group of pieces widening his range over them; from number to number refining upon them. His curving of the first period in Händel's air of sleep was summons to sensuous sensation; his subsequent sustaining of the melodic arc, as in one long breath and sweep of serene tone, was deep, sensuous beauty. His phrasings undulated with the music; upon the velvet of his tones he brushed the fine lustre of his diction. He passed to an "air gai," as eighteenth-century classification went, from Händel's "Alceste," and every ornament became a little flower of vocal finesse; every rhythmic turn a stroke of sensibility. He chose then the imitative air of Donaudy and therein a Kreisler might have envied him the fine-spun tones of transition in perfect rhythmical adjustment. The ear heard the chiselled periods; the reciprocal eye seemed to rest upon Greek marbles as serene, gentle and flawless.

A song of Bridge ensued and Mr. McCormack was renewed master of the wistful coloring of tones. A song of Bantock followed, a song also of Rakmaninov, and in both the singer achieved the stripped power of bare declamation, as finely tempered, of as many lights as swordsman's steel. He turned to Franck's Offertory and the beauty of song laid clasped hands upon the breast of pious ecstasy. Then the folk-pieces; then the sentimental ballads; and through both the singer's art serving simplicities. Now they were simplicities measured, refined. Again homeliness took wing. H. T. P.

Transcript Oct 26

---

ones up and down a long ent always.
ger new to Boston, Miss
of the secondary forces of ers House, assisted Mr.
black and white of her
in the pretty grace of her s charmingly youthful to the young timbres of her e ear like and equal pleas-
rt-rooms tend to be mid-
o see and hear are youth-youthful voice entering Miss d'Arles is remarkable
she much needs vocal so-supplement—or even anti-ent vocal freshness and
trous body, the warmth,
er dark, widely ranging hear, but upon them she s artfulness that would them. She follows her
; she is susceptible to s voice to mood, passion,
ht with these things—and
—she remains elementary.
on, design are not yet
s. But for yesterday,
from Rimsky-Korsakov
promise was pleasure.
H. T. P.

Oct 23

[99]

M'CORMACK AT SYMPHONY HALL

Herald 11/11

Three Old Italian Airs and Irish Songs Among His Offerings

HAS TO SPARE HIS VOICE AT FIRST

For his second recital this season John McCormack, tenor, drew an audience last night at Symphony Hall that left not one inch of sitting or standing room empty. Edwin Schneider, as usual, played excellent accompaniment; Rudolph Bochco played violin arrangements by Auer and Kreisler and a Wieniawski Polonaise to the liking of the audience, and Albert W. Snow, organist, lent his aid in an obbligato to Sullivan's "Lost Chord."

Mr. McCormack sang three old Italian airs, Peri's "Gioite al canto mio," the Lotti "Pur dicesti" and "Caro mio ben." For the second group he chose ranck's "Procession," "La Serenata," by Gandonai; a new "Song of the Mill," by Arthur Foote, and a Hugo Wolf song, "Wo find' ich Trost." The Irish folk song group contained four arrangements by Hughes, "Has Sorrow Thy Young Days Shaded," two "fragments," "Da Luin da Mairt" and "The Magpie's Nest," "Kitty, My Love," and one arrangement by Stanford, "The Song of the Fairy King." At the last Mr. McCormack sang "The Poet Sings," by Winter Watts; Stanford's "Johneen;" "The Little Trees," by H. O. Osgood, and "The Lost Chord."

For half the evening the concert scarcely went with the dash one expects at a McCormack recital. Markedly out of voice, the singer had to spare himself. Apparently, too, he failed to please the audience with his choice of songs. There were clamors, of course, for more, and applause in plenty, but, nevertheless, the concert did not "go" till Mr. McCormack, once more in voice, sang the Irish songs. Then all was well, though he sang them as he alone can sing them, the most remarkable feature of the evening had gone before—the amazing skill with which he coaxed a refractory voice into condition, thereby contenting an audience which might easily have gone home disappointed. What, in similar case, would one of those "natural" singers of whom we hear have contrived? To know one's business seems well worth while.

R. R. G.

Herald Nov 11

JOHN McCORMACK SINGS TO CAPACITY AUDIENCE

John McCormack sang last night at Symphony Hall to the usual capacity audience. His announced "three concerts in America" have grown to 20, according to a late announcement. Boston is to hear him once more, at least, in the Steinert series, before he sails for Europe. His voice last night showed the effect of a slight cold which compelled him to be cautious about high notes and fortissimos. The applause was vigorous and he added, with what under the circumstances was probably more generosity than prudence, to the already long and exacting program.

He began with old Italian airs, among them one by Peri, one of the inventors of opera. By exception he gave a German song, Wolf's "Wo find ich Trost" in the original language. As a compliment to Boston, he included a new song by Arthur Foote, "Song by the Mill," which pleased his hearers.

The assisting artist was again Rudolph Bochco, a violinist with more sponaneity than subtlety, who played numbers by Wieniawski, Auer and Kreisler, the latter two being, of course, transcribers. He, too, added to the program.

Globe 11-11

Globe 11-11

McCORMACK IN SECOND CONCERT

Amer 11/11

For the second time this season, the old-time spell of John McCormack was cast over a huge gathering which taxed to the utmost the capacity of Symphony Hall.

The program was a joy in its range of material and in the delight of each individual song. There was a majority in favor of the old Irish folk songs that nobody else sings in the way that Mr. McCormack does—just simply and unaffectedly holding in the palm of his hand the emotions of a vast throng.

Rudolph Bochco, violinist, assisted with a few numbers. Edwin Schneider played the thoroughly splendid accompaniments that he always gives his artist.

Probably the peak of the evening from the point of view of most of the audience was the last number, "The Lost Chord," Arthur Sullivan, with organ obligato by Albert W. Snow. This was immensely effective.

Half a dozen or more encores were added by Mr. McCormack, including "Mother Machree," sung with a

American Nov 11

McCORMACK AGAIN

John McCormack is to be the artist at the third Steinert concert in Symphony Hall, transferred from a Sunday to Thursday evening, December 7. This will probably be his last concert in America this season. Adv 11-26

Advertiser Nov 26

McCORMACK

Mr. John McCormack is to be the artist at the third Steinert concert in Symphony Hall. On account of Mr. McCormack's previous engagements, this concert had to be transferred from a Sunday to Thursday evening, Dec. 7. This will probably be Mr. McCormack's last concert in America this season as his time is almost wholly booked for various parts of Europe for almost a year to come. Trav 11-25

Traveler Nov 25

~~Herald Nov 11~~

US Marine Band (Auspices B. Y.M.C. Union) Oct 26

MARINE BAND COMING

The United States Marine Band is to visit Boston, playing in Symphony Hall on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, October 26. This visit is made by special permission of President Harding. The band is over a century old and is known as the "President's Own." The distinguished leader is William H. Santelmann.

Advertiser Oct 8

UNITED STATES MARINE BAND

For the first time in 10 years, the United States Marine Band, which, as the official band of the administration at Washington, is held to be one of the finest parts of the government ceremonies, will visit Boston and give a pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, Oct. 26. Trav 10-14

Traveler Oct 14

United States Marine Band

For the first time in ten years the United States Marine Band, which, as the official band of the administration at Washington, is held to be one of the finest parts of the government ceremonies, will visit Boston and give a pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, October 26.

American Oct 14

Marine Band

Post 10-15

President Harding and the Senators at Washington are as proud of the United States Marine Band as of any part of the governmental ceremony. It is because of this pride that the President wishes the band to be heard elsewhere, and it is with his special permission, in a warm letter of praise, that he sends the United States Marine Band to Boston, where it is to be heard for the first time in 10 years in a pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, Oct. 26.

Post Oct 15

MARINE BAND

Amer 10-15

President Harding is sending the United States Marine Band to Boston, where it is to be heard for the first time in ten years in a pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, October 26. For more than a century this band has figured in every presidential inaugural. Its concerts in the White House and at the Capitol are famous. The leader is William H. Santelmann. The Marine Band comes to Boston under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Union.

American Oct 15

U. S. MARINE BAND

Herald Oct 14

President Harding is as proud of the United States Marine Band as of any part of the governmental ceremony, and he, therefore, wishes the band to be heard elsewhere. It is with his special permission, in a warm letter of praise, that he sends the United States Marine Band to Boston, where it will be heard for the first time in 10 years in concerts in Symphony hall on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, Oct. 26.

The band began its present tour by some memorable benefit concerts. On Sept. 24 last, in the Hippodrome, New York, the receipts reached $18,000. In Jersey City on Oct. 7, another benefit concert was given at Boyle's Thirty Acres, where almost 90,000 people attended.

For over a century the band has figured in every inaugural. Its concerts in the White House and on the east porch of the Capitol are famous. With its present leader, William H. Santelman, and its distinguished membership, which is of many years standing, the band holds its reputation as one of the finest bands in the world. It comes to Boston under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Union.

Herald Oct 15

~~Thursday evening~~, Oct. 26, in Symphony Hall, a concert ~~by the United~~ States Marine Band, now on leave from its usual post at the White House. Its function there bespeaks its merit. Tran 10-16

Transcript Oct 16

U. S. MARINE BAND

Next Thursday afternoon, Oct. 26, at 3:30, and the same evening at 8:15, the United States Marine Band, which has come from Washington by special permission and with the warm recommendation of President Harding, will give a pair of concerts in Symphony Hall. This band, which is justly considered one of the greatest military and concerts bands in the world, owes much of its fame to its leader, Capt. William H. Santelmann. Trav 10-21

Traveler Oct 21

The President's Band

Tran 10/21

On Thursday afternoon at 3.30 and on the same evening at the usual hour, the United States Marine Band—a rare visitor to Boston—will be heard in two concerts at Symphony Hall to disclose the quality that makes it worthy accessory to Presidential entertainments and other ceremonies of state. Captain Santelmann, an able musician, now leads it and the programmes include for the afternoon, Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont"; a Fantasia from Puccini's "Manon Lescaut," Chaikovsky's "Slavic March," Strauss's "Blue Danube" Waltz, and fragments from Wagner's "Lohengrin." For the evening they list Weber's Overture to "Der Freischütz," Rimsky-Korsakov's "Hymn to the Sun," Sibelius's "Finlandia," "Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla" from Wagner's "Rheingold," a Suite from Delibes's ballet "Coppélia," and numbers by Rakhmaninov and Liszt.

Transcript Oct 21

U. S. MARINE BAND

Her 10/22

The United States Marine Band, the official band of the administration at Washington, will perform in Symphony hall on Thursday afternoon at 3:30 and evening at 8:15. This renowned organization has figured in every inaugural parade in Washington since Jefferson became president. For 22 years the United States Marine Band has been under the leadership of Capt. William H. Santelmann. The band is the pride of

Herald Oct 22

U. S. MARINE BAND

The United States Marine Band will perform in Symphony Hall on Thursday afternoon and evening, October 26. For twenty-two years the band has been under the leadership of Captain William H. Santelmann. The band is the legitimate pride of the national capital. Some splendid marches will figure in the encores, always added to the program.

Adv 10/22

Advertiser Oct 22

On Thursday afternoon and evening, Oct. 26, in Symphony Hall, the United States Marine Band, under the direction of Capt. William H. Santelmann, will play the following: Monitor 10/23

In the afternoon:

Beethoven—Overture to "Egmont."
Puccini—Fantasia from "Manon Lescaut."
Tschaikowsky—"Marche Slave."
Strauss—"On the Beautiful Blue Danube."
Wagner—Fantasia from "Lohengrin."
and shorter pieces, including a trombone solo by Robert E. Clark.

In the evening:

Weber—Overture to "Der Freischütz."
Rimsky-Korsakoff—"Hymn to the Sun."
Sibelius—"Finlandia."
Wagner—Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla.
Delibes—"Coppelia."
Rachmaninoff—Prelude.
Liszt—Hungarian Rhapsody.

The band plays by special permission of President Harding.

Monitor Oct 23

It looks as if it would be a comparatively peaceful week in the musical world. As the United States Marine Band, which plays here this afternoon and evening, is an institution of the government at Washington, recommended by Mr. Harding, it will of course not have anything unseemly, much less outrageous, on its programs. The report that Mr. Harding at the end of his term will become a member of the band and thus renew his youth—we believe he was once an accomplished virtuoso on the horn—or was it a slide trombone?—has been officially contradicted. Her 10/26

Herald Oct 26

U. S. MARINE BAND GIVES FINE CONCERT

Amer 10-27

Everybody at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon and evening, including the marines, had a good time when the U. S. Marine band gave a concert.

Conductor Santelmann selected both programmes wisely and the audience responded to his choice on each occasion very enthusiastically. In fact, the program was almost doubled by encores.

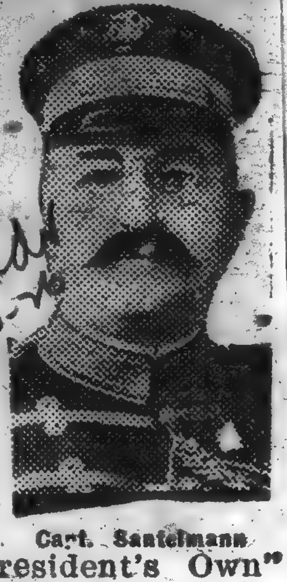
Two of the most interesting points were the sextette from "Lucia di Lammermoor" and the quartet from "Rigoletto."

It is remarkable the effect that Mr. Santelmann succeded in getting out of instruments which were practically all brass. There were many times during the course of the concert when it would not have been hard to believe that strings were there, and again bass viols.

American Oct 27

Famous Marine Band In Boston

The famous United States Marine Band is coming to Boston today for the first time in 10 years. It will give concerts this afternoon and evening in Symphony Hall.



Capt. Santelmann

Adv 10-26

The Boston Y. M. C Union has invited the leader of the band, Capt William H. Santelmann, to be guest of honor at a luncheon.

Before the "President's Own" can leave Washington it is necessary to secure permission from the White House. President Harding, not only granted the desired leave of absence, but added a complimentary note.

For 22 years the Marine Band has been under the leadership of Capt. Santelmann. Its performances are features of every important function at the White House or Capitol.

Advertiser Oct 26

MARINE BAND GIVES SPLENDID CONCERTS

"President's Own" Heard in Varied Program

Presidents come and go, but "the President's Own" band goes on forever—and after listening to it in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon and evening one might almost wish that it literally would never stop. Twenty-six Presidents have entered the White House since the United States Marine Band was organized (in 1802), and Capt William H. Santelmann, its present leader, has played for most of them from Harrison to Harding, and for the last 24 years as leader, his immediate predecessors having been Francesco Fansiulli and John Philip Sousa.

The Marine Band does not specialize in martial airs; its province in Washington, in the White House and out, has been to entertain rather than provide step-music. So it was heard at its best yesterday—and by far too few persons in the afternoon—in programs including the Egmont and Freischutz overtures, Richard Wagner's "Entrance of the Gods in Walhalla," from the "Rheingold"; the War Fanfare and King's Prayer from "Lohengrin"; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Hymn to the Sun"; Sibelius' tone poem, "Finlandia"; ballet music from "Coppelia"; Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C Minor; Liszt's "Pesther Carnival"; Tschaikowsky's "Marche Slav"; scenes from "Manon Lescaut"; a Lacome serenade; four or five marches, including the Marine Corps' own, "Semper Fidelis"; delightful trombone and cornet solos by Robert E. Clark and Arthur S. Whitcomb; the "Star Spangled Banner," of course, and no end of encores.

Capt Santelmann has 48 musicians with him on this trip, and their playing is a real joy to anyone fond of the better class of band music. The concerts were provided by the Boston Y. M. C. U.

Globe Oct 27

Globe Oct 27

MARINE BAND IS ARTISTIC

Post 11/27

Sonority, Beauty and Balance of Tone Remarkable

BY OLIN DOWNES

Two concerts were given by the United States Marine Band, William H. Santelman, conductor, in aid of the building fund of the Young Men's Christian Union, yesterday, in Symphony Hall. The band is now on tour by the special permission of the President. It appeared in its official uniforms—blue in the afternoon, red in the evening.

A SUPERB ORGANIZATION

It's a superb organization of which the country may well feel proud. Seldom indeed, is a band heard here which approaches this one in fullness, sonority and beauty and balance of tone.

The performances were impressive, not only because of the tone quality of the band, but because of exceptional ingenuity and effectiveness of scoring. Aside from the question of whether a band should attempt to emulate an orchestra, this was a lesson in what can be done with instruments of brass and wood wind to rival the orchestra with the strings which the brass band lacks. Very surprising in the fullness and shimmer of the tone were the accompaniment yesterday evening of the hymn intoned by the brass near the beginning of Weber's "Freischutz" overture, and the tremolo which follows in the orchestral version, with the thought of the evil spirits of Weber's fantastic music drama. Similarly in the rainbow music which Wagner wrote for the finale scene of the "Rhinegold," where there was again orchestral rather than band effect.

Post Oct 27

MARINE BAND IN 2 CONCERTS

"President's Own" Plays Before Large Audiences in Symphony Hall

VARIED PROGRAMS ARE PRESENTED

Her 10/27

The United States Marine band, Capt. William H. Santelmann directing, gave two concerts in Symphony hall yesterday under the auspices of the Boston Young Men's Christian Union. The band is one of the most famous organizations of its kind in the world, and at the afternoon as well as evening performance a large sized and appreciative audience was present.

The organization is known in this country as the official band of the administration at Washington. A United States marine band has participated in eevry inaugural parade at the capital since 1801, when Thomas Jefferson became president.

40 MUSICIANS

For the last 22 years the present band has been directed by Capt. Santelmann. It has also had among its conductors John Philip Sousa, "the march king."

The band, made up of about 40 skilled musicians, shows musical knowledge and training of no small degree. It is exceedingly well balanced in tone and practically every member in the band is a soloist.

The programs yesterday ranged from the classical to the lighter vein. The afternoon program included Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, Lacome's "Spring Morning," trombone solo; "Ecstasy of Spring," rendered by Robert E. Clark, the composer; fantasia from Puccini's "Manon Lescaut," Tschaikowsky's "March Slave," The Blue Danube waltzes and excerpts from Wagner's "Lohengrin."

For the evening the program included Weber's "Der Freischutz" overture, Rimsky Korsakov's "Hymn to the Sun," Sibelius, "Finlandia," trumpet solo, "Le Reve D'Amour," played by Principal Musician Arthur S. Witcomb; Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla, from Wagner's "The Rhinegold;" Rachmaninoff's "Prelude," Delibes's "Coppelia" suite and Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody."

Every number was enthusiastically applauded. The audiences were especially generous to the soloists.

Herald Oct 27

US Marine Band (Auspices Bo. Y.M.C. Union) Oct 26

MARINE BAND COMING

The United States Marine Band is to visit Boston, playing in Symphony Hall on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, October 26. This visit is made by special permission of President Harding. The band is over a century old and is known as the "President's Own." The distinguished leader is William H. Santelmann.

Advertiser Oct 8

UNITED STATES MARINE BAND

For the first time in 10 years, the United States Marine Band, which, as the official band of the administration at Washington, is held to be one of the finest parts of the government ceremonies, will visit Boston and give a pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, Oct. 26. Trav 10-14

Traveler Oct 14

United States Marine Band

For the first time in ten years the United States Marine Band, which, as the official band of the administration at Washington, is held to be one of the finest parts of the government ceremonies, will visit Boston and give a pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, October 26.

American Oct 14

Marine Band

Post 10-15

President Harding and the Senators at Washington are as proud of the United States Marine Band as of any part of the governmental ceremony. It is because of this pride that the President wishes the band to be heard elsewhere, and it is with his special permission, in a warm letter of praise, that he sends the United States Marine Band to Boston, where it is to be heard for the first time in 10 years in a pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, Oct. 26.

Post Oct 15

MARINE BAND

President Harding is sending the United States Marine Band to Boston, where it is to be heard for the first time in ten years in a pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, October 26. For more than a century this band has figured in every presidential inaugural. Its concerts in the White House and at the Capitol are famous. The leader is William H. Santelmann. The Marine Band comes to Boston under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Union.

American Oct 15

U. S. MARINE BAND

Oct 15

President Harding is as proud of the United States Marine Band as of any part of the governmental ceremony, and he, therefore, wishes the band to be heard elsewhere. It is with his special permission, in a warm letter of praise, that he sends the United States Marine Band to Boston, where it will be heard for the first time in 10 years in concerts in Symphony hall on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, Oct. 26.

The band began its present tour by some memorable benefit concerts. On Sept. 24 last, in the Hippodrome, New York, the receipts reached $18,000. In Jersey City on Oct. 7, another benefit concert was given at Boyle's Thirty Acres, where almost 90,000 people attended.

For over a century the band has figured in every inaugural. Its concerts in the White House and on the east porch of the Capitol are famous. With its present leader, William H. Santelman, and its distinguished membership, which is of many years standing, the band holds its reputation as one of the finest bands in the world. It comes to Boston under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Union.

Herald Oct 15

Thursday evening, Oct. 26, in Symphony Hall, a concert by the United States Marine Band, now on leave from its usual post at the White House. Its function there bespeaks its merit.

Transcript Oct 16

U. S. MARINE BAND

Next Thursday afternoon, Oct. 26, at 3:30, and the same evening at 8:15, the United States Marine Band, which has come from Washington by special permission and with the warm recommendation of President Harding, will give a pair of concerts in Symphony Hall. This band, which is justly considered one of the greatest military and concerts bands in the world, owes much of its fame to its leader, Capt. William H. Santelmann.

Traveler Oct 21

The President's Band

On Thursday afternoon at 3.30 and on the same evening at the usual hour, the United States Marine Band—a rare visitor to Boston—will be heard in two concerts at Symphony Hall to disclose the quality that makes it worthy accessory to Presidential entertainments and other ceremonies of state. Captain Santelmann, an able musician, now leads it and the programmes include for the afternoon, Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont"; a Fantasia from Puccini's "Manon Lescaut," Chaikovsky's "Slavic March," Strauss's "Blue Danube" Waltz, and fragments from Wagner's "Lohengrin." For the evening they list Weber's Overture to "Der Freischütz," Rimsky-Korsakov's "Hymn to the Sun," Sibelius's "Finlandia," "Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla" from Wagner's "Rheingold," a Suite from Delibes's ballet "Coppélia," and numbers by Rakhmaninov and Liszt.

Transcript Oct 21

U. S. MARINE BAND

The United States Marine Band, the official band of the administration at Washington, will perform in Symphony hall on Thursday afternoon at 3:30 and evening at 8:15. This renowned organization has figured in every inaugural parade in Washington since Jefferson became president. For 22 years the United States Marine Band has been under the leadership of Capt. William H. Santelmann. The band is the pride of

Herald Oct 22

U. S. MARINE BAND

The United States Marine Band will perform in Symphony Hall on Thursday afternoon and evening, October 26. For twenty-two years the band has been under the leadership of Captain William H. Santelmann. The band is the legitimate pride of the national capital. Some splendid marches will figure in the encores, always added to the program.

Advertiser Oct 22

On Thursday afternoon and evening, Oct. 26, in Symphony Hall, the United States Marine Band, under the direction of Capt. William H. Santelmann, will play the following: Monitor 10/23

In the afternoon:

Beethoven—Overture to "Egmont."
Puccini—Fantasia from "Manon Lescaut."
Tschaikowsky—"Marche Slave."
Strauss—"On the Beautiful Blue Danube."
Wagner—Fantasia from "Lohengrin."
and shorter pieces, including a trombone solo by Robert E. Clark.

In the evening:

Weber—Overture to "Der Freischütz."
Rimsky-Korsakoff—"Hymn to the Sun."
Sibelius—"Finlandia."
Wagner—Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla.
Delibes—"Coppelia."
Rachmaninoff—Prelude.
Liszt—Hungarian Rhapsody.

The band plays by special permission of President Harding.

Monitor Oct 23

It looks as if it would be a comparatively peaceful week in the musical world. As the United States Marine Band, which plays here this afternoon and evening, is an institution of the government at Washington, recommended by Mr. Harding, it will of course not have anything unseemly, much less outrageous, on its programs. The report that Mr. Harding at the end of his term will become a member of the band and thus renew his youth—we believe he was once an accomplished virtuoso on the horn—or was it a slide trombone?—has been officially contradicted.

Herald Oct 26

U. S. MARINE BAND GIVES FINE CONCERT

Amer 10-27

Everybody at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon and evening, including the marines, had a good time when the U. S. Marine band gave a concert.

Conductor Santelmann selected both programmes wisely and the audience responded to his choice on each occasion very enthusiastically. In fact, the program was almost doubled by encores.

Two of the most interesting points were the sextette from "Lucia di Lammermoor" and the quartet from "Rigoletto."

It is remarkable the effect that Mr. Santelmann succeded in getting out of instruments which were practically all brass. There were many times during the course of the concert when it would not have been hard to believe that strings were there, and again bass viols.

American Oct 27

Famous Marine Band In Boston

The famous United States Marine Band is coming to Boston today for the first time in 10 years. It will give concerts this afternoon and evening in Symphony Hall.

Capt. Santelmann

The Boston Y. M. C Union has invited the leader of the band, Capt William H. Santelmann, to be guest of honor at a luncheon

Before the "President's Own" can leave Washington it is necessary to secure permission from the White House. President Harding, not only granted the desired leave of absence, but added a complimentary note.

For 22 years the Marine Band has been under the leadership of Capt. Santelmann. Its performances are features of every important function at the White House or Capitol.

Advertiser Oct 26

MARINE BAND GIVES SPLENDID CONCERTS

"President's Own" Heard in Varied Program

Presidents come and go, but "the President's Own" band goes on forever—and after listening to it in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon and evening one might almost wish that it literally would never stop. Twenty-six Presidents have entered the White House since the United States Marine Band was organized (in 1802), and Capt William H. Santelmann, its present leader, has played for most of them from Harrison to Harding, and for the last 24 years as leader, his immediate predecessors having been Francesco Fansiulli and John Philip Sousa.

The Marine Band does not specialize in martial airs; its province in Washington, in the White House and out, has been to entertain rather than provide step-music. So it was heard at its best yesterday—and by far too few persons in the afternoon—in programs including the Egmont and Freischutz overtures, Richard Wagner's "Entrance of the Gods in Walhalla," from the "Rheingold"; the War Fanfare and King's Prayer from "Lohengrin"; Rimsky-Korsakov's "Hymn to the Sun"; Sibelius' tone poem, "Finlandia"; ballet music from "Coppella"; Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C Minor; Liszt's "Pesther Carnival"; Tschaikowsky's "Marche Slav"; scenes from "Manon Lescaut"; a Lacome serenade; four or five marches, including the Marine Corps' own, "Semper Fidelis"; delightful trombone and cornet solos by Robert E. Clark and Arthur S. Whitcomb; the "Star Spangled Banner," of course, and no end of encores.

Capt Santelmann has 48 musicians with him on this trip, and their playing is a real joy to anyone fond of the better class of band music. The concerts were provided by the Boston Y. M. C. U.

Globe Oct 27

MARINE BAND IS ARTISTIC

Sonority, Beauty and Balance of Tone Remarkable

BY OLIN DOWNES

Two concerts were given by the United States Marine Band, William H. Santelman, conductor, in aid of the building fund of the Young Men's Christian Union, yesterday, in Symphony Hall. The band is now on tour by the special permission of the President. It appeared in its official uniforms—blue in the afternoon, red in the evening.

A SUPERB ORGANIZATION

It's a superb organization of which the country may well feel proud. Seldom indeed, is a band heard here which approaches this one in fullness, sonority and beauty and balance of tone.

The performances were impressive, not only because of the tone quality of the band, but because of exceptional ingenuity and effectiveness of scoring. Aside from the question of whether a band should attempt to emulate an orchestra, this was a lesson in what can be done with instruments of brass and wood wind to rival the orchestra with the strings which the brass band lacks. Very surprising in the fullness and shimmer of the tone were the accompaniment yesterday evening of the hymn intoned by the brass near the beginning of Weber's "Freischutz" overture, and the tremolo which follows in the orchestral version, with the thought of the evil spirits of Weber's fantastic music drama. Similarly in the rainbow music which Wagner wrote for the finale scene of the "Rhinegold," where there was again orchestral rather than band effect.

Post Oct 27

MARINE BAND IN 2 CONCERTS

"President's Own" Plays Before Large Audiences in Symphony Hall

VARIED PROGRAMS ARE PRESENTED

Her 10/27

The United States Marine band, Capt. William H. Santelmann directing, gave two concerts in Symphony hall yesterday under the auspices of the Boston Young Men's Christian Union. The band is one of the most famous organizations of its kind in the world, and at the afternoon as well as evening performance a large sized and appreciative audience was present.

The organization is known in this country as the official band of the administration at Washington. A United States marine band has participated in eevry inaugural parade at the capital since 1801, when Thomas Jefferson became president.

40 MUSICIANS

For the last 22 years the present band has been directed by Capt. Santelmann. It has also had among its conductors John Philip Sousa, "the march king."

The band, made up of about 40 skilled musicians, shows musical knowledge and training of no small degree. It is exceedingly well balanced in tone and practically every member in the band is a soloist.

The programs yesterday ranged from the classical to the lighter vein. The afternoon program included Beethoven's "Egmont" overture, Lacome's "Spring Morning," trombone solo; "Ecstasy of Spring," rendered by Robert E. Clark, the composer; fantasia from Puccini's "Manon Lescaut," Tschaikowsky's "March Slave," The Blue Danube waltzes and excerpts from Wagner's "Lohengrin."

For the evening the program included Weber's "Der Freischutz" overture, Rimsky Korsakov's "Hymn to the Sun," Sibelius, "Finlandia," trumpet solo, "Le Reve D'Amour," played by Principal Musician Arthur S. Witcomb; Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla, from Wagner's "The Rhinegold;" Rachmaninoff's "Prelude," Delibes's "Coppelia" suite and Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody."

Every number was enthusiastically applauded. The audiences were especially generous to the soloists.

Herald Oct 27

[101]

Heifetz Oct 29

Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Jascha Heifetz, the violinist, for first appearance in Boston this season. His following will be eager to hear whether he has regained his even mastery of technique and tone; yet quickened and deepened, as he was striving to do last spring, a more personal and warmer musical speech. Trans 10-7

Transcript Oct 7

Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Jascha Heifetz, the violinist, for first appearance in Boston this season. His following will be eager to hear whether he has regained his even mastery of technique and tone; yet quickened and deepened, as he was striving to do last spring, a more personal and warmer musical speech. Trans 10-16

Transcript Oct 16

Mr. Heifetz, the violinist, proposes the following numbers for his concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29:

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Two Caprices, No. 13 and No. 20	Wieniawski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

Transcript Oct 19

HEIFETZ PROGRAM

Adv 10-21

Jascha Heifetz will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, October 29, at 3:30. The great violinist will be heard in the following program:

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Caprice No. 13	Wieniawski
Caprice No. 20	Wien awski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Weiniawski

Advertiser Oct 21

HEIFETZ PROGRAM

Jascha Heifetz will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29, at 3:30. The great violinist will be heard in a varied and interesting program: Trav 10-21

Traveler Oct 21

Heifetz Programme

Post 10/22

Jascha Heifetz will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Oct. 22, at 3:30. The great violinist will play the Concerto in E minor by Nardini; Concerto in A major, Mozart, and compositions by Beethoven, Beethoven-Auer, Grasse, Wieniawski, Sgambati.

Post Oct 22

Jascha Heifetz' Program

10/22

Jascha Heifetz will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Oct 29, at 3:30. The violinist will be heard in the following program: Concerto in E minor, Nardini; Concerto in A major, Mozart; Romance in F major, Beethoven; Chorus of Dervishes, Beethoven-Auer; "Waves at Play," Grasse; Caprices Nos. 13 and 20, Wieniawski; Serenata, Sgambati; Polonaise in D major, Wieniawski.

Globe Oct 22

HEIFETZ PROGRAM

Adv 10/22

Jascha Heifetz will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, with the following program:

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Caprice No. 13	Wieniawski
Caprice No. 20	Wieniawski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

Advertiser Oct 22

HEIFETZ PROGRAM

10/22

Jascha Heifetz will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29, at 3.30.

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Caprice No. 13	Wieniawski
Caprice No. 20	Wieniawski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

Herald Oct 22

On Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29, in Symphony Hall, Jascha Heifetz will play the following:

Nardini—Concerto in E minor. Monitor 10/23
Mozart—Concerto in A major.
Beethoven—Romance in F major.
Beethoven-Auer—Chorus of Dervishes.
Grasse—Waves at Play.
Wieniawski—Caprices Nos. 13 and 23.
Sgambati—Serenata.
Wieniawski—Polonaise in D major.

Monitor Oct 23

CONCERT-CALENDAR

Miss Braslau, Miss Ponselle and Mr. de Gogorza for Singers — Mr. Heifetz to Return—Mr. Hutcheson's Series of Piano Recitals—Other Impending Joys

Tran 10-23

SUNDAY afternoon, Oct. 29, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Jascha Heifetz, the violinist, for first appearance in Boston this season. His following will be eager to hear whether he has regained his even mastery of technique and tone; yet quickened and deepened as, now and then, last spring, by a more personal and warmer musical speech. His programme traverses Concertos by Nardini and Mozart; a Romance of Beethoven; two Caprices by Wieniawski; other displayfu numbers.

Transcript Oct 23

Next week Mr. Heifetz will fiddle, but he is not given to incendiary speeches on the platform. He is a calm and collected person. There will be a couple of pianists. Miss Matherine Bacon's program is not alarming, even if she does threaten to play Chopin's Preludes, all of them, one after the other. As for Mr. Hutcheson, he is always serious. His recital a week from Saturday will be devoted to the solemn contemplation of Bach—Johann Sebastian Bach.

Herald Oct 26

HEIFETZ TOMORROW

Amer 10/28

Jascha Heifetz, the great Russian violinist, will be heard in the following program at his concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon at 3:30.

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A pajor	Mozart
a. Romance in F major	Beethoven
b. Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
c. Waves at Play	Grasse
d. Caprice No. 13
e. Capri e No. 20	Wieniawski
a. Serenata	Sgambati
b. Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

American Oct 28

Mr. Heifetz Returns

Trans 10-28

Tomorrow afternoon at Symphony Hall, Mr. Heifetz, the violinist, will play for the first time, this season, in Boston. His following will be eager to hear whether he has regained his even mastery of technique and tone; yet quickened and deepened as, now and then, last spring, by a more personal and warmer musical speech. His programme traverses Concertos by Nardini and Mozart; a Romance of Beethoven; two Caprices by Wieniawski; other displayful numbers.

Transcript Oct 28

Heifetz Program for Tomorrow

Trav 10-28

Jascha Heifetz, the great Russian violinist, will be heard in the following program at his concert in Symphony hall tomorrow afternoon at 3:30:

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Caprice No 13	Wieniawski
Caprice No. 20	Wieniawski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

Traveler Oct 28

Concert and Recital Programs for the Current Week

Oct 29

SYMPHONY HALL — Today at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz, violinist. Concerto in E minor, Nardini; Concerto in A major, Mozart; Romance in F major, Beethoven; Chorus of Dervishes, Beethoven-Auer; "Waves at Play," Grasse; Caprice Nos. 13 and 20, Wieniawski; Serenata, Sgambati; Polonaise in D major, Wieniawski.

Oct 29 Globe

HEIFETZ PLAYS TODAY

This afternoon in Symphony Hall, at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz, the great Russian violinist, returns to Boston to be heard in the following programme: Adv 10-29

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Caprice No. 13	Wieniawski
Caprice No. 20	Wieniawski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

Advertiser Oct 29

HEIFETZ PLAYS TODAY

This afternoon in Symphony Hall, at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz, violinist, returns to Boston to be heard in the following program: Herald Oct 29

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Caprice No. 13	Wieniawski
Caprice No. 20	Wieniawski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

Herald Oct 29

HEIFETZ PLAYS TODAY

This afternoon, in Symphony Hall, at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz, the great Russian violinist, returns to Boston and will play the concerto in E minor, Nardini; the concerto in A major, Mozart, and smaller pieces. Post 10-29

Post Oct 29

HEIFETZ PLAYS TO IMMENSE AUDIENCE

Amer 10/30

An aisle down the centre of the stage of Symphony Hall to accommodate Heifetz and his grand piano was all the space that was left when finally, at about 4.30 oc'clock yesterday afternoon, the last of the crowd had been wedged into every nook and corner.

The program as presented was as follows: Concerto in E minor, Nardini; concerto in A major, Mozart; Romance in F major, Beethoven; "Chorus of Dervishes," Beethoven-Auer; "Waves at Play," Grasse; Caprices, Numbers 13 and 20, Wienlawski; "Serenata," Sgambati; and the Polonaise in D major, Wienawski. A long program to which Mr. Heifetz added only one encore before the last number, but several at the conclusion of the concert.

PERFECT VIOLIN PLAYING.

Of the concertos, the Mozart was more pleasing to the audience in content and also in presentation. "The Chorus of Dervishes" was the peak of the afternoon from a purely technical standpoint — seldom is there heard more perfect violin playing than this.

The old question of whether Heifetz is gaining from season to season in depth of feeling seemed to be answered in the affirmative when he played the Romance by Beethoven. There was considerably more appeal to one's emotions in this one number than was felt elsewhere throughout the program. It seemed to presage a different and more interesting Heifetz.

STUNNING VOLUME.

The concluding number, the Polonaise by Wieniawski, showed a breadth of tone and volume that was stunning. It is a briliant polonaise and was played absolutely up to the mark.

There was also to be heard accompanying that was so nearly perfect that we can't remember when we have heard anything like it. Samuel Chotzinoff is remarkable in that he is an artist equal in his line to the soloist.

American Oct 30

PHOTO.
Adv 10-29
JASCHA HEIFETZ — SYMPHONY HALL

Advertiser Oct 29

Herald Oct 29

LEFT TO RIGHT: JASCHA HEIFETZ, VIOLINIST,

Herald Oct 29

HEIFETZ PLAYS TO DELIGHTED AUDIENCE

His First Boston Recital of the Season

Globe Oct 30

Jascha Heifetz gave his first Boston recital of the current season yesterday afternoon to an enthusiastic audience that crowded Symphony Hall. Many extra pieces were demanded. The program began with classic concertos by Nardini and Mozart. Beethoven's "Romance in F" and a transcription by Auer of the "Chorus of Dervishes" from "The Ruins of Athens" were followed by pretty or displayful trifles by Grasse, Wieniawski and Sgambati, which rounded out the program in a manner pleasing to lovers of "stunts" and "gumdrops," in both of which genres Mr Heifetz excels.

Heifetz' performance of the two 18th century concertos showed a notable gain over his previous playing of such music. He treated the two pieces not merely as convenient vehicles for his wonted display of smooth, fluent, melodious fiddling, but as having a significance of their own felt by him and interpreted to his hearers. So, at least, it seemed to one listener.

Nardini's music has a facile grace in its way of exploiting a thin but genuine vein of sentiment. Mr Heifetz tried to read into it a Chopinesque eloquence which the composer never put there. He clipped phrases and heightened stresses in a fashion which Leopold Mozart, who admired Nardini, would perhaps not have understood.

These same mannerisms were evident in Heifetz' playing of Wolfgang Mozart's beautiful A major concerto. But the violinist for once seemed moved by the music and certainly moved many in his audience. Upon it he lavished his most exquisite felicities of tone and phrasing, lending the piece a lyrical adolescent melancholy more appropriate, perhaps, to Schubert than to Mozart.

Mr Heifetz will give a second recital at Symphony Hall Nov 26.

Globe Oct 30

[102]

Heifetz Oct 29

Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Jascha Heifetz, the violinist, for first appearance in Boston this season. His following will be eager to hear whether he has regained his even mastery of technique and tone; yet quickened and deepened, as he was striving to do last spring, a more personal and warmer musical speech.

Transcript Oct 7

Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Jascha Heifetz, the violinist, for first appearance in Boston this season. His following will be eager to hear whether he has regained his even mastery of technique and tone; yet quickened and deepened, as he was striving to do last spring, a more personal and warmer musical speech.

Trans 10-16

Transcript Oct 16

Mr. Heifetz, the violinist, proposes the following numbers for his concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29:

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Two Caprices, No. 13 and No. 20	Wieniawski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

Transcript Oct 19

HEIFETZ PROGRAM

Jascha Heifetz will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, October 29, at 3:30. The great violinist will be heard in the following program:

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Caprice No. 13	Wieniawski
Caprice No. 20	Wien awski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Weiniawski

Advertiser Oct 21

HEIFETZ PROGRAM

Jascha Heifetz will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon. Oct. 29, at 3:30. The great violinist will be heard in a varied and interesting program:

Traveler Oct 21

Heifetz Programme

Jascha Heifetz will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Oct. 22, at 3:30. The great violinist will play the Concerto in E minor by Nardini; Concerto in A major, Mozart, and compositions by Beethoven, Beethoven-Auer, Grasse, Wieniawski, Sgambati.

Post Oct 22

Jascha Heifetz' Program

Jascha Heifetz will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Oct 29, at 3:30. The violinist will be heard in the following program: Concerto in E minor, Nardini; Concerto in A major, Mozart; Romance in F major, Beethoven; Chorus of Dervishes, Beethoven-Auer; "Waves at Play," Grasse; Caprices Nos. 13 and 20, Wieniawski; Serenata, Sgambati; Polonaise in D major, Wieniawski.

Globe Oct 22

HEIFETZ PROGRAM

Jascha Heifetz will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, with the following program:

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Caprice No. 13	Wieniawski
Caprice No. 20	Wieniawski
Serenata	Sgambati
[illegible] major	Wieniawski

Advertiser Oct 22

HEIFETZ PROGRAM

Jascha Heifetz will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29, at 3.30.

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Caprice No. 13	Wieniawski
Caprice No. 20	Wieniawski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

Herald Oct 22

On Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29, in Symphony Hall, Jascha Heifetz will play the following:

Nardini—Concerto in E minor.
Mozart—Concerto in A major.
Beethoven—Romance in F major.
Beethoven-Auer—Chorus of Dervishes.
Grasse—Waves at Play.
Wieniawski—Caprices Nos. 13 and 23.
Sgambati—Serenata.
Wieniawski—Polonaise in D major.

Monitor 10/23

Monitor Oct 23

CONCERT-CALENDAR

Miss Braslau, Miss Ponselle and Mr. de Gogorza for Singers — Mr. Heifetz to Return—Mr. Hutcheson's Series of Piano Recitals—Other Impending Joys

SUNDAY afternoon, Oct. 29, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Jascha Heifetz, the violinist, for first appearance in Boston this season. His following will be eager to hear whether he has regained his even mastery of technique and tone; yet quickened and deepened as, now and then, last spring, by a more personal and warmer musical speech. His programme traverses Concertos by Nardini and Mozart; a Romance of Beethoven; two Caprices by Wieniawski; other displayfu numbers.

Transcript Oct 23

Next week Mr. Heifetz will fiddle, but he is not given to incendiary speeches on the platform. He is a calm and collected person. There will be a couple of pianists. Miss Matherine Bacon's program is not alarming, even if she does threaten to play Chopin's Preludes, all of them, one after the other. As for Mr. Hutcheson, he is always serious. His recital a week from Saturday will be devoted to the solemn contemplation of Bach—Johann Sebastian Bach.

Herald Oct 26

HEIFETZ TOMORROW

Jascha Heifetz, the great Russian violinist, will be heard in the following program at his concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon at 3:30.

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A pajor	Mozart
a. Romance in F major	Beethoven
b. Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
c. Waves at Play	Grasse
d. Caprice No. 13
e. Capri e No. 20	Wieniawski
a. Serenata	Sgambati
b. Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

American Oct 28

Mr. Heifetz Returns

Tomorrow afternoon at Symphony Hall, Mr. Heifetz, the violinist, will play for the first time, this season, in Boston. His following will be eager to hear whether he has regained his even mastery of technique and tone; yet quickened and deepened as, now and then, last spring, by a more personal and warmer musical speech. His programme traverses Concertos by Nardini and Mozart; a Romance of Beethoven; two Caprices by Wieniawski; other displayful numbers.

Transcript Oct 28

Heifetz Program for Tomorrow

Jascha Heifetz, the great Russian violinist, will be heard in the following program at his concert in Symphony hall tomorrow afternoon at 3:30:

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Caprice No 13	Wieniawski
Caprice No. 20	Wieniawski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

Traveler Oct 28

Concert and Recital Programs for the Current Week

SYMPHONY HALL — Today at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz, violinist. Concerto in E minor, Nardini; Concerto in A major, Mozart; Romance in F major, Beethoven; Chorus of Dervishes, Beethoven-Auer; "Waves at Play," Grasse; Caprice Nos. 13 and 20, Wieniawski; Serenata, Sgambati; Polonaise in D major, Wieniawski.

Oct 29 Globe

HEIFETZ PLAYS TODAY

This afternoon in Symphony Hall, at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz, the great Russian violinist, returns to Boston to be heard in the following programme:

Adv 10-29

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Caprice No. 13	Wieniawski
Caprice No. 20	Wieniawski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

Advertiser Oct 29

HEIFETZ PLAYS TODAY

This afternoon in Symphony Hall, at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz, violinist, returns to Boston to be heard in the following program:

Herald Oct 29

Concerto in E minor	Nardini
Concerto in A major	Mozart
Romance in F major	Beethoven
Chorus of Dervishes	Beethoven-Auer
Waves at Play	Grasse
Caprice No. 13	Wieniawski
Caprice No. 20	Wieniawski
Serenata	Sgambati
Polonaise in D major	Wieniawski

Herald Oct 29

HEIFETZ PLAYS TODAY

This afternoon, in Symphony Hall, at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz, the great Russian violinist, returns to Boston and will play the concerto in E minor, Nard'ni; the concerto in A major, Mozart, and smaller pieces.

Post Oct 29

HEIFETZ PLAYS TO IMMENSE AUDIENCE

Amer 10-30

An aisle down the centre of the stage of Symphony Hall to accommodate Heifetz and his grand piano was all the space that was left when finally, at about 4.30 oc'clock yesterday afternoon, the last of the crowd had been wedged into every nook and corner.

The program as presented was as follows: Concerto in E minor, Nardini; concerto in A major, Mozart; Romance in F major, Beethoven; "Chorus of Dervishes," Beethoven-Auer; "Waves at Play," Grasse; Caprices, Numbers 13 and 20, Wienlawski; "Serenata," Sgambati; and the Polonaise in D major, Wien awski. A long program to which Mr. Heifetz added only one encore before the last number, but several at the conclusion of the concert.

PERFECT VIOLIN PLAYING.

Of the concertos, the Mozart was more pleasing to the audience in content and also in presentation. "The Chorus of Dervishes" was the peak of the afternoon from a purely technical standpoint — seldom is there heard more perfect violin playing than this.

The old question of whether Heifetz is gaining from season to season in depth of feeling seemed to be answered in the affirmative when he played the Romance by Beethoven. There was considerably more appeal to one's emotions in this one number than was felt elsewhere throughout the program. It seemed to presage a different and more interesting Heifetz.

STUNNING VOLUME.

The concluding number, the Polonaise by Wieniawski, showed a breadth of tone and volume that was stunning. It is a brillant polonaise and was played absolutely up to the mark.

There was also to be heard accompanying that was so nearly perfect hat we can't remember when we have heard anything like it. Samuel Chotzinoff is remarkable in that he is an artist equal in his line to the soloist.

American Oct 30

PHOTO.

JASCHA HEIFETZ — SYMPHONY HALL

Advertiser Oct 29 [102]

Herald Oct 29

LEFT TO RIGHT: JASCHA HEIFETZ, VIOLINIST

Herald Oct 29

HEIFETZ PLAYS TO DELIGHTED AUDIENCE

His First Boston Recital of the Season

Globe Oct 30

Jascha Heifetz gave his first Boston recital of the current season yesterday afternoon to an enthusiastic audience that crowded Symphony Hall. Many extra pieces were demanded. The program began with classic concertos by Nardini and Mozart. Beethoven's "Romance in F" and a transcription by Auer of the "Chorus of Dervishes" from "The Ruins of Athens" were followed by pretty or displayful trifles by Grasse, Wieniawski and Sgambati, which rounded out the program in a manner pleasing to lovers of "stunts" and "gumdrops," in both of which genres Mr Heifetz excels.

Heifetz' performance of the two 18th century concertos showed a notable gain over his previous playing of such music. He treated the two pieces not merely as convenient vehicles for his wonted display of smooth, fluent, melodious fiddling, but as having a significance of their own felt by him and interpreted to his hearers. So, at least, it seemed to one listener.

Nardini's music has a facile grace in its way of exploiting a thin but genuine vein of sentiment. Mr Heifetz tried to read into it a Chopinesque eloquence which the composer never put there. He clipped phrases and heightened stresses in a fashion which Leopold Mozart, who admired Nardini, would perhaps not have understood.

These same mannerisms were evident in Heifetz' playing of Wolfgang Mozart's beautiful A major concerto. But the violinist for once seemed moved by the music and certainly moved many in his audience. Upon it he lavished his most exquisite felicities of tone and phrasing, lending the piece a lyrical adolescent melancholy more appropriate, perhaps, to Schubert than to Mozart.

Mr Heifetz will give a second recital at Symphony Hall Nov 26.

Globe Oct 30

Braslau - De Gogorza Nov 5 (aft) (Steinert) (Mc Isaacs)
Irish Band Nov 5 (Eve)

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 5, in Symphony Hall, a concert of old airs, songs and operatic pieces divided between Miss Braslau, divining, dramatizing singer, rich and varied of voice, and Mr. de Gogorza, in the prime equally of tones, technique, taste and characterizing imagination. A notable concert. Tran Oct 21

Transcript Oct 21

On Sunday afternoon, Nov. 5, in Symphony Hall, Sophie Braslau and Emilio de Gogodza will divide a program consisting of the usual operatic arias and miscellaneous pieces. Monitor 10/23

Monitor Oct 23

Braslau-Gogorza Program

The Steinerts have secured two exceptionally fine singers for a joint recital next Sunday afternoon at Symphony Hall, Emilio de Gogorza, the baritone often admired by Boston audiences, and Sophie Braslau, the spirited and rich voiced contralto heard here chiefly as assisting artist with choral societies and orchestra. They have set a program which contains a good deal of that best sort of music, which is at once good and easy to like at a first hearing. It runs as follows: "Where'er You Walk," Handel; "Diane Impitoyable," Gluck; "Come to Me Beloved," 17th Century; "Furibondo," Handel; "La Fuite de la Lune," "Symphony in Yellow" and "An Old Song Re-sung," Griffes; "Invictus," Bruno Huhn; "Gretchen am Spinnrade," "Der Leierman," "Ungeduld" and "Erlkonig," Schubert; "Roses du Soir," Louis Aubert; "Complainte de la Glue" (first time), A. Chapuis; "Solea" (first

Globe Oct 29

BRASLAU-GOGORZA CONCERT

Trav 11-4

Tomorrow at Symphony Hall, Miss Sophie Braslau, contralo, and Emilio DeGogorza, the well-liked baritone, will present the program at the second Steinert Concert. As is her custom Miss Braslau's selection of a program is interesting and Mr. DeGogorza is a program-maker par excellence. Mrs. Cave Cole, and Miss Helen Winslow will be the accompanists.

American Nov 4

Two Lyric Stars at Steinert Concert

Amr Nov 5

TODAY, at Symphony Hall, Sophie Braslau, contralto, and Emilio DeGogorza, baritone, will appear at the second Steinert concert. The program follows:

Where'er You Walk............G. F. Handel
Diane Impitoyable..................G. Gluck
Mr. Gogorza.
Come to Me, Beloved..........17th Century
Furibondo ....Handel
Miss Braslau.
La Fuite de la Lune...................Griffes
Symphony in Yellow...................Griffes
An Old Song Re-sung..................Griffes
Invictus ....Bruno Huhn
Mr. Gogorza.
Gretchen am Spinnrade................Schubert
Der Leierman ....Schubert
Ungeduld ....Schubert
Erlkonig ....Schubert
Miss Braslau.
Roses du Soir.........................Louis Aubert
Complainte de la Glu (First time).A. Chapuis
La Gitana "Solea" (First time).
Arr. by Isidoro Hernandez
"Ay"—Serenata Andaluzia (First time).
Isidoro Hernandez
"Cancion del Amor Dolido" (First time).
Manuel de Falla
Mr. Gogorza.
Indian Serenade ....Josten
I Passed by Your Window.
Thou Art Risen, My Beloved.
Coleridge-Taylor
Miss Braslau.

American Nov 5

Mr. de Gogorza Enlarged

Trans 11-20

It is a pity that Mr. de Gogorza, when he appears in Boston, is almost always either assisting the Symphony Orchestra or sharing a Sunday Concert with another singer. It is high time that he should have a recital here all to himself as he did yesterday in New York. Then and there he repeated the numbers in which he was lately heard in Boston; but added to them four songs by Schumann and three by Milhaud. All seven his Bostonian public would have heard gratefully. In particular, according to The Times, he distinguished himself in these German songs, "singing them with poetry, power and passion. Legato, modulations of force, skill in the use of hard tones and changing registers, perfection of phrase, the varied vocal coloring in the expression of varied emotions, crystalline diction, all marked his singing." The songs of Milhaud, Mr. Henderson dismisses ironically in The Herald. They were 'more or less humorous. They were worth hearing once. It is unlikely that the eminent baritone will permanently encumber his artistic baggage with them. Impressionism is admirable—when it impresses.'"

Transcript Nov 20

TWO ARTISTS AT SYMPHONY HALL

Herald 11/6

Sophie Braslau and Emilio de Gogorza Present a Pleasing Program

LARGE AUDIENCE GREETS SINGERS

For the second concert of the Steinert series, yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall, the artists were Sophie Braslau, contralto; her accompanist, Ethel Cave-Cole, and Emilio de Gogorza, baritone, for whom Helen M. Winslow played the accompaniments.

Mr. Gogorza began the concert with Handel's air, "Where'er You Walk," followed by the Gluck air from "Iphigenie en Aulide," "Diane Impitoyable." Presently he sang three songs by Griffes, "La Fuite de la Lune," "Symphony in Yellow," "An Old Song Resung," also Huhn's "Invictus." For his third group he sang "Roses du Soir," by Aubert; "Complainte de la Glu," by Chapuis, a Spanish gypsy song and a serenade arranged by Hernandez; and finally, a song by De Falla, "Concion del Amor Dolido."

Miss Braslau sang first an Italian air (unless the 17th century "Come to Me, Beloved," which stood first on the program, is fitted out with Italian words), and Handel's "Furibondo," from "Partenope." Next she sang a Schubert group, "Gretchen am Spinnrade," "Der Leiermann," an unfamiliar German song in place of "Ungeduld," put down on the program, and the "Erlkonig." At the end she sang an Indian Serenade by Josten, "I Passed by Your Window," by May Brahe, and Coleridge-Taylor's "Thou Art Risen, My Beloved." Both singers added to the program.

If a contralto voice of more thrilling beauty than that Miss Braslau displayed yesterday is now to be heard in public, the blessed possessor does not honor Boston with her presence. This glorious voice, furthermore, Miss Braslau now uses to better advantage than she did something like a year ago, for though she gave her chest tones yesterday more freely than good taste allows, she did not overwork them so heavily as before, and all her tones she has learned to produce with less constraint. If now she will only work to acquire a firmer breath control, the hard unresonant quality which sometimes mars her upper notes should disappear; a voice of splendor should result, a voice second to none.

Musically as well as technically Miss Braslau shows gain. Her "Gretchen am Spinnrade" she had carefully planned for a steady climax; it made its effect. So did the Leiermann, simply sung, but expressively, with just emphasis. "The Erlkonig" thrilled. With her voice, her musical intelligence and her temperament, Miss Braslau should go far—if only she will work judiciously.

Mr. de Gogorza is to be thanked for singing the three Griffes songs. That young man had qualities many of his contemporaries lack. Though he shared the present fancy for unusual harmonic effects, he had the good taste to use them only for a purpose; possessed of genuine originality, he felt no need to give proof of that fine attribute at every turn. He was not compelled, for the matter of that, to lean on harmonic devices as on a crutch, for he could write a shapely melody of expressive force. He appreciated, too, the necessity of learning his job; since he chose to write songs, he learned to write effectively for the voice, and, unlike too many of our young American composers, he was not above taking pains with his musical declamation. Above all else he had imagination. Is it a wonder he wrote songs of beauty?

Mr. de Gogorza, in fine voice, sang admirably, above all, his Spanish songs. Miss Winslow, forced to play orchestral accompaniments on a pianoforte, showed how well it can be done if the pianist knows how. An accompanist of her ability is not heard every day. The audience was large. R. V. G.

Herald Nov 6

Braslau-de Gogorza

Sophie Braslau, contralto, and Emilio de Gogorza, baritone, gave a concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon.

Mr. de Gogorza, who opened the concert, sings with a charm and a grace that make him one of the great baritones in the American concert halls. His manner is pleasing to the eye and his voice agreeable to the ear. He has a voice possessed of rare polish, his diction is clear and smooth, his understanding of the music he sings is unimpeachable.

Miss Braslau is obviously not only a concert singer, but an operatic singer as well. For in her presentation of the songs she has dramatic power, vivid interpretation. Whether the song be a Schubert Lied or even a sentimental trifle she makes alive the music and words. Post - 11-6

Post Nov 6

DE GOGORZA AND MISS BRASLAU IN RECITAL

Amr 11/6

The combination of Miss Sophie Braslau and Emilio De Gogorza in recital yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall brought out an audience that filled the hall.

The program was practically doubled in length by the encores that were added by both the contralto and the baritone.

The most splendid accompaniments were played for Miss Braslau by Mrs. Edith Cave-Cole, who has unusual perception of the value at the piano in reference to the voice of a singer. Miss Helen Winslow accompanied for Mr. Gogorza.

The audience seemed divided as to its enjoyment of the singers, giving Miss Braslau and Mr. De Gogorza about an even share of the heartiest applause.

One was once more reminded of the charm of personality which has made Emilio De Gogorza one of the most popular baritones before the American public today. Equally true is this of Miss Braslau—if anything, her voice seemed bigger and broader and more lovely in its velvety tones than last season.

Two of the most enjoyed encores that Miss Braslau gave were "My Lil Bateau" and "My Lindy Lou," both by Strickland. This type of things the contralto does delightfully.

American Nov 6

SOPHIE BRASLAU AND DE GOGORZA SING

Globe 11-6

Symphony Hall Audience Receives Both Cordially

Sophie Braslau and Emilio de Gogorza gave a joint recital yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall to a large audience which applauded both singers with exceptional cordiality. For Mr de Gogorza, long a favorite in Boston, there were many recalls. He added generously to the program, giving especial pleasure by his spirited version of Valverde's "Clavelitos," and his suave delivery of "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes."

His announced numbers included three songs by Griffes, "La Fuite de la Lune," "Symphony in Yellow," and "An Old Song Resung," and an air from a recent opera by Manuel de Falla, a noted Spanish composer, too little known here.

Griffes in these songs used harmonic and melodic idioms common to many young American composers, but his melodic contours were more delicately and surely drawn; his harmonies combined with delicate unerring taste. Behind his work one felt a subtle and essentially romantic imagination.

Mr de Gogorza did not quite catch and render the tenuous grace of Griffes' music. He made de Falla's piece melodramatic. Only in the Spanish ballads which are his forte did the baritone's singing seem wholly spontaneous. His fine voice and skilful singing carried him acceptably through the rest of his part of the program, but his heart seldom seemed in what he sang.

Miss Braslau again proved that she is at once an extraordinarily capable singer, who makes the most of her ample vocal resources, and an interpreter of concert songs possessed of a vivid dramatic imagination. Of her Schubert group the familiar "Erlking" and the far less known "Leiermann" suited her best. To "Gretchen am Spinnrade" she brought too articulate a woe. Her fault, which is that of her race, is a tendency to overemotionalism of a sort more facile than poignant.

She delighted the audience immensely by her effective singing of various popular ballads. May Brahe's "I Passed by Your Window" had to be repeated because its catchpenny simplicity and barely concealed echoing of "Mother Machree" pleased those listening to it a first time. At the end of the program Miss Braslau added a number of extra pieces.

Globe Nov 6

Trav IRISH REGIMENT BAND 10/14

The Irish Regiment Band, which is making its first tour of the United States, will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Nov. 5. This great organization, which won the first prize at the Canadian National Exposition last year, will consist of 75 musicians, an Irish singer, an Irish folk-dancer and a piper, the latter the famous pipe major Trenholme.

Traveler Oct 14

IRISH BAND COMING

Amr 10/15

The Irish Regiment Band, which is making its first tour of the United States, will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, November 5. This organization won the first prize at the Canadian National Exposition last year. The program will be exclusively Irish.

American Oct 15

IRISH BAND

Adv Oct 21

Plans are under way by several Irish societies in Boston to welcome the Irish Regiment Band, the prize musical organization of Canada, when it comes to Boston on Sunday evening, November 5. The big band is commanded by Lieutenant Wiggin, and carries the following soloists: Beatrice O'Leary, soprano; William Tong, cornet; R. E. Everson, cornet, and Pipe Major John Trenholme, the skillful player on the Irish pipes who ever left Galway. The program arranged for Boston will introduce nearly all the Irish songs and dances so beloved by the Irish exiles in America. There will be no classic or operatic music, everything Irish from the beginning of the concert until the end.

Advertiser Oct 21

IRISH REGIMENT BAND IN CONCERT

The Irish Regiment Band, Lieutenant Andrew J. Wiggin, conductor, will give its first concert in Boston next Sunday night at Symphony Hall. Beatrice O'Leary, soprano, Pipe Major John Trenholme and others will be soloists. The program follows:

Overture, Lily of Killarney ....Benedict
Procession of the Piper,
Pipe Major Trenholme
Cornet Solo, Sounds From the Hudson, Clarke
William Tong
Dancing, The Hornpipe,
Jean McNaughton
Suite, Three Irish Pictures ....Ansell
Grand Review of Ancient and Modern Music ....Hughes
Solo, "Macushla," .....Dermot Macmurragh
Beatrice O'Leary
Descriptive Idyll, "The Warbler's Serenade," ....Perry
Cornet Solo, "The Rosary," ....Nevin
R. E. Everson
Dancing accompanied by the Brian Boru Pipes
Jean McNaughton.
Selection, "The Emerald Isle,"
Arthur Sullivan

American Oct 28

IRISH BAND

Adv 10/23

Plans are under way by several Irish societies in Boston to welcome the Irish Regiment Band, prize musical organization of Canada, when it comes to Boston Sunday evening, November 5. The big band is commanded by Lieutenant Wiggin and carries the following soloists: Beatrice O'Leary, soprano; William Tong, cornet; R. E. Everson, cornet, and Pipe Major John Trenholme, most skillful player on the Irish pipes who ever left Galway. The program arranged for Boston will introduce many renowned Irish songs and dances. There will be no classic or operatic music, everything being Irish folk music from beginning to end of the concert.

Advertiser Oct 23

Irish Band From Toronto

Gl 10/29

The Irish Regiment Band of Toronto, Canada, will give an entertainment next Sunday night at Symphony Hall including bagpipers (Irish, not Scotch, we are assured by the advance announcements) cornet solos, and interpretive dances by Jean McNaughton. Beatrice O'Leary, soprano, will sing "Macushla," and "The Emerald Isle." The entertainment will begin, appropriately by an overture, "The Lily of Killarney," composed by Sir Julius Benedict. Lively and popular encores are also promised if demanded by applause. The evening should certainly not suffer from monotony.

Globe Oct 29

OLD TIME IRISH JIGS

Amr 11/4

The skirling of pipes, the merry measures of the old Irish jigs and reels and the rollicking airs of the Emerald Isle will make the welkin ring at Symphony Hall tonight when the Irish Regiment Band makes its first Boston appearance. The big musical organization, every member Irish born, hails from Toronto, where the work it has done in keeping alive the beautiful melodies of Ireland has been very remarkable. The band possesses in Beatrice O'Leary an Irish soperano of the front rank, and in Pipe Major Trenholme an artist on the bagpipes who has no equal in this country.

Beatrice O'Leary

The program for tonight is Irish through and through, and the band has ready as encores all the Irish tunes which there wasn't room enough to set down on the program. One change has been made in the announced program to further increase the green flavor of it. The cornet solo, "Sounds from the Hudson," has been changed to "The Dear Little Shamrock."

1—Lily of Killarney..............Benedict
2—Procession of the Piper.
Pipe-Major John Trenholme.
3—Cornet Solo. Dear Little Shamrock.
Mr. William Tong.
4—Dancing. The Hornpipe.
Miss Jean McNaughton.
5—Suite. Three Irish Pictures.....Ansell
Intermission.
6—Grand Review of Ancient and Modern Irish Music, including songs of the Sixteenth Century to the present day, specially arranged for the Irish Regiment Band by...... ....Hughes
7—Soprano Solo Macushla,
Dermot Macmurragh
Miss Beatrice O'Leary
8—Descriptive Idyll. The Warbler's Serenade .... Perry
9—Song for Cornet. The Rosary.... Nevin
Mr. R. E. Everson
10—Dancing accompanied by the Brian Borlin Pipes; The Jig; The Reel.
Miss Jean McNaughton.
11—Selection. The Emerald Isle.
Arthur Sullivan

American Nov 4

[103]

Braslau - De Gogorza Nov 5 (aft) (Steinert)
Irish Band Nov 5 (Eve) (McIsaacs)

Sunday afternoon, Nov. 5, in Symphony Hall, a concert of old airs, songs and operatic pieces divided between Miss Braslau, divining, dramatizing singer, rich and varied of voice, and Mr. de Gogorza, in the prime equally of tones, technique, taste and characterizing imagination. A notable concert. Tran Oct 21

Transcript Oct 21

On Sunday afternoon, Nov. 5, in Symphony Hall, Sophie Braslau and Emilio de Gogodza will divide a program consisting of the usual operatic arias and miscellaneous pieces. Monitor 10/23

Monitor Oct 23

Braslau-Gogorza Program

The Steinerts have secured two exceptionally fine singers for a joint recital next Sunday afternoon at Symphony Hall, Emilio de Gogorza, the baritone often admired by Boston audiences, and Sophie Braslau, the spirited and rich voiced contralto heard here chiefly as assisting artist with choral societies and orchestra. They have set a program which contains a good deal of that best sort of music, which is at once good and easy to like at a first hearing. It runs as follows: "Where'er You Walk," Handel; "Diane Impitoyable," Gluck; "Come to Me Beloved," 17th Century; "Furibondo," Handel; "La Fuite de la Lune," "Symphony in Yellow" and "An Old Song Re-sung," Griffes; "Invictus," Bruno Huhn; "Gretchen am Spinnrade," "Der Leierman," "Ungeduld" and "Erlkonig," Schubert; "Roses du Soir," Louis Aubert; "Complainte de la Glue" (first time), A. Chapuis; "Solea" (first

Globe Oct 29

BRASLAU-GOGORZA CONCERT

Tomorrow at Symphony Hall, Miss Sophie Braslau, contralo, and Emilio DeGogorza, the well-liked baritone, will present the program at the second Steinert Concert. As is her custom Miss Braslau's selection of a program is interesting and Mr. DeGogorza is a program-maker par excellence. Mrs. Cave Cole, and Miss Helen Winslow will be the accompanists.

American Nov 4

Two Lyric Stars at Steinert Concert

Amer Nov 5

TODAY, at Symphony Hall, Sophie Braslau, contralto, and Emilio DeGogorza, baritone, will appear at the second Steinert concert. The program follows:

Where'er You Walk............G. F. Handel
Diane Impitoyable....................G. Gluck
Mr. Gogorza.
Come to Me, Beloved..........17th Century
Furibondo ....Handel
Miss Braslau.
La Fuite de la Lune.......................Griffes
Symphony in Yellow.......................Griffes
An Old Song Re-sung.....................Griffes
Invictus ....Bruno Huhn
Mr. Gogorza.
Gretchen am Spinnrade................Schubert
Der Leicrman ....Schubert
Undeduld ....Schubert
Erlkonig ....Schubert
Miss Braslau.
Roses du Soir...........................Louis Aubert
Complainte de la Glu (First time).A. Chapuis
La Gitana "Solea" (First time).
Arr. by Isidoro Hernandes
"Ay"—Serenata Andaluzia (First time).
Isidoro Hernandes
"Cancion del Amor Dolido" (First time).
Manuel de Falla
Mr. Gogorza.
Indian Serenade ....Josten
I Passed by Your Window.
Thou Art Risen, My Beloved.
Coleridge-Taylor
Miss Braslau.

American Nov 5

Mr. de Gogorza Enlarged

Trans 11-20

It is a pity that Mr. de Gogorza, when he appears in Boston, is almost always either assisting the Symphony Orchestra or sharing a Sunday Concert with another singer. It is high time that he should have a recital here all to himself as he did yesterday in New York. Then and there he repeated the numbers in which he was lately heard in Boston; but added to them four songs by Schumann and three by Milhaud. All seven his Bostonian public would have heard gratefully. In particular, according to The Times, he distinguished himself in these German songs, "singing them with poetry, power and passion. Legato, modulations of force, skill in the use of hard tones and changing registers, perfection of phrase, the varied vocal coloring in the expression of varied emotions, crystalline diction, all marked his singing." The songs of Milhaud, Mr. Henderson dismisses ironically in The Herald. They were "more or less humorous. They were worth hearing once. It is unlikely that the eminent baritone will permanently encumber his artistic baggage with them. Impressionism is admirable—when it impresses."

Transcript Nov 20

TWO ARTISTS AT SYMPHONY HALL

Herald 11/6

Sophie Braslau and Emilio de Gogorza Present a Pleasing Program

LARGE AUDIENCE GREETS SINGERS

For the second concert of the Steinert series, yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall, the artists were Sophie Braslau, contralto; her accompanist, Ethel Cave-Cole, and Emilio de Gogorza, baritone, for whom Helen M. Winslow played the accompaniments.

Mr. Gogorza began the concert with Handel's air, "Where'er You Walk," followed by the Gluck air from "Iphigenie en Aulide," "Diane Impitoyable." Presently he sang three songs by Griffes, "La Fuite de la Lune," "Symphony in Yellow," "An Old Song Resung," also Huhn's "Invictus." For his third group he sang "Roses du Soir," by Aubert; "Complainte de la Glu," by Chapuis, a Spanish gypsy song and a serenade arranged by Hernandez; and finally, a song by De Falla, "Concion del Amof Dolido."

Miss Braslau sang first an Italian air (unless the 17th century "Come to Me, Beloved," which stood first on the program, is fitted out with Italian words), and Handel's "Furibondo," from "Partenope." Next she sang a Schubert group, "Gretchen am Spinnrade," "Der Leiermann," an unfamiliar German song in place of "Ungeduld," put down on the program, and the "Erlkonig." At the end she sang an Indian Serenade by Josten, "I Passed by Your Window," by May Brahe, and Coleridge-Taylor's "Thou Art Risen, My Beloved." Both singers added to the program.

If a contralto voice of more thrilling beauty than that Miss Braslau displayed yesterday is now to be heard in public, the blessed possessor does not honor Boston with her presence. This glorious voice, furthermore, Miss Braslau now uses to better advantage than she did something like a year ago, for though she gave her chest tones yesterday more freely than good taste allows, she did not overwork them so heavily as before, and all her tones she has learned to produce with less constraint. If now she will only work to acquire a firmer breath control, the hard unresonant quality which sometimes mars her upper notes should disappear; a voice of splendor should result, a voice second to none.

Musically as well as technically Miss Braslau shows gain. Her "Gretchen am Spinnrade" she had carefully planned for a steady climax; it made its effect. So did the Leiermann, simply sung, but expressively, with just emphasis. "The Erlkonig" thrilled. With her voice, her musical intelligence and her temperament, Miss Braslau should go far—if only she will work judiciously.

Mr. de Gogorza is to be thanked for singing the three Griffes songs. That young man had qualities many of his contemporaries lack. Though he shared the present fancy for unusual harmonic effects, he had the good taste to use them only for a purpose; possessed of genuine originality, he felt no need to give proof of that fine attribute at every turn. He was not compelled, for the matter of that, to lean on harmonic devices as on a crutch, for he could write a shapely melody of expressive force. He appreciated, too, the necessity of learning his job; since he chose to write songs, he learned to write effectively for the voice, and, unlike too many of our young American composers, he was not above taking pains with his musical declamation. Above all else he had imagination. Is it a wonder he wrote songs of beauty?

Mr. de Gogorza, in fine voice, sang admirably, above all, his Spanish songs. Miss Winslow, forced to play orchestral accompaniments on a pianoforte, showed how well it can be done if the pianist knows how. An accompanist of her ability is not heard every day. The audience was large. R. V. G.

Herald Nov 6

Braslau-de Gogorza

Sophie Braslau, contralto, and Emilio de Gogorza, baritone, gave a concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon.

Mr. de Gogorza, who opened the concert, sings with a charm and a grace that make him one of the great baritones in the American concert halls. His manner is pleasing to the eye and his voice agreeable to the ear. He has a voice possessed of rare polish, his diction is clear and smooth, his understanding of the music he sings is unimpeachable.

Miss Braslau is obviously not only a concert singer, but an operatic singer as well. For in her presentation of the songs she has dramatic power, vivid interpretation. Whether the song be a Schubert Lied or even a sentimental trifle she makes alive the music and words. Post - 11-6

Post Nov 6

DE GOGORZA AND MISS BRASLAU IN RECITAL

Amer 11/6

The combination of Miss Sophie Braslau and Emilio De Gogorza in recital yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall brought out an audience that filled the hall.

The program was practically doubled in length by the encores that were added by both the contralto and the baritone.

The most splendid accompaniments were played for Miss Braslau by Mrs. Edith Cave-Cole, who has unusual perception of the value at the piano in reference to the voice of a singer. Miss Helen Winslow accompanied for Mr. Gogorza.

The audience seemed divided as to its enjoyment of the singers, giving Miss Braslau and Mr. De Gogorza about an even share of the heartiest applause.

One was once more reminded of the charm of personality which has made Emilio De Gogorza one of the most popular baritones before the American public today. Equally true is this of Miss Braslau—if anything, her voice seemed bigger and broader and more lovely in its velvety tones than last season.

Two of the most enjoyed encores that Miss Braslau gave were "My Lil Bateau" and "My Lindy Lou," both by Strickland. This type of things the contralto does delightfully.

American Nov 6

ever was.

SOPHIE BRASLAU AND DE GOGORZA SING

Globe 11-6

Symphony Hall Audience Receives Both Cordially

Sophie Braslau and Emilio de Gogorza gave a joint recital yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall to a large audience which applauded both singers with exceptional cordiality. For Mr de Gogorza, long a favorite in Boston, there were many recalls. He added generously to the program, giving especial pleasure by his spirited version of Valverde's "Clavelitos," and his suave delivery of "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes."

His announced numbers included three songs by Griffes, "La Fuite de la Lune," "Symphony in Yellow," and "An Old Song Resung," and an air from a recent opera by Manuel de Falla, a noted Spanish composer, too little known here.

Griffes in these songs used harmonic and melodic idioms common to many young American composers, but his melodic contours were more delicately and surely drawn; his harmonies combined with delicate unerring taste. Behind his work one felt a subtle and essentially romantic imagination.

Mr de Gogorza did not quite catch and render the tenuous grace of Griffes' music. He made de Falla's piece melodramatic. Only in the Spanish ballads which are his forte did the baritone's singing seem wholly spontaneous. His fine voice and skilful singing carried him acceptably through the rest of his part of the program, but his heart seldom seemed in what he sang.

Miss Braslau again proved that she is at once an extraordinarily capable singer, who makes the most of her ample vocal resources, and an interpreter of concert songs possessed of a vivid dramatic imagination. Of her Schubert group the familiar "Erlking" and the far less known "Leiermann" suited her best. To "Gretchen am Spinnrade" she brought too articulate a woe. Her fault, which is that of her race, is a tendency to overemotionalism of a sort more facile than poignant.

She delighted the audience immensely by her effective singing of various popular ballads. May Brahe's "I Passed by Your Window" had to be repeated because its catchpenny simplicity and barely concealed echoing of "Mother Machree" pleased those listening to it a first time. At the end of the program Miss Braslau added a number of extra pieces.

Globe Nov 6

Trav IRISH REGIMENT BAND 10/14

The Irish Regiment Band, which is making its first tour of the United States, will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Nov. 5. This great organization, which won the first prize at the Canadian National Exposition last year, will consist of 75 musicians, an Irish singer, an Irish folkdancer and a piper, the latter the famous pipe major Trenholme.

Traveler Oct 14

IRISH BAND COMING

Amer 10/15

The Irish Regiment Band, which is making its first tour of the United States, will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, November 5. This organization won the first prize at the Canadian National Exposition last year. The program will be exclusively Irish.

American Oct 15

IRISH BAND

Adv Oct 21

Plans are under way by several Irish societies in Boston to welcome the Irish Regiment Band, the prize musical organization of Canada, when it comes to Boston on Sunday evening, November 5. The big band is commanded by Lieutenant Wiggin, and carries the following soloists: Beatrice O'Leary, soprano; William Tong, cornet; R. E. Everson, cornet, and Pipe Major John Trenholme, the skillful player on the Irish pipes who ever left Galway. The program arranged for Boston will introduce nearly all the Irish songs and dances so beloved by the Irish exiles in America. There will be no classic or operatic music, everything Irish from the beginning of the concert until the end.

Advertiser Oct 21

IRISH REGIMENT BAND IN CONCERT

The Irish Regiment Band, Lieutenant Andrew J. Wiggin, conductor, will give its first concert in Boston next Sunday night at Symphony Hall. Beatrice O'Leary, soprano, Pipe Major John Trenholme and others will be soloists. The program follows:

Overture, Lily of Killarney ....Benedict
Procession of the Piper,
Pipe Major Trenholme
Cornet Solo, Sounds From the Hudson, Clarke
William Tong
Dancing, The Hornpipe,
Jean McNaughton
Suite, Three Irish Pictures ....Ansell
Grand Review of Ancient and Modern Music ....Hughes
Solo, "Macushla," .....Dermot Macmurragh
Beatrice O'Leary
Descriptive Idyll, "The Warbler's Serenade," ....Perry
Cornet Solo, "The Rosary," ....Nevin
R. E. Everson
Dancing accompanied by the Brian Boru Pipes
Jean McNaughton.
Selection, "The Emerald Isle,"
Arthur Sullivan

American Oct 28

IRISH BAND

Adv 10/23

Plans are under way by several Irish societies in Boston to welcome the Irish Regiment Band, prize musical organization of Canada, when it comes to Boston Sunday evening, November 5. The big band is commanded by Lieutenant Wiggin and carries the following soloists: Beatrice O'Leary, soprano; William Tong, cornet; R. E. Everson, cornet, and Pipe Major John Trenholme, most skillful player on the Irish pipes who ever left Galway. The program arranged for Boston will introduce many renowned Irish songs and dances. There will be no classic or operatic music, everything being Irish folk music from beginning to end of the concert.

Advertiser Oct 23

Irish Band From Toronto

Oct 29

The Irish Regiment Band of Toronto, Canada, will give an entertainment next Sunday night at Symphony Hall including bagpipers (Irish, not Scotch, we are assured by the advance announcements) cornet solos, and interpretive dances by Jean McNaughton. Beatrice O'Leary, soprano, will sing "Macushla" and "The Emerald Isle," The entertainment will begin, appropriately by an overture, "The Lily of Killarney" composed by Sir Julius Benedict. Lively and popular encores are also promised if demanded by applause. The evening should certainly not suffer from monotony.

Globe Oct 29

OLD TIME IRISH JIGS

11/4

The skirling of pipes, the merry measures of the old Irish jigs and reels and the rollicking airs of the Emerald Isle will make the welkin ring at Symphony Hall tonight when the Irish Regiment Band makes its first Boston appearance. The big musical organization, every member Irish born, hails from Toronto, where the work it has done in keeping alive the beautiful melodies of Ireland has been very remarkable. The band possesses in Beatrice O'Leary an Irish soperano of the front rank, and in Pipe Major Trenholme an artist on the bagpipes who has no equal in this country.

Beatrice O'Leary

The program for tonight is Irish through and through, and the band has ready as encores all the Irish tunes which there wasn't room enough to set down on the program. One change has been made in the announced program to further increase the green flavor of it. The cornet solo, "Sounds from the Hudson," has been changed to "The Dear Little Shamrock."

1—Lily of Killarney..............Benedict
2—Procession of the Piper.
Pipe-Major John Trenholme.
3—Cornet Solo. Dear Little Shamrock.
Mr. William Tong.
4—Dancing. The Hornpipe.
Miss Jean McNaughton.
5—Suite. Three Irish Pictures.....Ansell
Intermission.
6—Grand Review of Ancient and Modern Irish Music, including songs of the Sixteenth Century to the present day, specially arranged for the Irish Regiment Band by..... ....Hughes
7—Soprano Solo Macushla,
Dermot Macmurragh
Miss Beatrice O'Leary
8—Descriptive Idyll. The Warbler's Serenade .... Perry
9—Song for Cornet. The Rosary.....Nevin
Mr. R. E. Everson
10—Dancing accompanied by the Brian Boru Pipes: The Jig: The Reel.
Miss Jean McNaughton.
11—Selection. The Emerald Isle.
Arthur Sullivan

American Nov 4

Ponselle Nov 12 Eve

Trav ROSA PONSELLE 10-14

Rosa Ponselle, the dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan opera of New York, whose recital at Symphony Hall last April was one of the big musical events of the season, will return to Boston and sing at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Nov. 12. This recital will probably be the only one which Miss Ponselle will be able to give to Boston this year.

Traveler Oct 14

PONSELLE CONCERT

Rosa Ponselle, dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan Opera of New York, whose recital here last April was one of the big events of the season, will return to Boston and sing at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, November 12. Amer 10-15

American Oct 15

Sunday evening, Nov. 12, in Symphony Hall, a concert of operatic pieces, songs and miscellaneous numbers by Rosa Ponselle, large-voiced, large-mannered, generally applauded soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House. Her ample voice, operatic ways and heavy temperament pleased a Bostonian audience last spring. Tran 10/21

Transcript Oct 21

Trav ROSA PONSELLE 10-21

Rosa Ponselle, the Italian-American soprano, whose annual Boston concert will take place on Sunday evening, Nov. 12, will have the distinction of singing the big dramatic soprano role in the revival of "Don Carlos" at the Metropolitan Opera House this season. In the concert field she has already demonstrated that she is as great an artist as in opera.

Traveler Oct 21

Trav 10-28 ROSA PONSELLE

In her Boston program for Symphony Hall, Nov. 12, Rosa Ponselle has scheduled the little known but extraordinary air for dramatic soprano from "La Wally," by A. Catalani, and the dramatic air from "William Tell," which also appears but rarely upon concert programs. Miss Ponselle will have the assistance this season of William Tyroler, pianist, and formerly assistant conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House.

Traveler Oct 28

Rosa Ponselle at her Symphony Hall concert two weeks from tonight will sing an air from Catalini's "La Wally," and a seldom heard air from "William Tell," an opera to be revived this year at the Metropolitan. Globe Oct 29

Globe Oct 29

PONSELLE CONCERT

Amer 11-5

Rosa Ponselle, leading dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will give her only recital of the season in Symphony Hall next Sunday night. Miss Ponselle has prepared an attractive program including several of her biggest opera arias and a number of attractive songs in English. She will have the assistance of William Tyroller at the piano.

American Nov 5

Ponselle Next Sunday

Globe 11-5

Rosa Ponselle, the young Italian-American girl from a Connecticut manufacturing town who was discovered in a vaudeville house by an influential New York musician and prepared in less than two years to take leading parts at the Metropolitan Opera House, will give a recital at Symphony Hall next Sunday evening. Her program includes operatic arias and concert songs.

Miss Ponselle has sung here in the past to large and friendly audiences. Her voice is one of the finest now before the American public, though her use of it has often been criticized by those interested in the technique of singing and in pure music for its own sake.

Globe Nov 5

PONSELLE TO SING HERE IN CONCERT

Amer 11/4

In her Boston program for Symphony Hall, November 12, Rosa Ponselle has scheduled the little known but extraordinary air from "La Wally" by A. Gatalena, and the dramatic air from William Tell, which also appears but rarely upon concert programs. Miss Ponselle will have the assistance this season of William Tyroler, pianist, and formerly assistant conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House. The young Italian soprano will sing all season at the Metropolitan this year, and will divide with Jeritza the dramatic roles, Jeritza singing the lyrical dramatic parts such as Tosca, while Ponselle will have the strictly dramatic roles like Aida. November 12 will be her only concert in Boston this year.

Rosa Ponselle.

PROGRAM

1—Aria, "Ebben? Ne andro lontana," from "La Wally" ....A. Catalani
Miss Ponselle.
2—a. Danza, Danza Fanciulla...F. Duranto
b. Hoffnung ....Louise Reichardt
c. Celle je le prefere........Fourdrain
d. Jai pleure en reve............Hue
Miss Ponselle.
3—Piano solo, Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music, from "Die Walkure" Liszt-Wagner
Mr Tyroler.
4—Romanza from "Cavaleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Miss Ponselle.
5—Piano solos—
a. Spinning Song from the "Flying Dutchman" ....Wagner
b. Dedication ....Schumann-Liszt
c. Minuet ....Mirovitch
Mr Tyroler.
6—a. The Painted Ribbon........Beethoven
b. Soldier's Bride........Rachmaninoff
c. The Doll's Cradle Song...Mossourgsky
d. Piper of Love ....Carew
Miss Ponselle.

American Nov 4

KED FOR SYMPHONY HALL S

Herald 11-12

Herald Nov 12

Post Rosa Ponselle 11-12

Rosa Ponselle, dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will give her only recital of the season in Symphony Hall next Sunday night, Nov. 19. Miss Ponselle has prepared an attractive programme, including several of her biggest opera arias, and a number of attractive songs in English. She will have the assistance of William Tyroller, assistant conductor of the Metropolitan Opera, at the piano. She will sing music by A. Catalani, Ducanto, Reichardt, Fourdrain and Hue.

Post Nov 12

Isa Kremer Nov 14

All up for Isa Kremer, whose career "reads like a tale from the Arabian Nights." Herald 10-13

"Of what does the talent of this remarkable artist consist that she is able to sway vast audiences with a simple song until they laugh and weep and suffer and share with the artist in the joys and sorrows which she depicts; to so imbue her songs with traits of sweet love, pure ideals, passionate desires and religious concentration; joy, sorrow, desperation, ecstasy, passion, tenderness, romanticism, even the feelings of a child she knows how to interpret?"

We infer from this, Oh, passionate press agent, that Miss Kremer may be persuaded to visit Boston soon.

Herald Oct 13

Isa Kremer, half-singer, half diseuse, in the manner of Yvette Guilbert, will try fortunes in Boston for the first time on Tuesday evening, Nov. 14, at Symphony Hall. From that vast nowhere and everywhere which is Central Europe, she descended upon New York last Sunday, and Mr. Krehbiel, writing in The Tribune, described her thus: Trans 11-2

Now comes Isa Kremer and sings songs (which tell stories which she illustrates by pose and gesture) in French, Italian, Russian, Yiddish and English. There is that in the quality of her art—in the eloquence of her tones, in her varied facial expression, in the plasticity of her poses and gestures, the varied timbres of her voice—even in the technical excellence of her vocalization—which awakens understanding in the emotions of even those to whom not a word of French, Italian, Russian, Yiddish or even English is intelligible. She is an interpreter who plays upon the minds and emotions of her audience as the pantomimist did whom Nero wished to attach to himself so that he could make his wishes understood by his barbarian subjects who knew not the Roman tongue. In this she is admirable even if she cannot truthfully be described as unique.

Transcript Nov 2

ISA KREMER COMING

Amer 11-4

Isa Kremer, known as the "international balladist," whose unusual interpretations of folk songs have been the talk of Eastern Europe, has come to America and made her debut in Carnegie Hall, New York, last Sunday afternoon. Her unique method of presenting the folk songs of the different nations, which employs to an unprecedented extent the art of mimicry and gesture, immediately won her first American audience.

Miss Kremer is to give a recital in Boston in Symphony Hall on [illegible]

American Nov 4

N Y World KREMER RECITAL. 10/30

Isa Kremer, who comes heralded by past triumphs from Berlin to Constantinople, reached Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, where she gave her ~~postponed~~ recital of folk songs of all nations. Miss Kremer presented a varied programme, consisting of four Russian songs, two each in Italian and French, three Jewish airs and one closing number sung in English. She was assisted by the violoncellist, Joseph Cherniavsky, who played German, Jewish and English music.

It is difficult to classify Miss Kremer. That she is a true artist is apparent from the moment she steps to the platform. She is a mimist of no mean capacity, and she has what too few such interpreters have—a voice of real operatic quality, rich and expressive. It is said that she made her debut as a prize opera pupil in Italy, and that while very young she sang Mimi with Anselmi in "La Boheme." That is the sort of preparation more artists of her realm should have. It is true that her voice has moments of typically Slavic nasal quality, but they are few and far between. Miss Kremer has something of Ruth Draper's intuitive grasp of characterization. She has a great deal of the speaking singing tone of Yvette Guilbert. She is what she portrays.

The simplicity of her opening number, based on a naive tale of the porcelain doll with no heart; the gentle tenderness of the French mother tiptoeing away from the cradle after a delicious lullaby; the buxom full-bloodedness of the amorous young Italian wench; the stunned, silent anguish of the Russian girl whose lover has been killed at the front—there is variety enough in four consecutive songs to try the mettle of any artist. And Miss Kremer was all these, in turn. Later she was the scornful Mme Loulou, sought by rich men in vain. She was the yearning, wistful lover who saw love denied him, and just as truly the Watteau prince awaking the sleeping beauty. Her audience she carried along from point to point in the emotions. They couldn't help call for encores as they did.

N.Y. World Oct 30

Isa Kremer Coming Nov 14

Isa Kremer, who is said by those who have seen and heard her in New York and elsewhere, will give interpretations of Russian, Jewish, Italian and French folk songs at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, Nov 14. She has recently begun her first American tour.

She is said to have a good voice, but her European popularity has been owing to her gift for acting out her numbers after the fashion made known here by Yvette Guilbert. Like Mme Guilbert, Miss Kremer is an artist developed in the European equivalent of our vaudeville houses, where she has had, it is said, extraordinary success. Globe 11-5

One New York reviewer, after praising the truth to life and tunefulness of her performance, said that if she would add English to her linguistic acquirements she would make an extraordinary headliner in vaudeville.

Globe Nov 5

ISA KREMER

According to the general opinion in New York, where she made her American debut last Sunday, and is also singing today, nothing similar to the art of Isa Kremer has been known in this country. Russian, Jewish, Italian and French folk-songs are her subjects. Her interpretation mingles the art of miming, acting and singing. In Europe for the past six seasons she has been applauded in Moscow, Warsaw, Bucharest, Constantinople and Berlin.

She will give a recital in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, Nov. 14, at 8:15. Herald 11-5

Herald Nov 5

MISS KREMER IN FOLK SONGS.

Program Given in Many Moods and Languages.

N Y Herald 11/6

Miss Isa Kremer, the ballad singer of European renown, who was first heard in this country a week ago, gave her second program of folk songs yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Her entertainment resembled the one she gave here before.

On a small, elevated platform at the center of the stage, illuminated both by the footlights and a spot light, she appeared, garbed in a costume of gold and silver design, and by means of a large variety of voice coloring, facial play and gesture, interpreted folk songs in many moods and languages. She was brilliant to see, as her performance was brilliant, and she deeply stirred a large audience. Yasha Bunchuk added to the program by giving some cello solos

N.Y. Herald Nov 6

Amer 11-5

ISA KREMER

FAMOUS RUSSIAN BALLAD SINGER HERE

Amer 11-5

According to opinion in New York, nothing even similar to the art of Isa Kremer has been known in this country. Russian, Jewish, Italian and French folk-songs are her subjects. Her interpretation mingles miming, acting and singing. In Europe for the past six seasons she has been a big favorite. This remarkable ballad singer will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, November 14. Amer Nov 5

American Nov 5

ISA KREMER SINGS.

11/6

Gives Varied Program Before an Enthusiastic Audience.

At her second concert at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon Isa Kremer, Russian-Jewish singer of international folk-songs, included in her varied and interesting program Russian, Rumanian, Italian, French, English and Arabian numbers, besides the Yiddish. An Arabian love song, "Yasminah," with a far-calling and haunting melody, was sung with notable artistry; songs of Naples, with the gayety and rhythm remarked upon her first appearance, and a French cradle song with grace, charm and a pretty dramatic effect.

The well-filled house was enthusiastic and clamorous for encores, and the singer was generous—not only in that matter, but in another. She wore successively two very glittering gowns. The accompanist was Kurt Hetzel. Yastra [illegible]

N.Y. World Nov 6

J Forward

איזא קרעמער, סאפראנא

זינגערין פון אלע איירָאפּעאישע פאלקס־ליעדער, וועט אויפטרעטען צום ערשטען מאל אין באסטאן, דינסטאג אבענד דעם 14טען נאוועמבער, אין סימפאני האלל.

J. Forward

[104]

Ponselle Nov 12 Eve

ROSA PONSELLE

Trav 10-14

Rosa Ponselle, the dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan opera of New York, whose recital at Symphony Hall last April was one of the big musical events of the season, will return to Boston and sing at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Nov. 12. This recital will probably be the only one which Miss Ponselle will be able to give to Boston this year.

Traveler Oct 14

PONSELLE CONCERT

Rosa Ponselle, dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan Opera of New York, whose recital here last April was one of the big events of the season, will return to Boston and sing at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, November 12.

American Oct 15

Sunday evening, Nov. 12, in Symphony Hall, a concert of operatic pieces, songs and miscellaneous numbers by Rosa Ponselle, large-voiced, large-mannered, generally applauded soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House. Her ample voice, operatic ways and heavy temperament pleased a Bostonian audience last spring.

Transcript Oct 21

ROSA PONSELLE

Trav 10-21

Rosa Ponselle, the Italian-American soprano, whose annual Boston concert will take place on Sunday evening, Nov. 12, will have the distinction of singing the big dramatic soprano role in the revival of 'Don Carlos' at the Metropolitan Opera House this season. In the concert field she has already demonstrated that she is as great an artist as in opera.

Traveler Oct 21

ROSA PONSELLE

Trav 10-28

In her Boston program for Symphony Hall, Nov. 12, Rosa Ponselle has scheduled the little known but extraordinary air for dramatic soprano from "La Wally," by A. Catalani, and the dramatic air from "William Tell," which also appears but rarely upon concert programs. Miss Ponselle will have the assistance this season of William Tyroller, pianist, and formerly assistant conductor of the Metropolitan Opera House.

Traveler Oct 28

Rosa Ponselle at her Symphony Hall concert two weeks from tonight will sing an air from Catalini's "La Wally," and a seldom heard air from "William Tell," an opera to be revived this year at the Metropolitan.

Globe Oct 29

PONSELLE CONCERT

Amer 11-5

Rosa Ponselle, leading dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will give her only recital of the season in Symphony Hall next Sunday night. Miss Ponselle has prepared an attractive program including several of her biggest opera arias and a number of attractive songs in English. She will have the assistance of William Tyroller at the piano.

American Nov 5

Ponselle Next Sunday

Rosa Ponselle, the young Italian-American girl from a Connecticut manufacturing town who was discovered in a vaudeville house by an influential New York musician and prepared in less than two years to take leading parts at the Metropolitan Opera House, will give a recital at Symphony Hall next Sunday evening. Her program includes operatic arias and concert songs.

Miss Ponselle has sung here in the past to large and friendly audiences. Her voice is one of the finest now before the American public, though her use of it has often been criticized by those interested in the technique of singing and in pure music for its own sake.

Globe Nov 5

PONSELLE TO SING HERE IN CONCERT

Amer 11/4

In her Boston program for Symphony Hall, November 12, Rosa Ponselle has scheduled the little known but extraordinary air from "La Wally" by A. Gatalena, and the dramatic air from William Tell, which also appears but rarely upon concert programs. Miss Ponselle will have the assistance this season of William Tyroler, pianist, and formerly assistant conductor at the Metropolitan Opera House. The young Italian soprano will sing all season at the Metropolitan this year, and will divide with Jeritza the dramatic roles, Jeritza singing the lyrical dramatic parts such as Tosca, while Ponselle will have the strictly dramatic roles like Aida. November 12 will be her only concert in Boston this year.

Rosa Ponselle.

PROGRAM

1—Aria, "Ebben? Ne andro lontana," from "La Wally" .... A. Catalani
Miss Ponselle.

2—a. Danza, Danza Fanciulla ... F. Duranto
b. Hoffnung .... Louise Reichardt
c. Celle je le prefere .... Fourdrain
d. Jai pleure en reve .... Hue
Miss Ponselle.

3—Piano solo, Wotan's Farewell and Magic Fire Music, from "Die Walkure" Liszt-Wagner
Mr Tyroler.

4—Romanza from "Cavaleria Rusticana" Mascagni
Miss Ponselle.

5—Piano solos—
a. Spinning Song from the "Flying Dutchman" .... Wagner Schumann-Liszt
b. Dedication .... Mirovitch
c. Minuet
Mr Tyroler.

6—a. The Painted Ribbon .... Beethoven
b. Soldier's Bride .... Rachmaninoff
c. The Doll's Cradle Song ... Mossoursky
d. Piper of Love .... Carew
Miss Ponselle.

American Nov 4

KED FOR SYMPHONY HALL S

Herald Nov 12

Herald Nov 12

Rosa Ponselle

Post Nov 12

Rosa Ponselle, dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will give her only recital of the season in Symphony Hall next Sunday night Nov. 19. Miss Ponselle has prepared an attractive programme, including several of her biggest opera arias, and a number of attractive songs in English. She will have the assistance of William Tyroller, assistant conductor of the Metropolitan Opera, at the piano. She will sing music by A. Catalani, Ducanto, Reichardt, Fourdrain and Hue.

Post Nov 12

Isa Kremer Nov 14

All up for Isa Kremer, whose career "reads like a tale from the Arabian Nights." Herald 10-13

"Of what does the talent of this remarkable artist consist that she is able to sway vast audiences with a simple song until they laugh and weep and suffer and share with the artist in the joys and sorrows which she depicts; to so imbue her songs with traits of sweet love, pure ideals, passionate desires and religious concentration; joy, sorrow, desperation, ecstasy, passion, tenderness, romanticism, even the feelings of a child she knows how to interpret?"

We infer from this, Oh, passionate press agent, that Miss Kremer may be persuaded to visit Boston soon.

Herald Oct 13

Isa Kremer, half-singer, half diseuse, in the manner of Yvette Guilbert, will try fortunes in Boston for the first time on Tuesday evening, Nov. 14, at Symphony Hall. From that vast nowhere and everywhere which is Central Europe, she descended upon New York last Sunday, and Mr. Krehbiel, writing in The Tribune, described her thus: Trans 11-2

Now comes Isa Kremer and sings songs (which tell stories which she illustrates by pose and gesture) in French, Italian, Russian, Yiddish and English. There is that in the quality of her art—in the eloquence of her tones, in her varied facial expression, in the plasticity of her poses and gestures, the varied timbres of her voice—even in the technical excellence of her vocalization—which awakens understanding in the emotions of even those to whom not a word of French, Italian, Russian, Yiddish or even English is intelligible. She is an interpreter who plays upon the minds and emotions of her audience as the pantomimist did whom Nero wished to attach to himself so that he could make his wishes understood by his barbarian subjects who knew not the Roman tongue. In this she is admirable even if she cannot truthfully be described as unique.

Transcript Nov 2

ISA KREMER COMING

Amer 11-4

Isa Kremer, known as the "international balladist," whose unusual interpretations of folk songs have been the talk of Eastern Europe, has come to America and made her debut in Carnegie Hall, New York, last Sunday afternoon. Her unique method of presenting the folk songs of the different nations, which employs to an unprecedented extent the art of mimicry and gesture, immediately won her first American audience.

Miss Kremer is to give a recital in Boston in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, November 14.

American Nov 4

KREMER RECITAL.

N.Y. World 10-30

Isa Kremer, who comes heralded by past triumphs from Berlin to Constantinople, reached Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, where she gave her postponed recital of folk songs of all nations. Miss Kremer presented a varied programme, consisting of four Russian songs, two each in Italian and French, three Jewish airs and one closing number sung in English. She was assisted by the violoncellist, Joseph Cherniavsky, who played German, Jewish and English music.

It is difficult to classify Miss Kremer. That she is a true artist is apparent from the moment she steps to the platform. She is a mimist of no mean capacity, and she has what too few such interpreters have—a voice of real operatic quality, rich and expressive. It is said that she made her debut as a prize opera pupil in Italy, and that while very young she sang Mimi with Anselmi in "La Boheme." That is the sort of preparation more artists of her realm should have. It is true that her voice has moments of typically Slavic nasal quality, but they are few and far between. Miss Kremer has something of Ruth Draper's intuitive grasp of characterization. She has a great deal of the speaking singing tone of Yvette Guilbert. She is what she portrays.

The simplicity of her opening number, based on a naive tale of the porcelain doll with no heart; the gentle tenderness of the French mother tipping away from the cradle after a delicious lullaby; the buxom full-bloodedness of the amorous young Italian wench; the stunned, silent anguish of the Russian girl whose lover has been killed at the front—there is variety enough in four consecutive songs to try the mettle of any artist. And Miss Kremer was all these, in turn. Later she was the scornful Mme Loulou, sought by rich men in vain. She was the yearning, wistful lover who saw love denied him, and just as truly the Watteau prince awaking the sleeping beauty. Her audience she carried along from point to point in the emotions. They couldn't help call for encores as they did.

N.Y. World Oct 30

Isa Kremer Coming Nov 14

Isa Kremer, who is said by those who have seen and heard her in New York and elsewhere, will give interpretations of Russian, Jewish, Italian and French folk songs at Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, Nov 14. She has recently begun her first American tour.

She is said to have a good voice, but her European popularity has been owing to her gift for acting out her numbers after the fashion made known here by Yvette Guilbert. Like Mme Guilbert, Miss Kremer is an artist developed in the European equivalent of our vaudeville houses, where she has had, it is said, extraordinary success. Globe 11-5

One New York reviewer, after praising the truth to life and tunefulness of her performance, said that if she would add English to her linguistic acquirements she would make an extraordinary headliner in vaudeville.

Globe Nov 5

ISA KREMER

According to the general opinion in New York, where she made her American debut last Sunday, and is also singing today, nothing similar to the art of Isa Kremer has been known in this country. Russian, Jewish, Italian and French folk-songs are her subjects. Her interpretation mingles the art of miming, acting and singing. In Europe for the past six seasons she has been applauded in Moscow, Warsaw, Bucharest, Constantinople and Berlin.

She will give a recital in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, Nov. 14, at 8:15. Herald 11-5

Herald Nov 5

MISS KREMER IN FOLK SONGS.

Program Given in Many Moods and Languages.

N.Y. Herald 11/6

Miss Isa Kremer, the ballad singer of European renown, who was first heard in this country a week ago, gave her second program of folk songs yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Her entertainment resembled the one she gave here before.

On a small, elevated platform at the center of the stage, illuminated both by the footlights and a spot light, she appeared, garbed in a costume of gold and silver design, and by means of a large variety of voice coloring, facial play and gesture, interpreted folk songs in many moods and languages. She was brilliant to see, as her performance was brilliant, and she deeply stirred a large audience. Yasha Bunchuk added to the program by giving some cello solos

N.Y. Herald Nov 6

Amer 11-5

ISA KREMER

FAMOUS RUSSIAN BALLAD SINGER HERE

Amer 11-5

According to opinion in New York nothing even similar to the art of Isa Kremer has been known in this country. Russian, Jewish, Italian and French folk-songs are her subjects. Her interpretation mingles miming, acting and singing. In Europe for the past six seasons she has been a big favorite. This remarkable ballad singer will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Tuesday evening, November 14. Amer Nov 5

American Nov 5

ISA KREMER SINGS.

11/6

Gives Varied Program Before an Enthusiastic Audience.

At her second concert at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon Isa Kremer, Russian-Jewish singer of international folk-songs, included in her varied and interesting program Russian, Rumanian, Italian, French, English and Arabian numbers, besides the Yiddish. An Arabian love song, "Yasminah," with a far-calling and haunting melody, was sung with notable artistry; songs of Naples, with the gayety and rhythm remarked upon her first appearance, and a French cradle song with grace, charm and a pretty dramatic effect.

The well-filled house was enthusiastic and clamorous for encores, and the singer was generous—not only in that matter, but in another. She wore successively two very glittering gowns. The accompanist was Kurt Hetzel. Yastra Bunchuk, 'cellist, was also on the program, and was likewise heartily and repeatedly called back.

N.Y. World Nov 6

J. Forward

איזא קרעמער, סאפראנא

זינגערין פון אלע איראפעאישע פאלקס-
ליעדער, וועט אויפטרעטען צום ערשטע
מאל אין באסטאן, דיענסטאג אבענד
עם 14טען נאוועמבער, אין סימפאנ
האלל.

J. Forward

[104]

Kremer Nov 14

Isa Kremer, Ballad Singer, in Boston Debut Tuesday

Globe

The coming debut of Isa Kremer, the ballad singer, next Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall at 8:15, is the more keenly anticipated in that she has sung to New York audiences in Carnegie Hall on three successive Sundays and in each case completely carried her hearers on the emotional current of her songs. Interpretations comparable to hers have not been heard hitherto in America.

The folk songs of the Russian, Jewish, Rumanian, Arabian, French, Italian and English peoples are her subjects. She is said to have almost the dramatic skill of Yvette Guilbert without her vocal limitations. She sings each song in the native language, and so vivid is her gesture, mimicry and vocal skill in depicting emotion that the meaning is immediately clear to her hearers.

A native of Russia, Isa Kremer began her career in opera in 1912 while still very young. She soon gave this up, however, and devoted herself entirely to the interpretation of folk song. In 1919 she went to Constantinople, where it is said she gave 160 concerts in close succession. She then toured Rumania, Poland, and finally went to Berlin.

Globe Nov 12

ISA KREMER

The coming Boston debut of Isa Kremar, the ballad singer of eastern Europe, next Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall at 8:15, is the more keenly anticipated in that she has sung to great new York audiences in Carnegie Hall on three successive Sundays, and in each case completely captivated her hearers. The folk songs of the Russian, Jewish, Rumanian, Arabian, French, Italian and English peoples are her subjects. She is said to have the dramatic skill of Yvette Guilbert and she sings each song in the native language.. A native of Russia, she began her career in opera while still very young. She soon gave this up and devoted herself entirely to the interpretation of folk song. In 1919 she went to Constantinople, where she gave 160 concerts in close succession. She then toured Rumania, Poland, and finally went to Berlin. Her 11-12

Herald Nov 12

N.Y. Tribune 11/6

Kremer in Polyglot Program

Meanwhile, at Carnegie Hall, Isa Kremer, who might be called an "international diseuse," gave another polyglot program, with numbers in six languages—English, French, Italian, Russian, Rumanian and Yiddish—seeming able to pass from one to the other and feel equally at home in each. They were all rather light folk or popular songs, reaching no particular heights or depths, but with sufficiently varied emotions to exhibit Miss Kremer's versatility, which, with her gestures and intonation, was her strong point, in love songs, sober or cheerful songs, or lullabies. With the aid of short program notes there was no difficulty in understanding what she meant, whatever the language. One could hardly estimate her voice by itself; many defects might have appeared in a formal song recital, but here it was an effective compliment of her action.

Yascha Bunchuk, 'cellist, showed an agreeable tone and fluent technique in some half dozen numbers of his own, while Kurt Hetzel, as before, was an able accompanist, with (also as before) an audience apparently of many nations and languages, though to judge by the applause the Italian and the Jewish seemed to lead. N.Y. Tribune

---

SA KREMER AT SYMPHONY HALL

Her 11-11

Vocalist Presents Program of Songs of Five Nations

KURT HETZEL IS THE ACCOMPANIST

By PHILIP HALE

Madame Isa Kremer, characterized as an "International Balladist," sang last night in Symphony hall for the first time in Boston. She was assisted by Kurt Hetzel, pianist.

Her program was made up of Russian, French, Italian, Jewish and English songs. The program gave in a few words the purport of these songs, except the English ones, but nothing about the origin of them, whether they were folk songs or art songs in the folk manner; nothing about composers or arrangers. Some of the songs were interesting in themselves, without regard to the interpretation; some would have been insignificant without the singer's interpretative art; some were tiresome in spite of her art.

Madame Kremer was favored by Nature. Her personality is striking, suggesting the Orient. Her face is mobile and expressive. Her carriage is effective. The voice is flexible, obedient to dramatic intentions; with many tones that are of a rich and haunting quality; with uppertones that in dramatic outbursts are shrill, but euphonious when they are not forced. The singer knows how to employ this voice in bringing out the sentiments of the text in tones.

Arrayed in two brilliant costumes, one for each half of her program, she moved about, and gestured, and [illegible] with a strong light thrown upon her. During the first songs, she was a fascinatinng apparition, in large meas[illegible] by reason of her personal appearance and her peculiar manner of interpreta[illegible]tion. Familiarity lessened the charm. Little by little, the spectator began [illegible] suspect that many of the gestures were according to a formula and not [illegible]ways significant; while the strophic character of the songs, the many verses of a song having the same melody, toward the end became almost wearisome to the hearer.

This is to be said: The singer caught admirably the national, or, [illegible] please, racial spirit. This was [illegible]pecially noted in her singing [illegible] Italian "Chittarata Neapolitan[illegible] "Marechiare." There was the Ital[illegible] expression in all its frankness, b[illegible] the sentiment that seems to north[illegible] nations exaggerated. It was also [illegible] in the Jewish and the Russian [illegible] One of the most charming inter[illegible]tions was the French cradle-song [illegible] Petit Navire," but in the other [illegible] songs one missed the feigned [illegible] and the "malice" that would [illegible] vitalized the apparently simple [illegible] if they had been sung by Yvet[illegible]bert or Loraine Wyman.

That Madame Kremer could strike the tragic note was revealed by her singing the Yiddish song of the maiden who learns of her soldier-lover's death. Here the transition from joy to the anguish brought by the letter was finely worked. The Russian "Yasminah" was described on the program as "Arabian Song." Arabian in consequence of the tales told by the verses: not musically suggestive of the east.

Mr. Hetzel accompanied Madame Kremer in a most sympathetic manner. His task was not a light one. He also played a polonaise and waltz by Chopin and gave a thunder-and-lightning performance (accent on thunder) of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 12. Recalled, he played Liszt's familiar Liebestraum. There was an enthusiastic audience of good size. The singer, recalled several times, added to the program.

Madame Kremer will give her second recital in Symphony hall, Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7.

Herald Nov 15

KREMER SCORES BIG HIT AT CONCERT

Amer 11/15

A new comet appeared in the musical sky when Isa Kremer, Russian balladist, came out on the stage of Symphony Hall and began to sing. She has given three concerts in New York since she arrived from abroad fifteen days ago and New York is singing her praises in unusual language, but Boston is inclined to be skeptical of sensational New York successes. Boston is singing the same tune now.

To the original twelve programed songs, Mme Kremer added six and could have gone on singing indefinitely for she had the audience crowding down around the stage as near to her as they could get, clapping like mad, stamping their feet and many of these calling loudly for their favorite Yiddish songs. They talked to her from their seats and she answered them—that is the sort of singer Kremer is.

Kremer is a musical institution in this country—there is nobody like her, never has been and probably never will be.

The voice of Mme. Kremer is powerful, resonant, vibrant and in some of the higher tones a bit on edge.

Kurt Hetzel played accompaniments for the singer. He also played three solos from Chopin and Liszt which were too rapidly played to admit all the original beauty of the composition. There was also a tendency to cloud passages with the pedal.

Mme. Kremer is to reappear here in January. It is more than probable that a sold-out house will greet her then.

American Nov 15

Mood Warms Mobility

Isa Krem

Many-Sided Singer in a

Herald 11-12

Herald Nov 12

BOO

Trans 11-15

TO no groove of our thea ncert-halls fits Isa Kren ome from Central Europe, ng in Symphony Hall a l balladist." In the pla t find place as incident an review. Yet in degree h l excel such environment would she be in the vaud where, besides, a public, unconsciously indoctrinat ght Americanism," is of ropean entertainers. Yet i h, Miss Kremer's pieces modest musical standa
r in the voice nor the way es she excel. With frank f face, gesture, body, sh dorns her singing. How may go in the concert-r —unless the manifold m bin sweeps doubt an the wind. By every to r, Miss Kremer sings a glorified café-concert eard in the full measure
Unfortunately, there is Souris in the United St others, Miss Kremer mus
Carnegie and Symphony f intimate contacts w lacking which she is pla
Over great spaces Mme.
ely mute; while as yet, th diseuse, the new singer is w lights—to illuminate m upon the stage of turned brightly upon brightly robed, she sa set upon the progra added half as many extra piece ran severally in French, Russian English, Yiddish, since the sing ent in many languages, but, s distinguished in none. With sc exception, the songs suggested grained, more artful café-concert tral Europe—Neapolitan serena laments over "Santa Lucia Lonta old Yiddish humor; Russian me

Russian fantasy; Gallic mischie sophistication; English whimsey ish sentiment. The French num

MISS ISA KREMER

Monitor 11/18

Miss Kremer's Art

Miss Isa Kremer, the ballad interpreter, talked with me one afternoon about her singing and her travels. I was not surprised to learn that her schooling included practice in opera. Her effectiveness in ballad presentation arises, evidently, from her familiarity with the ways of the theater. As a girl Miss Kremer lived in Odessa. She made her first appearance in opera in a small town in northern Italy in 1912. As an opera singer she was found to excel in recitative, and she was led to cultivate a reciting rather than a strictly singing style. For whereas formerly voice interested her first of all, now emotion is the main thing; and after emotion, words; then, voice, and lastly, facial expression and gesture. Miss Kremer noted that she gave up opera six years ago, to devote herself to songs. In war time and for a while after the war she sang in Russian cities. In the season of 1920-21 she appeared often in Constantinople, where she got Greeks and Turks to sit together at her concerts. The words of many of her pieces Miss Kremer has written herself, on folksong material. One of her numbers which audiences have shown a liking for is "The Little Ship," by the French composer, Paul Delmet. Delmet's work was long neglected, but she added to it a refrain from an old French song and brought it into favor. She has tunes from many racial sources in her repertory and texts from many languages. Her purpose is to study the songs of the American Negro next, with the idea of taking them back to Europe and trying their effect on audiences there.

[105]

Kremer Nov 14

Isa Kremer, Ballad Singer, in Boston Debut Tuesday

Globe

The coming debut of Isa Kremer, the ballad singer, next Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall at 8:15, is the more keenly anticipated in that she has sung to New York audiences in Carnegie Hall on three successive Sundays and in each case completely carried her hearers on the emotional current of her songs. Interpretations comparable to hers have not been heard hitherto in America.

The folk songs of the Russian, Jewish, Rumanian, Arabian, French, Italian and English peoples are her subjects. She is said to have almost the dramatic skill of Yvette Guilbert without her vocal limitations. She sings each song in the native language, and so vivid is her gesture, mimicry and vocal skill in depicting emotion that the meaning is immediately clear to her hearers.

A native of Russia, Isa Kremer began her career in opera in 1912 while still very young. She soon gave this up, however, and devoted herself entirely to the interpretation of folk song. In 1919 she went to Constantinople, where it is said she gave 160 concerts in close succession. She then toured Rumania, Poland, and finally went to Berlin.

Globe Nov 12

ISA KREMER

The coming Boston debut of Isa Kremar, the ballad singer of eastern Europe, next Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall at 8:15, is the more keenly anticipated in that she has sung to great new York audiences in Carnegie Hall on three successive Sundays, and in each case completely captivated her hearers. The folk songs of the Russian, Jewish, Rumanian, Arabian, French, Italian and English peoples are her subjects. She is said to have the dramatic skill of Yvette Guilbert and she sings each song in the native language.. A native of Russia, she began her career in opera while still very young. She soon gave this up and devoted herself entirely to the interpretation of folk song. In 1919 she went to Constantinople, where she gave 160 concerts in close succession. She then toured Rumania, Poland, and finally went to Berlin. Her 11-12

Herald Nov 12

KREMER SCORES BIG HIT AT CONCERT

Amer 11/15

A new comet appeared in the musical sky when Isa Kremer, Russian balladist, came out on the stage of Symphony Hall and began to sing. She has given three concerts in New York since she arrived from abroad fifteen days ago and New York is singing her praises in unusual language, but Boston is inclined to be skeptical of sensational New York successes. Boston is singing the same tune now.

To the original twelve programed songs, Mme Kremer added six and could have gone on singing indefinitely for she had the audience crowding down around the stage as near to her as they could get, clapping like mad, stamping their feet and many of these calling loudly for their favorite Yiddish songs. They talked to her from their seats and she answered them—that is the sort of singer Kremer is.

Kremer is a musical institution in this country—there is nobody like her, never has been and probably never will be.

The voice of Mme. Kremer is powerful, resonant, vibrant and in some of the higher tones a bit on edge.

Kurt Hetzel played accompaniments for the singer. He also played three solos from Chopin and Lisz which were too rapidly played t admit all the original beauty of the composition. There was also a tendency to cloud passages with the pedal.

Mme. Kremer is to reappear here in January. It is more than probable that a sold-out house will greet her then.

American Nov 15

Mood Warms Mobility

Isa Kremer

Many-Sided Singer in as Many Tongues

Trans 11/15

INTO no groove of our theatre or our concert-halls fits Isa Kremer, newly come from Central Europe, heard last evening in Symphony Hall as "international balladist." In the playhouse, she might find place as incident and ornament to a review. Yet in degree her abilities would excel such environment. In like case would she be in the vaudeville theatres, where, besides, a public, consciously or unconsciously indoctrinated with "straight Americanism," is often wary of European entertainers. Yet in the concert-hall, Miss Kremer's pieces fall below even a modest musical standard; while neither in the voice nor the ways of pure song does she excel. With frank and fluid play of face, gesture, body, she enforces and adorns her singing. How far such miming may go in the concert-room is debatable—unless the manifold might of a Shalyapin sweeps doubt and objection down the wind. By every token of last evening, Miss Kremer sings pieces best suiting a glorified café-concert and there to be heard in the full measure of her abilities. Unfortunately, there is but one Chauve-Souris in the United States. For lack of others, Miss Kremer must wander through Carnegie and Symphony Halls, deprived of intimate contacts with her audience, lacking which she is plainly diminished. Over great spaces Mme. Guilbert is relatively mute; while as yet, though she be also diseuse, the new singer is no Mme. Yvette.

The new lights—to illuminate those desiring them upon the stage of Symphony Hall—were turned brightly upon Miss Kremar. As brightly robed, she sang twelve numbers set upon the programme and added half as many extra pieces. They ran severally in French, Russian, Italian, English, Yiddish, since the singer is fluent in many languages, but, seemingly, distinguished in none. With scarcely an exception, the songs suggested the finer-grained, more artful café-concerts of Central Europe—Neapolitan serenades and laments over "Santa Lucia Lontana"; candid Yiddish humor; Russian melancholy. Russian fantasy; Gallic mischief, Gallic sophistication; English whimsey or English sentiment. The French numbers and ne Russian piece aside, the verses were ackneyed commonplaces; the music as onventionally mechanical.

Miss Kremer dispensed these pieces in a voice of pleasing natural quality made supple to her purpose of delineative song. In particular, she colored her tones with the vocal idiosyncrasies of the race whence came the number in hand. Thus, she flavored her Italian ballads with nasal intensities; her French pieces with the pointed diction of innuendo; her Russian with the intonations of tense, constricted emotion. She further illustrated the songs with appropriate miming, neither particularly graphic nor individually imaginative. Her mother, crooning a lullaby, dandled the infant or bent over the cradle. Her serenading Italians beat the air with ornate, expansive gesture. Her Russian or her Arabian maiden, grief-stricken, looked wan-eyed, tight-lipped, down an emptied, echoing world. In guise of French chanteuse, she played with malice, light-fingered, light-toned. In English shift she was thick with sentiment.

In a word, the obvious thing in the obvious way from a many-tongued, many-sided singer, fluid of face, mobile of gesture, multi-colored in tone, all Jewish sensibility to surface-impressions, all Jewish eagerness to communicate them. Exactly why Central Europe should have "risen to her" and New York twice and thrice done likewise is hard to understand. In Budapest, in Bukarest, in a dozen other cities, there are—or there used to be—plentiful Isa Kremers.

H. T. P.

Transcript Nov 15

Thick is the gossip that trails behind the departed Isa Kremer. She was originally schooled for opera in Italy but preferred her present calling. She has given 169 concerts in Constantinople, and almost as many more in Warsaw. There she was harried as a Russian Jewess. Yet in the end her "magnetism" prevailed. Symphony Hall must have thinned it. Trans 11-16 H. T. P.

Transcript Nov 16

Herald

ER

M I

WA

for some effectively terference emitting ated chartransmit-g from the rms of fil-cuits have far have amateur

of filter to er necessi-
stem at a
to be effi-
, of course,
where sig-
onsiderable
rallel reso-
series with eless in so are con-
is evident
g a coil of a condens-
hen the re-

OF RE-
FROM

e length
smitter.
eral Ra-veloped a

Herald Nov 12

Kremer in Polyglot Program

N.Y. Tribune 11/6

Meanwhile, at Carnegie Hall, Isa Kremer, who might be called an "international diseuse," gave another polyglot program, with numbers in six languages—English, French, Italian Russian, Rumanian and Yiddish—seeming able to pass from one to the other and feel equally at home in each. They were all rather light folk or popular songs, reaching no particular heights or depths, but with sufficiently varied emotions to exhibit Miss Kremer's versatility, which, with her gestures and intonation, was her strong point, in love songs, sober or cheerful songs, or lullabies. With the aid of short program notes there was no difficulty in understanding what she meant, whatever the language. One could hardly estimate her voice by itself; many defects might have appeared in a formal song recital, but here it was an effective compliment of her action.

Yascha Bunchuk, 'cellist, showed an agreeable tone and fluent technique in some half dozen numbers of his own, while Kurt Hetzel, as before, was an able accompanist, with (also as before) an audience apparently of many nations and languages, though to judge by the applause the Italian and the Jewish seemed to lead. N.Y. Tribune

---

SA KREMER AT SYMPHONY HALL

Her 11-15

Vocalist Presents Program of Songs of Five Nations

KURT HETZEL IS THE ACCOMPANIST

By PHILIP HALE

Madame Isa Kremer, characterized as an "International Balladist," sang last night in Symphony hall for the first time in Boston. She was assisted by Kurt Hetzel, pianist.

Her program was made up of Russian, French, Italian, Jewish and English songs. The program gave in a few words the purport of these songs, except the English ones, but nothing about the origin of them, whether they were folk songs or art songs in the folk manner; nothing about composers or arrangers. Some of the songs were interesting in themselves, without regard to the interpretation; some would have been insignificant without the singer's interpretative art; some [illegible] some in spite of her art.

Madame Kremer was favored by Nature. Her personality is striking, suggesting the Orient. Her face is mobile and expressive. Her carriage is effective. The voice is flexible, obedient to dramatic intentions; with many tones that are of a rich and haunting quality; with uppertones that in dramatic outbursts are shrill, but euphonious when they are not forced. The singer knows how to employ this voice in bringing out the sentiments of the text in tones.

Arrayed in two brilliant costumes, one for each half of her program, she moved about, and gestured, and sang with a strong light thrown upon her. During the first songs, she was a fascinatinng apparition, in large measure by reason of her personal appearance and her peculiar manner of interpretation. Familiarity lessened the charm. Little by little, the spectator began to suspect that many of the gestures were according to a formula and not always significant; while the strophic character of the songs, the many verses of a song having the same melody, toward the end became almost wearisome to the hearer.

This is to be said: The singer caught admirably the national, or, if you please, racial spirit. This was especially noted in her singing of the Italian "Chittarata Neapolitan" and "Marechiare." There was the Italian expression in all its frankness, brio and the sentiment that seems to northern nations exaggerated. It was also noted in the Jewish and the Russian songs. One of the most charming interpretations was the French cradle-song, "Le Petit Navire," but in the other French songs one missed the feigned naivete and the "malice" that would have vitalized the apparently simple verses if they had been sung by Yvette Guilbert or Loraine Wyman.

That Madame Kremer could strike the tragic note was revealed by her singing the Yiddish song of the maiden who learns of her soldier-lover's death. Here the transition from joy to the anguish brought by the letter was finely worked. The Russian "Yasminah" was described on the program as "Arabian Song." Arabian in consequence of the tales told by the verses: not musically suggestive of the east.

Mr. Hetzel accompanied Madame Kremer in a most sympathetic manner. His task was not a light one. He also played a polonaise and waltz by Chopin and gave a thunder-and-lightning performance (accent on thunder) of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 12. Recalled, he played Liszt's familiar Liebestraum. There was an enthusiastic audience of good size. The singer, recalled several times, added to the program.

Madame Kremer will give her second recital in Symphony hall, Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7.

Herald Nov 15

Kremer Nov 14

Isa Kremer, Ballad Singer, in Boston Debut Tuesday

Globe

The coming debut of Isa Kremer, the ballad singer, next Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall at 8:15, is the more keenly anticipated in that she has sung to New York audiences in Carnegie Hall on three successive Sundays and in each case completely carried her hearers on the emotional current of her songs. Interpretations comparable to hers have not been heard hitherto in America.

The folk songs of the Russian, Jewish, Rumanian, Arabian, French, Italian and English peoples are her subjects. She is said to have almost the dramatic skill of Yvette Guilbert without her vocal limitations. She sings each song in the native language, and so vivid is her gesture, mimicry and vocal skill in depicting emotion that the meaning is immediately clear to her hearers.

A native of Russia, Isa Kremer began her career in opera in 1912 while still very young. She soon gave this up, however, and devoted herself entirely to the interpretation of folk song. In 1919 she went to Constantinople, where it is said she gave 160 concerts in close succession. She then toured Rumania, Poland, and finally went to Berlin.

Globe Nov 12

ISA KREMER

The coming Boston debut of Isa Kremar, the ballad singer of eastern Europe, next Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall at 8:15, is the more keenly anticipated in that she has sung to great new York audiences in Carnegie Hall on three successive Sundays, and in each case completely captivated her hearers. The folk songs of the Russian, Jewish, Rumanian, Arabian, French, Italian and English peoples are her subjects. She is said to have the dramatic skill of Yvette Guilbert and she sings each song in the native language.. A native of Russia, she began her career in opera while still very young. She soon gave this up and devoted herself entirely to the interpretation of folk song. In 1919 she went to Constantinople, where she gave 160 concerts in close succession. She then toured Rumania, Poland, and finally went to Berlin. Her 11-12

Herald Nov 12

KREMER SCORES BIG HIT AT CONCERT

Am 11/15

A new comet appeared in the musical sky when Isa Kremer, Russian balladist, came out on the stage of Symphony Hall and began to sing. She has given three concerts in New York since she arrived from abroad fifteen days ago and New York is singing her praises in unusual language, but Boston is inclined to be skeptical of sensational New York successes. Boston is singing the same tune now.

To the original twelve programed songs, Mme Kremer added six and could have gone on singing indefinitely for she had the audience crowding down around the stage as near to her as they could get, clapping like mad, stamping their feet and many of these calling loudly for their favorite Yiddish songs. They talked to her from their seats and she answered them—that is the sort of singer Kremer is.

Kremer is a musical institution in this country—there is nobody like her, never has been and probably never will be.

The voice of Mme. Kremer is powerful, resonant, vibrant and in some of the higher tones a bit on edge.

Kurt Hetzel played accompaniments for the singer. He also played three solos from Chopin and Liszt which were too rapidly played to admit all the original beauty of the composition. There was also a tendency to cloud passages with the pedal.

Mme. Kremer is to reappear here in January. It is more than probable that a sold-out house will greet her then.

American Nov 15

Mood Warms Mobility

Trans 11/15

Isa Kremer

Many-Sided Singer in as Many Tongues

Trans 11-15

INTO no groove of our theatre or our concert-halls fits Isa Kremer, newly come from Central Europe, heard last evening in Symphony Hall as "international balladist." In the playhouse, she might find place as incident and ornament to a review. Yet in degree her abilities would excel such environment. In like case would she be in the vaudeville theatres, where, besides, a public, consciously or unconsciously indoctrinated with "straight Americanism," is often wary of European entertainers. Yet in the concert-hall, Miss Kremer's pieces fall below even a modest musical standard; while neither in the voice nor the ways of pure song does she excel. With frank and fluid play of face, gesture, body, she enforces and adorns her singing. How far such miming may go in the concert-room is debatable—unless the manifold might of a Shalyápin sweeps doubt and objection down the wind. By every token of last evening, Miss Kremer sings pieces best suiting a glorified café-concert and there to be heard in the full measure of her abilities. Unfortunately, there is but one Chauve-Souris in the United States. For lack of others, Miss Kremer must wander through Carnegie and Symphony Halls, deprived of intimate contacts with her audience, lacking which she is plainly diminished. Over great spaces Mme. Guilbert is relatively mute; while as yet, though she be also diseuse, the new singer is no Mme. Yvette.

The new lights—to illuminate those desiring them upon the stage of Symphony Hall—were turned brightly upon Miss Kremar. As brightly robed, she sang twelve numbers set upon the programme and added half as many extra pieces. They ran severally in French, Russian, Italian, English, Yiddish, since the singer is fluent in many languages, but, seemingly, distinguished in none. With scarcely an exception, the songs suggested the finer-grained, more artful café-concerts of Central Europe—Neapolitan serenades and laments over "Santa Lucia Lontana": candid Yiddish humor; Russian melancholy, Russian fantasy; Gallic mischief, Gallic sophistication; English whimsey or English sentiment. The French numbers and one Russian piece aside, the verses were hackneyed commonplaces; the music as conventionally mechanical.

Miss Kremer dispensed these pieces in a voice of pleasing natural quality made supple to her purpose of delineative song. In particular, she colored her tones with the vocal idiosyncrasies of the race whence came the number in hand. Thus, she flavored her Italian ballads with nasal intensities; her French pieces with the pointed diction of innuendo; her Russian with the intonations of tense, constricted emotion. She further illustrated the songs with appropriate miming, neither particularly graphic nor individually imaginative. Her mother, crooning a lullaby, dandled the infant or bent over the cradle. Her serenading Italians beat the air with ornate, expansive gesture. Her Russian or her Arabian maiden, grief-stricken, looked wan-eyed, tight-lipped, down an emptied, echoing world. In guise of French chanteuse, she played with malice, light-fingered, light-toned. In English shift she was thick with sentiment.

In a word, the obvious thing in the obvious way from a many-tongued, many-sided singer, fluid of face, mobile of gesture, multi-colored in tone, all Jewish sensibility to surface-impressions, all Jewish eagerness to communicate them. Exactly why Central Europe should have "risen to her" and New York twice and thrice done likewise is hard to understand. In Budapest, in Bukarest, in a dozen other cities, there are—or there used to be—plentiful Isa Kremers.

H. T. P.

Transcript Nov 15

Thick is the gossip that trails behind the departed Isa Kremer. She was originally schooled for opera in Italy but preferred her present calling. She has given 169 concerts in Constantinople, and almost as many more in Warsaw. There she was harried as a Russian Jewess. Yet in the end her "magnetism" prevailed. Symphony Hall must have thinned it. Trans 11-16

H. T. P.

Transcript Nov 16

Kremer in Polyglot Program

N.Y. Tribune 11/6

Meanwhile, at Carnegie Hall, Isa Kremer, who might be called an "international diseuse," gave another polyglot program, with numbers in six languages—English, French, Italian Russian, Rumanian and Yiddish—seeming able to pass from one to the other and feel equally at home in each. They were all rather light folk or popular songs, reaching no particular heights or depths, but with sufficiently varied emotions to exhibit Miss Kremer's versatility, which, with her gestures and intonation, was her strong point, in love songs, sober or cheerful songs, or lullabies. With the aid of short program notes there was no difficulty in understanding what she meant, whatever the language. One could hardly estimate her voice by itself; many defects might have appeared in a formal song recital, but here it was an effective compliment of her action.

Yascha Bunchuk, 'cellist, showed an agreeable tone and fluent technique in some half dozen numbers of his own, while Kurt Hetzel, as before, was an able accompanist, with (also as before) an audience apparently of many nations and languages, though to judge by the applause the Italian and the Jewish seemed to lead. N.Y. Tribune

---

SA KREMER AT SYMPHONY HALL

Her 11-15

Vocalist Presents Program of Songs of Five Nations

KURT HETZEL IS THE ACCOMPANIST

By PHILIP HALE

Madame Isa Kremer, characterized as an "International Balladist," sang last night in Symphony hall for the first time in Boston. She was assisted by Kurt Hetzel, pianist.

Her program was made up of Russian, French, Italian, Jewish and English songs. The program gave in a few words the purport of these songs, except the English ones, but nothing about the origin of them, whether they were folk songs or art songs in the folk manner; nothing about composers or arrangers. Some of the songs were interesting in themselves, without regard to the interpretation; some would have been insignificant without the singer's interpretative art; some were tiresome, in spite of her art.

Madame Kremer was favored by Nature. Her personality is striking, suggesting the Orient. Her face is mobile and expressive. Her carriage is effective. The voice is flexible, obedient to dramatic intentions; with many tones that are of a rich and haunting quality; with upper tones that in dramatic outbursts are shrill, but euphonious when they are not forced. The singer knows how to employ this voice in bringing out the sentiments of the text in tones.

Arrayed in two brilliant costumes, one for each half of her program, she moved about, and gestured, and sang with a strong light thrown upon her. During the first songs, she was a fascinatinng apparition, in large measure by reason of her personal appearance and her peculiar manner of interpretation. Familiarity lessened the charm. Little by little, the spectator began to suspect that many of the gestures were according to a formula and not always significant; while the strophic character of the songs, the many verses of a song having the same melody, toward the end became almost wearisome to the hearer.

This is to be said: The singer caught admirably the national, or, if you please, racial spirit. This was especially noted in her singing of the Italian "Chittarata Neapolitan" and "Marechiare." There was the Italian expression in all its frankness, brio and the sentiment that seems to northern nations exaggerated. It was also noted in the Jewish and the Russian songs. One of the most charming interpretations was the French cradle-song, "Le Petit Navire," but in the other French songs one missed the feigned naivete and the "malice" that would have vitalized the apparently simple verses if they had been sung by Yvette Guilbert or Loraine Wyman.

That Madame Kremer could strike the tragic note was revealed by her singing the Yiddish song of the maiden who learns of her soldier-lover's death. Here the transition from joy to anguish brought by the letter was finely worked. The Russian "Yasminah" was described on the program as "Arabian Song." Arabian in consequence of the tales told by the verses: not musically suggestive of the east.

Mr. Hetzel accompanied Madame Kremer in a most sympathetic manner. His task was not a light one. He also played a polonaise and waltz by Chopin and gave a thunder-and-lightning performance (accent on thunder) of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 12. Recalled, he played Liszt's familiar Liebestraum. There was an enthusiastic audience of good size. The singer, recalled several times, added to the program.

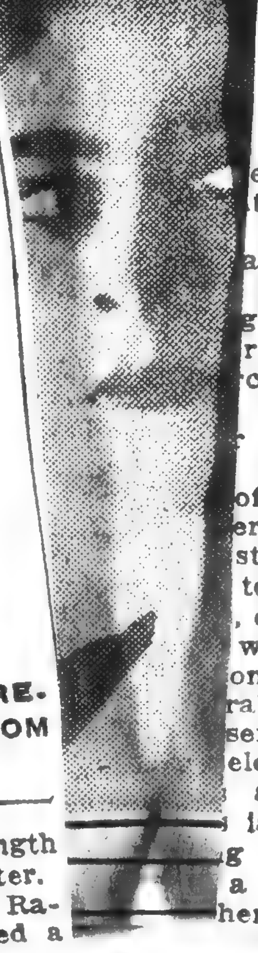
Madame Kremer will give her second recital in Symphony hall, Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7.

Herald Nov 15

ER

M I

WA



OF RE-
FROM

e length
smitter.
eral Raeloped a

for some effectively
terference
emitting ated char-
transmit-
g from the rms of fil-cuits have far have amateur

of filter to er necessi-
stem at a
to be effi-
, of course,
where sig-
onsiderable
rallel reso-
series with eless in so are con-
is evident
g a coil of a condens-
hen the re-

Herald Nov 12

[105]

Guest Nov 16

GUEST LECTURE

Announcement is made of a public appearance [illegible] Boston Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, November 16, of Edgar A. Guest, the poet and lecturer in a reading of his own poems. As is well known, Mr. Guest is known as "The Poet of the Plain People."

Advertiser Oct 22

EDGAR A. GUEST

Edgar A. Guest, the poet of the people, who is to appear at Boston Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, November 16th, is at present touring the United States, and his audiences have proven not only to be large in numbers—but enthusiastic in their recognition of the interesting and pleasure giving qualities of his readings of his own every-day poems. 11-4

American Nov 4

Edgar A. Guest

In Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 16, Edgar A. Guest will read his own poems. Mr. Guest, known as "The Poet of the Plain People," has won for himself an established place in the hearts of Americans, because of the inspiration they have been able to gain reading his simple poems, songs of home, of children, of every-day joys and sorrows.

Herald Oct 22

Elman Nov 19

ELMAN'S SECOND CONCERT

The second concert of the season by Mischa Elman, the great Russian violinist, will take place in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19, at 3:30. In the performance of the Franck sonata the piano part will be taken by Mischa Elman's sister, Lisa Elman.

Traveler Nov 18

ELMAN'S SECOND CONCERT

The second concert of the season by Mischa Elman, the great Russian violinist, will take place in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, November 19, at 3:30. His program will include the Concerto in G minor, by Vivaldi-Nachez, Sonata by Cesar Franck, Lalo's Symphonic Espagnole, Adagio of Mozart-Friedberg, Hungarian Dance in F-sharp minor, Brahms; a transcription of "Eili Eili" by Elman, and the Caprice Basque of Sarasate. In the performance of the Franck Sonato the piano part will be taken by Mischa Elman's sister, Lisa Elman.

American 11-11

Also Mr. Elman

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon returns Mischa Elman, the violinist who less than a month ago renewed in Boston his finest powers as virtuoso, musician, communicating and enhancing artist. He will play a Concerto in G minor by Vivaldi; Franck's Sonata, new adventure for him; movements from Lalo's "Spanish Symphony" and a miscellany from Grieg, Beethoven, Brahms and Sarasate. His sister, Lisa Elman, will play the piano-part in Franck's piece.

Transcript 11-18

Boston to See Elman's Sister

11/18

Brother and sister will divide musical honors in Boston tomorrow.

MISCHA ELMAN

When Mischa Elman appears at Symphony Hall he will be accompanied by his sister Lisa, who will play the piano part in the performance of the Cesar Franck sonata for violin and piano.

It is one of the most unusual events on record, so far as public performances are concerned, and particularly in the case of a star so brilliant and famous as Elman.

The Russian violin prodigy returned to Boston a few weeks ago after an absence of two years, spent on a triumphal tour, and he wes welcomed back so enthusiastically that this second concert was immediately arranged.

Advertiser 11-18

Mischa Elman's Program

Mischa Elman, the Russian violinist who began the present season of Sunday afternoon concerts at Symphony Hall, will make his re-appearance next Sunday Nov 19, at 3:30. He will be heard in the following program: Concerto in G minor, Vivaldi-Nachez; Sonata, Cesar Franck; "Symphonie Espagnole," Lalo; Adagio, Mozart-Friedberg; "Hungarian Dance," in F-sharp minor, Brahms; "Eili, Eili," Transcribed by Elman; "Caprice Basque," Sarasate.

In the performance of the Franck Sonata the piano part will be taken by Mischa Elman's sister, Lisa Elman.

Globe 11-12

Mischa Elman Gives Second Recital Today

11-19 Globe

Mischa Elman, the noted Russian violinist, will give his second Boston recital of the current season this afternoon at Symphony Hall. He has set a program, printed in full elsewhere in this column, which shows the steady improvement in standard by most of the leading violinists, who now incline to devote at least half of each recital to music worth hearing for its own sake and to reserve the "stunts and gumdrops" for the end of the concert. Mr Elman, whatever one may think of his musical shortcomings, has, at all events, an extraordinary technique and high ambitions. He can and does play everything sweetly and tunefully, erring chiefly by excess of these virtues. His audience earlier in the season filled the hall and clamored for many extra pieces.

Globe 11-19

ELMAN TODAY

This afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30, Mischa Elman will give his second Boston concert of the season. His programme has been slightly changed from the original announcement. Miss Lisa Elman, his sister, will take the piano part in the Sonata of Cesar Franck. Mr. Elman will play compositions by Bach, Lalo, Mozart-Friedberg, [illegible]

Post 11-19

ELMAN TODAY

Mischa Elman, violinist, will give his second concert of the season in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30. His program, slightly changed from the original announcement, will be as follows, Miss Lisa Elman, his sister, will play the piano part in the sonata of Cesar Franck.

I. Partita in E minor......Bach-Nachez
II. Sonata..........................Franck
III. Symphonie Espagnole...........Lalo
IV. Nocturne......................Grieg-Elman
Contradanses ..Beethoven-Seiss-Elman
Hungarian Dance, F sharp minor
Brahms-Joachim
Caprice Basque..............Sarasate

Herald 11-19

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30 Mischa Elman, violinist, assisted by Lisa Elman, pianist, Partita, Bach; Sonata, Cesar Franck; "Symphonic Espagnole," Lalo; Adagio, Mozart-Friedberg; Hungarian Dance in F sharp minor, Brahms, "Eili, Eili," arr Elman; "Caprice Basque," Sarasate.

Globe 11-19

MISCHA ELMAN PLEASES ANOTHER SUNDAY CROWD

Mischa Elman was cordially applauded and compelled to add generously to the program by his second Symphony Hall Sunday concert audience of the present season yesterday afternoon. This time there were some vacant seats instead of the "standing room only and not much of that" crowd last month. But the hall was beter filled than it has been for many great artists in the past.

Mr Elman played Bach, as decorated by Nachez, Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole," and show pieces and pretty trifles arranged by himself, Joachim and Sarasate. Mr Bonime accompanied discreetly, as usual, in these numbers.

The only real novelty of the afternoon was the appearance of one of the violinist's sisters, Miss Lisa Elman, who played the important and exacting piano part of the Cesar Franck sonata capably and musically.

Globe 11-20

MISCHA ELMAN IN RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

Mischa Elman gave a recital in Symphony Hall yesterday.

An unusually interesting note was introduced in the sonata by Cesar Franck. The sonata in itself is a very beautiful one, but the chief interest on this occasion was in the fact that Miss Liza Elman played the piano part.

There is no gainsaying the fact that Miss Elman is a pianist who is decidedly worthwhile. She added a great deal to the effect of the whole because her touch is lovely and her tone exceedingly good.

The program included Bach-Machex, Cesar Franck and Lalo for the larger numbers. The final group was devoted to four smaller pieces which were enjoyable.

The house, in spite of the fact that it was far from large, was sufficiently enthusiastic and recalled the artist time after time.

Josef Bonime accompanied Mr. Elman throughout the program with the exception of the Franck number.

American 11-20

Elman Self-Curbed Trans 11-20

In youth the violin is more easily mastered—though not more easily played—than is the piano, and in consequence interesting and significant violinists still in or barely out of their teens are always to be found. Not long ago came a veritable inundation of such prodigies. The two foremost of them, Jascha Heifetz and Mischa Elman, are now passing into comparative maturity, and the progress of their playing becomes engrossing concern. Once widely dissimilar, these two in striving towards the same ideal of rounded artistry have narrowed appreciably the gulf that lay between them. Mr. Heifetz began with poise and finish, and he now seeks—and gains—the sensibility and depth of feeling that were then relatively undeveloped. On the other hand Mr. Elman endowed with an abundance of emotional fervor often uncontrolled, now curts finesse and restraint.

Of the two Mr. Elman seems today the more definitely altered. In considering his playing it is possible to feel that the pendulum has swung a bit too far: in seeking sobriety he has lost a little of magnetism. He makes serious programmes, and for that he deserves praise; but he tends to play them too reservedly, so fearful he seems of a return to his old excesses. For his concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon he made a formidable list that included Franck's Sonata—in which his sister joined him—three movements of Lalo's Symphony, a transcription by Nachez of Bach's Partita in E minor, and short pieces by Grieg, Beethoven, Brahms and Sarasate.

In the original version for the piano Bach's Partitas are less stimulating than either the French or English Suites, and the one arranged by Nachez has many tedious moments, relieved by the grave beauty of the Adagio and the vigor of the Gigue. Mr. Elman played this austere music with the fine blend of warmth and scholarship that is the true way with Bach, and the most captious could not accuse him of any want of reverence for the piece, or of any lack of understanding of its qualities. Passing to the Sonata Mr. Elman gave, not as once he might have given, an unusually exuberant interpretation, but a singularly tempered one. Whether or not he senses it in such terms, he makes the Sonata sound as music of rapt contemplation, of spiritual ecstasy. His was a sublimated performance. Even when the music is obviously large-fibred, when it strides and shouts, he kept it within the frame he had set for it. There have been more passionate, more thrilling performances of the Sonata here; there have been few more beautiful. The only definite objection that may be urged against Mr. Elman's version of the piece is the unwarrantedly slow tempo at which he took the first movement. "Allegretto ben moderato" is the indication Franck set upon it; and Mr. Elman's playing suggested that the first word had altogether escaped his eye.

It was unkind to Lalo to set his well worn Symphony after the glowing music of Franck and, as was but natural, Mr. Elman himself seemed less eager for it. Years ago he played the piece at a concert of the Symphony Orchestra: in those days his playing was all of a sort, and it was not the sort for such polished, fine tempered music. Steadily he coarsened it, sensualized it, forced it beyond its proper bounds. Yesterday his manner with the piece was continence itself. There might easily have been more vivacity, sprightliness and fire. Again Mr. Elman was seemingly setting a curb on himself. From the standpoint of style his performance was impeccable, yet only through a touch of enthusiastic abandon may these drying measures be reanimated, and abandon the newly serious Elman does not know. . . . The audience for yesterday's concert was not so large as once it might have been. Perchance Mr. Elman, who had played here but lately, set the second recital too soon. Possibly the public has discovered that he does not offer so exciting a "show" as before. But the more discerning listener should give new heed to him. His is violin playing for musicians.

W. S. S.

Transcript 11-20

ELMAN PLEASES IN RIPPLING RECITAL

Her 11/20

Delicate Program Hypnotic with Fantastic Music

Mischa Elman gave a violin recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon with the following program: Partita in E minor, Bach-Nachez; Sonata, Cesar Franck; Symphonie Espagnole, Lalo; Nocturne, Greig-Elman; Contredanses, Beethoven - Seiss - Elman; Hungarian dance, F-sharp minor, Brahms-Joachim; Caprice Basque, Sarasate.

The music selected by Mr. Elman for this performance was chiefly of the delicate, fantastic, rippling type, which hypnotizes the sense and does not call for profound intellectual appreciation. The Franck Sonata, however, was superbly played and the Spanish symphony, which followed, won hearty applause.

Especially beautiful was the nocturne and the little group of contredances.

Miss Liza Elman played the piano part in the performance of the Sonata and Josef Bonime was the regular accompanist. All three performers contributed to a delightful afternoon. The house was fairly well filled.

-20

Guest Nov 16

GUEST LECTURE

Announcement is made of a public appearance in Boston Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, November 16, of Edgar A. Guest, the poet and lecturer in a reading of his own poems. As is well known, Mr. Guest is known as "The Poet of the Plain People."

Advertiser Oct 22

EDGAR A. GUEST

Amer

Edgar A. Guest, the poet of the people, who is to appear at Boston Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, November 16th, is at present touring the United States, and his audiences have proven not only to be large in numbers—but enthusiastic in their recognition of the interesting and pleasure giving qualities of his readings of his own every-day poems.

11-4

American Nov 4

Edgar A. Guest

Her 10/22

In Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 16, Edgar A. Guest will read his own poems. Mr. Guest, known as "The Poet of the Plain People," has won for himself an established place in the hearts of Americans, because of the inspiration they have been able to gain reading his simple poems, songs of home, of children, of every-day joys and sorrows.

Herald Oct 22

Elman Nov 19

ELMAN'S SECOND CONCERT

Tra 11-18

The second concert of the season by Mischa Elman, the great Russian violinist, will take place in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19, at 3:30. In the performance of the Franck sonata the piano part will be taken by Mischa Elman's sister, Lisa Elman.

Traveler Nov 18

ELMAN'S SECOND CONCERT

Amer 11-11

The second concert of the season by Mischa Elman, the great Russian violinist, will take place in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, November 19, at 3:30. His program will include the Concerto in G minor, by Vivaldi-Nachez, Sonata by Cesar Franck, Lalo's Symphonic Espagnole, Adagio of Mozart-Friedberg, Hungarian Dance in F-sharp minor, Brahms; a transcription of "Elli Elli" by Elman, and the Caprice Basque of Sarasate. In the performance of the Franck Sonato the piano part will be taken by Mischa Elman's sister, Lisa Elman.

American 11-11

lso Mr. Elman

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon returns Mischa Elman, the violinist who less than a month ago renewed in Boston his finest powers as virtuoso, musician, communicating and enhancing artist. He will play a Concerto in G minor by Vivaldi; Franck's Sonata, new adventure for him; movements from Lalo's "Spanish Symphony" and a miscellany from Grieg Beethoven, Brahms and Sarasate. His sister, Lisa Elman, will play the piano-part in Franck's piece.

Transcript 11-18

Boston to See Elman's Sister

11/18 Adv

Brother and sister will divide musical honors in Boston tomorrow.

MISCHA ELMAN

When Mischa Elman appears at Symphony Hall he will be accompanied by his sister Lisa, who will play the piano part in the performance of the Cesar Franck sonata for violin and piano.

It is one of the most unusual events on record, so far as public performances are concerned, and particularly in the case of a star so brilliant and famous as Elman.

The Russian violin prodigy returned to Boston a few weeks ago after an absence of two years, spent on a triumphal tour, and he wes welcomed back so enthusiastically that this second concert was immediately arranged.

Advertiser 11-18

Mischa Elman's Program

Mischa Elman, the Russian violinist who began the present season of Sunday afternoon concerts at Symphony Hall, will make his re-appearance next Sunday Nov 19, at 3:30. He will be heard in the following program: Concerto in G minor, Vivaldi-Nachez; Sonata, Cesar Franck; 'Symphonie Espagnole," Lalo; Adagio, Mozart-Friedberg "Hungarian Dance," in F-sharp minor Brahms; "Eili, Eili," Transcribed by Elman; "Caprice Basque," Sarasate.

In the performance of the Franck Sonata the piano part will be taken by Mischa Elman's sister, Lisa Elman.

Globe 11-12

Mischa Elman Gives Second Recital Today

11-19 Globe

Mischa Elman, the noted Russian violinist, will give his second Boston recital of the current season this afternoon at Symphony Hall. He has set a program, printed in full elsewhere in this column, which shows the steady improvement in standard by most of the leading violinists, who now incline to devote at least half of each recital to music worth hearing for its own sake and to reserve the "stunts and gumdrops" for the end of the concert. Mr Elman, whatever one may think of his musical shortcomings, has, at all events, an extraordinary technique and high ambitions. He can and does play everything sweetly and tunefully; erring chiefly by excess of these virtues. His audience earlier in the season filled the hall and clamored for many extra pieces.

Globe 11-19

ELMAN TODAY

This afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30, Mischa Elman will give his second Boston concert of the season. His programme has been slightly changed from the original announcement. Miss Lisa Elman, his sister, will take the piano part in the Sonata of Cesar Franck. Mr. Elman will play compositions by Bach, Lalo, Mozart-Friedberg,

Post 11-19

ELMAN TODAY

Her 11/19

Mischa Elman, violinist, will give his second concert of the season in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30. His program, slightly changed from the original announcement, will be as follows, Miss Lisa Elman, his sister, will play the piano part in the sonata of Cesar Franck.

I. Partita in E minor......Bach-Nachez
II. Sonata ....Franck
III. Symphonie Espagnole ....Lalo
IV. Nocturne ....Grieg-Elman
Contradanses ..Beethoven-Seiss-Elman
Hungarian Dance, F sharp minor
Brahms-Joachim
Caprice Basque ....Sarasate

Herald 11-19

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30 Mischa Elman, violinist, assisted by Lisa Elman, pianist. Partita, Bach; Sonata, Cesar Franck; "Symphonic Espagnole," Lalo; Adagio, Mozart-Friedberg; Hungarian Dance in F sharp minor, Brahms. "Eili, Eili," arr Elman; "Caprice Basque," Sarasate.

Globe 11-19

MISCHA ELMAN PLEASES ANOTHER SUNDAY CROWD

Mischa Elman was cordially applauded and compelled to add generously to the program by his second Symphony Hall Sunday concert audience of the present season yesterday afternoon. This time there were some vacant seats instead of the "standing room only and not much of that" crowd last month. But the hall was beter filled than it has been for many great artists in the past.

Mr Elman played Bach, as decorated by Nachez, Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole," and show pieces and pretty trifles arranged by himself, Joachim and Sarasate. Mr Bonime accompanied discreetly, as usual, in these numbers.

The only real novelty of the afternoon was the appearance of one of the violinist's sisters, Miss Lisa Elman, who played the important and exacting piano part of the Cesar Franck sonata capably and musically.

Globe 11-20

MISCHA ELMAN IN RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

Amer 11/20

Mischa Elman gave a recital in Symphony Hall yesterday.

An unusually interesting note was introduced in the sonata by Cesar Franck. The sonata in itself is very beautiful one, but the chief interest on this occasion was in the fact that Miss Liza Elman played the piano part.

There is no gainsaying the fact that Miss Elman is a pianist who is decidedly worthwhile. She added a great deal to the effect of the whole because her touch is lovely and her tone exceedingly good.

The program included Bach-Machex, Cesar Franck and Lalo for the larger numbers. The final group was devoted to four smaller pieces which were enjoyable.

The house, in spite of the fact that it was far from large, was sufficiently enthusiastic and recalled the artist time after time.

Josef Bonime accompanied Mr. Elman throughout the program with the exception of the Franck number.

American 11-20

Elman Self-Curbed

Trans 11-20

In youth the violin is more easily mastered—though not more easily played—than is the piano, and in consequence interesting and significant violinists still in or barely out of their teens are always to be found. Not long ago came a veritable inundation of such prodigies. The two foremost of them, Jascha Heifetz and Mischa Elman, are now passing into comparative maturity, and the progress of their playing becomes engrossing concern. Once widely dissimilar, these two in striving towards the same ideal of rounded artistry have narrowed appreciably the gulf that lay between them Mr. Heifetz began with poise and finish, and he now seeks—and gains—the sensibility and depth of feeling that were then relatively undeveloped. On the other hand Mr. Elman endowed with an abundance of emotional fervor often uncontrolled, now curts finesse and restraint.

Of the two Mr. Elman seems today the more definitely altered. In considering his playing it is possible to feel that the pendulum has swung a bit too far: in seeking sobriety he has lost a little of magnetism. He makes serious programmes, and for that he deserves praise; but he tends to play them too reservedly, so fearful he seems of a return to his old excesses. For his concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon he made a formidable list that included Franck's Sonata—in which his sister joined him—three movements of Lalo's Symphony, a transcription by Nachez of Bach's Partita in E minor, and short pieces by Grieg, Beethoven, Brahms and Sarasate.

In the original version for the piano Bach's Partitas are less stimulating than either the French or English Suites, and the one arranged by Nachez has many tedious moments, relieved by the grave beauty of the Adagio and the vigor of the Gigue. Mr. Elman played this austere music with the fine blend of warmth and scholarship that is the true way with Bach, and the most captious could not accuse him of any want of reverence for the piece, or of any lack of understanding of its qualities. Passing to the Sonata Mr. Elman gave, not as once he might have given, an unusually exuberant interpretation, but a singularly tempered one. Whether or not he senses it in such terms, he makes the Sonata sound as music of rapt contemplation, of spiritual ecstasy. His was a sublimated performance. Even when the music is obviously large-fibred, when it strides and shouts, he kept it within the frame he had set for it. There have been more passionate, more thrilling performances of the Sonata here; there have been few more beautiful. The only definite objection that may be urged against Mr. Elman's version of the piece is the unwarrantedly slow tempo at which he took the first movement. "Allegretto ben moderato" is the indication Franck set upon it; and Mr. Elman's playing suggested that the first word had altogether escaped his eye.

It was unkind to Lalo to set his well worn Symphony after the glowing music of Franck and, as was but natural, Mr. Elman himself seemed less eager for it. Years ago he played the piece at a concert of the Symphony Orchestra: in those days his playing was all of a sort, and it was not the sort for such polished, fine tempered music. Steadily he coarsened it, sensualized it, forced it beyond its proper bounds. Yesterday his manner with the piece was continence itself. There might easily have been more vivacity, sprightliness and fire. Again Mr. Elman was seemingly setting a curb on himself. From the standpoint of style his performance was impeccable, yet only through a touch of enthusiastic abandon may these drying measures be reanimated, and abandon the newly serious Elman does not know. . . . The audience for yesterday's concert was not so large as once it might have been. Perchance Mr. Elman, who had played here but lately, set the second recital too soon. Possibly the public has discovered that he does not offer so exciting a "show" as before. But the more discerning listener should give new heed to him. His is violin playing for musicians.

W. S. S.

Transcript 11-20

ELMAN PLEASES IN RIPPLING RECITAL

Her ~~11/20~~

Delicate Program Hypnotic with Fantastic Music

Mischa Elman gave a violin recital in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon with the following program: Partita in E minor, Bach-Nachez; Sonata, Cesar Franck; Symphonie Espagnole, Lalo; Nocturne, Greig-Elman; Contredanses, Beethoven - Seiss - Elman; Hungarian dance, F-sharp minor, Brahms-Joachim; Caprice Basque, Sarasate.

The music selected by Mr. Elman for this performance was chiefly of the delicate, fantastic, rippling type, which hypnotizes the sense and does not call for profound intellectual appreciation The Franck Sonata, however, was superbly played and the Spanish symphony, which followed, won hearty applause.

Especially beautiful was the nocturne and the little group of contredances.

Miss Liza Elman played the piano part in the performance of the Sonata and Josef Bonime was the regular accompanist. All three performers contributed to a delightful afternoon. The house was fairly well filled.

Herald 11-20

Rachmaninoff
Nov 23.

Mr. Rakhmaninov, a figure like none other in the passing pageant of pianists, a master assured everywhere of a firm-set following, will return to Boston for a concert in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 23. It is good to find him choosing the evening, when they who work by day are free to hear him and when most spirits beat highest. It is good also to discover him assembling a programme worthy of his powers, viz.: Trans 10/8

Improvisation, Op. 31	Medtner
Sonata in F minor ("Appassionata")	Beethoven
Polonaise—Nocturne—Waltz—Sonata in B flat minor	Chopin
Melody—Serenade	Rakhmaninov
Study in E major—La Campanella,	Paganini-Liszt

Transcript Nov 8

RACHMANINOV

Mr. Rachmaninov will play at his concert in Symphony hall, next Monday evening: Her 11-19

Improvization, Op. 31	N. Medtner
Sonata Appassionata	Beethoven
Polonaise	Chopin
Nocturne	Chopin
Valse	Chopin
Sonata, Opus 35	Chopin
Melodie	Rachmaninov
Serenade	Rachmaninov
Two Etudes:
(a) E major	Paganini-Liszt
(b) La Campanella	Paganini-Liszt

Herald Nov 19

RACHMANINOFF HERE

The following program will be played by Rachmaninoff at his recital at Symphony Hall next Thursday: Adv 11/19

Improvisation, Op. 31	N. Medtner
Sonata Appassionata	Beethoven
Polonaise	Chopin
Nocturne	Chopin
Valse	Chopin
Sonata, Opus 35	Chopin
Melodie	Rachmaninoff
Serenade	Rachmoninoff
Two Etudes:
E major	Paganini-Liszt
La Campanella	Paganini-Liszt

Advertiser Nov 19

Thursday at 8:15, Sergei Rachmaninoff, pianist: Improvization, Op. 31, N. Medtner; "Sonata Appassionata," opus 57, Beethoven; Polonaise, Nocturne, Valse, and Sonata, Opus 35, in B flat minor, Chopin; Melodie and Serenade, Rachmaninoff; E major Etude and La Campanella, Paganini-Liszt.

Globe 11-19

At his next concert in Boston on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 26, in Symphony Hall, Mr. Heifetz will set himself exacting tasks—Brahams's Sonata in A major for violin and piano and five divisions of the Sixth Sonata of Bach for violin alone. Clearly, with his years and his new-found powers of self-expression ambition also waxes. Trans

Transcript Nov 15

SUNDAY afternoon, Nov. 26, in Symphony Hall a second concert by Mr. Heifetz, the violinist, once more at perfection of technique and tone; more than ever sensitive to music and instrument; at last expressing himself in his playing without troublous striving. He will play Brahms's Sonata in A major for Violin with piano; five divisions of Bach's Sixth Sonata for violin alone; a miscellany from Chaikovsky, Glazunov, Wieniawski and Paganini Trans 11-18

Transcript Nov 18

HEIFETZ NEXT SUNDAY

Next Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz will give his second concert of the Boston season. Herald 11/19

Sonata in A-major	Brahms
Prelude, Bourree, Menuette No. 1, Menuette No. 2, Gigue (For violin alone from 6th Sonata.)	Bach
Serenade Melancholique	Tchaikovsky
Valse Scherzo	Tchaikovsky-Auer
Meditation, Valse	Glazounov
Saltarella	Wieniawski
Nocturne in D-major	Chopin-Wilhelmj
Perpetuum Mobile	Paganini

Herald 11-19

Jascha Heifetz' Program

Next Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz will give his second concert of the Boston season. He will play the following pieces: Sonata in A major, Brahms; Prelude, Bourree, Menuet No. 1, Menuet No. 2 and Gigue (for violin alone from 6th Sonata), J. S. Bach; "Serenade Melancholique," Tchaikovsky; Valse Scherzo, Tchaikovsky-Auer; Meditation and Valse, Glazunov; Saltarella, Wieniawski; Nocturne in D major, Chopin-Wilhelmj; "Perpetuum Mobile," Paganini.

Globe 11-19

HEIFETZ AGAIN

Adv 11/19

Next Sunday afternon, in Symphony Hall, Jascha Heifetz will play the following program:

Sonata in A major	Brahms
Prelude	J. S. Bach
Bourree	J. S. Bach
Menuette No. 1	J. S. Bach
Menuette No. 2	J. S. Bach
Gigue	J. S. Bach
Serenade Melancholique	Tchaikovsky
Valse Scherzo	Tchaikovsky-Auer
Meditation	Glazounov
Valse	Glazounov
Saltarella	Wieniawski
Nocturne in D major	Chopin-Wilhelmj
Perpetuum Mobile	Paganini

Advertiser 11-19

Incidents and Announcements

Trans 11/20

For his concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Mr. Heifetz, the violinist, has set both an interesting and an exacting programme, viz.:

Sonata in A major for Violin and Piano	Brahms
Prelude, Bourrée, Minuets and Gigue from the Sixth Sonata for Violin Alone	Bach
Melancholy Serenade	Chaikovsky
Scherzo-Waltz	Chaikovsky-Auer
Meditation	Glazunov
Saltarello	Wieniawski
Nocturne in G major	Chopin-Wilhelmj
Perpetual Motion	Paganini

In both Budapest and Vienna, Mr. Kreisler handed the entire proceeds of four concerts to the proper authorities for the relief of the Hungarian and the Austrian poor. "I am acting like a modern robber-knight," he explained. "I am taking the money from the pockets of the profiteers and the speculators and giving it to the unfortunate. My methods, however, are gentler."

The Friends of Music are sparing no pains with their chorus, still in charge of Stephen Townsend. New and better voices have been gathered for it; while the number of rehearsals has been increased. In New York, as the season advances, it will be heard in music of Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Schubert and incidental moderns.

H. T. P.

Transcript 11-20

Heifetz's Second Sunday Recita

It is an age of violin stars, and the youngest of them all, Jascha Heifetz is by general admission the greatest.

Jascha Heifetz

George Bernard Shaw, for instance, begged Heifetz to make a slip some time just to prove that he was human; and the late James G. Huneker, who was inclined to ridicule Shaw's pretentions as a music critic, paid tribute to Heifetz as the real musical marvel of the times. In tone and technique both, he is without a peer.

Young Heifetz, who was in his 'teens when he first came to Boston five years ago, is one of the big figures in the current series of Sunday afternoon concerts at [illegible] He will give his [illegible] there next Sun-

Traveler 11-22

Heifetz Nov 26

Second Heifetz Concert

A week from tomorrow, Sunday afternoon, November 26th, at 3:30, in Symphony Hall, Jascha Heifetz will give his second recital of the season in Boston. Post 11-19

Post 11-19

Mr. Heifetz Anew

Trans 11-25

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon comes again Mr. Heifetz, the violinist, restored to his mastery of technical means for tonal ends and steadily ripening in the expression of music and instrument through himself. He will test these newly balanced powers in such exacting music as Brahms's Sonata in A major and five divisions of Bach's Sixth Sonata for violin alone. The usual miscellany—this time from Chaikovsky, Glazzanov, Wieniowski and Pagannini rounds out the programme.

Transcript 11-25

HEIFETZ

Trav 11/25

At his second Boston concert of the season, which is to be his last this year in Symphony hall, and which will take place tomororw afternoon at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz is to present a program of unusual interest. The numbers follow: Sonata No. 2 in A major by Brahms, selections from sixth Sonata of Bach for violin alone, Serenade and Valse Scherzo by Tchaikovsky, Meditation and Valse by Glazounov, Saltarella by Wieniawsky, Nocturne in D major—Chopin-Wilhelmj, and Perpetuum Mobile of Paganini.

Traveler 11-25

HEIFETZ PLAYS TOMORROW

At his second concert of the season, which is to be his last this year in Symphony Hall, and which will take place tomorrow afternoon at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz is to present a program of unusual interest. The numbers follow: Sonata No. 2 in A major by Brahms, selections from Sixth Sonata of Bach for violin alone, Serenade and Valse Scherzo by Tchaikovsky, Meditation and Valse by Glazounov, Saltarella by Wieniawsky, Nocturne in D major, Chopin-Wilhelmj, and Perpetuum Mob le of Paganini. Amer 11-25

American 11-25

HEIFETZ PLAYS TODAY

Jascha Heifetz will give his second concert of the season, his last of the year, in Symphony Hall, this afternoon at 3:30. Her 11/26

Sonata in A major	Brahms
Prelude	Bach
Bourree	Bach
Menuette No. 1	Bach
Menuette No. 2	Bach
Gigue	Bach
(For violin alone from 6th sonata.)
Serenade Melancholique	Tchaikovsky
Valse Scherzo	Tchaikovsky-Auer
Meditation	Glazounov
Valse	Glazounov
Saltarella	Wieniawski
Nocturne in D major	Chopin-Wilhelmj
Perpetuum Mobile	Paganini

Herald 11-26

HEIFETZ PLAYS TODAY

Jascha Heifetz will give his second concert of the season, which is also his last of the year, in Symphony Hall this afternoon. His program follows: Adv 11/26

Sonata in A major	Brahms
Prelude	J. S. Bach
Bourree	J. S. Bach
Menuttee No. 1	J. S. Bach
Menuttee No. 2	J. S. Bach
Gigue	J. S. Bach
Serenade Melancholique	Tchaikovsky
Valse Scherzo	Tchaikovsky-Auer
Meditation	Glazounov
Valse	Glazounov
Saltarella	Wieniawski
Nocturne in D major	Chopin-Wilhelmj
Perpetuum Mobile	Paganini

BOSTON THEATRE

Advertiser 11-26

HEIFETZ PLAYS TODAY

Jascha Heifetz will give his second concert of the season, which is also his last of the year in Symphony Hall, this afternoon at 3:30. Post 11-26

The great Russian violinist will play music by Brahms, J. S. Bach, Tchaikovsky, Tchaikovsky-Auer, Glazounov, Wieniawski, Chopin-Wilhelmj and Paganini

Post 11-26

HEIFETZ ENTERTAINS AT SYMPHONY HALL

Jascha Heifetz gave a violin recital at Symphony Hall yesterday for the second time within a month. The audience was smaller than usual, with scores of seats vacant downstairs. Perhaps the public has been surfeited with violin music; or maybe many of the regular concert-goers were recovering from the Harvard-Yale game. But Heifetz played superbly, with the most brilliant and flawless tone of which a violinist can boast. Adv 11-27

[107] Advertiser 11-27

HEIFETZ RECITAL

Jascha Heifetz, violinist, gave his second recital of the season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. His programme was of exceptional interest and long as it was, the violinist was kept over half an hour after playing encores. Mr. Heifetz played with Samuel Crotzinoff Brahms' A major sonata, the 6th sonata for violin alone of J. S. Bach, and smaller pieces by Tschaikowsky, Glazounov, Wieniawski; Chopin-Wilhelmj, Paganini. A diabolically accurate technic on the part of Mr. Heifetz, which caused Bernard Shaw to write him in England and remind him that the gods are not always kind to perfect people, and please make a few mistakes for the sake of self-preservation, is only one of the violinist's qualifications.

He unites with it a very high intelligence and also taste, which is not necessary synonymous with technique or intelligence either. Then there is his superb poise and sense of proportion and the classic beauty of his style. Few, indeed, would have made Bach and Brahms so clear and at the same time full of sentiment. In the smaller pieces there was ample opportunity for the piquant effects which please an audience. The hall was packed.

Post 11-27

HEIFETZ DELIGHTS BOSTON AUDIENCE

Glb 11-27

Program of Wide Range Is Wonderfully Played

Rulon Robinson Sings With the People's Symphony Orchestra

Jascha Heifetz, violinist extraordinary, for the first time since he has been coming to Boston, now nearly five years, yesterday afternoon played in Symphony Hall to an audience that did not fill all of the seats and overflow on the stage. Why this was so is not easy to explain; it happens about once in so often in the careers of nearly all artists, however great and constant their following.

To Mr Heifetz this made no difference; he played as wonderfully well as he always has, giving all that he had to give, and his audience never failed him in appreciation. His program range was wide, its ballance excellent. He is less and less the boy—though still in h's very early 20s—as his concert experience grows, and he yesterday brought a dign'ty and simplicity to his playing that added measurably to its enjoyment.

Opening his recital with Brahm's sonata in A major, he passed on to a Bach group of prelude, bouree, two minuets and gigue, each a gem of composit'on and all played as every student of Bach aspires to play them. In these sixth sonata selections Mr Heifetz was unaccompanied.

Tschaikovsky's Melancholique Serenade, perfectly given; the same author's Valse Scherzo, arranged by Auer, in which the violinist was at his showiest for the afternoon; Glazounov's beautiful and popular Meditation, next a waltz by the same composer, and finally a delightful, sprightly Saltarella by Wieniawski, constituted the third part of the program.

Completing the program were the Chopin Nocturne in D major and Paganini's bizarre Perfetuum Mobile; but the violinist's task was still far from complete, for the balconies swarmed down into the unoccupied floor seats and insisted that he continue. This he cheerfully did, conspicuous among his added selections being two berceuses, one by Faure, and Sarasate's Zapaetedo.

Samuel Chotzinoff was Mr Heifetz' accompanist at the piano.

Globe 11-27

HEIFETZ GIVES VIOLIN RECITA

Playing of Sonatas by Brahms and Bach Gives Delight to Audience

SHOWS ORIGINALITY IN HIS PROGRAM

Her 11-27

Yesterday afternoon in Symphon ll Jascha Heifetz, with the help o amuel Chotzinoff, pianist, gave a vio n recital, playing this program: Sonata in A major (for violin an iano), Brahms; 5 movements from 6th onata for violin alone, Bach; Serenade elancholique, Tchaikowsky; Valse cherzo, Tchaikowsky-Auer; Meditaion, Valse, Glazounov; Saltarella, Wienawski; Nocturne in D major, Chopin-Wilhelmj; Perpetuum Mobile, Paganini.

All thanks are due Mr. Heifetz for arranging a program unlike that of the typical violin recital. Instead of the inescapable concerto—with an unfortunate accompanist struggling to furnish a background for which the composer demanded a large orchestra, and, needs be, making but a sorry job of it—Mr. Heifetz, since he had a pianist and not an orchestra at his disposal, showed the good taste to play a sonata for pian and violin. For his Bach number, to he treated his audience with considera ion, for if the unaccompanied sonat he chose, the stirring prelude excepted, proves dull hearing to many persons who are neither violinists nor admirers of every page Bach wrote, at least it s not the sadly over-worked chaconne.

As well as good taste and kindliness, it would seem as though Mr. Heifetz likewise showed good judgment, for, though at present such a consideration may appear beside the mark, nevertheless the time may come when ever Mr. Heifetz will be glad to extend his public. The usual violin recital program today must appeal largely to persons who are partial to hearing an artist play the violin, regardless of what he plays if only there are enough pretty and brilliant pieces at he end. This sort of public sometimes proves fickle.

There is a different kind of public, however, with a fondness for the smaller forms of chamber music, sonatas for piano and violin, and the like, which come seldom to public performances. Though purists may argue that heir place is not in Symphony hall, one may counter with the opinion, better in Symphony hall than not at all. At all events Mr. Heifetz could lose nothing by letting it become known that at his concerts there is to be heard something different, something genuinely worth while, like the admirable performance e and Mr. Chotzinoff gave yesterday of the exquisite Brahms sonata; the beauty of it is not soon to be forgotten. He has, to repeat, nothing to lose, for hose people to whom the sound of the violin is comparably only to the music of he spheres, would not stay away, whatever Mr. Heifetz might play early in a concert, and he might well lure to ymphony hall persons who now are isposed to stay at home. The audience esterday, by the way, had every air enjoying the sonata, and the splendid ach prelude they vigorously applauded. he tribute to Mr. Heifetz's art is the reater when one remembers that this me audience had shown itself restive being kept waiting 19 minutes for the ncert to begin.

R. R. G.

Herald 11-27

ovr

Rachmaninoff Nov 23.

Heifetz Nov 26

Mr. Rakhmaninov, a figure like none other in the passing pageant of pianists, a master assured everywhere of a firm-set following, will return to Boston for a concert in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 23. It is good to find him choosing the evening, when they who work by day are free to hear him and when most spirits beat highest. It is good also to discover him assembling a programme worthy of his powers, viz.: Trans 10/8

Improvisation, Op. 31	Medtner
Sonata in F minor ("Appassionata")	Beethoven
Polonaise—Nocturne—Waltz—Sonata in B flat minor	Chopin
Melody—Serenade	Rakhmaninov
Study in E major—La Campanella,	Paganini-Liszt

Transcript Nov 8

RACHMANINOV

Mr. Rachmaninov will play at his concert in Symphony hall, next Monday evening: Her 11-19

Improvization, Op. 31	N. Medtner
Sonata Appassionata	Beethoven
Polonaise	Chopin
Nocturne	Chopin
Valse	Chopin
Sonata, Opus 35	Chopin
Melodie	Rachmaninov
Serenade	Rachmaninov
Two Etudes:
(a) E major	Paganini-Liszt
(b) La Campanella	Paganini-Liszt

Herald Nov 19

RACHMANINOFF HERE

The following program will be played by Rachmaninoff at his recital at Symphony Hall next Thursday: Adv 11/19

Improvization, Op. 31	N. Medtner
Sonata Appassionata	Beethoven
Polonaise	Chopin
Nocturne	Chopin
Valse	Chopin
Sonata, Opus 35	Chopin
Melodie	Rachmaninoff
Serenade	Rachmoninoff
Two Etudes:
E major	Paganini-Liszt
La Campanella	Paganini-Liszt

Advertiser Nov 19

Thursday at 8:15, Sergei Rachmaninoff, pianist; Improvization, Op. 31, N. Medtner; "Sonata Appassionata," opus 57, Beethoven; Polonaise, Nocturne, Valse, and Sonata, Opus 35, in B flat minor, Chopin; Melodie and Serenade, Rachmaninoff; E major Etude and La Campanella, Paganini-Liszt. Globe 11-19

Globe 11-19

At his next concert in Boston on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 26, in Symphony Hall, Mr. Heifetz will set himself exacting tasks—Brahms's Sonata in A major for violin and piano and five divisions of the Sixth Sonata of Bach for violin alone. Clearly, with his years and his new-found powers of self-expression ambition also waxes. Trans

Transcript Nov 15

SUNDAY afternoon, Nov. 26, in Symphony Hall a second concert by Mr. Heifetz, the violinist, once more at perfection of technique and tone; more than ever sensitive to music and instrument; at last expressing himself in his playing without troublous striving. He will play Brahms's Sonata in A major for Violin with piano; five divisions of Bach's Sixth Sonata for violin alone; a miscellany from Chaikovsky, Glazunov, Wieniawski and Paganini Trans 11-18

Transcript Nov 18

HEIFETZ NEXT SUNDAY

Next Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz will give his second concert of the Boston season. Herald 11/19

Sonata in A-major	Brahms
Prelude, Bourree, Menuette No. 1, Menuette No. 2, Gigue	Bach
(For violin alone from 6th Sonata.)
Serenade Melancholique	Tchaikovsky
Valse Scherzo	Tchaikovsky-Auer
Meditation, Valse	Glazounov
Saltarella	Wieniawski
Nocturne in D-major	Chopin-Wilhelmj
Perpetuum Mobile	Paganini

Herald 11-19

Jascha Heifetz' Program

Next Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz will give his second concert of the Boston season. He will play the following pieces: Sonata in A major, Brahms; Prelude, Bourree, Menuet No. 1, Menuet No. 2 and Gigue (for violin alone from 6th Sonata), J. S. Bach; "Serenade Melancholique," Tchaikovsky; Valse Scherzo, Tchaikovsky-Auer; Meditation and Valse, Glazunov; Saltarella, Wieniawski; Nocturne in D major, Chopin-Wilhelmj; "Perpetuum Mobile," Paganini. Globe 11-19

Globe 11-19

HEIFETZ AGAIN

Next Sunday afternon, in Symphony Hall, Jascha Heifetz will play the following program: Adv 11/19

Sonata in A major	Brahms
Prelude	J. S. Bach
Bourree	J. S. Bach
Menuette No. 1	J. S. Bach
Menuette No. 2	J. S. Bach
Gigue	J. S. Bach
Serenade Melancholique	Tchaikovsky
Valse Scherzo	Tchaikovsky-Auer
Meditation	Glazounov
Valse	Glazounov
Saltarella	Wieniawski
Nocturne in D major	Chopin-Wilhelmj
Perpetuum Mobile	Paganini

Advertiser 11-19

Incidents and Announcements Trans 11/20

For his concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Mr. Heifetz, the violinist, has set both an interesting and an exacting programme, viz.:

Sonata in A major for Violin and Piano	Brahms
Prelude, Bourrée, Minuets and Gigue from the Sixth Sonata for Violin Alone	Bach
Melancholy Serenade	Chaikovsky
Scherzo-Waltz	Chaikovsky-Auer
Meditation	Glazunov
Saltarello	Wieniawski
Nocturne in G major	Chopin-Wilhelmj
Perpetual Motion	Paganini

In both Budapest and Vienna, Mr. Kreisler handed the entire proceeds of four concerts to the proper authorities for the relief of the Hungarian and the Austrian poor. "I am acting like a modern robber-knight," he explained. "I am taking the money from the pockets of the profiteers and the speculators and giving it to the unfortunate. My methods, however, are gentler."

The Friends of Music are sparing no pains with their chorus, still in charge of Stephen Townsend. New and better voices have been gathered for it; while the number of rehearsals has been increased. In New York, as the season advances, it will be heard in music of Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Schubert and incidental moderns.

H. T. P.

Transcript 11-20

Heifetz's Second Sunday Recita

It is an age of violin stars, and the youngest of them all, Jascha Heifetz is by general admission the greatest.

Jascha Heifetz

George Bernard Shaw, for instance, begged Heifetz to make a slip some time just to prove that he was human; and the late James G. Huneker, who was inclined to ridicule Shaw's pretentions as a music critic, paid tribute to Heifetz as the real musical marvel of the times. In tone and technique both, he is without a peer.

Young Heifetz, who was in his 'teens when he first came to Boston five years ago, is one of the big figures in the current series of Suuday afternoon concerts at Symphony Hall. He will give his second Fall recital there next Sunday.

Advertiser 11-22

Second Heifetz Concert

A week from tomorrow, Sunday afternoon, November 26th, at 3:30, in Symphony Hall, Jascha Heifetz will give his second recital of the season in Boston. Post 11-19

Post 11-19

Mr. Heifetz Anew Trans 11-25

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon comes again Mr. Heifetz, the violinist restored to his mastery of technical means for tonal ends and steadily ripening in the expression of music and instrument through himself. He will test these newly balanced powers in such exacting music as Brahms's Sonata in A major and five divisions of Bach's Sixth Sonata for violin alone. The usual miscellany—this time from Chaikovsky, Glazzanov, Wieniowski and Pagannini rounds out the programme.

Transcript 11-25

HEIFETZ

Trav 11/25

At his second Boston concert of the season, which is to be his last this year in Symphony hall, and which will take place tomororw afternoon at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz is to present a program of unusual interest. The numbers follow: Sonata No. 2 in A major by Brahms, selections from sixth Sonata of Bach for violin alone, Serenade and Valse Scherzo by Tchaikovsky, Meditation and Valse by Glazounov, Saltarella by Wieniawsky, Nocturne in D major—Chopin-Wilhelmj, and Perpetuum Mobile of Paganini.

Traveler 11-25

HEIFETZ PLAYS TOMORROW

At his second concert of the season, which is to be his last this year in Symphony Hall, and which will take place tomorrow afternoon at 3:30, Jascha Heifetz is to present a program of unusual interest. The numbers follow: Sonata No. 2 in A major by Brahms, selections from Sixth Sonata of Bach for violin alone, Serenade and Valse Scherzo by Tchaikovsky, Meditation and Valse by Glazounov, Saltarella by Wieniawsky, Nocturne in D major, Chopin-Wilhelmj, and Perpetuum Mob le of Paganini. Amer 11-25

American 11-25

HEIFETZ PLAYS TODAY

Jascha Heifetz will give his second concert of the season, his last of the year, in Symphony Hall, this afternoon at 3:30. Her 11/26

Sonata in A major	Brahms
Prelude	Bach
Bourree	Bach
Menuette No. 1	Bach
Menuette No. 2	Bach
Gigue	Bach
(For violin alone from 6th sonata.)
Serenade Melancholique	Tchaikovsky
Valse Scherzo	Tchaikovsky-Auer
Meditation	Glazounov
Valse	Glazounov
Saltarella	Wieniawski
Nocturne in D major	Chopin-Wilhelmj
Perpetuum Mobile	Paganini

Herald 11-26

HEIFETZ PLAYS TODAY

Jascha Heifetz will give his second concert of the season, which is also his last of the year, in Symphony Hall this afternoon. His program follows: Adv 11/26

Sonata in A major	Brahms
Prelude	J. S. Bach
Bourree	J. S. Bach
Menuttee No. 1	J. S. Bach
Menuttee No. 2	J. S. Bach
Gigue	J. S. Bach
Serenade Melancholique	Tchaikovsky
Valse Scherzo	Tchaikovsky-Auer
Meditation	Glazounov
Valse	Glazounov
Saltarella	Wieniawski
Nocturne in D major	Chopin-Wilhelmj
Perpetuum Mobile	Paganini

BOSTON THEATRE

Advertiser 11-26

HEIFETZ PLAYS TODAY

Jascha Heifetz will give his second concert of the season, which is also his last of the year in Symphony Hall, this afternoon at 3:30. Post 11-26

The great Russian violinist will play music by Brahms, J. S. Bach, Tchaikovsky, Tchaikovsky-Auer, Glazounov, Wieniawski, Chopin-Wilhelmj and Paganini

Post 11-26

HEIFETZ ENTERTAINS AT SYMPHONY HALL

Jascha Heifetz gave a violin recital at Symphony Hall yesterday for the second time within a month. The audience was smaller than usual, with scores of seats vacant downstairs. Perhaps the public has been surfeited with violin music; or maybe many of the regular concert-goers were recovering from the Harvard-Yale game. But Heifetz played superbly, with the most brilliant and flawless tone of which a violinist can boast. Adv 11-27

[107] Advertiser 11-27

HEIFETZ RECITAL

Jascha Heifetz, violinist, gave his second recital of the season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. His programme was of exceptional interest and long as it was, the violinist was kept over half an hour after playing encores. Mr. Heifetz played with Samuel Crotzinoff Brahms' A major sonata, the 6th sonata for violin alone of J. S. Bach, and smaller pieces by Tschaikowsky, Glazounov, Wieniawski; Chopin-Wilhelmj, Paganini. A diabolically accurate technic on the part of Mr. Heifetz, which caused Bernard Shaw to write him in England and remind him that the gods are not always kind to perfect people, and please make a few mistakes for the sake of self-preservation, is only one of the violinist's qualifications.

He unites with it a very high intelligence and also taste, which is not necessary synonymous with technique or intelligence either. Then there is his superb poise and sense of proportion and the classic beauty of his style. Few, indeed, would have made Bach and Brahms so clear and at the same time full of sentiment. In the smaller pieces there was ample opportunity for the piquant effects which please an audience. The hall was packed.

Post 11-27

HEIFETZ DELIGHTS BOSTON AUDIENCE

Glob 11-27

Program of Wide Range Is Wonderfully Played

Rulon Robinson Sings With the People's Symphony Orchestra

Jascha Heifetz, violinist extraordinary, for the first time since he has been coming to Boston, now nearly five years, yesterday afternoon played in Symphony Hall to an audience that did not fill all of the seats and overflow on the stage. Why this was so is not easy to explain; it happens about once in so often in the careers of nearly all artists, however great and constant their following.

To Mr Heifetz this made no difference; he played as wonderfully well as he always has, giving all that he had to give, and his audience never failed him in appreciation. His program range was wide, its ballance excellent He is less and less the boy—though still in his very early 20s—as his concert experience grows, and he yesterday brought a dignity and simplicity to his playing that added measurably to its enjoyment.

Opening his recital with Brahm's sonata in A major, he passed on to a Bach group of prelude, bouree, two minuets and gigue, each a gem of composition and all played as every student of Bach aspires to play them. In these sixth sonata selections Mr Heifetz was unaccompanied.

Tschaikovsky's Melancholique Serenade, perfectly given; the same author's Valse Scherzo, arranged by Auer, in which the violinist was at his showiest for the afternoon; Glazounov's beautiful and popular Meditation, next a waltz by the same composer, and finally a delightful, sprightly Saltarella by Wieniawski, constituted the third part of the program.

Completing the program were the Chopin Nocturne in D major and Paganini's bizarre Perfetuum Mobile; but the violinist's task was still far from complete, for the balconies swarmed down into the unoccupied floor seats and insisted that he continue. This he cheerfully did, conspicuous among his added selections being two berceuses, one by Faure, and Sarasate's Zapaetedo.

Samuel Chotzinoff was Mr Heifetz' accompanist at the piano.

Globe 11-27

HEIFETZ GIVES VIOLIN RECITA

Playing of Sonatas b Brahms and Bach Gives Delight to Audience

SHOWS ORIGINALITY IN HIS PROGRAM

Her 11-27

Yesterday afternoon in Symphon ll Pascha Heifetz, with the help of amuel Chotzinoff, pianist, gave a vio n recital, playing this program: Sonata in A major (for violin an iano), Brahms; 5 movements from 6th onata for violin alone, Bach; Serenade Melancholique, Tchaikowsky; Valse Scherzo, Tchaikowsky-Auer; Meditaion, Valse, Clazounov; Saltarella, Wienawski; Nocturne in D major, Chopin-Wilhelmj; Perpetuum Mobile, Paganini.

All thanks are due Mr. Heifetz for arranging a program unlike that of the typical violin recital. Instead of the inescapable concerto—with an unfortunate accompanist struggling to furnish a background for which the composer demanded a large orchestra, and, needs be, making but a sorry job of it—Mr. Heifetz, since he had a pianist and not an orchestra at his disposal, showed the good taste to play a sonata for piano and violin. For his Bach number, too he treated his audience with consideration, for if the unaccompanied sonata he chose, the stirring prelude excepted, proves dull hearing to many persons who are neither violinists nor admirers of every page Bach wrote, at least it is not the sadly over-worked chaconne.

As well as good taste and kindliness, it would seem as though Mr. Heifetz likewise showed good judgment, for, though at present such a consideration may appear beside the mark, nevertheless the time may come when ever Mr. Heifetz will be glad to extend his public. The usual violin recital program today must appeal largely to persons who are partial to hearing an artist play the violin, regardless of what he plays if only there are enough pretty and brilliant pieces at the end. This sort of public sometimes proves fickle.

There is a different kind of public, however, with a fondness for the smaller forms of chamber music, sonatas for piano and violin, and the like, which come seldom to public performances. Though purists may argue that their place is not in Symphony hall, one may counter with the opinion, better in Symphony hall than not at all. At all events Mr. Heifetz could lose nothing by letting it become known that at his concerts there is to be heard something different, something genuinely worth while, like the admirable performance he and Mr. Chotzinoff gave yesterday of the exquisite Brahms sonata; the beauty of it is not soon to be forgotten. He has, to repeat, nothing to lose, for those people to whom the sound of the violin is comparably only to the music of the spheres, would not stay away, whatever Mr. Heifetz might play early in a concert, and he might well lure to Symphony hall persons who now are disposed to stay at home. The audience yesterday, by the way, had every air of enjoying the sonata, and the splendid Bach prelude they vigorously applauded. The tribute to Mr. Heifetz's art is the greater when one remembers that this same audience had shown itself restive being kept waiting 19 minutes for the concert to begin.

R. R. G.

Herald 11-27

98

ECITAL SHOWS EIFETZ IN FINE FORM

Am 11-27

For the second time within the few weeks, Jascha Heifetz gave recital in Symphony Hall before a ge and very enthusiastic audi-

The program, which opened with e Brahms Sonata in A major, pro-eded to a group that was of un-sual interest. It consisted of sev-ral bits, including the famous "Prel-ude" from the sixth Sonata by J. S. Bach. This group was played by Mr. Heifetz without accompaniment and gave his hearers much pleasure r, after all, there is more joy i autiful violin playing if unaccom-nied.

The remainder of the afternoon as given over to a miscellaneou collection which ranged from Paga-nini to Glazounov. There wa ore depth of feeling in the "Ser-nade Melancolique" by Tchaikow ky than anything else that the ar ist undertook. Probably the mos delightful of this group was th altarella' by Wieniawski. Th atter fairly sparkled, reminding on f sunlight on snow.

As usual, Mr. Samuel Chotzinof accompanied Mr. Heifetz. The ac companiments were just the sam sort that Mr. Chotzinoff alway ives—as nearly perfect as it is pos ible to play accompaniments an hat is saying a great deal mor an can be said for most of th ople who are doing it these days All in all the concert was very ccessful. Mr. Heifetz was in plendid mood and fine fettle.

[illegible] Christmas Basket Fund

American 11-27

Boy Phenomenon Will Sing Her

ROBERT MURRAY

Robert Murray, the Tacoma, Wash., lad whose voice reaches two full octaves higher than that of Galli-Curci, and higher than the pianoforte keyboard itself, will make his Boston debut at Symphony hall Sunday evening, Nov. 26, at a concert in aid of the funds of the Roosevelt Newsboys' Association, composed of Boston newsies.

Young Murray will sing an extensive repertoire, including the bell song from "Lakme," and a series of bird songs in which his remarkable voice will have full opportunity to display its flexibility and marvelous range, declared by scientists and musical experts alike to be unique in history.

Traveler 11-18

BOY SOPRANO GIVES RECITAL

Post 11-27

Carmela Ippolita, Violinist, Assisting Artist

Boston heard Robert Murray, the boy soprano, for the first time last night at a joint concert at Symphony Hall given under the auspices of the Roosevelt Newsboys' Association. Playing on the programme with him was Carmela Ippolita, a violinist who recently played with the Symphony orchestra in Cambridge.

Songs were selected on the boy soprano's programme to demonstrate his high register which has been especially developed. His opening number was Mozart's "Queen of Night from Magic Flute." Here the bird like quality of his voice was demonstrated.

In the "Villanelle" from Dell 'Acqua and the Polonaise from Mignon, he had an opportunity to exhibit his natural voice as well as high range. Here, the sweet quality of a boy's voice was heard.

In the "Lakme Bell Song" by Delibes, and Strauss's "Voci Di Primervera," he displayed these notes which rang out like bells, rather than like sounds coming from the human voice.

Miss Ippolita's programme was well received, consisting of selections from Saint-Saens, B minor Concerto, "At Dawning" by Cadman, "Ave Maria" by Gounod, "Air" by Jean Hure, "Conzonetta" by D'Ambrozio, and "Allegro" by Sammartini. Emil Polak was the accompanist for the boy, and Jesus Sanroma was the pianist for Miss Ippolita.

Post 11-27

PHENOMENAL BOY SOPRANO AT SYMPHONY

Amer 11-27

There appeared at Symphony Hall under the auspices of the Roosevelt Newsboys' Association, Robert Murray, "phenomenal boy soprano" and Carmela Ippolito, violinist.

Miss Ippolito has been heard in and around Boston enough not to require more than passing comment. She is a violinist whose playing is interesting because it shows plenty of good hard work in the past and all the ear-marks of a musician who is sincere and honest. One rather imagines that she will be heard more of later. Her tone is broad and good and her technic built on a solid foundation.

As for Robert Murray—his voice is phenomenal, there is no doubt about that. The range in itself is remarkable and his tones are fearfully and wonderfully high. As to quality of tone, that is a matter of difference of opinion.

One can only wonder on hearing a concert like this, why a boy of his early years is given the same things to sing before the public that such artists as Tetrazzini sang in their prime. It is putting far too much on the boy to expect him to sing with any degree of success such songs as the florid aria from "Mignon," and the "Bell Song," from "Lakme." Capability does not meet the demand in such cases.

Emil Polak played for Robert Murray, and Jesus M. Sanroma for Miss Ippolito.

American 11-27

RECITAL SHOWS HEIFETZ IN FINE FORM

Am 11/27

For the second time within the last few weeks, Jascha Heifetz gave a recital in Symphony Hall before a large and very enthusiastic audience.

The program, which opened with the Brahms Sonata in A major, proceeded to a group that was of unusual interest. It consisted of several bits, including the famous "Prelude" from the sixth Sonata by J. S. Bach. This group was played by Mr. Heifetz without accompaniment and gave his hearers much pleasure for, after all, there is more joy i beautiful violin playing if unaccompanied.

The remainder of the afternoon was given over to a miscellaneous collection which ranged from Paganini to Glazounov. There wa more depth of feeling in the "Serenade Melancolique" by Tchaikowsky than anything else that the artist undertook. Probably the mos delightful of this group was th "Saltarella" by Wieniawski. Thi latter fairly sparkled, reminding on of sunlight on snow.

As usual, Mr. Samuel Chotzinof accompanied Mr. Heifetz. The accompaniments were just the sam sort that Mr. Chotzinoff alway gives—as nearly perfect as it is possible to play accompaniments an that is saying a great deal mor than can be said for most of th people who are doing it these days

All in all the concert was very successful. Mr. Heifetz was i splendid mood and fine fettle.

Give Now to Christmas Basket Fund

American 11-27

Boy Phenomenon Will Sing Here

Trav

ROBERT MURRAY

Robert Murray, the Tacoma, Wash., lad whose voice reaches two full octaves higher than that of Galli-Curci, and higher than the pianoforte keyboard itself, will make his Boston debut at Symphony hall Sunday evening, Nov. 26, at a concert in aid of the funds of the Roosevelt Newsboys' Association, composed of Boston newsies.

Young Murray will sing an extensive repertoire, including the bell song from "Lakme," and a series of bird songs in which his remarkable voice will have full opportunity to display its flexibility and marvelous range, declared by scientists and musical experts alike to be unique in history.

Traveler 11-18

BOY SOPRANO GIVES RECITAL

Post 11-27

Carmela Ippolita, Violinist, Assisting Artist

Boston heard Robert Murray, the boy soprano, for the first time last night at a joint concert at Symphony Hall given under the auspices of the Roosevelt Newsboys' Association. Playing on the programme with him was Carmela Ippolita, a violinist who recently played with the Symphony orchestra in Cambridge.

Songs were selected on the boy soprano's programme to demonstrate his high register which has been especially developed. His opening number was Mozart's "Queen of Night from Magic Flute." Here the bird like quality of his voice was demonstrated.

In the "Villanelle" from Dell 'Acqua and the Polonaise from Mignon, he had an opportunity to exhibit his natural voice as well as high range. Here, the sweet quality of a boy's voice was heard.

In the "Lakme Bell Song" by Delibes, and Strauss's "Voci Di Primervera," he displayed these notes which rang out like bells, rather than like sounds coming from the human voice.

Miss Ippolita's programme was well received, consisting of selections from Saint-Saens, B minor Concerto, "At Dawning" by Cadman, "Ave Maria" by Gounod, "Air" by Jean Hure, "Conzonetta" by D'Ambrozio, and "Allegro" by Sammartini. Emil Polak was the accompanist for the boy, and Jesus Sanroma was the pianist for Miss Ippolita.

Post 11-27

PHENOMENAL BOY SOPRANO AT SYMPHONY

There appeared at Symphony Hall under the auspices of the Roosevelt Newsboys' Association, Robert Murray, "phenomenal boy soprano" and Carmela Ippolito, violinist.

11-27

Miss Ippolito has been heard in and around Boston enough not to require more than passing comment. She is a violinist whose playing is interesting because it shows plenty of good hard work in the past and all the ear-marks of a musician who is sincere and honest. One rather imagines that she will be heard more of later. Her tone is broad and good and her technic built on a solid foundation.

As for Robert Murray—his voice is phenomenal, there is no doubt about that. The range in itself is remarkable and his tones are fearfully and wonderfully high. As to quality of tone, that is a matter of difference of opinion.

One can only wonder on hearing a concert like this, why a boy of his early years is given the same things to sing before the public that such artists as Tetrazzini sang in their prime. It is putting far too much on the boy to expect him to sing with any degree of success such songs as the florid aria from "Mignon," and the "Bell Song," from "Lakme." Capability does not meet the demand in such cases.

Emil Polak played for Robert Murray, and Jesus M. Sanroma for Miss Ippolito.

American 11-27

Newman

NEWMAN TRAVELTALKS

E. M. Newman's "Across Africa," Cape-to-Cario series of Traveltalks, will be presented on the five Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons, beginning Nov. 17 and 18 at Symphony Hall. The subject titles are: "Capetown to Johannesburg," "Victoria Falls," "Congo to Victoria Nyanza," "Kartoum," "Sudan to Cairo."

Trav 11-28

Traveler Oct 28

NEWMAN IN AFRICA

E. M. Newman's "Across Africa" Cape-to-Cairo series of Traveltalks will be presented on the five Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons beginning November 17 and 18, at Symphony Hall. The subject titles are "Capetown to Johannesburg," "Victory Falls," "Congo to Victoria Nyanza" "Kartoum" and "Sudan to Cairo."

Amer 10-28

American Oct 28

Newman Coming to Describe Africa

Adv O 29

E. H. NEWMAN'S course of travel talks this season is the crowning achievement of his carrer, This "Across Africa," Cape-to-Cairo series runs through all of important Africa, including the entire south country, Cape Town, the Rand, Kimberly, Johannesburg, Madagascar, Mauritius, Belgian Congo, Bulawayo, Victoria Falls and across Lake Tanganyika to Ujiji, where Stanley found Livingstone, then to Tabora and Victoria Nyanza and down the Nile to Cairo.

The season at Symphony Hall consist of five consecutive Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons, beginning November 17 and 18, and the travel talks will be presented in the following order: "Cape Town to Johannesburg," "Victoria Falls." "Congo to Victoria Nyanza," "Kartoum," "Sudan to Cairo."

In a group of sensational motion and still colored pictures Newman reveals Africa with a realism startling even to experienced travelers themselves. The wild animal motion pictures are said to be remarkable, and so are the intimate studies of tribal life.

Advertiser 10-29

NEWMAN SERIES DRAWING CROWDS

Adv 11/5

E. M. Newman, noted traveler is experiencing difficulty this season with the capacity of the theatres and halls where his "Traveltalks" are billed. There are not enough seats to accommodate all who wish to see the sensational wild animal motion pictures in the Cape-to-Cape series. In Milwuakee, Cleveland and Chicago, where Newman is now entertaining his many fellow travelers, new high records have been established.

The popular travel lecturer will begin his new series at Symphony Hall on Friday, November 17, and Saturday afternoon, November 18.

Advertiser 11-5

NEWMAN—VICTORIA FALLS

Amer 11/18

E. M. Newman, popular travel talker will present "Victoria Falls" at Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon.

The territory covered in this section of the Across Africa-Cape-to-Cairo journey includes east and west country lying between the Transvaal and Victoria Falls, as well as north and south, including the islands of Madagascar and Mauritius.

The motion pictures of the interior of Madagascar are the first ever taken. In motion pictures and color views, Newman's fellow travelers will visit Durban, Victoria Falls, Mafeking, Bulawayo Motopos Hills, the Khami ruins, Zimbabwe, the site chosen by Rider Haggard for "She," "King Solomon's Mines."

American 11-18

NEWMAN TRAVELTALK

11/18

Newman, the traveltalk man began his new "Cape to Cairo" series at Symphony Hall last night, taking his audience from Cape Town up through the South African El Dorodo and then part way into the jungle. Some of his wild animal pictures excel even those taken by Rainey and Eustace.

Advertiser 11-18

STAGE

Her 11-12

Herald 11-12

NEWMAN TRAVEL TALK

E. M. Newman, master traveler, is coming to Symphony Hall with the "Across Africa" Cape-to-Cairo series of Traveltalks. The series consists of five consecutive Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons, beginning Nov. 17 and 18. "Capetown to Johannesburg" is the first section of the 7000-mile journey. In this, as well as in the four following Traveltalks, a group of sensational wild animal motion pictures will be shown. This group ends with a thrilling hunt and a fight for life in an encounter with a lion. The series of color views and motion pictures include glimpses of Capetown, Groote Schuur, Port Elizabeth, village life, Kimberly, Johannesburg, the Rand, Pretoria, the Premier mine and other points of interest.

Herald 11-12

Herald 11-12

NEWMAN TRAVELS

E. M. Newman, noted traveler, continues his "Across Africa" Cape-to-Cairo journey at Symphony hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. "Victoria Falls" is the territory to be covered and en route the African jungle will be visited and a complete word and picture story of the wild life will be told.

Trav 11-18

Traveler 11-18

NEWMAN IN AFRICA

Adv 11/18

E. M. Newman will continue his "Across Africa" Cape-to-Cairo journey at Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. "Victoria Falls" is the territory to be covered and en route the African jungle will be visited. The motion pictures of the interior of Madagascar are the first ever taken. Studies of savage life will also be shown.

Advertiser 11-19

NEWMAN TELLS OF VICTORIA FALLS

E. M. Newman, traveler and lecturer, entertained a large audience in Symphony hall last night with the second of his series of travel talks on mid-Africa. His subject was "Victoria Falls." The beautiful falls, which he described as twice as high and as wide as Niagara Falls, were shown in motion and still pictures taken from an airplane and from the banks. One of the most interesting parts of the lecture was the pictures of animals snapped in the African wilds.

Trav 11-25

Traveler 11-25

~~NEWMAN~~ IN CONGO

E. M. Newman's "Congo to Victoria Nyanza" Traveltalk will be given at Symphony hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. This is the third section of the "Across Africa"—Cape-to-Cairo journey. In a marvelous collection of motion pictures, the bird and wild animal life in the African jungles will be revealed. The motion pictures and color views include glimpses of Sakania, Elizabethville, the copper mines of Katanga, Panda and its mining plant, Congo village life, trip along the Congo river, Albertville, the pygmies, Lake Tanganyika, Ujiji. One of the many fascinating features is a 200 mile caravan journey.

Her 11-26

Herald 11-26

NEWMAN TALKS OF MID-AFRICA

Describes Victoria Falls and Also Tells of Trip in Madagascar

Herald 11/18

MANY VIEWS OF MIGHTY CATARACT

By PHILIP HALE

Mr. Newman's Travel Talk last night in Symphony Hall was entitled "Victoria Falls," but there were many other interesting subjects vividly illustrated by motion and still pictures. There was a very large audience.

The views of Durban inspired one with the wish to visit it, for its trees, flowers, sea bathing; not especially for its taxis drawn by Zulus with their fantastic head-dresses. Mauritius, too, would be worth while, for its scenery and its people, but Madagascar? No.

Mr. Newman, greatly daring, did not hesitate to go into the interior, to cross the island, fearing neither malaria nor the savages. Was there not a book about Madagascar, written by a missionary, one Ellis, years ago, that boys fought for in the Sunday school library of our little village? Mr. Newman had much to say about the Zulus, splendidly set-up men, pictured by him in many ways, with their beehive huts, their dances. with the chief evidently under the blighting influence of beer.

Then came pictures of the haunts of Cecil Rhodes, his burial place and that of Jameson's. Mr. Newman put it mildly when he spoke of this raid as ill-advised, though Jameson's companion, Mr. John Hays Hammond, has written an entertaining defence of it. The ancient and wonderful ruins of Khami were shown, the setting for Rider Haggard's early novel. Who were the people that took their gods to this remote spot and built huge walls of stone without mortar? No doubt forgotten history is more fascinating than history that is remembered.

There were many views of that mighty cataract, Victoria Falls, called by the natives "The Smoke that Sounds." What were Livingstone's thoughts when he first saw this cataract, the first white man to gaze upon this marvel? He was not given to gush in his writings. Now there is a large hotel near the falls, and one expected to see in the pictures Englishmen in correct costume playing tennis or at tea-tables in the open. Mr. Newman gave the audience advice as to the best time to see the falls and other information as one would speak of a trip to Niagara or Watkins Glen.

The pictures of wild animals unconscious of the proximity of man, not being hunted but living their natural life, excited frequent applause, and justly: members of the antelope family, herds of elephants, crocodiles that took one back in imagination to the time when the earth was populated only by huge and fearsome crawling, swimming and flying creatures, hippopotami on land and in the water. In boyish days we were pleased with the Koodoo, as described in "Wood's Natural History for the Young." Did it escape Mr. Newman's camera? Or does it now bear another name? Or is it extinct?

This intensely interesting Travel Talk will be repeated this afternoon. Next week the subject will be "Congo to Victoria Nyanza."

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Herald 11-25

NEWMAN IN KHARTOUM

Khartoum is the subject of the third lecture in the series of Newman Travel Talks, "Cape to Cairo," in Symphony hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. The expedition penetrates Zanzibar, and leads to what was formerly British East Africa. Remarkable types of natives, shown in motion pictures, are a feature of this lecture. Rare animals have been caught by the quick camera, including the spring bok, specimens of the gazelle and antelope, the hyena, the water buck, and kuda, and the leopard. The lecture ends with a journey down the Nile towards Cairo.

Her 12/2

Herald Dec 3

NEWMAN IN KHARTOUM

Khartoum is the subject of the third lecture in the series of Newman Travel Talks "Cape to Cairo," which will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. The expedition penetrates Zanzibar and leads to what was formerly British East Africa. Some remarkable specimens of rare animals are caught by the ready camera. The lecture ends with a journey down the Nile towards Cairo.

Amer 12-2

American Dec 2

NEWMAN TELLS OF CONGO RIVER

Her 12/2

Takes Symphony Hall Audience on Pictorial Trip to Victoria Nyanza

THIRD TRAVEL TALK WELL ILLUSTRATED

By PHILIP HALE

The subject of Mr. Newman's third Travel Talk, delivered before a very large audience in Symphony Hall last night, was "Congo to Victoria Nyanza." The word "Congo" is associated in the minds of many with the meeting of Livingstone and Stanley, also with the "Belgian atrocities." Mr. Newman, who made a close investigation into the truth of the reported cruelties committed by rubber men in the reign of Leopold II, believes the stories to be unfounded. Yet the commission of inquiry (1904) confirmed the rumors of the torturing and generally barbarous treatment of the natives.

Few of us have any idea of the enormous natural wealth of the Congo in diamonds, gold, silver, copper, and even radium. Discovery of radium has already, the lecturer said, lowered the price considerably. The changes in the Congo region within the last 20 years are marvellous. The wilderness may not actually blossom as the rose, but the evidences of what the world is pleased to call civilization are many, as is shown in Elizabethville, other towns, missionary stations. Contrasted pictorially with these were the huts of the Congo natives, a race far inferior to the Zulus in stature, strength and intelligence, a race almost as close to the brute as that of the Pygmies. Herodotus, because he spoke of Pygmies in Africa, was for a long time called "the father of lies," and his statements were derided. A mighty traveler in his day, he is now recognized as a keen observer. Many of his stories, once thought incredible, have been corroborated by modern explorers.

The views on and along the Congo river and the scenes in the jungle were most interesting. Not enticing to trippers, perhaps, though in the higher regions the temperature and the prevailing natural conditions are favorable to health and comfort. In the jungle the air is malarial and there are insects that bring on blindness and the sleeping sickness. Nor would one care to mingle with the Pygmies or with a still lower race fond of disfigurement with mutilated lips for the sake of hideous ornamentation.

Interesting, too, were the views of and around Lake Tanganyika, taken in the course of Mr. Newman's journey by caravan for 200 miles. Again there were unusual pictures of wild animals in the open, hartebeeste, gnus, zebras; Paul du Chaillu's old friend, the gorilla; a singularly cleanly chimpanzee, but chained, taking a bath that would shame the hurried ablutions of many men; the ferocious buffalo, and the quick-eared rhinoceros of imperfect sight. Birds of fine plumage were shown. All in all, another instructive and entertaining travel talk.

"Congo to Victoria Nyanza" will be delivered again this afternoon. The subject next week will be "Khartum."

There will be extra Travel Talks on Friday evening, Dec. 22, and Saturday afternoon, Dec. 23, when there will be a complete showing of remarkable close range views of wild animal and savage life.

Herald Dec 2

NEWMAN IN KHARTOUM

Khartoum is the subject of the third lecture in the series of Newman travel talks, "Cape to Cairo," which will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. The party penetrates into the interior of Africa, showing many rare animals. The lecture ends with a journey down the Nile towards Cairo.

Adv 11/3

Advertiser Dec 3

THE NEWMAN LECTURE

The third of the lectures by E. M. Newman on his recent African tour, was given in Symphony Hall last evening, the special topic being "Congo to Victoria." This discourse proved highly interesting, starting with the Congo district and showing the peculiar customs of the inhabitants and following the territory explored by Stanley. Mr. Newman encountered a number of pygmy tribes in the interior, rope bridges, tattooed natives and a wildness that seemed absolutely removed from civilization.

The second part was devoted to a visit to Ujiji where Stanley found Livingston and a long tramp through the jungle. Mr. Newman procured a number of views of bird and animal life, a wonderful study in natural history. Some of the pictures were highly amusing, notably the bath taken by a chimpanzee and others dangerous, especially the charge of an enraged bull rhinoceros and the destruction of the camera. Mr. Newman's descriptions were exceedingly realistic and the lecture was one of the best of the series. It will be repeated this afternoon.

Post Dec 2

"KHARTUM" IS NEWMAN TOPIC

Her 12/9

Lecturer Takes Audience from Victoria Nyanza to Zanzibar

INTERESTING TALK AND ILLUSTRATIONS

The subject of Mr. Newman's illustrated Travel Talk in Symphony Hall last night was "Khartum." The talk was about the journey from the shores of Victoria Nyanza to Zanzibar, where the cloves come from, through the Kenya territory, the caravan along the Roosevelt Trail; about several native tribes, some nude, some clothed—but the missionaries say that the nude folk are the more moral—then the upper stretches of the Nile. The talk and the pictures, motion and still, were, as before, most interesting.

And at last we saw the Koodoo, the species of antelope that, in a child's book of natural history, fascinated us in our little village. The Syllabus of the spelled the name "Kudu," but we prefer the old spelling, just as "boule-dogge" is preferable to "bulldog," for one sees more clearly the jaws, teeth and determined expression when "dog" is "dogge."

Zanzibar, in spite of the heat, the poor hotels and the mosquitos, should be visited. The views shown were enchanting. The streets and houses are of "the Thousand Nights and a Night" variety, and it was surprising not to see a jinnee or at least an afreet ready to play a trick on some keeper of a bazaar. The natives on the mainland from the Kikuyus to the Masai are given to hideous ornamentation; some greased with castor oil; many women with jewelry weighing 30 pounds, with pierced ears distended by huge earrings, ranging from spools to tin cans. The dances that now seem grotesque may be in fashion here next season. They were not more grotesque than some now seen in local ballrooms, and the faces of the dancers showed pleasure, which is more than can be said of our gilded youths and flappers of high and low degree.

Mr. Newman had a good deal to say about Theodore Roosevelt, for he was with him in Africa. When asked if he was a good shot, the colonel replied that he shot often. He was not a wanton destroyer of game. Killing only one of a kind as a specimen, except in the case of lions, which are considered to be a species of vermin. The life and manners of the savages were described and fully illustrated.

Again there were pictures of wild animals in the open, among them hyenas, the first pictures of them taken out of captivity, and a leopard eating an antelope. Mr. Newman spoke bitterly about the leopard's character, the meanest creature of the cat family. Not even his inability to change his spots found favor in Mr. Newman's eyes.

In the course of his remarks, he asked any South Africans, presumably whites, who might be in the audience, to send their names to him so that he could forward them to some one who wished to organize here a South African club.

The Travel Talk will be repeated this afternoon. The subject of the one next week—the last in the regular series we regret to say—is "Sudan to Cairo." There will be extra showings of wild animals and savage life on Friday evening, Dec. 22, and Saturday afternoon, Dec. 23.

P. H.

Herald Dec 9

NEWMAN'S TRAVEL TALK TELLS OF AFRICAN LIFE

Mr Newman's travel talk last night in Symphony Hall dealt with the country about Victoria Nyanza and down the Nile toward Khartum. Most of the pictures given were of the natives and their ways of life, rather than of the scenery. This country included that traversed by Roosevelt in his famous hunting expedition.

There was a glimpse of Zanzibar, that once Arab kingdom, where the Sultan now has little more than the empty honor of the title, and complains that he is so poor and wives cost so much that he can afford only one.

At none of the previous lectures in this course has there been given so complete a series of pictures of savage life as this. The tribes shown included the peaceful Kikuyus, the warlike Masai, the Kavirondo, the Baganda and others.

The moving pictures of animals, a great attraction in many of these travel talks, gave views, taken at the water holes, of antelopes of many kinds—springbok, impala, tiny gazelle and sable antelope among others. A triumph of the photographer was a moving picture of the hyena, said to be the first ever taken of this extremely nervous animal, which seldom shows himself by day.

This lecture will be repeated this afternoon. Next week Mr Newman will complete his journey by keeping on down the Nile to Cairo.

Globe Dec 9

Continued on 9th page following

Newman

NEWMAN TRAVELTALKS

E. M. Newman's "Across Africa," Cape-to-Cario series of Traveltalks, will be presented on the five Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons, beginning Nov. 17 and 18 at Symphony Hall. The subject titles are: "Capetown to Johannesburg," "Victoria Falls," "Congo to Victoria Nyanza," "Kartoum," "Sudan to Cairo." Trav 11-28

Traveler Oct 28

NEWMAN IN AFRICA

E. M. Newman's "Across Africa" Cape-to-Cairo series of Traveltalks will be presented on the five Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons beginning November 17 and 18, at Symphony Hall. The subject titles are "Capetown to Johannesburg," "Victory Falls," "Congo to Victoria Nyanza" "Kartoum" and "Sudan to Cairo." Amer 11-28

American Oct 28

Newman Coming to Describe Africa

Adv 0.129

E. H. NEWMAN'S course of travel talks this season is the crowning achievement of his carrer. This "Across Africa," Cape-to-Cairo series runs through all of important Africa, including the entire south country, Cape Town, the Rand, Kimberly, Johannesburg, Madagascar, Mauritius, Belgian Congo, Bulawayo, Victoria Falls and across Lake Tanganyika to Ujiji, where Stanley found Livingstone, then to Tabora and Victoria Nyanza and down the Nile to Cairo.

The season at Symphony Hall consist of five consecutive Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons, beginning November 17 and 18, and the travel talks will be presented in the following order: "Cape Town to Johannesburg," "Victoria Falls," "Congo to Victoria Nyanza," "Kartoum," "Sudan to Cairo."

In a group of sensational motion and still colored pictures Newman reveals Africa with a realism startling even to experienced travelers themselves. The wild animal motion pictures are said to be remarkable, and so are the intimate studies of tribal life.

Advertiser 10-29

NEWMAN SERIES DRAWING CROWDS

Adv 11/1

E. M. Newman, noted traveler is experiencing difficulty this season with the capacity of the theatres and halls where his "Traveltalks" are billed. There are not enough seats to accommodate all who wish to see the sensational wild animal motion pictures in the Cape-to-Cape series. In Milwuakee, Cleveland and Chicago, where Newman is now entertaining his many fellow travelers, new high records have been established.

The popular travel lecturer will begin his new series at Symphony Hall on Friday, November 17, and Saturday afternoon, November 18.

Advertiser 11-5

NEWMAN—VICTORIA FALLS

Amer 11/18

E. M. Newman, popular travel talker will present "Victoria Falls" at Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon.

The territory covered in this section of the Across Africa-Cape-to-Cairo journey includes east and west country lying between the Transvaal and Victoria Falls, as well as north and south, including the islands of Madagascar and Mauritius.

The motion pictures of the interior of Madagascar are the first ever taken. In motion pictures and color views, Newman's fellow travelers will visit Durban, Victoria Falls, Mafeking, Bulawayo Motopos Hills, the Khami ruins, Zimbabwe, the site chosen by Rider Haggard for "She," "King Solomon's Mines."

American 11-18

NEWMAN TRAVELTALK

Newman, the traveltalk man began his new "Cape to Cairo" series at Symphony Hall last night, taking his audience from Cape Town up through the South African El Dorodo and then part way into the jungle. Some of his wild animal pictures excel even those taken by Rainey and Eustace.

AMUSEMENTS

Advertiser 11-18

STAGE

Her 11-12

Herald 11-12

NEWMAN TRAVEL TALK

E. M. Newman, master traveler, is coming to Symphony Hall with the "Across Africa" Cape-to-Cairo series of Traveltalks. The series consists of five consecutive Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons, beginning Nov. 17 and 18. "Capetown to Johannesburg" is the first section of the 7000-mile journey. In this, as well as in the four following Traveltalks, a group of sensational wild animal motion pictures will be shown. This group ends with a thrilling hunt and a fight for life in an encounter with a lion. The series of color views and motion pictures include glimpses of Capetown, Groote Schuur, Port Elizabeth, village life, Kimberly, Johannesburg, the Rand, Pretoria, the Premier mine and other points of interest.

Herald 11-12

Herald 11-12

NEWMAN TRAVELS

E. M. Newman, noted traveler, continues his "Across Africa" Cape-to-Cairo journey at Symphony hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. "Victoria Falls" is the territory to be covered and en route the African jungle will be visited and a complete word and picture story of the wild life will be told. Trav 11-18

Traveler 11-18

NEWMAN IN AFRICA

Adv 11/19

E. M. Newman will continue his "Across Africa" Cape-to-Cairo journey at Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. "Victoria Falls" is the territory to be covered and en route the African jungle will be visited. The motion pictures of the interior of Madagascar are the first ever taken. Studies of savage life will also be shown.

Advertiser 11-19

NEWMAN TELLS OF VICTORIA FALLS

E. M. Newman, traveler and lecturer, entertained a large audience in Symphony hall last night with the second of his series of travel talks on mid-Africa. His subject was "Victoria Falls." The beautiful falls, which he described as twice as high and as wide as Niagara Falls, were shown in motion and still pictures taken from an airplane and from the banks. One of the most interesting parts of the lecture was the pictures of animals snapped in the African wilds. Trav 11-25

Traveler 11-25

NEWMAN IN CONGO

E. M. Newman's "Congo to Victoria Nyanza" Traveltalk will be given at Symphony hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. This is the third section of the "Across Africa"—Cape-to-Cairo journey. In a marvelous collection of motion pictures, the bird and wild animal life in the African jungles will be revealed. The motion pictures and color views include glimpses of Sakania, Elizabethville, the copper mines of Katanga, Panda and its mining plant, Congo village life, trip along the Congo river, Albertville, the pygmies, Lake Tanganyika, Ujiji. One of the many fascinating features is a 200-mile caravan journey. Her 11

Herald 11-26

NEWMAN TALKS OF MID-AFRICA

Describes Victoria Falls and Also Tells of Trip in Madagascar

Herald 11/25

MANY VIEWS OF MIGHTY CATARACT

By PHILIP HALE

Mr. Newman's Travel Talk last night in Symphony Hall was entitled "Victoria Falls," but there were many other interesting subjects vividly illustrated by motion and still pictures. There was a very large audience.

The views of Durban inspired one with the wish to visit it, for its trees, flowers, sea bathing; not especially for its taxis drawn by Zulus with their fantastic head-dresses. Mauritius, too, would be worth while, for its scenery and its people, but Madagascar? No.

Mr. Newman, greatly daring, did not hesitate to go into the interior, to cross the island, fearing neither malaria nor the savages. Was there not a book about Madagascar, written by a missionary, one Ellis, years ago, that boys fought for in the Sunday school library of our little village? Mr. Newman had much to say about the Zulus, splendidly set-up men, pictured by him in many ways, with their beehive huts, their dances. with the chief evidently under the blighting influence of beer.

Then came pictures of the haunts of Cecil Rhodes, his burial place and that of Jameson's. Mr. Newman put it mildly when he spoke of this raid as ill-advised, though Jameson's companion, Mr. John Hays Hammond, has written an entertaining defence of it. The ancient and wonderful ruins of Khami were shown, the setting for Rider Haggard's early novel. Who were the people that took their gods to this remote spot and built huge walls of stone without mortar? No doubt forgotten history is more fascinating than history that is remembered.

There were many views of that mighty cataract, Victoria Falls, called by the natives "The Smoke that Sounds." What were Livingstone's thoughts when he first saw this cataract, the first white man to gaze upon this marvel? He was not given to gush in his writings. Now there is a large hotel near the falls, and one expected to see in the pictures Englishmen in correct costume playing tennis or at tea-tables in the open. Mr. Newman gave the audience advice as to the best time to see the falls and other information as one would speak of a trip to Niagara or Watkins Glen.

The pictures of wild animals unconscious of the proximity of man, not being hunted but living their natural life, excited frequent applause, and justly: members of the antelope family, herds of elephants, crocodiles that took one back in imagination to the time when the earth was populated only by huge and fearsome crawling, swimming and flying creatures, hippopotami on land and in the water. In boyish days we were pleased with the Koodoo, as described in "Wood's Natural History for the Young." Did it escape Mr. Newman's camera? Or does it now bear another name? Or is it extinct?

This intensely interesting Travel Talk will be repeated this afternoon. Next week the subject will be "Congo to Victoria Nyanza."

SYMPHONY CONCERT

Herald 11-25

NEWMAN IN KHARTOUM

Khartoum is the subject of the third lecture in the series of Newman Travel Talks, "Cape to Cairo," in Symphony hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. The expedition penetrates Zanzibar, and leads to what was formerly British East Africa. Remarkable types of natives, shown in motion pictures, are a feature of this lecture. Rare animals have been caught by the quick camera, including the spring bok, specimens of the gazelle and antelope, the hyena, the water buck, and kuda, and the leopard. The lecture ends with a journey down the Nile towards Cairo.

Herald Dec 3

NEWMAN IN KHARTOUM

Khartoum is the subject of the third lecture in the series of Newman Travel Talks "Cape to Cairo," which will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. The expedition penetrates Zanzibar and leads to what was formerly British East Africa. Some remarkable specimens of rare animals are caught by the ready camera. The lecture ends with a journey down the Nile towards Cairo. Amer 12-2

American Dec 2

[109]

NEWMAN TELLS OF CONGO RIVER

Her 12/2

Takes Symphony Hall Audience on Pictorial Trip to Victoria Nyanza

THIRD TRAVEL TALK WELL ILLUSTRATED

By PHILIP HALE

The subject of Mr. Newman's third Travel Talk, delivered before a very large audience in Symphony Hall last night, was "Congo to Victoria Nyanza." The word "Congo" is associated in the minds of many with the meeting of Livingstone and Stanley, also with the "Belgian atrocities." Mr. Newman, who made a close investigation into the truth of the reported cruelties committed by rubber men in the reign of Leopold II, believes the stories to be unfounded. Yet the commission of inquiry (1904) confirmed the rumors of the torturing and generally barbarous treatment of the natives.

Few of us have any idea of the enormous natural wealth of the Congo in diamonds, gold, silver, copper, and even radium. Discovery of radium has already, the lecturer said, lowered the price considerably. The changes in the Congo region within the last 20 years are marvellous. The wilderness may not actually blossom as the rose, but the evidences of what the world is pleased to call civilization are many, as is shown in Elizabethville, other towns, missionary stations. Contrasted pictorially with these were the huts of the Congo natives, a race far inferior to the Zulus in stature, strength and intelligence, a race almost as close to the brute as that of the Pygmies. Herodotus, because he spoke of Pygmies in Africa, was for a long time called "the father of lies," and his statements were derided. A mighty traveler in his day, he is now recognized as a keen observer. Many of his stories, once thought incredible, have been corroborated by modern explorers.

The views on and along the Congo river and the scenes in the jungle were most interesting. Not enticing to trippers, perhaps, though in the higher regions the temperature and the prevailing natural conditions are favorable to health and comfort. In the jungle the air is malarial and there are insects that bring on blindness and the sleeping sickness. Nor would one care to mingle with the Pygmies or with a still lower race fond of disfigurement with mutilated lips for the sake of hideous ornamentation.

Interesting, too, were the views of and around Lake Tanganyika, taken in the course of Mr. Newman's journey by caravan for 200 miles. Again there were unusual pictures of wild animals in the open, hartebeeste, gnus, zebras; Paul du Chaillu's old friend, the gorilla; a singularly cleanly chimpanzee, but chained, taking a bath that would shame the hurried ablutions of many men; the ferocious buffalo, and the quick-eared rhinoceros of imperfect sight. Birds of fine plumage were shown. All in all, another instructive and entertaining travel talk.

"Congo to Victoria Nyanza" will be delivered again this afternoon. The subject next week will be "Khartum."

There will be extra Travel Talks on Friday evening, Dec. 22, and Saturday afternoon, Dec. 23, when there will be a complete showing of remarkable close range views of wild animal and savage life.

Herald Dec 2

NEWMAN IN KHARTOUM

Khartoum is the subject of the third lecture in the series of Newman travel talks, "Cape to Cairo," which will be given in Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. The party penetrates into the interior of Africa, showing many rare animals. The lecture ends with a journey down the Nile towards Cairo. Adv 12/3

Advertiser Dec 3

THE NEWMAN LECTURE

The third of the lectures by E. M. Newman on his recent African tour, was given in Symphony Hall last evening, the special topic being "Congo to Victoria." This discourse proved highly interesting, starting with the Congo district and showing the peculiar customs of the inhabitants and following the territory explored by Stanley. Mr. Newman encountered a number of pygmy tribes in the interior, rope bridges, tattooed natives and a wildness that seemed absolutely removed from civilization.

The second part was devoted to a visit to Ujiji where Stanley found Livingston and a long tramp through the jungle. Mr. Newman procured a number of views of bird and animal life, a wonderful study in natural history. Some of the pictures were highly amusing, notably the bath taken by a chimpanzee and others dangerous, especially the charge of an enraged bull rhinoceros and the destruction of the cameras. Mr. Newman's descriptions were exceedingly realistic and the lecture was one of the best of the series. It will be repeated this afternoon.

Post Dec 2

"KHARTUM" IS NEWMAN TOPIC

Her 12/9

Lecturer Takes Audience from Victoria Nyanza to Zanzibar

INTERESTING TALK AND ILLUSTRATIONS

The subject of Mr. Newman's illustrated Travel Talk in Symphony Hall last night was "Khartum." The talk was about the journey from the shores of Victoria Nyanza to Zanzibar, where the cloves come from, through the Kenya territory, the caravan along the Roosevelt Trail; about several native tribes, some nude, some clothed—but the missionaries say that the nude folk are the more moral—then the upper stretches of the Nile. The talk and the pictures, motion and still, were, as before, most interesting.

And at last we saw the Koodoo, the species of antelope that, in a child's book of natural history, fascinated us in our little village. The Syllabus of the spelled the name "Kudu," but we prefer the old spelling, just as "boule-dogge" is preferable to "bulldog," for one sees more clearly the jaws, teeth and determined expression when "dog" is "dogge."

Zanzibar, in spite of the heat, the poor hotels and the mosquitos, should be visited. The views shown were enchanting. The streets and houses are of "the Thousand Nights and a Night" variety, and it was surprising not to see a jinnee or at least an afreet ready to play a trick on some keeper of a bazaar. The natives on the mainland from the Kikuyus to the Masai are given to hideous ornamentation; some greased with castor oil; many women with jewelry weighing 80 pounds, with pierced ears distended by huge earrings, ranging from spools to tin cans. The dances that now seem grotesque may be in fashion here next season. They were not more grotesque than some now seen in local ballrooms, and the faces of the dancers showed pleasure, which is more than can be said of our gilded youths and flappers of high and low degree.

Mr. Newman had a good deal to say about Theodore Roosevelt, for he was with him in Africa. When asked if he was a good shot, the colonel replied that he shot often He was not a wanton destroyer of game. Killing only one of a kind as a specimen, except in the case of lions, which are considered to be a species of vermin. The life and manners of the savages were described and fully illustrated.

Again there were pictures of wild animals in the open, among them hyenas, the first pictures of them taken out of captivity, and a leopard eating an antelope. Mr. Newman spoke bitterly about the leopard's character, the meanest creature of the cat family. Not even his inability to change his spots found favor in Mr. Newman's eyes.

In the course of his remarks, he asked any South Africans, presumably whites, who might be in the audience, to send their names to him so that he could forward them to some one who wished to organize here a South African club.

The Travel Talk will be repeated this afternoon. The subject of the one next week—the last in the regular series we regret to say—is "Sudan to Cairo." There will be extra showings of wild animals and savage life on Friday evening, Dec. 22, and Saturday afternoon, Deo. 28.

P. H.

Herald Dec 9

NEWMAN'S TRAVEL TALK TELLS OF AFRICAN LIFE

Mr Newman's travel talk last night in Symphony Hall dealt with the country about Victoria Nyanza and down the Nile toward Khartum. Most of the pictures given were of the natives and their ways of life, rather than of the scenery. This country included that traversed by Roosevelt in his famous hunting expedition.

There was a glimpse of Zanzibar, that once Arab kingdom, where the Sultan now has little more than the empty honor of the title, and complains that he is so poor and wives cost so much that he can afford only one.

At none of the previous lectures in this course has there been given so complete a series of pictures of savage life as this. The tribes shown included the peaceful Kikuyus, the warlike Masai, the Kavirondo, the Baganda and others.

The moving pictures of animals, a great attraction in many of these travel talks, gave views, taken at the water holes, of antelopes of many kinds—spring bok, impala, tiny gazelle and sable antelope among others. A triumph of the photographer was a moving picture of the hyena, said to be the first ever taken of this extremely nervous animal, which seldom shows himself by day.

This lecture will be repeated this afternoon. Next week Mr Newman will complete his journey by keeping on down the Nile to Cairo.

Globe Dec 9

Continued on 9th page following

Paderewski (Nov 29, 19

Characteristically, Mr. Paderewski has changed plans for his return to the concert-hall. He will not make beginning in New York: but at Worcester in Mechanics Hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 9—near enough to Boston to draw both the devotees of his past and the curious about his present.

Transcript Oct 11

In Prospect.

Mr. Paderewski, the pianist, will play in Boston, for the first time since his return to the practice of his profession, in Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29. Later, he may be expected also in one of the Sunday Concerts. By those who cannot abide even this brief waiting, he may be heard in Worcester Thursday evening, Nov. 9.

Transcript Oct 26

PADEREWSKI

Ignace J. Paderewski is shortly expected to arrive in America from Europe, in readiness to return to the concert stage. The great Polish pianist will give a performance in Symphony hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

Traveler Oct 28

Paderewski Nov 29

Paderewski will play at Symphony hall Wednesday afternoon, Nov 29, for the first time since the war. His first public concert will be at Worcester Nov 9. Those who wish to hear him are advised to get their seats early, as the demand is likely to prove almost, if not, quite unprecedented. This recital is the most interesting event yet announced for the present Boston recital season.

Globe Oct 29

PADEREWSKI COMING

Mr. Paderewski is shortly expected to arrive in America from Europe in readiness to return to the concert stage. He will give a recital in Symphony hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

Herald Oct 29

PADEREWSKI COMING

Ignace J. Paderewski is shortly expected to arrive in America from Europe in readiness to return to the concert stage. The great Polish pianist will give a performance in Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, November 29.

Advertiser Oct 29

CONCERT AND OPERA

Mischa Elman, violinist, will play in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19, at 3:30 o'clock.

Mr. Paderewski will give a recital in Symphony hall, on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

With a company comprising

Herald Nov 5

Paderewski

In the opinion of many the most notable event of the musical season will be the return to the concert stage of Ignace J. Paderewski, the great Polish pianist and statesman, who is to give a concert in Boston Symphony Hall, on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

Post 11-5

PADEREWSKI

In the opinion of many, the most important concert of the season will be that of Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, which will take place in Symphony hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29. Having retired from politics, he has recently arrived in this country in preparation for the tour which will mark his return to the concert stage.

Traveler 11-11

PADEREWSKI COMING

In the opinion of many, the most important concert of the season will be that of Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, which will take place in Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, November 29.

Having retired from politics, he has recently arrived in this country in preparation for the tour which will mark his return to the concert stage.

American 11-11

Paderewski

In the opinion of many the most important concert of the season will be that of Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, which will take place in Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

Having retired from politics, he has recently arrived in this country in preparation for the tour which will mark his return to the concert stage.

Post 11-12

MR. PADEREWSKI

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, will give a concert in Symphony hall Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29, at 2:30. He has already begun his American tour in other cities and is acclaimed as at the height of his power.

Herald 11-29

PADEREWSKI PLAYS

FULL-POWERED RETURN TO THE CONCERT-HALL

A First Recital at Worcester After Six Years of Retirement—The Freshened Man and Musician—The Old Might and Magnificance Strangely Touched Now with the Delicacies and Divinations of an Earlier Prime—Music Enkindled to a Rapt Audience

Trans 11/10

A REFRESHED Paderewski has returned to the concert hall; a Paderewski in the full exercise of the powers of his later years, newly and strangely resuming one or another attribute of an earlier prime; newly and keenly whetting his sixties of the calendar—only last Monday fell a birthday—with a zest that his thirties not always knew. For once his entourage has spoken truly. Paderewski is eager to play the piano again as voice of music and voice of his own spirit; eager, after six years of abstention, for concerts, audiences, the whole practice of the profession in which of old he was unapproachable. Assiduously these many months has he practised, sharpening, deepening, refining technical readiness beyond even his middle years. His memory holds clear and true; seldom in private, never in public, need he set score upon piano-rack. He finds no reason to diminish the length, scope, exactions of the programmes that he has long set his audiences and himself. He has borne the test of playing among intimates. With more confidence and in higher spirits than in many an earlier year of American tours, he began yet one more in Mechanics Hall at Worcester last evening; while before the concert had proceeded far, there was no questioning either the wisdom of return or the rapt response of hearers.

To the eye the Paderewski of the concert-hall, 1922, is little changed from the remembered Paderewski of the recitals in 1916; while that change is for the better. Under the stress of wartime, even before he had become man of politics and affairs in Poland, he seemed worn, burdened, preoccupied, though illustrious pianist still. Now, his figure is erect and firm again, his carriage alert, his eye bright, his whole being quick with alacrity. Only in his hair, receding a little farther from the temples, a little more gray and a little less tawny, is there token of accumulating time. He makes the same deep bow, unlike any other in concert-hall or theatre, to an audience that from side to side his glance also sweeps. Seated at the piano in the familiar fringed chair, the task of the moment gravely absorbs him. For the while, he seems hardly aware of an audience, so intent that a falling programme rustles through the silence. Its applause recalls him; he neither hides nor obtrudes his pleasure. Readily he plays an extra piece at the one pause in the concert. At the end, he adds two or three, without sign of fatigue or grudging. At Worcester, he was ready to begin within ten minutes of the hour announced for the concert. He prolonged no intermission. He betrayed not a trace of irritation with the surroundings. In a word a mellowed, a gentle, an altogether tractable Paderewski—the pianist as man of good will.

For the longer and larger pieces of the concert, Paderewski arrayed the Serious Variations of Mendelssohn, the Fantasia of Schumann, the Sonata Appassionata of Beethoven. Almost at the outset, as variation succeeded variation, came the most vivid sensation that the concert was to yield. The Paderewski who in 1916 forsook the concert-room was preëminently the pianist of power, bending music, instrument, audience, himself, to an all-puissant will—Paderewski musically of far-flung design, sweeping progress, up-swelling clangor. It was even the custom in those days to lament a vanished Paderewski of delicate inflections, tints, divinations.

Now, for miracle, it was such a Paderewski that returned in one or another of Mendelssohn's Variations. He played them like lace-work in sound; accents and modulations fell from the tips of his fingers; shadings were water-color in the deftest of tones. Yet he kept, while he softened, the gentle, the punctilious angularity of the composer's patterns, caught the simplicity of his sentiment, the light, thin play of his fancy. The audience heard anew the Paderewski who had been, who can still be the delicate diviner in tones. As such he returned again in occasional measures of the Nocturne from Chopin (Op. 37, No. 2); in the ornament of Liszt's "Au Bord d'une Source." As such he gleamed brightest of all from Chopin's Mazurka in B-flat minor. The unfolding, the intensifying of the poetized dance; the rounding, the shading, the hushing of the final measures, were of that Paderewski until now almost a legend, in whom poetry of spirit became a poetry of sound through means that upon gossamer laid iridescence. Yet beneath were both subtleties and precisions. So poets write and poets play—if music is their medium.

If not in the Variations, then through the Fantasia and the Sonata sounded anew the Paderewski of splendors and of power. As of old he struck chords that clanged out of depths. Again his runs flashed into radiance or darkened into tempest. His arpeggios fell in molten cascades. Upon songful measures, he outpoured the riches of his tone until the melody swam in calm glow sustained, or beat hot in incandescent progress. The advance of his climaxes tingled upon the nerves, Wagner-like; in the culmination marched breadths and heights. His contrasts stood keenly sharpened or deeply smoothed. Now finesse, now power shaped modulation, guided transition. Undiminished is the Paderewski of such range, such splendors. Touch and tone, melody and ornament, are all [illegible] of the man [illegible]

In the Fantasia and the Sonata through and above the pianist towered the musician. Measures quivering with romantic longing, drenched in romantic beauty, haunt, Schumann-like, the Fantasia; bind it together in recurrent voice and mood. Therewith Paderewski deepened Schumann; while around him he wove the golden halo of his own tone. The music brooded and was dark; strove for free stride and speech; resigned itself to still passion; yet ever upon it was the glow of these haunting, calling measures. Paderewski is still voice incomparable to such romantic moods of music, to such play of the imagery and the passion of tones. At once he deepens and he wings them, as in poet's rhapsody. Yet the mind guides; the hand shapes. The musician's mastery measures, these magnificences. A variation of pace here, a turn of rhythm there, a flash of color yet again and Schumann is clarified or multiplied, impassioned or illumined. With reason Paderewski holds fast to the romantic composers.

Beethoven in the Sonata Appassionata is kinsman, and upon him Paderewski bestowed like splendors and riches. Incandescent were the broken frenzies of the beginning. They lashed and leapt from the progress of the music. They rent it strand from strand. To Paderewski such rhapsodist succeeded Paderewski musician, above all else, in mind, hand and spirit, gathering these broken threads into the web of the slower, softer, musing song until it fell, inevitable and lovely upon the ear waiting and kindled. Again came thought of the pianist renewing himself from the golden prime when in him poetry went coequal with power. The succeeding division was not less glamored; the swift finale sped itself and the mood into silence.

Thereafter in long-standing custom, Chopin and Liszt. First the Pole's Ballad in G minor, less stirring Paderewski in sum of unfolded design and successive contrasting moods than for details upon which he might lavish his re-creating will. The ear seemed to hear measures played in routine. It heard also measures like those of the little epilogue, touched with subtle, shaded, echoing beauty, wistful, stilled, resigned. Then the cameo-like Nocturne with pa[illegible] rhythm, tone chiselling the melody—every stroke sensitive and supple, yet every stroke poised. The poetry, next of the Mazurka, and thereafter the sheer grandeurs of the Scherzo in C-sharp minor. [illegible] old it was one of Paderewski's sweeps [illegible] power unleashed. It is not less so today. Our young lions talk of sonorities; [illegible] them to music-paper. Yet they whisp[illegible] beside Paderewski torrential. Rhyth[illegible] darting or sustained, whipped like prop[illegible] sive force through Liszt's Polonaise in [illegible] major. Long before Ravel come the fi[illegible] and fall of sparkling waters in tones wh[illegible] Paderewski plays "Au Bord d'une Source." As for the Concert-Study in F minor, t[illegible] youngest, surest virtuoso of the conserv[illegible]tories may not reproach him. He has practised. To the technicians he flings ch[illegible]lenge.

H. T. P.

Transcript 11-10

PADEREWSKI COMING

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29, at 2:30. This great figure in the world of music has already begun his American tour in other cities and is acclaimed as being at the very height of his powers.

Amer 11-18

American 11-18

Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29, in Symphony Hall, Mr. Paderewski for his first appearance in Boston since he returned as pianist to the concert-room. Those who recall the range of his powers, the play of his personality and those who have yet to discover them, will flock equally to hear him.

Trans 11-18

Transcript 11-18

PADEREWSKI.

A sold-out house will greet Paderewski when he plays at Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, November 29.

Adv 11/19

Advertiser 11-19

TO announce the return of Mr. Paderewski to the concert-room at Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon next is quite sufficient. Already an anticipating public has taken nearly every obtainable seat. The disappointed need only patience. Once and twice more will the pianist be heard in Boston. As everyone knows by this time he is in full possession of familiar powers; while he is the more ripened in mind and spirit by the years spent in other works and experience. His pieces for Wednesday are: Mendelssohn's "Serious Variations," Schumann's Fantasia, Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata," the Nocturne in G major, the Ballard in A minor and the Scherzo in C-sharp minor out of Chopin, and three pieces from Liszt—"Au Bord d'une Source," the Concert-Study in F minor and the Polonaise in E major.

Trans 11-20

Transcript 11-20

Paderewski to Return

Ignace Paderewski, whose concert appearance in Symphony Hall last Wednesday made so profound an impression upon the public of Boston, will give a second concert here in Symphony Hall on [illegible] afternoon, [illegible] 31, at 3:30.

[110]

Boston to Welcome Him This Week

Ignace J. Paderewski—what thrills his very name brings to music lovers, from conservatory students to professional musicians of all kinds! After his seven-year absence, serving his country, he returns to Symphony Hall this week with renewed vigor. (Photo Bain.)

Post 11-26

At his concert in Symphony Hall next Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Paderewski will play the same pieces that he has chosen elsewhere for his return as pianist, viz.: Mendelssohn's "Serious Variations," Schumann's Fantasia, Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata"; the Nocturne in G major, the Ballard in G minor and the Scherzo in C-sharp minor out of Chopin; and three pieces from Liszt—"Au Bord d'une Source," the Concert-Study in F minor and the Polonaise in E major.

11/24

H. T. P.

Transcript 11-24

Paderewski Returns

One of the chief events of the present concert season is the return of Paderewski as pianist. The comments of the leading New York critics on his recital there last week are on the whole favorable. As a fair specimen, a portion of Mr Henderson's review in the New York Herald is here reproduced. The program was the same that will be played here Wednesday afternoon to a hall sold out weeks in advance.

"Mr Paderewski has not lived 30 years since he first played here without feeling the burdens of time and experience. He is perhaps less delicate and precious artist, but he is certainly a greater man and a more eloquent interpreter.

"He played yesterday with less of the exaggerated force than when he was here some years ago, but far more than he used in his early period. He played, too, with a wider scale of power and a deeper palette of color. He played even more emotionally, but the emotion of today is not that of youth. It is the emotion of one who has lived largely, felt deeply and pondered profoundly."

Globe 11-26

PADEREWSKI TO RETURN

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist whose concert appearance in Symphony hall last Wednesday made so profound an impression upon the public of Boston, is to give a second concert here. It will take place in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30.

Traveler Dec 2

PADEREWSKI TO RETURN

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, is to give a second concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31.

Advertiser Dec 3

CONCERT NOTES

Mr. Paderewski will give his second recital [illegible] Symphony Hall on Sunday [illegible] at 3:30.

Paderewski (Nov 29, 1922

Characteristically, Mr. Paderewski has changed plans for his return to the concert-hall. He will not make beginning in New York: but at Worcester in Mechanics Hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 9—near enough to Boston to draw both the devotees of his past and the curious about his present.

Transcript Oct 11

In Prospect. Trans 10-26

Mr. Paderewski, the pianist, will play in Boston, for the first time since his return to the practice of his profession, in Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29. Later, he may be expected also in one of the Sunday Concerts. By those who cannot abide even this brief waiting, he may be heard in Worcester Thursday evening, Nov. 9.

Transcript Oct 26

PADEREWSKI

Ignace J. Paderewski is shortly expected to arrive in America from Europe, in readiness to return to the concert stage. The great Polish pianist will give a performance in Symphony hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

Traveler Oct 28

Paderewski Nov 29

Paderewski will play at Symphony Hall Wednesday afternoon, Nov 29, for the first time since the war. His first public concert will be at Worcester Nov 9. Those who wish to hear him are advised to get their seats early, as the demand is likely to prove almost, if not, quite unprecedented. This recital is the most interesting event yet announced for the present Boston recital season.

Globe Oct 29

PADEREWSKI COMING

Mr. Paderewski is shortly expected to arrive in America from Europe in readiness to return to the concert stage. He will give a recital in Symphony hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

Herald Oct 29

PADEREWSKI COMING

Ignace J. Paderewski is shortly expected to arrive in America from Europe in readiness to return to the concert stage. The great Polish pianist will give a performance in Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, November 29. Adv 10/29

Advertiser Oct 29

CONCERT AND OPERA

Mischa Elman, violinist, will play in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19, at 3:30 o'clock.

Mr. Paderewski will give a recital in Symphony hall, on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

Herald Nov 5

Paderewski

11-5

In the opinion of many the most notable event of the musical season will be the return to the concert stage of Ignace J. Paderewski, the great Polish pianist and statesman, who is to give a concert in Boston Symphony Hall, on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

Post 11-5

PADEREWSKI

In the opinion of many, the most important concert of the season will be that of Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, which will take place in Symphony hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29. Having retired from politics, he has recently arrived in this country in preparation for the tour which will mark his return to the concert stage.

Traveler 11-11

PADEREWSKI COMING

In the opinion of many, the most important concert of the season will be that of Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, which will take place in Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, November 29. Amer 11-11

Having retired from politics, he has recently arrived in this country in preparation for the tour which will mark his return to the concert stage.

American 11-11

Paderewski

Post 11/12

In the opinion of many the most important concert of the season will be that of Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, which will take place in Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

Having retired from politics, he has recently arrived in this country in preparation for the tour which will mark his return to the concert stage.

Post 11-12

MR. PADEREWSKI

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, will give a concert in Symphony hall Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29, at 2:30. He has already begun his American tour in other cities and is acclaimed as being at the height of his power.

Herald 11-29

PADEREWSKI PLAYS

FULL-POWERED RETURN TO THE CONCERT-HALL

A First Recital at Worcester After Six Years of Retirement—The Freshened Man and Musician—The Old Might and Magnificance Strangely Touched Now with the Delicacies and Divinations of an Earlier Prime—Music Enkindled to a Rapt Audience

Trans 11/10

A REFRESHED Paderewski has returned to the concert hall; a Paderewski in the full exercise of the powers of his later years, newly and strangely resuming one or another attribute of an earlier prime; newly and keenly whetting his sixties of the calendar—only last Monday fell a birthday—with a zest that his thirties not always knew. For once his entourage has spoken truly. Paderewski is eager to play the piano again as voice of music and voice of his own spirit; eager, after six years of abstention, for concerts, audiences, the whole practice of the profession in which of old he was unapproachable. Assiduously these many months has he practised, sharpening, deepening, refining technical readiness beyond even his middle years. His memory holds clear and true; seldom in private, never in public, need he set score upon piano-rack. He finds no reason to diminish the length, scope, exactions of the programmes that he has long set his audiences and himself. He has borne the test of playing among intimates. With more confidence and in higher spirits than in many an earlier year of American tours, he began yet one more in Mechanics Hall at Worcester last evening; while before the concert had proceeded far, there was no questioning either the wisdom of return or the rapt response of hearers.

To the eye the Paderewski of the concert-hall, 1922, is little changed from the remembered Paderewski of the recitals in 1916; while that change is for the better. Under the stress of wartime, even before he had become man of politics and affairs in Poland, he seemed worn, burdened, preoccupied, though illustrious pianist still. Now, his figure is erect and firm again, his carriage alert, his eye bright, his whole being quick with alacrity. Only in his hair, receding a little farther from the temples, a little more gray and a little less tawny, is there token of accumulating time. He makes the same deep bow, unlike any other in concert-hall or theatre, to an audience that from side to side his glance also sweeps. Seated at the piano in the familiar fringed chair, the task of the moment gravely absorbs him. For the while, he seems hardly aware of an audience, so intent that a falling programme rustles through the silence. Its applause recalls him; he neither hides nor obtrudes his pleasure. Readily he plays an extra piece at the one pause in the concert. At the end, he adds two or three, without sign of fatigue or grudging. At Worcester, he was ready to begin within ten minutes of the hour announced for the concert. He prolonged no intermission. He betrayed not a trace of irritation with the surroundings. In a word a mellowed, a gentle, an altogether tractable Paderewski—the pianist as man of good will.

For the longer and larger pieces of the concert, Paderewski arrayed the Serious Variations of Mendelssohn, the Fantasia of Schumann, the Sonata Appassionata of Beethoven. Almost at the outset, as variation succeeded variation, came the most vivid sensation that the concert was to yield. The Paderewski who in 1916 forsook the concert-room, was preëminently the pianist of power, bending music, instrument, audience, himself, to an all-puissant will—Paderewski musically of far-flung design, sweeping progress, up-swelling clangor. It was even the custom in those days to lament a vanished Paderewski of delicate inflections, tints, divinations.

Now, for miracle, it was such a Paderewski that returned in one or another of Mendelssohn's Variations. He played them like lace-work in sound; accents and modulations fell from the tips of his fingers; shadings were water-color in the deftest of tones. Yet he kept, while he softened, the gentle, the punctilious angularity of the composer's patterns, caught the simplicity of his sentiment, the light, thin play of his fancy. The audience heard anew the Paderewski who had been, who can still be the delicate diviner in tones. As such he returned again in occasional measures of the Nocturne from Chopin (Op. 37, No. 2); in the ornament of Liszt's "Au Bord d'une Source." As such he gleamed brightest of all from Chopin's Mazurka in B-flat minor. The unfolding, the intensifying of the poetized dance; the rounding, the shading, the hushing of the final measures, were of that Paderewski until now almost a legend, in whom poetry of spirit became a poetry of sound through means that upon gossamer laid iridescence. Yet beneath were both subtleties and precisions. So poets write and poets play—if music is their medium.

If not in the Variations, then through the Fantasia and the Sonata sounded anew the Paderewski of splendors and of power. As of old he struck chords that clanged out of depths. Again his runs flashed into radiance or darkened into tempest. His arpeggios fell in molten cascades. Upon songful measures, he outpoured the riches of his tone until the melody swam in calm glow sustained, or beat hot in incandescent progress. The advance of his climaxes tingled upon the nerves, Wagner-like; in the culmination marched breadths and heights. His contrasts stood keenly sharpened or deeply smoothed. Now finesse, now power shaped modulation, guided transition. Undiminished is the Paderewski of such range, such splendors. Touch and tone, melody and ornament, are all alight with them. The fires of the man are still [illegible] of the pianist.

In the Fantasia and the Sonata through and above the pianist towered the musician. Measures quivering with romantic longing, drenched in romantic beauty, haunt, Schumann-like, the Fantasia; bind it together in recurrent voice and mood. Therewith Paderewski deepened Schumann; while around him he wove the golden halo of his own tone. The music brooded and was dark; strove for free stride and speech; resigned itself to still passion; yet ever upon it was the glow of these haunting, calling measures. Paderewski is still voice incomparable to such romantic moods of music, to such play of the imagery and the passion of tones. At once he deepens and he wings them, as in poet's rhapsody. Yet the mind guides; the hand shapes. The musician's mastery measures these magnificences. A variation of pace here, a turn of rhythm there, a flash of color yet again and Schumann is clarified or multiplied, impassioned or illumined. With reason Paderewski holds fast to the romantic composers.

Beethoven in the Sonata Appassionata is kinsman, and upon him Paderewski bestowed like splendors and riches. Incandescent were the broken frenzies of the beginning. They lashed and leapt from the progress of the music. They rent it strand from strand. To Paderewski such rhapsodist succeeded Paderewski musician, above all else, in mind, hand and spirit, gathering these broken threads into the web of the slower, softer, musing song until it fell, inevitable and lovely upon the ear waiting and kindled. Again came thought of the pianist renewing himself from the golden prime when in him poetry went coequal with power. The succeeding division was not less glamored; the swift finale sped itself and the mood into silence.

Thereafter in long-standing custom, Chopin and Liszt. First the Pole's Ballad in G minor, less stirring Paderewski in sum of unfolded design and successive contrasting moods than for details upon which he might lavish his re-creating will. The e seemed to hear measures played in routin It heard also measures like those of t little epilogue, touched with subtle, shade echoing beauty, wistful, stilled, resigne Then the cameo-like Nocturne with pa rhythm, tone chiselling the melody—eve stroke sensitive and supple, yet eve stroke poised. The poetry, next of t Mazurka, and thereafter the sheer gran eurs of the Scherzo in C-sharp minor. old it was one of Paderewski's sweeps power unleashed. It is not less so tod Our young lions talk of sonorities; them to music-paper. Yet they whisp beside Paderewski torrential. Rhyth darting or sustained, whipped like prop sive force through Liszt's Polonaise in major. Long before Ravel come the fl and fall of sparkling waters in tones wh Paderewski plays "Au Bord d'une Source As for the Concert-Study in F minor, t youngest, surest virtuoso of the conserv tories may not reproach him. He has pra tised. To the technicians he flings ch lenge.

H. T. P.

Transcript 11-10

PADEREWSKI COMING

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29, at 2:30. This great figure in the world of music has already begun his American tour in other cities and is acclaimed as being at the very height of his powers. Amer 11-18

American 11-18

Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29, in Symphony Hall, Mr. Paderewski for his first appearance in Boston since he returned as pianist to the concert-room. Those who recall the range of his powers, the play of his personality and those who have yet to discover them, will flock equally to hear him. Trans 11-18

Transcript 11-18

PADEREWSKI.

Adv 11/19

A sold-out house will greet Paderewski when he plays at Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, November 29.

Advertiser 11-19

TO announce the return of Mr. Paderewski to the concert-room at Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon next is quite sufficient. Already an anticipating public has taken nearly every obtainable seat. The disappointed need only patience. Once and twice more will the pianist be heard in Boston. As everyone knows by this time he is in full possession of familiar powers; while he is the more ripened in mind and spirit by the years spent in other works and experience. His pieces for Wednesday are: Mendelssohn's Serious Variations," Schumann's Fantasia, Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata," the Nocturne in G major, the Ballard in A minor and the Scherzo in C-sharp minor out of Chopin, and three pieces from Liszt—"Au Bord d'une Source," the Concert-Study in F minor and the Polonaise in E major. Trans 11-20

Transcript 11-20

Paderewski to Return

Ignace Paderewski, whose concert appearance in Symphony Hall last Wednesday made so profound an impression upon the public of Boston, will give a second concert here in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30. Trans 12-2

[110]

Boston to Welcome Him This Week

Ignace J. Paderewski—what thrills his very name brings to music lovers, from conservatory students to professional musicians of all kinds! After his seven-year absence, serving his country, he returns to Symphony Hall this week with renewed vigor. (Photo Bain.)

Post 11-26

At his concert in Symphony Hall next Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Paderewski will play the same pieces that he has chosen elsewhere for his return as pianist, viz.: Mendelssohn's "Serious Variations," Schumann's Fantasia, Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata"; the Nocturne in G major, the Ballard in G minor and the Scherzo in C-sharp minor out of Chopin; and three pieces from Liszt—"Au Bord d'une Source," the Concert-Study in F minor and the Polonaise in E major. 11/24

H. T. P.

Transcript 11-24

Paderewski Returns

One of the chief events of the present concert season is the return of Paderewski as pianist. The comments of the leading New York critics on his recital there last week are on the whole favorable. As a fair specimen, a portion of Mr Henderson's review in the New York Herald is here reproduced. The program was the same that will be played here Wednesday afternoon to a hall sold out weeks in advance.

"Mr Paderewski has not lived 30 years since he first played here without feeling the burdens of time and experience. He is perhaps a less delicate and precious artist, but he is certainly a greater man and a more eloquent interpreter.

"He played yesterday with less of the exaggerated force than when he was here some years ago, but far more than he used in his early period. He played, too, with a wider scale of power and a deeper palette of color. He played even more emotionally, but the emotion of today is not that of youth. It is the emotion of one who has lived largely, felt deeply and pondered profoundly."

Globe 11-26

PADEREWSKI TO RETURN

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist whose concert appearance in Symphony hall last Wednesday made so profound an impression upon the public of Boston, is to give a second concert here. It will take place in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30.

Traveler Dec 2

PADEREWSKI TO RETURN

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, is to give a second concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31. Adv 12/3

Advertiser Dec 3

CONCERT NOTES

Mr. Paderewski will give his second recital in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30. Her 12-3

Herald Dec 3

Paderewski (Nov 29, 1922

Characteristically, Mr. Paderewski has changed plans for his return to the concert-hall. He will not make beginning in New York: but at Worcester in Mechanics Hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 9—near enough to Boston to draw both the devotees of his past and the curious about his present.

Transcript Oct 11

In Prospect Trans 10-26

Mr. Paderewski, the pianist, will play in Boston, for the first time since his return to the practice of his profession, in Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29. Later, he may be expected also in one of the Sunday Concerts. By those who cannot abide even this brief waiting, he may be heard in Worcester on Thursday evening, Nov. 9.

Transcript Oct 26

PADEREWSKI

Ignace J. Paderewski is shortly expected to arrive in America from Europe, in readiness to return to the concert stage. The great Polish pianist will give a performance in Symphony hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

Traveler Oct 18

Paderewski Nov 29

Paderewski will play at Symphony Hall Wednesday afternoon, Nov 29, for the first time since the war. His first public concert will be at Worcester Nov 9. Those who wish to hear him are advised to get their seats early, as the demand is likely to prove almost, if not, quite unprecedented. This recital is the most interesting event yet announced for the present Boston recital season.

Globe Oct 29

PADEREWSKI COMING

Mr. Paderewski is shortly expected to arrive in America from Europe in readiness to return to the concert stage. He will give a recital in Symphony hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29

Herald Oct 29

PADEREWSKI COMING

Ignace J. Paderewski is shortly expected to arrive in America from Europe in readiness to return to the concert stage. The great Polish pianist will give a performance in Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, November 29.

Advertiser Oct 29

CONCERT AND OPERA

Mischa Elman, violinist, will play in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19, at 3:30 o'clock.

Mr. Paderewski will give a recital in Symphony hall, on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

With a company

Herald Nov 5

Paderewski

In the opinion of many the most notable event of the musical season will be the return to the concert stage of Ignace J. Paderewski, the great Polish pianist and statesman, who is to give a concert in Boston Symphony Hall, on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

Post 11-5

PADEREWSKI

In the opinion of many, the most important concert of the season will be that of Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, which will take place in Symphony hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29. Having retired from politics, he has recently arrived in this country in preparation for the tour which will mark his return to the concert stage.

Traveler 11-11

we are familiar

PADEREWSKI COMING

In the opinion of many, the most important concert of the season will be that of Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, which will take place in Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, November 29.

Having retired from politics, he has recently arrived in this country in preparation for the tour which will mark his return to the concert stage.

American 11-11

Paderewski

Post

In the opinion of many the most important concert of the season will be that of Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, which will take place in Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29.

Having retired from politics, he has recently arrived in this country in preparation for the tour which will mark his return to the concert stage.

Post 11-12

MR. PADEREWSKI

Her

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, will give a concert in Symphony hall Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29, at 2:30. He has already begun his American tour in other cities and is acclaimed as being at the height of his power. 11-25

Herald 11-29

PADEREWSKI PLAYS

FULL-POWERED RETURN TO THE CONCERT-HALL

A First Recital at Worcester After Six Years of Retirement—The Freshened Man and Musician—The Old Might and Magnificance Strangely Touched Now with the Delicacies and Divinations of an Earlier Prime—Music Enkindled to a Rapt Audience

Trans 11/10

A REFRESHED Paderewski has returned to the concert hall; a Paderewski in the full exercise of the powers of his later years, newly and strangely resuming one or another attribute of an earlier prime; newly and keenly whetting his sixties of the calendar—only last Monday fell a birthday—with a zest that his thirties not always knew. For once his entourage has spoken truly. Paderowski is eager to play the piano again as voice of music and voice of his own spirit; eager, after six years of abstention, for concerts, audiences, the whole practice of the profession in which of old he was unapproachable. Assiduously these many months has he practised, sharpening, deepening, refining technical readiness beyond even his middle years. His memory holds clear and true; seldom in private, never in public, need he set score upon piano-rack. He finds no reason to diminish the length, scope, exactions of the programmes that he has long set his audiences and himself. He has borne the test of playing among intimates. With more confidence and in higher spirits than in many an earlier year of American tours, he began yet one more in Mechanics Hall at Worcester last evening; while before the concert had proceeded far, there was no questioning either the wisdom of return or the rapt response of hearers.

To the eye the Paderewski of the concert-hall, 1922, is little changed from the remembered Paderewski of the recitals in 1916; while that change is for the better. Under the stress of wartime, even before he had become man of politics and affairs in Poland, he seemed worn, burdened, preoccupied, though illustrious pianist still. Now, his figure is erect and firm again, his carriage alert, his eye bright, his whole being quick with alacrity. Only in his hair, receding a little farther from the temples, a little more gray and a little less tawny, is there token of accumulating time. He makes the same deep bow, unlike any other in concert-hall or theatre, to an audience that from side to side his glance also sweeps. Seated at the piano in the familiar fringed chair, the task of the moment gravely absorbs him. For the while, he seems hardly aware of an audience, so intent that a falling programme rustles through the silence. Its applause recalls him; he neither hides nor obtrudes his pleasure. Readily he plays an extra piece at the one pause in the concert. At the end, he adds two or three, without sign of fatigue or grudging. At Worcester, he was ready to begin within ten minutes of the hour announced for the concert. He prolonged no intermission. He betrayed not a trace of irritation with the surroundings. In a word a mellowed, a gentle, an altogether tractable Paderewski—the pianist as man of good will.

For the longer and larger pieces of the concert, Paderewski arrayed the Serious Variations of Mendelssohn, the Fantasia of Schumann, the Sonata Appassionata of Beethoven. Almost at the outset, as variation succeeded variation, came the most viv sensation that the concert was to yie The Paderewski who in 1916 forsook t concert-room, was preëminently the pian of power, bending music, instrument, au ence, himself, to an all-puissant will—Paderewski musically of far-flung desig sweeping progress, up-swelling clango It was even the custom in those days to lament a vanished Paderewski of delicate inflections, tints, divinations.

Now, for miracle, it was such a Paderewski that returned in one or another of Mendelssohn's Variations. He played them like lace-work in sound; accents and modulations fell from the tips of his fingers; shadings were water-color in the deftest of tones. Yet he kept, while he softened, the gentle, the punctilious angularity of the composer's patterns, caught the simplicity of his sentiment, the light, thin play of his fancy. The audience heard anew the Paderewski who had been, who can still be the delicate diviner in tones. As such he returned again in occasional measures of the Nocturne from Chopin (Op. 37, No. 2); in the ornament of Liszt's "Au Bord d'une Source." As such he gleamed brightest of all from Chopin's Mazurka in B-flat minor. The unfolding the intensifying of the poetized dance; th rounding, the shading, the hushing of th final measures, were of that Paderewski until now almost a legend, in whom poetry of spirit became a poetry of soun through means that upon gossamer lai iridescence. Yet beneath were both subtleties and precisions. So poets write an poets play—if music is their medium.

If not in the Variations, then throug the Fantasia and the Sonata sounded ane the Paderewski of splendors and of powe As of old he struck chords that clange out of depths. Again his runs flashed int radiance or darkened into tempest. Hi arpeggios fell in molten cascades. Upon songful measures, he outpoured the riches of his tone until the melody swam in calm glow sustained, or beat hot in incandescent progress. The advance of his climaxes tingled upon the nerves, Wagner-like; in the culmination marched breadths and heights. His contrasts stood keenly sharpened or deeply smoothed. Now finesse, now power shaped modulation, guided transition. Undiminished is the Paderewski of such range, such splendors. Touch and tone, melody and ornament, are all alight with them. The fires of the man are still the fires of the pianist.

In the Fantasia and the Sonata through and above the pianist towered the musician. Measures quivering with romantic longing, drenched in romantic beauty, haunt, Schumann-like, the Fantasia; bind it together in recurrent voice and mood. Therewith Paderewski deepened Schumann; while around him he wove the golden halo of his own tone. The music brooded and was dark; strove for free stride and speech; resigned itself to still passion; yet ever upon it was the glow of these haunting, calling measures. Paderewski is still voice incomparable to such romantic moods of music, to such play of the imagery and the passion of tones. At once he deepens and he wings them, as in poet's rhapsody. Yet the mind guides; the hand shapes. The musician's mastery measures these magnificences. A variation of pace here, a turn of rhythm there, a flash of color yet again and Schumann is clarified or multiplied, impassioned or illumined. With reason Paderewski holds fast to the romantic composers.

Beethoven in the Sonata Appassionata is kinsman, and upon him Paderewski bestowed like splendors and riches. Incandescent were the broken frenzies of the beginning. They lashed and leapt from the progress of the music. They rent it strand from strand. To Paderewski such rhapsodist succeeded Paderewski musician, above all else, in mind, hand and spirit, gathering these broken threads into the web of the slower, softer, musing song until it fell, inevitable and lovely upon the ear waiting and kindled. Again came thought of the pianist renewing himself from the golden prime when in him poetry went coequal with power. The succeeding division was not less glamored; the swift finale sped itself and the mood into silence.

Thereafter in long-standing custom, Chopin and Liszt. First the Pole's Ballad in G minor, less stirring Paderewski in sum of unfolded design and successive contrasting moods than for details upon which might lavish his re-creating will. The e seemed to hear measures played in routi It heard also measures like those of t little epilogue, touched with subtle, shade echoing beauty, wistful, stilled, resigne Then the cameo-like Nocturne with pa rhythm, tone chiselling the melody—eve stroke sensitive and supple, yet eve stroke poised. The poetry, next of t Mazurka, and thereafter the sheer gran eurs of the Scherzo in C-sharp minor. old it was one of Paderewski's sweeps power unleashed. It is not less so toda Our young lions talk of sonorities; them to music-paper. Yet they whisp beside Paderewski torrential. Rhyth darting or sustained, whipped like propu sive force through Liszt's Polonaise in major. Long before Ravel come the fli and fall of sparkling waters in tones wh Paderewski plays "Au Bord d'une Source As for the Concert-Study in F minor, t youngest, surest virtuoso of the conserv tories may not reproach him. He has pra tised. To the technicians he flings ch lenge.

H. T.

Transcript 11-10

PADEREWSKI COMING

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29, at 2:30. This great figure in the world of music has already begun his American tour in other cities and is acclaimed as being at the very height of his powers.

American 11 18

Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29, in Symphony Hall, Mr. Paderewski for his first appearance in Boston since he returned as pianist to the concert-room. Those who recall the range of his powers, the play of his personality and those who have yet to discover them, will flock equally to hear him.

Transcript 11-18

PADEREWSKI

A sold-out [illegible] Paderewski [illegible] Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, November 29.

Advertiser 11-19

TO announce the return of Mr. Paderewski to the concert-room at Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon next is quite sufficient. Already an anticipating public has taken nearly every obtainable seat. The disappointed need only patience. Once and twice more will the pianist be heard in Boston. As everyone knows by this time he is in full possession of familiar powers; while he is the more ripened in mind and spirit by the years spent in other works and experience. His pieces for Wednesday are: Mendelssohn's Serious Variations," Schumann's Fantasia, Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata," the Nocturne in G major, the Ballard in A minor and the Scherzo in C-sharp minor out of Chopin, and three pieces from Liszt—"Au Bord d'une Source," the Concert-Study in F minor and the Polonaise in E major.

Transcript 11-20

Paderewski to Return

Ignace Paderewski, whose concert appearance in Symphony Hall last Wednesday made so profound an impression upon the public of Boston, will give a second concert here in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30. Post 12-3

[110]

Post 11/26

Boston to Welcome Him This Week

Ignace J. Paderewski—what thrills his very name brings to music lovers, from conservatory students to professional musicians of all kinds! After his seven-year absence, serving his country, he returns to Symphony Hall this week with renewed vigor. (Photo Bain.)

Post 11-26

At his concert in Symphony Hall next Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Paderewski will play the same pieces that he has chosen elsewhere for his return as pianist, viz.: Mendelssohn's "Serious Variations," Schumann's Fantasia, Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata"; the Nocturne in G major, the Ballard in G minor and the Scherzo in C-sharp minor out of Chopin, and three pieces from Liszt—"Au Bord d'une Source," the Concert-Study in F minor and the Polonaise in E major. H. T. P.

Transcript 11-24

Paderewski Returns

One of the chief events of the present concert season is the return of Paderewski as pianist. The comments of the leading New York critics on his recital there last week are on the whole favorable. As a fair specimen, a portion of Mr Henderson's review in the New York Herald is here reproduced. The program was the same that will be played here Wednesday afternoon to a hall sold out weeks in advance.

"Mr Paderewski has not lived 30 years since he first played here without feeling the burdens of time and experience. He is perhaps a less delicate and precious artist, but he is certainly a greater man and a more eloquent interpreter.

"He played yesterday with less of the exaggerated force than when he was here some years ago, but far more than he used in his early period. He played, too, with a wider scale of power and a deeper palette of color. He played even more emotionally, but the emotion of today is not that of youth. It is the emotion of one who has lived largely, felt deeply and pondered profoundly."

Globe 11-26

PADEREWSKI TO RETURN

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, whose concert appearance in Symphony hall last Wednesday made so profound an impression upon the public of Boston, is to give a second concert here. It will take place in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30.

Traveler Dec 2

PADEREWSKI TO RETURN

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, is to give a second concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31.

Advertiser Dec 3

CONCERT NOTES

Mr. Paderewski will give his second recital in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30. Her 12-3

Herald Dec 3

Paderewski

THESE FINAL DAYS

PADEREWSKI AS HE COMES FULL CIRCLE

Pianist, Musician and Man Renewed and Reassembled—The Divination and the Poetry of Youth, the Passion and the Power of Middle Years Summoned and Fused—Olden Magnificance in Present Lavishness

Trans 12-1

UPON those fortunate enough in their years to have followed Mr. Paderewski through his long career in America, three images remain implanted: the image of the youthful pianist of the nineties and the turn of the century—a romantic presence and a romantic spirit, charged with the poetry of music, releasing, sublimating it; the pianist of middle age, haunted, goaded by desires fulfilled and unfulfilled, finding outlet for them in ceaseless quest for the power of music as a single instrument might bear it, as single mind and single heart might unfold and swell it; the pianist who now, after years of preoccupation with politics and affairs, returns to the concert-hall in the renewal and the equilibrium of all his faculties, sometimes the crowning halo of the executive artist in ripest days. Such a Paderewski played at Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, before an audience that exhausted every plaudit as it exhausted every foothold; came to it in clear alacrity of body, mind and mood; lavished upon it, as in final epitome, the heights, the depths, the range between, of these reborn, regathered masteries. Listeners to the early Paderewski knew beauty; to the middle Paderewski heard power. From the present Paderewski springs the union, little alloyed, of both the poetries and the splendors.

The Paderewski, who in those distant days, seemed the youngest of the angels (pianistically speaking) played at Symphony Hall the Serious Variations of Mendelssohn, yet not without flashes of the Paderewski who was to be daemonic successor. Oftenest, on Wednesday, he played them like lace-work in sound; accents and modulations fell from the tips of his fingers; shadings were water-color in the deftest of tones. Yet he kept the gentle, the punctilious angularity of the composer's patterns, caught the simplicity of his sentiment, the light, thin play of his fancy. The audience heard anew the Paderewski who had been, who can still be, the delicate diviner in tones. As such he returned again in occasional measures of the Nocturne from Chopin (Op. 37, No. 2); in the ornament of Liszt's "Au Bord d'une Source." As such he gleamed brightest of all from Chopin's Mazurka in B-flat minor. The unfolding, the intensifying of the poetized dance; the rounding, the shading, the hushing of the final measures, were of that Paderewski, until now almost a legend in whom a poetry of spirit became a poetry of sound through means that upon gossamer laid iridescence. Yet beneath were both subtleties and precisions.

If not in the Variations then through Schumann's Fantasia and Beethoven's Sonata Appassionata sounded anew the Paderewski of splendors and of power. As of old he struck chords that clanged out of depths. Again his runs flashed into radiance or darkened into tempest. His arpeggios fell in molten cascades. Upon songful measures he outpoured the riches of his tone until the melody swam in calm glow sustained, or beat hot in incandescent progress. The advance of his climaxes tingled upon the nerves, Wagner-like; in the culmination marched breadths and heights. His contrasts stood keenly sharpened or deeply smoothed. Now finesse, now power shaped modulation, guided transition. Undiminished is the Paderewski of such range, such splendors. Touch and tone, melody and ornament, are all alight with them. The fires of the man are still the fires of the pianist.

In the Fantasia and the Sonata through and above the pianist towered the musician. Measures quivering with romantic longing, drenched in romantic beauty, haunt, Schumann-like, the Fantasia; bind it together in recurrent voice and mood. Therewith Paderewski deepened Schumann; while around him he wove the golden halo of his own tone. The music brooded and was dark; strove for free stride and speech; resigned itself to still passion; yet ever upon it was the glow of these haunting, calling measures. Paderewski is still voice incomparable to such romantic moods of music, to such play of the imagery and the passion of tones. At once he deepens and he wings them, as in poet's rhapsody. Yet the mind guides; the hand shapes. The musician's mastery measures these magnificences. A variation of pace here, a turn of rhythm there a flash of color yet again and Schumann is clarified or multiplied, impassioned or illumined. With reason Paderewski holds fast to the romantic composers.

Beethoven in the Sonata Appassionata is kinsman, and upon him Paderewski bestowed like splendors and riches. Incandescent were the broken frenzies of the beginning. They lashed and leapt from the progress of the music. They rent it strand from strand. To Paderewski such rhapsodist succeeded Paderewski musician, gathering these broken threads into the web of the slower, softer, musing song until it fell, inevitable, and lovely, upon the ear waiting and kindled. Again came thought of the pianist renewing himself from the golden prime when in him poetry went coequal with power. The succeeding division was not less glamored; the swift finale sped itself and the mood into silence.

Thereafter in long-standing custom, Chopin and Liszt. First the Pole's Ballad in G minor, less stirring Paderewski in sum of unfolded design and successive contrasting moods than for details upon which he might lavish his re-creating will. The ear seemed to hear measures played in routine. It heard also measures like those of the little epilogue, touched with subtle, shaded, echoing beauty, wistful, stilled, resigned. Then the cameo-like Nocturne with pace, rhythm, tone chiselling the melody—every stroke sensitive and supple, yet every stroke poised. The poetry, next of the Mazurka, and thereafter the sheer grandeurs of the Scherzo in C-sharp minor. Of old it was one of Paderewski's sweeps of power unleashed. It is not less so today. Our young lions talk of sonorities; set them to music-paper. Yet they whisper beside Paderewski torrential. Rhythm, darting or sustained, whipped like propulsive force through Liszt's Polonaise in E major. Long before Ravel come the flick and fall of sparkling waters in tones when Paderewski plays "Au Bord d'une Source." As for the Concert-Study in F minor, the youngest, surest virtuosi of the conservatories may not reproach him. They conquer these difficulties and bid audiences hear and wonder. In a flood of rhapsody, Paderewski sweeps them before him. And who but the pedants care whether one hand, as often in these final days, not quite balances the other?

Transcript Dec 1

Virtually all the seats in Symphony Hall have been taken for Mr. Paderewski's concert there on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31. None other in Boston has yet been arranged for him, though his tour will continue well into the spring. A third recital, however, is possible, even probable, since the pianist takes pleasure in concerts here.

Trans 12-11

Transcript Dec 11

PADEREWSKI AGAIN

I. J. Paderewski, the pianist, who made such a profound impression on his appearance here recently, will give a second concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31st. Amer 12-9

American Dec 9

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, in Symphony Hall, a second concert of piano-pieces played by Mr. Paderewski, returned to the practice of his profession in full range of hand, mind and spirit; in full zest of every familiar power; in new graces, even, recalled from what had seemed a vanished past. A vast public has as warmly welcomed him. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Sonatas of Beethoven (Op. 111) and of Schumann (Op. 11); a miscellany from Chopin and Liszt fill his programme.

Transcript Dec 9

PADEREWSKI AGAIN

I. J. Paderewski, the pianist, who made such a profound impression on his appearance here recently, will give a second concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31st. Amer 12-9

American Dec 9

Paderewski's Second Concert

I. J. Paderewski, the great pianist, who made such a profound impression at his appearance here and in other cities, marking his return to the concert stage after several years of retirement, will give a second concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30. Post 12-10

Post Dec 10

PADEREWSKI AGAIN

Paderewski will give a second concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31. After this appearance here the famous pianist will go West.

Advertiser Dec 10

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, in Symphony Hall, a second concert of piano-pieces played by Mr. Paderewski, returned to the practice of his profession in full range of hand, mind and spirit; in full zest of every familiar power; in new graces, even, recalled from what had seemed a vanished past. A vast public has as warmly welcomes him. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Sonatas of Beethoven (Op. 111) and of Schumann (Op. 11); a miscellany from Chopin and Liszt fill his programme.

PADEREWSKI AT SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Gives Pianist Warm Welcome When He Comes After Long Absence

FAMILIAR PROGRAM DELIGHTS AS OF OLD

Her 11-30

By PHILIP HALE

Mr. Paderewski, after a long absence, gave a recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. His program read as follows: Mendelssohn, Serious Variations; Schumann, Fantasia; Beethoven, Sonata Appassionata; Cho;pin, Ballade, G minor; Nocturne, op. 37, No. 2; Mazurka, B flat minor, op. 24, No. 4; Scherzo, C sharp minor; Liszt, Au bord d'une Source, Etude de Concert, F minor; Polonaise, E major.

The tribute paid by the great audience when Mr. Paderewski came on the stage was a tribute to the patriot and the man as well as to the virtuoso, whose coming had been impatiently awaited. For the pianist is the man; the man is the patriot. Many of those in the hall yesterday remembered when on the same stage he spoke words of burning eloquence in behalf of his beloved Poland, for this remarkable man, gifted in many ways, is as eloquent in speech as in the interpretation of music that appeals to him.

While he was in the political world, striving valiantly for the assured freedom and establishment of the Polish republic, he was sorely missed by thousands whom he had charmed as a pianist. They followed eagerly his adventures at Paris and at Warsaw, rejoicing with him when his noble aim was attained; yet they could not regard him as only a Pole; for as a musician the world is his country. The long-deferred report that he was to return to the concert stage was enthusiastically received.

The scene was familiar; the lowered lights, the delay in appearance, the expectant hush; finally the entrance, dignified, not dramatic. There has been too much drama in Mr. Paderewski's recent years for him to be theatrical. Again the resonant, arresting chords by way of a prelude. And then the weaving of the old-time spell by the masterly interpretation of music known to all.

It would be impertinent to speak of this or that technical feature; of this or that salient characteristic in interpretation. One hearing Mr. Paderewski is conscious, not merely of a pianist exerting uncommon skill, but of a highly sensitive, poetic, imaginative man, who has chosen the piano to bare his own soul by communicating to others the musical thoughts and emotions of great composers as he himself understands and feels them. Yet this tremendous personality—and "tremendous" is not here an extravagant word—which has been felt in the political conferences of nations and in the legislative halls of his own capital, is not aggressive, not irritating. It is accepted thankfully, as is any beneficent phenomenon of Nature.

Mr. Paderewski's second recital in Symphony hall will be on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31.

Herald Nov 30

Mr Paderewski will presumably play Dec 31 the program he has been giving at his second appearances in other cities. Globe 12-17

Globe Dec 17

MR. PADEREWSKI

Mr. Paderewski will give his second recital here on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30 o'clock, in Symphony hall.

Herald Dec 17

Paderewski

Post 12/17

Paderewski, will give his second Boston concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31st, at 3:30 o'clock.

Post Dec 17

PADEREWSKI'S RETURN

Paderewski, the famous Polish pianist, will give his second Boston recital in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31.

Advertiser Dec 17

Paderewski Shocked

News of Assassination of President of Poland Is Kept From Great Pianist nUtil He Had Finished Concert

Post 12/17

NEW YORK, Dec. 16.—The assassination in Warsaw today of Gabriel Narutowicz, President of Poland, was a severe shock to Ignace Jan Paderewski, noted pianist and former Polish premier. The news was kept from him until after he had finished a concert in Carnegie Hall this afternoon. Then his wife showed him the headlines in the papers.

Telling reporters that, had the news not been withheld from him, he would have cancelled the concert, Paderewski said gravely:

"Please express my absolute condemnation and regret of the act which has taken place. This is the first time in the history of Poland that a ruler has been assassinated."

The former premier then asked to be excused from further comment, saying he was exhausted. Later he cancelled a dinner engagement for tonight.

Post Dec 17

MR. PADEREWSKI

Mr. Paderewski will present the following program at his second Boston concert in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon at 3:30: Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue by Bach: Bethoven's Sonata, Op. 111; Schumann's Sonata, Op. 11; Chopin's Ballade in F major; Nocturne in B major; Etudes Nos. 12, 7 and 3, Op. 10; Mazurka No. 3 and Valse, Op. 42; Nocturne by Paderewski and one of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodies.

Herald Dec 24

PADEREWSKI PROGRAM

Paderewski will present the following program at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon: Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, by Bach; Beethoven Sonata Op. III and Schumann Sonata Op. II, Chopin's Ballade in F major, Noc turne in B major, Etudes Nos. 12, 7 and 3, Op 10, Mazurka No. 3 and Valse Op. 42, Nocturne by Paderewski and Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody."

Advertiser Dec 24

Paderewski's Program

Paderewski will present the following program at his second Boston concert of the season, to be given in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec 31, at 3:30: Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue by Bach, Beethoven Sonata, op. 111, and Schumann Sonata, op. 11; Chopin's Ballade in F major, Nocturne in B major, Etudes Nos. 12, 7 and 3, op. 10; Mazurka No. 3 and Valse, op. 42; Nocturne by Paderewski and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 10.

Globe Dec 24

SUNDAY afternoon, Dec. 31, in Symphony Hall, a second concert of piano-pieces played by Mr. Paderewski, returned to the practice of his profession in full range of hand, mind and spirit; in full zest of every familiar power; in new graces, even, recalled from what had seemed a vanished past. A vast public as warmly welcomes him. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Sonatas of Beethoven (Op. 111) and of Schumann (Op. 11); a miscellany from Chopin and Liszt and his own Nocturne fill the pianist's programme.

Transcript Dec 23

---

derewski Programme

Paderewski will present the following programme at his second Boston concert of the season, to be given in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30: Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue by Bach, Beethoven Sonata Op. 111 and Schumann Sonata Op. 11, Chopin's Ballade in F major, Nocturne in B major, Etudes Nos. 12, 7 and 3, Op. 10, Mazurka No. 3 and Valse Op. 42, by Paderewski, and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody.

Post Dec 24

See 14th page following

Paderewski

THESE FINAL DAYS

PADEREWSKI AS HE COMES FULL CIRCLE

Pianist, Musician and Man Renewed and Reassembled—The Divination and the Poetry of Youth, the Passion and the Power of Middle Years Summoned and Fused—Olden Magnificance in Present Lavishness

Trans 12-1

UPON those fortunate enough in their years to have followed Mr. Paderewski through his long career in America, three images remain imprinted: the image of the youthful pianist of the nineties and the turn of the century—a romantic presence and a romantic spirit, charged with the poetry of music, releasing, sublimating it; the pianist of middle age, haunted, goaded, by desires fulfilled and unfulfilled, finding outlet for them in ceaseless quest for the power of music as a single instrument might bear it, as single mind and single heart might unfold and swell it; the pianist who now, after years of preoccupation with politics and affairs, returns to the concert-hall in the renewal and the equilibrium of all his faculties, sometimes the crowning halo of the executive artist in ripest days. Such a Paderewski played at Symphony Hall on Wednesday afternoon, before an audience that exhausted every plaudit as it exhausted every foothold; came to it in clear alacrity of body, mind and mood; lavished upon it, as in final epitome, the heights, the depths, the range between, of these reborn, regathered masteries. Listeners to the early Paderewski knew beauty; to the middle Paderewski heard power. From the present Paderewski springs the union, little alloyed, of both the poetries and the splendors.

The Paderewski, who in those distant days, seemed the youngest of the angels (pianistically speaking) played at Symphony Hall the Serious Variations of Mendelssohn, yet not without flashes of the Paderewski who was to be daemonic successor. Oftenest, on Wednesday, he played them like lace-work in sound; accents and modulations fell from the tips of his fingers; shadings were water-color in the deftest of tones. Yet he kept the gentle, the punctilious angularity of the composer's patterns, caught the simplicity of his sentiment, the light, thin play of his fancy. The audience heard anew the Paderewski who had been, who can still be, the delicate diviner in tones. As such he returned again in occasional measures of the Nocturne from Chopin (Op. 37, No. 2); in the ornament of Liszt's "Au Bord d'une Source" As such he gleamed brightest of all from Chopin's Mazurka in B-flat minor. The unfolding, the intensifying of the poetized dance; the rounding, the shading, the hushing of the final measures, were of that Paderewski, until now almost a legend in whom a poetry of spirit became a poetry of sound through means that upon gossamer laid iridescence. Yet beneath were both subtleties and precisions.

If not in the Variations then through Schumann's Fantasia and Beethoven's Sonata Appassionata sounded anew the Paderewski of splendors and of power. As of old he struck chords that clanged out of depths. Again his runs flashed into radiance or darkened into tempest. His arpeggios fell in molten cascades. Upon songful measures he outpoured the riches of his tone until the melody swam in calm glow sustained, or beat hot in incandescent progress. The advance of his climaxes tingled upon the nerves, Wagner-like; in the culmination marched breadths and heights. His contrasts stood keenly sharpened or deeply smoothed. Now finesse, now power shaped modulation, guided transition. Undiminished is the Paderewski of such range, such splendors. Touch and tone, melody and ornament, are all alight with them. The fires of the man are still the fires of the pianist.

In the Fantasia and the Sonata through and above the pianist towered the musician. Measures quivering with romantic longing, drenched in romantic beauty, haunt, Schumann-like, the Fantasia; bind it together in recurrent voice and mood. Therewith Paderewski deepened Schumann; while around him he wove the golden halo of his own tone. The music brooded and was dark; strove for free stride and speech; resigned itself to still passion; yet ever upon it was the glow of these haunting, calling measures. Paderewski is still voice incomparable to such romantic moods of music, to such play of the imagery and the passion of tones. At once he deepens and he wings them, as in poet's rhapsody. Yet the mind guides; the hand shapes. The musician's mastery measures these magnificences. A variation of pace here, a turn of rhythm there a flash of color yet again and Schumann is clarified or multiplied, impassioned or illumined. With reason Paderewski holds fast to the romantic composers.

Beethoven in the Sonata Appassionata is kinsman, and upon him Paderewski bestowed like splendors and riches. Incandescent were the broken frenzies of the beginning. They lashed and leapt from the progress of the music. They rent it strand from strand. To Paderewski such rhapsodist succeeded Paderewski musician, gathering these broken threads into the web of the slower, softer, musing song until it fell, inevitable, and lovely, upon the ear waiting and kindled. Again came thought of the pianist renewing himself from the golden prime when in him poetry went coequal with power. The succeeding division was not less glamored; the swift finale sped itself and the mood into silence.

Thereafter in long-standing custom, Chopin and Liszt. First the Pole's Ballad in G minor, less stirring Paderewski in sum of unfolded design and successive contrasting moods than for details upon which he might lavish his re-creating will. The ear seemed to hear measures played in routine. It heard also measures like those of the little epilogue, touched with subtle, shaded, echoing beauty, wistful, stilled, resigned. Then the cameo-like Nocturne with pace, rhythm, tone chiselling the melody—every stroke sensitive and supple, yet every stroke poised. The poetry, next of the Mazurka, and thereafter the sheer grandeurs of the Scherzo in C-sharp minor. Of old it was one of Paderewski's sweeps of power unleashed. It is not less so today. Our young lions talk of sonorities; set them to music-paper. Yet they whisper beside Paderewski torrential. Rhythm, darting or sustained, whipped like propulsive force through Liszt's Polonaise in E major. Long before Ravel come the flick and fall of sparkling waters in tones when Paderewski plays "Au Bord d'une Source." As for the Concert-Study in F minor, the youngest, surest virtuosi of the conservatories may not reproach him. They conquer these difficulties and bid audiences hear and wonder. In a flood of rhapsody, Paderewski sweeps them before him. And who but the pedants care whether one hand, as often in these final days, not quite balances the other?

Transcript Dec 1

Virtually all the seats in Symphony Hall have been taken for Mr. Paderewski's concert there on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31. None other in Boston has yet been arranged for him, though his tour will continue well into the spring. A third recital, however, is possible, even probable, since the pianist takes pleasure in concerts here. Trans 12-11

Transcript Dec 11

PADEREWSKI AGAIN

I. J. Paderewski, the pianist, who made such a profound impression on his appearance here recently, will give a second concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31st. Amer 12-9

American Dec 9

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, in Symphony Hall, a second concert of piano-pieces played by Mr. Paderewski, returned to the practice of his profession in full range of hand, mind and spirit; in full zest of every familiar power; in new graces, even, recalled from what had seemed a vanished past. A vast public has as warmly welcomed him. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Sonatas of Beethoven (Op. 111) and of Schumann (Op. 11); a miscellany from Chopin and Liszt fill his programme.

Transcript Dec 9

PADEREWSKI AGAIN

I. J. Paderewski, the pianist, who made such a profound impression on his appearance here recently, will give a second concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31st. Amer 12-9

American Dec 9

Paderewski's Second Concert

I. J. Paderewski, the great pianist, who made such a profound impression at his appearance here and in other cities, marking his return to the concert stage after several years of retirement, will give a second concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30. Post 12-10

Post Dec 10

PADEREWSKI AGAIN

Adv 12/10

Paderewski will give a second concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31. After this appearance here the famous pianist will go West.

Advertiser Dec 10

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, in Symphony Hall, a second concert of piano-pieces played by Mr. Paderewski, returned to the practice of his profession in full range of hand, mind and spirit; in full zest of every familiar power; in new graces, even, recalled from what had seemed a vanished past. A vast public has as warmly welcomes him. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Sonatas of Beethoven (Op. 111) and of Schumann (Op. 11); a miscellany from Chopin and Liszt fill his programme.

PADEREWSKI AT SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Gives Pianist Warm Welcome When He Comes After Long Absence

FAMILIAR PROGRAM DELIGHTS AS OF OLD

Her 11-30

By PHILIP HALE

Mr. Paderewski, after a long absence, gave a recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. His program read as follows: Mendelssohn, Serious Variations; Schumann, Fantasia; Beethoven, Sonata Appassionata; Cho;pin, Ballade, G minor; Nocturne, op. 37, No. 2; Mazurka, B flat minor, op. 24, No. 4; Scherzo, C sharp minor; Liszt, Au bord d'une Source, Etude de Concert, F minor; Polonaise, E major.

The tribute paid by the great audience when Mr. Paderewski came on the stage was a tribute to the patriot and the man as well as to the virtuoso, whose coming had been impatiently awaited. For the pianist is the man; the man is the patriot. Many of those in the hall yesterday remembered when on the same stage he spoke words of burning eloquence in behalf of his beloved Poland, for this remarkable man, gifted in many ways, is as eloquent in speech as in the interpretation of music that appeals to him.

While he was in the political world, striving valiantly for the assured freedom and establishment of the Polish republic, he was sorely missed by thousands whom he had charmed as a pianist. They followed eagerly his adventures at Paris and at Warsaw, rejoicing with him when his noble aim was attained; yet they could not regard him as only a Pole; for as a musician the world is his country. The long-deferred report that he was to return to the concert stage was enthusiastically received.

The scene was familiar; the lowered lights, the delay in appearance, the expectant hush; finally the entrance, dignified, not dramatic. There has been too much drama in Mr. Paderewski's recent years for him to be theatrical. Again the resonant, arresting chords by way of a prelude. And then the weaving of the old-time spell by the masterly interpretation of music known to all.

It would be impertinent to speak of this or that technical feature; of this or that salient characteristic in interpretation. One hearing Mr. Paderewski is conscious, not merely of a pianist exerting uncommon skill, but of a highly sensitive, poetic, imaginative man, who has chosen the piano to bare his own soul by communicating to others the musical thoughts and emotions of great composers as he himself understands and feels them. Yet this tremendous personality—and "tremendous" is not here an extravagant word—which has been felt in the political conferences of nations and in the legislative halls of his own capital, is not aggressive, not irritating. It is accepted thankfully, as is any beneficent phenomenon of Nature.

Mr. Paderewski's second recital in Symphony hall will be on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31.

Herald Nov 30

Mr Paderewski will presumably play Dec 31 the program he has been giving at his second appearances in other cities.

Globe Dec 17

MR. PADEREWSKI

Mr. Paderewski will give his second recital here on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30 o'clock, in Symphony hall.

Herald Dec 17

Paderewski

Post 12/17

Paderewski, will give his second Boston concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31st, at 3:30 o'clock.

Post Dec 17

PADEREWSKI'S RETURN

Paderewski, the famous Polish pianist, will give his second Boston recital in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 31.

Advertiser Dec 17

Paderewski Shocked

News of Assassination of President of Poland Is Kept From Great Pianist nUtil He Had Finished Concert

Post 12/17

NEW YORK, Dec. 16.—The assassination in Warsaw today of Gabriel Narutowicz, President of Poland, was a severe shock to Ignace Jan Paderewski, noted pianist and former Polish premier. The news was kept from him until after he had finished a concert in Carnegie Hall this afternoon. Then his wife showed him the headlines in the papers.

Telling reporters that, had the news not been withheld from him, he would have cancelled the concert, Paderewski said gravely:

"Please express my absolute condemnation and regret of the act which has taken place. This is the first time in the history of Poland that a ruler has been assassinated."

The former premier then asked to be excused from further comment, saying he was exhausted. Later he cancelled a dinner engagement for tonight.

Post Dec 17

MR. PADEREWSKI

Mr. Paderewski will present the following program at his second Boston concert in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon at 3:30: Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue by Bach: Bethoven's Sonata, Op. 111; Schumann's Sonata, Op. 11; Chopin's Ballade in F major; Nocturne in B major; Etudes Nos. 12, 7 and 3, Op. 10; Mazurka No. 3 and Valse, Op. 42; Nocturne by Paderewski and one of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsodies.

Herald Dec 24

PADEREWSKI PROGRAM

Paderewski will present the following program at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon: Chromatic Fantasia and Fugus, by Bach; Beethoven Sonata Op. III and Schumann Sonata Op. II, Chopin's Ballade in F major, Noc turne in B major, Etudes Nos. 12, 7 and 3, Op 10, Mazurka No. 3 and Valse Op. 42, Nocturne by Paderewski and Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody."

Advertiser Dec 24

Paderewski's Program

Paderewski will present the following program at his second Boston concert of the season, to be given in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec 31, at 3:30: Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue by Bach, Beethoven Sonata, op. 111, and Schumann Sonata, op. 11; Chopin's Ballade in F major, Nocturne in B major, Etudes Nos. 12, 7 and 3, op. 10; Mazurka No. 3 and Valse, op. 42; Nocturne by Paderewski and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 10.

Globe Dec 24

SUNDAY afternoon, Dec. 31, in Symphony Hall, a second concert of piano-pieces played by Mr. Paderewski, returned to the practice of his profession in full range of hand, mind and spirit; in full zest of every familiar power; in new graces, even, recalled from what had seemed a vanished past. A vast public as warmly welcomes him. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Sonatas of Beethoven (Op. 111) and of Schumann (Op. 11); a miscellany from Chopin and Liszt and his own Nocturne fill the pianist's programme.

Transcript Dec 23

---

aderewski Programme

Paderewski will present the following programme at his second Boston concert of the season, to be given in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 31, at 3:30: Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue by Bach, Beethoven Sonata Op. 111 and Schumann Sonata Op. 11, Chopin's Ballade in F major, Nocturne in B major, Etudes Nos. 12, 7 and 8, Op. 10, Mazurka No. 3 and Valse Op. 42, by Paderewski, and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody.

Post Dec 24

See 14th page, following

Hempel (Jenny Lind Concert) Dec 3, 1922

HEMPEL AS JENNY LIND

Frieda Hempel, the great coloratura soprano of concert and opera, will give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, at 3:30. She will repeat in Boston her Jenny Lind program which was so successful at the centenary celebration in New York. 11-11

Traveler Nov 11

HEMPEL AS JENNY LIND

Frieda Hampel, the great coloratura soprano of concert and opera will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 3, at 3:30.

She will repeat in Boston her Jenny Lind program, which was successful at the centenary celebration in New York. The program, the costumes, the piano, and stage decorations are all faithfully copied from the records of concerts by the "Swedish Nightingale."

American 11-11

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Frieda Hempel, in the prime of golden voice, practised skill and musical insight both keen and wide-ranging. Intrinsic beauty and quickening imagination both warm her song. This time, wearing a dress like Jenny Lind's, she will repeat the numbers in which she recalled the recent centenary of the singer.

Transcript 11-18

HEMPEL AS JENNY LIND

At last Frieda Hempel is to give her famous "Jenny Lind Concert" when she sings in Boston on Sunday afternoon, December 3, in Symphony Hall at 3.30.

This concert by the great coloratura soprano of our day was an immediate success in New York, and has been repeated in many cities of America and Europe, including Sweden, the country of Jenny Lind's birth.

American 11-18

HEMPEL AS JENNY LIND

Adv 11/19

One of the most interesting concerts of the season will be the impersonation of Jenny Lind in the famous singer's own program, and the costume and accoutrements of the period by Frieda Hempel. This "Jenny Lind Concert" is to be given in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon December 3. It will be a repetition of the memorable concert which Miss Hempel gave in New York two seasons ago in honor of the 100th anniversary of the great Swedish singer.

Advertiser 11-19

HEMPEL AS LIND

Frieda Hempel will give her "Jenny Lind Concert" in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, at 3:30. It will be in every way a repetition of the memorable concert which Miss Hempel gave in Carnegie hall, New York, two seasons ago, honoring the 100th anniversary of the great Swedish singer. Miss Hempel will wear an exact replica of Jenny Lind's costume, the stage decorations are imitated, the old-fashioned square concert grand piano at which Jenny Lind sat to accompany her most famous songs will be used, and her program repeated intact. Her 11-19

Herald 11-19

HEMPLE'S JENNY LIND

The program, number for number, which Jenny Lind sang in America during her tour of 1850, will be presented by Frieda Hempel at her centenary celebration concert in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, at 3:30. She will appear in an exact replica of the hoop skirt costume of the Swedish nightingale. Other aspects of the historical concert will be closely imitated.

Miss Hempel will be assisted by Mr. Coenraad V. Bos, accompanist, and Louis P. Fritze, flutist. Her 11/20

Oh; Had I Jubal's Lyre.............Handel
Batti, Batti, O bel Masetto, from "Don Giovanni" ....Mozart
Miss Hempel.
Ave Maria.......................Schubert
The Trout........................Schubert
The Nut Tree.....................Schumann
The Herdsman's Song (The Echo Song) Norwegian Melody
Miss Hempel.
Romance ....Chopin
Waltz, G-flat.....................Chopin
Mr. Bos.
"Carnival of Venice," from "The Brides of Venice" (with flute obbligato)..Benedict
Miss Hempel.
Andante Pastoral................Th. Boehm
Minuet ....Beethoven
Mr. Fritze.
On Wings of Song..............Mendelssohn
Bird Song.........................Taubert
(Composed expressly for Mlle. Jenny Lind.)
Greeting to America—(The celebrated prize national song as sung by Mlle. Jenny Lind at her first concert in America. The poem written by Bayard Taylor, Esq. The music composed expressly for Mlle. Lind by Julius Benedict).
Home, Sweet Home, from "Clari, or the Maid of Milan"...................Bishop
Miss Hempel.

Herald 11-20

Mme. Hempel, Mr. van Bos as pianist and Mr. Fritze as flute-player, will repeat at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, the programme of the concert in which in 1850, Jenny Lind was heard for the first time in America. It yields Mme. Hempel airs from Handel and Mozart; songs by Schumann and Schubert; ... pieces by Benedict and Taubert; "A Greeting to America," likewise by Benedict and "Home, Sweet Home" somewhat singularly set down as out of the opera, "Clari or The Maid of Milan." Mme. Hempel will wear costumes like to Jenny Lind's in those days.

Transcript 11-24

HEMPEL'S PROGRAM

Frieda Hempel, looked upon as one of the greatest singers of our generation, will reproduce, number for number, at her concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 3, the program presented in America by Jenny Lind, on her famous tour of America in 1850. Amer 11/25

American 11-25

HEMPEL'S JENNY LIND PROGRAM

Frieda Hempel, looked upon as one of the greatest singers of our generation, will reproduce, number for number, at her concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, at 3:30, the program presented in America by Jenny Lind on her famous tour of America in 1850. Coenraad V. Bos will be the accompanist and Louis P. Fritze will play the flute obbligatos. Trav 11-25

Traveler 11-25

FRIEDA HEMPEL
Symphony Hall
Adv 11-26

Advertiser 11-26

HEMPEL'S JENNY LIND PROGRAM

Adv 11/26

The program, number for number, which Jenny Lind sang in America during her famous tour of 1850, will be presented by Frieda Hempel at her centenary celebration concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon. Miss Hempel will be assisted by Coenraad V. Bos, pianist, and Louis P. Fritze, the flutist. The Hempel-Lind numbers follow:

Oh! Had I Jubal's Lyre ....Handel
Batti, batti ....Mozart
Ave Maria ....Schubert
The Trout ....Schubert
The Nut Tree ....Schumann
The Herdsman's Song..Norwegian Melody
Grand Aria, "Carnival of Venice".Benedict
On Wings of Song ....Mendelssohn
Bird Song ....Taubert

Advertiser 11-26

A Jenny Lind Program

The program, number for number, which Jenny Lind sang in America during her famous tour of 1850, will be presented by Frieda Hempel at her concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec 3, at 3:30.

Miss Hempel will appear in an exact replica of the hoop skirt costume of the Swedish nightingale, and other aspects of the historical concert will be closely imitated.

Miss Hempel will be assisted by Coenraad V. Bos, her famous accompanist, and Louis P. Fritze, flutist.

The program follows: "O! Had I Jubal's Lyre," Handel; "Batti, batti, O bel Mazetto," Mozart; "Ave Maria" and "The Trout," Schubert; "The Nut Tree," Schumann; "The Herdsman's Song," Norwegian Melody; Romance and Waltz, G flat, Chopin; "Grand Aria Di Bravur, Carnival of Venice," from the opera of "The Brides of Venice," Benedict; "Andante Pastoral," Th Boehm; Minuet, Beethoven; "On Wings of Songs," Mendelssohn; "Bird Song," Taubert; "Greeting to America" (the celebrated prize National song as sung by Mademoiselle Jenny Lind at her first concert in America. The poem written by Bayard Taylor, Esq. The music, composed expressly for Mademoiselle Lind by Julius Benedict); "Home, Sweet Home," from the opera "Clari," or "The Maid of Milan," Bishop. Globe 11/26

Globe 11-26

Hempel's Jenny Lind Programme

The programme, number for number, which Jenny Lind sang in America during her famous tour of 1850, will be presented by Frieda Hempel at her centenary celebration concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, at 3:30. Post 11-26

Miss Hempel will appear in an exact replica of the hoop skirt costume of the Swedish nightingale, and other aspects of the historical concert will be closely imitated.

Miss Hempel will be assisted by Mr. Coenraad V. Bos, her famous accompanist, and Louis P. Fritze, the flutist. The programme, as reproduced, follows:

Oh! Had I Jubal's Lyre .... Handel
Batti, Batti, O bel Masetto .... Mozart
from Don Giovanni
Miss Frieda Hempel
Ave Maria .... Schubert
The Trout .... Schubert
The Nut Tree .... Schumann
The Herdsman's Song ... Norwegian Melody
(Generally known as the Echo Song)
Miss Frieda Hempel
Romance .... Chopin
Waltz, G flat .... Chopin
Performed on the Pianoforte by
Mr. Coenraad V. Bos
Grand Aria Di Bravura .... Benedict
Carnival of Venice
From the Opera of
The Brides of Venice
(With flute obbligato)
Miss Frieda Hempel
Andante Pastoral .... Th. Boehm
Minuet .... Beethoven
Performed on flute by
Mr. Louis P. Fritze
On Wings of Song .... Mendelssohn
Bird Song .... Taubert
Composed expressly for Md'slle Jenny Lind
Greeting to America.
The celebrated prize national song as sung by Mademoiselle Jenny Lind at her first concert in America. The poem written by Bayard Taylor, Esq. The music composed expressly for Mademoisello Lind by Julius Benedict
Home, Sweet Home .... Bishop
From the Opera of
Clari, or The Maid of Milan
Miss Frieda Hempel

Post 11-26

En stor Jenny Lind-konsert

äger rum i Symphony Hall nästa söndags e. m. kl. 3.30 med miss Frieda Hempel från New York som solist. Hon biträdes af den berömde flöjtisten Louis P. Fritze samt pianisten Coenraad V. Bos.

FRIEDA HEMPEL.

Programmet har följande utseende:

Part I.

1. a. Oh! Had I Jubal's Lyre .. Handel
   b. Batti, batti, O bel Masetto, from Don Giovanni .... Mozart
   Miss Frieda Hempel.
2. a. Ave Maria .... Schubert
   b. The Trout .... Schubert
   c. The Nut Tree .... Schumann
   d. The Herdsmans Song, Norwegian Melody
   (Generally known as the Echo Song)
   Miss Frieda Hempel.
3. a. Romance .... Chopin
   b. Waltz, G-flat .... Chopin
   Performed on the pianoforte by Mr Coenraad V. Bos.

Part II.

4. Grand Aria Di Bravura, Carnival of Venice, from the Opera of The Brides of Venice .... Benedict
   (With flute obligato)
   Miss Frieda Hempel.
5. a. Andante Pastoral .. Th. Boehm
   b. Minuet .... Beethoven
   Performed on the flute by Mr Louis P. Fritze.
6. a. On Wings of Song. Mendelssohn
   b. Bird Song .... Taubert
   Composed expressly for Mademoiselle Jenny Lind.
   c. Greeting to America.
   The Celebrated Prize National Song as sung by Mademoiselle Jenny Lind at her first concert in America. The poem written by Bayard Taylor, Esq. The music composed expressly for Mademoiselle Lind by Julius Benedict.
   d. Home, Sweet Home, from the Opera of Clari, or The Maid of Maid of Milan .... Bishop
   Miss Frieda Hempel.

Se annonsen!

Svea Dec 2

[112]

Hdw 11/26

FRIEDA HEMPEL, AS JENNY LIND

Herald 11-26

QUEEN OF SONG

Adv

MME. FRIEDA HEMPEL, who will repeat, at Symphony Hall tomorrow, the historic Jenny Lind program that stirred New York.

Advertiser Dec 2

Hempel in Role of Jenny Lind

Trav

In her famous Jenny Lind concert which was so highly successful in New York at the centennial celebration of the famous Swedish singer of olden times, Frieda Hempel will appear in Symphony hall tomorrow afternoon at 3:30. She is to wear a replica of Jenny Lind's costume. The decorations, program, and other details will suggest the concerts of the famous singer in her tour of America, which included several appearances in Boston. Jenny Lind's program, to be resung by Frieda Hempel, includes arias of Handel, Mozart and Benedict. The concert will end, as in Jenny Lind's concerts, with "Home, Sweet Home."

Traveler Dec 2

When the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Jenny Lind befell in the autumn of 1921, it pleased Mme. Hempel to note it in New York by a concert in which she costumed herself as "the Swedish Nightingale" and repeated the numbers in which that singer was first heard in the fifties in America. Such a concert, with Mr. Bos assisting as pianist, Mme. Hempel will repeat in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. The appointed pieces range from operatic airs, classic German lieder, a "grand aria di bravura, to a Norwegian Echo Song, "Home, Sweet Home" and "A Greeting to America." All these will employ the voice, the skill, the intelligence of Mme. Hempel all in prime. In other respects, too, the concert promises entertainment.

Transcript Dec 2

HEMPEL TOMORROW

In her famous Jenny Lind concert, which was so highly successful in New York at the centennial celebration of the famous Swedish singer of olden times, Frieda Hempel will appear in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon at 3:30. She is to wear a replica of Jenny Lind's costume. Jenny Lind's program, to be resung by Frieda Hempel, includes arias of Handel, Mozart and Benedict, a group of songs by Schubert, and single songs by Mendelssohn, Taubert and Bishop, also the famous Norwegian Echo Song. The concert will end, as in Jenny Lind's concerts, with "Home, Sweet Home."

American Dec 2

HEMPEL AS JENNY LIND

A concert of unusual beauty and interest will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30, when Frieda Hempel impersonates Jenny Lind.

Miss Hempel will reproduce Jenny Lind's old programme as sung in America, and will be assisted by Conrad V. Bos, her accompanist, and Louis P. Fritze, flute. The numbers follow:

Oh! Had I Jubal's Lyre, "Titus" ....Handel
Aria, Miss Frieda Hempel.........Mozart
Ave Maria ....Schubert
Der Jungling ....Schubert
Ungeduld ....Schumann
The Herdsman's Song ......Norwegian Melody
(Generally known as the Echo Song)
Miss Frieda Hempel
Romance ....Chopin
Waltz, G-flat ....Chopin
Performed on the pianoforte by Mr. Coenraad V. Bos

PART II.

Grand aria Di Bravura, Carnival of Venice, from the Opera of The Brides of Venice ....Benedict
(With flute obbligato)
Miss Frieda Hempel
Andante Pastoral ....Th. Boehm
Minuet ....Beethoven
Performed on the flute by Mr. Louis P. Fritze
On Wings of Song................Mendelssohn
Bird Song ....Taubert
Composed expressly for Mademoiselle Jenny Lind
Greeting to America
The celebrated prize national song as sung by Mademoiselle Jenny Lind at her first concert in America. The poem written by Bayard Taylor, Esq. The music composed expressly for Mademoiselle Lind by Julius Benedict.
"Home, Sweet Home," from the opera of "Clari, or The Maid of Milan"......Bishop
Miss Frieda Hempel

Post Dec 3

HEMPEL CONCERT

A concert of unusual beauty and interest will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30, when Frieda Hempel impersonates Jenny Lind. Mme. Hempel's Jenny Lind concert in New York was an artistic success as well as an historical revival of significance. Jenny Lind's old program will be sung in its entirety. Coanrad V. Bos, pianist and Louis P. Fritze, flute, will assist. Adv

Advertiser Dec 3

Hempel (Jenny Lind Concert) Dec 3, 1922

HEMPEL AS JENNY LIND

Frieda Hempel, the great coloratura soprano of concert and opera, will give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, at 3:30. She will repeat in Boston her Jenny Lind program which was so successful at the centenary celebration in New York.

Traveler Nov 11

HEMPEL AS JENNY LIND

Frieda Hampel, the great coloratura soprano of concert and opera will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 3, at 3:30.

She will repeat in Boston her Jenny Lind program, which was so successful at the centenary celebration in New York. The program, the costumes, the piano, and stage decorations are all faithfully copied from the records of concerts by the "Swedish Nightingale."

American 11-11

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Frieda Hempel, in the prime of golden voice, practised skill and musical insight both keen and widely ranging. Intrinsic beauty and quickening imagination both warm her song. This time, wearing a dress like Jenny Lind's, she will repeat the numbers in which she recalled the recent centenary of the singer.

Transcript 11-18

HEMPEL AS JENNY LIND

At last Frieda Hempel is to give her famous "Jenny Lind Concert" when she sings in Boston on Sunday afternoon, December 3, in Symphony Hall at 3.30.

This concert by the great coloratura soprano of our day was an immediate success in New York and has been repeated in many cities of America and Europe, including Sweden, the country of Jenny Lind's birth.

American 11-18

HEMPEL AS JENNY LIND

One of the most interesting concerts of the season will be the impersonation of Jenny Lind in the famous singer's own program, and the costume and accoutrements of the period by Frieda Hempel. This "Jenny Lind Concert" is to be given in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon December 3. It will be a repetition of the memorable concert which Miss Hempel gave in New York two seasons ago in honor of the 100th anniversary of the great Swedish singer.

Advertiser 11-19

HEMPEL AS LIND

Frieda Hempel will give her "Jenny Lind Concert" in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, at 3:30. It will be in every way a repetition of the memorable concert which Miss Hempel gave in Carnegie hall, New York, two seasons ago, honoring the 100th anniversary of the great Swedish singer. Miss Hempel will wear an exact replica of Jenny Lind's costume, the stage decorations are imitated, the old-fashioned square concert grand piano at which Jenny Lind sat to accompany her most famous songs will be used, and her program repeated intact.

Herald 11-19

HEMPLE'S JENNY LIND

The program, number for number, which Jenny Lind sang in America during her tour of 1850, will be presented by Frieda Hempel at her centenary celebration concert in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 8, at 3:30. She will appear in an exact replica of the hoop skirt costume of the Swedish nightingale. Other aspects of the historical concert will be closely imitated.

Miss Hempel will be assisted by Mr. Coenraad V. Bos, accompanist, and Louis P. Fritze, flutist.

Oh; Had I Jubal's Lyre .... Handel
Batti, Batti, O bel Masetto, from "Don Giovanni" .... Mozart
Miss Hempel.
Ave Maria .... Schubert
The Trout .... Schubert
The Nut Tree .... Schumann
The Herdsman's Song (The Echo Song) Norwegian Melody
Miss Hempel.
Romance .... Chopin
Waltz, G-flat .... Chopin
Mr. Bos.
"Carnival of Venice," from "The Brides of Venice" (with flute obbligato) .. Benedict
Miss Hempel.
Andante Pastoral .... Th. Boehm
Minuet .... Beethoven
Mr. Fritze.
On Wings of Song .... Mendelssohn
Bird Song .... Taubert
(Composed expressly for Mlle. Jenny Lind.)
Greeting to America—(The celebrated prize national song as sung by Mlle. Jenny Lind at her first concert in America. The poem written by Bayard Taylor, Esq. The music composed expressly for Mlle. Lind by Julius Benedict).
Home, Sweet Home, from "Clari, or the Maid of Milan" .... Bishop
Miss Hempel.

Herald 11-20

Mme. Hempel, Mr. van Bos as pianist and Mr. Fritze as flute-player, will repeat at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, the programme of the concert in which in 1850, Jenny Lind was heard for the first time in America. It yields Mme. Hempel airs from Handel and Mozart; songs by Schumann and Schubert; s ow-pieces by Benedict and Taubert; "A Greeting to America," likewise by Benedict—and "Home, Sweet Home" somewhat singularly set down as out of the opera, "Clari or The Maid of Milan." Mme. Hempel will wear costumes like to Jenny Lind's in those days.

Transcript 11-24

HEMPEL'S PROGRAM

Frieda Hempel, looked upon as one of the greatest singers of our generation, will reproduce, number for number, at her concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 3, the program presented in America by Jenny Lind, on her famous tour of America in 1850.

American 11-25

HEMPEL'S JENNY LIND PROGRAM

Frieda Hempel, looked upon as one of the greatest singers of our generation, will reproduce, number for number, at her concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, at 3:30, the program presented in America by Jenny Lind on her famous tour of America in 1850. Coenraad V. Bos will be the accompanist and Louis P. Fritze will play the flute obbligatos.

Traveler 11-25

FRIEDA HEMPEL
Symphony Hall

Adv 11-26

Advertiser 11-26

HEMPEL'S JENNY LIND PROGRAM

The program, number for number, which Jenny Lind sang in America during her famous tour of 1850, will be presented by Frieda Hempel at her centenary celebration concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon. Miss Hempel will be assisted by Coenraad V. Bos, pianist, and Louis P. Fritze, the flutist. The Hempel-Lind numbers follow:

Oh! Had I Jubal's Lyre .... Handel
Batti, batti .... Mozart
Ave Maria .... Schubert
The Trout .... Schubert
The Nut Tree .... Schumann
The Herdsman's Song .. Norwegian Melody
Grand Aria, "Carnival of Venice" . Benedict
On Wings of Song .... Mendelssohn
Bird Song .... Taubert

Advertiser 11-26

A Jenny Lind Program

The program, number for number, which Jenny Lind sang in America during her famous tour of 1850, will be presented by Frieda Hempel at her concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec 3, at 3:30.

Miss Hempel will appear in an exact replica of the hoop skirt costume of the Swedish nightingale, and other aspects of the historical concert will be closely imitated.

Miss Hempel will be assisted by Coenraad V. Bos, her famous accompanist, and Louis P. Fritze, flutist.

The program follows: "O! Had I Jubal's Lyre," Handel; "Batti, batti, O bel Mazetto," Mozart; "Ave Maria" and "The Trout," Schubert; "The Nut Tree," Schumann; "The Herdsman's Song," Norwegian Melody; Romance and Waltz, G flat, Chopin; "Grand Aria Di Bravur, Carnival of Venice," from the opera of "The Brides of Venice," Benedict; "Andante Pastoral," Th Boehm; Minuet, Beethoven; "On Wings of Songs," Mendelssohn; "Bird Song," Taubert; "Greeting to America" (the celebrated prize National song as sung by Mademoiselle Jenny Lind at her first concert in America. The poem written by Bayard Taylor, Esq. The music composed expressly for Mademoiselle Lind by Julius Benedict); "Home, Sweet Home," from the opera "Clari," or "The Maid of Milan," Bishop.

Globe 11-26

Hempel's Jenny Lind Programme

The programme, number for number, which Jenny Lind sang in America during her famous tour of 1850, will be presented by Frieda Hempel at her centenary celebration concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, at 3:30.

Miss Hempel will appear in an exact replica of the hoop skirt costume of the Swedish nightingale, and other aspects of the historical concert will be closely imitated.

Miss Hempel will be assisted by Mr. Coenraad V. Bos, her famous accompanist, and Louis P. Fritze, the flutist. The programme, as reproduced, follows:

Oh! Had I Jubal's Lyre .... Handel
Batti, Batti, O bel Masetto .... Mozart
from Don Giovanni
Miss Frieda Hempel
Ave Maria .... Schubert
The Trout .... Schubert
The Nut Tree .... Schumann
The Herdsman's Song ... Norwegian Melody
(Generally known as the Echo Song)
Miss Frieda Hempel
Romance .... Chopin
Waltz, G flat .... Chopin
Performed on the Pianoforte by
Mr. Coenraad V. Bos
Grand Aria Di Bravura .... Benedict
Carnival of Venice
From the Opera of
The Brides of Venice
(With flute obbligato)
Miss Frieda Hempel
Andante Pastoral .... Th. Boehm
Minuet .... Beethoven
Performed on flute by
Mr. Louis P. Fritze
On Wings of Song .... Mendelssohn
Bird Song .... Taubert
Composed expressly for Md'slle Jenny Lind
Greeting to America.
The celebrated prize national song as sung by Mademoiselle Jenny Lind at her first concert in America. The poem written by Bayard Taylor, Esq. The music composed expressly for Mademoiselle Lind by Julius Benedict
Home, Sweet Home .... Bishop
From the Opera of
Clari, or The Maid of Milan
Miss Frieda Hempel

Post 11-26

En stor Jenny Lind-konsert

äger rum i Symphony Hall nästa söndags e. m. kl. 3.30 med miss Frieda Hempel från New York som solist. Hon biträdes af den berömde flöjtisten Louis P. Fritze samt pianisten Coenraad V. Bos.

FRIEDA HEMPEL.

Programmet har följande utseende:

Part I.
1. a. Oh! Had I Jubal's Lyre .. Handel
b. Batti, batti, O bel Masetto, from Don Giovanni .... Mozart
Miss Frieda Hempel.
2. a. Ave Maria .... Schubert
b. The Trout .... Schubert
c. The Nut Tree ...... Schumann
d. The Herdsmans Song, Norwegian Melody
(Generally known as the Echo Song)
Miss Frieda Hempel.
3. a. Romance .... Chopin
b. Waltz, G-flat .... Chopin
Performed on the pianoforte by Mr Coenraad V. Bos.
Part II.
4. Grand Aria Di Bravura, Carnival of Venice, from the Opera of The Brides of Venice .... Benedict
(With flute obligato)
Miss Frieda Hempel.
5. a. Andante Pastoral .. Th. Boehm
b. Minuet .... Beethoven
Performed on the flute by Mr Louis P. Fritze.
6. a. On Wings of Song, Mendelssohn
b. Bird Song .... Taubert
Composed expressly for Mademoiselle Jenny Lind.
c. Greeting to America.
The Celebrated Prize National Song as sung by Mademoiselle Jenny Lind at her first concert in America. The poem written by Bayard Taylor, Esq. The music composed expressly for Mademoiselle Lind by Julius Benedict.
d. Home, Sweet Home, from the Opera of Clari, or The Maid of Maid of Milan .... Bishop
Miss Frieda Hempel.

Se annonsen!

Svea Dec 2

[112]

Hen 11/26.

FRIEDA HEMPEL, AS JENNY LIND

Herald 11-26

QUEEN OF SONG

MME. FRIEDA HEMPEL, who will repeat, at Symphony Hall tomorrow, the historic Jenny Lind program that stirred New York.

Advertiser Dec 2

Hempel in Role of Jenny Lind

In her famous Jenny Lind concert, which was so highly successful in New York at the centennial celebration of the famous Swedish singer of olden times, Frieda Hempel will appear in Symphony hall tomorrow afternoon at 3:30. She is to wear a replica of Jenny Lind's costume. The decorations, program, and other details will suggest the concerts of the famous singer in her tour of America, which included several appearances in Boston. Jenny Lind's program, to be resung by Frieda Hempel, includes arias of Handel, Mozart and Benedict. The concert will end, as in Jenny Lind's concerts, with "Home, Sweet Home."

Traveler Dec 2

When the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Jenny Lind befell in the autumn of 1921, it pleased Mme. Hempel to note it in New York by a concert in which she costumed herself as "the Swedish Nightingale" and repeated the numbers in which that singer was first heard in the fifties in America. Such a concert, with Mr. Bos assisting as pianist, Mme. Hempel will repeat in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. The appointed pieces range from operatic airs, classic German lieder, a "grand aria di bravura, to a Norwegian Echo Song, "Home, Sweet Home" and "A Greeting to America." All these will employ the voice, the skill, the intelligence of Mme. Hempel all in prime. In other respects, too, the concert promises entertainment.

Transcript Dec 2

HEMPEL TOMORROW

In her famous Jenny Lind concert, which was so highly successful in New York at the centennial celebration of the famous Swedish singer of olden times, Frieda Hempel will appear in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon at 3:30. She is to wear a replica of Jenny Lind's costume. Jenny Lind's program, to be resung by Frieda Hempel, includes arias of Handel, Mozart and Benedict, a group of songs by Schubert, and single songs by Mendelssohn, Taubert and Bishop, also the famous Norwegian Echo Song. The concert will end, as in Jenny Lind's concerts, with "Home, Sweet Home."

American Dec 2

HEMPEL AS JENNY LIND

A concert of unusual beauty and interest will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30, when Frieda Hempel impersonates Jenny Lind.

Miss Hempel will reproduce Jenny Lind's old programme as sung in America, and will be assisted by Conrad V. Bos, her accompanist, and Louis P. Fritze, flute. The numbers follow:

Oh! Had I Jubal's Lyre, "Titus" .... Handel
Aria, Miss Frieda Hempel .... Mozart
Ave Maria .... Schubert
Der Jungling .... Schubert
Ungeduld .... Schumann
The Herdsman's Song ...... Norwegian Melody
(Generally known as the Echo Song)
Miss Frieda Hemiel
Romance .... Chopin
Waltz, G-flat .... Chopin
Performed on the pianoforte by Mr. Coenraad V. Bos

PART II.

Grand aria Di Bravura, Carnival of Venice, from the Opera of The Brides of Venice .... Benedict
(With flute obbligato)
Miss Frieda Hempel
Andante Pastoral .... Th. Boehm
Minuet .... Beethoven
Performed on the flute by Mr. Louis P. Fritze
On Wings of Song .... Mendelssohn
Bird Song .... Taubert
Composed expressly for Mademoiselle Jenny Lind
Greeting to America
The celebrated prize national song as sung by Mademoiselle Jenny Lind at her first concert in America. The poem written by Bayard Taylor, Esq. The music composed expressly for Mademoiselle Lind by Julius Benedict.
"Home, Sweet Home," from the opera of "Clari, or The Maid of Milan" ...... Bishop
Miss Frieda Hempel

Post Dec 3.

HEMPEL CONCERT

A concert of unusual beauty and interest will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30, when Frieda Hempel impersonates Jenny Lind. Mme. Hempel's Jenny Lind concert in New York was an artistic success as well as an historical revival of significance. Jenny Lind's old program will be sung in its entirety. Coanrad V. Bos, pianist and Louis P. Fritze, flute, will assist.

Advertiser Dec 3

FRIEDA HEMPEL, who comes to Symphony Hall this afternoon to give her Jenny Lind concert.

FRIEDA HEMPEL

Advertiser Dec 3

HEMPEL AS JENNY LIND TODAY

A concert of unusual beauty and interest will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30, when Frieda Hempel impersonates Jenny Lind. Certainly no coloratura singer now living is more eminently qualified to take this part. Miss Hempel's Jenny Lind concert in New York was an artistic success as well as an historical revival of significance. She will reproduce Jenny Lind's old program as sung in America, and be assisted by Coenraad V. Bos, pianist, and Louis P. Fritze, flute.

Oh! Had I Jubal's Lyre	Handel
Aria from "Titus"	Mozart
Miss Hempel
Ave Maria	Schubert
Der Tungling	Schubert
Ungeduld	Schumann
The Herdsman's Song (Generally known as the Echo Song)	Norwegian Melody
Miss Hempel
Romance	Chopin
Waltz, G flat	Chopin
Mr. Bos
Carnival of Venice, from "The Brides of Venice" (With flute obbligato)	Benedict
Miss Hempel
Andante Pastoral	Th. Boehm
Minuet	Beethoven
Performed on the flute by Mr. Fritze
On Wings of Song	Mendelssohn
Bird Song. Composed expressly for Mlle. Jenny Lind.	Taubert
Greeting to America. The celebrated prize national song as sung by Mlle. Jenny Lind at her first concert in America. The poem written by Bayard Taylor, Esq. The music composed expressly for Mlle. Lind by Julius Benedict.
Home, Sweet Home, from the opera of Clari, or The Maid of Milan	Bishop
Miss Hempel

Herald Dec 3

Frieda Hempel will sing next Sunday in Symphony hall in costume like the one worn by Jenny Lind when she gave her first concert and with the same program. Jenny Lind is a tradition. If she were to sing today, would the public rave about her? Reading the contemporaneous criticism written when she was applauded for her virtue and her charitable deeds, we doubt it. Even her warmest admirers admitted that there was a break in her voice. It would be considered blasphemous to say that Mme. Hempel, as far as pure singing goes, probably equals, if not excels, "The Swedish Nightingale." He 11-30

Herald Nov 30

JENNY LIND SEEN AGAIN IN SINGER

Miss Hempel's Concert Gratifies Record Audience

BY OLIN DOWNES

It was not merely the singing, beautiful and finished as that was, but the complete artistic sensation of the Jenny Lind programme given yesterday afternoon by Frieda Hempel in Symphony Hall which gratified her immense audience.

IN COSTUMES OF THE 50S

The stage was set as on the historic occasion of Jenny Lind's American debut. Under the organ pipes was drapery with P. T. Barnum's slogan, "Welcome, Sweet Singer." On one side of the stage was a stand of flowers. Even the audience seemed to have fallen in with the plans of the singer, for a number sent up to the stage little old-fashioned bouquets, tight and pinched and tinselled, instead of the florists' concoctions of the present.

Then came Miss Hempel, attired in ivory satin and hooped skirt, carrying herself, too, and bowing with something of the primness of an earlier time. The illusion was pursued, even to the point of a bracelet once worn by Jenny Lind. Miss Hempel was assisted by Conraad von Bos, pianist and accompanist, and Louis Fritze, flutist. Each of these gentlemen wore the jackets and the strap trousers of the early 19th century, each benefited by the color scheme of a period permitted a man who chose to look like something or other than an undertaker.

Old and Ornate Airs

The programme consisted of the songs by immortal composers, on the one hand, and the songs of the semi-ornate and superficial character that delighted Jenny Lind's public. One may not want particularly to hear Julius Benedict's "Grand aria di bravura, Carnival of Venice, from the opera of "The Brides of Venice," by Sir Julius Benedict, with flute obligato, or Taubert's "Bird Song," composed for Jenny Lind, nor, above all, need they want to hear as anything but a historical relic the extraordinary "Greeting to America" which Benedict wrote for Miss Lind's American debut.

But as Miss Hempel sang these airs, and with the environment of the time they were performed to the wild delight of our forefathers, it made a moment of unusual beauty and of a genuinely artistic "atmesphere."

Maintained by Sheer Art

This "atmosphere" was established in a modern concert hall and maintained principally through the great art of the singer. It is not necessary to say at this time that Miss Hempel is a past mistress of coloratura, as she is in maintaining and shaping to beautiful ends a melodic line. What was surprising is the style and at times almost substance that she gave to all kinds of semi-roccoco music. No one thought of laughing when she sang the atrociously flamboyant "Greeting to America," and she achieved a true simplicity in "Home Sweet Home," an eloquence which moved her audience.

Need one say that the songs and arias by Handel, Schubert and Mendelssohn found in her a most illuminating interpreter? She sang them with youthful feeling and sincerity, with sparkle in the passages of bravura, and an enthusiasm felt by the listener.

Mr. Von Bos Plays

The principal difference between this programme and the one originally offered by Jenny Lind was the absence of an orchestra and of the basso that assisted the "sweet singer" on that occasion. In place of this basso was Mr. von Bos, who, in addition to accompanying with his customary art, played two compositions of Chopin, a "Romance" in Chopin's earlier manner that one does not readily recall, and the G flat major waltz pieces, again, very well chosen, in their rather drawing room manner, for the occasion.

Then came Mr. Fritze, an extremely capable flutist, who played Boehm's Andante Pastorale and Beethoven's Menuet, and who was also recalled. Miss Hempel's songs, as a matter of record, were Handel's "Had I Jubal's Lyre", a Mozart aria from "Titus," Schubert's "Ave Maria," "Jungling an der Quelle," Ungeduld." Mendelsohn's "On Wings of Song," the Norwegian "Echo Song," and the souvenirs and show pieces already mentioned.

Post Dec 4

MISS HEMPEL [illegible] JENNY LIND

An Amusing Afternoon in Which a Golden Voice and the Arts of Song Also Had Part—Mr. Hutcheson Exemplifies Schumann Not Too Wisely—The People's Orchestra and New Talents—Programmes in Prospect

THE listener in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon who did not find Miss Hempel's "Jenny Lind Concert" amusing would have been a churl indeed. It gave pleasure, besides, to a considerable number of elderly auditors who, with the singer's usual "following," yielded her a larger audience than by herself she has hitherto won in Boston. True, she has given here more interesting, more exacting concerts to those who would have only the pure milk of the musical word undiluted and unsweetened; but seldom outside, say, "The Daughter of the Regiment" or "The Barber of Seville"—and they on the stage—has Miss Hempel been more entertaining. She wore, for example, a frock patterned after those of the illustrious forerunner; yet, as chance would have it not so far from prevailing modes. White and satin-like it was; little garlands of roses trailed over it. A short bodice, outlining the singers comely shoulders, began it; a full skirt, asking sundry adjustments when she sat at the piano, ended it. More roses in slender wreath twined about her hair; an agreeable touch of "manner" made her bows almost curtseys. Similarly Mr. van Bos, the accompanist, donned mid-Victorian "swallow-tail," colored waistcoat and light trousers—by no means for him an unbecoming garb. Likewise did the assisting flute-player, Mr. Fritze, but not so much at his ease.

For more "color" of "Mademoiselle Lind's" first concert in America, seventy years ago at Castle Garden, a strip of blue cloth, stretched upon the organ "welcomed"—in silver embroidery—"the warbler"; while the programme, following ancient verbiage, announced a "Grand Aria di Bravura" and pieces "performed on the pianoforte" or the flute. Finally it bore also the rhymes of that "Greeting to America—the Poem by Bayard Taylor, Esq.; the Music Composed Expressly by Julius Benedict," in which, as impresario, the late P. T. Barnum took a pardonable pride. It disclosed also the little-known fact that "Home, Sweet Home," the final item, was originally a number in an opera of Bishop, "Clari, or The Maid of Milan." How closely the programme of Symphony Hall followed the programme of Castle Garden only the archæologists of music may say. Beyond peradventure Miss Hempel repeated "Mademoielle Lind's" pieces. Yet, if recollection holds the elder singer was assisted by a male voice or two, yesterday necessarily absent.

Enough, however, in these excursions into the past, is as good as a feast; while, possibly, the real feast of Sunday was Miss Hempel's singing of pieces that suited her voice and skill and fancy no less than they had "Mademoiselle Lind's." One, fortunately, was an air from Mozart, a rather workaday music from his formal "commanded" opera, "La Clemenza di Tito." In itself it will not bear comparison with "Deh, vieni" from "Figaro's Wedding" sung by Miss Hempel only a week ago at the Symphony Concerts. Yet to both she brought her rare insight, her rare felicities, as Mozartean singer. She measured and moulded the periods of the introductory declamation, wreathing them the while in golden tones. She passed to the air and unfailing were her sense and her accomplishment of the undulating progress, the spun transitions, the melting phrases, the light sustaining rhythms, the ornament here and there blossoming from the melodic stem. Not so long ago Mme. Sembrich was our mistress of Mozart. By hardly less clear title Miss Hempel now succeeds her in this divining loveliness, this sentiment become fragrance.

In turn an air of Handel—the air of "Jubal's Lyre"—invited the singer, as doubtless it had invited "Mademoiselle Lind," to the swift, ornate, keen-rhythmed, ecstatic song of which he was no less master than of slow-paced, gravely unfolding airs. Indeed it was possible to wonder whether "Mademoiselle Lind's" traditionally cool tones had all the shimmering, darting magic of Miss Hempel's. So, too, with the "Grand Aria di Bravura" out of a dead-and-gone opera of Benedict. Miss Hempel's florid song glows rather than glints; gentle are the lustres; it avoids harsh contours; it flowers upon the melody. A flowing beauty of music, even if it be no more than Benedict's she makes it—not glittering, tight-waisted feat of skill. Akin, too, were her echoing phrases in the Norwegian folk-song, shapen without flaw, yet full-bodied, rich of texture, warm. Again, the flute paled, the bird-notes of Taubert took human guise in her singing of his show-piece. Precious as its own gold is a singing voice in prime when it is wedded to a skill and discernment like Miss Hempel's in full-freighted union.

Yet the singer gave not less pleasure in three songs of Schubert. There was thrill in the beating rhythms, the rushing phrases, the flooding rhapsody of "Ungeduld." For the hundredth time anticipated climax yet set the temples pounding. Voice indeed; but also the sensibility that kindles tones and the concealed wisdom that upon them is both spur and bridle. Through "Ungeduld" sang Miss Hempel's voice in richest maturity—golden. Yet in "Ave Maria," it was silvery and virginal. So may she now color it and so also may she follow the subtle simplicities, the glamored wistfulness of Schubert's melody. Between, for neither passion nor revery, went the frank fancies, the cool charm of "Jungling an der Quelle." As completely Miss Hempel conveyed them. Add that she did not sentimentalize "Home, Sweet Home"; add that Mr. Bos somehow, somewhere discovered for piano-piece a long-hidden "Romance" of Chopin and the tale of this Lindian afternoon is done.

H. T. P.

Transcript Dec 4

HEMPEL CHARMS AS "JENNY LIND"

Soprano Stirs Enthusiasm by Costume Recital

Frieda Hempel has never seemed so genuinely charming as she did yesterday in her Jenny Lind costume at a Symphony Hall recital, which was as far as possible a reproduction of one of the musical entertainments which brought the "Swedish Nightingale" fame and fortune. It is doubtful if Jenny Lind's singing really surpassed Miss Hempel's.

The audience yesterday filled every seat and all the standing room, as Lind audiences are said to have done.

Among the very many encores were "I'll Be a Butterfly," "The Last Rose of Summer," sung in the overdecorated version used in Flotow's "Martha," Farley's "The Nikht Wind," which had to be repeated; "Dixie," and of course "The Beautiful Blue Danube," without which no Hempel recital can end properly, and "By the Waters of Minnetonka," Thurlow Lieurance's popular pseudo-Indian piece.

Not merely Miss Hempel but Mr Bos, who played her accompaniments and three piano solos, and Mr Fritze, her flutist, also heard in solos, wore costumes of the 1840s and '50s. At the back of the stage was a large blue and gold banner inscribed "Welcome to our warbler."

Jenny Lind's "Herdsman's Song" and "Bird Song," "A Greeting to America," with words by a once celebrated American author, Bayard Taylor, and music by the prolific Sir Julius Benedict, who also perpetrated a "grand aria di bravura" entitled "Carnival of Venice," were the only archaeological remains on the program. Airs by Handel and Mozart, songs by Schubert and Mendelssohn filled the rest of Miss Hempel's share of it.

Miss Hempel has often sung here in better voice than yesterday. A slight hoarseness and straining in high notes, due probably to a cold, was occasionally noticeable, though never really annoying to a listener. Her sense of style, musical brains, and unusual instinct for what things of merit audiences will like, stood her in good stead. She is one of the few concert singers always worth hearing, no matter what, how and where she sings.

~~Gl~~ Globe Dec 4

MME. HEMPEL TALKS OF LIND

Notes Changes Since Days of the Swedish Songstress

TO REPEAT CONCERT OF 1850 ON SUNDAY

Frieda Hempel, who will give next Sunday at Symphony hall a concert which is an exact replica in program and costume of that offered by Jenny Lind at Castle Garden, New York, on Sept. 11, 1850, said to a Herald reporter on her recent trip to Boston, "There must have been something romantic about the old days." "I am sure," she continued, "that if I had come up here with Barnum as my manager, as he was Jenny Lind's, he would have had me drawn to the concert next Sunday by an elephant. Now, I suppose, I must go in one of Henry Ford's chariots.

"Yes, my costume will be exactly the same as that Jenny Lind wore in her first concert," Miss Hempel said. "I shall wear on my right arm a bracelet of gold set with diamonds which was presented to Jenny by Queen Victoria. It was given to me by a friend who has collected many Lind memorabilia. I gave this same concert at Carnegie hall in New York in the fall of 1920. It seems to have caught the popular fancy. I have been invited by the King of Sweden to give it at Stockholm. That will probably be next spring.

VISITED LIND HOME

"What I love about this concert and what the public likes all over the country are the old songs that Jenny Lind gave as encores and which I'll repeat, such as "Home, Sweet Home," "The Last Rose of Summer," "Swanee River," and songs of that kind. One thing I like about "Home, Sweet Home" is that it represents the ties of this country with the mother country. You know the words were written by an American, John Payne, and the music by Sir Henry Bishop. It was first sung in Sir Henry's opera, "Clari," which was produced in London, I think about 1825. Jenny Lind always sang it at every concert. It was also a favorite of Patti.

"On my recent trip to England I visited the home of Jenny Lind in Malvern, near the ancient city of Gloucester. She was a very religious woman, and the entire house, which is kept in its original state by the present owner, is filled with religious pictures. I found many of her original manuscripts there. They have been of great value to me in my interpretation of her songs."

"Mme. Hempel, do you think that Jeny Lind is the greatest woman singer of all time?" asked the reporter.

SOME COMPARISONS

"That is very difficult to answer," replied madame. "We have no phonographic record of her voice, but in her autobiography she states the difficulty she had in singing very high notes, and she also confesses that her trill was far from perfect. She doubtless had a certain quality in her voice, however, that must have thrilled her hearers. Technically and musically a great deal more is required today than of the artists of Jenny Lind's time. Firstly the auditoriums are larger than in her time.

"The orchestras are also much larger. And the compositions are much more complex. Patti, when she was over here, made an entire tour of the country singing practically nothing but the "Barber of Seville." At the Metropolitan and other opera houses I had to sing such totally different works as 'La Traviata,' 'Die Meistersinger,' 'Rosen Kavalier,' 'The Daughter of the Regiment' and 'Lohengrin.' There you have the simple opera of the early Italian school, one of the later Italian, two Wagnerian operas, and the extremely difficult and modern Strauss."

Herald Dec 1

FRIEDA HEMPEL, who comes to Symphony Hall this afternoon to give her Jenny Lind concert.

FRIEDA HEMPEL

Advertiser Dec 3

HEMPEL AS JENNY LIND TODAY

A concert of unusual beauty and interest will be given in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30, when Frieda Hempel impersonates Jenny Lind. Certainly no coloratura singer now living is more eminently qualified to take this part. Miss Hempel's Jenny Lind concert in New York was an artistic success as well as an historical revival of significance. She will reproduce Jenny Lind's old program as sung in America, and be assisted by Coenraad V. Bos, pianist, and Louis P. Fritze, flute.

Oh! Had I Jubal's Lyre.................Handel
Aria from "Titus"......................Mozart
Miss Hempel
Ave Maria..............................Schubert
Der Tungling...........................Schubert
Ungeduld...............................Schumann
The Herdsman's Song.......Norwegian Melody
(Generally known as the Echo Song)
Miss Hempel
Romance................................Chopin
Waltz, G flat..........................Chopin
Mr. Bos
Carnival of Venice, from "The Brides of Venice"............................Benedict
(With flute obbligato)
Miss Hempel
Andante Pastoral...................Th. Boehm
Minuet.................................Beethoven
Performed on the flute by Mr. Fritze
On Wings of Song.......................Mendelssohn
Bird Song..............................Taubert
Composed expressly for Mlle. Jenny Lind.
Greeting to America
The celebrated prize national song as sung by Mlle. Jenny Lind at her first concert in America. The poem written by Bayard Taylor, Esq. The music composed expressly for Mlle. Lind by Julius Benedict.
Home, Sweet Home, from the opera of Clari, or The Maid of Milan.............Bishop
Miss Hempel

Herald Dec 3

Frieda Hempel will sing next Sunday in Symphony hall in costume like the one worn by Jenny Lind when she gave her first concert and with the same program. Jenny Lind is a tradition. If she were to sing today, would the public rave about her? Reading the contemporaneous criticism written when she was applauded for her virtue and her charitable deeds, we doubt it. Even her warmest admirers admitted that there was a break in her voice. It would be considered blasphemous to say that Mme. Hempel, as far as pure singing goes, probably equals, if not excels, "The Swedish Nightingale."

Herald Nov 30

JENNY LIND SEEN AGAIN IN SINGER

Miss Hempel's Concert Gratifies Record Audience

BY OLIN DOWNES

It was not merely the singing, beautiful and finished as that was, but the complete artistic sensation of the Jenny Lind programme given yesterday afternoon by Frieda Hempel in Symphony Hall which gratified her immense audience.

IN COSTUMES OF THE 50S

The stage was set as on the historic occasion of Jenny Lind's American debut. Under the organ pipes was drapery with P. T. Barnum's slogan, "Welcome, Sweet Singer." On one side of the stage was a stand of flowers. Even the audience seemed to have fallen in with the plans of the singer, for a number sent up to the stage little old-fashioned bouquets, tight and pinched and tinselled, instead of the florists' concoctions of the present.

Then came Miss Hempel, attired in ivory satin and hooped skirt, carrying herself, too, and bowing with something of the primness of an earlier time. The illusion was pursued, even to the point of a bracelet once worn by Jenny Lind. Miss Hempel was assisted by Conraad von Bos, pianist and accompanist, and Louis Fritze, flutist. Each of these gentlemen wore the jackets and the strap trousers of the early 19th century, each benefited by the color scheme of a period permitted a man who chose to look like something or other than an undertaker.

Old and Ornate Airs

The programme consisted of the songs by immortal composers, on the one hand, and the songs of the semi-ornate and superficial character that delighted Jenny Lind's public. One may not want particularly to hear Julius Benedict's "Grand aria di bravura, Carnival of Venice, from the opera of "The Brides of Venice," by Sir Julius Benedict, with flute obligato, or Taubert's "Bird Song," composed for Jenny Lind, nor, above all, need they want to hear as anything but a historical relic the extraordinary "Greeting to America" which Benedict wrote for Miss Lind's American debut.

But as Miss Hempel sang these airs, and with the environment of the time they were performed to the wild delight of our forefathers, it made a moment of unusual beauty and of a genuinely artistic "atmosphere."

Maintained by Sheer Art

This "atmosphere" was established in a modern concert hall and maintained principally through the great art of the singer. It is not necessary to say at this time that Miss Hempel is a past mistress of coloratura, as she is in maintaining and shaping to beautiful ends a melodic line. What was surprising is the style and at times almost substance that she gave to all kinds of semi-roccoco music. No one thought of laughing when she sang the atrociously flamboyant "Greeting to America," and she achieved a true simplicity in "Home Sweet Home," an eloquence which moved her audience.

Need one say that the songs and arias by Handel, Schubert and Mendelssohn found in her a most illuminating interpreter? She sang them with youthful feeling and sincerity, with sparkle in the passages of bravura, and an enthusiasm felt by the listener.

Mr. Von Bos Plays

The principal difference between this programme and the one originally offered by Jenny Lind was the absence of an orchestra and of the basso that assisted the "sweet singer" on that occasion. In place of this basso was Mr. von Bos, who, in addition to accompanying with his customary art, played two compositions of Chopin, a "Romance" in Chopin's earlier manner that one does not readily recall, and the G flat major waltz pieces, again, very well chosen, in their rather drawing room manner, for the occasion.

Then came Mr. Fritze, an extremely capable flutist, who played Boehm's Andante Pastorale and Beethoven's Menuet, and who was also recalled. Miss Hempel's songs, as a matter of record, were Handel's "Had I Jubal's Lyre", a Mozart aria from "Titus," Schubert's "Ave Maria," "Jungling an der Quelle, Ungeduld." Mendelssohn's "On Wings of Song," the Norwegian "Echo Song," and the souvenirs and show pieces already mentioned.

Post Dec 4

MISS HEMPEL ILLUSTRATES JENNY LIND

An Amusing Afternoon in Which a Golden Voice and the Arts of Song Also Had Part—Mr. Hutcheson Exemplifies Schumann Not Too Wisely—The People's Orchestra and New Talents—Programmes in Prospect

THE listener in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon who did not find Miss Hempel's "Jenny Lind Concert" amusing would have been a churl indeed. It gave pleasure, besides, to a considerable number of elderly auditors who, with the singer's usual "following," yielded her a larger audience than by herself she has hitherto won in Boston. True, she has given here more interesting, more exacting concerts to those who would have only the pure milk of the musical word undiluted and unsweetened; but seldom outside, say, "The Daughter of the Regiment" or "The Barber of Seville"—and they on the stage—has Miss Hempel been more entertaining. She wore, for example, a frock patterned after those of the illustrious forerunner; yet, as chance would have it not so far from prevailing modes. White and satin-like it was; little garlands of roses trailed over it. A short bodice, outlining the singers comely shoulders, began it; a full skirt, asking sundry adjustments when she sat at the piano, ended it. More roses in slender wreath twined about her hair; an agreeable touch of "manner" made her bows almost curtseys. Similarly Mr. van Bos, the accompanist, donned mid-Victorian "swallow-tail," colored waistcoat and light trousers—by no means for him an unbecoming garb. Likewise did the assisting flute-player, Mr. Fritze, but not so much at his ease.

For more "color" of "Mademoiselle Lind's" first concert in America, seventy years ago at Castle Garden, a strip of blue cloth, stretched upon the organ "welcomed"—in silver embroidery—"the warbler"; while the programme, following ancient verbiage, announced a "Grand Aria di Bravura" and pieces "performed on the pianoforte" or the flute. Finally it bore also the rhymes of that "Greeting to America—the Poem by Bayard Taylor, Esq.; the Music Composed Expressly by Julius Benedict," in which, as impresario, the late P. T. Barnum took a pardonable pride. It disclosed also the little-known fact that "Home, Sweet Home," the final item, was originally a number in an opera of Bishop, "Clari, or The Maid of Milan." How closely the programme of Symphony Hall followed the programme of Castle Garden only the archæologists of music may say. Beyond peradventure Miss Hempel repeated "Mademoielle Lind's" pieces. Yet, if recollection holds the elder singer was assisted by a male voice or two, yesterday necessarily absent.

Enough, however, in these excursions into the past, is as good as a feast; while, possibly, the real feast of Sunday was Miss Hempel's singing of pieces that suited her voice and skill and fancy no less than they had "Mademoiselle Lind's." One, fortunately, was an air from Mozart, a rather workaday music from his formal "commanded" opera, "La Clemenza di Tito." In itself it will not bear comparison with "Deh, vieni" from "Figaro's Wedding" sung by Miss Hempel only a week ago at the Symphony Concerts. Yet to both she brought her rare insight, her rare felicities, as Mozartean singer. She measured and moulded the periods of the introductory declamation, wreathing them the while in golden tones. She passed to the air and unfailing were her sense and her accomplishment of the undulating progress, the spun transitions, the melting phrases, the light sustaining rhythms, the ornament here and there blossoming from the melodic stem. Not so long ago Mme. Sembrich was our mistress of Mozart. By hardly less clear title Miss Hempel now succeeds her in this divining loveliness, this sentiment become fragrance.

In turn an air of Handel—the air of "Jubal's Lyre"—invited the singer, as doubtless it had invited "Mademoiselle Lind," to the swift, ornate, keen-rhythmed, ecstatic song of which he was no less master than of slow-paced, gravely unfolding airs. Indeed it was possible to wonder whether "Mademoiselle Lind's" traditionally cool tones had all the shimmering, darting magic of Miss Hempel's. So, too, with the "Grand Aria di Bravura" out of a dead-and-gone opera of Benedict. Miss Hempel's florid song glows rather than glints; gentle are the lustres; it avoids harsh contours; it flowers upon the melody. A flowing beauty of music, even if it be no more than Benedict's she makes it—not glittering, tight-waisted feat of skill. Akin, too, were her echoing phrases in the Norwegian folk-song, shapen without flaw, yet full-bodied, rich of texture, warm. Again, the flute paled, the bird-notes of Taubert took human guise in her singing of his show-piece. Precious as its own gold is a singing voice in prime when it is wedded to a skill and discernment like Miss Hempel's in full-freighted union.

Yet the singer gave not less pleasure in three songs of Schubert. There was thrill in the beating rhythms, the rushing phrases, the flooding rhapsody of "Ungeduld." For the hundredth time anticipated climax yet set the temples pounding. Voice indeed; but also the sensibility that kindles tones and the concealed wisdom that upon them is both spur and bridle. Through "Ungeduld" sang Miss Hempel's voice in richest maturity—golden. Yet in "Ave Maria," it was silvery and virginal. So may she now color it and so also may she follow the subtle simplicities, the glamored wistfulness of Schubert's melody. Between, for neither passion nor revery, went the frank fancies, the cool charm of "Jungling an der Quelle." As completely Miss Hempel conveyed them. Add that she did not sentimentalize "Home, Sweet Home"; add that Mr. Bos somehow, somewhere discovered for piano-piece a long-hidden "Romance" of Chopin and the tale of this Lindian afternoon is done.

H. T. P.

Transcript Dec 4

HEMPEL CHARMS AS "JENNY LIND"

Soprano Stirs Enthusiasm by Costume Recital

Frieda Hempel has never seemed so genuinely charming as she did yesterday in her Jenny Lind costume at a Symphony Hall recital, which was as far as possible a reproduction of one of the musical entertainments which brought the "Swedish Nightingale" fame and fortune. It is doubtful if Jenny Lind's singing really surpassed Miss Hempel's.

The audience yesterday filled every seat and all the standing room, as Lind audiences are said to have done.

Among the very many encores were "I'll Be a Butterfly," "The Last Rose of Summer," sung in the overdecorated version used in Flotow's "Martha," Farley's "The Nikht Wind," which had to be repeated; "Dixie," and of course "The Beautiful Blue Danube," without which no Hempel recital can end properly, and "By the Waters of Minnetonka," Thurlow Lieurance's popular pseudo-Indian piece.

Not merely Miss Hempel but Mr Bos, who played her accompaniments and three piano solos, and Mr Fritze, her flutist, also heard in solos, wore costumes of the 1840s and '50s. At the back of the stage was a large blue and gold banner inscribed "Welcome to our warbler."

Jenny Lind's "Herdsman's Song" and "Bird Song," "A Greeting to America," with words by a once celebrated American author, Bayard Taylor, and music by the prolific Sir Julius Benedict, who also perpetrated a "grand aria di bravura" entitled "Carnival of Venice," were the only archaeological remains on the program. Airs by Handel and Mozart, songs by Schubert and Mendelssohn filled the rest of Miss Hempel's share of it.

Miss Hempel has often sung here in better voice than yesterday. A slight hoarseness and straining in high notes, due probably to a cold, was occasionally noticeable, though never really annoying to a listener. Her sense of style, musical brains, and unusual instinct for what things of merit audiences will like, stood her in good stead. She is one of the few concert singers always worth hearing, no matter what, how and where she sings.

Globe Dec 4

MME. HEMPEL TALKS OF LIND

Notes Changes Since Days of the Swedish Songstress

TO REPEAT CONCERT OF 1850 ON SUNDAY

Frieda Hempel, who will give next Sunday at Symphony hall a concert which is an exact replica in program and costume of that offered by Jenny Lind at Castle Garden, New York, on Sept. 11, 1850, said to a Herald reporter on her recent trip to Boston, "There must have been something romantic about the old days." "I am sure," she continued, "that if I had come up here with Barnum as my manager, as he was Jenny Lind's, he would have had me drawn to the concert next Sunday by an elephant. Now, I suppose, I must go in one of Henry Ford's chariots.

"Yes, my costume will be exactly the same as that Jenny Lind wore in her first concert," Miss Hempel said. "I shall wear on my right arm a bracelet of gold set with diamonds which was presented to Jenny by Queen Victoria. It was given to me by a friend who has collected many Lind memorabilia. I gave this same concert at Carnegie hall in New York in the fall of 1920. It seems to have caught the popular fancy. I have been invited by the King of Sweden to give it at Stockholm. That will probably be next spring.

VISITED LIND HOME

"What I love about this concert and what the public likes all over the country are the old songs that Jenny Lind gave as encores and which I'll repeat, such as "Home, Sweet Home," "The Last Rose of Summer," "Swanee River," and songs of that kind. One thing I like about "Home, Sweet Home" is that it represents the ties of this country with the mother country. You know the words were written by an American, John Payne, and the music by Sir Henry Bishop. It was first sung in Sir Henry's opera, "Clari," which was produced in London, I think about 1825. Jenny Lind always sang it at every concert. It was also a favorite of Patti.

"On my recent trip to England I visited the home of Jenny Lind in Malvern, near the ancient city of Gloucester. She was a very religious woman, and the entire house, which is kept in its original state by the present owner, is filled with religious pictures. I found many of her original manuscripts there. They have been of great value to me in my interpretation of her songs."

"Mme. Hempel, do you think that Jeny Lind is the greatest woman singer of all time?" asked the reporter.

SOME COMPARISONS

"That is very difficult to answer," replied madame. "We have no phonographic record of her voice, but in her autobiography she states the difficulty she had in singing very high notes, and she also confesses that her trill was far from perfect. She doubtless had a certain quality in her voice, however, that must have thrilled her hearers. Technically and musically a great deal more is required today than of the artists of Jenny Lind's time. Firstly the auditoriums are larger than in her time.

"The orchestras are also much larger. And the compositions are much more complex. Patti, when she was over here, made an entire tour of the country singing practically nothing but the "Barber of Seville." At the Metropolitan and other opera houses I had to sing such totally different works as 'La Traviata,' 'Die Meistersinger,' 'Rosen Kavalier,' 'The Daughter of the Regiment' and 'Lohengrin.' There you have the simple opera of the early Italian school, one of the later Italian, two Wagnerian operas, and the extremely difficult and modern Strauss."

Herald Dec 1

Chaliapin Dec 10th 1922

CAPPRICCIO DI CHALIAPIN

Oct 7

The Renowned Singer Merrily Mocks a Horde of London Interviewers

Place—A sitting-room attached to a suite of six others in the Savoy Hotel.

Time—Cocktail hour.

Personæ—Feodor Chaliapin, seven British reporters asking leading questions in Bronx French and the correspondent of the New York Herald talking over their heads with the singer in fluent [illegible] Russian.

CHALIAPIN (In French)—Be seated, gentlemen, and enjoy with me the whiskey from which, poor impotent being that I am, I have had to abstain since I was last in England, for my voice's sake. I have been in Russia!

To Correspondent (In Russian)—God forgive me! I took back with me all I could.

Bespatted Reporter from London Daily So-and-So—Monsieur Chaliapin, they say that you have lost all your money, your fortune! How is it you can be so gay?

Chaliapin (In French)—Alas! Indeed I have. But (looking out the window into the steady drizzle outside) while the sun shines in the sky—Oh! it doesn't, well, well, never mind—while the sun should shine in the sky and there is nearly seven feet of poor Feodor and energy to move it, I will not allow myself to become despondent. Would you have me cut my throat?

Bespattered One Again Placing a Leading Question—What is it, Monsieur Chaliapin, that strikes you most forcibly about London, now that you have returned?

Chaliapin (In Russian to Correspondent)—That there wasn't a fog when I arrived (In French to Britishers)—Ah! What strikes me most is the terrible disadvantage I suffer by not being able to speak your wonderfully lovely language. I cannot understand that I should find English so hard to learn. I make tolerable headway in French, in Italian and German, and in Russia I am noted for my knowledge of swear-words and slang. But English I cannot learn. Do you not think, gentleman, that the wisest course I could adopt in order to imbibe English culture and language would be for me to engage a governess for myself? Go back to my school days again? If only I could get a governess who knew nothing on earth except English!

When I was in Berlin recently I stood outside the Reichstag gazing in stupefied wonder at a lovely statue of a beautiful maiden on the top of the building. In my demonstrative manner I cried aloud my praises of the beauty. From behind me came the remark in German "That is the only modest beauty we have left in Germany." Surely that is not so in England gentlemen?

Chaliapin (In Russian)—Have I said anything wrong or for that matter right? This pretty little fellow on the left has me guessing all the time; with his white spats in my face I cannot think.

Spats-Wearer—Sir, may I ask, what is the funniest thing you have seen in London this time?

Chaliapin (In French)—Ah! Let me think!

To Correspondent (In Russian)—How penetrating are this gentleman's questions! "What is the funniest thing I have ever seen in London?" My word, man, is there anything funny in England? What on earth shall I tell the child?

Chaliapin (In French)—My darling man, the funniest thing I have noticed in London since my arrival is your last question! Englishmen are dreadfully unfunny. They are so thoughtful and serious. But of course, interesting.

At this point Chaliapin notices that one little man in a corner is staring vapidly into the air without appearing to grasp anything of the conversations. He addresses him with his huge arms extended as though he intended to take him to his ponderous bosom.

Chaliapin (In French)—Dear little man, don't you understand, eh?

Unkempt Miniature (In English)—Oh, really it doesn't matter. I can understand your hands when you talk. You should have been an actor, sir.

Chaliapin out of the Throes of Hilarious Laughter, in Broken English—My little man, don't worry with my nonsense. Drink the whiskey near you.

Spats-Wearer—Monsieur Chaliapin, can you tell us a funny story?

Chaliapin (In Russian, to Correspondent)—My God! Does this individual, whose brains appear to be hidden under his spats think that I am a performing monkey? This atmosphere is not conducive to mirth, but I will invent one.

Chaliapin to Spats—You really are clever as an interviewer. By the time you have finished that bottle of whiskey you will know all my private business. . . . Yes, here is a funny story.

THE STORY

When I got on the boat at Bergen, in Norway, to cross to England I was very ill. Everything had gone wrong in that country. I mean there is prohibition there, and I had to use a napkin every time I wanted a little whisky in a restaurant. I walked up and down the deck of the ship in great agitation. I looked out to sea in vain searching for something that would catch my eye and make me see the joyous side of things. Of a sudden I noticed that a great, big man was continuously passing me in my little promenade. Again and again he passed, and again and again he stared at me fixedly. He even got behind a door and looked at me furtively from behind it with half his head hidden.

My heart began to beat wildly. I travel, as you know, on a Soviet passport. I [illegible] this big man was going to make [illegible] to Russia. Visions upon visions [illegible] my [illegible] [illegible] sians have been able to invent since the Germans started the war business; I, who had been threatened with every danger! Who had nearly died for lack of whiskey and from the results of it; I [illegible] upon!

My nerves, weak and jaded, gave way under the strain. I went to the steward. "Steward," I cried, "I see on your benign countenance the trail of whiskey. This country is dying of prohibition. Give me some whiskey. I will sing you the whole of 'Faust'! The steward stood amazed at my perspicacity. "How do you know, sir," he asked, 'that I am a whiskey man?"

"Your face, man," I cried in a frenzy of excitement. "Your face!"

The steward gave me a whole bottle of whiskey. I retired in haste to my room. No, my box. I folded myself up on the absurd bunk. Next to me was a little round porthole. The water splashed only a foot beneath its level. It looked cold and angry. I opened the bottle and took a long draught. Oh! it was good. I felt brave enough to fight a legion of spies. My God! Heavens above! An eye! An eye gazed—no glared—in upon me. A great big bloodshot eye! Ye gods! I took another frantic gulp of whiskey. Then, placing the bottle by my side, shading my eyes, I timorously looked out of the window. Gentlemen, I ask you, what was it? "A fish. He wanted the whiskey."

Chaliapin (In Russian to Correspondent)—Can I get these people to disappear. Can you, who speak all languages, make them go away? I have to say some acts of contrition for my soul, which is now besmirched with the filth of my inventions. Tell them to take the whiskey bottle with them, and tell them whatever you like when you get them alone. I am not seeking publicity here, for I might then have to stay as the result of it. The smoke of this town and its reporters are too much for me."

The Correspondent then suggested to the gathering that Chaliapin was tired and offered to tell them all about it down stairs. They went. Before The Correspondent left the room Chaliapin shouted in his stentorian voice, speaking French: "Gentlemen, come back again and see me another day!"

Then to The Correspondent in Russian—For God's and Chaliapin's sake report my sudden death when Fleet Street shows any desire to ask me funny stories again. God love you.

(Reprinted from The New York Herald)

Transcript Oct 7

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Fedor Chaliapin, the magnificent Russian, unexcelled among the singers of our time in the range and quality of his characterizing and dramatizing power, in command of his audience, in mastery of the larger arts of song. His prestige heralds him. Memories of his visits to Boston last winter whet a waiting public.

Trans 11/18

Transcript Nov 18

---

said.

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Fedor Chaliapin, the magnificent Russian, unexcelled among the singers of our time in the range and quality of his characterizing and dramatizing power, in command of his audience, in mastery of the larger arts of song. His prestige heralds him. Memories of his visits to Boston last winter whet a waiting public.

Trans 11/25

Transcript Nov 25

CHALIAPIN

Trav 11/25

Feodor Chaliapin, the great Russian bass singer, whose concerts in America last season were a revelation to thousands of unsuspected possibilities in the interpretation of songs, has returned to this country, and will give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, at 3:30.

Traveler Nov 25

CHALIAPIN

Feodor Chaliapin will give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon Dec. 10, at 3:30.

Her 11-26

Herald Nov 26

CHALIAPIN COMING

Feodor Chaliapin, the great Russian bass singer, will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 10.

Adv 11/26

Advertiser Nov 26

Chaliapin, who will sing at Symphony Hall Dec 10, has just sent his stepson to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology to study engineering.

Globe 11/26

Globe Nov 26

Chaliapin

Post 11/26

Feodor Chaliapin, the great Russian bass singer, whose concerts in America last season were a revelation to thousands of unsuspected possibilities in the interpretation of songs, has returned to this country and will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, at 3:30.

Chaliapin has appeared in New York in concert, and with the Metropolitan Opera Company, in each case with a success even greater than last season.

Post Nov 26

SUNDAY afternoon, Dec. 10, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Fedor Chaliapin, the magnificent Russian, unexcelled among the singers of our time in the range and quality of his characterizing and dramatizing power, in command of his audience, in mastery of the larger arts of song. His prestige heralds him. Memories of his visits to Boston last winter whet a waiting public. Trans 12-2

Transcript Dec 2

CHALIAPIN CONCERT

Feodor Chaliapin is to visit Boston following his great success in New York, and will appear at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon. The great Russian bass singer is in fine form this season. He will announce his songs from the stage, as is his usual custom. Adv 12-3

Advertiser Dec 3

Chaliapin Coming

Feodor Chaliapin is to visit Boston, following his great success of the present season in New York, both in concert and in three leading roles at the Metropolitan Opera House, by an appearance at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec 10, at 3:30.

The great Russian bass singer is considered to be in fine voice, and his success in New York has been even greater than last season when, appearing for the first time in several years, he drew tremendous crowds in concert and opera.

Chaliapin will announce his songs from the stage by number, in the book of words sold to the audience, in accordance with his usual custom.

Glo 12/3

Globe Dec 3

Chaliapin

Feodor Chaliapin, the distinguished Russian bass-baritone, will sing in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, at 3:30.

Post 12-3

Chaliapin will announce his songs from the stage by number, in accordance with his usual custom.

Post Dec 3

CHALIAPIN

Feodor Chaliapin will sing in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, at 3:30. He will announce his songs from the stage by number, in accordance with his usual custom. Her 12-3

Herald Dec 3

CHALIAPIN TOMORROW

Feodor Chaliapin who, in several roles at the Metropolitan Opera House, has made himself one of the most pronounced figures of the season, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. According to his usual custom Chaliapin will not follow a pre-arranged program but will announce the song of his choice by number from the stage. Amer 12-9

American Dec 9

Shalyapin Returns

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon, for first of three concerts in which he will be heard in Boston this winter, comes Fedor Chaliapin—or as he prefers, Shalyapin, the magnificent Russian, unexcelled among the singers of our time in the range and quality of his characterizing and dramatizing power, in command of his audience, in mastery of the larger arts of song. His prestige heralds him. Memories of his visits to Boston last winter whet a waiting public. As usual he will choose his pieces at will througn the course of the concert, giving to the audience the number identifying them in the printed song-books. Needless to say, he will range widely, since all human moods in music are his province. Trans 12-9

Transcript Dec 9

Chaliapin Today

Glo 12-10

In Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30 Feodor Chaliapin will give his Boston concert. The great Russian singer, who in dramatic interpretation of his large repertory of song, has distinguished himself above all other singers, will not follow his prearranged program. He will announce the songs of his choice by numbers from the stage, so that those unacquainted with the Russian language may follow from the English text of a booklet which will be distributed free, contrary to last year when it cost a quarter.

Globe Dec 10

CHALIAPIN TODAY

In Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30 Feodor Chaliapin will give his Boston concert. The great Russian singer, in his dramatic interpretation of his large repertory of song, has distinguished himself above all other singers, will not follow a pre-arranged program. He will announce the songs of his choice by number from the stage, so that those unacquainted with the Russian language may follow from the English text of a book which will be distributed free. Her 12-10

Herald Dec 10

CHALIAPIN TOMORROW

Feodor Chaliapin who, in several roles at the Metropolitan Opera House, has made himself one of the most pronounced figures of the season, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. According to his usual custom, Chaliapin will not follow a pre-arranged program but will announce the song of his choice by number from the stage. Amer 12-9

American Dec 9

CHALIAPIN HERE TODAY

Adv 12-10

In Symphony Hall this afternoon Feodor Chaliapin will give his first Boston concert of the season. The great Russian singer will announce the songs by number from the stage.

Advertiser Dec 16

CHALIAPIN AT SYMPHONY HALL

Her 12-11

Famous Russian Bass Makes a Remarkable Impression Here

GREAT ATTENTION TO DRAMATIC SIDE

At his concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall, Feodor Chaliapin, the Russian bass, had the assistance of Max Rabinowitch, pianist, and Nicholas Levienne, 'cellist, who each performed to the content of the vast audience. Mr. Chaliapin sang in Italian Leporello's "Catalogue" air from "Don Giovanni" and Beethoven's "In questa tomba." In Russian he sang Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers," "The Old Corporal" and "We Parted Haughtily" by Dargomizhsky, "When the king went forth to war," a stirring song by Koeneman; "O could I but express in song" by Malashkin, Moussorgsky's "Song of the Flea," a ballad by Rubinstein, the Volga boat song, and an air from Rachmaninoff's opera "Aleko." Doubtless there were more songs still. The occasion was one of wild enthusiasm, a striking demonstration of the high place Russians have accorded their fellow-countryman.

It is no easy task, nevertheless, for a person hearing Mr. Chaliapin for the first time to give people who have never heard him at all, if there still are any such, an impression of what his art is like. He has, first of all, a noble voice, large, sonorous, admirably trained, and also, for a voice of its great bulk, of an unusual flexibility. He has as well an exceedingly capable vocal technique; in short, he can sing, Mr. Chaliapin, from a pianissimo that does not make throats ache in sympathy to a tremendous tone that still stays a singing tone, not a shout bawled out by force of a muscular throat.

Vocally, indeed, all Mr. Chaliapin's ways yesterday were a pleasure to listen to. In other respects, however, opinions are sure to differ. Mr. Chaliapin, in studying a new song, would appear to busy himself first of all with the way best to suggest the dramatic essence of the text, by means of voice inflections, accents, pauses, short or long—very long indeed if so he finds it expressive—body posturing and facial play. Then, this done, and seemingly only then, he fits in the music as best he may. The result is dramatically effective, in songs above all which are unfamiliar or which are intrinsically more dramatic than musical. That Mr. Chaliapin's way, however, with Mozart, Beethoven and Schumann is the most becoming way, everybody would not assent to—even though there is no denying that for five minutes yesterday Leporello himself did stand on the stage before us!

R. R. G.

Herald Dec 11

Chaliapin Dec 10th 1922

CAPPRICCIO DI CHALIAPIN

Transcript Oct 7

The Renowned Singer Merrily Mocks a Horde of London Interviewers

Place—A sitting-room attached to a suite of six others in the Savoy Hotel.

Time—Cocktail hour.

Personæ—Feodor Chaliapin, seven British reporters asking leading questions in Bronx French and the correspondent of the New York Herald talking over their heads with the singer in fluent Moscow Russian.

CHALIAPIN (In French)—Be seated, gentlemen, and enjoy with me the whiskey from which, poor impotent being that I am, I have had to abstain since I was last in England, for my voice's sake. I have been in Russia!

To Correspondent (In Russian)—God forgive me! I took back with me all I could.

Bespatted Reporter from London Daily So-and-So—Monsieur Chaliapin, they say that you have lost all your money, your fortune! How is it you can be so gay?

Chaliapin (In French)—Alas! Indeed I have. But (looking out the window into the steady drizzle outside) while the sun shines in the sky—Oh! it doesn't, well, well, never mind—while the sun should shine in the sky and there is nearly seven feet of poor Feodor and energy to move it, I will not allow myself to become despondent. Would you have me cut my throat?

Bespattered One Again Placing a Leading Question—What is it, Monsieur Chaliapin, that strikes you most forcibly about London, now that you have returned?

Chaliapin (In Russian to Correspondent)—That there wasn't a fog when I arrived. (In French to Britishers)—Ah! What strikes me most is the terrible disadvantage I suffer by not being able to speak your wonderfully lovely language. I cannot understand that I should find English so hard to learn. I make tolerable headway in French, in Italian and German, and in Russia I am noted for my knowledge of swear-words and slang. But English I cannot learn. Do you not think, gentleman, that the wisest course I could adopt in order to imbibe English culture and language would be for me to engage a governess for myself? Go back to my school days again? If only I could get a governess who knew nothing on earth except English!

When I was in Berlin recently I stood outside the Reichstag gazing in stupefied wonder at a lovely statue of a beautiful maiden on the top of the building. In my demonstrative manner I cried aloud my praises of the beauty. From behind me came the remark in German "That is the only modest beauty we have left in Germany." Surely that is not so in England gentlemen?

Chaliapin (In Russian)—Have I said anything wrong or for that matter right? This pretty little fellow on the left has me guessing all the time; with his white spats in my face I cannot think.

Spats-Wearer—Sir, may I ask, what is the funniest thing you have seen in London this time?

Chaliapin (In French)—Ah! Let me think!

To Correspondent (In Russian)—How penetrating are this gentleman's questions! "What is the funniest thing I have ever seen in London?" My word, man, is there anything funny in England? What on earth shall I tell the child?

Chaliapin (In French)—My darling man, the funniest thing I have noticed in London since my arrival is your last question! Englishmen are dreadfully unfunny. They are so thoughtful and serious. But of course, interesting.

At this point Chaliapin notices that one little man in a corner is staring vapidly into the air without appearing to grasp anything of the conversations. He addresses him with his huge arms extended as though he intended to take him to his ponderous bosom.

Chaliapin (In French)—Dear little man, don't you understand, eh?

Unkempt Miniature (In English)—Oh, really it doesn't matter. I can understand your hands when you talk. You should have been an actor, sir.

Chaliapin out of the Throes of Hilarious Laughter, in Broken English—My little man, don't worry with my nonsense. Drink the whiskey near you.

Spats-Wearer—Monsieur Chaliapin, can you tell us a funny story?

Chaliapin (In Russian, to Correspondent)—My God! Does this individual, whose brains appear to be hidden under his spats think that I am a performing monkey? This atmosphere is not conducive to mirth, but I will invent one.

Chaliapin to Spats—You really are clever as an interviewer. By the time you have finished that bottle of whiskey you will know all my private business. . . . Yes, here is a funny story.

THE STORY

When I got on the boat at Bergen, in Norway, to cross to England I was very ill. Everything had gone wrong in that country. I mean there is prohibition there, and I had to use a napkin every time I wanted a little whisky in a restaurant. I walked up and down the deck of the ship in great agitation. I looked out to sea in vain searching for something that would catch my eye and make me see the joyous side of things. Of a sudden I noticed that a great, big man was continuously passing me in my little promenade. Again and again he passed, and again and again he stared at me fixedly. He even got behind a door and looked at me furtively from behind it with half his head hidden.

My heart began to beat wildly. I travel, as you know, on a Soviet passport. I thought this big man was going to make me return to Russia. Visions upon visions [illegible] before my mind. Nightmares [illegible] each other in wild disorder across [illegible] Spies! [illegible] Everywhere [illegible] sians have been able to invent since the Germans started the war business; I, who had been threatened with every danger! Who had nearly died for lack of whiskey and from the results of it; I spied upon!

My nerves, weak and jaded, gave way under the strain. I went to the steward. "Steward," I cried, "I see on your benign countenance the trail of whiskey. This country is dying of prohibition. Give me some whiskey. I will sing you the whole of 'Faust'! The steward stood amazed at my perspicacity. "How do you know, sir," he asked, 'that I am a whiskey man?"

"Your face, man," I cried in a frenzy of excitement. "Your face!"

The steward gave me a whole bottle of whiskey. I retired in haste to my room. No, my box. I folded myself up on the absurd bunk. Next to me was a little round porthole. The water splashed only a foot beneath its level. It looked cold and angry. I opened the bottle and took a long draught. Oh! it was good. I felt brave enough to fight a legion of spies. My God! Heavens above! An eye! An eye gazed—no glared—in upon me. A great big bloodshot eye! Ye gods! I took another frantic gulp of whiskey. Then, placing the bottle by my side, shading my eyes, I timorously looked out of the window. Gentlemen, I ask you, what was it? "A fish. He wanted the whiskey."

Chaliapin (In Russian to Correspondent)—Can I get these people to disappear. Can you, who speak all languages, make them go away? I have to say some acts of contrition for my soul, which is now besmirched with the filth of my inventions. Tell them to take the whiskey bottle with them, and tell them whatever you like when you get them alone. I am not seeking publicity here, for I might then have to stay as the result of it. The smoke of this town and its reporters are too much for me."

The Correspondent then suggested to the gathering that Chaliapin was tired and offered to tell them all about it down stairs. They went. Before The Correspondent left the room Chaliapin shouted in his stentorian voice, speaking French: "Gentlemen, come back again and see me another day!"

Then to The Correspondent in Russian—For God's and Chaliapin's sake report my sudden death when Fleet Street shows any desire to ask me funny stories again. God love you.

(Reprinted from The New York Herald)

Transcript Oct 7

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Fedor Chaliapin, the magnificent Russian, unexcelled among the singers of our time in the range and quality of his characterizing and dramatizing power, in command of his audience, in mastery of the larger arts of song. His prestige heralds him. Memories of his visits to Boston last winter whet a waiting public.

Trans 11-18

Transcript Nov 18

---

said.

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Fedor Chaliapin, the magnificent Russian, unexcelled among the singers of our time in the range and quality of his characterizing and dramatizing power, in command of his audience, in mastery of the larger arts of song. His prestige heralds him. Memories of his visits to Boston last winter whet a waiting public.

Transcript Nov 25

CHALIAPIN

Trav 11-25

Feodor Chaliapin, the great Russian bass singer, whose concerts in America last season were a revelation to thousands of unsuspected possibilities in the interpretation of songs, has returned to this country, and will give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, at 3:30.

CHIGRINSKY

Traveler Nov 25

CHALIAPIN

Feodor Chaliapin will give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon Dec. 10, at 3:30. Her 11-26

Herald Nov 26

CHALIAPIN COMING

Adv 11-26

Feodor Chaliapin, the great Russian bass singer, will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 10.

Advertiser Nov 26

Chaliapin, who will sing at Symphony Hall Dec 10, has just sent his stepson to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology to study engineering. Globe 11-26

Globe Nov 26

Chaliapin

Post 11/26

Feodor Chaliapin, the great Russian bass singer, whose concerts in America last season were a revelation to thousands of unsuspected possibilities in the interpretation of songs, has returned to this country and will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, at 3:30.

Chaliapin has appeared in New York in concert, and with the Metropolitan Opera Company, in each case with a success even greater than last season.

Post Nov 26

SUNDAY afternoon, Dec. 10, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Fedor Chaliapin, the magnificent Russian, unexcelled among the singers of our time in the range and quality of his characterizing and dramatizing power, in command of his audience, in mastery of the larger arts of song. His prestige heralds him. Memories of his visits to Boston last winter whet a waiting public. Trans 12-2

Transcript Dec 2

CHALIAPIN CONCERT

Feodor Chaliapin is to visit Boston following his great success in New York, and will appear at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon. The great Russian bass singer is in fine form this season. He will announce his songs from the stage, as is his usual custom. Adv 12-3

Advertiser Dec 3

Chaliapin Coming

Feodor Chaliapin is to visit Boston, following his great success of the present season in New York, both in concert and in three leading roles at the Metropolitan Opera House, by an appearance at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec 10, at 3:30.

The great Russian bass singer is considered to be in fine voice, and his success in New York has been even greater than last season when appearing for the first time in several years, he drew tremendous crowds in concert and opera.

Chaliapin will announce his songs from the stage by number, in the book of words sold to the audience, in accordance with his usual custom.

Globe Dec 3

Chaliapin

Feodor Chaliapin, the distinguished Russian bass-baritone, will sing in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, at 3:30.

Chaliapin will announce his songs from the stage by number, in accordance with his usual custom.

Post 12-3

Post Dec 3

CHALIAPIN

Feodor Chaliapin will sing in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, at 3:30. He will announce his songs from the stage by number, in accordance with his usual custom. Her 12-3

TRIBUTE TO FRANCK

Herald Dec 3

CHALIAPIN TOMORROW

Feodor Chaliapin who, in several roles at the Metropolitan Opera House, has made himself one of the most pronounced figures of the season, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. According to his usual custom, Chaliapin will not follow a pre-arranged program but will announce the song of his choice by number from the stage.

American Dec 9

Shalyapin Returns

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon, for first of three concerts in which he will be heard in Boston this winter, comes Fedor Chaliapin—or as he prefers, Shalyápin, the magnificent Russian, unexcelled among the singers of our time in the range and quality of his characterizing and dramatizing power, in command of his audience, in mastery of the larger arts of song. His prestige heralds him. Memories of his visits to Boston last winter whet a waiting public. As usual he will choose his pieces at will through the course of the concert, giving to the audience the number identifying them in the printed song-books. Needless to say, he will range widely, since all human moods in music are his province. Trans 12-9

Transcript Dec 9

Chaliapin Today

Glb 12-10

In Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30 Feodor Chaliapin will give his Boston concert. The great Russian singer, who in dramatic interpretation of his large repertory of song, has distinguished himself above all other singers, will not follow his prearranged program. He will announce the songs of his choice by numbers from the stage, so that those unacquainted with the Russian language may follow from the English text of a booklet which will be distributed free, contrary to last year when it cost a quarter.

Globe Dec 10

CHALIAPIN TODAY

In Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30 Feodor Chaliapin will give his Boston concert. The great Russian singer, in his dramatic interpretation of his large repertory of song, has distinguished himself above all other singers, will not follow a pre-arranged program. He will announce the songs of his choice by number from the stage, so that those unacquainted with the Russian language may follow from the English text of a book which will be distributed free. Her 12-10

Herald Dec 10

CHALIAPIN TOMORROW

Feodor Chaliapin who, in several roles at the Metropolitan Opera House, has made himself one of the most pronounced figures of the season, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. According to his usual custom, Chaliapin will not follow a pre-arranged program but will announce the song of his choice by number from the stage. Am 12-9

American Dec 9

CHALIAPIN HERE TODAY

Adv 12-10

In Symphony Hall this afternoon Feodor Chaliapin will give his first Boston concert of the season. The great Russian singer will announce the songs by number from the stage.

Advertiser Dec 16

CHALIAPIN AT SYMPHONY HALL

Her 12-11

Famous Russian Bass Makes a Remarkable Impression Here

GREAT ATTENTION TO DRAMATIC SIDE

At his concert yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall, Feodor Chaliapin, the Russian bass, had the assistance of Max Rabinowitch, pianist, and Nicholas Levienne, 'cellist, who each performed to the content of the vast audience. Mr. Chaliapin sang in Italian Leporello's "Catalogue" air from "Don Giovanni" and Beethoven's "In questa tomba." In Russian he sang Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers," "The Old Corporal" and "We Parted Haughtily" by Dargomizhsky, "When the king went forth to war," a stirring song by Koeneman; "O could I but express in song" by Malashkin, Moussorgsky's "Song of the Flea," a ballad by Rubinstein, the Volga boat song, and an air from Rachmaninoff's opera "Aleko." Doubtless there were more songs still. The occasion was one of wild enthusiasm, a striking demonstration of the high place Russians have accorded their fellow-countryman.

It is no easy task, nevertheless, for a person hearing Mr. Chaliapin for the first time to give people who have never heard him at all, if there still are any such, an impression of what his art is like. He has, first of all, a noble voice, large, sonorous, admirably trained, and also, for a voice of its great bulk, of an unusual flexibility. He has as well an exceedingly capable vocal technique; in short, he can sing, Mr. Chaliapin, from a pianissimo that does not make throats ache in sympathy to a tremendous tone that still stays a singing tone, not a shout bawled out by force of a muscular throat.

Vocally, indeed, all Mr. Chaliapin's ways yesterday were a pleasure to listen to. In other respects, however, opinions are sure to differ. Mr. Chaliapin, in studying a new song, would appear to busy himself first of all with the way best to suggest the dramatic essence of the text, by means of voice inflections, accents, pauses, short or long—very long indeed if so he finds it expressive—body posturing and facial play. Then, this done, and seemingly only then, he fits in the music as best he may. The result is dramatically effective, in songs above all which are unfamiliar or which are intrinsically more dramatic than musical. That Mr. Chaliapin's way, however, with Mozart, Beethoven and Schumann is the most becoming way, everybody would not assent to—even though there is no denying that for five minutes yesterday Leporello himself did stand on the stage before us!

R. R. G.

Herald Dec 11

[114]

Chaliapin at Symphony Hall

Am. 12/11

Russia's most celebrated singer, Feodor Chaliapin, was the star of the Sunday afternoon concert at Symphony Hall. Nicholas Levienne, pianist, and Max Rabinowitch, violinist, assisted quite creditably.

Chaliapin, who returned to this country chiefly to fill an opera engagement in New York, was in good form. His sonorous voice shows some signs of wear and he finds it difficult to keep to the pitch—or else he is indifferent on that point. First of all, he is an opera singer. Acting is as much a part of his art as singing. But, being a great artist, he is at home on any stage. He dramatizes the simplest song and often gives it a vitality it never seemed to have before. In this field he is pre-eminent.

Advertiser Dec 11

CHALIAPIN STIRS GREAT AUDIENCE

Globe 12/11

Russian Singer Cheered at Symphony Hall

Feodor Chaliapin roused an audience that filled Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon to so unusual a pitch of enthusiasm that many men cheered the singer as loudly as though he were a pitcher in a World's Series game. One wishes that he could add that those who cheered were all of American parentage, but, at any rate, such natural and spontaneously-expressed feeling for a musician of genius augurs well for the future of music in this country.

Mr Chaliapin was suffering from a cold, which took some of the suavity out of his voice. The concert was needlessly dragged out by the inclusion on the program of numbers for a pianist and cellist, whose abilities do not qualify them for a Symphony Hall appearance.

The audience probably would have been perfectly satisfied with the 12 numbers Chaliapin himself sang, without the efforts of Mr Rabinowitsch and Mr Levienne. Mr Rabinowistch proved himself an excellent accompanist. Mr Levienne, among other things, played Rubinstein's "Melody in F" out of tune, very sentimentally, with a peculiarly husky tone.

Chaliapin's numbers, announced as usual by him from the stage, were, in order, the soliloquy of Aleko from Rachmainoff's opera with that title, Dargomizhsky's "Corporal," Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers," a Rubinstein "Ballad," a love song by Malasbkin, Beethoven's "In questa tomba," Dargomizhsky's "We Parted," Leporello's "Catalogue" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Koeneman's "When the King Went Forth to War"; the "Volga Boatman's Song," which had to be repeated; the Song of the Flea" from Goethe's "Fuast," set by Musorgsky; and as final encore a humorous Russian folk song. All except the Beethoven and Mozart, given in Italian, were sung in Russian.

Chaliapin has a gift of conveying plain every-day human emotion to the plain people, the like of which America has never seen in anyone else in our day. He can sweep even a sophisticated auditor off his feet by the sheer dramatic power of his interpretations. His farce and his heroics are equally fine. Even the irony of Mephistopheles and the despair of "In questa tomba" are not beyond him. These things being true what does it matter that his singing, as singing, has grave flaws, and that his voice is not the greatest, or even the biggest, on record?

Globe Dec 11

CHALIAPIN TODAY

Post 12/10

In Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30 Feodor Chaliapin will give his Boston concert. The distinguished Russian singer will not follow a pre-arranged programme. He will announce the songs of his choice by number from the stage, so that those unacquainted with the Russian language may follow from the English text of a booklet which will be distributed free of charge.

CHALIAPIN IN RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

Am. 12/11

Apparently all the Russian enthusiasmwhich there is in Boston this week was given free rein at Symphony Hall when Feodor Chaliapin, bass, considered Russia's greatest singer, appeared for a recital.

Not only was the regular Sunday afternoon audience in attendance, but the entire cast of the Russian Opera Company was there in force, and all the rest of the countrymen of the artist.

Mr. Chaliapin's method of singing a program of songs is rather unique and striking sensible. He furnishes the audience with a text book of English translations of all his songs and then he proceeds to sing the songs for which he is in mood at the moment, announcing them from the stage by number.

Dramatically speaking, the high points of the afternoon were these songs; "The Two Grenadiers" by Schumann; "When the King Went Forth to War;" and "The River Volgo." The last received such an ovation of appreciation that Mr. Chaliapin repeated it.

Assisting Mr. Chaliapin were Max Rabinowitch, pianist, who accompanied both for the singer and for Nicholas Levienne, cellist.

American Dec 11

CHALIAPIN IN RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

Am. 12/11

Apparently all the Russian enthusiasmwhich there is in Boston this week was given free rein at Symphony Hall when Feodor Chaliapin, bass, considered Russia's greatest singer, appeared for a recital.

Not only was the regular Sunday afternoon audience in attendance, but the entire cast of the Russian Opera Company was there in force, and all the rest of the countrymen of the artist.

Mr. Chaliapin's method of singing a program of songs is rather unique and striking sensible. He furnishes the audience with a text book of English translations of all his songs and then he proceeds to sing the songs for which he is in mood at the moment, announcing them from the stage by number.

Dramatically speaking, the high points of the afternoon were these songs; "The Two Grenadiers" by Schumann; "When the King Went Forth to War;" and "The River Volgo." The last received such an ovation of appreciation that Mr. Chaliapin repeated it.

Assisting Mr. Chaliapin were Max Rabinowitch, pianist, who accompanied both for the singer and for Nicholas Levienne, cellist.

Chicago Opera Repertory—A New Ravel Sonata—The Beggar's Opera—Condemns Infant Prodigies

"Art!" said Feodor Chaliapin, prior to his concert in Symphony Hall. "There is no measuring it. There are no boundaries, there is no end. It is like life. It is like God."

We mentally compared this with the remarks of a young man from Harvard who asked us one day what our esthetic principles were. When we replied in all innocence and candor that we hadn't any he was confused and disturbed. "How can you be a critic," he said, "if you haven't esthetic standards by which to judge a work of art?"

We are glad, on such an issue as this, to be counted out. We make no professions of esthetic omniscience, or even of impersonating a "critic." We feel infinitely better listening to Chaliapin.

HIS IDEALS

We asked if there were other singers of his interpretive methods in Russia. Was his vocal art typically Russian, or was it simply the art of one individual, named Chaliapin?

This got him started. "I don't think," he said, "that many Russian singers agree with me. Perhaps I'm wrong, but I can't help feeling that my kind of interpretive art is made necessary by the music of our most racial composers. They are, roughly speaking, Dargomigsky and Moussorgsky. I had to fight in my small way, for a style of vocal art which would do justice to the intentions of Moussorgsky, just as Moussorgsky had to fight for a musical art which should represent Russia.

Died Misunderstood

"He gave his life for that. He died a drunkard, hurried to his end, because of the force of convictions which brought him into conflict with those around him and flung our great master on the mercy of a community which did not understand.

"Do you think, for an instant, that Russia understood Moussorgsky? Certainly not! Even Moussorgsky's colleagues of the neo-Russian school, those whom we might call nearest to him, only partly comprehended him. I know nothing more pathetic than the way that spirit progressed steadily, with bitter suffering, toward the truth, while comrades stood about, condoning what they termed his 'eccentricities' in his music, or regretting what many of them termed his artistic insanity.

"Narrowness, reactionary tendencies, are common to no one country. Was 'Boris Godunoff' a success when it was first given in Russia? Did 'Khevantchina' meet with the plaudits of the multitude? These operas fought their way, and very slowly came into favor. Indeed, it wasn't really until the outside world, as Paris in 1909, recognized the unique greatness of Moussorgsky, that his fame was securely established in his own country as well as beyond its borders.

Chaliapin's Struggle

"I—even I—had to fight to get away from a conventional Italian style of singing. It was good for me, I think. It taught me very, very much that was of the greatest value to my art. It necessitated a wide range of study—not only of singing, but music, not only of music, but the other arts. And a study of Russia—our culture and the true traditions and feelings of our people. This I consider necessary for a singer as well as a composer. The singer, too, must understand his people, and learn to express them."

I said: "Why don't you develop a Russian opera company, Mr. Challapin? You will be the principal singer and director of the organization."

Would Not Direct

"Me!" he interrupted, in perfect hororo. "Me the director? For what? To add up figures, make them balance, pay the interest on the money of those who have financed our company? And with other people's money you must be so much more careful than with your own! What have I to do with all that? It would be death to me—death!"

"Not financial director, of course, Mr. Challapin. I meant artistic director—director of the interpretation, the ensemble, the—man who selects the right artists to surround him."

"But, my dear sir," he says, with a twinkle in his eye, "you may not realize this. In every opera company—yes, in the finest opera company that money could buy, are artists great and artists small. The small artists—are difficult—not the great ones. I tell a man, 'You are a count in the drama, but you behave like a barber. If you are a count, walk like this, do this, and so forth.' He cannot understand, probably. Or he refuses. I discharge him from the company. A terrible scandal. Interviews in the press. Shades of Mary Garden! 'Chaliapin is a despot,' etc., etc., etc." —he repeated the words as the barber in Rossini's opera repeats the patter in "Largo al factotum."

Good-by to Himself

"It would never do," he continued. "I would go mad. I do not want to go mad. I do not want to say good-bye forever to my friend Feodor Chaliapin."

"Then why don't you start a Conservatory?"

I am happy to say that this seemed even more disgusting to him. "Conservatoire," he said, with most laughable imitations of professors, scholars and the like. (Did you ever see him, by the way, imitate a lion, roaring and swinging its tail? Unfortunately, the effect can't be transcribed.) "Conservatoire! Oh, my! Never a Conservatoire! Perhaps a school, a very small school, where all are artists, and where I am the Conservatoire!

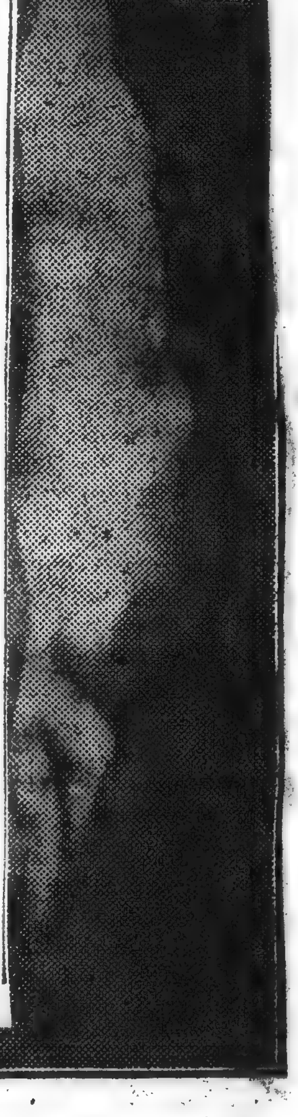
"The hardest thing in a school of art to attain and inspire is the creative spirit. This can be done only by individuals and through individual precept. It costs much, in money, in time, in the strength of one's life, to do it. But that is the only way in which such a thing can be done.

School of Art

"I would take, say, 25 young men. They would have to understand what art means. Art does not necessarily mean simply a piano, a voice, a violoncello. It means color-la-peinture. It means literature, drama, the dance, sculpture. Artists must understand all these things. They must feel them. I cannot play the piano, but I can tell many pianist things as essential for them as their finger exercises. To such purely technical matters, of course, a professor must attend. I would give them art. I am not a 'cellist, but I can show him nuance, phrasing, interpretation. He would learn from me, and I from him. We would work together.

"But I guess that isn't to be. I dreamed of it once. I had bought a rock." "Did he say a 'rock'?" I asked of the willing interpreter, willing at all times to help out a very meagre store of the language Mr. Challapine used. "Yes, that is right," said Challapine, nodding, "A rock. I had bought this rock on the shore of the Black Sea. That was before the revolution. Now that is gone. And perhaps, after all, it is just as well. There are things one can do, there are things one cannot do. Perhaps my idea was impossible. It is hard enough, anyhow, to be an artist yourself."

He is right. His task is cut out for ham, and it is imporatnt enough. It is—to be Chaliapin.



Shalyápin

As Mephistopheles in the Brocken Scene of Boito's Like-Named Opera

Shalyapin the Superb

Convention cut the morning-coat: convention prescribed the accompanying garments. Yet therein it is possible to be a magnificent presence when a Shalyápin wears them; even on the bare, blank stage of Symphony Hall. So he came thither yesterday afternoon and on the instant entered also the power and the splendor of the man and the singer. Gray now mottles the tawny hair; but the head remains as leonine as of old; while the eyes still enfold the world and humankind within it in penetration and in candors. Years and work may have bent a little the shoulders; but in that big body dwells beyond mistaking not bulk but power. Mr. Shalyápin lifts an arm, makes play with hand and finger and grace is arabesque upon this puissance. A step forward and it is as though he were beginning to stride the spheres. The audience reverberates with applause; shouts, even, fill the echoes. He smiles all-embracingly, he waves a deprecating gesture; yet there is no mistaking the gladness of the simple, eager heart within.

It is the custom to count Mr. Shalyápin a singer of vast energies—of mind and temperament; of voice, mood, emotion, characterization; of visioning, visualizing, dramatizing power. He is truly such. He is also singer—and man—of as large, fine and variously ranging simplicities. His energy penetrates and conveys. His simplicity distills and concentrates. Far as humanity may lead, far as the means of music and the theatre may carry goes he, high-hearted, deep in understanding, with feeling quick besides. Energy, simplicity, humanity and all three clothed in a singular splendor of spirit. Of such, as it sometimes seems, are the secrets of his powers.

Not before in Boston has Mr. Shalyápin stood so near to the acme of his attributes as singer of the concert-hall. Far better than it did last winter, his voice now serves him. His glowing sonorities, his wave-like sweeps of tone went yesterday unclouded. They are organ-like. At the other extreme and equally at command—say in Leporello's air of the catalogue from "Don Juan," in melancholy, introspective songs of Dargomizhsky and Malashkin—was adroit tonal finesse. Between played a middle voice as warm in sensuous glow as it was supple to significant shadings. For Mr. Shalyápin may now add elegance to power and upon tone for tone's sake lavish a finely masculine beauty. More, too, than [illegible] in the normal the [illegible] art of song [illegible] in a single arc that spanned and sustained the music he sang Beethoven's "In Questa Tomba"; and the deeper within it ran the mood of the mournful pacing melody. Time and again in the Russian songs he did feats of maintained or broken rhythm. As often he made the calculated modulation of the composer seem his instant divination. As in the crucible of tone alloyed with imagination he moulded phrases and they were molten. The veriest pedant of the schools might marvel at his mere shaping of many a tone—in itself and for significant purpose. In turn, they who exalt design—the end and the way thither foreseen from the beginning—might wonder as much at his upbuilding of the manifold air from Rakhmaninov's opera, "Aleko." Yes again; when he chooses Mr. Shalyápin can be highly accomplished singer.

It is as true that when the Russian so chooses, he will wrench rhythm, part phrases, turn modulation from the seeming purpose of the composer, fall away from song into a declamation not far removed from the spoken word. Not carelessly, but designedly or impulsively, he seems to do these things, in a passion as it were for the fullest expression of text and music, of all that within him they enkindle. It is the license permitted to a great spirit so releasing itself—often a far greater spirit than the music-maker and the verse-maker. Fortunate are Rubinstein and many a secondary Russian when they so minister to Mr. Shalyapin. Moving to higher ground, the vocal purists shudder at his version of Schumann's "Two Grenadiers." We others, happily not so pure of ear and spirit, receive from it such illusion as Plançon himself, in heyday with the piece, hardly wrought. No doubt the Mozartean loyalists mistrusted yesterday one or other turn in Leporello's air. We others saw and heard the mischievous serving-man twinging with delight as he tweaks at the chagrined Donna Elvira.

For it is the rare and irresistible power of Mr. Shalyápin first to concentrate in himself the essence of music and verse; then to impregnate it with his own intensifying spirit, then to outpour it upon so much of a receiving world as is before him. Does the song project and unfold a scene—and Rubinstein's doomed and defiant bandit seizes listening imaginations. Does the piece traverse emotion surging out of emotion—and before us floods the turbid torrent of Aleko's memories and despairs. Do music and verse incarnate a single mood or emotion as did many a piece—and to ncarnation Mr. Shalyápin adds incandes- ence. He summons the scene, reanimates he presence, isolates the emotion until there is naught else for the instant in the world. Nay, he philosophizes upon it. To the men of power the glory of war; to the soldier in the ranks death and bane—through a Russian song. Heavy upon th Volga boatmen is the burden of listless toil. Upon all men adds Shalyápin from the song. In fleas at court run the very ir nies of those submissions which are li Musorgsky has said it and Shalyápin rophet of him—and of all things huma

H.T.

Transcript Dec 11

Chaliapin at Symphony Hall

Russia's most celebrated singer, Feodor Chaliapin, was the star of the Sunday afternoon concert at Symphony Hall. Nicholas Levienne, pianist, and Max Rabinowitch, violinist, assisted quite creditably.

Chaliapin, who returned to this country chiefly to fill an opera engagement in New York, was in good form. His sonorous voice shows some signs of wear and he finds it difficult to keep to the pitch—or else he is indifferent on that point. First of all, he is an opera singer. Acting is as much a part of his art as singing. But, being a great artist, he is at home on any stage. He dramatizes the simplest song and often gives it a vitality it never seemed to have before. In this field he is preeminent.

Advertiser Dec 11

CHALIAPIN STIRS GREAT AUDIENCE

Globe 12/11

Russian Singer Cheered at Symphony Hall

Feodor Chaliapin roused an audience that filled Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon to so unusual a pitch of enthusiasm that many men cheered the singer as loudly as though he were a pitcher in a World's Series game. One wishes that he could add that those who cheered were all of American parentage, but, at any rate, such natural and spontaneously-expressed feeling for a musician of genius augurs well for the future of music in this country.

Mr Chaliapin was suffering from a cold, which took some of the suavity out of his voice. The concert was needlessly dragged out by the inclusion on the program of numbers for a pianist and 'cellist, whose abilities do not qualify them for a Symphony Hall appearance.

The audience probably would have been perfectly satisfied with the 12 numbers Chaliapin himself sang, without the efforts of Mr Rabinowitsch and Mr Levienne. Mr Rabinowistch proved himself an excellent accompanist. Mr Levienne, among other things, played Rubinstein's "Melody in F" out of tune, very sentimentally, with a peculiarly husky tone.

Chaliapin's numbers, announced as usual by him from the stage, were, in order, the soliloquy of Aleko from Rachmainoff's opera with that title, Dargomizhsky's "Corporal," Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers," a Rubinstein "Ballad," a love song by Malasbkin, Beethoven's "In questa tomba," Dargomizhsky's "We Parted," Leporello's "Catalogue" from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Koeneman's "When the King Went Forth to War"; the "Volga Boatman's Song," which had to be repeated; the Song of the Flea" from Goethe's "Fuast," set by Musorgsky; and as final encore a humorous Russian folk song. All except the Beethoven and Mozart, given in Italian, were sung in Russian.

Chaliapin has a gift of conveying plain every-day human emotion to the plain people, the like of which America has never seen in anyone else in our day. He can sweep even a sophisticated auditor off his feet by the sheer dramatic power of his interpretations. His farce and his heroics are equally fine. Even the irony of Mephistopheles and the despair of "In questa tomba" are not beyond him. These things being true what does it matter that his singing, as singing, has grave flaws, and that his voice is not the greatest, or even the biggest, on record?

Globe Dec 11

CHALIAPIN TODAY

In Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30 Feodor Chaliapin will give his Boston concert. The distinguished Russian singer will not follow a pre-arranged programme. He will announce the songs of his choice by number from the stage, so that those unacquainted with the Russian language may follow from the English text of a booklet which will be distributed free of charge.

CHALIAPIN IN RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

Amer 12/11

Apparently all the Russian enthusiasmwhich there is in Boston this week was given free rein at Symphony Hall when Feodor Chaliapin, bass, considered Russia's greatest singer, appeared for a recital.

Not only was the regular Sunday afternoon audience in attendance, but the entire cast of the Russian Opera Company was there in force, and all the rest of the countrymen of the artist.

Mr. Chaliapin's method of singing a program of songs is rather unique and striking sensible. He furnishes the audience with a text book of English translations of all his songs and then he proceeds to sing the songs for which he is in mood at the moment, announcing them from the stage by number.

Dramatically speaking, the high points of the afternoon were these songs; "The Two Grenadiers" by Schumann; "When the King Went Forth to War;" and "The River Volgo." The last received such an ovation of appreciation that Mr. Chaliapin repeated it.

Assisting Mr. Chaliapin were Max Rabinowitch, pianist, who accompanied both for the singer and for Nicholas Levienne, cellist.

American Dec 11

CHALIAPIN IN RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

Amer 12/11

Apparently all the Russian enthusiasmwhich there is in Boston this week was given free rein at Symphony Hall when Feodor Chaliapin, bass, considered Russia's greatest singer, appeared for a recital.

Not only was the regular Sunday afternoon audience in attendance, but the entire cast of the Russian Opera Company was there in force. and all the rest of the countrymen of the artist.

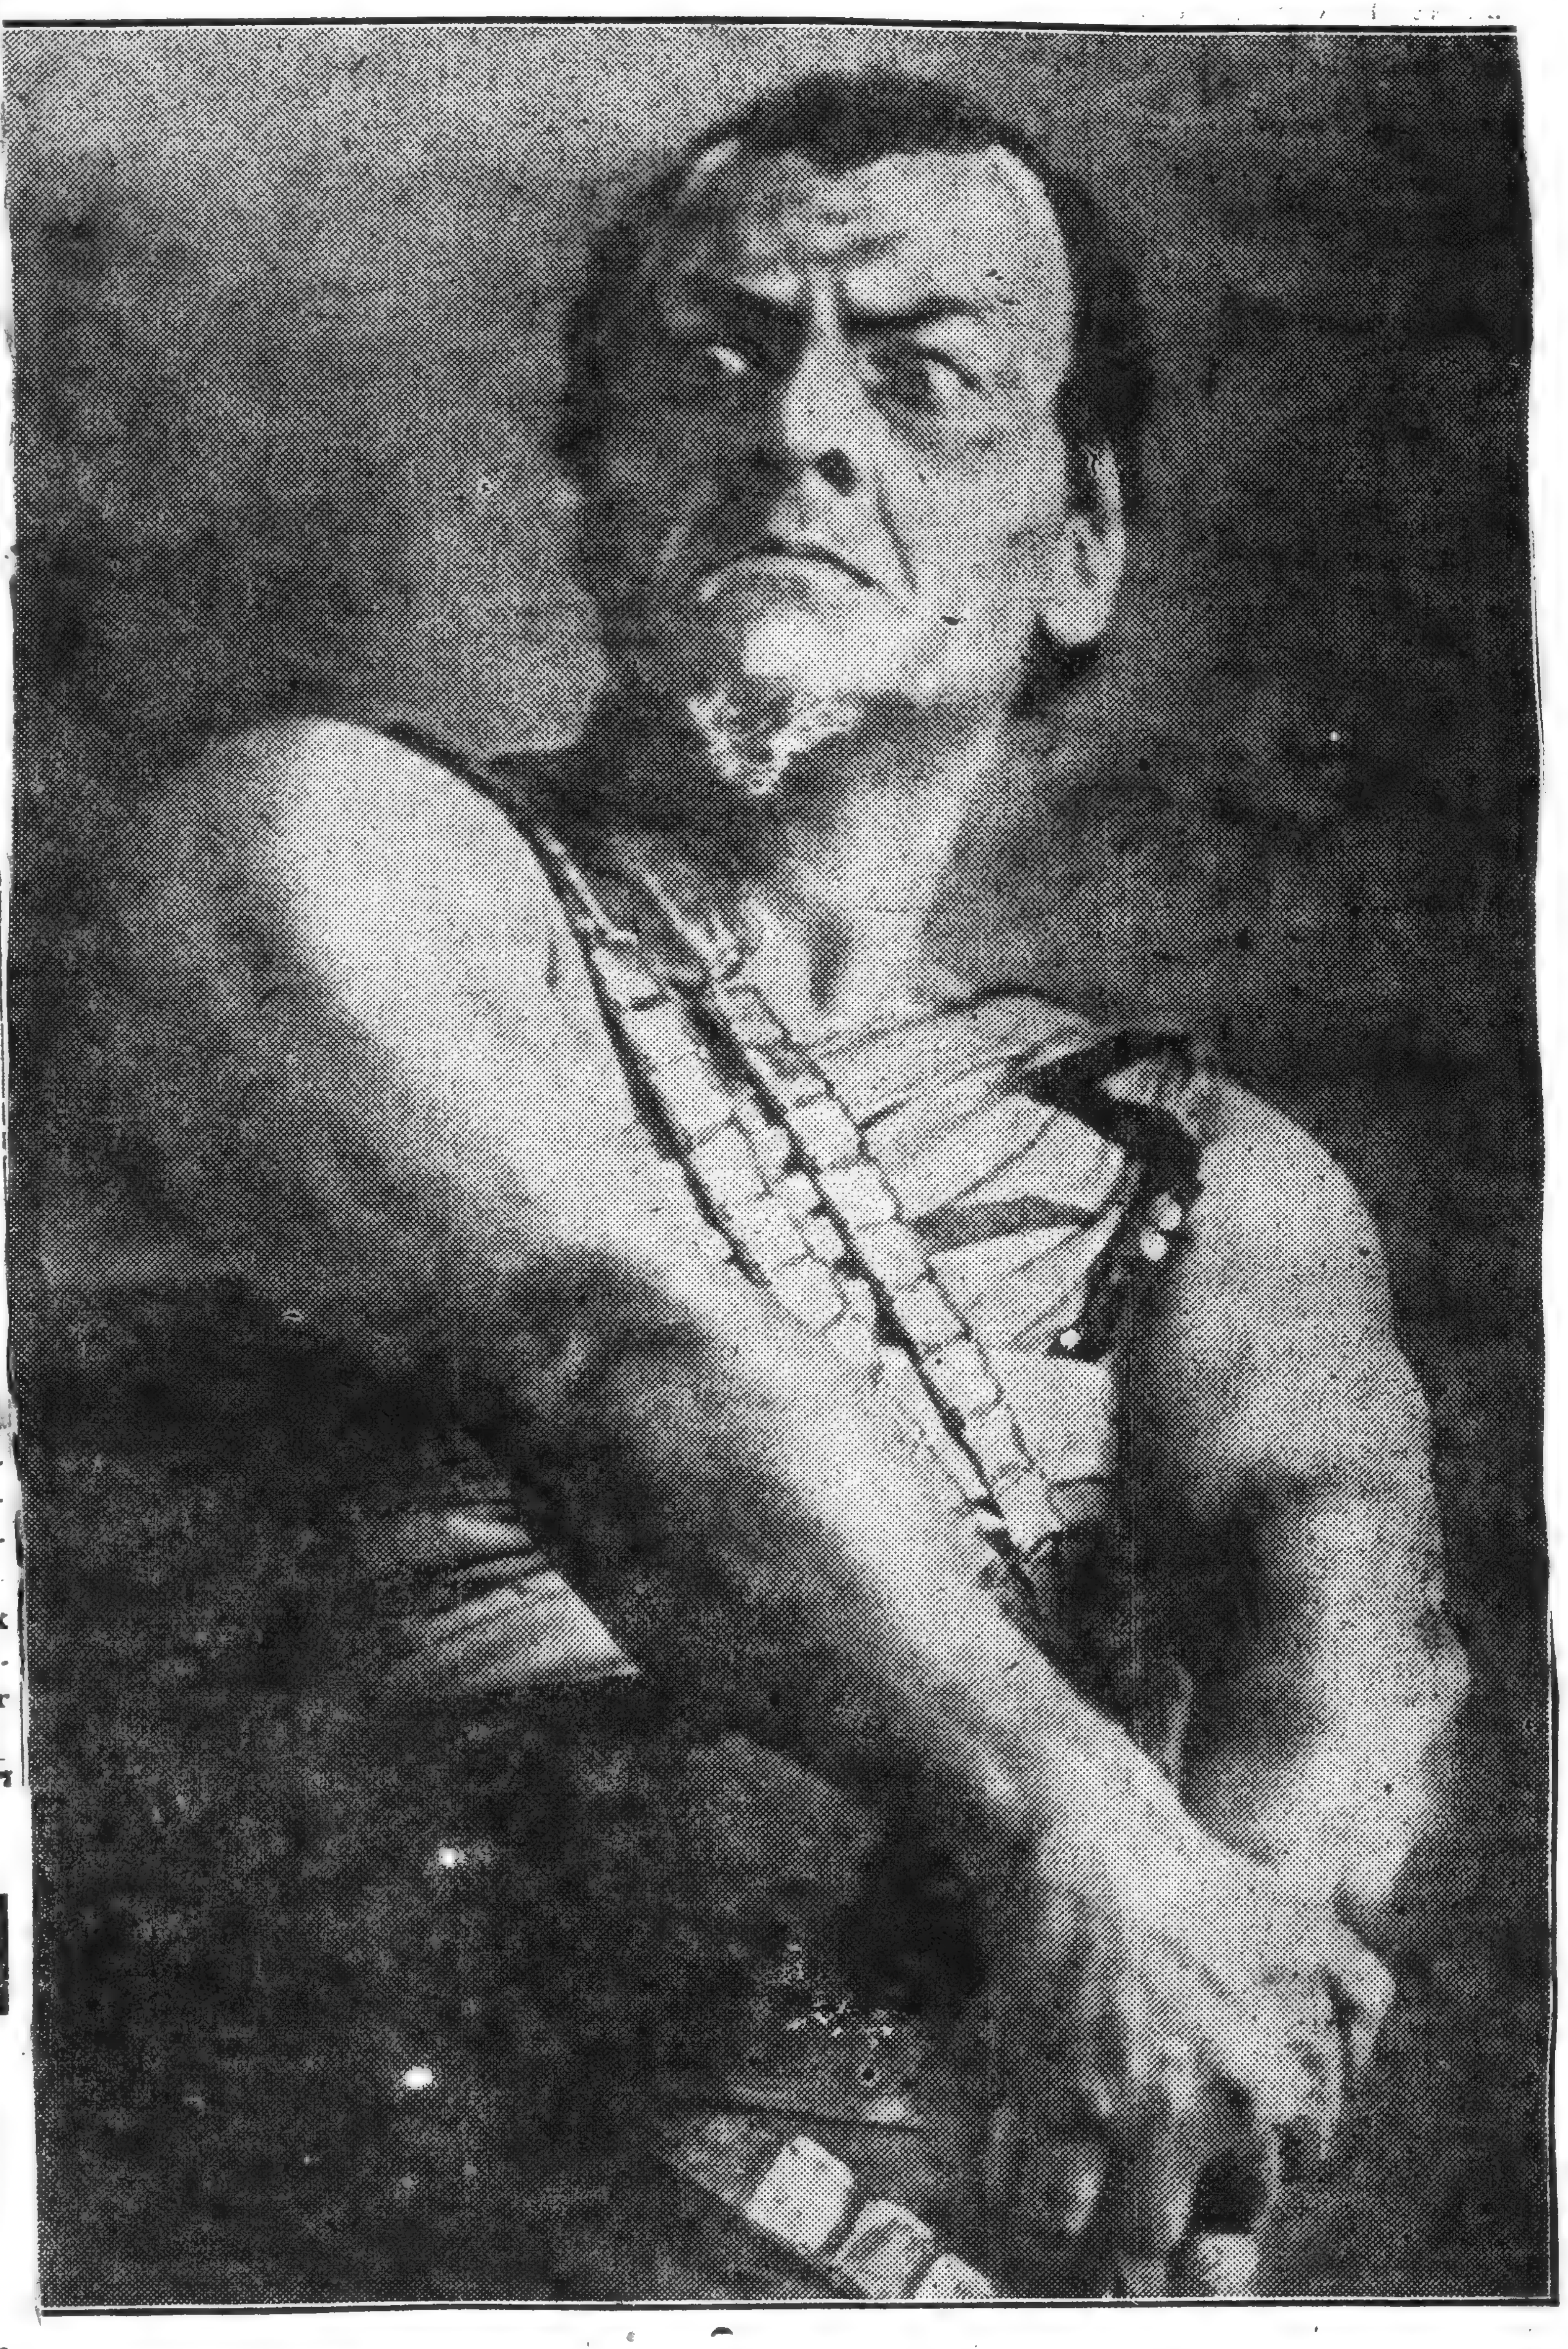
Mr. Chaliapin's method of singing a program of songs is rather unique and striking sensible. He furnishes the audience with a text book of English translations of all his songs and then he proceeds to sing the songs for which he is in mood at the moment, announcing them from the stage by number.

Dramatically speaking, the high points of the afternoon were these songs; "The Two Grenadiers" by Schumann; "When the King Went Forth to War;" and "The River Volgo." The last received such an ovation of appreciation that Mr. Challapin repeated it.

Assisting Mr. Challapin were Max Rabinowitch, pianist, who accompanied both for the singer and for Nicholas Levienne, cellist.

Trans 12-11

The Surge of Power



Shalyápin

As Mephistopheles in the Brocken Scene of Boito's Like-Named Opera

Shalyapin the Superb

Convention cut the morning-coat: convention prescribed the accompanying garments. Yet therein it is possible to be a magnificent presence when a Shalyápin wears them; even on the bare, blank stage of Symphony Hall. So he came thither yesterday afternoon and on the instant entered also the power and the splendor of the man and the singer. Gray now mottles the tawny hair; but the head remains as leonine as of old; while the eyes still enfold the world and humankind within it in penetration and in candors. Years and work may have bent a little the shoulders; but in that big body dwells beyond mistaking not bulk but power. Mr. Shalyápin lifts an arm, makes play with hand and finger and grace is arabesque upon this puissance. A step forward and it is as though he were beginning to stride the spheres. The audience reverberates with applause; shouts, even, fill the echoes. He smiles all-embracingly, he waves a deprecating gesture; yet there is no mistaking the gladness of the simple, eager heart within.

It is the custom to count Mr. Shalyápin a singer of vast energies—of mind and temperament; of voice, mood, emotion, characterization; of visioning, visualizing, dramatizing power. He is truly such. He is also singer—and man—of as large, fine an variously ranging simplicities. His energy penetrates and conveys. His simplicity distills and concentrates. Far as humanity may lead, far as the means of music and the theatre may carry goes he, high-hearted, deep in understanding, with feeling quick besides. Energy, simplicity, humanity and all three clothed in a singular splendor of spirit. Of such, as it sometimes seems, are the secrets of his powers.

Not before in Boston has Mr. Shalyápin stood so near to the acme of his attributes as singer of the concert-hall. Far better than it did last winter, his voice now serves him. His glowing sonorities, his wave-like sweeps of tone went yesterday unclouded. They are organ-like. At the other extreme and equally at command—say in Leporello's air of the catalogue from "Don Juan," in melancholy, introspective songs of Dargomizhsky and Malashkin—was adroit tonal finesse. Between played a middle voice as warm in sensuous glow as it was supple to significant shadings. For Mr. Shalyápin may now add elegance to power and upon tone for tone's sake lavish a finely masculine beauty. More, too, than before, his skill in the normal, the impersonal art of song ran clear. As in a single arc that spanned and sustained the music he sang Beethoven's "In Questa Tomba"; and the deeper within it ran the mood of the mournful pacing melody. Time and again in the Russian songs he did feats of maintained or broken rhythm. As often he made the calculated modulation of the composer seem his instant divination. As in the crucible of tone alloyed with imagination he moulded phrases and they were molten. The veriest pedant of the schools might marvel at his mere shaping of many a tone—in itself and for significant purpose. In turn, they who exalt design—the end and the way thither foreseen from the beginning—might wonder as much at his upbuilding of the manifold air from Rakhmaninov's opera, "Aleko." Yes again; when he chooses Mr. Shalyápin can be highly accomplished singer.

It is as true that when the Russian so chooses, he will wrench rhythm, part phrases, turn modulation from the seeming purpose of the composer, fall away from song into a declamation not far removed from the spoken word. Not carelessly, but designedly or impulsively, he seems to do these things, in a passion as it were for the fullest expression of text and music, of all that within him they enkindle. It is the license permitted to a great spirit so releasing itself—often a far greater spirit than the music-maker and the verse-maker. Fortunate are Rubinstein and many a secondary Russian when they so minister to Mr. Shalyapin. Moving to higher ground, the vocal purists shudder at his version of Schumann's "Two Grenadiers." We others, happily not so pure of ear and spirit, receive from it such illusion as Plançon himself, in heyday with the piece, hardly wrought. No doubt the Mozartean loyalists mistrusted yesterday one or other turn in Leporello's air. We others saw and heard the mischievous serving-man twinging with delight as he tweaks at the chagrined Donna Elvira.

For it is the rare and irresistible power of Mr. Shalyápin first to concentrate in himself the essence of music and verse; then to impregnate it with his own intensifying spirit, then to outpour it upon so much of a receiving world as is before him. Does the song project and unfold a scene—and Rubinstein's doomed and defiant bandit seizes listening imaginations. Does the piece traverse emotion surging out of emotion—and before us floods the turbid torrent of Aleko's memories and despairs. Do music and verse incarnate a single mood or emotion as did many a piece—and to ncarnation Mr. Shalyápin adds incandes- ence. He summons the scene, reanimates the presence, isolates the emotion until there is naught else for the instant in the world. Nay, he philosophizes upon it. To the men of power the glory of war; to the soldier in the ranks death and bane—through a Russian song. Heavy upon th Volga boatmen is the burden of listless toi Upon all men adds Shalyápin from thei song. In fleas at court run the very ir nies of those submissions which are li Musorgsky has said it and Shalyápin prophet of him—and of all things huma

H.T.

Transcript Dec 11

Handel & Haydn

[illegible] Society has distinctly and creditably freshened its programme. In February, for example, it will undertake Elgar's setting of Newman's poem, "The Dream of Gerontius"—music of this, our day, not too often heard in Boston. In turn, the list of assisting singers announces Mr. Chamlee and Mr. Crooks, the tenors; Mr. Bender, the baritone—all new to Boston. Mr. Chamlee is a rising singer at the Metropolitan Opera House. Mr. Bender, long applauded in German theatres, lately came thither from Munich. Mr. Crooks was well received, the other day, at a concert in New York with Mr. Damrosch's orchestra. Here is the schedule of concerts—all at Symphony Hall, all with the chorus of the Society and Mr. Mollenhauer as conductor: Trans 11-27

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17 and Monday evening, Dec. 18—Handel's "Messiah," with Mmes. Hayden and Peege; Messrs. Hackett and Dadmun.

Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11—Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius," with Mme. Alcock and Messrs. Chamlee and Whitehill.

Sunday afternoon, April 1—Gounod's "Redemption," with Mmes. Hink'e and Laval; Messrs. Crooks and Bender.

Transcript Nov 27

HANDEL AND HAYDN

The Handel and Haydn Society, the oldest in the country, will present three notable oratorios at Symphony Hall in the course of the coming season, under Emil Mollenhauer, with a large orchestra and distinguished soloists assisting at each concert. Amer 12-2

Handel's "Messiah" will have two Christmas performances, on Sunday afternoon, December 17, and Monday evening, December 18. Sir Edward Elgar's great musical setting of Cardinal Newman's poem, "The Dream of Gerontius" will be given on Sunday afternoon, February 11. For Easter Sunday afternoon, April 1, Gounod's "Redemeption" has been chosen as the most fitting score.

American Dec 2

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, in Symphony Hall, the first of the annual performances of "The Messiah," with the practised chorus of the Handel and Haydn Society and Mmes. Hayden and Peege, Messrs. Hackett and Dadmun for solo singers. For a countless time Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct.

Transcript Dec 2

HANDEL AND HAYDN

Three oratorios will be performed at Symphony hall this season by the Handel & Haydn Society, led by Mr. Mollenhauer. The works to be performed are Handel's "Messiah" in the Christmas season, Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, and Monday evening, Dec. 18, with the following soloists: Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; Royal Dadmun, bass; on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11, Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius," with Merle Alcock, contralto, as soloist, and two of the foremost men singers of the Metropolitan Opera Company, namely, Clarence Whitehill and Mario Chamlee. Easter Sunday afternoon, April 1, will be fittingly observed by the performance of Gounod's "Redemption." The soloists will be Florence Hinkle, soprano; Jeanne Laval, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor, and Paul Bender, baritone. Her 12-3

Herald Dec 3

ORATORIOS BY HANDEL AND HAYDN

Three great oratorios are to be performed at Symphony Hall during the course of the season by the Handel and Hydn Society, the historical chorus of Boston which under Emil Mollenhauer, its conductor, and with orchestra, organ and noted soloists at each representation, give such splendid performances in this city. Adv 12/3

First to be performed is Handel's "Messiah," Sunday afternoon December 17, and Monday evening, December 18, with Ethel Hayden, Charlotte Peege, Arthur Hackett and Royal Dadmun as soloists. On Sunday afternoon February 11, Sir Edward Elgar's "Dream of Oerantius" will be presented, with Merle Alcock, Clarence Whitehill and Mario Chamlee as soloists. On Easter Sunday, Gounod's "Redemption" will be sung, with Florence Hinkle, Jeanne Laval, Richard Crooks and Paul Bender as soloists.

Advertiser Dec 3

Handel and Haydn Society Plans for the Season

Three great oratorios are to be performed at Symphony Hall during the course of the season by the Handel and Haydn Society, under Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, with orchestra, organ and noted soloists at each representation.

Handel's "Messiah" will be given in the Christmas season, Sunday afternoon, Dec 17, and Monday evening, Dec 18, with Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; Royal Dadmun, bass.

Sunday afternoon, Feb 11, Sir Edward Elgar's great musical setting of Cardinel Newman's poem, "The Dream of Gerontius," will be presented, with Merle Alcock, contralto, as soloist, and two of the foremost men singers of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Clarence Whitehill, bass, and Mario Chamlee tenor. Globe 12-3

Easter Sunday afternoon, April 1, will be observed by the performance of Gounod's "Redemption," the soloists to be Florence Hinkle, soprano; Jeanne Laval, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor and Paul Bender, baritone.

Globe Dec 3

Handel and Haydn

Post 12/3

Three great oratorios will be performed at Symphony Hall during the course of the season by the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, with orchestra, organ and noted soloists at each presentation.

The works to be performed are Handel's "Messiah" in the Christmas season, Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, and Monday evening, Dec. 18, with the following soloists—Ethel Hayden, soprano, Charlotte Peege, contralto, Arthur Hackett, tenor, Royal Dadmun, bass, on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11, Sir Edward Elgar's great musical setting of Cardinal Newman's poem, "The Dream of Gerontius," with Merle Alcock, contralto, as soloist, and two of the foremost men singers of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Clarence Whitehill, the bass, and Mario Chamlee, tenor, and on Easter Sunday afternoon, April 1, Gounod's "Redemption," with Florence Hinkle, soprano, Jeanne Laval, contralto, Richard Crooks, tenor, and Paul Bender, baritone.

The Cecilia Society is rehearsing under the leadership of Mr. Agide Jacchia, head of the Boston Conservatory of Music, conductor of the Pops and for the past two seasons conductor of the Cecilia Society. Frank H. Luker is accompanist.

The society has this year elected a new president, A. J. Jackson, of the A. J. Jackson Piano Company on Boylston street, who has been a member of the Cecilia Society for 20 years and whose aim is to bring the society back to the standard and purpose for which it was first organized; to perform works little known and pieces seldom done by other singing societies. There will be one concert given, probably in Jordan Hall, with organ and piano accompaniment. Soloists needed will be selected from the society.

Post Dec 3

CHRISTMAS "MESSIAH"

Handel's most popular of all oratorios, "The Messiah," will, as usual, open the season of the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 17, and Monday evening, December 18. Emil Mollenhauer is now rehearsing the great choral portions of the work while a quartet of soloists has been engaged, including Ethel Hayden, soprano, Charlotte Peege, contralto Arthur Hackett, tenor; and Royal Dadmun, bass. Amer 12-9

American Dec 9

SUNDAY afternoon, Dec. 17, in Symphony Hall, the first of the annual performances of "The Messiah," with the practised chorus of the Handel and Haydn Society and Mmes. Hayden and Peege, Messrs. Hackett and Dadmun for solo singers. For a countless time, Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct. Trans 12-9

Transcript Dec 9

Monday evening, Dec. 18, in Symphony Hall, the second of the annual performances of "The Messiah" by the Handel and Haydn Society as above specified.

Transcript Dec 10

"Messiah" Next Week

Globe 12/10

Next Sunday afternoon, Dec 17, at 3:30, and Monday evening, Dec 18, at 8:15 in Symphony Hall, the Handel and Haydn Society will open its season with two performances of Handel's "Messiah," according to the usual custom of this chorus in the Christmas season.

Emil Mollenhauer, conductor of the society, is rehearsing the chorus for these opening concerts. The performance of the most popular of all oratorios through 200 years will be made the more notable by the distinction of the quartet of soloists who are to appear. The soprano and contralto will be Ethel Hayden and Charlotte Peege, while Arthur Hackett, well known to Boston audiences, will be tenor. The bass will be Royal Dadmun, who in several appearances here has won high praise by the beauty of his voice and the dramatic felicity of his interpretations.

Globe Dec 10

CHRISTMAS "MESSIAH"

Handel's most popular of all oratorios, "The Messiah," will, as usual open the season of the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 17, and Monday evening, December 18. Emil Mollenhauer is now rehearsing the great choral portions of the work, while a quartet of soloists has been engaged, including Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; and Royal Dadmun, bass. Amer 12-9

American Dec 9

HANDEL AND HAYDN

Next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, at 3:30, and Monday evening, Dec. 18, at 8:15, in Symphony hall, the Handel and Haydn Society, Mr. Mollenhauer conductor, will open its season with two performances of Handel's "Messiah."

The soloists will be Ethel Hayden, Charlotte Peege, Arthur Hackett and Royal Dadmun. Her 12-10

Herald Dec 10

"Messiah" for Handel and Haydn

Next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, at 3:30, and Monday evening, Dec. 18, at 8:15, in Symphony Hall, the Handel and Haydn Society will open its season with two performances of Handel's "Messiah," according to the usual custom of this chorus in the Christmas season.

The performance of the most popular of all oratorios will be given. Ethel Hayden, soprano, and Charlotte Peege, contralto, Arthur Hackett, tenor and Royal Dadmun, bass-baritone. Post 12-10

Post Dec 10

"MESSIAH" OPENS ORATORIO SEASON

Adv 12/10

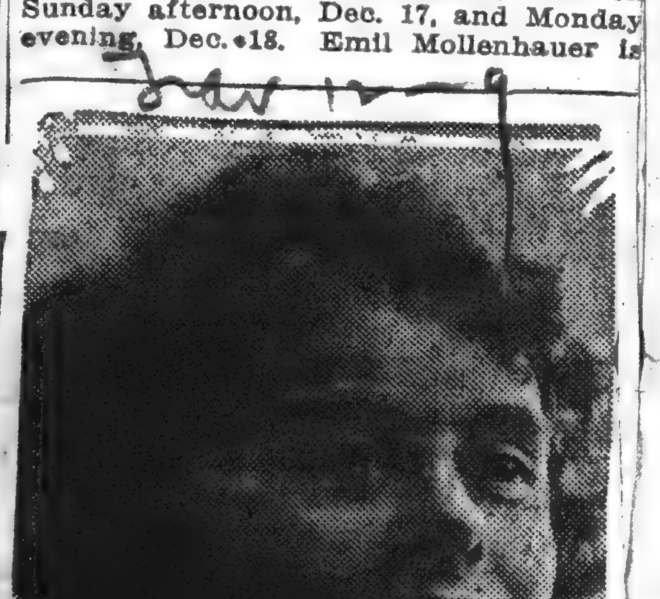
Next Sunday afternoon, December 17, and Monday evening, December 18, in Symphony Hall, the Handel and Haydn Society will open its season with two performances of Handel's "Messiah." Emil Mollenhauer is rehearsing the great chorus. The soprano and contralto will be Ethel Hayden and Charlotte Peege. Arthur Hackett, well known to Boston audiences, will be tenor. The base will be Royal Dadmun. Adv 12-10

Advertiser Dec 10

CHRISTMAS "MESSIAH"

Handel's most popular of all oratorios "Tho Messiah," will, as usual, open the season of the Handel and Haydn Society when that historical organization gives two performances in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, and Monday evening, Dec. 18. Emil Mollenhauer is

Trav 12-9



ETHEL HAYDEN

now rehearsing the great choral portions of the work, while a quartet of soloists, including Ethel Hayden, soprano, and Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, the noted tenor, and Royal Dadmun, the bass, have been engaged.

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Traveler Dec 9

See 5th page following

[116]

Along the Way

Trans 12-16

In Symphony Hall, tomorrow afternoon and again on Monday evening befall the annual performances of Handel's oratorio, "The Messiah," masterpiece and institution in the English-speaking world. The practised chorus of the Handel and Haydn Society and Mmes. Hayden and Peege, Messrs. Hackett and Dadmun for solo singers will share in the performance. For a countless time, Mr. Mollenhauer will

Transcript Dec 16

"Messiah" to Have Two Performances

Trav 12-16

Tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 and Monday evening at 8:15 at Symphony hall, Handel's "Messiah" will receive two Christmas-time performances at the hands of the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor.

To the chorus of 400 and the Symphony orchestra there will be added a splendid quartet of soloists. Ethel Hayden will be the soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass.

Traveler Dec 16

"MESSIAH" TODAY

Post 12-17

Two Christmas performances of Handel's "Messiah" will be given by the Handel and Haydn Society, according to the usual custom, this afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30 and tomorrow evening at 8:15.

The four solo parts are splendidly cast for this opening of the society's season, with Ethel Hayden, the soprano, who was received with enthusiasm at her recital in Aeolian Hall, New York, last Thursday; Charlotte Peege, contralto, of similarly high standing in the cities where she has sung; Arthur Hackett, the tenor, well known in Boston, and Royal Dadmun, the bass, who is perhaps unexcelled among the bass singers who are now appearing in oratorio performances. The masterpiece of Handel should likewise have a fine performance at the hands of Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor of the society, the large chorus of 400 voices and a symphony orchestra.

Post Dec 17

First "Messiah" Performance Today

Adv 12/17

TWO Christmas performances of Handel's "Messiah" will be given by the Handel and Hadyn Society in Symphony Hall, one this afternoon and one tomorrow night.

The four solo parts will be sung by Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass. Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor of the society, has trained the chorus of 400 voices and the orchestra.

Advertiser Dec 17

ETHYL [illegible] AND CHARLOTTE PEEGE, CONTRALT

Herald Dec 17

CHRISTMAS "MESSIAH"

Handel's "Messiah" will receive two Christmastime performances at the hands of the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, tomorrow afternoon and Monday evening at Symphony Hall.

To the chorus of 400 and the symphony orchestra there will be added a splendid quartet of soloists to do justice to the beautiful solo numbers of this most popular of all oratorios. Ethel Hayden will be the soprano, Charlotte Peege the contralto, Arthur Hackett the tenor and the fourth singer will be Royal Dadmun, considered one of the finest basses now appearing in oratorio performances.

American Dec 16

"MESSIAH" TODAY

Her 12/17

Two Christmas performances of Handel's "Messiah" will be given by the Handel and Haydn Society, according to the usual custom, this afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30 and tomorrow evening at 8:15. The four solo parts are entrusted to Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass. Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct. The chorus of 400 voices will be assisted by a large orchestra.

Herald Dec 17

Handel and Haydn Society "Messiah" Performances

Two Christmas performances of Handel's "Messiah" will be given by the Handel and Haydn Society, according to the usual custom, in Symphony Hall, this afternoon, at 3:30 and tomorrow evening at 8:15. Globe 12-17

The four solo parts will be sung by Ethel Hayden, a soprano who was received with enthusiasm at her recital in Aeolian Hall, New York, last Thursday; Charlotte Peege, contralto, of similarly high standing in the cities where she has sung; Arthur Hackett, the tenor, well known in Boston, and Royal Dadmun, the bass, who is perhaps unexcelled among the bass singers who are now appearing in oratorio performances. The masterpieec of Handel should likewise have a capable performance at the hands of Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor of the society, the large chorus of 400 voices and orchestra.

Globe Dec 17

Adv 12/17

CHARLOTTE PEEGE IN "MESSIAH"—SYMPHONY HALL

Advertiser Dec 17

Handel & Haydn

Haydn Society has distinctly and gratefully freshened its programme. In February, for example, it will undertake Elgar's setting of Newman's poem, "The Dream of Geront us"—music of this, our day, not too often heard in Boston. In turn, the list of assisting singers announces Mr. Chamlee and Mr. Crooks, the tenors; Mr. Bender, the baritone—all new to Boston. Mr. Chamlee is a rising singer at the Metropolitan Opera House. Mr. Bender, long applauded in German theatres, latel came thither from Munich. Mr. Crooks was well received, the other day, at a concert in New York with Mr. Damrosch's orchestra. Here is the schedule of concerts—all at Symphony Hall, all with the chorus of the Society and Mr. Mollenhauer as conductor: Trans 11-27

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17 and Monday evening, Dec. 18—Handel's "Messiah," with Mmes. Hayden and Peegé; Messrs. Hackett and Dadmun.

Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11—Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius," with Mme. Alcock and Messrs. Chamlee and Whitehill.

Sunday afternoon, April 1—Gounod's "Redemption," with Mmes. Hinkle and Laval; Messrs. Crooks and Bender.

Transcript Nov 27

HANDEL AND HAYDN

The Handel and Haydn Society the oldest in the country, will present three notable oratorios at Symphony Hall in the course of the coming season, under Emil Mollenhauer, with a large orchestra and distinguished soloists assisting at each concert. Amer 12-2

Handel's "Messiah" will have two Christmas performances, on Sunday afternoon, December 17, and Monday evening, December 18. Sir Edward Elgar's great musical setting of Cardinal Newman's poem, "The Dream of Gerontius" will be given on Sunday afternoon, February 11. For Easter Sunday afternoon, April 1, Gounod's "Redemeption" has been chosen as the most fitting score.

American Dec 2

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, in Symphony Hall, the first of the annual performances of "The Messiah," with the practised chorus of the Handel and Haydn Society and Mmes. Hayden and Peegé, Messrs. Hackett and Dadmun for solo singers. For a countless time, Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct.

Transcript Dec 2

HANDEL AND HAYDN

Three oratorios will be performed at Symphony hall this season by the Handel & Haydn Society, led by Mr. Mollenhauer. The works to be performed are Handel's "Messiah" in the Christmas season, Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, and Monday evening, Dec. 18, with the following soloists: Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; Royal Dadmun, bass; on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11, Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius," with Merle Alcock, contralto, as soloist, and two of the foremost men singers of the Metropolitan Opera Company, namely, Clarence Whitehill and Mario Chamlee. Easter Sunday afternoon, April 1, will be fittingly observed by the performance of Gounod's "Redemption." The soloists will be Florence Hinkle, soprano; Jeanne Laval, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor, and Paul Bender, baritone. Her 12-3

Herald Dec 3

ORATORIOS BY HANDEL AND HAYDN

Three great oratorios are to be performed at Symphony Hall during the course of the season by the Handel and Hydn Society, the historical chorus of Boston which under Emil Mollenhauer, its conductor, and with orchestra, organ and noted soloists at each representation, give such splendid performances in this city. Adv 12/3

First to be performed is Handel's "Messiah," Sunday afternoon, December 17, and Monday evening, December 18, with Ethel Hayden, Charlotte Peege, Arthur Hackett and Royal Dadmun as soloists. On Sunday afternoon February 11, Sir Edward Elgar's "Dream of Oerantius" will be presented, with Merle Alcock, Clarence Whitehill and Mario Chamlee as soloists. On Easter Sunday, Gounod's "Redemption" will be sung, with Florence Hinkle, Jeanne Laval, Richard Crooks and Paul Bender as soloists.

Advertiser Dec 3

Handel and Haydn Society's Plans for the Season

Three great oratorios are to be performed at Symphony Hall during the course of the season by the Handel and Haydn Society, under Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, with orchestra, organ and noted soloists at each representation.

Handel's "Messiah" will be given in the Christmas season, Sunday afternoon, Dec 17, and Monday evening, Dec 18, with Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; Royal Dadmun, bass.

Sunday afternoon, Feb 11, Sir Edward Elgar's great musical setting of Cardinel Newman's poem, "The Dream of Gerontius," will be presented, with Merle Alcock, contralto, as soloist, and two of the foremost men singers of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Clarence Whitehill, bass, and Mario Chamlee tenor.

Easter Sunday afternoon, April 1, will be observed by the performance of Gounod's "Redemption," the soloists to be Florence Hinkle, soprano; Jeanne Laval, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor and Paul Bender, baritone.

Globe Dec 3

Handel and Haydn

Post 12/3

Three great oratorios will be performed at Symphony Hall during the course of the season by the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, with orchestra, organ and noted soloists at each presentation.

The works to be performed are Handel's "Messiah" in the Christmas season, Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, and Monday evening, Dec. 18, with the following soloists—Ethel Hayden, soprano, Charlotte Peege, contralto, Arthur Hackett, tenor, Royal Dadmun, bass; on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11, Sir Edward Elgar's great musical setting of Cardinal Newman's poem, "The Dream of Gerontius," with Merle Alcock, contralto, as soloist, and two of the foremost men singers of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Clarence Whitehill the bass, and Mario Chamlee, tenor, and on Easter Sunday afternoon, April 1, Gounod's "Redemption," with Florence Hinkle, soprano, Jeanne Laval, contralto, Richard Crooks, tenor, and Paul Bender, baritone.

The Cecilia Society is rehearsing under the leadership of Mr. Agide Jacchia, head of the Boston Conservatory of Music, conductor of the Pops and for the past two seasons conductor of the Cecilia Society. Frank H. Luker is accompanist.

The society has this year elected new president, A. J. Jackson, of the A. J. Jackson Piano Company on Boylston street, who has been a member of the Cecilia Society for 20 years and whose aim is to bring the society back to the standard and purpose for which it was first organized; to perform works little known and pieces seldom done by other singing societies. There will be one concert given, probably in Jordan Hall, with organ and piano accompaniment. Soloists needed will be selected from the society.

Post Dec 3

CHRISTMAS "MESSIAH"

Handel's most popular of all oratorios, "The Messiah," will, as usual, open the season of the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 17, and Monday evening, December 18. Emil Mollenhauer is now rehearsing the great choral portions of the work, while a quartet of soloists has been engaged, including Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; and Royal Dadmun, bass. Amer 12-9

American Dec 9

SUNDAY afternoon, Dec. 17, in Symphony Hall, the first of the annual performances of "The Messiah," with the practised chorus of the Handel and Haydn Society and Mmes. Hayden and Peegé, Messrs. Hackett and Dadmun for solo singers. For a countless time, Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct. Trans 12-9

Transcript Dec 9

Monday evening, Dec. 18, in Symphony Hall, the second of the annual performances of "The Messiah" by the Handel and Haydn Society as above specified.

Transcript Dec 10

"Messiah" Next Week

Next Sunday afternoon, Dec 17, at 3:30, and Monday evening, Dec 18, at 8:15 in Symphony Hall, the Handel and Haydn Society will open its season with two performances of Handel's "Messiah," according to the usual custom of this chorus in the Christmas season.

Emil Mollenhauer, conductor of the society, is rehearsing the chorus for these opening concerts. The performance of the most popular of all oratorios through 200 years will be made the more notable by the distinction of the quartet of soloists who are to appear. The soprano and contralto will be Ethel Hayden and Charlotte Peege, while Arthur Hackett, well known to Boston audiences, will be tenor. The bass will be Royal Dadmun, who in several appearances here has won high praise by the beauty of his voice and the dramatic felicity of his interpretations.

Globe Dec 10

CHRISTMAS "MESSIAH"

Handel's most popular of all oratorios, "The Messiah," will, as usual open the season of the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 17, and Monday evening, December 18. Emil Mollenhauer is now rehearsing the great choral portions of the work, while a quartet of soloists has been engaged, including Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor; and Royal Dadmun, bass. Amer 12-9

American Dec 9

HANDEL AND HAYDN

Next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, at 3:30, and Monday evening, Dec. 18, at 8:15, in Symphony hall, the Handel and Haydn Society, Mr. Mollenhauer conductor, will open its season with two performances of Handel's "Messiah."

The soloists will be Ethel Hayden, Charlotte Peege, Arthur Hackett and Royal Dadmun. Her 12-10

Herald Dec 10

"Messiah" for Handel and Haydn

Next Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, at 3:30, and Monday evening, Dec. 18, at 8:15, in Symphony Hall, the Handel and Haydn Society will open its season with two performances of Handel's "Messiah," according to the usual custom of this chorus in the Christmas season.

The performance of the most popular of all oratorios will be given. Ethel Hayden, soprano, and Charlotte Peege, contralto, Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass-baritone. Post 12-10

Post Dec 10

"MESSIAH" OPENS ORATORIO SEASON

Next Sunday afternoon, December 17, and Monday evening, December 18, in Symphony Hall, the Handel and Haydn Society will open its season with two performances of Handel's "Messiah." Emil Mollenhauer is rehearsing the great chorus. The soprano and contralto will be Ethel Hayden and Charlotte Peege. Arthur Hackett, well known to Boston audiences, will be tenor. The base will be Royal Dadmun.

Advertiser Dec 10

CHRISTMAS "MESSIAH"

Handel's most popular of all oratorios "Tho Messiah," will, as usual, open the season of the Handel and Haydn Society when that historical organization gives two performances in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, and Monday evening, Dec. 18. Emil Mollenhauer is now rehearsing the great choral portions of the work, while a quartet of soloists, including Ethel Hayden, soprano, and Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, the noted tenor, and Royal Dadmun, the bass, have been engaged.

ETHEL HAYDEN

SYMPHONY PROGRAM

Traveler Dec 9

Along the Way

Trans 12-16

In Symphony Hall, tomorrow afternoon and again on Monday evening befall the annual performances of Handel's oratorio, "The Messiah," masterpiece and institution in the English-speaking world. The practised chorus of the Handel and Haydn Society and Mmes. Hayden and Peegé, Messrs. Hackett and Dadmun for solo-singers will share in the performance. For a countless time, Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct.

Transcript Dec 16

"Messiah" to Have Two Performances

Tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 and Monday evening at 8:15 at Symphony hall, Handel's "Messiah" will receive two Christmas-time performances at the hands of the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor.

To the chorus of 400 and the Symphony orchestra there will be added a splendid quartet of soloists. Ethel Hayden will be the soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass.

Traveler Dec 16

"MESSIAH" TODAY

Post 12/17

Two Christmas performances of Handel's "Messiah" will be given by the Handel and Haydn Society, according to the usual custom, this afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30 and tomorrow evening at 8:15.

The four solo parts are splendidly cast for this opening of the society's season, with Ethel Hayden, the soprano, who was received with enthusiasm at her recital in Aeolian Hall, New York, last Thursday; Charlotte Peege, contralto, of similarly high standing in the cities where she has sung; Arthur Hackett, the tenor, well known in Boston, and Royal Dadmun, the bass, who is perhaps unexcelled among the bass singers who are now appearing in oratorio performances. The masterpiece of Handel should likewise have a fine performance at the hands of Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor of the society, the large chorus of 400 voices and a symphony orchestra.

Post Dec 17

First "Messiah" Performance Today

Adv 12/17

TWO Christmas performances of Handel's "Messiah" will be given by the Handel and Hadyn Society in Symphony Hall, one this afternoon and one tomorrow night.

The four solo parts will be sung by Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass. Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor of the society, has trained the chorus of 400 voices and the orchestra.

Advertiser Dec 17

ETHYL HAYDEN, SOPRANO (ON LEFT) AND CHARLOTTE PEEGE, CONTRALT

Herald Dec 17

CHRISTMAS "MESSIAH"

Handel's "Messiah" will receive two Christmastime performances at the hands of the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, tomorrow afternoon and Monday evening at Symphony Hall.

To the chorus of 400 and the symphony orchestra there will be added a splendid quartet of soloists to do justice to the beautiful solo numbers of this most popular of all oratorios. Ethel Hayden will be the soprano, Charlotte Peege the contralto, Arthur Hackett the tenor and the fourth singer will be Royal Dadmun, considered one of the finest basses now appearing in oratorio performances.

American Dec 16

"MESSIAH" TODAY

Two Christmas performances of Handel's "Messiah" will be given by the Handel and Haydn Society, according to the usual custom, this afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30 and tomorrow evening at 8:15. The four solo parts are entrusted to Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass. Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct. The chorus of 400 voices will be assisted by a large orchestra.

Herald Dec 17

Handel and Haydn Society "Messiah" Performances

Two Christmas performances of Handel's "Messiah" will be given by the Handel and Haydn Society, according to the usual custom, in Symphony Hall, this afternoon, at 3:30 and tomorrow evening at 8:15.

The four solo parts will be sung by Ethel Hayden, a soprano who was received with enthusiasm at her recital in Aeolian Hall, New York, last Thursday; Charlotte Peege, contralto, of similarly high standing in the cities where she has sung; Arthur Hackett, the tenor, well known in Boston, and Royal Dadmun, the bass, who is perhaps unexcelled among the bass singers who are now appearing in oratorio performances. The masterpieec of Handel should likewise have a capable performance at the hands of Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor of the society, the large chorus of 400 voices and orchestra.

Globe Dec 17

Adv 12/17

CHARLOTTE PEEGE IN "MESSIAH" - SYMPHONY HALL

Advertiser Dec 17

See 5th page following

[116]

Harvard Glee Club

The concerts of the Harvard Glee Club, Archibald T. Davison, conductor, will take place in Symphony Hall on Thursday evenings, Dec. 14, Feb. 15 and April 5. The assisting artists will be Louise Homer, Frieda Hempel and Guiomar Novaes. The management is now ready to receive advance subscriptions prior to the public sale of tickets. John K. Watson, manager, Music building, Cambridge 38.

Herald Oct 2

Harvard Glee Club

The Harvard Glee Club, Dr. Archibald T. Davison, conductor, will give three concerts this season in Symphony Hall, on Thursday evenings, Dec. 14, Feb. 15, April 5.

Assisting artists will be: Louise Homer, Guiomar Novaes, and Frieda Hempel.

Post Oct 22

To good purpose Dr. Davison and the more ambitious spirits of the Harvard Glee Club have been searching for new pieces in the pages of living composers, French and English. They have found them in Bax and Holst, the maturing abilities of the younger English generation. and in Ropartz of the established Frenchmen. He, indeed, has written a piece directly for the club. Two Russians, virtually unknown—Schvedov and Tschesnokov—have also yielded promising numbers. For further exacting and novel venture, the Club and Mme. Homer will sing at the concert of Dec. 14 in Symphony Hall Brahms's seldom heard Rhapsody for alto and Men's Choir. Goethe's "Harzreise" affords the text. Trans 10-8

Transcript Oct 8

Harvard Glee Club

The Harvard Glee Club, Dr. Archibald T. Davison, conductor, will be assisted by Mme. Louise Homer at its concert Dec. 14, in Symphony Hall. Compositions by Bach, Schvedov, Palestrina, Jacopo Peri, Gluck, Haydn, Strauss, Wolf, Brahms, Morley, Coleridge-Taylor, Sidney Homer, Respighi, Benvenuti, Warlock, Sullivan, Bossi and Beethov[illegible] the pro- gra

Post Dec 3

Harvard Glee Club Dec 14 With Louise Homer, Soloist

The Harvard Glee Club begins its annual series of concerts in Symphony Hall Thursday evening, Dec 14, with Louise Homer as assisting soloist. The noted contralto will sing two groups of songs, including the exquisite cavatina, "Vieni che poi sereno," from Gluck's "Semiramide," Richard Strauss' "Mit deinen blauen Augen," an unfamiliar song by Respighi, and numbers from Peri, Haydn, Brahms and Wolf, besides lesser composers. Globe 12-3

Dr Davison has selected several unfamiliar numbers to add to the repertory of the Glee Club, among them a Brahms rhapsody in which Mrs Homer will sing a solo part, and music by Schvedov, Bach, Beethoven and Bossi.

It should now be news to nobody hereabouts that this amateur chorus of university students under Dr Davison's extraordinarily skilled conductorship sings with a spirit and subtlety that have made leading critics in many American and European cities compare their work with that of the best professional choruses. Last year this series was sold out, so that advance purchase of tickets is desirable.

Globe Dec 3

The Harvard Glee Club, Mr. Davison conductor, will sing music by Bach, Schvedor, Palestrina, Morley, Brahms, Coleridge-Taylor, Sullivan, Bossi, Beethoven and a group of Russian folksongs in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Dec. 14. Louise Homer will contribute songs by Peri, Gluck, Haydn, Strauss, Brahms, Homer, Resphigi, Benvenuti and Warlock. Her 12-3

Herald Dec 3

HARVARD GLEE CLUB

Mme. Louise Homer will be the assisting artist at the Harvard Glee Club concert in Symphony Hall on Thursday night, December 14. She will sing at least a dozen songs. The famous glee club, under the direction of Dr. Archibald T. Davison, will present its usual well diversified program, including religious hymns by Bach, Beethoven, Palestrina and Schvedoff, Russian folk songs and other compositions by Brahms, Morley, Sullivan, Bossi and Coleridge-Taylor. Adv 12-3

Advertiser Dec 3

Harvard and Homer

At Symphony Hall on Thursday evening next befalls the first of a new series of concerts by the Harvard Glee Club at the high pitch of musical diligence ambition, intelligence and accomplishment to which Dr. Davison and th students' zeal have raised it. As usua ancient and modern, churchly an worldly, pieces for men's choir wil divide the programme. Among ther are numbers from Bach, Palestrina Beethoven, Morley, Bossi and Sulliva Mme. Homer, still at maturity as singe will assist the club, particularly in se[illegible]heard Rhapsody of Brahms fo [illegible] men's chorus. She wi [illegible]

Transcript

Harvard Glee Club and Mrs Homer Thursday

Louise Homer, the distinguished American contralto who has very many admirers in Boston, will be the soloist at the first concert of the Harvard Glee Club series Thursday night at Symphony Hall. Dr Davison has put together a program which offers many numbers new to those who have followed these concerts for the years since the Glee Club began its present extraordinarily successful policy of presenting nothing at its concerts not of the highest musical standard. One or two old favorites will be given.

Mrs Homer will be herd in a group of classic concert songs and a lighter group including two pieces by her husband, Sidney Homer, well known as a composer.

This series of concerts is one of the three finest offered in Boston. It deserves the patronage of every one who cares about good music, sung with energy and delicacy.

Globe Dec 10

HARVARD GLEE CLUB

The Harvard Glee Club, Dr. Davison conductor, will be assisted by Mme. Louise Homer at its concert in Symphony hall next Thursday evening. The program will be as follows:

Crucifixus	Bach
We Praise Thee	Schvedov
Tenebrae Factae Sunt	Palestrina
Glee Club
Invocazione di Orfeo	Peri
"Vieni che poi sereno," from "Semimide"	Gluck
The Mermaid's Song	Haydn
Mit deinen blauen Augen	Strauss
Elfenlied	Wolf
Bei dir sind meine Gedanken	Brahms
O liebliche Wangen	Brahms
Mme. Homer
Fire, Fire, My Heart	Morley
Rhapsody	Brahms
(Assisted by Mme. Homer)
Russian Folk Songs.
Song of the Lifeboat Men
Fireflies
At Father's Door
Drake's Drum	Coleridge-Taylor
How's My Boy	Homer
From the Brake the Nightingale	Homer
Pioggia	Respighi
Tramontarano la luna e le Piejadi	Benvenuti
As Ever I Saw	Warlock
Dedication	Warlock
Mme. Homer
Echo	Sullivan
Noon Quiet in the Alps	Bossi
Hallelujah Chorus, from the "Mount of Olives"	Beethoven
Glee Club

Her 12-10

Herald Dec 10

Harvard Glee Club's Concert Thursday Night

The Harvard Glee Club will open its season with a concert of choral pieces in Symphony Hall, Thursday evening, Dec. 14, instead of this evening as had been advertised. Madame Louise Homer will sing, as assisting soloist at the concert, arias of Peri and Gluck, songs by Hadyn, Strauss and Wolf, and modern numbers by Homer, Respighi, Benvenuti and Warlock. Post 12-12

The chorus, under Dr. Archibald T. Davison, will sing 17th and 18th century religious numbers of Bach, Palestrina and Schvedov, Brahms' Rhapsody (Madame Homer assisting), "Drake's Drum," songs by Morley and Sullivan, a group of Russian folk songs and the Hallelujah Chorus from Beethoven's "Mount of Olives."

Post Dec 12

The Harvard Glee Club will give its first concert of the season tonight in Symphony Hall aided and abetted by Mme. Louise Homer.

Herald Dec 14

HOMER PLEASES WITH HARVARD GLEE CLUB

Fine Program Well Sung at Symphony Hall Concert

The Harvard Glee Club, assisted by Louise Homer, began its annual series of concerts at Symphony Hall last night with a fine program sung with a precision and euphony that delighted the very large audience, as did the noted contralto's admirable performance.

Mrs Homer's voice and artistry have never seemed more enjoyable than they did in Strauss' "Mit deinen blauen Augen" last night. Her two groups of numbers were chosen with unusual musical discrimination. Gluck's cavatina from "Semiramide," Wolf's sprightly "Elfenlied," Respighi's "Pioggia" and Peri's Invocation of Orpheus, from one of the earliest of all operas are all well worth more frequent hearings than they get in Boston concert halls. Her singing of these and other numbers showed musical brains as well as a voice and a very skilful vocal technique.

Dr Davison, in his search for new pieces, has hit upon several distinct finds for the glee club. The arrangements of three Russian folk songs, the "Hallelujah Chorus" from Beethoven's oratorio, "The Mount of Olives," and the Bach and Palestrina numbers all proved noteworthy and enjoyable music.

The performance of the glee club was unusually well balanced, with no individual voices usurping prominence unintentionally. The diction was, as always, clear, but the enunciation sometimes was clipped and the vowel sounds occasionally imperfect in quality. [illegible]

Globe Dec 15

HARVARD GLEE CLUB CONCERT

Her 12/15

First of Series of Three for Season Is Given in Symphony Hall

MME. LOUISE HOMER, CONTRALTO, SOLOIST

Last night in Symphony hall the Harvard Glee Club, Dr. Archibald T. Davison, conductor, gave the first of its three concerts this season in Boston. Mme. Louise Homer, contralto, assisted. The Glee club sang the Crucifixus from Bach's Mass, "We Praise Thee" by the Russian Schoedov, "Tenebrae factae sunt" by Palestrina, with Mme. Homer; Brahms's Rhapsody, three Russian folk songs, "Song of the Lifeboat Men" (solo by James E. Mitchell), "Fireflies" and "At Father's Door," a song by Thomas Morley, "Drake's Drum" by Coleridge-Taylor, Sullivan's "Echo", "Noon Quiet in the Alps" by the Italian Bossi, and the "Hallelujah" chorus from Beethoven's "Mount of Olives." Mme. Homer, as well as the solo in the Brahms Rhapsody, sang a fragment from Peri's "Orfeo," the Gluck air "Vieni che pool sereno," Haydn's "Mermaid Song", Strauss's "Mit deinen blauen Augen," Wolf's "Elfenlied," two Brahms songs, "Bei dir sind meine Gedanken" and "O liebliche Wangen," two songs by Sidney Homer, "How's My Boy" and "From the Brake the Nightingale," two Italian songs, Respighi's "Pioggia" and "Tramontarono la luna e le Plajadi" by Benvenuti, and finally two songs by the English composer, Warlock, "That Ever I Saw" and "Dedication." Eleanor Scheib played Mme Homer's accompaniments; for the Glee club G. W. Woodworar was the accompanist, W. T. Ames the assistant accompanist and C. T. Leonard the organist.

Dr. Davison should feel himsel blessed when he compares his lot wit that of those remarkable but unfortunate conductors of the Russian oper who, poor souls, struggle night afte night—and, mind, mighty successfull too—with inadequate forces to mak things go as they should. Sympathy on feels for them every minute for th torments they must undergo, when, say they call on the orchestra for a blaz of sound—and get instead somethin like the flicker of a match.

With Dr. Davison at the head of h Glee Club one feels no call for sym pathy. Beyond any conductor, orches tral, choral or operatic, who has recent ly led a performance in Boston, D Davison has the air of getting fron his forces what he wants. He ha taught his choir an attack of exceptional neatness, a finish equally good, time of the strictest accuracy, distinct enunciation, the correct turning of a phrase, pure intonation, and, an achievement since last year, a smooth legato—a goodly schedule, truly, of excellences. Blessed, though, is not precisely the word to apply to Dr. Davison for the competence of the choir at his disposal, since this competence is not s entirely the result of his own rare skill Let praise then fall where it is justly due. Dr. Davison is manifestly of a power to make his chorus sing no very differently from the way he would have it sing.

Mme. Homer, who received ver warm applause, is to be thanked fo placing Brahms, Strauss and Wol once more on her program. The gracefully picturesque and atmospheric song of Respighi, nevertheless, overshadowed the rather mediocre songs of the greater masters Mme. Homer chose to sing.

The audience was very large, the second Glee Club concert will be given Feb. 15 with Guiomar Novaes assisting.

R. R. G.

Herald Dec 15

HARVARD'S GLEE CLUB ASTOUNDS

Post 12/15

Has Audience Marvelling at Perfection of Singing

The Harvard Glee Club, Dr. Archibald T. Davison, conductor, gave its first concert of the year in Symphony Hall last night, assisted by Mme. Louise Homer, contralto. In spite of the bad storm, the audience crowded the hall. And a distinguished audience it was, too. The Glee Club is fortunate in its audiences.

VERY NEAR PERFECTION

That this organization need fear nothing from a comparison with any men's chorus was shown again last night. One does not cease to marvel at the stage of perfection to which Dr. Davison now annually brings a group of men's voices which is constantly changing from year to year.

With absolutely no introduction, no easy piece with which to limber up the men's voices at the start of the concert, Mr. Davison began with a group of religious pieces including, for the first one, "Crucifixus" of Bach, which was beautifully sung. In the other two, as in many other songs during the course of the concert, the chorus sang unaccompanied.

Pianissimo Without Break

And it was here that one glimpsed why music is sometimes written without accompaniment. There wasn't the uncertainty of pitch, of phrasing that makes an audience ordinarily dread this type of choral music, with a feeling of uneasiness. For these men sang! Harmonies flowed in liquid procession; and when a song ended pianissimo, it was sung pianissimo without a break. The voices of the various sections were as one, doing the bidding of the conductor.

In the second group the men showed an ability for clear phrasing, accurat and crisp diction, an ability almost t declaim in chorus, that made th pieces minature dramas or stories. Th "Rhapsody" of Brahms, in which Mm Homer sang the solo, was beautiful done in every way, but the music i self was not as impressive as one might have hoped.

There was a group of Russian folksongs, including the beautiful and popular "Volga Boatmen's Song." We have often wondered how this song sounded if sung by a really good chorus, and last night we found that it is as marvellous as we hoped. To describe the men's singing is to use one superlative after another. At the close of every number, it seemed, the audience was simply overwhelmed. and it was a far-seeing conductor who inserted the note into the programme requesting the audience to ask for no repeats. Otherwise the men might still be singing.

Completing the last group of songs was the Hallelujah Chorus from Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," a piece in which the chorus piled on one gorgeous chord atop of another in breathtaking succession.

In between Mme. Homer sang two groups of songs. Hers is a glorious voice of amazing range and power. Last night she reached within five minutes low G and high A-flat. At the opening of her first group it was possible to complain of a lack of color variety; her sustained upper notes were rather hard. But as the night progressed she came into her own, and she has reason to be proud of her own, even if placed in the setting of last night.

Her most effective singing and acting was done in "How's my boy?" by her husband, Sidney Homer. "Pioggia," a colorful song by Respighi, she sang with fine tone and phrasing.

Post Dec 15

Harvard Glee Club

Last evening in Symphony Hall, the Harvard Glee Club, Dr. Archibald T. Davison, conductor, gave the first of a series of three concerts. Last evening the club was assisted by Louise Homer. The membership of an organization such as the Harvard Glee Club, of necessity changes from year to year, yet the influx of new voices makes surprisingly little change in the general effect of the singing. The same perfections so noticeable in the past are still to be observed and are still worthy of the praise and admiration so often accorded them, yet it must be confessed that certain defects remain as well. Is it not possible that in his search for refinement Dr. Davison has gone too far? A chorus of young men should give to their singing an enthusiasm, a youthful vigor, a freshness, which was often sadly missed last evening. This spirit of youth is too rare and precious a thing to be suppressed. Rarely did the club indulge in a resounding fortissimo, rarely did they sing with joyous abandon; all, for the most part, was in half tints, delicately modulated it is true and often of exquisite quality, yet over fastidious, often affected.

Mme. Homer sang 13 songs and in addition the solo part in a rhapsody by Brahms. Her 13 songs and the rhapsody might have been compressed into a single piece, so little variety of style or interpretation did the singer contrive to impart to the music, yet Mme. Homer was evidently well within the good will of her audience and gave evident pleasure by her singing.

The program was judiciously selected and fortunately contained none of the musical absurdities so often written for male voices. The lighter pieces were three Russian folg songs, (one of them the inevitable song of the Volga Boatmen) well calculated to exhibit the club's virtuosity. So, too, was Morley's "Fa la"—"Fire, fire, my heart." Bach's "Crucifixus" can hardly compare with Lotti's more familiar setting, although the combination of organ and piano in the accompaniment produced an original color effect. Brahms' rhapsody is decidedly not among the most inspired of that master's compositions.

S. M.

Monitor Dec 15

At the back of the heads of Dr. Davison and other directing powers of the Harvard Glee Club is a large prospect—no other than the singing of Brahms's "German Requiem," with the necessary orchestra and adequate "assisting artists." For long the music, accounted the composer's choral masterpiece, has gone unheard here. With it—there is good reason to believe—Dr. Davison and his choirs at Harvard and Radcliffe would succeed well. By another year they may even make the venture. Trans 12-21

Transcript Dec 21

over

[117]

Harvard Glee Club

The concerts of the Harvard Glee Club, Archibald T. Davison, conductor, will take place in Symphony Hall on Thursday evenings, Dec. 14, Feb. 15 and April 5. The assisting artists will be Louise Homer, Frieda Hempel and Guiomar Novaes. The management is now ready to receive advance subscriptions prior to the public sale of tickets. John K. Watson, manager, Music building, Cambridge 38.

Herald Oct 22

Harvard Glee Club

The Harvard Glee Club, Dr. Archibald T. Davison, conductor, will give three concerts this season in Symphony Hall, on Thursday evenings, Dec. 14, Feb. 15, April 5.

Assisting artists will be: Louise Homer, Guiomar Novaes, and Frieda Hempel.

Post Oct 22

To good purpose Dr. Davison and the more ambitious spirits of the Harvard Glee Club have been searching for new pieces in the pages of living composers, French and English. They have found them in Bax and Holst, the maturing abilities of the younger English generation. and in Ropartz of the established Frenchmen. He, indeed, has written a piece directly for the club. Two Russians, virtually unknown—Schvedov and Tschesnokov—have also yielded promising numbers. For further exacting and novel venture, the Club and Mme. Homer will sing at the concert of Dec. 14 in Symphony Hall Brahms's seldom heard Rhapsody for alto and Men's Choir. Goethe's "Harzreise" affords the text. Trans 10-8

Transcript Oct 8

Harvard Glee Club

The Harvard Glee Club, Dr. Archibald T. Davison, conductor, will be assisted by Mme. Louise Homer at its concert Dec. 14, in Symphony Hall. Compositions by Bach, Schvedov, Palestrina, Jacopo Peri, Gluck, Haydn, Strauss, Wolf, Brahms, Morley, Coleridge-Taylor, Sidney Homer, Respighi, Benvenuti, Warlock, Sullivan, Bossi and Beethoven will figure on the program. Post 12/3

Post Dec 3

Harvard Glee Club Dec 14 With Louise Homer, Soloist

The Harvard Glee Club begins its annual series of concerts in Symphony Hall Thursday evening, Dec 14, with Louise Homer as assisting soloist. The noted contralto will sing two groups of songs, including the exquisite cavatina, "Vieni che poi sereno," from Gluck's "Semiramide," Richard Strauss' "Mit deinen blauen Augen," an unfamiliar song by Respighi, and numbers from Peri, Haydn, Brahms and Wolf, besides lesser composers. Globe 12-3

Dr Davison has selected several unfamiliar numbers to add to the repertory of the Glee Club, among them a Brahms rhapsody in which Mrs Homer will sing a solo part, and music by Schvedov, Bach, Beethoven and Bossi.

It should now be news to nobody hereabouts that this amateur chorus of university students under Dr Davison's extraordinarily skilled conductorship sings with a spirit and subtlety that have made leading critics in many American and European cities compare their work with that of the best professional choruses. Last year this series was sold out, so that advance purchase of tickets is desirable.

Globe Dec 3

The Harvard Glee Club, Mr. Davison conductor, will sing music by Bach, Schvedor, Palestrina, Morley, Brahms, Coleridge-Taylor, Sullivan, Bossi, Beethoven and a group of Russian folksongs in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Dec. 14. Louise Homer will contribute songs by Peri, Gluck, Haydn, Strauss, Brahms, Homer, Resphigi, Benvenuti and Warlock. Her 12-3

Herald Dec 3

HARVARD GLEE CLUB

Mme. Louise Homer will be the assisting artist at the Harvard Glee Club concert in Symphony Hall on Thursday night, December 14. She will sing at least a dozen songs. The famous glee club, under the direction of Dr. Archibald T. Davison, will present its usual well diversified program, including religious hymns by Bach, Beethoven, Palestrina and Schvedoff, Russian folk songs and other compositions by Brahms, Morley, Sullivan, Bossi and Coleridge-Taylor. Adv 12-3

Advertiser Dec 3

Harvard and Homer

At Symphony Hall on Thursday evening next befalls the first of a new series of concerts by the Harvard Glee Club at the high pitch of musical diligence ambition, intelligence and accomplishment to which Dr. Davison and the students' zeal have raised it. As usua ancient and modern, churchly an worldly, pieces for men's choir w divide the programme. Among the are numbers from Bach, Palestrin Beethoven, Morley, Bossi and Sulliva Mme. Homer, still at maturity as singe will assist the club, particularly in seldom-heard Rhapsody of Brahms fo alto voice and men's chorus. She wi be heard also in old airs and moder songs of which few are hackneye pieces [illegible]

Transcript Dec [illegible]

Harvard Glee Club and Mrs Homer Thursday

Glb 12-10

Louise Homer, the distinguished American contralto who has very many admirers in Boston, will be the soloist at the first concert of the Harvard Glee Club series Thursday night at Symphony Hall. Dr Davison has put together a program which offers many numbers new to those who have followed these concerts for the years since the Glee Club began its present extraordinarily successful policy of presenting nothing at its concerts not of the highest musical standard. One or two old favorites will be given.

Mrs Homer will be herd in a group of classic concert songs and a lighter group including two pieces by her husband, Sidney Homer, well known as a composer.

This series of concerts is one of the three finest offered in Boston. It deserves the patronage of every one who cares about good music, sung with energy and delicacy.

Globe Dec 10

HARVARD GLEE CLUB

The Harvard Glee Club, Dr. Davison conductor, will be assisted by Mme. Louise Homer at its concert in Symphony hall next Thursday evening. The program will be as follows:

Her 12-10

Crucifixus	Bach
We Praise Thee	Schvedov
Tenebrae Factae Sunt	Palestrina
Glee Club
Invocazione di Orfeo	Peri
"Vieni che poi sereno," from "Semimide"	Gluck
The Mermaid's Song	Haydn
Mit deinen blauen Augen	Strauss
Elfenlied	Wolf
Bei dir sind meine Gedanken	Brahms
O liebliche Wangen	Brahms
Mme. Homer
Fire, Fire, My Heart	Morley
Rhapsody	Brahms
(Assisted by Mme. Homer)
Russian Folk Songs.
Song of the Lifeboat Men
Fireflies
At Father's Door
Drake's Drum	Coleridge-Taylor
How's My Boy	Homer
From the Brake the Nightingale	Homer
Pioggia	Respighi
Tramontarano la luna e le Piejadi	Benvenuti
As Ever I Saw	Warlock
Dedication	Warlock
Mme. Homer
Echo	Sullivan
Noon Quiet in the Alps	Bossi
Hallelujah Chorus, from the "Mount of Olives"	Beethoven
Glee Club

Herald Dec 10

Harvard Glee Club's Concert Thursday Night

The Harvard Glee Club will open its season with a concert of choral pieces in Symphony Hall, Thursday evening, Dec. 14, instead of this evening as had been advertised. Madame Louise Homer will sing, as assisting soloist at the concert, arias of Peri and Gluck, songs by Hadyn, Strauss and Wolf, and modern numbers by Homer, Respighi, Benvenuti and Warlock. Post 12-12

The chorus, under Dr. Archibald T. Davison, will sing 17th and 18th century religious numbers of Bach, Palestrina and Schvedov, Brahms' Rhapsody (Madame Homer assisting), "Drake's Drum," songs by Morley and Sullivan, a group of Russian folk songs and the Hallelujah Chorus from Beethoven's "Mount of Olives."

Post Dec 12

The Harvard Glee Club will give its first concert of the season tonight in Symphony Hall aided and abetted by Mme. Louise Homer.

Herald Dec 14

HOMER PLEASES WITH HARVARD GLEE CLUB

Globe 12-15

Fine Program Well Sung at Symphony Hall Concert

The Harvard Glee Club, assisted by Louise Homer, began its annual series of concerts at Symphony Hall last night with a fine program sung with a precision and euphony that delighted the very large audience, as did the noted controlto's admirable performance.

Mrs Homer's voice and artistry have never seemed more enjoyable than they did in Strauss' "Mit deinen blauen Augen" last night. Her two groups of numbers were chosen with unusual musical discrimination. Gluck's cavatina from "Semiramide," Wolf's sprightly "Elfenlied," Respighi's "Pioggia" and Peri's Invocation of Orpheus, from one of the earliest of all operas are all well worth more frequent hearings than they get in Boston concert halls. Her singing of these and other numbers showed musical brains as well as a voice and a very skilful vocal technique.

Dr Davison, in his search for new pieces, has hit upon several distinct finds for the glee club. The arrangements of three Russian folk songs, the "Hallelujah Chorus" from Beethoven's oratorio, "The Mount of Olives," and the Bach and Palestrina numbers all proved noteworthy and enjoyable music.

The performance of the glee club was unusually well balanced, with no individual voices usurping prominence unintentionally. The diction was, as always, clear, but the enunciation sometimes was clipped and the vowel sounds occasionally impure in quality.

The Harvard Glee Club, in its present estate, is rapidly becoming an established and indispensable Bostonian and American musical institution. [illegible]

Globe Dec 15

HARVARD GLEE CLUB CONCERT

Her 12-15

First of Series of Three for Season Is Given in Symphony Hall

MME. LOUISE HOMER, CONTRALTO, SOLOIST

Last night in Symphony hall the Harvard Glee Club, Dr. Archibald T. Davison, conductor, gave the first of its three concerts this season in Boston. Mme. Louise Homer, contralto, assisted. The Glee club sang the Crucifixus from Bach's Mass, "We Praise Thee" by the Russian Schoedov, "Tenebrae factae sunt" by Palestrina, with Mme. Homer; Brahms's Rhapsody, three Russian folk songs, "Song of the Lifeboat Men" (solo by James E. Mitchell), "Fireflies" and "At Father's Door," a song by Thomas Morley, "Drake's Drum" by Coleridge-Taylor, Sullivan's "Echo", "Noon Quiet in the Alps" by the Italian Bossi, and the "Hallelujah" chorus from Beethoven's "Mount of Olives." Mme. Homer, as well as the solo in the Brahms Rhapsody, sang a fragment from Peri's "Orfeo," the Gluck air "Vieni che pooi sereno," Haydn's" Mermaid Song", Strauss's "Mit deinen blauen Augen," Wolf's "Elfenlied," two Brahms songs, "Bei dir sind meine Gedanken" and "O liebliche Wangen," two songs by Sidney Homer, "How's My Boy" and "From the Brake the Nightingale," two Italian songs, Respighi's "Pioggia" and "Tramontarono la luna e le Piajadi" by Benvenuti, and finally two songs by the English composer, Warlock, "That Ever I Saw" and "Dedication." Eleanor Scheib played Mme. Homer's accompaniments; for the Glee club G. W. Woodworar was the accompanist, W. T. Ames the assistant accompanist and C. T. Leonard the organist.

Dr. Davison should feel himself blessed when he compares his lot with that of those remarkable but unfortunate conductors of the Russian opera who, poor souls, struggle night after night—and, mind, mighty successfully too—with inadequate forces to make things go as they should. Sympathy one feels for them every minute for the torments they must undergo, when, say they call on the orchestra for a blaze of sound—and get instead something like the flicker of a match.

With Dr. Davison at the head of his Glee Club one feels no call for sympathy. Beyond any conductor, orchestral, choral or operatic, who has recently led a performance in Boston, Dr. Davison has the air of getting from his forces what he wants. He has taught his choir an attack of exceptional neatness, a finish equally good, time of the strictest accuracy, distinct enunciation, the correct turning of a phrase, pure intonation, and, an achievement since last year, a smooth legato—a goodly schedule, truly, of excellences. Blessed, though, is not precisely the word to apply to Dr. Davison for the competence of the choir at his disposal, since this competence is not so entirely the result of his own rare skill. Let praise then fall where it is justly due. Dr. Davison is manifestly of a power to make his chorus sing not very differently from the way he would have it sing.

Mme. Homer, who received very warm applause, is to be thanked for placing Brahms, Strauss and Wolf once more on her program. The gracefully picturesque and atmospheric songs of Respighi, nevertheless, overshadowed the rather mediocre songs of the greater masters Mme. Homer chose to sing.

The audience was very large, the second Glee Club concert will be given Feb. 15 with Guiomar Novaes assisting.

R. R. G.

Herald Dec 15

HARVARD'S GLEE CLUB ASTOUNDS

Post 12-15

Has Audience Marveling at Perfection of Singing

The Harvard Glee Club, Dr. Archibald T. Davison, conductor, gave its first concert of the year in Symphony Hall last night, assisted by Mme. Louise Homer, contralto. In spite of the bad storm, the audience crowded the hall. And a distinguished audience it was, too. The Glee Club is fortunate in its audiences.

VERY NEAR PERFECTION

That this organization need fear nothing from a comparison with any men's chorus was shown again last night. One does not cease to marvel at the stage of perfection to which Dr. Davison now annually brings a group of men's voices which is constantly changing from year to year.

With absolutely no introduction, no easy piece with which to limber up the men's voices at the start of the concert, Mr. Davison began with a group of religious pieces including, for the first one, "Crucifixus" of Bach, which was beautifully sung. In the other two, as in many other songs during the course of the concert, the chorus sang unaccompanied.

Pianissimo Without Break

And it was here that one glimpsed why music is sometimes written without accompaniment. There wasn't the uncertainty of pitch, of phrasing that makes an audience ordinarily dread this type of choral music, with a feeling of uneasiness. For these men sang! Harmonies flowed in liquid procession; and when a song ended pianissimo, it was sung pianissimo without a break. The voices of the various sections were as one, doing the bidding of the conductor.

In the second group the men showed an ability for clear phrasing, accurate and crisp diction, an ability almost to declaim in chorus, that made the pieces minature dramas or stories. The "Rhapsody" of Brahms, in which Mme. Homer sang the solo, was beautifully done in every way, but the music itself was not as impressive as one might have hoped.

There was a group of Russian folk-songs, including the beautiful and popular "Volga Boatmen's Song." We have often wondered how this song sounded if sung by a really good chorus, and last night we found that it is as marvellous as we hoped. To describe the men's singing is to use one superlative after another. At the close of every number, it seemed, the audience was simply overwhelmed. and it was a far-seeing conductor who inserted the note into the programme requesting the audience to ask for no repeats. Otherwise the men might still be singing.

Completing the last group of songs was the Hallelujah Chorus from Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," a piece in which the chorus piled on one gorgeous chord atop of another in breathtaking succession.

In between Mme. Homer sang two groups of songs. Hers is a glorious voice of amazing range and power. Last night she reached within five minutes low G and high A-flat. At the opening of her first group it was possible to complain of a lack of color variety; her sustained upper notes were rather hard. But as the night progressed she came into her own, and she has reason to be proud of her own, even if placed in the setting of last night.

Her most effective singing and acting was done in "How's my boy?" by her husband, Sidney Homer. "Pioggia," a colorful song by Respighi, she sang with fine tone and phrasing.

Post Dec 15

Harvard Glee Club

Mon 12-15

Last evening in Symphony Hall, the Harvard Glee Club, Dr. Archibald T. Davison, conductor, gave the first of a series of three concerts. Last evening the club was assisted by Louise Homer. The membership of an organization such as the Harvard Glee Club, of necessity changes from year to year, yet the influx of new voices makes surprisingly little change in the general effect of the singing. The same perfections so noticeable in the past are still to be observed and are still worthy of the praise and admiration so often accorded them, yet it must be confessed that certain defects remain as well. Is it not possible that in his search for refinement Dr. Davison has gone too far? A chorus of young men should give to their singing an enthusiasm, a youthful vigor, a freshness, which was often sadly missed last evening. This spirit of youth is too rare and precious a thing to be suppressed. Rarely did the club indulge in a resounding fortissimo, rarely did they sing with joyous abandon; all, for the most part, was in half tints, delicately modulated it is true and often of exquisite quality, yet over fastidious, often affected.

Mme. Homer sang 13 songs and in addition the solo part in a rhapsody by Brahms. Her 13 songs and the rhapsody might have been compressed into a single piece, so little variety of style or interpretation did the singer contrive to impart to the music, yet Mme. Homer was evidently well within the good will of her audience and gave evident pleasure by her singing.

The program was judiciously selected and fortunately contained none of the musical absurdities so often written for male voices. The lighter pieces were three Russian folg songs, (one of them the inevitable song of the Volga Boatmen) well calculated to exhibit the club's virtuosity. So, too, was Morley's "Fa la"—"Fire, fire, my heart. "Bach's "Crucifixus" can hardly compare with Lotti's more familiar setting, although the combination of organ and piano in the accompaniment produced an original color effect. Brahms' rhapsody is decidedly not among the most inspired of that master's compositions.

S. M.

Monitor Dec 15

At the back of the heads of Dr. Davison and other directing powers of the Harvard Glee Club is a large prospect—no other than the singing of Brahms's "German Requiem," with the necessary orchestra and adequate "assisting artists." For long the music, accounted the composer's choral masterpiece, has gone unheard here. With it—there is good reason to believe—Dr. Davison and his choirs at Harvard and Radcliffe would succeed well. By another year they may even make the venture. Trans 12-21

Transcript Dec 21

over

Newman Travel talks

NEWMAN'S TRAVEL TALK

E. M. Newman's "Sudan to Cairo" Traveltalk will be presented next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon at Symphony Hall. This is the fifth section of the across Africa Cape-to-Cairo series and it is by far the most interesting. As in the previous Traveltalks, this one leads into the African jungles where the native haunts of birds and wild animals will be seen at close range.

In motion pictures and color views, the journey starts as Masindi Port and proceeds in and around Albert Nyanza, on to Nimule, then down the Nile, visiting Fashoda, Kosti, Wady Halfa, Assuan, Luxor, Karnak and many other points of interest on the trail leading to Cairo.

Herald Dec 10

LAST NEWMAN TRAVELTALK

E. M. Newman's "Sudan to Cairo" Traveltalk is to be presented next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon at Symphony Hall. This is the fifth section of the "Across Africa Cape-to-Cairo" series and it is by far the most interesting. As in the previous Traveltalks, this one leads into the African jungles where the native haunts of birds and wild animals will be seen at close range. This marvellous collection of motion pictures reveals the pelican, various kinds of heron, the strange weaver birds and an actual scene of the weaver bird building its nest; the Nile buffalo, a vicious and dangerous animal; a different family of hippopotami, wild boars and many curious animals found only along the Nile.

Post Dec 10

NEWMAN AGAIN

So remarkable have been the animal motion pictures which featured E. M. Newman's series of travel talks, traversing Africa, that the explorer will give an extra pair of lectures in Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, showing his best pictures of animals and natives.

American Dec 17

EXTRA TRAVEL TALK

So remarkable have been the animal motion pictures shown in E. M. Newman's series of travel talks, traversing Africa, which came to an end yesterday, that there will be an extra pair of lectures in Symphony hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, concentrating in them the best pictures of animals and natives from the series. The pictures were made possible by the marvelous telephoto lenses, blinds, considerable daring and infinite patience. They reveal many animals never before photographed in their native haunts. This is the most complete collection of wild animals ever shown on the screen.

Herald Dec 17

NEWMAN SHOWS BIG PYRAMIDS

Buildings of Early Egyptians Also Pictured in Traveltalk

AUDIENCE SEES HIPPOPOTAMI SHOT

To the regret of many, Mr. Newman brings to an end this week his series of entertaining and instructive Traveltalks about Africa, from Cape Town to Cairo. Those who had the pleasure of attending this series are certainly better acquainted with the nature of the country, its great natural wealth, its magnificent scenery, the native inhabitants of various degrees of intelligence, their manners and customs, the improvements by the whites, the vision and the accomplishments of Cecil Rhodes and others, than they would have gained by reading many books.

For the informing talk of Mr. Newman, founded on several journeys in Africa, the keenness of his observations and his sane conclusions, these have been supplemented by many remarkable photographs, motion pictures, and still. The photographs of all manner of birds and beasts, wild and in the open, are enough to make these Traveltalks memorable.

Last night from Masindi port, the Albert Nyanza was visited with views of the Nile natives, the Shilluks and their strange coiffures; the skilled bowmen. There was Fashoda associated in the mind with Marchand; Khartum with the Gordon tragedy. Hippopotami and crocodiles were shot from the steamer's deck. Then came more familiar sights: The marvellous buildings of the early Egyptians: Luxor, Thebes and Memnon—all the manuments of Egypt passed in review, until one looked down from the great pyramid as the centuries looked on Napoleon.

Among the pictures of bird and animal life shown last night were those of pelicans, herons, weavers (at work on their nests), the Nile buffalo, hippopotami of the Nile, wild boars, vultures and other carrion birds peculiar to the venerable river.

The Traveltalk will be repeated this afternoon.

There will be extra Traveltalks on Friday evening, Dec. 22, and Saturday afternoon, Dec. 23, when the pictures of wild animals in the open shown through the series will be collected in [illegible] lecture. P. H.

Herald Dec 16

Newman Traveltalk

Resuming his traveltalk journey from the Cape to Cairo in Symphony Hall last night Mr. Newman took his party from Masindi up the Nile to Cairo and from there to Port Said, where they embarked for home. Not the least interesting of this delightful series of African pictures was this one of a land of contrasts, with its beautiful scenery, its strange peoples, its huge engineering feats, its customs that have remained unchanged from early Bible days, its pyramids and sphinx, together with its wild animals in their natural haunts. Most remarkable of numerous noteworthy pictures were some of the strange weaver bird actually weaving his nest. Modern Egypt was shown and spots and places made memorable by events of recent years. These will stay in memory for they impress the imagination as souvenirs of a land of ancient days. Even so, to those who have so lately traversed it in Symphony Hall, Egypt remains a slumbrous country, vibrant with undeciphered meanings. The lecture is repeated this afternoon.

Monitor Dec 16

WILD ANIMAL PICTURES

An extra travel talk will be given by E. M. Newman in Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, in which the remarkable animal motion pictures which featured his series now drawn to a close—"Across Africa, from Cape to Cairo"—will be concentrated. Likewise, some very unusual pictures of natives living in the interior and remote from any trace of civilization, will be shown.

These pictures reveal many animals never before photographed in their native haunts. The pictures were made possible by the marvelous telephoto lens, blinds, considerable daring and infinite patience.

American Dec 16

NEWMAN TO GIVE WILD ANIMAL TALK

An extra travel talk will be given by E. M. Newman in Symphony hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, Dec. 22-23, in which pair of lectures the remarkable animal motion pictures which featured his series now drawing to a close—"Across Africa, from Cape to Cairo"—will be concentrated. Likewise, some very unusual pictures of natives living in the interior and remote from any trace of civilisation, will be shown.

Traveler Dec 16

Newman's Extra Talks

So interesting have been the animal motion pictures which featured E. M. Newman's series of travel talks, traversing Africa, which came to an end last week, that this explorer will give an extra pair of lectures in Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, concentrating in them the best pictures of animals and natives from the series.

The pictures were made possible by the marvelous telephoto lenses, blinds, considerable daring and infinite patience. They reveal many animals never before photographed in their native haunts.

Globe Dec 17

TEDIUM OF PERFECTIONS

THE HARVARD GLEE CLUB SINGS FLAWLESSLY

Feats of Choral Virtuosity Until They Cloyed—The Choir at Vocal and Technical Acme, Yet Somehow Less Interesting Than Heretofore—None Too Well Chosen a Programme and None Too Able an Assisting Singer

UPON a choir of youthful virtuosi—the Harvard Glee Club—Dr. Davison is beginning to play the part of virtuoso-conductor. For the beginning of a third series of concerts he assembled his student-singers in Symphony Hall last evening and bade a public, nearly filling the room, look and listen. For the time, evidently, the university abounds in fit and willing youth, since the choir was more numerous than in previous years; while the quality of the voices and the play of intelligence in song considerably excelled the attainable standards of last winter. From the nucleus of continuing singers, practised in his ways, Dr. Davison has brought the chorus, far earlier than usual, to high degree of accomplishing virtue. It keeps to the pitch, wary of every pitfall of unaccompanied song. As one man, it takes and releases a phrase, yet never hardens into machine-like mechanics. Over interval or modulation it goes sure-voiced. It is alert to pace and quick to rhythm. As Dr. Davison would shape a phrase, round a period, sus[illegible] a melodic curve, so does the choir. It is elastic to varying weight and [illegible] of tone. Over it, so far as he permit[illegible] [illegible]day, plays color. Always the [illegible] Glee Club is in motion; as [illegible] warms and wings it. Add to these virtues the exceptional quality of the present voices—tenors of ampler body and firmer staying power than of old; basses smoother and more plastic. Count also the sensibility and the surety with which Dr. Davidson blends, proportions, contrasts them—and the temptation to feats of virtuosity is nearly irresistible.

Possibly there was over-much of this prowess through the course of the concert. Possibly the manifestations of it tended now and then to monotony. First upon the programme, for example, stood three churchly pieces—a sentence of Bach about the Crucifixion; a verse of praise from the young Russian Schvédov, who in pre-Bolshevik days, wrote music for the Holy Synod; a piece from Palestrina recounting the death of Jesus. Over each, according to the requirements of the music, played the virtues of choral song already recited. As plainly conductor and choir assimilated the characteristics of each composer—the Russian's liking for contrast between the lighter or the darker hued voices; the sense of rapt song in church, out of a shadowed sanctuary, that once more descended from Bach; the manner with Palestrina that forswears accent and color and lets the partings and the meetings of the voices express (as we should say nowadays) the content as well as the form of the music. Beyond questioning we listeners received the pious contemplation of Bach; the grace of music by the altar according to Schvédov; the devout austerities of Palestrina. As full were our ears of the choir's perfections in choral song. Yet the medium that conveyed them was a persistent half-voice, fused, mellowed, refined above a fault, susceptible within narrow range to light and shadow, sustained flawlessly; yet none the less monotonous in that very narrowness. Vaughan Williams himself in the Pastoral Symphony has not carried further the making of music as act of contemplation. So to transfer that act to a choir was indeed feat of virtuosity, for both director and singers. Yet brief as it was, the ear longed for some bolder change in the dynamics of song. Perhaps by prescription of the composers such continuous half-voice was unescapable. If so, Dr. Davison might have chosen more variegated pieces.

To these churchly numbers succeeded secular or semi-secular pieces—and with them in degree more deeds of virtuosity. In Morley's music out of sixteen-century England; in a Russian folk-song or two arranged for choral singing, conductor and choir did feats of fleet, sustained tone kept in flawless beat to light rhythms. To these, as occasion prompted, they added the swift weaving, unravelling and overlapping of such threads of song, with the running web kept in perpetual motion; or else the establishment of a tonal background as bed and frame to a single voice—to Mr. Mitchell's well directed and well sounding baritone in a Russian piece; to Mme. Homer's rising alto in Brahms's Rhapsody. From all these doings came less sense of monotony, as with the music of the church, than sense of pains and prowess bestowed for their own sake upon music, possibly most considered as vehicle.

True, Brahms's Rhapsody is seldom heard since in full panoply it exacts alto voice, men's choir and an orchestra. The orchestra was, of course, lacking yesterday, and once and again it was possible to miss it as goading or sustaining force upon music and singers. Nor may Mme. Homer now sound the gravities, the austerities of Brahms's gray and breeding measures for the solo-singer of the fate-haunted fugitive. Perhaps he labored with these mysteries; certainly did she. The music silvered when the chorus entered with its vision of compassion. Together they rose to Brahms's solaces and serenities, far less of calm ecstasy than of subdued resignation. Beyond doubt the choir came, sang and overcame; but Brahms calling himself rhapsodic, remains Brahms brooding. . . . The Russian folk-songs were of such—in rhythmic energies, in vocal hilarities. And it was the way of the Elizabethan purveyors of madrigals and rounds, many times exemplified at the concerts of the Glee Club, to make intricacies sound like simplicities—fresh, bright, dewy.

Larger and warmer was pleasure from the four remaining numbers for the choir. One that it has often sung was Coleridge-Taylor's setting to Newbolt's ballad of "Drake's Drum" and England, mistress of the seas. Therewith, upon ears cloyed with vocal virtuosities and choral refinements fell full-throated sonorities, square-cut progressions, boldly marching rhythms, broad-spread phrases. From the other wing of the Glee Club's and Dr. Davison's powers came this relief and it was freshening. Akin, at the end of the concert, was a chorus of exultation from Beethoven's little searched oratorio, "Mount of Olives." Quite as in the Choral Symphony, the listener felt that the composer heard and shaped his voices as he might instruments; that the postlude for piano (as substitute for orchestra) gave him freer wing. Yet here again were up-swinging, outflung, brave, ascendant sonorities and modulations—not churchly music super-refined to the voices of a nuns' chapel; not madrigal or folk-piece as kaleidoscope of virtuosities. To write so is not to insist upon biggishness and boldness as superlative virtues of choral music and choral singing. They become as monotonous as the opposite virtues insistently deployed yesterday. Happy contrasts were the gentle graces in piece and performance of Sullivan's "Echo-Song," once and again almost a Mozartean dallying; or the glistening suavities through Bossi's Alpine tone-picture in melody. As though they were a single voice, Dr. Davison has persuaded eighty to sustained and arc-like song.

For "assisting artist" the choice fell upon Mme. Homer, though the Glee Club may hardly have had hand in an array of pieces no more interesting in themselves than those assembled by Dr. Davison. Nor is the singer herself exactly at the fullness of powers that could do them justice. She must now exercise and warm her voice until it gains gradually light, heat and obedience to her will. Out of the lower tones has gone the dark richness remembered; the upper have lost body and gained shrillness. Even in the middle range technical shortcomings and the penalties of the years return to plague Mme. Homer. Hardly for her nowadays are Peri's declamatory periods or Gluck's and Haydn's exercises in supple, lightly moving, glinting eighteenth-century song. No longer become her the rushing elation of Brahms's "Liebliche Wangen" or the scintillant gossamer of Wolf's "Elfin-Song." Better invite her the slower, thicker, sentimentalized measures of Strauss's "Bleuen Augen" the musing Brahms of "Bei dir sind meine Gedanken"; the quivering tone-picturing, gradually calmed of Respighi; another Italian's still and wistful watercolor. And when Mme. Homer bestowed her usual wifely devotion and also introduced the Englishman who in song-writing names himself "Peter Warlock," she descended close to balladry none too well fulfilling its thin, frank purpose. . . . And so it went. Between the insistent perfections of the conductor's choir and the persistent imperfections of the assisting singer, through a programme meagre in vivid pieces, somehow tedium, if not dulness, came. The reserve in the applause of the audience was clearer witness than aught reviewer may say. H. T. P.

Transcript Dec 14

[118]

Newman Travel Talks

NEWMAN'S TRAVEL TALK

E. M. Newman's "Sudan to Cairo" Traveltalk will be presented next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon at Symphony Hall. This is the fifth section of the across Africa Cape-to-Cairo series and it is by far the most interesting. As in the previous Traveltalks, this one leads into the African jungles where the native haunts of birds and wild animals will be seen at close range. Her 12-10

In motion pictures and color views, the journey starts as Masindi Port and proceeds in and around Albert Nyanza, on to Nimule, then down the Nile, visiting Fashoda, Kosti, Wady Halfa, Assuan, Luxor, Karnak and many other points of interest on the trail leading to Cairo.

Herald Dec 10

LAST NEWMAN TRAVELTALK

Post 12-10

E. M. Newman's "Sudan to Cairo" Traveltalk is to be presented next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon at Symphony Hall. This is the fifth section of the "Across Africa Cape-to-Cairo" series and it is by far the most interesting. As in the previous Traveltalks, this one leads into the African jungles where the native haunts of birds and wild animals will be seen at close range. This marvellous collection of motion pictures reveals the pelican, various kinds of heron, the strange weaver birds and an actual scene of the weaver bird building its nest; the Nile buffalo, a vicious and dangerous animal; a different family of hippopotami, wild boars and many curious animals found only along the Nile.

Post Dec 10

NEWMAN AGAIN

So remarkable have been the animal motion pictures which featured E. M. Newman's series of travel talks, traversing Africa, that the explorer will give an extra pair of lectures in Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, showing his best pictures of animals and natives. Adv 12-17

Advertiser Dec 17

EXTRA TRAVEL TALK

So remarkable have been the animal motion pictures shown in E. M. Newman's series of travel talks, traversing Africa, which came to an end yesterday, that there will be an extra pair of lectures in Symphony hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, concentrating in them the best pictures of animals and natives from the series. The pictures were made possible by the marvelous telephoto lenses, blinds, considerable daring and infinite patience. They reveal many animals never before photographed in their native haunts. This is the most complete collection of wild animals ever shown on the screen.

Her 12/17

Herald Dec 17

NEWMAN SHOWS BIG PYRAMIDS

Her 12/16

Buildings of Early Egyptians Also Pictured in Traveltalk

AUDIENCE SEES HIPPOPOTAMI SHOT

To the regret of many, Mr. Newman brings to an end this week his series of entertaining and instructive Traveltalks about Africa, from Cape Town to Cairo. Those who had the pleasure of attending this series are certainly better acquainted with the nature of the country, its great natural wealth, its magnificent scenery, the native inhabitants of various degrees of intelligence, their manners and customs, the improvements by the whites, the vision and the accomplishments of Cecil Rhodes and others, than they would have gained by reading many books.

For the informing talk of Mr. Newman, founded on several journeys in Africa, the keenness of his observations and his sane conclusions, these have been supplemented by many remarkable photographs, motion pictures, and still. The photographs of all manner of birds and beasts, wild and in the open, are enough to make these Traveltalks memorable.

Last night from Masindi port, the Albert Nyanza was visited with views of the Nile natives, the Shilluks and their strange coiffures; the skilled bowmen. There was Fashoda associated in the mind with Marchand; Khartum with the Gordon tragedy. Hippopotami and crocodiles were shot from the steamer's deck. Then came more familiar sights: The marvellous buildings of the early Egyptians: Luxor, Thebes and Memnon—all the manuments of Egypt passed in review, until one looked down from the great pyramid as the centuries looked on Napoleon.

Among the pictures of bird and animal life shown last night were those of pelicans, herons, weavers (at work on their nests), the Nile buffalo, hippopotami of the Nile, wild boars, vultures and other carrion birds peculiar to the venerable river.

The Traveltalk will be repeated this afternoon.

There will be extra Traveltalks on Friday evening, Dec. 22, and Saturday afternoon, Dec. 23, when the pictures of wild animals in the open shown through the series will be collected, in [illegible]

P. H.

Herald Dec 16

Newman Traveltalk

12-16

Resuming his traveltalk journey from the Cape to Cairo in Symphony Hall last night Mr. Newman took his party from Masindi up the Nile to Cairo and from there to Port Said, where they embarked for home. Not the least interesting of this delightful series of African pictures was this one of a land of contrasts, with its beautiful scenery, its strange peoples, its huge engineering feats, its customs that have remained unchanged from early Bible days, its pyramids and sphinx, together with its wild animals in their natural haunts. Most remarkable of numerous noteworthy pictures were some of the strange weaver bird actually weaving his nest. Modern Egypt was shown and spots and places made memorable by events of recent years. These will stay in memory for they impress the imagination as souvenirs of a land of ancient days. Even so, to those who have so lately traversed it in Symphony Hall, Egypt remains a slumbrous country, vibrant with undeciphered meanings. The lecture is repeated this afternoon.

Monitor Dec 16

NEWMAN TO GIVE WILD ANIMAL TALK

An extra travel talk will be given by E. M. Newman in Symphony hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, Dec. 22-23, in which pair of lectures the remarkable animal motion pictures which featured his series now drawing to a close—"Across Africa, from Cape to Cairo"—will be concentrated. Likewise, some very unusual pictures of natives living in the interior and remote from any trace of civilization, will be shown.

Traveler Dec 16

Newman's Extra Talks

So interesting have been the animal motion pictures which featured E. M. Newman's series of travel talks, traversing Africa, which came to an end last week, that this explorer will give an extra pair of lectures in Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, concentrating in them the best pictures of animals and natives from the series.

The pictures were made possible by the marvelous telephoto lenses, blinds, considerable daring and infinite patience. They reveal many animals never before photographed in their native haunts.

Globe Dec 17

WILD ANIMAL PICTURES

An extra travel talk will be given by E. M. Newman in Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, in which the remarkable animal motion pictures which featured his series now drawn to a close—"Across Africa, from Cape to Cairo"—will be concentrated. Likewise, some very unusual pictures of natives living in the interior and remote from any trace of civilization, will be shown. Amer 12-16

These pictures reveal many animals never before photographed in their native haunts. The pictures were made possible by the marvelous telephoto lens, blinds, considerable daring and infinite patience.

American Dec 16

TEDIUM OF PERFECTIONS

THE HARVARD GLEE CLUB SINGS FLAWLESSLY

Trans 12/15

Feats of Choral Virtuosity Until They Cloyed—The Choir at Vocal and Technical Acme, Yet Somehow Less Interesting Than Heretofore—None Too Well Chosen a Programme and None Too Able an Assisting Singer

UPON a choir of youthful virtuosi —the Harvard Glee Club—Dr. Davison is beginning to play the part of virtuoso-conductor. For the beginning of a third series of concerts he assembled his student-singers in Symphony Hall last evening and bade a public, nearly filling the room, look and listen. For the time, evidently, the university abounds in fit and willing youth, since the choir was more numerous than in previous years; while the quality of the voices and the play of intelligence in song considerably excelled the attainable standards of last winter. From the nucleus of continuing singers, practised in his ways, Dr. Davison has brought the chorus, far earlier than usual, to high degree of accomplishing virtue. It keeps to the pitch, wary of every pitfall of unaccompanied song. As one man, it takes and releases a phrase, yet never hardens into machine-like mechanics. Over interval or modulation it goes sure-voiced. It is alert to pace and quick to rhythm. As Dr. Davison would shape a phrase, round a period, sustain a melodic curve, so does the choir [illegible]. It is elastic to varying weight and [illegible] of tone. Over it, so far as he permit[illegible] yesterday, plays color. Always the [illegible] of the Glee Club is in motion; as [illegible] vitality warms and wings it. And to these virtues the exceptional quality of the present voices—tenors of ampler body and firmer staying power than of old; basses smoother and more plastic. Count also the sensiblity and the surety with which Dr. Davidson blends, proportions, contrasts them—and the temptation to feats of virtuosity is nearly irresistible.

Possibly there was over-much of this prowess through the course of the concert. Possibly the manifestations of it tended now and then to monotony. First upon the programme, for example, stood three churchly pieces—a sentence of Bach about the Crucifixion; a verse of praise from the young Russian Schvédov, who in pre-Bolshevik days, wrote music for the Holy Synod; a piece from Palestrina recounting the death of Jesus. Over each, according to the requirements of the music, played the virtues of choral song already recited. As plainly conductor and choir assimilated the characteristics of each composer—the Russian's liking for contrast between the lighter or the darker hued voices; the sense of rapt song in church, out of a shadowed sanctuary, that once more descended from Bach; the manner with Palestrina that forswears accent and color and lets the partings and the meetings of the voices express (as we should say nowadays) the content as well as the form of the music. Beyond questioning we listeners received the pious contemplation of Bach; the grace of music by the altar according to Schvédov; the devout austerities of Palestrina. As full were our ears of the choir's perfections in choral song. Yet the medium that conveyed them was a persistent half-voice, fused, mellowed, refined above a fault, susceptible within narrow range to light and shadow, sustained flawlessly; yet none the less monotonous in that very narrowness. Vaughan Williams himself in the Pastoral Symphony has not carried further the making of music as act of contemplation. So to [illegible] choir was indeed feat of virtuosity, for both director and singers. Yet brief as it was, the ear longed for some bolder change in the dynamics of song. Perhaps by prescription of the composers such continuous half-voice was unescapable. If so, Dr. Davison might have chosen more variegated pieces.

To these churchly numbers succeeded secular or semi-secular pieces—and with them in degree more deeds of virtuosity. In Morley's music out of sixteen-century England; in a Russian folk-song or two arranged for choral singing, conductor and choir did feats of fleet, sustained tone kept in flawless beat to light rhythms. To these, as occasion prompted, they added the swift weaving, unravelling and overlapping of such threads of song, with the running web kept in perpetual motion; or else the establishment of a tonal background as bed and frame to a single voice —to Mr. Mitchell's well directed and well sounding baritone in a Russian piece; to Mme. Homer's rising alto in Brahms's Rhapsody. From all these doings came less sense of monotony, as with the music of the church, than sense of pains and prowess bestowed for their own sake upon music, possibly most considered as vehicle.

True, Brahms's Rhapsody is seldom heard since in full panoply it exacts alto voice, men's choir and an orchestra. The orchestra was, of course, lacking yesterday, and once and again it was possible to miss it as goading or sustaining force upon music and singers. Nor may Mme. Homer now sound the gravities, the austerities of Brahms's gray and brooding measures for the solo-singer of the fate-haunted fugitive. Perhaps he labored with these mysteries; certainly did she. The music silvered when the chorus entered with its vision of compassion. Together they rose to Brahms's solaces and serenities, far less of calm ecstasy than of subdued resignation. Beyond doubt the choir came, sang and overcame; but Brahms calling himself rhapsodic, remains Brahms brooding. . . . The Russian folk-songs were of such—in rhythmic energies, in vocal hilarities. And it was the way of the Elizabethan purveyors of madrigals and rounds, many times exemplified at the concerts of the Glee Club, to make intricacies sound like simplicities—fresh, bright, dewy.

Larger and warmer was pleasure from the four remaining numbers for the choir. One that it has often sung was Coleridge-Taylor's setting to Newbolt's ballad of "Drake's Drum" and England, mistress of the seas. Therewith, upon ears cloyed with vocal virtuosities and choral refinements fell full-throated sonorities, square-cut progressions, boldly marching rhythms, broad-spread phrases. From the other wing of the Glee Club's and Dr. Davison's powers came this relief and it was freshening. Akin, at the end of the concert, was a chorus of exultation from Beethoven's little searched oratorio, "Mount of Olives." Quite as in the Choral Symphony, the listener felt that the composer heard and shaped his voices as he might instruments; that the postlude for piano (as substitute for orchestra) gave him freer wing. Yet here again were up-swinging, outflung, brave, ascendant sonorities and modulations—not churchly music super-refined to the voices of a nuns' chapel; not madrigal or folk-piece as kaleidoscope of virtuosities. To write so is not to insist upon biggishness and boldness as superlative virtues of choral music and choral singing. They become as monotonous as the opposite virtues insistently deployed yesterday. Happy contrasts were the gentle graces in piece and performance of Sullivan's "Echo-Song," once and again almost a Mozartean dallying; or the glistening suavities through Bossi's Alpine tone-picture in melody. As though they were a single voice, Dr. Davison has persuaded eighty to sustained and arc-like song.

For "assisting artist" the choice fell upon Mme. Homer, though the Glee Club may hardly have had hand in an array of pieces no more interesting in themselves than those assembled by Dr. Davison. Nor is the singer herself exactly at the fullness of powers that could do them justice. She must now exercise and warm her voice until it gains gradually light, heat and obedience to her will. Out of the lower tones has gone the dark richness remembered; the upper have lost body and gained shrillness. Even in the middle range technical shortcomings and the penalties of the years return to plague Mme. Homer. Hardly for her nowadays are Peri's declamatory periods or Gluck's and Haydn's exercises in supple, lightly moving, glinting eighteenth-century song. No longer become her the rushing elation of Brahms's "Liebliche Wangen" or the scintillant gossamer of Wolf's "Elfin-Song." Better invite her the slower, thicker, sentimentalized measures of Strauss's "Bleuen Augen" the musing Brahms of "Bei dir sind meine Gedanken"; the quivering tone-picturing, gradually calmed of Respighi; another Italian's still and wistful watercolor. And when Mme. Homer bestowed her usual wifely devotion and also introduced the Englishman who in song-writing names himself "Peter Warlock," she descended close to balladry none too well fulfilling its thin, frank purpose. . . . And so it went. Between the insistent perfections of the conductor's choir and the persistent imperfections of the assisting singer, through a programme meagre in vivid pieces, somehow tedium, if not dulness, came. The reserve in the applause of the audience was clearer witness than aught reviewer may say.

H. T. P.

Transcript Dec 18

Werrenrath Jan. 7, 1923

The good news comes that Mr. Werrenrath, with voice, skill and ardors above most American "men-singers," will have to himself the whole of the concert at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7. For two seasons he has not so been heard in Boston.

Transcript Dec 11

WERRENRATH HERE

Reinald Werrenrath is to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 7.

Advertiser Dec 17

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, is at last to venture an appearance by himself in Symphony Hall, Jan. 7, at the Sunday concert.

Globe Dec 17

WERRENRATH

Reinald Werrenrath, the celebrated American baritone, is to visit Boston and give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, at 3:30.

Traveler Dec 16

Werrenrath

Post 12/17

Reinald Werrenrath, the celebrated American baritone, is to visit Boston and give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 7th, at 3:30. In beauty of voice and artistry of interpretation, this young American singer is scarcely rivalled.

Post Dec 17

REINALD WERRENRATH

On Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, at 3:30, Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, will give a concert in Symphony hall. His program will include German lieder, some unusual Scandinavian songs, and American and other interesting songs.

Herald Dec 24

WERRENRATH COMING

On Sunday afternoon, January 7, Reinald Werrenrath will give a concert in Symphony Hall. His program will include a group of German lieder, some unusual Scandinavian songs and other selections.

Advertiser Dec 24

WERRENRATH

Probably no American singer now appearing in concert is more highly regarded than Reinald Werrenrath, the celebrated baritone, who is to give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, at 3:30. His program will include a group of German lieder, some unusual Scandinavian songs and American and other interesting numbers.

Traveler Dec 23

Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, in Symphony Hall, a concert of widely ranging songs, chiefly German, English and American, sung by Reinald Werrenrath, in the prime of voice, skill, intelligence, imagination. The play of these qualities sets him high among American "men-singers." He commands also sympathies.

Transcript Dec 23

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, Jan. 7, in Symphony Hall, a concert of widely ranging songs—from Schubert, Schumann, Scandinavian and American composers—sung by Reinald Werrenrath, in the prime of voice, skill, intelligence, imagination. The play of these qualities sets him high among American "men-singers." He commands also sympathies.

Transcript Dec 31

WERRENRATH PROGRAM

For his concert that is to take place in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 7, Reinald Warrenrath, the celebrated baritone, has made a program which is to include songs by Schubert and Schumann, a group of Scandinavian songs, Massenet's aria "Vision Fugitive," three Salt Water Ballads by John Masefield, set by Keel, and a group of American songs.

Werrenrath

American Dec 30

Paris,
Internatio
Monte Ca
The
G.C.B.,
Athens,

When Mr. Werrenrath returns to Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, he will sing these German, Scandinavian, French and American numbers:

Du bist die Ruh'—Der Doppelgänger...Schubert
Widmung—Die beiden Grenadiere....Schumann
Landscab—Hvis du har warme Tanker.Börresen
Irmelin Rose.....................Nielsen
Silde ved Nat hin kolde..........Lange-Müller
Air, "Vision Fugitive," from "Herodiade"
Massenet
Three Salt-Water Ballads..........Keel
Port of Many Ships—Trade Winds—
Mother Carey.
The Blind Ploughman................Clarke
The Wreck of the Julie Plante..........O'Hara
Duna...............................McGill
On the Road to Mandalay.............Speaks

Transcript Dec 29

Sunday, Jan 7, at 3:30—Reinald Werrenrath, baritone. "Du bist die Ruh," and "Der Doppelganger," Schubert; "Widmung" and "Die beiden Grenadiere," Schumann; "Landscape" and "Hvis du har warme Tanker," Hakon Borresen; "Irmelin Rose," Carl Nielsen; "Silde ved Nat hin kolde," P. E. Lange-Muller; aria, "Vision Fugitive," from "Herodiade," Massenet; three salt-water ballads, "Port of Many Ships," "Trade Winds," "Mother Carey," Frederick Keel; "The Blind Ploughman," Robert Coningsby Clarke; "The Wreck of the 'Julie Plante,'" Geoffrey O'Hara; "Duna," Josephine McGill; "On the Road to Mandalay," Oley Speaks.

Globe Dec 31

WERRENRATH RECITAL

At his concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon Reinald Werrenrath will sing classic songs by Schubert and Schumann, the aria "Vision Fugitif" from Massenet's "Herodiade," Frederick Keel's setting of Masefield's "Salt-water Ballads," and other modern songs.

Advertiser Dec 31

REINALD WERRENRATH

For his Boston concert of the season, to take place in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, at 3:30, Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, has made a program which is to include songs by Schubert and Schumann, a group of Scandinavian songs, Massenet's aria "Vision Fugitive," three salt water ballads by John Masefield, set by Keel, and a group of American songs.

Traveler Dec 30

REINALD WERRENRATH, who gives a song recital at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon.

Advertiser Dec 31

Werrenrath's Recital

Reinald Werrenrath will give a song recital in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7. He will sings songs by Schubert, Schumann, Hakon Borresen, Carl Nielsen, P. E. Lange-Muller, Massenet, Frederick Keel, Robert Coningsby Clarke, Geoffrey O'Hara, Josephine McGill, Oley Speaks.

Post Dec 31

WERRENRATH SUNDAY

At his only appearance of the season, which will take place in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon, Reinald Werrenrath, the baritone, will sing two songs, each by Schubert and Schumann; a group of Scandinavian songs, Massenet's "Vision Fugitive," and a group of American songs by Clarke, O'Hara, McGill and Speaks.

American Jan 6

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon comes Reinald Werrenrath, baritone singer in the prime of voice, skill, intelligence and imagination—qualities that have set him high in American and English concert-halls and that command also sympathies. He will be heard in widely ranging pieces—from Schubert, Schumann, Scandinavian and American composers, with an air from Massenet's "Herodiade" for operatic intermezzo.

Transcript Jan 6

Herald Dec 31

Programmet

för den berömda danske sångaren Reinald Werrenraths konsert i Symphony Hall nästa söndag kl. 3.30 e. m. blir af följande intressanta beskaffenhet:

I.

a. Du bist die Ruh'...Frans Cchubert
b. Der Doppelgänger..Frans Schubert
c. Widmung ....Rob. Schumann
d. Die beiden Grenadiere, R. Schumann

II.

a. Landscab ....Hakon Börresen
b. Hvis du har warme Tanker
Hakon Börresen
c. Irmelin Rose ....Carl Nielsen
d. Silde ved Nat hin kolde
P. E. Lange-Müller

III.

Aria: "Vision Fugitive" (Herodiade).
Jules Massenet

IV.

Three Salt-water Ballads (John Masefield) .... Frederick Keel
Port of Many Ships.
Trade Winds.
Mother Carey.

V.

a. The Blind Ploughman, R. C. Clarke
b. The Wreck of the "Julie Plante". (W. H. Drummond).....G. O'Hara
c. Duna .... Josephine McGill
d. On the Road to Mandalay (Kipling) .... Oley Speaks

Se annonsen!

Sång- och musikälskare komma nog att bevista konserten i Symphony Hall nästa söndags e. m. kl. 3.30, då den ryktbare danske baritonisten Reinald Werrenrath uppträder därstädes. Detta blir hans enda uppträdande i Boston denna säsong.

Svea Jan 3

WERRENRATH TOMORROW

At his only appearance of the season, which will take place in Symphony hall, tomorrow afternoon, at 3:30, Reinald Werrenrath, the popular baritone, will sing two songs, each by Schubert and Schumann, a group of Scandinavian songs, Massenet's "Vision Fugitive" from "Herodiade," settings by Keel of Masefield's salt water ballads, and a group of American songs by Clarke, O'Hara, McGill and Speaks.

Traveler Jan 6

WERRENRATH TODAY

Reinald Werrenrath will give a recital in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30. He will present the following program:

Du bist die Ruh', Der Doppelganger, Schubert
Widmung, Die beiden Grenadiere, Schumann
Landscab, Hvis du har warme Tanker, Borresen
Irmelin Rose ....Nielsen
Silde ved Nat hin kolde.....Lange-Muller
Aria, "Vision Fugitive" (Herodiade), Massenet
Three Salt-water Ballads (John Masefield) ....Keel
Port of Many Ships, Trade Winds, Mother Carey.
The Blind Ploughman............Clarke
The Wreck of the "Julie Plante"..O'Hara
Duna ....McGill
On the Road to Mandalay..........Speaks

Herald Jan 7

Werranrath Today

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, will give a recital in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. He will sing songs and arias by Schubert, Schumann, Hakon Borresen, Carl Nielsen, P. E. Lange-Muller, Massenet, Frederick Keel, Robert Coningsby Clarke, Geoffrey O'Hara, Josephine McGill and Oley Speaks.

Post Jan 7

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30, Reinald Werrenrath, baritone. "Du bist die Ruh'" and "Der Doppelganger," Schubert; "Widmung" and "Die beiden Grenadiere," Schumann; "Landscab" and "Hvis du har warme Tanker," Hakon Borresen; "Irmelin Rose," Carl Nielsen; "Silde ved Nat hin kolde," P. E. Lange-Muller; aria, "Vision Fugitive" (Herodiade), Massenet; "Three Salt-water Ballads," Frederick Keel; "The Blind Ploughman," Robert Coningsby Clarke; "The Wreck of the 'Julie Plante,'" Geoffrey O'Hara; "Duna," Josephine McGill; "On the Road to Mandalay," Oley Speaks.

Globe Jan 6

WERRENRATH IS TO BE HEARD AT SYMPHONY

Tel. 1/6

REINALD WERRENRATH

Reinald Werrenrath, the celebrated baritone, will be heard in Symphony hall tomorrow at 3:30.

Telegram Jan 6

WERRENRATH TODAY

Reinald Werrenrath will be heard in the following program at Symphony Hall this afternoon:

Du bist die Ruh' } Der Doppelganger } ...Frans Schubert
Widmung } Die beiden Grenadiere } .Robert Schumann
Hvis du har warme Tanker } Landscab } Hakon Borresen
Irmelin Rose ....Carl Nielsen
Silde ved Nat hin kolde..P. E. Lange-Muller
Aria: "Vision Fugitive"......Jules Massenet (Herodiade)
Three Salt-water Ballads....Frederick Keel (John Masefield)
The Blind Ploughman
Robert Coningsby Clarke
The Wreck of the "Julie Plante" (W. H. Drummond) Geoffrey O'Hara
Duna ....Josephine McGill
On the Road to Mandalay (Kipling) Oley Speaks

Advertiser Jan 7

WERRENRATH RECITAL

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, gave a recital in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Harry Spear played the pianoforte accompaniments. There was a large audience.

The programme, while it avoided, for the most part, the hackneyed pieces that are so much sung at concerts, was not too interesting. What does make Mr. Werrenrath so popular with audiences and with professional musicians is his fine style in singing. Of him, as with so few American singers, one is able to mention style without blushing, so to speak. His voice is resonant, has very fine quality and was yesterday, from the very start of the concert, in excellent condition. Mr. Werrenrath sings with rare finish anything he attempts, whether it be trifle (which it is too often) or masterpiece.

Post Jan 8

REINALD WERRENRATH GIVES SONG RECITAL HERE

Reinald Werrenrath, the popular American baritone, gave a recital yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall which greatly pleased an audience of good size. Mr Werrenrath's fine voice, and his skillful use of it, have won him many admirers here.

Yesterday's program was akin to the many other Mr Werrenrath has sung in the past, with rather more familiar pieces than usual on it. He began by a carefully wrought and suave performance of Schubert's "Du bist die Ruh." Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers," sung in English, particularly pleased the audience, and elicited "Du bist wie eine Blume" as an encore.

The second group of unfamiliar Scandinavian songs was also cordially received. Mr Werrenrath repeated Nielsen's "Irmelin Rose" in place of an encore. "Vision Fugitive," from Massenet's opera, "Herodiade," pleased, as did the lighter numbers which made the final group. Although Werrenrath's "Danny Deever," "Fuzzy Wuzzy," "On the Road to Mandalay," "Salt Water Ballads" and other robust songs are always cordially applauded, his voice is better suited to the suavities of "Duna" and greater lyrics. If he were a tenor he would not be doing big dramatic numbers from the Caruso repertory, but lyrics.

Among the five final encores, "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes" and "A Little Winding Road" gave especial pleasure.

Globe Jan 8

WERRENRATH AT SYMPHONY

Baritone Rouses His Audience to Wild Enthusiasm

IS SWAMPED WITH REQUESTS FOR SONGS

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, gave a song recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall, Harry Speare playing his accompaniments. Mr. Werrenrath sang:

Du bist die Ruh', Der Doppelganger, Schubert; Widmung, Die beiden Grenadiere, Schumann; Lankskab, Hvis du har warme Tanker, Borresen; Irmelin Rose, Neilsen; Silde ved Nat hin kolde, Lange-Muller; Aria, "Vision Fugitive" (Herodiade), Massenet; Three Salt-water Ballads, Frederick Keel; Port of Many Ships, Trade Winds, Mother Carey; The Blind Ploughman, Robert Coningsby Clarke; The Wreck of the "Julie Plante" Geoffrey O'Hara; Duna, Josephine McGill; On the Road to Mandalay, Oley Speaks.

Was Mr. Werrenrath put about by the stolidity of his audience, or does he feel most at home in modern songs, sturdy or sentimental, of the "ballad" type, or, perhaps, was he suffering from too much frosty air? Whatever the explanation, for an hour yesterday Mr. Werrenrath sang in a way to make one wonder how he had contrived to gain his high repute. Try as he would, he could not make his tones sound smooth and clear. Though he strove stoutly to reproduce the tragic note of "Der Doppelganger," the patriotic fervor of the grenadier, the passion of Massenet's theatrical Herod, his efforts availed him not; only his fine intelligence made its mark.

The attractive Scandinavian songs, to be sure, went better. It was only nevertheless, with Frederick Keel's excellent settings—genuinely characteristic, and free from an attempt to be knowing—that Mr. Werrenrath came into his own. From then on he sang with a free tone often beautiful, always good, an able mezza voce and pianissimo, enunciation a model of clearness, and with strong powers of characterization, above all when he had an old sailor to suggest or a cockney soldier. The audience, roused to wild enthusiasm, called for more and more, shouting out their wishes for this song or that.

Swamped with written requests, said Mr. Werrenrath, he could not sing all the songs people asked for, surely not those he had never even heard of, nor yet, "Ah fors' e lui"! He would do, though, what he could. And he did, with all generosity.

Would it answer, at another recital, for Mr. Werrenrath to sing the ballads first? Then, his voice once "warmed," and the audience as well, undoubtedly he could do greater justice than he did yesterday to the songs of higher worth.

R. R. G.

Herald Jan 8

Mind, Measure, Voice, Skill

Few singers of this day give better-rounded pleasure in the concert-hall than Mr. Werrenrath. The records have not yet made him common upon ten thousand ears. To Boston and to other major cities, he returns not too often or too insistently. Coming anew, as he did to Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, he orders his programme with both open and discriminating mind. Familiar classics from Schubert and Schumann began it. Next stood four songs of Scandinavian composers—no masterpieces, but each of both intrinsic and novel interest. For intermezzo, as it were, and for further channeling of his powers, Mr. Werrenrath then sang the familiar air of amorous vision from Massenet's "Hérodiade." To it ensued three settings by Keel of sea-verses by Masefield—music to which the singer of himself added much. Finally, he turned to four songs, narrative or rhapsodic by minor American writers of the sort that do one piece in twenty individually and well. Mr. Werrenrath usually pitches upon the one.

As with programme, so with powers. The singer's voice is a baritone in prime. It is not a big voice, rolling and sonorous, according, say, to Italian standards. No more is it sensuous for the delight of those who set titillation of the ear above every other pleasure of the concert-hall. At beginnings, it was not even a voice that promised much. Yet, as Mr. Werrenrath has developed and practised it, smoothness, suppleness, resonance and flexibility now distinguish it. He has bent it to his own artfulness of song; at will he can give it color and character. So doing, he is instructed, prepared, resourceful singer. No tone passes unshapen; no phrase goes unmoulded. Mr. Werrenrath profiles a melody, gives it rhythmic beat, leads it from modulation to modulation, foreseeing from the outset the design and the process that shall bring the end. Yet so doing, he is not the obviously calculating singer, least of all the singer who with "effects" would snare a too susceptible audience.

Similarly with the play of sentiment

Transcript Jan 8

Werrenrath Jan. 7, 1923

The good news comes that Mr. Werrenrath, with voice, skill and ardors above most American "men-singers," will have to himself the whole of the concert at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7. For two seasons he has not so been heard in Boston.

Transcript Dec 11

WERRENRATH HERE

Reinald Werrenrath is to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 7.

Advertiser Dec 17

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, is at last to venture an appearance by himself in Symphony Hall, Jan. 7, at the Sunday concert.

Globe Dec 17

WERRENRATH

Reinald Werrenrath, the celebrated American baritone, is to visit Boston and give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, at 3:30.

Traveler Dec 16

Werrenrath

Post 12/17

Reinald Werrenrath, the celebrated American baritone, is to visit Boston and give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 7th, at 3:30. In beauty of voice and artistry of interpretation, this young American singer is scarcely rivalled.

Post Dec 17

REINALD WERRENRATH

On Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, at 3:30, Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, will give a concert in Symphony hall. His program will include German lieder, some unusual Scandinavian songs, and American and other interesting songs.

Herald Dec 24

WERRENRATH COMING

On Sunday afternoon, January 7, Reinald Werrenrath will give a concert in Symphony Hall. His program will include a group of German lieder, some unusual Scandinavian songs and other selections.

Advertiser Dec 24

WERRENRATH

Probably no American singer now appearing in concert is more highly regarded than Reinald Werrenrath, the celebrated baritone, who is to give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, at 3:30. His program will include a group of German lieder, some unusual Scandinavian songs and American and other interesting numbers.

Traveler Dec 23

Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, in Symphony Hall, a concert of widely ranging songs, chiefly German, English and American, sung by Reinald Werrenrath, in the prime of voice, skill, intelligence, imagination. The play of these qualities sets him high among American "men-singers." He commands also sympathies.

Transcript Dec 23

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, Jan. 7, in Symphony Hall, a concert of widely ranging songs—from Schubert, Schumann, Scandinavian and American composers—sung by Reinald Werrenrath, in the prime of voice, skill, intelligence, imagination. The play of these qualities sets him high among American "men-singers." He commands also sympathies.

Transcript Dec 31

WERRENRATH PROGRAM

For his concert that is to take place in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 7, Reinald Warrenrath, the celebrated baritone, has made a program which is to include songs by Schubert and Schumann, a group of Scandinavian songs, Massenet's aria "Vision Fugitive," three Salt Water Ballads by John Masefield, set by Keel, and a group of American songs.

Werrenrath

American Dec 30

When Mr. Werrenrath returns to Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, he will sing these German, Scandinavian, French and American numbers:

Du bist die Ruh'—Der Doppelgänger...Schubert
Widmung—Die beiden Grenadiere....Schumann
Landscab—Hvis du har warme Tanker.Börresen
Irmelin Rose........................Nielsen
Silde ved Nat hin kolde............Lange-Müller
Air, "Vision Fugitive," from "Hérodiade" Massenet
Three Salt-Water Ballads....................Keel
Port of Many Ships—Trade Winds—Mother Carey.
The Blind Ploughman.......................Clarke
The Wreck of the Julie Plante..........O'Hara
Duna ....McGill
On the Road to Mandalay..................Speaks

Transcript Dec 29

Sunday, Jan 7, at 3:30—Reinald Werrenrath, baritone. "Du bist die Ruh," and "Der Doppelganger," Schubert; "Widmung" and "Die beiden Grenadiere," Schumann; "Landscape" and "Hvis du har warme Tanker," Hakon Borresen; "Irmelin Rose," Carl Nielsen; "Silde ved Nat hin kolde," P. E. Lange-Muller; aria, "Vision Fugitive," from "Herodiade," Massenet; three salt-water ballads, "Port of Many Ships," "Trade Winds," "Mother Carey," Frederick Keel; "The Blind Ploughman," Robert Coningsby Clarke; "The Wreck of the 'Julie Plante,'" Geoffrey O'Hara; "Duna," Josephine McGill; "On the Road to Mandalay," Oley Speaks.

Globe Dec 31

WERRENRATH RECITAL

At his concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon Reinald Werrenrath will sing classic songs by Schubert and Schumann, the aria "Vision Fugitif" from Massenet's "Herodiade," Frederick Keel's setting of Masefield's "Salt-water Ballads," and other modern songs.

Advertiser Dec 31

REINALD WERRENRATH

For his Boston concert of the season, to take place in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, at 3:30, Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, has made a program which is to include songs by Schubert and Schumann, a group of Scandinavian songs, Massenet's aria "Vision Fugitive," three salt water ballads by John Masefield, set by Keel, and a group of American songs.

Traveler Dec 30

REINALD WERRENRATH, who gives a song recital at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon.

Advertiser Dec 31

Werrenrath's Recital

Reinald Werrenrath will give a song recital in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7. He will sings songs by Schubert, Schumann, Hakon Borresen, Carl Nielsen, P. E. Lange-Muller, Massenet, Frederick Keel, Robert Coningsby Clarke, Geoffrey O'Hara, Josephine McGill, Oley Speaks.

Post Dec 31

WERRENRATH SUNDAY

At his only appearance of the season, which will take place in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon, Reinald Werrenrath, the baritone, will sing two songs, each by Schubert and Schumann; a group of Scandinavian songs, Massenet's "Vision Fugitive," and a group of American songs by Clarke, O'Hara, McGill and Speaks.

American Jan 6

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon comes Reinald Werrenrath, baritone singer in the prime of voice, skill, intelligence and imagination—qualities that have set him high in American and English concert-halls and that command also sympathies. He will be heard in widely ranging pieces—from Schubert, Schumann, Scandinavian and American composers, with an air from Massenet's "Herodiade" for operatic intermezzo.

Transcript Jan 6

Herald Dec 31

Programmet

för den berömda danske sångaren Reinald Werrenraths konsert i Symphony Hall nästa söndag kl. 3.30 e. m. blir af följande intressanta beskaffenhet:

I.
a. Du bist die Ruh'...Frans Cchubert
b. Der Doppelgänger..Frans Schubert
c. Widmung ....Rob. Schumann
d. Die beiden Grenadiere, R. Schumann

II.
a. Landscab ....Hakon Börresen
b. Hvis du har warme Tanker Hakon Börresen
c. Irmelin Rose ....Carl Nielsen
d. Silde ved Nat hin kolde P. E. Lange-Müller

III.
Aria: "Vision Fugitive" (Herodiade). Jules Massenet

IV.
Three Salt-water Ballads (John Masefield) .... Frederick Keel
Port of Many Ships.
Trade Winds.
Mother Carey.

V.
a. The Blind Ploughman, R. C. Clarke
b. The Wreck of the "Julie Plante". (W. H. Drummond).....G. O'Hara
c. Duna .... Josephine McGill
d. On the Road to Mandalay (Kipling) .... Oley Speaks

Se annonsen!

Sång- och musikälskare komma nog att bevista konserten i Symphony Hall nästa söndags e. m. kl. 3.30, då den ryktbare danske baritonisten Reinald Werrenrath uppträder därstädes. Detta blir hans enda uppträdande i Boston denna säsong.

Svea Jan 3

WERRENRATH TOMORROW

At his only appearance of the season, which will take place in Symphony hall, tomorrow afternoon, at 3:30, Reinald Werrenrath, the popular baritone, will sing two songs, each by Schubert and Schumann, a group of Scandinavian songs, Massenet's "Vision Fugitive" from "Herodiade," settings by Keel of Masefield's salt water ballads, and a group of American songs by Clarke, O'Hara, McGill and Speaks.

Traveler Jan 6

WERRENRATH TODAY

Reinald Werrenrath will give a recital in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30. He will present the following program:

Du bist die Ruh', Der Doppelganger, Schubert
Widmung, Die beiden Grenadiere, Schumann
Landscab, Hvis du har warme Tanker, Borresen
Irmelin Rose ....Nielsen
Silde ved Nat hin kolde.....Lange-Muller
Aria, "Vision Fugitive" (Herodiade), Massenet
Three Salt-water Ballads (John Masefield) ....Keel
Port of Many Ships, Trade Winds, Mother Carey.
The Blind Ploughman...............Clarke
The Wreck of the "Julie Plante"..O'Hara
Duna ....McGill
On the Road to Mandalay..........Speaks

Herald Jan 7

Werranrath Today

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, will give a recital in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. He will sing songs and arias by Schubert, Schumann, Hakon Borresen, Carl Nielsen, P. E. Lange-Muller, Massenet, Frederick Keel, Robert Coningsby Clarke, Geoffrey O'Hara, Josephine McGill and Oley Speaks.

Post Jan 7

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30, Reinald Werrenrath, baritone. "Du bist die Ruh'" and "Der Doppelganger," Schubert; "Widmung" and "Die beiden Grenadiere," Schumann; "Landscab" and "Hvis du har warme Tanker," Hakon Borresen; "Irmelin Rose," Carl Nielsen; "Silde ved Nat hin kolde," P. E. Lange-Muller; aria, "Vision Fugitive" (Herodiade), Massenet; "Three Salt-water Ballads," Frederick Keel; "The Blind Ploughman," Robert Coningsby Clarke; "The Wreck of the "Julie Plante," Geoffrey O'Hara; "Duna," Josephine McGill; "On the Road to Mandalay," Oley Speaks.

Globe Jan 6

WERRENRATH IS TO BE HEARD AT SYMPHONY

Tel. 1/6

REINALD WERRENRATH

Reinald Werrenrath, the celebrated baritone, will be heard in Symphony hall tomorrow at 3:30.

Telegram Jan 6

WERRENRATH TODAY

Reinald Werrenrath will be heard in the following program at Symphony Hall this afternoon:

Du bist die Ruh' / Der Doppelganger } ...Frans Schubert
Widmung / Die beiden Grenadiere } .Robert Schumann
Hvis du har warme Tanker / Landscab } Hakon Borresen
Irmelin Rose ....Carl Nielsen
Silde ved Nat hin kolde..P. E. Lange-Muller
Aria: "Vision Fugitive".....Jules Massenet (Herodiade)
Three Salt-water Ballads....Frederick Keel (John Masefield)
The Blind Ploughman Robert Coningsby Clarke
The Wreck of the "Julie Plante" (W. H. Drummond) Geoffrey O'Hara
Duna .... Josephine McGill
On the Road to Mandalay (Kipling) Oley Speaks

Advertiser Jan 7

WERRENRATH RECITAL

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, gave a recital in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Harry Spear played the pianoforte accompaniments. There was a large audience.

The programme, while it avoided, for the most part, the hackneyed pieces that are so much sung at concerts, was not too interesting. What does make Mr. Werrenrath so popular with audiences and with professional musicians is his fine style in singing. Of him, as with so few American singers, one is able to mention style without blushing, so to speak. His voice is resonant, has very fine quality and was yesterday, from the very start of the concert, in excellent condition. Mr. Werrenrath sings with rare finish anything he attempts, whether it be trifle (which it is too often) or masterpiece.

Post Jan 8

REINALD WERRENRATH GIVES SONG RECITAL HERE

Reinald Werrenrath, the popular American baritone, gave a recital yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall which greatly pleased an audience of good size. Mr Werrenrath's fine voice, and his skillful use of it, have won him many admirers here.

Yesterday's program was akin to the many other Mr Werrenrath has sung in the past, with rather more familiar pieces than usual on it. He began by a carefully wrought and suave performance of Schubert's "Du bist die Ruh." Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers," sung in English, particularly pleased the audience, and elicited "Du bist wie eine Blume" as an encore.

The second group of unfamiliar Scandinavian songs was also cordially received. Mr Werrenrath repeated Nielsen's "Irmelin Rose" in place of an encore. "Vision Fugitive," from Massenet's opera, "Herodiade," pleased, as did the lighter numbers which made the final group. Although Werrenrath's "Danny Deever," "Fuzzy Wuzzy," "On the Road to Mandalay," "Salt Water Ballads" and other robust songs are always cordially applauded, his voice is better suited to the suavities of "Duna" and greater lyrics. If he were a tenor he would not be doing big dramatic numbers from the Caruso repertory, but lyrics.

Among the five final encores, "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes" and "A Little Winding Road" gave especial pleasure.

Globe Jan 8

WERRENRATH AT SYMPHONY

Baritone Rouses His Audience to Wild Enthusiasm

IS SWAMPED WITH REQUESTS FOR SONGS

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, gave a song recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall, Harry Speare playing his accompaniments. Mr. Werrenrath sang:

Du bist die Ruh', Der Doppelganger, Schubert; Widmung, Die beiden Grenadiere, Schumann; Lankskab, Hvis du har warme Tanker, Borresen; Irmelin Rose, Neilsen; Silde ved Nat hin kolde, Lange-Muller; Aria, "Vision Fugitive" (Herodiade), Massenet; Three Salt-water Ballads, Frederick Keel; Port of Many Ships, Trade Winds, Mother Carey; The Blind Ploughman, Robert Coningsby Clarke; The Wreck of the "Julie Plante" Geoffrey O'Hara; Duna, Josephine McGill; On the Road to Mandalay, Oley Speaks.

Was Mr. Werrenrath put about by the stolidity of his audience, or does he feel most at home in modern songs, sturdy or sentimental, of the "ballad" type, or, perhaps, was he suffering from too much frosty air? Whatever the explanation, for an hour yesterday Mr. Werrenrath sang in a way to make one wonder how he had contrived to gain his high repute. Try as he would, he could not make his tones sound smooth and clear. Though he strove stoutly to reproduce the tragic note of "Der Doppelganger," the patriotic fervor of the grenadier, the passion of Massenet's theatrical Herod, his efforts availed him not; only his fine intelligence made its mark.

The attractive Scandinavian songs, to be sure, went better. It was only nevertheless, with Frederick Keel's excellent settings—genuinely characteristic, and free from an attempt to be knowing—that Mr. Werrenrath came into his own. From then on he sang with a free tone often beautiful, always good, an able mezza voce and pianissimo, enunciation a model of clearness, and with strong powers of characterization, above all when he had an old sailor to suggest or a cockney soldier. The audience, roused to wild enthusiasm, called for more and more, shouting out their wishes for this song or that.

Swamped with written requests, said Mr. Werrenrath, he could not sing all the songs people asked for, surely not those he had never even heard of, nor yet, "Ah fors' e lui"! He would do, though, what he could. And he did with all generosity.

Would it answer, at another recital, for Mr. Werrenrath to sing the ballads first? Then, his voice once "warmed," and the audience as well, undoubtedly he could do greater justice than he did yesterday to the songs of higher worth.

R. R. G.

Herald Jan 8

Mind, Measure, Voice, Skill

Few singers of this day give better-rounded pleasure in the concert-hall than Mr. Werrenrath. The records have not yet made him common upon ten thousand ears. To Boston and to other major cities, he returns not too often or too insistently. Coming anew, as he did to Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, he orders his programme with both open and discriminating mind. Familiar classics from Schubert and Schumann began it. Next stood four songs of Scandinavian composers—no masterpieces, but each of both intrinsic and novel interest. For intermezzo, as it were, and for further channeling of his powers, Mr. Werrenrath then sang the familiar air of amorous vision from Massenet's "Hérodiade." To it ensued three settings by Keel of sea-verses by Masefield—music to which the singer of himself added much. Finally, he turned to four songs, narrative or rhapsodic by minor American writers of the sort that do one piece in twenty individually and well. Mr. Werrenrath usually pitches upon the one.

As with programme, so with powers. The singer's voice is a baritone in prime. It is not a big voice, rolling and sonorous, according, say, to Italian standards. No more is it sensuous for the delight of those who set titillation of the ear above every other pleasure of the concert-hall. At beginnings, it was not even a voice that promised much. Yet, as Mr. Werrenrath has developed and practised it, smoothness, suppleness, resonance and flexibility now distinguish it. He has bent it to his own artfulness of song; at will he can give it color and character. So doing, he is instructed, prepared, resourceful singer. No tone passes unshapen; no phrase goes unmoulded. Mr. Werrenrath profiles a melody, gives it rhythmic beat, leads it from modulation to modulation, foreseeing from the outset the design and the process that shall bring the end. Yet so doing, he is not the obviously calculating singer, least of all the singer who with "effects" would snare a too susceptible audience.

Similarly with the play of sentiment

Transcript Jan 8

[119]

Werrenrath Jan. 7, 1923

The good news comes that Mr. Werrenrath, with voice, skill and ardors above most American "men-singers," will have to himself the whole of the concert at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7. For two seasons he has not so been heard in Boston.

Transcript Dec 11

WERRENRATH HERE

Reinald Werrenrath is to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 7.

Advertiser Dec 17

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, is at last to venture an appearance by himself in Symphony Hall, Jan. 7, at the Sunday concert.

Globe Dec 17

WERRENRATH

Reinald Werrenrath, the celebrated American baritone, is to visit Boston and give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, at 3:30.

Traveler Dec 16

Werrenrath

Post 12/17

Reinald Werrenrath, the celebrated American baritone, is to visit Boston and give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 7th, at 3:30. In beauty of voice and artistry of interpretation, this young American singer is scarcely rivalled.

Post Dec 17

REINALD WERRENRATH

On Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, at 3:30, Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, will give a concert in Symphony hall. His program will include German lieder, some unusual Scandinavian songs, and American and other interesting songs.

Herald Dec 24

WERRENRATH COMING

On Sunday afternoon, January 7, Reinald Werrenrath will give a concert in Symphony Hall. His program will include a group of German lieder, some unusual Scandinavian songs and other selections.

Advertiser Dec 24

WERRENRATH

Probably no American singer now appearing in concert is more highly regarded than Reinald Werrenrath, the celebrated baritone, who is to give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, at 3:30. His program will include a group of German lieder, some unusual Scandinavian songs and American and other interesting numbers.

Traveler Dec 23

Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, in Symphony Hall, a concert of widely ranging songs, chiefly German, English and American, sung by Reinald Werrenrath, in the prime of voice, skill, intelligence, imagination. The play of these qualities sets him high among American "men-singers." He commands also sympathies.

Transcript Dec 23

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, Jan. 7, in Symphony Hall, a concert of widely ranging songs—from Schubert, Schumann, Scandinavian and American composers—sung by Reinald Werrenrath, in the prime of voice, skill, intelligence, imagination. The play of these qualities sets him high among American "men-singers." He commands also sympathies.

Transcript Dec 31

WERRENRATH PROGRAM

For his concert that is to take place in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 7, Reinald Warrenrath, the celebrated baritone, has made a program which is to include songs by Schubert and Schumann, a group of Scandinavian songs, Massenet's aria "Vision Fugitive," three Salt Water Ballads by John Masefield, set by Keel, group of American songs.

Werrenrath

Amer 12/30

American Dec 30

When Mr. Werrenrath returns to Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, he will sing these German, Scandinavian, French and American numbers:

Du bist die Ruh'—Der Doppelgänger...Schubert
Widmung—Die beiden Grenadiere....Schumann
Landscab—Hvis du har warme Tanker.Börresen
Irmelin Rose ....Nielsen
Silde ved Nat hin kolde.........Lange-Müller
Air, "Vision Fugitive," from "Herodiade"
Massenet
Three Salt-Water Ballads.....................Keel
Port of Many Ships—Trade Winds—
Mother Carey.
The Blind Ploughman.......................Clarke
The Wreck of the Julie Plante..........O'Hara
Duna ....McGill
On the Road to Mandalay................Speaks

Transcript Dec 29

Sunday, Jan 7, at 3:30—Reinald Werrenrath, baritone. "Du bist die Ruh," and "Der Doppelganger," Schubert; "Widmung" and "Die beiden Grenadiere," Schumann; "Landscape" and "Hvis du har warme Tanker," Hakon Borresen; "Irmelin Rose," Carl Nielsen; "Silde ved Nat hin kolde," P. E. Lange-Muller; aria, "Vision Fugitive," from "Herodiade," Massenet; three salt-water ballads, "Port of Many Ships," "Trade Winds," "Mother Carey," Frederick Keel; "The Blind Ploughman," Robert Coningsby Clarke; "The Wreck of the 'Julie Plante,'" Geoffrey O'Hara; "Duna," Josephine McGill; "On the Road to Mandalay," Oley Speaks.

Globe Dec 31

WERRENRATH RECITAL

At his concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon Reinald Werrenrath will sing classic songs by Schubert and Schumann, the aria "Vision Fugitif" from Massenet's "Herodiade," Frederick Keel's setting of Masefield's "Salt-water Ballads," and other modern songs.

Adv 12/31

Advertiser Dec 31

REINALD WERRENRATH

For his Boston concert of the season, to take place in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7, at 3:30, Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, has made a program which is to include songs by Schubert and Schumann, a group of Scandinavian songs, Massenet's aria "Vision Fugitive," three salt water ballads by John Masefield, set by Keel, and a group of American songs.

Trav 12/30

Traveler Dec 30

REINALD WERRENRATH, who gives a song recital at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon.

Adv 12/31

Advertiser Dec 31

Werrenrath's Recital

Reinald Werrenrath will give a song recital in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan. 7. He will sings songs by Schubert, Schumann, Hakon Borresen, Carl Nielsen, P. E. Lange-Muller, Massenet, Frederick Keel, Robert Coningsby Clarke, Geoffrey O'Hara, Josephine McGill, Oley Speaks.

Post Dec 31

WERRENRATH SUNDAY

At his only appearance of the season, which will take place in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon, Reinald Werrenrath, the baritone, will sing two songs, each by Schubert and Schumann; a group of Scandinavian songs, Massenet's "Vision Fugitive," and a group of American songs by Clarke, O'Hara, McGill and Speaks.

Amer 1-6

American Jan 6

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon comes Reinald Werrenrath, baritone singer in the prime of voice, skill, intelligence and imagination—qualities that have set him high in American and English concert-halls and that command also sympathies. He will be heard in widely ranging pieces—from Schubert, Schumann, Scandinavian and American composers, with an air from Massenet's "Herodiade" for operatic intermezzo.

Transcript Jan 6

Herald Dec 31

Programmet

för den berömda danske sångaren Reinald Werrenraths konsert i Symphony Hall nästa söndag kl. 3.30 e. m. blir af följande intressanta beskaffenhet:

I.

a. Du bist die Ruh'...Frans Cchubert
b. Der Doppelgänger..Frans Schubert
c. Widmung ....Rob. Schumann
d. Die beiden Grenadiere, R. Schumann

II.

a. Landscab ....Hakon Börresen
b. Hvis du har warme Tanker
Hakon Börresen
c. Irmelin Rose ....Carl Nielsen
d. Silde ved Nat hin kolde
P. E. Lange-Müller

III.

Aria: "Vision Fugitive" (Herodiade).
Jules Massenet

IV.

Three Salt-water Ballads (John Masefield) .... Frederick Keel
Port of Many Ships.
Trade Winds.
Mother Carey.

V.

a. The Blind Ploughman, R. C. Clarke
b. The Wreck of the "Julie Plante". (W. H. Drummond).....G. O'Hara
c. Duna .... Josephine McGill
d. On the Road to Mandalay (Kipling) .... Oley Speaks

Se annonsen!

Sång- och musikälskare komma nog att bevista konserten i Symphony Hall nästa söndags e. m. kl. 3.30, då den ryktbare danske baritonisten Reinald Werrenrath uppträder därstädes. Detta blir hans enda uppträdande i Boston denna säsong.

Svea Jan 3

WERRENRATH TOMORROW

At his only appearance of the season, which will take place in Symphony hall, tomorrow afternoon, at 3:30, Reinald Werrenrath, the popular baritone, will sing two songs, each by Schubert and Schumann, a group of Scandinavian songs, Massenet's "Vision Fugitive" from "Herodiade," settings by Keel of Masefield's salt water ballads, and a group of American songs by Clarke, O'Hara, McGill and Speaks.

Traveler Jan 6

WERRENRATH TODAY

Reinald Werrenrath will give a recital in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30. He will present the following program:

Herald 1-7

Du bist die Ruh', Der Doppelganger, Schubert
Widmung, Die beiden Grenadiere, Schumann
Landscab, Hvis du har warme Tanker, Borresen
Irmelin Rose ....Nielsen
Silde ved Nat hin kolde.....Lange-Muller
Aria, "Vision Fugitive" (Herodiade), Massenet
Three Salt-water Ballads (John Masefield) ....Keel
Port of Many Ships, Trade Winds, Mother Carey.
The Blind Ploughman.............Clarke
The Wreck of the "Julie Plante"..O'Hara
Duna ....McGill
On the Road to Mandalay.........Speaks

Herald Jan 7

Werranrath Today

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, will give a recital in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. He will sing songs and arias by Schubert, Schumann, Hakon Borresen, Carl Nielsen, P. E. Lange-Muller, Massenet, Frederick Keel, Robert Coningsby Clarke, Geoffrey O'Hara, Josephine McGill and Oley Speaks.

Post Jan 7

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30, Reinald Werrenrath, baritone. "Du bist die Ruh'" and "Der Doppelganger," Schubert; "Widmung" and "Die beiden Grenadiere," Schumann; "Landscab" and "Hvis du har warme Tanker," Hakon Borresen; "Irmelin Rose," Carl Nielsen; "Silde ved Nat hin kolde," P. E. Lange-Muller; aria, "Vision Fugitive" (Herodiade), Massenet; "Three Salt-water Ballads," Frederick Keel; "The Blind Ploughman," Robert Coningsby Clarke; "The Wreck of the 'Julie Plante,'" Geoffrey O'Hara; "Duna," Josephine McGill; "On the Road to Mandalay," Oley Speaks.

Globe Jan 6

WERRENRATH IS TO BE HEARD AT SYMPHONY

Tel. 1/6

REINALD WERRENRATH

Reinald Werrenrath, the celebrated baritone, will be heard in Symphony hall tomorrow at 3:30.

Telegram Jan 6

WERRENRATH TODAY

Reinald Werrenrath will be heard in the following program at Symphony Hall this afternoon:

Du bist die Ruh'
Der Doppelganger } ...Frans Schubert
Widmung
Die beiden Grenadiere } .Robert Schumann
Hvis du har warme Tanker Landscab } ...
Irmelin Rose ...
Silde ved Nat hin kolde, P. E. ...
Aria: "Vision Fugitive" ...Ju...
(Herodiade)
Three Salt-water Ballads....Fr...
(John Masefield)
The Blind Ploughman
Robert Coni...
The Wreck of the "Julie Plan...
(W. H. Drummond) Geo...
Duna .... Josep...
On the Road to Mandalay
(Kipling) O...

Advertiser Ja...

WERRENRATH RE...

Reinald Werrenrath, bariton... recital in Symphony Hall ... afternoon. Harry Spear pla... pianoforte accompaniments. Th... a large audience.

The programme, while it avoid... the most part, the hackneyed ... that are so much sung at concer... not too interesting. What does ... Mr. Werrenrath so popular with ... ences and with professional mus... is his fine style in singing. Of hi... with so few American singers, or ... able to mention style without bl... ing, so to speak. His voice is reson... has very fine quality and was yes... day, from the very start of the con... in excellent condition. Mr. Werren... sings with rare finish anything he ... tempts, whether it be trifle (which ... too often) or masterpiece.

Post Jan 8

REINALD WERRENRATH GIVES SONG RECITAL HERE

Reinald Werrenrath, the popular American baritone, gave a recital yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall which greatly pleased an audience of good size. Mr Werrenrath's fine voice, and his skillful use of it, have won him many admirers here.

Yesterday's program was akin to the many other Mr Werrenrath has sung in the past, with rather more familiar pieces than usual on it. He began by a carefully wrought and suave performance of Schubert's "Du bist die Ruh." Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers," sung in English, particularly pleased the audience, and elicited "Du bist wie eine Blume" as an encore.

The second group of unfamiliar Scandinavian songs was also cordially received. Mr Werrenrath repeated Nielsen's "Irmelin Rose" in place of an encore. "Vision Fugitive," from Massenet's opera, "Herodiade," pleased, as did the lighter numbers which made the final group. Although Werrenrath's "Danny Deever," "Fuzzy Wuzzy," "On the Road to Mandalay," "Salt Water Ballads" and other robust songs are always cordially applauded, his voice is better suited to the suavities of "Duna" and greater lyrics. If he were a tenor he would not be doing big dramatic numbers from the Caruso repertory, but lyrics.

Among the five final encores, "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes" and "A Little Winding Road" gave especial pleasure.

Globe Jan 8

WERRENRATH AT SYMPHONY

Baritone Rouses His Audience to Wild Enthusiasm

IS SWAMPED WITH REQUESTS FOR SONGS

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, gave a song recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall, Harry Speare playing his accompaniments. Mr. Werrenrath sang:

Du bist die Ruh', Der Doppelganger, Schubert; Widmung, Die beiden Grenadiere, Schumann; Lankskab, Hvis du har warme Tanker, Borresen; Irmelin Rose, Neilsen; Silde ved Nat hin kolde, Lange-Muller; Aria, "Vision Fugitive," (Herodiade), Massenet; Three Salt-water Ballads, Frederick Keel; Port of Many Ships, Trade Winds, Mother Carey; The Blind Ploughman, Robert Coningsby Clarke; The Wreck of the "Julie Plante" Geoffrey O'Hara; Duna, Josephine McGill; On the Road to Mandalay, Oley Speaks.

Was Mr. Werrenrath put about by the stolidity of his audience, or does he feel most at home in modern songs, sturdy or sentimental, of the "ballad" type, or, perhaps, was he suffering from too much frosty air? Whatever the explanation, for an hour yesterday Mr. Werrenrath sang in a way to make one wonder how he had contrived to gain his high repute. Try as he would, he could not make his tones sound smooth and clear. Though he strove stoutly to reproduce the tragic note of "Der Doppelganger," ...

... over tones, with the narrating, the picturing or the characterizing quality with which a singer may clothe them. On all these scores Mr. Werrenrath has the perception that is ripening into imagination. He understands and he feels; but he also measures and proportions. "Nothing too much" may now and then seem as bond upon him. Yet better these sincere reticences than the extravagances that to Anglo-Saxon ears sometimes bear less easily the tests of honesty. Seldom does Mr. Werrenrath dull or dilute the quality of music or of verse, though he measure them. He is not the singer to say to the composer with a chuck under the chin: "Let me do it my way, old fellow." He began with a sense of style; steadily he adjusts and refines upon it.

Degree by degree, these qualities shone out of Mr. Werrenrath's singing yesterday afternoon. It was good to hear "Du Bist die Ruh'," "Widmung" and "Der Doppelgänger"—all songs of masculine sentiment and masculine vision—sung, as they should be, in masculine tones. It was pleasure to follow the sustained progress of the music and verse, the flow of each detail into the stream of melody and emotion; while beauty of tone and skill in song were the means—and the halo—to these satisfactions. Some will say that in these pieces Mr. Werrenrath lacked expansive ardor; yet thereby he gained what to as many ears were depth and integrity of mood. So, too, with his more rhetorical exercises in song. Mr. Shalyápin's grenadier indeed volleys and thunders with fanatic loyalties; but in the charge the hapless Schuman, setting him to music, is nigh beaten under. More fortunate, he still catches Mr. Werrenrath's ear and the soldier speaks the musical speech set down for him. Unflooded by a torrent of temperament, it still tells. Deployed graces succeeded these measured energies. "Mademoiselle" Massenet turns his soft, caressing periods, never so deftly. Like unto them, Mr. Werrenrath spins the web of his tones. Refinements of sentiment, refinements of skill, rustle through both.

Spare and sinewy was one and another of the Scandinavian songs—of the gauntness and the directness that haunt this northern music. Grayed was the picturing: bleak the relating or the contrasting of scene and sentiment. As bare were Mr. Werrenrath's tones; not once did he prettify, even though one balladist, Nielsen, tempted with a refrain. As the composers mixed their palettes, so did he mix his tones. Once more stood clear the thin fineness, the stripped visioning, of these songs. Sibelius is key to them. Between Masefield's verse and Mr. Werrenrath's warmths, Mr. Keel's sea-ballads gained a rhythmic vigor, a pictorial richness hardly intrinsic in them—the singer (as singers can do) glorifying both matter and medium. Likewise profited the Americans of the final balladry, the last jets of mood and sentiment. Messrs. Clarke and O'Hara, Miss McGill, whoever they may all be, should hold Mr. Werrenrath in their hearts. He persuades the listener that they had something to sing and felt as they sang it.

H. T. P.

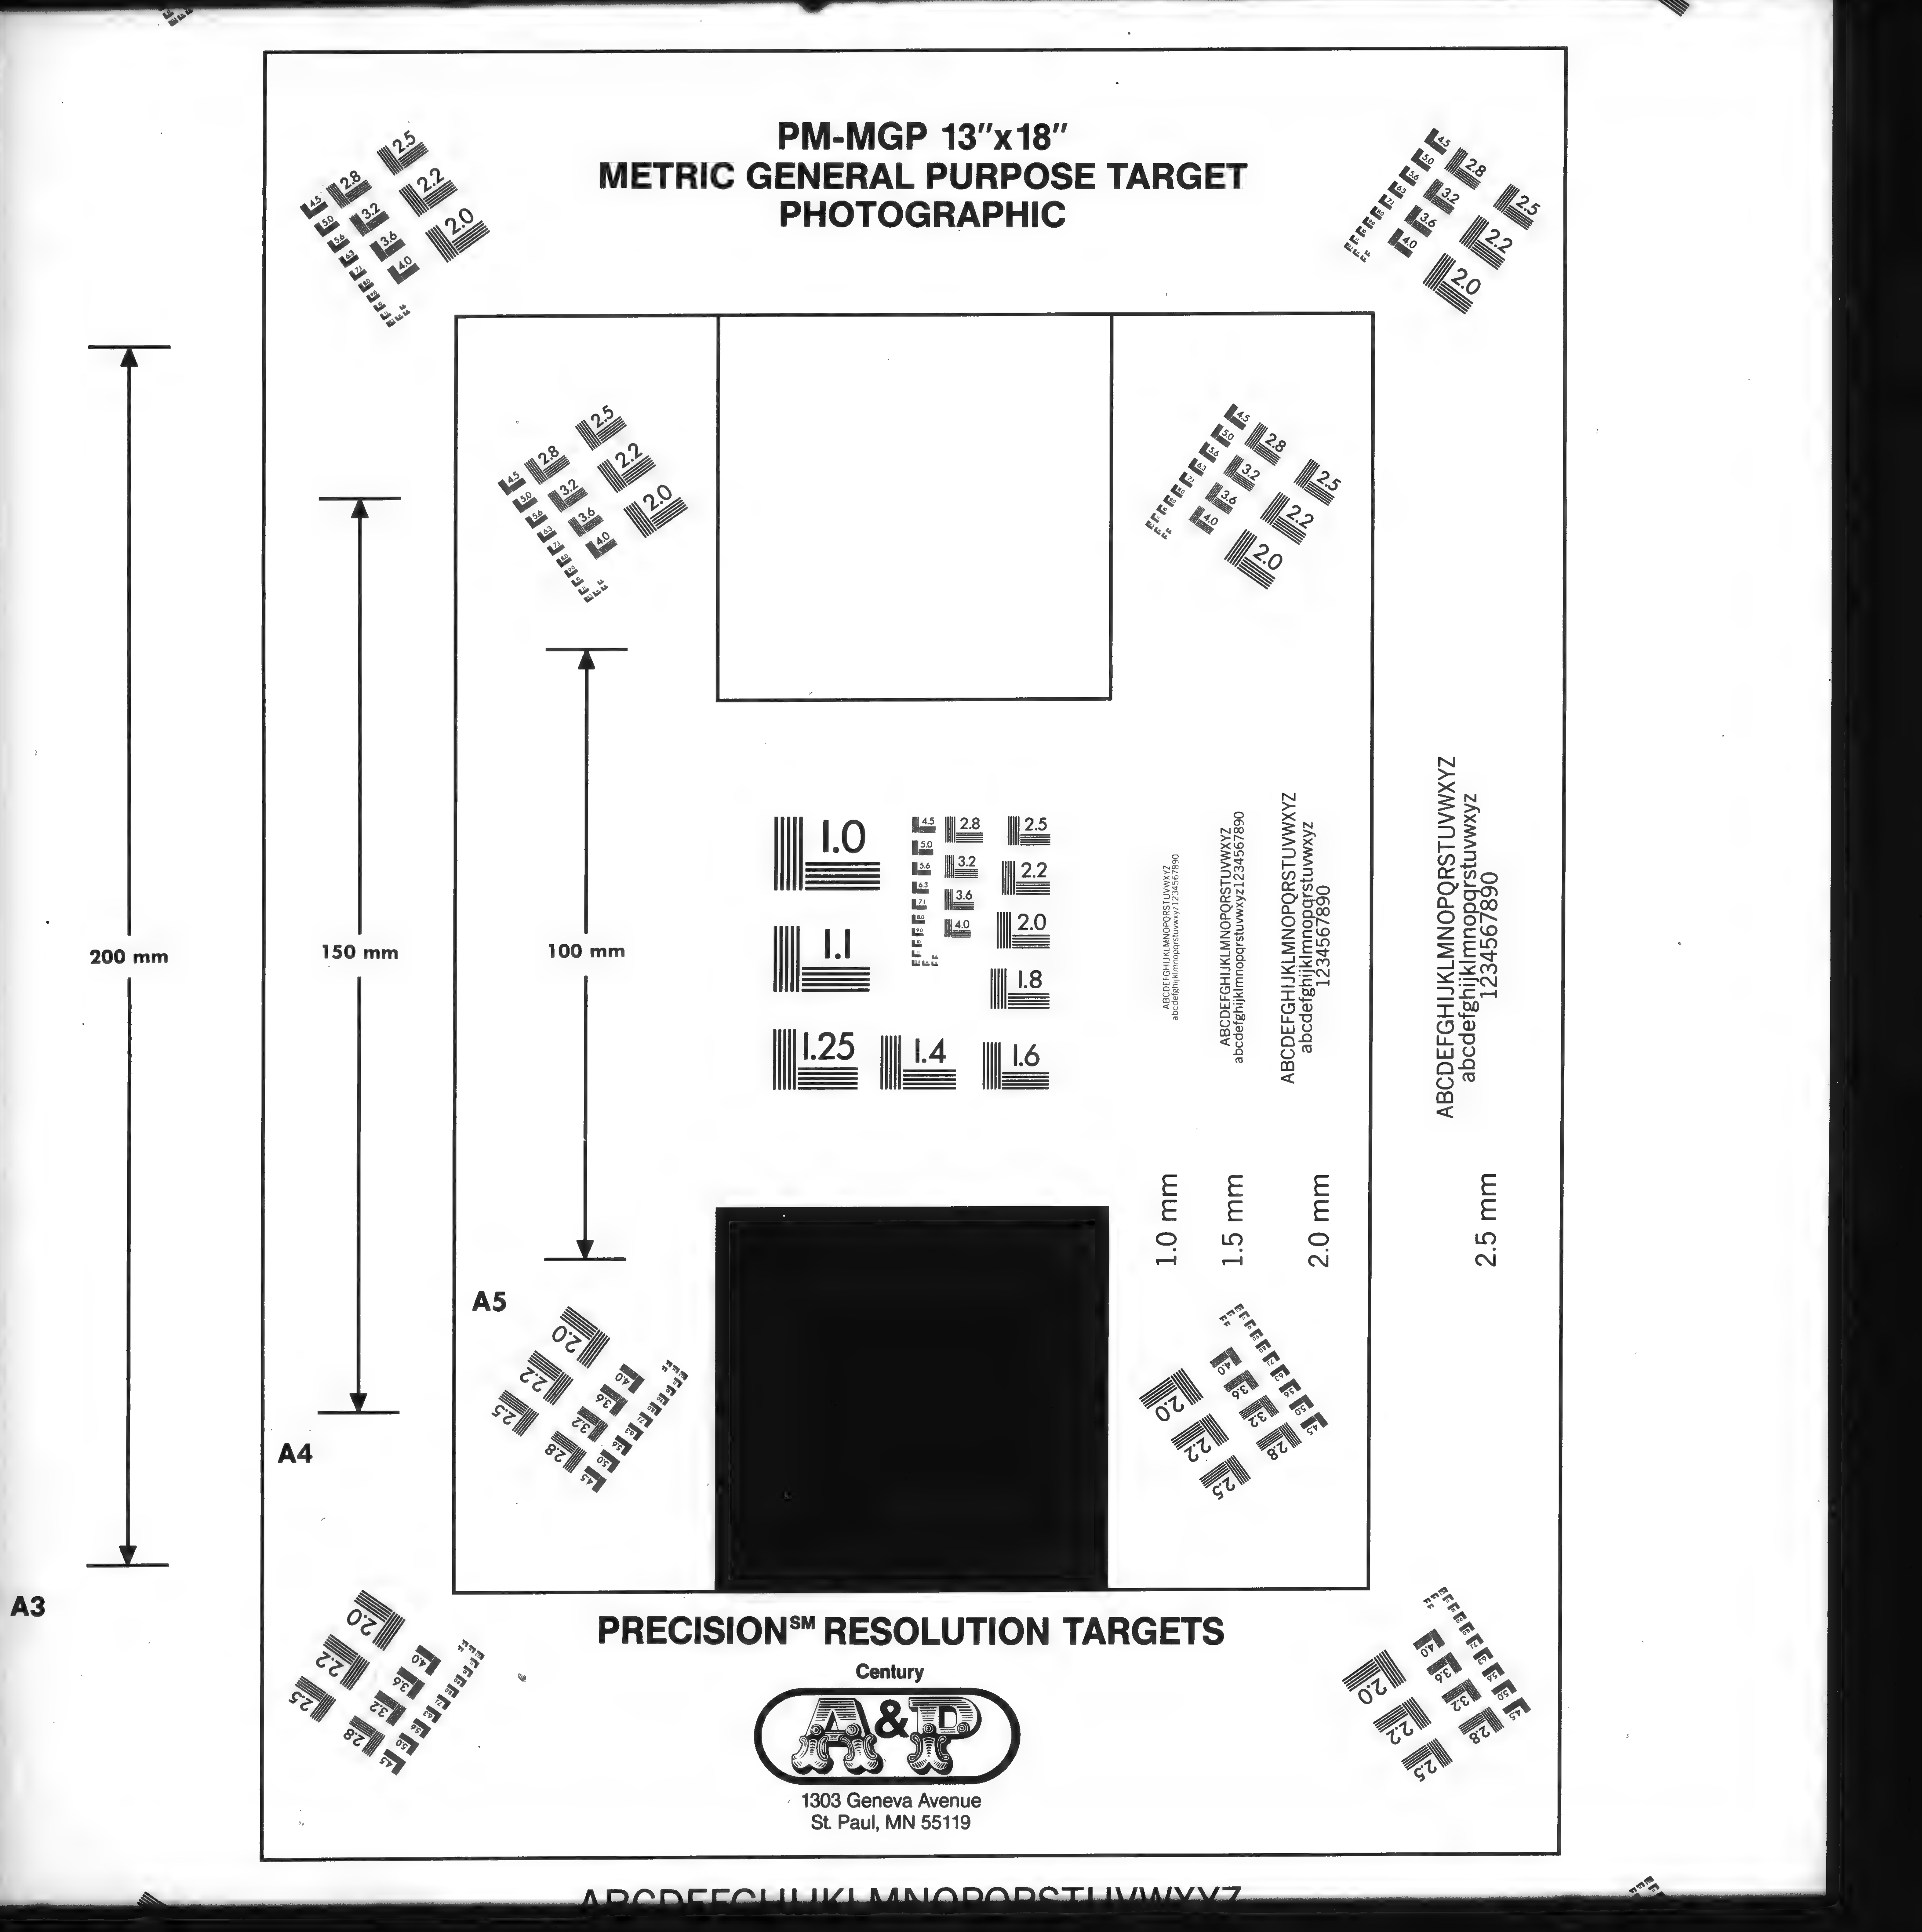
[119]

REDUCTION RATIO

14x

REDUCTION
RATIO
14x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A3
A4
A5
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

By J R Milne

Roland Hayes

"The only really good new tenor who has come along lately," said Ernest Newman, England's foremost critic, recently, "is the Negro, Roland Hayes. His voice is genuine, pure, warm, and rich, and his artistic instincts are of the finest. He is one of the three or four singers we have in England today whom I would hear from choice as distinct from professional necessity."

Some few years ago Roland Hayes achieved his first success when he sang at Symphony Hall. He was received cordially. Now the Continent has gone wild over him. He has returned—but only for a short visit to his mother—and he will sng again in the city of his professional debut. Afterwards, contracts in Italy, Germany, France, Austria and England, will keep him busy for some time to come.

The peronality of a genuine artist is always interesting. One expects to be impressed merely by the fire of genius silently radiating from the man.

Yet Roland Hayes fails to impress—until he opens his mouth and either speaks or sings. The powerful body of Chaliapin, the Russian base-baritone, could draw the attention of a world's series crowd from a score board when there were three men on bases and Ruth up; Paderewski's mop of hair is a distinctive badge of genius to us; there are many others, and as for our women artists, we usually look for and find the flashing eye or the queenly carriage, and we have Raisa, and Farrar, and Garden.

Sang for Royalty

And he must open his mouth to display that.

Roland Hayes has only one peculiarity. He speaks interestingly of people. Perhaps it was this peculiarity, when he appeared by royal command at Buckingham Palace, that impelled the King and Queen of England to continue his audience long after the time when it should, by every rule of the royal household, have terminated.

"I sang to them," Mr. Hayes told me, "and then I talked to them about myself, and about my work, and about my determination to help my race make its own contribution to the music of the world. And do you know—perhaps it doesn't speak very well for my singing!—they seemed to be more interested in what I told them about myself and my work than they were in the songs I sang!"

He laughed. He could afford to. With all the great musicians of the world welcoming him to their fellowship, conceding that he too is great, he has little reason to worry over compliments—even royal compliments.

"Mr. Hayes can hold his own with any tenor I have heard in my long life," says the critic of the English "Time and Tide," referring to his rendering of typical concert songs. And the "New Age" adds: "But ordinary phrases fail when one comes to the last part of the programme, which consisted of negro spirituals. Any criticism of Mr. Hayes' actual singing in these would be an impertinence, but much could be said of the spirituals themselves."

The Spirituals

Roland Hayes first learned the songs which were to set him apart as unique among great singers in the cotton field of Georgia, as a worker on his parents' farm.

Picking cotton with his brothers, he sang as he worked:

"Swing low sweet chariot, coming for to
carry me home,
Swing low sweet chariot, coming for to carry me home.
I looked over Jordan what did I see, coming for to carry me home,
A band of angels coming after me, coming for to carry me home.

If you get there before I do, coming for to carry me home,
Tell all my friends I'm coming too, coming for to carry me home.

The Negro spirituals of the South are generally believed to be the origin of the world's jazz and of the famous "Blues."

"The origin of the Negro spirituals is unique," Mr. Hayes told me. "They are never 'composed' after the manner of ordinary music, but spring into life ready made from the white heat of religious fervor during some protracted meeting in church or camp. They were never associated with comic or minstrel entertainments, and those who insist in characterizing them as such, or use them in such connection, are in error, and certainly commit an act of irreverence."

Negro spirituals, sometimes called Jubilee songs, are distinct from "Blues," and yet these two forms of expression are rather closely related in that both have the same minor quality. And the "Beal Street Blues" is perhaps the best popular rendering of this quality, for it was written by a Negro.

Boston Man Discovered Him

"When I was 16," Roland Hayes explained, "my mother took me and one of my brothers and went to Chattanooga, Tenn., so that we might go to school. My brother and I took turns about at going to school, and when I was not studying I worked in an iron foundry. Some time after, my school teacher's brother visited her from the Oberlin Conservatory of Musici, and because she was interested in my singing, he heard my voice, and pronounced it good. Up to that time I'd paid no particular attention to singing; but now it was decided that I should go to Fiske University, and work hard with an eventual concert success as my goal. I did work hard, both at my studies and at jobs that provided the money for these studies. In my fourth year at Fiske, I worked as waiter in a Louisville hotel, and during a great convention, a Mr. Putnam of Boston heard me sing and was much impressed.

"Nothing came of that episode until a band of Fiske singers left for the North, to sing in Boston, and I was one of them. I was told of Mr. Putnam's opinion of my voice, and when I arrived in Boston I had a letter to him. He arranged to have a number of voice teachers hear me, and their report was favorable, so from that day I made Boston my home."

Work, work, and more work, then, for Roland Hayes. A successful debut in Boston. A tour of America. And now a continental triumph such as comes to very few singers. It is seldom that the continent loses its head over a singer, particularly if he is an American. And English critics are even more phlegmatic.

Now he's going to the jungles of Africa for the true music of the Negro! Why?

"Four years ago, in California, a man came to me after I had finished singing, and said to me:

"'I have enjoyed your singing immensely, Mr. Hayes, but I'm puzzled. Your voice is well trained, and you have splendid technique, and yet when you sing I feel as no other singers have ever made me feel, so it is not your training nor your technique that does that. Why do you impress me this way? What have you that others have not?'

Didn't Understand Himself!

"As a matter of fact, I couldn't tell him. I didn't know myself!

"But of course I couldn't admit that. So I pleaded, and quite reasonably enough, that the crowd that pressed about us made talking difficult, and asked him if he wouldn't come to see

American Jan 6

Roland Hayes

HAYES TO RETURN

No tenor has had a more enthusiastic reception in Europe the last two seasons than Roland Hayes of Boston, who, after several successful concerts here, gave no less than six recitals in London to crowded audiences, and sang especially for King George in Buckingham Palace. Mr. Hayes is now returning to America and will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, January 7.

American Dec 23

ROLAND HAYES TO RETURN

No tenor has had a more enthusiastic reception in Europe the last two seasons than Roland Hayes of Boston, who, after several successful concerts here, gave no less than six recitals in London to crowded audiences and sang especially for King George in Buckingham Palace. Mr. Hayes is now returning to America and will give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday evening, Jan. 7.

Traveler Dec 23

ROLAND HAYES

(London Daily Telegraph, Nov. 27)

It behooves us to tell Mr. Roland Hayes, before he leaves for his American tour, that he has established himself among us as a singer who counts, that he may be persuaded to return again and sing to us those strange, sweet, melancholy songs. Since he has been in London he has revealed to us more convincingly than any others have done the innate musical sense and the mystical mentality of the negro race. For at first those curiously worded "Spirituals" seem shallow and hysterical, a mere outlet for the self-suppression which slavery enforces. But after hearing Mr. Hayes sing them, it is clear that they are a living force, and the expression of such conviction as we of more divided mind can hardly hope to experience. For whatever we may say of conviction, we cannot deny that it is the only supernatural force in the universe, the only force that can hurl mountains and quell rebellion. These songs are the living witness of the power of music over darker and baser things.

But Mr. Hayes has not been content merely to make these things known to us; he has also used well his time to apply the idiom of his voice and vocal style to representative examples of European song. He has especially devoted himself to Brahms, Schubert, and contemporary English composers such as Roger Quilter. All this goes to show that his musical outlook is wide and enlightened. His interpretations of European songs are interesting by reason of their orginality, and if they have not always conformed to orthodoxy they never lost sight of one important point, which Northern European singers often forget, that the song is in the first place for singing, and the rest must follow therefrom. The individual beauty of this tenor's voice is of such quality that whatever he sings is at least certain to make its appeal as an instance of Nature's rich endowment, and at the most it is a memorable experience. For his recital on Friday night the Wigmore Hall was filled with an audience which was ever intent upon letting him know how highly he was favored. His program was almost entirely devoted to the "originals" which he has made us learn to love, and with Mr. Lawrence Brown as his indispensable accompanist he provided an evening of untold delight, which the audience extended well beyond the limits of his program.

Herald Dec 24

Returning to Boston laurelled with European praises, Roland Hayes, the tenor, will be heard in the following programme at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Jan. 7.

Where'er You Walk	Händel
Quando Miro	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini
Eviva Rosa Bella	Galuppi
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le Thé	Koechlin
Clair de Lune	Fauré
Chevauchée Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit—Botschaft	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Grieg

Negro Spirituals:
Steal Away.
Sit Down.
I've Got a Robe.
Go Down, Moses.

Transcript Dec 29

Sunday evening, Jan. 7, in Sympho Hall, a concert of old airs, assor songs and negro melodies sung by Rolan Hayes, not long ago familiar and a plauded tenor in Boston, now returni after lengthy stay in London and in Pa in ripened abilities and fresh laurels. programme ranges from Handel and M zart through Brahms, Wolf and Grieg Duparc, Fauré and other Parisians. Ne "Spirituals" bring the end.

Transcript Dec 30

HAYES' RECITAL

The concert to be given by Rolan Hayes in Symphony Hall on Sunda evening, January 7, will include group of negro spirituals, wit which particularly he electrified th public of London, and also songs by Handel, Mozart and the early Italians Caccini and Calpuppi, a French group by Duparo, Koechlin, Faure and Fourdrain, and a German group by Brahms, Wolf and Grieg.

American Dec 30

---

rrow evening in Symphony 8:15 Roland Hayes, the cel- American tenor, will give concert in this country this following his great recent s in London and Paris. He the negro spirituals, "Steal "Sit Down," "I've Got a "Go Down, Moses"; also Handel, Mozart, Caccini, ppi, French composers, Du- echlin, Faure and Four- d a group of songs by Wolf and Grieg.

Telegram Jan 6

8:15, Roland Hayes, tenor, you Walk," Handel; "Quando ozart. "Amarilli," Caccini; a Bella," Galuppi; "L'Invita- oyage," Duparc; "Le The," "Claire de Lune," Faure; ee Cosaque," Fourdrain; samkeit" and "Botschaft," "Verborgenheit," Wolf; "A ieg; "Steal Away," arranged ce Brown; "Sit Down" and Robe," Roland Hayes; "Go s," H. T. Burleigh.

Globe Jan 7

---

hony Hall tomorrow evening and Hayes not long ago fa- applauded tenor in Boston, tly sojourning in Paris and ening abilities and gaining s. A public, both remember- cipating, here awaits him. His ranges from Handel and gh Brahms, Wolf and Grieg Fauré and other Parisians. tuals" bring the end.

Transcript Jan 6

ROLAND HAYES

w evening, in Symphony hall, Roland Hayes, the celebrated tenor, will give his only con- is country this season, follow- his great recent successes in London Shortly after this appear- to sail for Europe to meet gagements there.

Traveler Jan 6

ND HAYES TONIGHT

d Hayes, the American tenor, ng in Symphony hall tonight as ollowing his recent return from , where he has had unpre- ed success in London, Paris and ere. Tonight's concert will bly be his only appearance in ca, since he will shortly sail for e to meet further engagements. panied by Margaret Kent Hub- he will present the following pro- including a group of negro uals:

Her 1-7

e'er You Walk (Semele)	Handel
do Miro (Canzanetta)	Mozart
rilli	Caccini
a Rosa Bella (La Calamita de uri)	Galuppi
itation au Voyage	Duparc
The	Koechlin
e de Lune	G. Faure
auchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
deseinsamkeit, Botschaft	Brahms
borgenheit	Wolf
Dream	Grieg
l Away	Arr by Lawrence Brown
Down	Arr by Roland Hayes
Got a Robe	Arr by Roland Hayes
Down, Moses	Arr by H. T. Burleigh

Herald Jan 7

Roland Hayes Tonight

Roland Hayes, the American tenor, ll sing in Symphony Hall tonight at 15, following his recent return from urope, where he has had such unprecedented success in London, Paris and sewhere.

Tonight's concert will probably be his nly appearance in America, since he is shortly to sail for Europe to meet further engagements there.

Accompanied by Margaret Kent Hubbard, he will sing the following programme, including a group of negro spirituals:

Where'er You Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzonetta)	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini (1546-1614)
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Cori)	Galuppi (1700)
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamheit	Brahms
Botschaft	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Brahms
A Dream	Brahms
Steal Away	Arranged by Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Arranged by Roland Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Arranged by Roland Hayes
Go Down, Moses	Arranged by H. T. Burleigh

Post Jan 7

HAYES HERE TONIGHT

Roland Hayes, the American tenor, will sing in Symphony Hall tonight. Accompanied by Margaret Kent Hubbard, he will offer the following program, including a group of negro spirituals:

Where'er you Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzanetta)	Mozart
Amarilli	Cacchi (1546-1014)
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Cour)	Galuppi (1700)
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit Botschaft	Brahms
Vorborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Greig
Steal Away	Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Robert Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Robert Hayes
Go Down, Moses	H. T. Burleigh

Advertiser Jan 7

Roland Hayes proved last Sunda night his clear right to be invited sing as a soloist with the Boston Sym phony Orchestra in Boston. He is on of the finest living singers, and now recognized in Europe.

Globe Jan 14

[120]

Roland Ha

HAYES TO RETURN

No tenor has had a more enthusiastic reception in Europe the last two seasons than Roland Hayes of Boston, who, after several successful concerts here, gave no less than six recitals in London to crowded audiences, and sang especially for King George in Buckingham Palace. Mr. Hayes is now returning to America and will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, January 7.

American Dec [illegible]

ROLAND HAYES TO RETURN

No tenor has had a more enthusiastic reception in Europe the last two seasons than Roland Hayes of Boston, who, after several successful concerts here, gave no less than six recitals in London to crowded audiences and sang especially for King George in Buckingham Palace. Mr. Hayes is now returning to America and will give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday evening, Jan. 7.

Traveler Dec 23

ROLAND HAYES

(London Daily Telegraph, Nov. 27)

It behooves us to tell Mr. Roland Hayes, before he leaves for his American tour, that he has established himself among us as a singer who counts, that he may be persuaded to return again and sing to us those strange, sweet, melancholy songs. Since he has been in London he has revealed to us more convincingly than any others have done the innate musical sense and the mystical mentality of the negro race. For at first those curiously worded "Spirituals" seem shallow and hysterical, a mere outlet for the self-suppression which slavery enforces. But after hearing Mr. Hayes sing them, it is clear that they are a living force, and the expression of such conviction as we of more divided mind can hardly hope to experience. For whatever we may say of conviction, we cannot deny that it is the only supernatural force in the universe, the only force that can hurl mountains and quell rebellion. These songs are the living witness of the power of music over darker and baser things.

But Mr. Hayes has not been content merely to make these things known to us; he has also used well his time to apply the idiom of his voice and vocal style to representative examples of European song. He has especially devoted himself to Brahms, Schubert, and contemporary English composers such as Roger Quilter. All this goes to show that his musical outlook is wide and enlightened. His interpretations of European songs are interesting by reason of their orginality, and if they have not always conformed to orthodoxy they never lost sight of one important point, which Northern European singers often forget, that the song is in the first place for singing, and the rest must follow therefrom. The individual beauty of this tenor's voice is of such quality that whatever he sings is at least certain to make its appeal as an instance of Nature's rich endowment, and at the most it is a memorable experience. For his recital on Friday night the Wigmore Hall was filled with an audience which was ever intent upon letting him know how highly he was favored. His program was almost entirely devoted to the "originals" which he has made us learn to love, and with Mr. Lawrence Brown as his indispensable accompanist he provided an evening of untold delight, which the audience extended well beyond the limits of his program.

Herald Dec 24

Returning to Boston laurelled with European praises, Roland Hayes, the tenor, will be heard in the following programme at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Jan. 7.

Where'er You Walk	Händel
Quando Miro	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini
Eviva Rosa Bella	Galuppi
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le Thé	Koechlin
Clair de Lune	Fauré
Chevauchée Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit—Botschaft	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Grieg

Negro Spirituals:
- Steal Away.
- Sit Down.
- I've Got a Robe.
- Go Down, Moses.

Transcript Dec 29

Sunday evening, Jan. 7, in Sympho Hall, a concert of old airs, assor songs and negro melodies sung by Roland Hayes, not long ago familiar and applauded tenor in Boston, now returning after lengthy stay in London and in Paris in ripened abilities and fresh laurels. His programme ranges from Handel and Mozart through Brahms, Wolf and Grieg to Duparc, Fauré and other Parisians. Negro "Spirituals" bring the end.

Transcript Dec 30

HAYES' RECITAL

The concert to be given by Roland Hayes in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, January 7, will include a group of negro spirituals, with which particularly he electrified the public of London, and also songs by Handel, Mozart and the early Italians Caccini and Calpuppi, a French group by Duparc, Koechlin, Faure and Fourdrain, and a German group by Brahms, Wolf and Grieg.

American Dec 30

"Nothing came of that episode until a band of Fiske singers left for the North, to sing in Boston, and I was one of them. I was told of Mr. Putnam's opinion of my voice, and when I arrived in Boston I had a letter to him. He arranged to have a number of voice teachers hear me, and their report was favorable, so from that day I made Boston my home."

Work, work, and more work, then, for Roland Hayes. A successful debut in Boston. A tour of America. And now a continental triumph such as comes to very few singers. It is seldom that the continent loses its head over a singer, particularly if he is an American. And English critics are even more phlegmatic.

Now he's going to the jungles of Africa for the true music of the Negro! Why?

"Four years ago, in California, a man came to me after I had finished singing, and said to me:

"'I have enjoyed your singing immensely, Mr. Hayes, but I'm puzzled. Your voice is well trained, and you have splendid technique, and yet when you sing I feel as no other singers have ever made me feel, so it is not your training nor your technique that does that. Why do you impress me this way? What have you that others have not?'

Didn't Understand Himself!

"As a matter of fact, I couldn't tell him. I didn't know myself!

"But of course I couldn't admit that. So I pleaded, and quite reasonably enough, that the crowd that pressed about us made talking difficult, and asked him if he wouldn't come to see me the next day, and I would explain to him.

"Let me tell you that I did an immense amount of thinking that night! Until that time I had given all my thoughts to my music and the training of my voice. That night I took stock of myself and realized that the answer to his question was to be found in myself.

"I had trained myself in the white man's school. I had learned to sing as he sang. Therefore, my voice had the qualities of the white man's voice—but it had something else in addition.

"It is difficult to explain—almost impossible to put into words. But perhaps it may be said that as the natural quality of the white man's voice has been handed down to him from his ancestors, so has the quality of the Negro's voice been handed down to him from his ancestors.

"'Do you understand the Negro?' I asked this man the next day.

"'No,' he replied. 'My father was a slave owner, but I do not understand them.'

"'If you did,' I said, 'you would understand why I made you feel as I did. The explanation is in me, in my race. When I sang my Negro spirituals you heard the soul of my race.'

Will Study "at Root"

"That talk, by the way, was the turning point in my life. From that time on I put my heart and all my energy into the studying of myself! I studied the minor strains of our American plantation songs, and tried in that way to reconstruct in my mind's eye the background of my race, so that I might be able to understand the Negro songs I sang as well as I could understand the songs of white men.

"And at last I knew that I could never reach a satisfactory conclusion by studying our Southern melodies. Though in them the soul of the Negro sang, the songs were not purely Negro, but were instead the songs of an expatriated people. The white influence had crept in.

To African Jungle

"I made up my mind to continue my quest in the home of my ancestors—the African jungle."

And in conclusion, Roland Hayes told me a story of his own early life which, he feels, serves to illustrate the Negro's instinctive loyalty to the "old days"—the days before he became a free man.

"When I was a boy," he said, "I used to go rabbit hunting with my dog, Tibby. I wasn't allowed to use a gun, and Tibby and I had a method of our own. He'd rout out the rabbit, and I'd try to catch him with my hands as he came flying my way.

"When I was 15, I was allowed to take my father's gun one day to hunt rabbits. I went out into the woods, singing, with Tibby scurrying beside me.

"Tibby went nosing about for rabbit holes. At least he was successful. I stood waiting, gun in hand, ready to shoot.

"The rabbit came darting toward me. Still I waited, and didn't shoot. At last he was just a few feet away. I forgot I had the gun, dropped it, and made a flying leap for the rabbit, and caught him in my hands."

A world-famous Negro tenor will seek the true music of his race in the jungles of Africa.

Roland W. Hayes of Boston, who has just returned from an extended tour of Europe, where his genius was acclaimed by the leading critics, believes that in the songs of his ancestors he will find the key to the soul of the American Negro.

It is that queer, haunting melody that grips all who hear it which he will study—the sighing melody which has its place in all the Negro's folk songs and spirituals.

"The American Negro has a real contribution to make to the world's music," Mr. Hayes said to a Sunday Post reporter the other day, "but not until he understands himself can he give his best. For four years I have been studying myself, and the music—unlike that of the white man—which is a part of me. And now I am going to my African ancestors."

In an exclusive interview for the Sunday Post, the other day, Mr. Hayes told of his life and of his hard fight from obscurity to world fame, and discussed the future of the American Negro.

---

morrow evening in Symphony at 8:15 Roland Hayes, the celed American tenor, will give nly concert in this country this n, following his great recent sses in London and Paris. He ing the negro spirituals, "Steal ," "Sit Down," "I've Got a " "Go Down, Moses"; also by Handel, Mozart, Caccini, Galuppi, French composers, Du- Koechlin, Faure and Four- and a group of songs by ns, Wolf and Grieg.

Telegram Jan 6

---

ay at 8:15, Roland Hayes, tenor. re'er you Walk," Handel; "Quando Mozart. "Amarilli," Caccini; Rosa Bella," Galuppi; "L'Invitau Voyage," Duparc; "Le The," lin; "Claire de Lune," Faure; auchee Cosaque," Fourdrain; deseinsamkeit" and "Botschaft," ns; "Verborgenheit," Wolf; "A ," Grieg; "Steal Away," arranged wrence Brown; "Sit Down" and Got a Robe," Roland Hayes; "Go Moses," H. T. Burleigh.

Globe Jan 7

Symphony Hall tomorrow evening Roland Hayes not long ago fa- and applauded tenor in Boston, recently sojourning in Paris and , ripening abilities and gaining laurels. A public, both remember- anticipating, here awaits him. His mme ranges from Handel and through Brahms, Wolf and Grieg parc, Fauré and other Parisians. "Spirituals" bring the end.

Transcript Jan 6

ROLAND HAYES

Tomorrow evening, in Symphony hall, 8:15, Roland Hayes, the celebrated merican tenor, will give his only conrt in this country this season, followg his great recent successes in London nd Paris. Shortly after this appearnce he is to sail for Europe to meet rther engagements there.

Traveler Jan 6

ROLAND HAYES TONIGHT

Roland Hayes, the American tenor, will sing in Symphony hall tonight at 8:15, following his recent return from Europe, where he has had unprecedented success in London, Paris and elsewhere. Tonight's concert will probably be his only appearance in America, since he will shortly sail for Europe to meet further engagements. Accompanied by Margaret Kent Hubbard, he will present the following program, including a group of negro spirituals:

Where'er You Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzanetta)	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Court)	Galuppi
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	G. Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit, Botschaft	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Grieg
Steal Away	Arr by Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Arr by Roland Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Arr by Roland Hayes
Go Down, Moses	Arr by H. T. Burleigh

Herald Jan 7

Roland Hayes Tonight

Roland Hayes, the American tenor will sing in Symphony Hall tonight at 8:15, following his recent return from Europe, where he has had such unprecedented success in London, Paris and elsewhere.

Tonight's concert will probably be his only appearance in America, since he is shortly to sail for Europe to meet further engagements there.

Accompanied by Margaret Kent Hubbard, he will sing the following programme, including a group of negro spirituals:

Where'er You Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzonetta)	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini (1546-1614)
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Court)	Galuppi (1700)
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamheit	Brahms
Botschaft	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Brahms
A Dream	Brahms
Steal Away	Arranged by Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Arranged by Roland Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Arranged by Roland Hayes
Go Down, Moses	Arranged by H. T. Burleigh

Post Jan 7

AYES HERE TONIGHT

Roland Hayes, the American enor, will sing in Symphony Hall tonight. Accompanied by Margaret Kent Hubbard, he will offer the following program, including a group of negro spirituals:

Where'er you Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzanetta)	Mozart
marilli	Cacchi (1546-1014)
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Cour)	Galuppi (1700)
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit
Botschaft	Brahms
Vorborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Greig
Steal Away	Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Robert Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Robert Hayes
Go Down, Moses	H. T. Burleigh

Advertiser Jan 7

Roland Hayes proved last Sund night his clear right to be invited sing as a soloist with the Boston Sy phony Orchestra in Boston. He is o of the finest living singers, and now recognized in Europe.

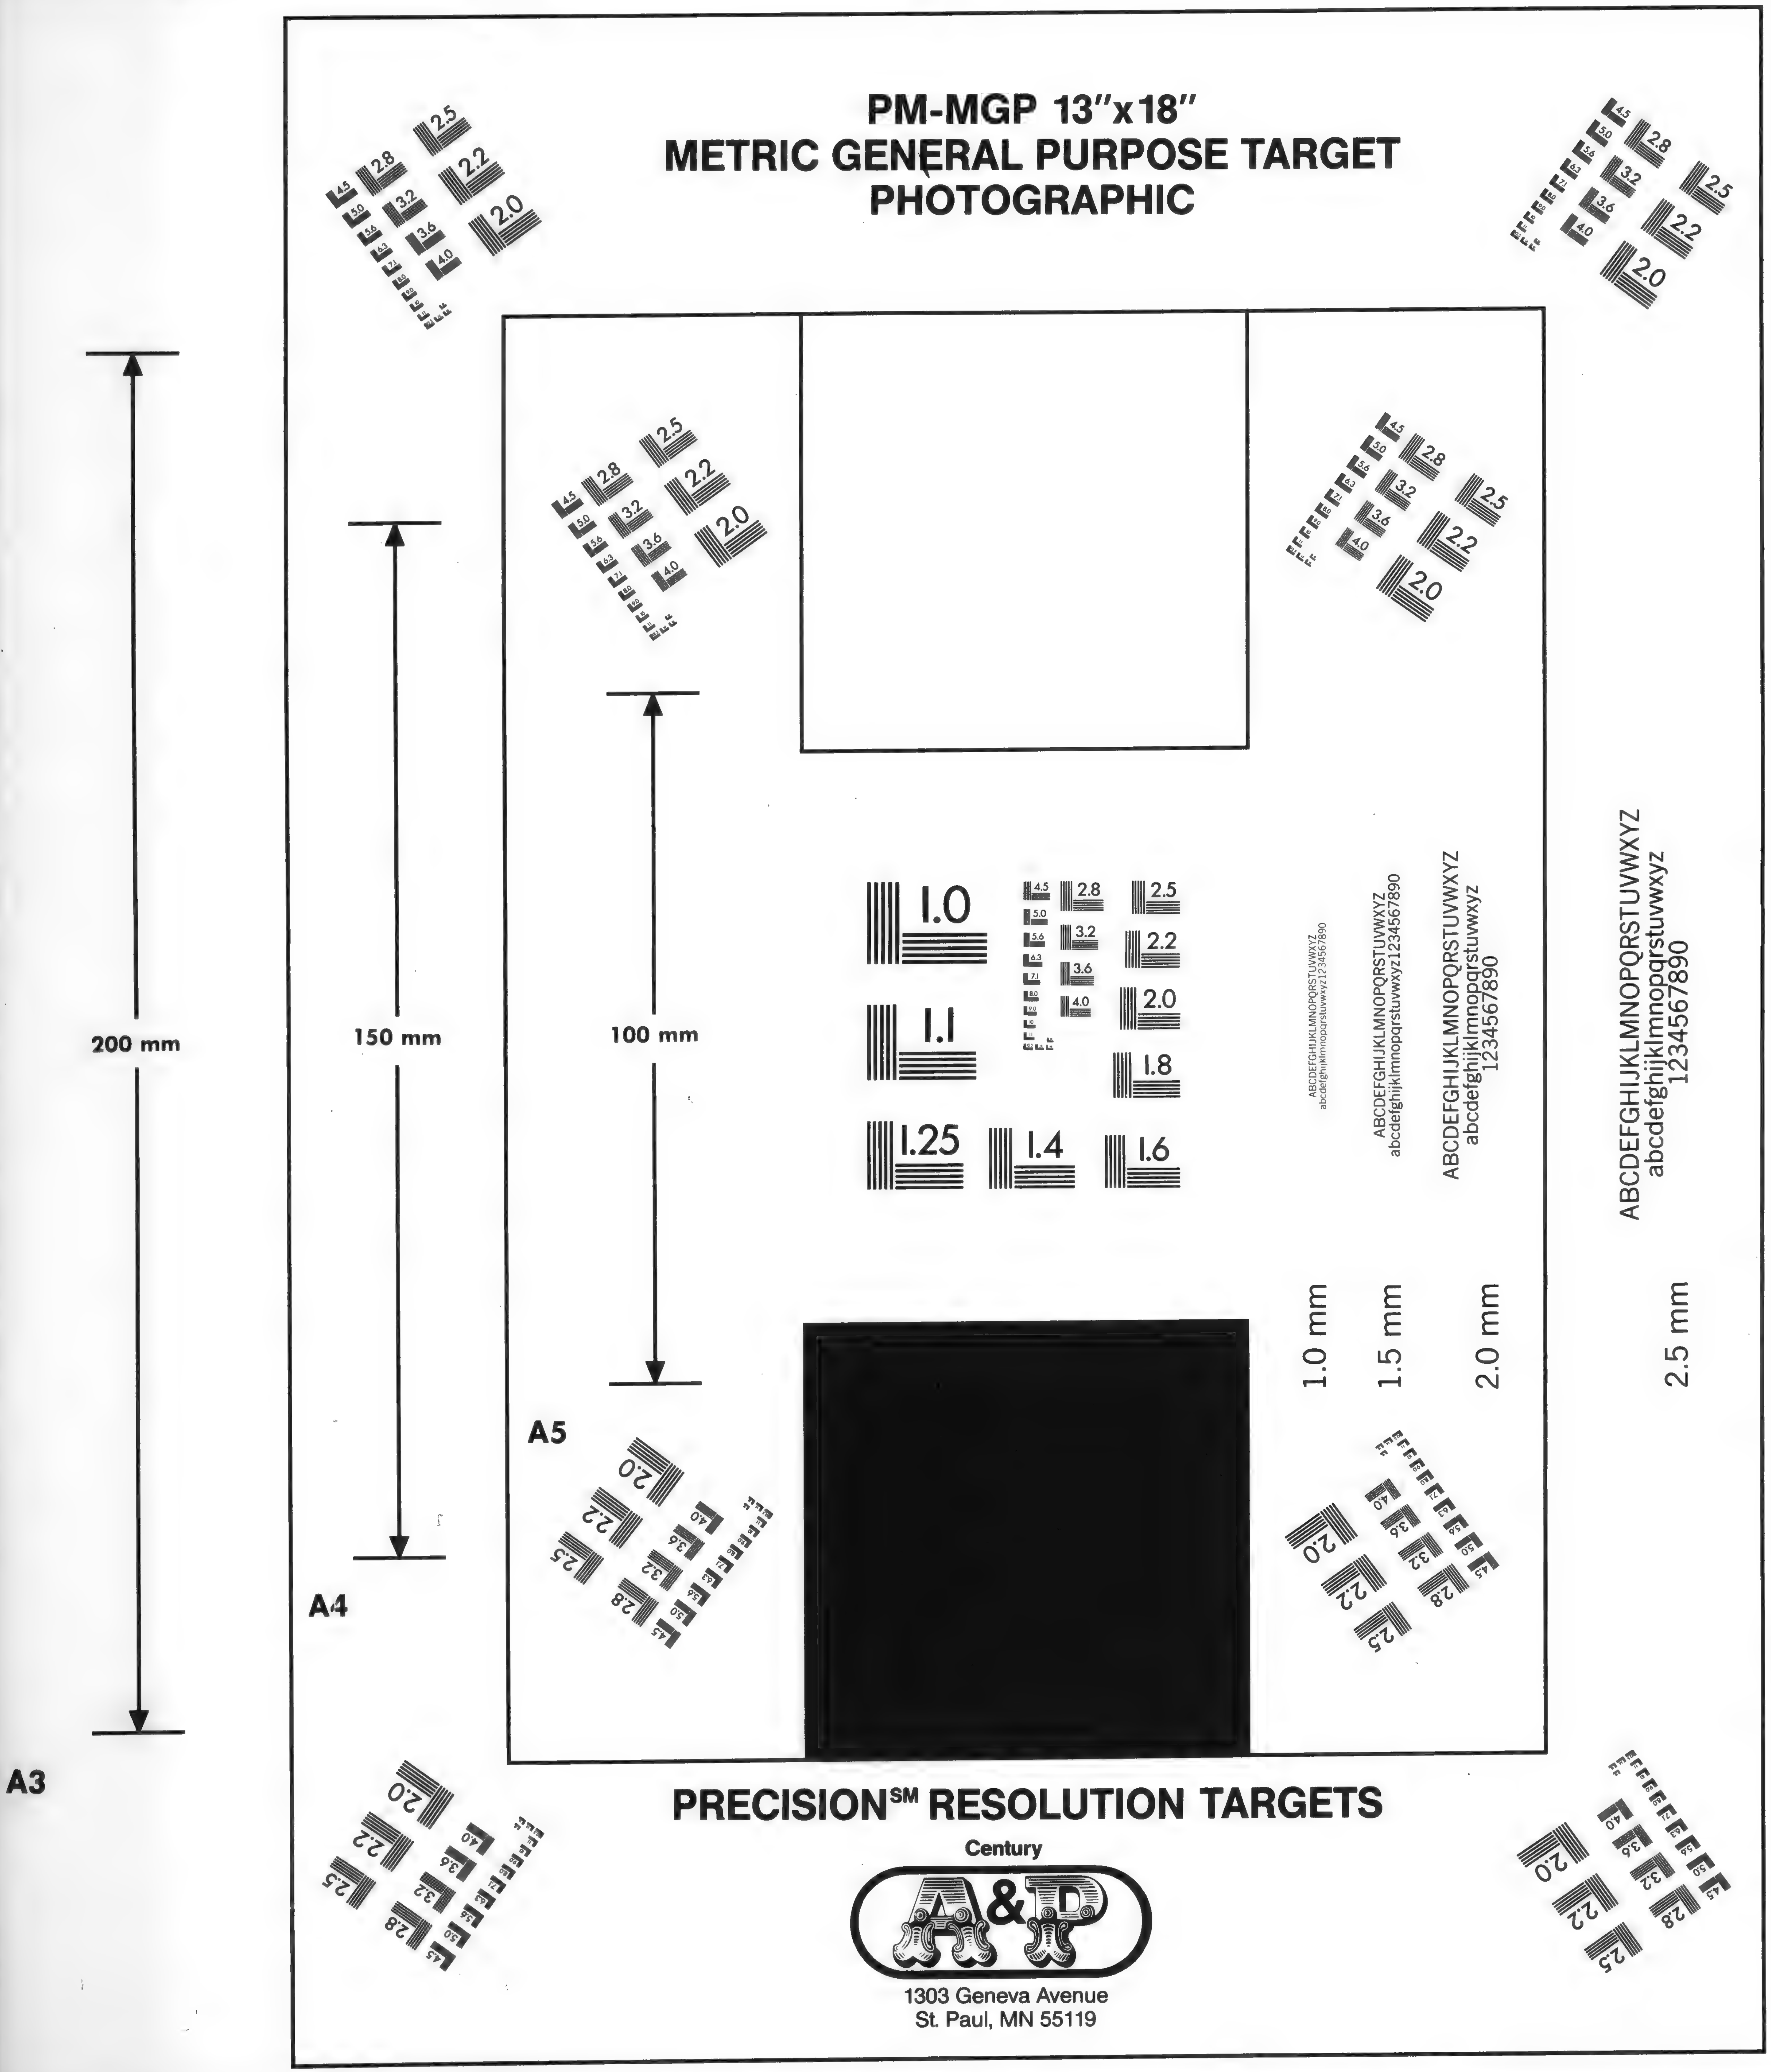
Globe Jan 14

REDUCTION

RATIO

12x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A5
A4
A3
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

Roland Hayes Jan 7th

After a lengthy visit to Europe, where he gained new laurels in concerts of his own and as "assisting artist" to notable orchestras, Roland Hayes, the tenor, is on the way back to his own city. He will be heard first in it at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Jan. 7. By all accounts he keeps the qualities of voice that first commended him, while now a sharpened musical intelligence directs them.

Transcript Dec 12

The American negro singer, Roland Hayes, well known in Boston, appeared at one of the Colonne concerts in Paris, where he sang an air from Handel's "Semele" and the prize song from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," also negro popular songs. His voice is called very sympathetic and managed with great certainty and a great care of nuances. His negro songs were found to express dramatically melancholy, hopes and desires; he sang them with conviction. Globe 12-10

Globe Dec 10

ROLAND HAYES

Jan 7-16

Roland Hayes, the American tenor from Boston, who, having been favorably received here, went to Europe and was applauded in the highest degree in his concerts in London and Paris, is now returning to America. He will again sing in Boston, in Symphony hall, on Sunday evening, Jan. 7, at 8:15.

Transcript Dec 16

Roland Hayes

Post 12/17

Having begun his career in this city, Roland Hayes recently went to Europe and in both London and Paris was applauded and acclaimed as one of the finest tenors who had been heard in those cities for a considerable period. After this splendid success he is returning to America and is singing again in Boston. He will give his concert in Boston, in Symphony Hall, on Sunday evening, Jan. 7, at 8:15.

Post Dec 17

ROLAND HAYES COMING

Having begun his career in this city, Roland Hayes is returning to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, January 7. London and Paris recently hailed him as a great American tenor.

Advertiser Dec 17

ROLAND HAYES

Roland Hayes, tenor, of Boston, who was enthusiastically received for the beauty of his voice and artistry in several concerts here, has spent the last two seasons in Europe, where he impressed his audiences to an extraordinary degree by his singing of the standard arias and songs of the past and present and by the negro spirituals. In London he gave at least six recitals to crowded audiences, and sang especially for King George in Buckingham Palace. He also gave concerts in Plymouth, Halifax, Croydon, Llandudno, and other cities, and subsequently in Paris, where he sang in recitals and with the Colonne Orchestra, led by Pierne. Mr. Hayes is now on his way to America. He will give a concert in Boston on Sunday evening, Jan. 7, in Symphony hall. Her. 12-24

Herald Dec 24

Roland Hayes to Sing Here After European Triumphs

Roland Hayes, the negro tenor of Boston, who was so enthusiastically received for the beauty of his voice and artistry in several concerts here, has spent the last two seasons in Europe, where he impressed his audiences to an extraordinary degree both by his singing of the standard songs of the past and present and by the negro spirituals, which hitherto were scarcely known in Europe.

In London he gave no less than six recitals to crowded audiences, and sang especially for King George in Buckingham Palace. He also gave concerts in Plymouth, Halifax, Croyden, Llandudno, and other cities, and subsequently in Paris, where he sang with the Colonne Orchestra under M Pierne.

Mr Hayes is now on his way to America once more, and will give a concert in Boston Sunday evening, Jan 7, in Symphony Hall.

Globe Dec 24

ROLAND HAYES HERE

Roland Hayes, the tenor, of Boston, who has spent the last two seasons in Europe, where he won fame singing modern songs and negro spirituals, will give a concert on Sunday evening, January 7 in Symphony Hall. Adv. 12-24

Advertiser Dec 24

Sunday evening, Jan. 7, in Symphony Hall, a concert of operatic pieces, assorted songs and negro melodies sung by Roland Hayes, not long ago familiar and applauded tenor in Boston, now returning after lengthy stay in London and in Paris in ripened abilities and fresh laurels.

Transcript Dec 22

HAYES TO RETURN

No tenor has had a more enthusiastic reception in Europe the last two seasons than Roland Hayes of Boston, who, after several successful concerts here, gave no less than six recitals in London to crowded audiences, and sang especially for King George in Buckingham Palace. Mr. Hayes is now returning to America and will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, January 7. Amer 12-23

American Dec 23

ROLAND HAYES TO RETURN

Trav 12-23

No tenor has had a more enthusiastic reception in Europe the last two seasons than Roland Hayes of Boston, who, after several successful concerts here, gave no less than six recitals in London to crowded audiences and sang especially for King George in Buckingham Palace. Mr. Hayes is now returning to America and will give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday evening, Jan. 7.

Traveler Dec 23

ROLAND HAYES

Her 12/24

(London Daily Telegraph, Nov. 27)

It behooves us to tell Mr. Roland Hayes, before he leaves for his American tour, that he has established himself among us as a singer who counts, that he may be persuaded to return again and sing to us those strange, sweet, melancholy songs. Since he has been in London he has revealed to us more convincingly than any others have done the innate musical sense and the mystical mentality of the negro race. For at first those curiously worded "Spirituals" seem shallow and hysterical, a mere outlet for the self-suppression which slavery enforces. But after hearing Mr. Hayes sing them, it is clear that they are a living force, and the expression of such conviction as we of more divided mind can hardly hope to experience. For whatever we may say of conviction, we cannot deny that it is the only supernatural force in the universe, the only force that can hurl mountains and quell rebellion. These songs are the living witness of the power of music over darker and baser things.

But Mr. Hayes has not been content merely to make these things known to us; he has also used well his time to apply the idiom of his voice and vocal style to representative examples of European song. He has especially devoted himself to Brahms, Schubert, and contemporary English composers such as Roger Quilter. All this goes to show that his musical outlook is wide and enlightened. His interpretations of European songs are interesting by reason of their orginality, and if they have not always conformed to orthodoxy they never lost sight of one important point, which Northern European singers often forget, that the song is in the first place for singing, and the rest must follow therefrom. The individual beauty of this tenor's voice is of such quality that whatever he sings is at least certain to make its appeal as an instance of Nature's rich endowment, and at the most it is a memorable experience. For his recital on Friday night the Wigmore Hall was filled with an audience which was ever intent upon letting him know how highly he was favored. His program was almost entirely devoted to the "originals" which he has made us learn to love, and with Mr. Lawrence Brown as his indispensable accompanist he provided an evening of untold delight, which the audience extended well beyond the limits of his program.

Herald Dec 24

Returning to Boston laurelled with European praises, Roland Hayes, the tenor, will be heard in the following programme at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Jan.7.

Where'er You Walk	Händel
Quando Miro	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini
Eviva Rosa Bella	Galuppi
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le Thé	Koechlin
Clair de Lune	Fauré
Chevauchée Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit—Botschaft	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Grieg

Negro Spirituals:
Steal Away.
Sit Down.
I've Got a Robe.
Go Down, Moses.

Transcript Dec 29

Sunday evening, Jan. 7, in Symphony Hall, a concert of old airs, assorted songs and negro melodies sung by Roland Hayes, not long ago familiar and applauded tenor in Boston, now returning after lengthy stay in London and in Paris in ripened abilities and fresh laurels. His programme ranges from Handel and Mozart through Brahms, Wolf and Grieg to Duparc, Fauré and other Parisians. Negro "Spirituals" bring the end. Tr 12/30

Transcript Dec 30

HAYES' RECITAL

The concert to be given by Roland Hayes in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, January 7, will include a group of negro spirituals, with which particularly he electrified the public of London, and also songs by Handel, Mozart and the early Italians Caccini and Calpuppi, a French group by Duparc, Koechlin, Faure and Fourdrain, and a German group by Brahms, Wolf and Grieg.

American Dec 30

ROLAND HAYES

The concert to be given by Roland Hayes in Symphony hall on Sunday evening, Jan. 7, at 8:15, will probably be the only appearance of the noted American tenor, since he is shortly to sail for Europe. His Boston program will include a group of negro spirituals and songs by Handel, Mozart and other composers. Trav 12-30

Traveler Dec 30

Sunday, Jan 7, at 8:15—Roland Hayes, tenor. "Where'er You Walk," Handel; "Amarilli," Caccini; "Quando Miro," Mozart; "Eviva Rosa Bella," Galuppi; "L'Invitation au Voyage," Duparc; "Le The," Koechlin; "Claire de Lune," Faure; "Chevauchee Cosaque," Fourdrain; "Waldeseinsamkeit" and "Botschaft," Brahms; "Verborgenheit," Wolf; "A Dream," Grieg; "Steal Away," arranged by Lawrence Brown; "Sit Down" and "I've Got a Robe," arranged by Roland Hayes; "Go Down, Moses," arranged by H. T. Burleigh. Globe 12-31

Globe Dec 31

HAYES CONCERT

Adv 12/31

The concert to be given by Roland Hayes in Symphony Hall next Sunday evening will be his only appearance in America, since the celebrated tenor is to sail for Europe shortly afterwards to fulfil engagements in London and Paris, where he has been received during the last two seasons with such unprecedented enthusiasm. His program includes classic and modern songs and negro spirituals.

Advertiser Dec

ROLAND HAYES PROGRAM

The concert to be given by Roland Hayes in Symphony hall next Sunday evening, Jan. 7, at 8:15, will be his only appearance in America. He will sail for Europe shortly afterward to meet engagements in London and Paris, where he has been received during the last two seasons with unprecedented enthusiasm. The program, including a group of negro spirituals, with which particularly he took London by storm, is as follows:

Where'er You Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzonetta)	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Couri)	Galuppi
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	G. Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit Botschaft	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Grieg
Steal Away	Arr. by Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Arr. by Roland Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Arr. by Roland Hayes
Go Down, Moses	Arr. by H. T. Burleigh

Herald Dec 31

sang as well as I could understand the songs of white men.

"And at last I knew that I could never reach a satisfactory conclusion by studying our Southern melodies. Though in them the soul of the Negro sang, the songs were not purely Negro, but were instead the songs of an expatriated people. The white influence had crept in.

To African Jungle

"I made up my mind to continue my quest in the home of my ancestors—the African jungle."

And in conclusion, Roland Hayes told me a story of his own early life which, he feels, serves to illustrate the Negro's instinctive loyalty to the "old days"—the days before he became a free man.

"When I was a boy," he said, "I used to go rabbit hunting with my dog, Tibby. I wasn't allowed to use a gun, and Tibby and I had a method of our own. He'd rout out the rabbit, and I'd try to catch him with my hands as he came flying my way.

"When I was 15, I was allowed to take my father's gun one day to hunt rabbits. I went out into the woods, singing, with Tibby scurrying beside me.

"Tibby went nosing about for rabbit holes. At least he was successful. I stood waiting, gun in hand, ready to shoot.

"The rabbit came darting toward me. Still I waited, and didn't shoot. At last he was just a few feet away. I forgot I had the gun, dropped it, and made a flying leap for the rabbit, and caught him in my hands."

Post Dec 24

HAYES CONCERT

Amer 1-6

Roland Hayes, the celebrated American tenor, will give his only concert in this country this season in Symphony Hall tomorrow evening. Shortly after this appearance he is to sail for Europe to meet further engagements there. At tomorrow's concert Mr. Hayes will sing the negro spirituals, "Steal Away," "Sit Down," "I've Got a Robe," "Go Down Moses"; also songs by Handel, Mozart, Caccini and Caluppi, French composers, Duparc, Koechlin, Faure and Fourdrain, and a group of songs by Brahms, Wolfe and Greig.

American Jan 6

[120]

Tomorrow evening in Symphony hall at 8:15 Roland Hayes, the celebrated American tenor, will give his only concert in this country this season, following his great recent successes in London and Paris. He will sing the negro spirituals, "Steal Away," "Sit Down," "I've Got a Robe," "Go Down, Moses"; also songs by Handel, Mozart, Caccini, and Galuppi, French composers, Dupare, Koechlin, Faure and Fourdrain, and a group of songs by Brahms, Wolf and Grieg. Tel 1-6

Telegram Jan 6

Today at 8:15, Roland Hayes, tenor. "Where'er you Walk," Handel; "Quando Miro," Mozart. "Amarilli," Caccini; "Eviva Rosa Bella," Galuppi; "L'Invitation au Voyage," Duparc; "Le The," Koechlin; "Claire de Lune," Faure; "Chevauchee Cosaque," Fourdrain; "Waldeseinsamkeit" and "Botschaft," Brahms; "Verborgenheit," Wolf; "A Dream," Grieg; "Steal Away," arranged by Lawrence Brown; "Sit Down" and "I've Got a Robe," Roland Hayes; "Go Down, Moses," H. T. Burleigh. Gl 1-7

Globe Jan 7

To Symphony Hall tomorrow evening returns Roland Hayes not long ago familiar and applauded tenor in Boston, more recently sojourning in Paris and London, ripening abilities and gaining fresh laurels. A public, both remembering and anticipating, here awaits him. His programme ranges from Handel and Mozart through Brahms, Wolf and Grieg to Duparc, Fauré and other Parisians. Negro "Spirituals" bring the end. Jan 16

Transcript Jan 6

ROLAND HAYES

Tomorrow evening, in Symphony hall, at 8:15, Roland Hayes, the celebrated American tenor, will give his only concert in this country this season, following his great recent successes in London and Paris. Shortly after this appearance he is to sail for Europe to meet further engagements there. Trav 1-6

Traveler Jan 6

ROLAND HAYES TONIGHT

Roland Hayes, the American tenor, will sing in Symphony hall tonight at 8:15, following his recent return from Europe, where he has had unprecedented success in London, Paris and elsewhere. Tonight's concert will probably be his only appearance in America, since he will shortly sail for Europe to meet further engagements. Accompanied by Margaret Kent Hubbard, he will present the following program, including a group of negro spirituals: Her 1-7

Where'er You Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzanetta)	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Courl)	Galuppi
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	G. Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit, Botschaft	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Grieg
Steal Away	Arr by Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Arr by Roland Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Arr by Roland Hayes
Go Down, Moses	Arr by H. T. Burleigh

Herald Jan 7

Roland Hayes Tonight

Post 1/7

Roland Hayes, the American tenor, will sing in Symphony Hall tonight at 8:15, following his recent return from Europe, where he has had such unprecedented success in London, Paris and elsewhere.

Tonight's concert will probably be his only appearance in America, since he is shortly to sail for Europe to meet further engagements there.

Accompanied by Margaret Kent Hubbard, he will sing the following programme, including a group of negro spirituals:

Where'er You Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzonetta)	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini (1546-1614)
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Couri)	Galuppi (1700)
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamheit	Brahms
Botschaft	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Brahms
A Dream	Brahms
Steal Away	Arranged by Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Arranged by Roland Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Arranged by Roland Hayes
Go Down, Moses	Arranged by H. T. Burleigh

Post Jan 7

HAYES HERE TONIGHT

Adv 1/7

Roland Hayes, the American tenor, will sing in Symphony Hall tonight. Accompanied by Margaret Kent Hubbard, he will offer the following program, including a group of negro spirituals:

Where'er you Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzanetta)	Mozart
Amarilli	Cacchi (1546-1014)
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Cour)	Galuppi (1700)
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit Botschaft	Brahms
Vorborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Greig
Steal Away	Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Robert Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Robert Hayes
Go Down, Moses	H. T. Burleigh

Advertiser Jan 7

Roland Hayes proved last Sunday night his clear right to be invited to sing as a soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston. He is one of the finest living singers, and now so recognized in Europe. Globe 1-14

Globe Jan 14

Roland Hayes Jan. 7th

After a lengthy visit to Europe, where he gained new laurels in concerts of his own and as "assisting artist" to notable orchestras, Roland Hayes, the tenor, is on the way back to his own city. He will be heard first in it at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Jan. 7. By all accounts he keeps the qualities of voice that first commended him, while now a sharpened musical intelligence directs them.

Transcript Dec

The American negro singer, Roland Hayes, well known in Boston, appeared at one of the Colonne concerts in Paris, where he sang an air from Handel's "Semele" and the prize song from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," also negro popular songs. His voice is called very sympathetic and managed with great certainty and a great care of nuances. His negro songs were found to express dramatically melancholy, hopes and desires; he sang them with conviction.

Globe Dec 10

ROLAND HAYES

Roland Hayes, the American tenor from Boston, who, having been favorably received here, went to Europe and was applauded in the highest degree in his concerts in London and Paris, is now returning to America. He will again sing in Boston, in Symphony hall, on Sunday evening, Jan. 7, at 8:15.

Transcript Dec 16

Roland Hayes

Having begun his career in this city, Roland Hayes recently went to Europe and in both London and Paris was applauded and acclaimed as one of the finest tenors who had been heard in these cities for a considerable period. After this splendid success he is returning to America and is singing again in Boston. He will give his concert in Boston, in Symphony Hall, on Sunday evening, Jan. 7, at 8:15.

Post Dec 17

ROLAND HAYES COMING

Having begun his career in this city, Roland Hayes is returning to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, January 7. London and Paris recently hailed him as a great American tenor.

Advertiser Dec 17

ROLAND HAYES

Roland Hayes, tenor, of Boston, who was enthusiastically received for the beauty of his voice and artistry in several concerts here, has spent the last two seasons in Europe, where he impressed his audiences to an extraordinary degree by his singing of the standard arias and songs of the past and present and by the negro spirituals. In London he gave at least six recitals to crowded audiences, and sang especially for King George in Buckingham Palace. He also gave concerts in Plymouth, Halifax, Croydon, Llandudno, and other cities, and subsequently in Paris, where he sang in recitals and with the Colonne Orchestra, led by Pierne. Mr. Hayes is now on his way to America. He will give a concert in Boston on Sunday evening, Jan. 7, in Symphony hall.

Herald Dec 24

Roland Hayes to Sing Here After European Triumphs

Roland Hayes, the negro tenor of Boston, who was so enthusiastically received for the beauty of his voice and artistry in several concerts here, has spent the last two seasons in Europe, where he impressed his audiences to an extraordinary degree both by his singing of the standard songs of the past and present and by the negro spirituals, which hitherto were scarcely known in Europe.

In London he gave no less than six recitals to crowded audiences, and sang especially for King George in Buckingham Palace. He also gave concerts in Plymouth, Halifax, Croyden, Llandudno, and other cities, and subsequently in Paris, where he sang with the Colonne Orchestra under M Pierne.

Mr Hayes is now on his way to America once more, and will give a concert in Boston Sunday evening, Jan 7, in Symphony Hall.

Globe Dec 24

ROLAND HAYES HERE

Roland Hayes, the tenor, of Boston, who has spent the last two seasons in Europe, where he won fame singing modern songs and negro spirituals, will give a concert on Sunday evening, January 7 in Symphony Hall.

Advertiser Dec 24

Sunday evening, Jan. 7, in Symphony Hall, a concert of operatic pieces, assorted songs and negro melodies sung by Roland Hayes, not long ago familiar and applauded tenor in Boston, now returning after lengthy stay in London and in Paris in ripened abilities and fresh laurels.

Transcript Dec 23

HAYES TO RETURN

No tenor has had a more enthusiastic reception in Europe the last two seasons than Roland Hayes of Boston, who, after several successful concerts here, gave no less than six recitals in London to crowded audiences, and sang especially for King George in Buckingham Palace. Mr. Hayes is now returning to America and will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, January 7.

American Dec 23

ROLAND HAYES TO RETURN

No tenor has had a more enthusiastic reception in Europe the last two seasons than Roland Hayes of Boston, who, after several successful concerts here, gave no less than six recitals in London to crowded audiences and sang especially for King George in Buckingham Palace. Mr. Hayes is now returning to America and will give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday evening, Jan. 7.

Traveler Dec 23

ROLAND HAYES

(London Daily Telegraph, Nov. 27)

It behooves us to tell Mr. Roland Hayes, before he leaves for his American tour, that he has established himself among us as a singer who counts, that he may be persuaded to return again and sing to us those strange, sweet, melancholy songs. Since he has been in London he has revealed to us more convincingly than any others have done the innate musical sense and the mystical mentality of the negro race. For at first those curiously worded "Spirituals" seem shallow and hysterical, a mere outlet for the self-suppression which slavery enforces. But after hearing Mr. Hayes sing them, it is clear that they are a living force, and the expression of such conviction as we of more divided mind can hardly hope to experience. For whatever we may say of conviction, we cannot deny that it is the only supernatural force in the universe, the only force that can hurl mountains and quell rebellion. These songs are the living witness of the power of music over darker and baser things.

But Mr. Hayes has not been content merely to make these things known to us; he has also used well his time to apply the idiom of his voice and vocal style to representative examples of European song. He has especially devoted himself to Brahms, Schubert, and contemporary English composers such as Roger Quilter. All this goes to show that his musical outlook is wide and enlightened. His interpretations of European songs are interesting by reason of their orginality, and if they have not always conformed to orthodoxy they never lost sight of one important point, which Northern European singers often forget, that the song is in the first place for singing, and the rest must follow therefrom. The individual beauty of this tenor's voice is of such quality that whatever he sings is at least certain to make its appeal as an instance of Nature's rich endowment, and at the most it is a memorable experience. For his recital on Friday night the Wigmore Hall was filled with an audience which was ever intent upon letting him know how highly he was favored. His program was almost entirely devoted to the "originals" which he has made us learn to love, and with Mr. Lawrence Brown as his indispensable accompanist he provided an evening of untold delight, which the audience extended well beyond the limits of his program.

Herald Dec 24

Returning to Boston laurelled with European praises, Roland Hayes, the tenor, will be heard in the following programme at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, Jan. 7.

Where'er You Walk	Händel
Quando Miro	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini
Eviva Rosa Bella	Galuppi
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le Thé	Koechlin
Clair de Lune	Fauré
Chevauchée Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit—Botschaft	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Grieg

Negro Spirituals:
Steal Away.
Sit Down.
I've Got a Robe.
Go Down, Moses.

Transcript Dec 19

Sunday evening, Jan. 7, in Symphony Hall, a concert of old airs, assorted songs and negro melodies sung by Roland Hayes, not long ago familiar and applauded tenor in Boston, now returning after lengthy stay in London and in Paris in ripened abilities and fresh laurels. His programme ranges from Handel and Mozart through Brahms, Wolf and Grieg to Duparc, Fauré and other Parisians. Negro "Spirituals" bring the end.

Transcript Dec 30

HAYES' RECITAL

The concert to be given by Roland Hayes in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, January 7, will include a group of negro spirituals, with which particularly he electrified the public of London, and also songs by Handel, Mozart and the early Italians Caccini and Calpuppi, a French group by Duparc, Koechlin, Faure and Fourdrain, and a German group by Brahms, Wolf and Grieg.

American Dec 30

ROLAND HAYES

The concert to be given by Roland Hayes in Symphony hall on Sunday evening, Jan. 7, at 8:15, will probably be the only appearance of the noted American tenor, since he is shortly to sail for Europe. His Boston program will include a group of negro spirituals and songs by Handel, Mozart and other composers.

Traveler Dec 30.

Sunday, Jan 7, at 8:15—Roland Hayes, tenor. "Where'er You Walk," Handel; "Amarilli," Caccini; "Quando Miro," Mozart; "Eviva Rosa Bella," Galuppi; "L'Invitation au Voyage," Duparc; "Le The," Koechlin; "Claire de Lune," Faure; "Chevauchee Cosaque," Fourdrain; "Waldeseinsamkeit" and "Botschaft," Brahms; "Verborgenheit," Wolf; "A Dream," Grieg; "Steal Away," arranged by Lawrence Brown; "Sit Down" and "I've Got a Robe," arranged by Roland Hayes; "Go Down, Moses," arranged by H. T. Burleigh.

Globe Dec 31

HAYES CONCERT

The concert to be given by Roland Hayes in Symphony Hall next Sunday evening will be his only appearance in America, since the celebrated tenor is to sail for Europe shortly afterwards to fulfil engagements in London and Paris, where he has been received during the last two seasons with such unprecedented enthusiasm. His program includes classic and modern songs and negro spirituals.

Advertiser Dec

ROLAND HAYES PROGRAM

The concert to be given by Roland Hayes in Symphony hall next Sunday evening, Jan. 7, at 8:15, will be his only appearance in America. He will sail for Europe shortly afterward to meet engagements in London and Paris, where he has been received during the last two seasons with unprecedented enthusiasm. The program, including a group of negro spirituals, with which particularly he took London by storm, is as follows:

Where'er You Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzonetta)	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Couri)	Galuppi
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	G. Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit } Botschaft }	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Grieg
Steal Away	Arr. by Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Arr. by Roland Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Arr. by Roland Hayes
Go Down, Moses	Arr. by H. T. Burleigh

Herald Dec 31

sang as well as I could understand the songs of white men.

"And at last I knew that I could never reach a satisfactory conclusion by studying our Southern melodies. Though in them the soul of the Negro sang, the songs were not purely Negro, but were instead the songs of an expatriated people. The white influence had crept in.

To African Jungle

"I made up my mind to continue my quest in the home of my ancestors—the African jungle."

And in conclusion, Roland Hayes told me a story of his own early life which, he feels, serves to illustrate the Negro's instinctive loyalty to the "old days"—the days before he became a free man.

"When I was a boy," he said, "I used to go rabbit hunting with my dog, Tibby. I wasn't allowed to use a gun, and Tibby and I had a method of our own. He'd rout out the rabbit, and I'd try to catch him with my hands as he came flying my way.

"When I was 15, I was allowed to take my father's gun one day to hunt rabbits. I went out into the woods, singing, with Tibby scurrying beside me.

"Tibby went nosing about for rabbit holes. At least he was successful. I stood waiting, gun in hand, ready to shoot.

"The rabbit came darting toward me. Still I waited, and didn't shoot. At last he was just a few feet away. I forgot I had the gun, dropped it, and made a flying leap for the rabbit, and caught him in my hands."

Post Dec 24

HAYES CONCERT

Roland Hayes, the celebrated American tenor, will give his only concert in this country this season in Symphony Hall tomorrow evening. Shortly after this appearance he is to sail for Europe to meet further engagements there. At tomorrow's concert Mr. Hayes will sing the negro spirituals, "Steal Away," "Sit Down," "I've Got a Robe," "Go Down Moses"; also songs by Handel, Mozart, Caccini and Caluppi, French composers, Duparc, Koechlin, Faure and Fourdrain, and a group of songs by Brahms, Wolfe and Greig.

American Jan 6

Tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall at 8:15 Roland Hayes, the celebrated American tenor, will give his only concert in this country this season, following his great recent successes in London and Paris. He will sing the negro spirituals, "Steal Away," "Sit Down," "I've Got a Robe," "Go Down, Moses"; also songs by Handel, Mozart, Caccini, and Galuppi, French composers, Duparc, Koechlin, Faure and Fourdrain, and a group of songs by Brahms, Wolf and Grieg.

Telegram Jan 6

Today at 8:15, Roland Hayes, tenor. "Where'er you Walk," Handel; "Quando Miro," Mozart. "Amarilli," Caccini; "Eviva Rosa Bella," Galuppi; "L'Invitation au Voyage," Duparc; "Le The," Koechlin; "Claire de Lune," Faure; "Chevauchee Cosaque," Fourdrain; "Waldeseinsamkeit" and "Botschaft," Brahms; "Verborgenheit," Wolf; "A Dream," Grieg; "Steal Away," arranged by Lawrence Brown; "Sit Down" and "I've Got a Robe," Roland Hayes; "Go Down, Moses," H. T. Burleigh.

Globe Jan 7

To Symphony Hall tomorrow evening returns Roland Hayes not long ago familiar and applauded tenor in Boston, more recently sojourning in Paris and London, ripening abilities and gaining fresh laurels. A public, both remembering and anticipating, here awaits him. His programme ranges from Handel and Mozart through Brahms, Wolf and Grieg to Duparc, Fauré and other Parisians. Negro "Spirituals" bring the end.

Transcript Jan 6

ROLAND HAYES

Tomorrow evening, in Symphony hall, at 8:15, Roland Hayes, the celebrated American tenor, will give his only concert in this country this season, following his great recent successes in London and Paris. Shortly after this appearance he is to sail for Europe to meet further engagements there.

Traveler Jan 6

ROLAND HAYES TONIGHT

Roland Hayes, the American tenor, will sing in Symphony hall tonight at 8:15, following his recent return from Europe, where he has had unprecedented success in London, Paris and elsewhere. Tonight's concert will probably be his only appearance in America, since he will shortly sail for Europe to meet further engagements. Accompanied by Margaret Kent Hubbard, he will present the following program, including a group of negro spirituals:

Where'er You Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzanetta)	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Couri)	Galuppi
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	G. Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit, Botschaft	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Grieg
Steal Away	Arr by Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Arr by Roland Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Arr by Roland Hayes
Go Down, Moses	Arr by H. T. Burleigh

Herald Jan 7

Roland Hayes Tonight

Roland Hayes, the American tenor, will sing in Symphony Hall tonight at 8:15, following his recent return from Europe, where he has had such unprecedented success in London, Paris and elsewhere.

Tonight's concert will probably be his only appearance in America, since he is shortly to sail for Europe to meet further engagements there.

Accompanied by Margaret Kent Hubbard, he will sing the following programme, including a group of negro spirituals:

Where'er You Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzonetta)	Mozart
Amarilli	Caccini (1546-1614)
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Couri)	Galuppi (1700)
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamheit	Brahms
Botschaft	Brahms
Verborgenheit	Brahms
A Dream	Brahms
Steal Away	Arranged by Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Arranged by Roland Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Arranged by Roland Hayes
Go Down, Moses	Arranged by H. T. Burleigh

Post Jan 7

HAYES HERE TONIGHT

Roland Hayes, the American tenor, will sing in Symphony Hall tonight. Accompanied by Margaret Kent Hubbard, he will offer the following program, including a group of negro spirituals:

Where'er you Walk (Semele)	Handel
Quando Miro (Canzanetta)	Mozart
Amarilli	Cacchi (1546-1014
Eviva Rosa Bella (La Calamita de Cour)	Galuppi (1700
L'Invitation au Voyage	Duparc
Le The	Koechlin
Claire de Lune	Faure
Chevauchee Cosaque	Fourdrain
Waldeseinsamkeit
Botschaft	Brahms
Vorborgenheit	Wolf
A Dream	Greig
Steal Away	Lawrence Brown
Sit Down	Robert Hayes
I've Got a Robe	Robert Hayes
Go Down, Moses	H. T. Burleigh

Advertiser Jan 7

Roland Hayes proved last Sunday night his clear right to be invited to sing as a soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston. He is one of the finest living singers, and now so recognized in Europe.

Globe Jan 14

[120]

Handel & Haydn Society.

LARGE AUDIENCE HEARS 'MESSIAH'

Handel and Haydn Society Sings Oratorio for 145th Time

Her 12/18

EMIL MOLLENHAUER CONDUCTS MUSICIANS

Yesterday afternoon, in Symphony hall, the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, gave its 145th performance of "The Messiah." The Boston Festival orchestra, John W. Crowley, principal, played. The soloists were Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, alto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass. The audience was large.

This 145th performance had much to commend it. Why should it not, since Mr. Mollenhauer conducted? For Mr. Mollenhauer knows well how to make the forces under his command, orchestra and chorus alike, do his will. His big chorus he has taught to sing with absolute accuracy, with excellent tone ranging from piano to fortissimo, with a nice attack and finish, also with some degree of skill in the moulding of a phrase. The orchestra, yesterday, he had play with an attention that secured correctness, if not marked tonal beauty. Mr. Mollenhauer, in short, has been able to give his chorus, and in a lesser degree his orchestra, an exceptionally competent technique; a very considerable feat.

Why, however, he should rest content with his present level of performance—no low level, to be sure, since never once yesterday was it slovenly—is a puzzle. One would think that it must be a pleasure to teach these able singers a pianissimo, how to color their tones, the way to mount a climax, the power of imagination, of sentiment. It well may be that the staunch Handel and Haydn public is amply satisfied with the standard of performance that holds today; better it surely is than that of 20 years ago. A public exists, nevertheless, ignorant, unfortunately, of the possibilities of choral singing, which might well be attracted to Handel and Haydn concerts if this ancient society would gird up its loins and do the fine work it is capable of doing.

The solo singers yesterday were of a high average of excellence. Miss Hayden, possessor of a charming, well-trained voice, sang admirably her recitatives and such music as did not demand the services of a brilliant dramatic soprano. Miss Peege, always free of sentimentality, sang "He Shall Feed His Flock" notably well. Mr. Dadmun sang "Why Do the Nations" smoothly and with fine spirit. Mr. Hackett, as always, pleased by the beauty of his excellently schooled voice. R. R. G.

Herald Dec 18

NOTABLE PRODUCTION OF "MESSIAH" GIVEN

Globe 12/18

Soloists Sing With Skill and Understanding

First of Two Handel and Haydn Christmas Performances

The Handel and Haydn Society gave the first of its two Christmas performances of Hendel's oratorio "The Messiah" yesterday afternoon to an audience that filled Symphony Hall. Under Mr Mollenhauer's practiced direction the chorus sang with its usual degree of skill. The Boston Festival Orchestra assisted, with Walter Smith playing the trumpet solo in the accompaniment to the aria "The Trumpet Shall Sound."

The four soloists were notably and pleasingly superior to those heard in "The Messiah" in recent seasons. Handel's music exacts more from the solo singers than almost anything else ever given by local choral societies, but it is not necessary to lure people to hear his best known oratorio by advertising famous assisting artists.

The soprano yesterday, Ethel Hayden, is a young singer who has studied with Mme Sembrich, and appeared with marked success in recital in New York. She used an extraordinarily lovely lyric soprano voice with unpretentious technical skill, and showed an appreciation of the elaborately lilting graces of Handelian melody which has nowadays become even rarer than of old.

Not in recent years has any previously unknown singer in oratorio so favorably impressed one. Her "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth" had a beauty to remember.

Arthur Hackett has been heard here more than once as tenor soloist in various choral works. He has never sung better than yesterday, when he accomplished the rare feat of getting through the florid parts of his airs with every note clear and distinct, yet suavely legato.

Charlotte Peege, contralto has also a beautiful voice. Her singing of "He Shall Feed His Flock" achieved the requisite simplicity and dignity. Royal Dadmun, the bass soloist, again displayed familiar powers to advantage.

"The Messiah" will be repeated tonight at 8:15 with the same assisting artists.

Globe Dec 18

HANDEL-HAYDN SOCIETY SING 'MESSIAH'

Amer 12/18

The 145th performance of Handel's "Messiah" by the Handel and Hadyn Society of Boston took place in Symphony Hall with Emil Mollenhauer conducting a chorus of 400 voices, with a background of orchestra and organ.

Mr. Mollenhauer chose for his soloists for this occasion Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass. Mr. Hackett and Mr. Dadmun both sang as well as usual and that was very well indeed. Of Miss Hayden and Miss Peege—the clear and perfectly true voice of Ethel Hayden proved to be surprisingly good. Quality is there and excellent training back of it. Her solos were thoroughly enjoyable. Miss Peege's voice has less inherent fine quality than Miss Hayden's but her parts were satisfactorily sung.

The ensemble—chorus, orchestra and organ—was very impressive and great credit is due to the unflagging energy of Mr. Mollenhauer. "The Messiah" was an auspicious beginning for the 108th season of the Handel-Hadyn Society. The concert will be repeated tonight at Symphony Hall.

American Dec 18

GREAT CHORUS IN "MESSIAH"

Post 12/18

Handel and Haydn Society Gives Annual Oratorio

The Handel and Haydn Society gave the annual Christmas performances of Handel's "Messiah" yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Emil Mollenhauer conducted. The soloists were: Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass. The Boston Festival Orchestra assisted, and Walter Smith played the trumpet solo in the last part of the oratorio.

Handel's great work has some very inspiring music, music that can be made to sound well even under the most unfavorable circumstances, and so it is always difficult to go away with a clear notion of the merits of the performers. Of the soloists, Royal Dadmun seemed to have done the best singing yesterday; and he was by all odds the most intelligent musically. Miss Hayden has a crystal soprano, somewhat too crystallized in the high tones, but otherwise the quality was uniformly good. Mr. Hackett and Miss Peege sang their parts creditably, but there was lacking the inspiration that ought to go with this music. The same can be said in degree of the conductor.

Mr. Mollenhauer knows very well what he wants, but he doesn't seem to want it badly enough to get the best efforts from singers and players. The chorus was well trained and sang well, for which Mr. Mollenhauer deserves credit. The same may be said of the orchestra.

The oratorio will be repeated tonight.

Post Dec 18

Annually

In another nineteen years Handel's "Messiah" will have been in existence a full two centuries, yet even then its usefulness as ritual, if not as music, will by no means be exhausted. Nor is there anyone rash enough to predict the year in which this venerable oratorio will cease to be heard here as inevitable concommitant to the Christmas season. Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall there befell the first of the customary two performances of the piece at the hands of the Handel and Haydn Society. Tonight, in the same auditorium, will come the repetition of it, unchanged in every detail. Yesterday, as on all the innumerable "previous occasions," the chorus sang its measures with fulness of tone, firmness of rhythm and precision of accent. Be it said to Mr. Mollenhauer's credit that he never conducts this music indifferently, though by this time any lapse of interest on his part would be readily excusable. As it is, if a soloist lag behind, if the accompanying orchestra play but a shade too loudly, his hand is quick to rectify and readjust. Of the solo singers of yesterday the two men, Mr. Arthur Hackett and Mr. Dadmun had, as their greater reputations would suggest, a little the better of it. Both Miss Ethel Hayden and Miss Charlotte Peege have voices somewhat too light for this music in such ample performance, but they sang agreeably and tastefully. And the audience, like all "Messiah" audiences, predisposed to enjoyment, essentially uncritical of piece or of performance, plainly relished all that it heard. Trans 12-18 W. S. S.

Transcript Dec 18

'THE MESSIAH' SUNG AT SYMPHONY

Trav 12-18

In spite of yesterday's inclement weather, a capacity audience was on hand to greet the Handel and Haydn Society singers at their annual Christmas performance of Handel's "Messiah." It will be repeated this evening. The first performance of this famous work was given by the society Dec. 25, 1818, in Boylston Hall. The present performances mark the 145th and 146th.

The soloists yesterday were Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass. Their voices, for the most part, are well suited to recitative singing. Miss Hayden sings sweet and true, but her voice lacks flexibility and her higher notes were noticeably strained. Mr. Dadmun has an excellent voice, and his singing yesterday was essentially dramatic. Miss Peege and Mr. Hackett both gave artistic interpretations of the alto and tenor parts.

A chorus of 400 well trained voices was another feature of the afternoon. The familiar "Hallelujah" chorus was well done. The Boston Festival orchestra, with John Crowley principal and Walter Smith trumpet, ably supported the singers. Emil Mollenhauer conducted, and his results were enthusiastically applauded. It is no easy task to train 400 voices for chorus work, and yesterday's performance was noted for its smoothness and tonal beauty.

Traveler Dec 18

A performance of Elgar's famous setting of Cardinal Newman's poem, "The Dream of Gerontius," will be given by the Handel and Haydn Society, in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 11. The soloists will be Clarence Whitehill, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Richard Crooks, tenor, and Merle Alcock, the contralto. Amer 1-13

American 1/13.

HANDEL & HAYDN Trav 1-13

A magnificent performance of Elgar's famous setting of Cardinal Newman's poem, "The Dream of Gerontius," is planned to be given by the Handel & Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, in Symphony hall, on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11. The soloists will be Clarence Whitehill; Richard Crooks, tenor, and Merle Alcock, contralto.

Traveler Jan 13

HANDEL AND HAYDEN Trav 1/27

The masterpiece of Sir Edward Elgar, "The Dream of Gerontius," is to be performed by the Handel and Hayden Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4. The solo parts will be taken by Richard Crooks, the young American tenor. Merle Alcock, contralto, and Clarence Whitehill, the celebrated Wagnerian baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Traveler Jan 27

ELGAR CANTATA

The Handel and Haydn Society will perform Sir Edward Elgar's cantata, "The Dream of Gerontius," in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 11, under the direction of Emil Mollenhauer. Richard Crooks, Merle Alcock and Clarence Whitehill will be the soloists. Adv 1-28

Advertiser Jan 28

"DREAM OF GERONTIUS"

Elgar's religious cantata "The Dream of Gerontius," will be given by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb 11, under the direction of Emil Mollenhauer. Her 1-28

The tenor soloist will be Richard Crooks, the young American who appeared for the first time in concert in New York last fall; the contralto will be Merle Alcock; the baritone will be Clarence Whitehill.

Herald Jan 28

The Handel and Haydn Society is to be commended for giving us so good an unfamiliar oratorio as Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius" for its midseason concert, Feb 11, instead of a "chestnut" like "Elijah." Gl 1-28

Globe Jan 28

ELGAR ORATORIO

Sir Edward Elgar's oratorio, "The Dream of Gerontius," is to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society next Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Emil Mollenhauer is rehearsing the chorus of 400 voices. An enlarged orchestra will assist; also a splendid trio of singers, including Richard Crooks, a noted tenor new to Boston; Merle Alcock, contralto, and Clarence Whitehill, baritone.

Advertiser Feb 4

DREAM OF GERONTIUS Post 2/4

The oratorio, "The Dream of Gerontius," to the text of Cardinal Newman, which is generally acknowledged to be the masterpiece of Sir Edward Elgar, is to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11, at 3:30 in Symphony Hall. Emil Mollenhauer is now rehearsing the society chorus of 400 in the many complexities of the score. An enlarged orchestra will be used and the trio of singers who will take the solo parts of Gerontius, the Angel and the Priest, are Richard Crooks, tenor; Merle Alcock, contralto, and Clarence Whitehill, Wagnerian baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Post Feb 4

"DREAM OF GERONTIUS" Her 2/4

Elgar's "The Dream of Gerontius," text by Cardinal Newman, will be performed by the Handel and Haydn Society next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11, at 3:30 in Symphony hall. Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct. An enlarged orchestra will be used and an excellent trio of singers has been engaged to sing the music of Gerontius, the Angel and the Priest. The tenor will be Richard Crooks who, appearing in New York for the first time on the concert stage this season, has ranked with the finest singers of the day. The other two singers have been heard in Boston numerous times—Merle Alcock, contralto, and Clarence Whitehill, baritone.

Herald Feb 4

Elgar's "Gerontius" Feb 11

The oratorio, "The Dream of Gerontius," to the text of Cardinal Newman, which is generally acknowledged to be the masterpiece of Sir Edward Elgar and which is not performed more often only because of its formidable difficulties, both choral and symphonic, is to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society next Sunday afternoon, Feb 11, at 3:30, in Symphony Hall.

Emil Mollenhauer is now rehearsing the society chorus of 400 in the many complexities of the score. An enlarged orchestra will be used and a splendid trio of singers has been engaged to take the solo parts of Gerontius, the Angel and the Priest. Globe 2/4

The tenor will be Richard Crooks who, appearing in New York for the first time on the concert stage this season, has been enthusiastically ranked with the finest singers of the day. On this occasion he will make his Boston debut. The other two singers, however, have been heard in Boston numerous times—Merle Alcock, contralto, and Clarence Whitehill, the Wagnerian baritone and leading singer of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Globe Feb 4

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS

Sir Edward Elgar's masterpiece, the "Dream of Gerontius," a wonderfully inspired setting of the poem of Cardinal Newman, promises to have a memorable performance by the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, at Symphony hall, tomorrow afternoon at 3:30. Trav 2-10

A large Symphony orchestra has been engaged to do justice to the elaborate symphonic requirements of the score, while Mr. Mollenhauer has called special rehearsals of the chorus of 400, which comprises the society.

The soloists will be Richard Crooks, tenor; Merle Alcock, contralto, and the baritone, Clarence Whitehill, of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Traveler Feb 10

HANDEL AND HAYDN Amer 2/10

Sir Edward Elgar's masterpiece, the "Dream of Gerontius," a setting of the poem of Cardinal Newman, promises to have a memorable performance by the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer conductor, at Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. Of the soloists to appear at this concert, Richard Crooks, a young tenor of New York, has not yet sung in Boston.

American Feb 10

"DREAM OF GERONTIUS"

"The Dream of Gerontius," Elgar's setting of the poem of Cardinal Newman, will be performed by the Handel and Haydn Society this afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30. To meet the exactions of the score a large symphony orchestra has been engaged. The chorus of 400 has been especially rehearsed by Mr. Mollenhauer, the conductor of the society. The "Dream of Gerontius" occupied a number of years of Elgar's life. Before he wrote this music he was scarcely known outside of England. Its first performance led to further performances all over Europe and in America, and upon this work more than any other his international reputation rests. Of the soloists to appear this afternoon, Richard Crooks, tenor, of New York, has not yet sung in Boston. His concerts in New York and appearances with orchestra immediately ranked him with the best. The contralto will be Merle Alcock, and the baritone, Clarence Whitehill. Her 2/11

Herald Feb 11

Post GERONTIUS TODAY

"The Dream of Gerontius," Sir Edward Elgar's famous setting of the poem of Cardinal Newman, will be performed by the Handel and Haydn Society this afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30. To meet the exactions of this great score a large symphony orchestra has been engaged and the chorus of 400 especially rehearsed by Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor of the society. The "Dream of Gerontius" occupied a number of years of Elgar's life. Before he wrote this music he was scarcely known outside of England. Its first performance led to further performances all over Europe and in America, and upon this work more than any other his international reputation rests.

Of the soloists to appear this afternoon Richard Crooks, the young tenor of New York, has not yet sung in Boston. His concerts in New York and appearances with orchestra immediately ranked him with the best. The contralto will be Merle Alcock, well known here, and the baritone, Clarence Whitehill, the great Wagnerian singer of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Post Feb 11th

Handel and Haydn Society Gives "Gerontius" Today

"The Dream of Gerontius," Sir Edward Elgar's famous setting of the poem of Cardinal Newman, will be performed by the Handel and Haydn Society this afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30. To meet the exactions of this great score a large orchestra has been engaged and the chorus of 400 especially rehearsed by Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor of the society. Gl 2/11

"The Dream of Gerontius" occupied a number of years of Elgar's life. Before he wrote this music he was scarcely known outside of England. Its first performance led to further performances all over Europe and in America, and upon this work more than any other his international reputation rests.

Of the soloists to appear this afternoon Richard Crooks, the young tenor of New York, has not yet sung in Boston. The contralto will be Merle Alcock, well known here, and the baritone, Clarence Whitehill, the Wagnerian singer of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Globe Feb 11

Elgar's Cantata Will Be Sung Today

Adv 2/11

SIR EDWARD ELGAR'S famous cantata, "The Dream of Gerontius," based upon the poem by Cardinal Newman, will be performed by the Handel and Haydn Society this afternoon in Symphony Hall. A large Symphony orchestra has been engaged to assist the chorus of 400. Emil Mollenhauer will conduct.

The soloists will be Richard Crooks, tenor; Merle Alcock, contralto and Clarence Whitehill, noted baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

MERLE ALCOCK, who sings this afternoon at Symphony Hall.

Advertiser Feb 11

For Reviews see 12th page ahead

[121]

Handel & Haydn Society.

LARGE AUDIENCE HEARS 'MESSIAH'

Handel and Haydn Society Sings Oratorio for 145th Time

Her 17/18

EMIL MOLLENHAUER CONDUCTS MUSICIANS

Yesterday afternoon, in Symphony hall, the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, gave its 145th performance of "The Messiah." The Boston Festival orchestra, John W. Crowley, principal, played. The soloists were Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, alto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass. The audience was large.

This 145th performance had much to commend it. Why should it not, since Mr. Mollenhauer conducted? For Mr. Mollenhauer knows well how to make the forces under his command, orchestra and chorus alike, do his will. His big chorus he has taught to sing with absolute accuracy, with excellent tone ranging from piano to fortissimo, with a nice attack and finish, also with some degree of skill in the moulding of a phrase. The orchestra, yesterday, he had play with an attention that secured correctness, if not marked tonal beauty. Mr. Mollenhauer, in short, has been able to give his chorus, and in a lesser degree his orchestra, an exceptionally competent technique; a very considerable feat.

Why, however, he should rest content with his present level of performance—no low level, to be sure, since never once yesterday was it slovenly—is a puzzle. One would think that it must be a pleasure to teach these able singers a pianissimo, how to color their tones, the way to mount a climax, the power of imagination, of sentiment. It well may be that the staunch Handel and Haydn public is amply satisfied with the standard of performance that holds today; better it surely is than that of 20 years ago. A public exists, nevertheless, ignorant, unfortunately, of the possibilities of choral singing, which might well be attracted to Handel and Haydn concerts if this ancient society would gird up its loins and do the fine work it is capable of doing.

The solo singers yesterday were of a high average of excellence. Miss Hayden, possessor of a charming, well-trained voice, sang admirably her recitatives and such music as did not demand the services of a brilliant dramatic soprano. Miss Peege, always free of sentimentality, sang "He Shall Feed His Flock" notably well. Mr. Dadmun sang "Why Do the Nations" smoothly and with fine spirit. Mr. Hackett, as always, pleased by the beauty of his excellently schooled voice. R. R. G.

Herald Dec 18

NOTABLE PRODUCTION OF "MESSIAH" GIVEN

Globe 12-18

Soloists Sing With Skill and Understanding

First of Two Handel and Haydn Christmas Performances

The Handel and Haydn Society gave the first of its two Christmas performances of Hendel's oratorio "The Messiah" yesterday afternoon to an audience that filled Symphony Hall. Under Mr Mollenhauer's practiced direction the chorus sang with its usual degree of skill. The Boston Festival Orchestra assisted, with Walter Smith playing the trumpet solo in the accompaniment to the aria "The Trumpet Shall Sound."

The four soloists were notably and pleasingly superior to those heard in "The Messiah" in recent seasons. Handel's music exacts more from the solo singers than almost anything else ever given by local choral societies, but it is not necessary to lure people to hear his best known oratorio by advertising famous assisting artists.

The soprano yesterday, Ethel Hayden, is a young singer who has studied with Mme Sembrich, and appeared with marked success in recital in New York. She used an extraordinarily lovely lyric soprano voice with unpretentious technical skill, and showed an appreciation of the elaborately lilting graces of Handelian melody which has nowadays become even rarer than of old.

Not in recent years has any previously unknown singer in oratorio so favorably impressed one. Her "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth" had a beauty to remember.

Arthur Hackett has been heard here more than once as tenor soloist in various choral works. He has never sung better than yesterday, when he accomplished the rare feat of getting through the florid parts of his airs with every note clear and distinct, yet suavely legato.

Charlotte Peege, contralto has also a beautiful voice. Her singing of "He Shall Feed His Flock" achieved the requisite simplicity and dignity. Royal Dadmun, the bass soloist, again displayed familiar powers to advantage.

"The Messiah" will be repeated tonight at 8:15 with the same assisting

Globe Dec 18

HANDEL-HAYDN SOCIETY SING 'MESSIAH'

Amer 17/18

The 145th performance of Handel's "Messiah" by the Handel and Hadyn Society of Boston took place in Symphony Hall with Emil Mollenhauer conducting a chorus of 400 voices, with a background of orchestra and organ.

Mr. Mollenhauer chose for his soloists for this occasion Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass. Mr. Hackett and Mr. Dadmun both sang as well as usual and that was very well indeed. Of Miss Hayden and Miss Peege—the clear and perfectly true voice of Ethel Hayden proved to be surprisingly good. Quality is there and excellent training back of it. Her solos were thoroughly enjoyable. Miss Peege's voice has less inherent fine quality than Miss Hayden's but her parts were satisfactorily sung.

The ensemble—chorus, orchestra and organ—was very impressive and great credit is due to the unflagging energy of Mr. Mollenhauer. "The Messiah" was an auspicious beginning for the 108th season of the Handel-Hadyn Society. The concert will be repeated tonight at Symphony Hall.

American Dec 18

GREAT CHORUS IN "MESSIAH"

Post 17/18

Handel and Haydn Society Gives Annual Oratorio

The Handel and Haydn Society gave the annual Christmas performances of Handel's "Messiah" yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Emil Mollenhauer conducted. The soloists were: Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto, Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass. The Boston Festival Orchestra assisted, and Walter Smith played the trumpet solo in the last part of the oratorio.

Handel's great work has some very inspiring music, music that can be made to sound well even under the most unfavorable circumstances, and so it is always difficult to go away with a clear notion of the merits of the performers. Of the soloists, Royal Dadmun seemed to have done the best singing yesterday; and he was by all odds the most intelligent musically. Miss Hayden has a crystal soprano, somewhat too crystallized in the high tones, but otherwise the quality was uniformly good. Mr. Hackett and Miss Peege sang their parts creditably, but there was lacking the inspiration that ought to go with this music. The same can be said in degree of the conductor.

Mr. Mollenhauer knows very well what he wants, but he doesn't seem to want it badly enough to get the best efforts from singers and players. The chorus was well trained and sang well, for which Mr. Mollenhauer deserves credit. The same may be said of the orchestra.

The oratorio will be repeated tonight.

Post Dec 18

Annually

In another nineteen years Handel's "Messiah" will have been in existence a full two centuries, yet even then its usefulness as ritual, if not as music, will by no means be exhausted. Nor is there anyone rash enough to predict the year in which this venerable oratorio will cease to be heard here as inevitable concommitant to the Christmas season. Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall there befell the first of the customary two performances of the piece at the hands of the Handel and Haydn Society. Tonight, in the same auditorium, will come the repetition of it, unchanged in every detail. Yesterday, as on all the innumerable "previous occasions," the chorus sang its measures with fulness of tone, firmness of rhythm and precision of accent. Be it said to Mr. Mollenhauer's credit that he never conducts this music indifferently, though by this time any lapse of interest on his part would be readily excusable. As it is, if a soloist lag behind, if the accompanying orchestra play but a shade too loudly, his hand is quick to rectify and readjust. Of the solo singers of yesterday the two men, Mr. Arthur Hackett and Mr. Dadmun had, as their greater reputations would suggest, a little the better of it. Both Miss Ethel Hayden and Miss Charlotte Peege have voices somewhat too light for this music in such ample performance, but they sang agreeably and tastefully. And the audience, like all "Messiah" audiences, predisposed to enjoyment, essentially uncritical of piece or of performance, plainly relished all that it heard. W. S. S.

Trans 12-18

Transcript Dec 18

'THE MESSIAH' SUNG AT SYMPHONY

Trav 12-18

In spite of yesterday's inclement weather, a capacity audience was on hand to greet the Handel and Haydn Society singers at their annual Christmas performance of Handel's "Messiah." It will be repeated this evening. The first performance of this famous work was given by the society Dec. 25, 1818, in Boylston Hall. The present performances mark the 145th and 146th.

The soloists yesterday were Ethel Hayden, soprano; Charlotte Peege, contralto; Arthur Hackett, tenor, and Royal Dadmun, bass. Their voices, for the most part, are well suited to recitative singing. Miss Hayden sings sweet and true, but her voice lacks flexibility and her higher notes were noticeably strained. Mr. Dadmun has an excellent voice, and his singing yesterday was essentially dramatic. Miss Peege and Mr. Hackett both gave artistic interpretations of the alto and tenor parts.

A chorus of 400 well trained voices was another feature of the afternoon. The familiar "Hallelujah" chorus was well done. The Boston Festival orchestra, with John Crowley principal and Walter Smith trumpet, ably supported the singers. Emil Mollenhauer conducted, and his results were enthusiastically applauded. It is no easy task to train 400 voices for chorus work, and yesterday's performance was noted for its smoothness and tonal beauty.

Traveler Dec 18

A performance of Elgar's famous setting of Cardinal Newman's poem, "The Dream of Gerontius," will be given by the Handel and Haydn Society, in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 11. The soloists will be Clarence Whitehill, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Richard Crooks, tenor, and Merle Alcock, the contralto. Amer 1-13

American 1/13

HANDEL & HAYDN

Trav 1-13

A magnificent performance of Elgar's famous setting of Cardinal Newman's poem, "The Dream of Gerontius," is planned to be given by the Handel & Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, in Symphony hall, on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11. The soloists will be Clarence Whitehill; Richard Crooks, tenor, and Merle Alcock, contralto.

Traveler Jan 13

HANDEL AND HAYDEN

Trav 1-27

The masterpiece of Sir Edward Elgar, "The Dream of Gerontius," is to be performed by the Handel and Hayden Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4. The solo parts will be taken by Richard Crooks, the young American tenor. Merle Alcock, contralto, and Clarence Whitehill, the celebrated Wagnerian baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Traveler Jan 27

ELGAR CANTATA

The Handel and Haydn Society will perform Sir Edward Elgar's cantata, "The Dream of Gerontius," in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 11, under the direction of Emil Mollenhauer. Richard Crooks, Merle Alcock and Clarence Whitehill will be the soloists. Adv 1-28

Advertiser Jan 28

"DREAM OF GERONTIUS

Elgar's religious cantata "The Dream of Gerontius," will be given by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb 11, under the direction of Emil Mollenhauer.

Her 1-28

The tenor soloist will be Richar Crooks, the young American who appeared for the first time in conce in New York last fall; the contrali will be Merle Alcock; the ba will be Clarence Whitehill.

Herald Jan 28

The Handel and Haydn Society is to be commended for giving us so good an unfamiliar oratorio as Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius" for its midseason concert, Feb 11, instead of a "chestnut" like "Elijah." Gl 1-28

Globe Jan 28

ELGAR ORATORIO

Sir Edward Elgar's oratorio, "The Dream of Gerontius," is to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society next Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Emil Mollenhauer is rehearsing the chorus of 400 voices. An enlarged orchestra will assist; also a splendid trio of singers, including Richard Crooks, a noted tenor new to Boston; Merle Alcock, contralto, and Clarence Whitehill, baritone.

Advertiser Feb 4

DREAM OF GERONTIUS

Post 2/4

The oratorio, "The Dream of Gerontius," to the text of Cardinal Newman, which is generally acknowledged to be the masterpiece of Sir Edward Elgar, is to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11, at 3:30 in Symphony Hall. Emil Mollenhauer is now rehearsing the society chorus of 400 in the many complexities of the score. An enlarged orchestra will be used and the trio of singers who will take the solo parts of Gerontius, the Angel and the Priest, are Richard Crooks, tenor; Merle Alcock, contralto, and Clarence Whitehill, Wagnerian baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Post Feb 4

"DREAM OF GERONTIUS"

Her 2/4

Elgar's "The Dream of Gerontius," text by Cardinal Newman, will be performed by the Handel and Haydn Society next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 11, at 3:30 in Symphony hall. Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct. An enlarged orchestra will be used and an excellent trio of singers has been engaged to sing the music of Gerontius, the Angel and the Priest. The tenor will be Richard Crooks who, appearing in New York for the first time on the concert stage this season, has ranked with the finest singers of the day. The other two singers have been heard in Boston numerous times—Merle Alcock, contralto, and Clarence Whitehill, baritone.

Herald Feb 4

Elgar's "Gerontius" Feb 11

The oratorio, "The Dream of Gerontius," to the text of Cardinal Newman, which is generally acknowledged to be the masterpiece of Sir Edward Elgar and which is not performed more often only because of its formidable difficulties, both choral and symphonic, is to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society next Sunday afternoon, Feb 11, at 3:30, in Symphony Hall.

Emil Mollenhauer is now rehearsing the society chorus of 400 in the many complexities of the score. An enlarged orchestra will be used and a splendid trio of singers has been engaged to take the solo parts of Gerontius, the Angel and the Priest. Gl 2/4

The tenor will be Richard Crooks who, appearing in New York for the first time on the concert stage this season, has been enthusiastically ranked with the finest singers of the day. On this occasion he will make his Boston debut. The other two singers, however, have been heard in Boston numerous times—Merle Alcock, contralto, and Clarence Whitehill, the Wagnerian baritone and leading singer of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Globe Feb 4

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS

Sir Edward Elgar's masterpiece, the "Dream of Gerontius," a wonderfully inspired setting of the poem of Cardinal Newman, promises to have a memorable performance by the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, at Symphony hall, tomorrow afternoon at 3:30. Trav 2-10

A large Symphony orchestra has been engaged to do justice to the elaborate symphonic requirements of the score, while Mr. Mollenhauer has called special rehearsals of the chorus of 400, which comprises the society.

The soloists will be Richard Crooks, tenor; Merle Alcock, contralto, and the baritone, Clarence Whitehill, of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Traveler Feb 10

HANDEL AND HAYDN

Amer 2/10

Sir Edward Elgar's masterpiece, the "Dream of Gerontius," a setting of the poem of Cardinal Newman, promises to have a memorable performance by the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer conductor, at Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. Of the soloists to appear at this concert, Richard Crooks, a young tenor of New York, has not yet sung in Boston.

American Feb 10

"DREAM OF GERONTIUS

"The Dream of Gerontius," Elga setting of the poem of Cardinal N man, will be performed by the Handel and Haydn Society this afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30. To meet the exactions of the score a large symphony orchestra has been engaged. The chorus of 400 has been especially rehearsed by Mr. Mollenhauer, the conductor of the society. The "Dream of Gerontius" occupied a number of years of Elgar's life. Before he wrote this music he was scarcely known outside of England. Its first performance led to further performances all over Europe and in America, and upon this work more than any other his international reputation rests. Of the soloists to appear this afternoon, Richard Crooks, tenor, of New York, has not yet sung in Boston. His concerts in New York and appearances with orchestra immediately ranked him with the best. The contralto will be Merle Alcock, and the baritone, Clarence Whitehill. Her 2/11

Herald Feb 11

GERONTIUS TODAY

"The Dream of Gerontius," Sir Edward Elgar's famous setting of the poem of Cardinal Newman, will be performed by the Handel and Haydn Society this afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30. To meet the exactions of this great score a large symphony orchestra has been engaged and the chorus of 400 especially rehearsed by Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor of the society. The "Dream of Gerontius" occupied number of years of Elgar's life. Be ore he wrote this music he was scarce known outside of England. Its first erformance led to further perform nces all over Europe and in America, nd upon this work more than any oth his international reputation rests.

Of the soloists to appear this afternoon Richard Crooks, the young tenor of New York, has not yet sung in Boston. His concerts in New York and appearances with orchestra immediately ranked him with the best. The contralto will be Merle Alcock, well known here, and the baritone, Clarence Whitehill, the great Wagnerian singer of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Post Feb 11th

Handel and Haydn Society Gives "Gerontius" Today

"The Dream of Gerontius," Sir Edward Elgar's famous setting of the poem of Cardinal Newman, will be performed by the Handel and Haydn Society this afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30. To meet the exactions of this great score a large orchestra has been engaged and the chorus of 400 especially rehearsed by Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor of the society.

"The Dream of Gerontius" occupied a number of years of Elgar's life. Before he wrote this music he was scarcely known outside of England. Its first performance led to further performances all over Europe and in America, and upon this work more than any other his international reputation rests.

Of the soloists to appear this afternoon Richard Crooks, the young tenor of New York, has not yet sung in Boston. The contralto will be Merle Alcock, well known here, and the baritone, Clarence Whitehill, the Wagnerian singer of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Globe Feb 11

Elgar's Cantata Will Be Sung Today

Adv 2/11

SIR EDWARD ELGAR'S famous cantata, "The Dream of Gerontius," based upon the poem by Cardinal Newman, will be performed by the Handel and Haydn Society this afternoon in Symphony Hall. A large Symphony orchestra has been engaged to assist the chorus of 400. Emil Mollenhauer will conduct.

The soloists will be Richard Crooks, tenor; Merle Alcock, contralto and Clarence Whitehill, noted baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

MERLE ALCOCK, who sings this afternoon at Symphony Hall.

Advertiser Feb 11

for Reviews see 12th page ahead

[121]

Burton Holmes

BURTON HOLMES

He 7/7

Burton Holmes will begin his 30 annual series of Travelogues in th city early in January. Last summ he visited Japan, Manchuria, Korea a China, penetrating to the interior of tl latter country for many days journe up the Yangtze-Kiang, to and beyon There will be five Travelogues.

Herald Dec 17

BURTON HOLMES SOON

Burton Holmes begins his thirtieth annual series of Travelogues in this city in January. Last Summer, he visited Japan, Manchuria, Korea and China, penetrating to the interior of the latter country for many days' journey up the Yangtze-Kiang to, and beyond, the wonderful gorges of the Yangtze, which, he says, compare more than favorably with the stupendous glories of our own Grand Canyon of Arizona. Amer 12-16

There will be five Travelogues in Mr. Holmes' coming series, his circuit in the East consisting of Wednesday evenings at the Brooklyn Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Thursday evenings in Lowell, Mass.; Friday evenings and Saturday matinees at Symphony Hall, Boston, and Sunday evenings and Monday matinees at Carnegie Hall, New York

American Dec 16

Burton Holmes

Her 12-2

Burton Holmes will begin his 30th season with a new series of photo-stories of travel about the middle of November. His subjects are the results of his travels in the Orient this past summer. Among other experiences, he achieved the distinction of being the first man to take a motion picture camera into the very heart of China in his journey up the Yangtze-Kiang.

Herald Oct 22

Burton Holmes to Give Five Travelogue

A series of five Travelogues by Burto Holmes is to be given at Symphony Hal the first of which will be held o Friday evening, Jan. 5, and also on Saturday afternoon, Jan. 6. Trans 12/23

So much which will have its far-reaching effect upon the world is happening i the Orient, that Burton Holmes has ar ranged to give a series of Travelogues thi season, dealing exclusively with condition in Japan, China, Manchuria, Korea an many of the lands east of the Suez. During the past summer, he made motion pic tures in Asia, and also an interesting se of still pictures. He has taken motio picture photographs also in the very hear of China, up the Yangtze-Kiang.

Transcript Dec 23

Holmes to Show Far Eastern Scenes

Adv 12-24

So much is happening in the Orient at the present time, which will have its far-reaching effect upon the entire world, that Burton Holmes has arranged to give a series of travelogues dealing exclusively with conditions in Japan, China, Manchuria, Korea and many of the fascinating lands east of Suez. Last Summer he made new motion pictures in Asia, and also a new set of still pictures for his colored lantern slides. He was the first to take motion picture photographs in the very heart of China, up the wonderful and mysterious Yangtze-Kiang.

He is to give a series of five travelogues at Symphony Hall, beginning Friday evening, January 5, and Saturday afternoon, January 6.

Advertiser Dec 24

HOLMES TO SHOW PICTURES OF CHINA

Adv 1-11

As the second subject in his new series of photo stories of travel, Burton Holmes will take his audiences into the very heart of China, up the Yanktze-Kiang. This travelogue is a panorama of that most amazing waterway of the most populous of all the nations of the world—with striking close-ups of the teeming cities along its banks. The voyage is a sensational travel experience.

Mr. Holmes will give "Into China, Through the Gorges of the [illegible]" at Symphony Hall [illegible] and Saturday

---

BURTON HOLMES OPENS WITH "PEKIN"

Adv 12/31

Burton Holmes' thirtieth annual series of photo-stories of travel opens with "Present-Day Pekin," which will be presented at Symphony Hall next Friday night and Saturday afternoon. Mr. Holmes shows this marvelous capital city of the Chinese casting off its shroud of traditions and preparing itself for the ordeals, progress and achievements of a modernized tomorrow.

Mr. Holmes was in Pekin last Summer and his motion pictures and colored lantern slides will show this picturesque and colorful city and its interesting people in present-day guise.

Advertiser Dec 31

With Burton Holmes on Trip Through China

Amer 1-6

As the second subject in his series of finely illustrated photo-stories of travel, Burton Holmes will take his audiences into the very heart of China, up the Yangtze-Kiang. This travelogue is a pictured panorama of that most amazing waterway of the most populous of all the nations of the world — with striking close-ups of the teeming cities along its banks and a thrilling penetration of the great gorges, beyond which lies the isolated province of Sze-ch'uan. The voyage from Ichang to Chungking is a sensational travel experience unrivalled and unique. Burton Holmes will give "Into China, Through the Gorges of the Yangtze-Kiang" at Symphony Hall on Friday evening, January 12, and Saturday afternoon, January 13.

Burton Holmes.

American Jan 6

MR. HOLMES NO DOUBT WOULD STRIP TO THE OCCASION

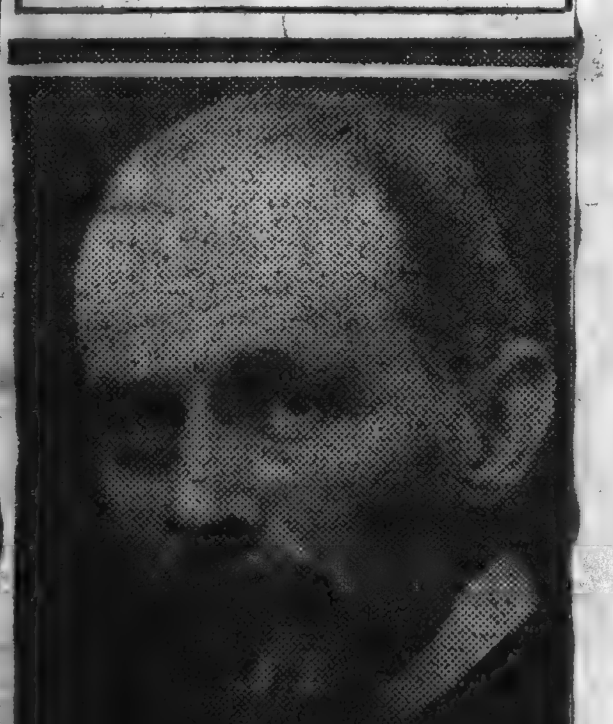
As the World Wags: He 1-16

In Thursday's "Notes and Lines" you expressed apprehension as to the costume to be worn by Mr. Burton Holmes going through the gorges of the Yangtze in the sight of a Symphony Hall audience. What really should worry us is how he will be dressed, for the sake of "atmosphere" when he "travelocutes" on the natives of New Guinea.

ANTHROPOLOGIST.

Herald Jan 16

BURTON HOLMES, coming to Symphony Hall with his new Far East travelogues.



Advertiser Dec 24

Burton Holmes will give his second Travelogue about China tomorrow night and Saturday afternoon in Symphony hall. Last week he talked in a white monkey jacket and black trousers, worn, as he said, by wily diplomats in Peking. The Lord only knows how he will be rigged tomorrow! He 1-11

BURTON HOLMES' LECTURE

Post 1-13

A thousand-mile river journey of con stant surprises from the picture-lik Chinese cities of Hangchow and Soo chow, along the Yangtze Kiang, fron its less active lower stretches to gorge cut by "insane waters" through tre mendously tall and massive cliffs, wa the subject of the Burton Holmes Tra elogue at Sym[illegible] last evening

Post Jan 13

He 12/31

Herald Dec 31

BURTON HOLMES

Post 12/31

This coming week Burton Holmes begins his 30th annual series of photo-stories of travel, for many years known as the travelogues, with "Present-Day Peking" as his subject. Mr. Holmes was there this last summer, and brings back a picture story of this wonderful city, now shaking off the shroud of the dead traditions of yesterday and taking on the new clothing of a progressive today. He will show an unusually large number of those artistically colored lantern slides, which were the basis of his original fame. Mr. Holmes will give "Present Day Peking" at Symphony Hall on Friday evening, Jan. 5 and Saturday afternoon, Jan. 6.

Post Dec 31

TRAVEL TALK ON CHINESE CAPITA

Burton Holmes Will Begin Thirtieth A nual Series of Lectures in Boston Ne Friday

Burton Holmes, veteran lecturer a traveller, will begin his thirtieth ann series of travelogues in Boston on Frid evening at Symphony Hall with an ill trated address on "Present-Day Pekin The lecture will be repeated Saturd afternoon. This travelogue is a portray of the present aspects of an ancient an astounding city, now, after many centu ies, responding to the call of modern lif Mr. Holmes shows this capital city of th Chinese casting off its shroud of trad tions and preparing itself for the ordeals, the progress and the achievements of a modernized tomorrow.

Burton Holmes Tr 12/30

Mr. Holmes was in Peking last summer and his motion pictures and lantern slides show the city and its interesting people in present-day guise.

Transcript Dec 30

BURTON HOLMES' LECTURE

Post 1/14

The third Travelogue to be given by Mr. Burton Holmes in this city is on "Unfamiliar Japan." This Travelogue is a delightful departure from well-known lectures on that country. It is the story of an artistic and sentimental pilgrimage to the far-away and strange places where Lafcadio Hearn lived and loved and labored. With Hearn's eldest son, Kazuo, as fellow pilgrim, Mr. Holmes followed step by step, the literary trail along which that perfect master of prose toiled onward towards world-wide recognition. Mr. Holmes will give "Unfamiliar Japan" at Symphony Hall on [illegible] evening, Jan. 19 and Saturday [illegible] Jan. 20.

Post Jan 14

HOLMES SHOWS PEKING VIEWS

The Travelogue Lecturer Dresses in Garb of Diplomats in China

GIVES FIRST OF SERIES OF 5 TALKS

He 1/6

By PHILIP HALE

Burton Holmes gave the first of five travelogues, illustrated with motion and still pictures, last night in Symphony hall. He appeared on the platform in the summer evening dress sported by diplomats in Peking, for his subject was "Present-Day Peking." He wore a white monkey jacket, black trousers and a black cravat. Concerning this costume he had much to say. Thus, after darkness, when a spotlight was flashed upon him, he prepared the audience for the proper atmosphere to view the sights. He explained that he must not be mistaken for a waiter or a bellboy.

The railway train took the traveler over a very long bridge. There were views of the passing soldiers, some of whom no doubt turned bandits. Plains of plenty and famine were passed until at length the venerable city of Peking was entered.

Mr. Holmes was in Peking soon after the Boxer trouble. The contrasts between the city of 1901 and 1922 were interesting; the transformation in streets and in buildings; the survival of certain primitive methods, as that of watering the streets; the change in the manner of transportation. There were views of the Fourth of July celebration by the members of the American legation and the marines—donkey polo, polo proper, baseball, etc. There were many pictures of street and shop life, views of the great city taken from different points. The first part of the travelogue ended with a description of the Temple of Heaven.

In the second part hideous Tibetan idols were shown (the Tibetan priests have corrupted the religion of Buddha in Pekin); also the colossal wooden statue of Buddha. Worshippers had been snapped by the irreverent camera while they were at their devotions. The ramparts of the city were shown. Mr. Holmes told effectively the story of the great bell and the self-sacrifice of the bell-founder's daughter that the bell might be cast in perfection. He referred the audience to Lafcadio Hearn's "Soul of the Great Bell." He might have said that the idea of a maiden sacrificing herself to insure the casting of a bell or the completion of some public work was spread through old Europe; how, on the other hand, the murder of a workman in a fit of rage might bring a flaw in a bell as in Herman Melville's sombre and mysterious tale. The Forbidden City, the summer palace of the old empress, the great wall of which we read in Mitchell's geography—often a dime novel was behind the covers of that much thumbed school book—and the Ming tombs were the concluding subjects.

Much information was pleasantly conveyed, but at times it was not easy to hear clearly the lecturer's remarks.

This travelogue will be repeated this afternoon. The subject next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon will be "Into China Through the Gorges of the

Herald Jan 6

HOLMES SHOWS VIEWS OF PICTURESQUE PEKIN

Adv 1/6

Burton Holmes opened his 30th travelogue season at Symphony Hall last night with a fascinating talk on the varied wonders of Pekin, illustrated with motion pictures and "stills" in colors. The popular traveler and lecturer also showed, by way of contrast, some of the pictures he took in the Chinese capital in 1901. This travel-talk, which will be repeated this afternoon, is the first of a series dealing with the Orient of today.

Advertiser Jan 6

Burton Holmes' Lecture On "Unfamiliar Japan"

Globe 1/14

The travelogue to be given by Burton Holmes in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will be on Lafcadio Hearn's "Unfamiliar Japan." It is a departure from familiar lectures on that country, a story of an artistic and sentimental pilgrimage to the faraway and unfamiliar places where Lafcadio Hearn lived and loved and labored.

With Hearn's eldest son, Kazuo, as fellow pilgrim, Mr Holmes followed step by step the literary trail along which that perfect master of perfect prose toiled onward toward world-wide recognition. Mr Holmes' still pictures, beautifully colored, as well as his motion pictures taken this last Summer, are said to be among the finest in his collection.

Globe Jan 14

[122]

Burton Holmes' Course Opens

Mon 1-6

Peking of today and 20 years ago were contrasted last evening by Burton Holmes in his lecture at Symphony Hall, opening his course of five talks to be given on Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons. Mr. Holmes described in considerable detail the rebuilding of the Temple of Heaven, which had been destroyed in the latter part of the nineteenth century after standing for centuries. During these centuries China had been stripped of the giant trees from which the great beams of the original building had been made, but the difficulty was overcome by sending to Oregon for a number of tall firs. There were many interesting pictures of the Forbidden City and of the Wall of China. Mr. Holmes wore for the occasion what he described as the official dress in Peking for diplomatic dances and dinners. He made many remarks that aroused smiles and even laughter in the large, interested audience. The lecture is to be repeated this afternoon. Next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon Holmes' subject will be "Into China Through the Gorges of the Yangtze."

Monitor Jan 6

THRILLS OF YANGTZE PICTURED BY HOLMES

Gl 1/13

The custom of Burton Holmes, the travelogue man, of appearing in Symphony Hall in costume appropriate to the subject of his lecture, when it is Oriental, is proving popular this season.

He gave his new lecture, "Into China Through the Gorges of the Yangtze," last evening in silk costumes such as are worn by high-class Chinese—first a gray skirt and black blouse over and lavender trousers beneath, and after the intermission a white silk gown resembling a night gown with a high collar, though he declared it a Chinese traveling costume.

The 10-day trip from Shanghai up 1000 miles of the Yangtze River, amid scenery which, for rocky grandeur, is often comparable to the impressive fjords of Norway, was shown by stereopticon views and movies and constituted a thrilling entertainment. For much of the way the river is a series of boiling rapids requiring a dexterity to navigate Chinese junks equal to that for which American Indians were noted on Western rivers.

Every section of the river shown had a new and wonderful feature—a village on a cliff, an adventure by a group of sturdy boatmen, or a picture of primi tive home life in that remote region.

The lecture will be repeated this afternoon, beginning at 2:15.

Globe Jan 13

BURTON HOLMES IN LECTURE ON CHINA

Amer 1-13

"Into China Through the Gorges of the Yantze," was the subject of Burton Holmes' copiously illustrated travelogue given at Symphony Hall before a large audience.

The talk was immensely interesting, and as usual Mr. Holmes began his journey at an hotel—this time at Shanghai—and talked of tea and tennis at a club, but he soon showed glimpses of the great river and the sights of Hangchow and Sooshow.

Next week Mr. Holmes' talk will be on "Unfamiliar Japan."

American Jan 13

"Unfamiliar Japan," Mr. Holmes' Subject

This last Summer, Burton Holmes enjoyed the unique distinction of following in the footsteps of Lafcadio Hearn with Mr. Hearn's son—Kazuo—as his fellow traveler and guide, to those delightful beauty-spots of Japan, about which Mr. Hearn wrote so charmingly. Mr. Holmes' colored views and original motion pictures, taken last Summer, will show this "Unfamliar Japan."

His journey in company with Mr. Hearn's son was a veritable pilgrimage to the far-away places and along the unbeaten paths of the tourist or conventional lecturer. Burton Holmes will give "Unfamiliar Japan" at Symphony Hall, on Friday evening, January 19, and Saturday afternoon, January 20. Amer 1-13

American Jan 13

HOLMES ON JAPAN

Adv 1/14

The travelogues to be given by Burton Holmes at Symphony Hall this week deals with Lafcadio Hearn's "Unfamiliar Japan." It is a departure from familiar lectures on that country, the story of an artistic and sentimental pilgrimage to the far-away and unfamiliar places where Hearn lived, loved and labored. Mr. Holmes' still pictures, beautifully colored, as well as the motion pictures taken last Summer, are among the finest in his entire collection.

Advertiser Jan 14

Burton Holmes

BURTON HOLMES

Burton Holmes will begin his 30 annual series of Travelogues in th city early in January. Last summ he visited Japan, Manchuria, Korea ar China, penetrating to the interior of tl latter country for many days journe up the Yangtze-Kiang, to and beyon There will be five Travelogues.

Herald Dec 17

BURTON HOLMES SOON

Burton Holmes begins his thirtieth annual series of Travelogues in this city in January. Last Summer, he visited Japan, Manchuria, Korea and China, penetrating to the interior of the latter country for many days' journey up the Yangtze-Kiang to, and beyond, the wonderful gorges of the Yangtze, which, he says, compare more than favorably with the stupendous glories of our own Grand Canyon of Arizona. Amer 12-16

There will be five Travelogues in Mr. Holmes' coming series, his circuit in the East consisting of Wednesday evenings at the Brooklyn Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Thursday evenings in Lowell, Mass.; Friday evenings and Saturday matinees at Symphony Hall, Boston, and Sunday evenings and Monday matinees at Carnegie Hall, New York City.

American Dec 16

Burton Holmes

Burton Holmes will begin his 30th season with a new series of photo-stories of travel about the middle of November. His subjects are the results of his travels in the Orient this past summer. Among other experiences, he achieved the distinction of being the first man to take a motion picture camera into the very heart of China in his journey up the Yangtze-Kiang.

Herald Oct 22

Burton Holmes to Give Five Travelogue

A series of five Travelogues by Burto Holmes is to be given at Symphony Hal the first of which will be held o Friday evening, Jan. 5, and also on Saturday afternoon, Jan. 6. Trans 12-23

So much which will have its far-reach ing effect upon the world is happening i the Orient, that Burton Holmes has ar ranged to give a series of Travelogues thi season, dealing exclusively with condition in Japan, China, Manchuria, Korea an many of the lands east of the Suez. During the past summer, he made motion pic tures in Asia, and also an interesting se of still pictures. He has taken motio picture photographs also in the very hear of China, up the Yangtze-Kiang.

Transcript Dec 23

Holmes to Show Far Eastern Scenes

Adv 12-24

So much is happening in the Orient at the present time, which will have its far-reaching effect upon the entire world, that Burton Holmes has arranged to give a series of travelogues dealing exclusively with conditions in Japan, China, Manchuria, Korea and many of the fascinating lands east of Suez. Last Summer he made new motion pictures in Asia, and also a new set of still pictures for his colored lantern slides. He was the first to take motion picture photographs in the very heart of China, up the wonderful and mysterious Yangtze-Kiang.

He is to give a series of five travelogues at Symphony Hall, beginning Friday evening, January 5, and Saturday afternoon, January 6.

Advertiser Dec 24

HOLMES TO SHOW PICTURES OF CHINA

Dec 1-?

As the second subject in his new series of photo stories of travel, Burton Holmes will take his audiences into the very heart of China, up the Yanktze-Kiang. This travelogue is a panorama of that most amazing waterway of the most populous of all the nations of the world—with striking close-ups of the teeming cities along its banks. The voyage is a sensational travel experience.

Mr. Holmes will give "Into China, Through the Gorges of the Yangtze-Kiang" at Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon.

BURTON HOLMES OPENS WITH "PEKIN"

Ad 12-31

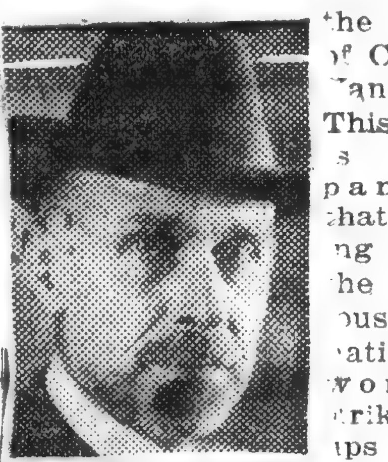
Burton Holmes' thirtieth annual series of photo-stories of travel opens with "Present-Day Pekin," which will be presented at Symphony Hall next Friday night and Saturday afternoon. Mr. Holmes shows this marvelous capital city of the Chinese casting off its shroud of traditions and preparing itself for the ordeals, progress and achievements of a modernized tomorrow.

Mr. Holmes was in Pekin last Summer and his motion pictures and colored lantern slides will show this picturesque and colorful city and its interesting people in present-day guise.

Advertiser Dec 31

With Burton Holmes on Trip Through China

Amer 1-6



Burton Holmes.

As the second subject in his series of finely illustrated photo-stories of travel, Burton Holmes will take his audiences into the very heart of China, up the Yangtze - Kiang. This travelogue is a pictured panorama of that most amazing waterway of the most populous of all the nations of the world — with striking close-ups of the teeming cities along its banks and a thrilling penetration of the great gorges, beyond which lies the isolated province of Sze-ch'uan. The voyage from Ichang to Chungking is a sensational travel experience unrivalled and unique. Burton Holmes will give "Into China, Through the Gorges of the Yangtze-Kiang" at Symphony Hall on Friday evening, January 12, and Saturday afternoon, January 13.

American Jan 6

MR. HOLMES NO DOUBT WOULD STRIP TO THE OCCASION

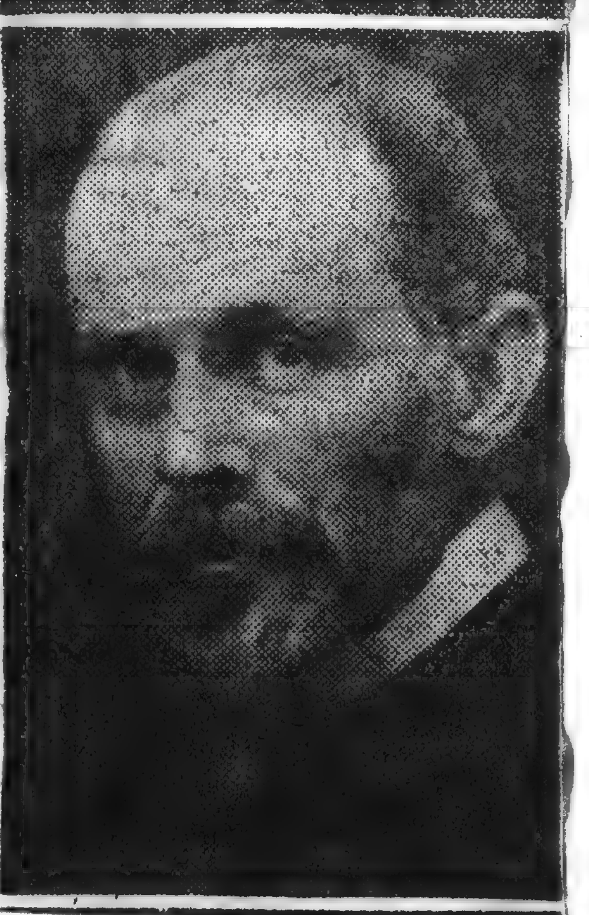
As the World Wags: Her 1-16

In Thursday's "Notes and Lines" you expressed apprehension as to the costume to be worn by Mr. Burton Holmes going through the gorges of the Yangtze in the sight of a Symphony Hall audience. What really should worry us is how he will be dressed, for the sake of "atmosphere" when he "travelocutes" on the natives of New Guinea.

ANTHROPOLOGIST.

Herald Jan 16

BURTON HOLMES, coming to Symphony Hall with his new Far East travelogues.



Burton Holmes will give his second Travelogue about China tomorrow night and Saturday afternoon in Symphony hall. Last week he talked in a white monkey jacket and black trousers, worn, as he said, by wily diplomats in Peking. The Lord only knows how he will be rigged tomorrow! Her 1-11

BURTON HOLMES' LECTURE

Post 1-13

A thousand-mile river journey of con stant surprises from the picture-lik Chinese cities of Hangchow and Soo chow, along the Yangtze Kiang, fron its less active lower stretches to gorge cut by "insane waters" through tre mendously tall and massive cliffs, wa the subject of the Burton Holmes Tra elogue at Symphony Hall last evening

Post Jan 13

Her 12/31

Herald Dec 31

BURTON HOLMES

This coming week Burton Holmes begins his 30th annual series of photo-stories of travel, for many years known as the travelogues, with "Present-Day Peking" as his subject. Mr. Holmes was there this last summer, and brings back a picture story of this wonderful city, now shaking off the shroud of the dead traditions of yesterday and taking on the new clothing of a progressive today. He will show an unusually large number of those artistically colored lantern slides, which were the basis of his original fame. Mr. Holmes will give "Present Day Peking" at Symphony Hall on Friday evening, Jan. 5 and Saturday afternoon, Jan. 6.

Post Dec 31

TRAVEL TALK ON CHINESE CAPITA

Burton Holmes Will Begin Thirtieth A nual Series of Lectures in Boston Ne Friday

Burton Holmes, veteran lecturer a traveller, will begin his thirtieth ann series of travelogues in Boston on Frid evening at Symphony Hall with an ill trated address on "Present-Day Pekin The lecture will be repeated Saturd afternoon. This travelogue is a portray of the present aspects of an ancient an astounding city, now, after many centu ies, responding to the call of modern lif Mr. Holmes shows this capital city of th Chinese casting off its shroud of trad tions and preparing itself for the ordeals, the progress and the achievements of a modernized tomorrow.

Burton Holmes Tr 12/30

Mr. Holmes was in Peking last summer and his motion pictures and lantern slides show the city and its interesting people in present-day guise.

Transcript Dec 30

BURTON HOLMES' LECTURE

The third Travelogue to be given by Mr. Burton Holmes in this city is on "Unfamiliar Japan." This Travelogue is a delightful departure from well-known lectures on that country. It is the story of an artistic and sentimental pilgrimage to the far-away and strange places where Lafcadio Hearn lived and loved and labored. With Hearn's eldest son, Kazuo, as fellow pilgrim, Mr. Holmes followed step by step, the literary trail along which that perfect master of prose toiled onward towards world-wide recognition. Mr. Holmes will give "Unfamiliar Japan" at Symphony Hall on Friday evening, Jan. 19 and Saturday afternoon, Jan. 20.

Post Jan 14

HOLMES SHOWS PEKING VIEWS

The Travelogue Lecturer Dresses in Garb of Diplomats in China

GIVES FIRST OF SERIES OF 5 TALKS

H 1-6

By PHILIP HALE

Burton Holmes gave the first of five travelogues, illustrated with motion and still pictures, last night in Symphony hall. He appeared on the platform in the summer evening dress sported by diplomats in Peking, for his subject was "Present-Day Peking." He wore a white monkey jacket, black trousers and a black cravat. Concerning this costume he had much to say. Thus, after darkness, when a spotlight was flashed upon him, he prepared the audience for the proper atmosphere to view the sights. He explained that he must not be mistaken for a waiter or a bellboy.

The railway train took the traveler over a very long bridge. There were views of the passing soldiers, some of whom no doubt turned bandits. Plains of plenty and famine were passed until at length the venerable city of Peking was entered.

Mr. Holmes was in Peking soon after the Boxer trouble. The contrasts between the city of 1901 and 1922 were interesting; the transformation in streets and in buildings; the survival of certain primitive methods, as that of watering the streets; the change in the manner of transportation. There were views of the Fourth of July celebration by the members of the American legation and the marines—donkey polo, polo proper, baseball, etc. There were many pictures of street and shop life, views of the great city taken from different points. The first part of the travelogue ended with a description of the Temple of Heaven.

In the second part hideous Tibetan idols were shown (the Tibetan priests have corrupted the religion of Buddha in Pekin); also the colossal wooden statue of Buddha. Worshippers had been snapped by the irreverent camera while they were at their devotions. The ramparts of the city were shown. Mr. Holmes told effectively the story of the great bell and the self-sacrifice of the bell-founder's daughter that the bell might be cast in perfection. He referred the audience to Lafcadio Hearn's "Soul of the Great Bell." He might have said that the idea of a maiden sacrificing herself to insure the casting of a bell or the completion of some public work was spread through old Europe; how, on the other hand, the murder of a workman in a fit of rage might bring a flaw in a bell as in Herman Melville's sombre and mysterious tale. The Forbidden City, the summer palace of the old empress, the great wall of which we read in Mitchell's geography—often a dime novel was behind the covers of that much thumbed school book—and the Ming tombs were the concluding subjects.

Much information was pleasantly conveyed, but at times it was not easy to hear clearly the lecturer's remarks.

This travelogue will be repeated this afternoon. The subject next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon will be "Into China Through the Gorges of the

Herald Jan 6

HOLMES SHOWS VIEWS OF PICTURESQUE PEKIN

Ad

Burton Holmes opened his 30th travelogue season at Symphony Hall last night with a fascinating talk on the varied wonders of Pekin, illustrated with motion pictures and "stills" in colors. The popular traveler and lecturer also showed, by way of contrast, some of the pictures he took in the Chinese capital in 1901. This travel-talk, which will be repeated this afternoon, is the first of a series dealing with the Orient of today.

Advertiser Jan 6

Burton Holmes' Lecture On "Unfamiliar Japan"

Glob 1-14

The travelogue to be given by Burton Holmes in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will be on Lafcadio Hearn's "Unfamiliar Japan." It is a departure from familiar lectures on that country, a story of an artistic and sentimental pilgrimage to the faraway and unfamiliar places where Lafcadio Hearn lived and loved and labored.

With Hearn's eldest son, Kazuo, as fellow pilgrim, Mr Holmes followed step by step the literary trail along which that perfect master of perfect prose toiled onward toward world-wide recognition. Mr Holmes' still pictures, beautifully and truthfully colored, as well as his motion pictures taken this last Summer, are said to be among the finest in his collection.

Globe Jan 14

Burton Holmes' Course Opens

Mon 1-6

Peking of today and 20 years ago were contrasted last evening by Burton Holmes in his lecture at Symphony Hall, opening his course of five talks to be given on Friday evenings and Saturday afternoons. Mr. Holmes described in considerable detail the rebuilding of the Temple of Heaven, which had been destroyed in the latter part of the nineteenth century after standing for centuries. During these centuries China had been stripped of the giant trees from which the great beams of the original building had been made, but the difficulty was overcome by sending to Oregon for a number of tall firs. There were many interesting pictures of the Forbidden City and of the Wall of China. Mr. Holmes wore for the occasion what he described as the official dress in Peking for diplomatic dances and dinners. He made many remarks that aroused smiles and even laughter in the large, interested audience. The lecture is to be repeated this afternoon. Next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon Holmes' subject will be "Into China Through the Gorges of the Yangtze."

Monitor Jan 6

THRILLS OF YANGTZE PICTURED BY HOLMES

Gl 1/13

The custom of Burton Holmes, the travelogue man, of appearing in Symphony Hall in costume appropriate to the subject of his lecture, when it is Oriental, is proving popular this season.

He gave his new lecture, "Into China Through the Gorges of the Yangtze," last evening in silk costumes such as are worn by high-class Chinese—first a gray skirt and black blouse over and lavender trousers beneath, and after the intermission a white silk gown resembling a night gown with a high collar, though he declared it a Chinese traveling costume.

The 10-day trip from Shanghai up 1000 miles of the Yangtze River, amid scenery which, for rocky grandeur, is often comparable to the impressive fjords of Norway, was shown by stereopticon views and movies and constituted a thrilling entertainment. For much of the way the river is a series of boiling rapids requiring a dexterity to navigate Chinese junks equal to that for which American Indians were noted on Western rivers.

Every section of the river shown had a new and wonderful feature—a village on a cliff, an adventure by a group of sturdy boatmen, or a picture of primitive home life in that remote region.

The lecture will be repeated this afternoon, beginning at 2:15.

Globe Jan 13

BURTON HOLMES IN LECTURE ON CHINA

"Into China Through the Gorges of the Yantze," was the subject of Burton Holmes' copiously illustrated travelogue given at Symphony Hall before a large audience.

The talk was immensely interesting, and as usual Mr. Holmes began his journey at an hotel—this time at Shanghai—and talked of tea and tennis at a club, but he soon showed glimpses of the great river and the sights of Hangchow and Sooshow.

Next week Mr. Holmes' talk will be on "Unfamiliar Japan."

American Jan 13

"Unfamiliar Japan," Mr. Holmes' Subject

This last Summer, Burton Holmes enjoyed the unique distinction of following in the footsteps of Lafcadio Hearn with Mr. Hearn's son—Kazuo—as his fellow traveler and guide, to those delightful beauty-spots of Japan, about which Mr. Hearn wrote so charmingly. Mr. Holmes' colored views and original motion pictures, taken last Summer, will show this "Unfamliar Japan."

His journey in company with Mr. Hearn's son was a veritable pilgrimage to the far-away places and along the unbeaten paths of the tourist or conventional lecturer. Burton Holmes will give "Unfamiliar Japan" at Symphony Hall, on Friday evening, January 19, and Saturday afternoon, January 20. Amer 1-13

American Jan 13

HOLMES ON JAPAN

Adv 1-14

The travelogues to be given by Burton Holmes at Symphony Hall this week deals with Lafcadio Hearn's "Unfamiliar Japan." It is a departure from familiar lectures on that country, the story of an artistic and sentimental pilgrimage to the far-away and unfamiliar places where Hearn lived, loved and labored. Mr. Holmes' still pictures, beautifully colored, as well as the motion pictures taken last Summer, are among the finest in his entire collection.

Advertiser Jan 14

[122]

In Japan With Holmes

Next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon in Symphony Hall Burton Holmes will present his illustrated travelogue, "Unfamiliar Japan," the third in his duplicate series in Boston.

Globe Jan 16

TAKES AUDIENCE THROUGH CHINA

He 1/13

Burton Holmes Shows Views of Gorges of the Yangtze

ARRAYS HIMSELF IN NATIVE COSTUMES

The subject of Burton Holmes's copiously illustrated travelogue last night in Symphony hall was "Into China Through the Gorges of the Yangtze." Of course Mr. Holmes began his journey at a hotel—this time at Shanghai—and talked of tea and tennis at a club, but he soon showed glimpses of the great river and the sights of Hangchow and Sooshow, homes of millionaires, tombs, lakes, images.

Not only the scenery; the life and manners of the people were described and pictured. Perhaps the chief feature of the travelogue was the journey through the gorges and the rapids, with the sight of the toiling junks, the dangers and the risks. Later, there were interesting views of the cities little known or even unknown by name to the great majority of the audience, cities of amazing commerce, cities swarming with inhabitants. China is a country in which even Americans who believe in the doctrine of "isolation" should be deeply interested, a country of a venerable civilization, of enormous possibilities. These travelogues treating of China, Japan and Manchuria should therefore attract more than ordinary attention.

Mr. Holmes is a shrewd observer and has an agreeable manner of imparting information. Last night to create the proper atmosphere—with the aid of a spotlight the program said—he was arrayed in two Chinese costumes.

The travelogue will be repeated this afternoon. Next week the subject will be "Unfamiliar Japan."

Herald Jan 13

HOLMES IN NATIVE DRESS

Lecturer Arrayed in Chinese Costume During His Talk on the Yangtze—'Little-Known Cities Pictured Trans 1/13

Burton Holmes gave his Symphony Hall audience last night a glimpse of a part of China which tourists seldom see. Last summer he journeyed up the Yangtze river, one of the greatest in that vast country, and though warned that nobody had been able to photograph with success the scenery in the gorges, he returned with views that are examples of photographic art.

Mr. Holmes again appeared in native Chinese dress, first in gray skirt and black blouse and later in a white silk gown, the Chinese travelling costume. In no part of the lecture, however, were the costumes to be seen in the photographs of the natives.

The trip up the 1000-mile river began with the sights of Hangchow and Soochow in beautifully colored views, and then followed 600 miles of monotonous river scenery until the great interior seaport of Hankow was reached. Here many foreigners live and conduct their business, pictures of them being shown. From there on, river scenery was interspersed by views of little cities until the steamer came into the great gorges and the rapids of the upper river, where Mr. Holmes was able to photograph natural wonders that strongly resembled the fjords of Norway.

The second portion of the lecture, much shorter than usual, was a continuation of river scenery and struggles with the rapids which the great junk fleet experiences today as in the last one thousand years. Finally, there was the city of Chungking, called the Chinese Constantinople, a port where the river level varies more than one hundred feet and where 1,000,000 Chinese live amid surroundings that seem unbelievable. Pictures of the Chinese and of their quarters led Mr. Holmes to say that two new commandments are needed: "Thou Shalt Smile!" and "Thou Shalt Not Grouch!"

Transcript Jan 13

FOR SERVICE MEN

Burton Holmes will give an "extra" travelogue, entitled "Three Decades of the Passion Play of Oberammergau" on Saturday afternoon, February 10, at Symphony Hall, for the benfit of our disabled ex-service men, now in hospitals, under the auspices of the Hospital Department of the Community Service of Boston, Inc. Am 1-20

American Jan 20

BURTON HOLMES

Burton Holmes proposes to tell of the modernizing influences at work in Korea and Manchuria next week. The former country, now known as "Chosen," in spite of Japanese influences, still retains its old-time quaintness and picturesqueness of customs, costumes and architecture.

Manchuria is a wonderful land of opportunity. Mr. Holmes' pictures show the results of the modernizing influences at work today in both of these countries. He will give "Modernizing Chosen and Manchuria," at Sympony Hall, on Friday evening, Jan. 26, and Saturday afternoon, Jan. 27. Am 1-20

American Jan 20

HOLMES DESCRIBES LIFE OF HEARN IN JAPAN

Gl 1-20

Scenes that lured Lafcadio Hearn to cast his lot among a people strange to him and the charm that bound the literary genius to the beauty spots of Japan were depicted last evening by Burton Holmes in Symphony Hall, in the third lecture of a series now in progress. Hearn's sympathies with the people of his adopted country and his understanding of their curious customs, their artistic endowments, their legends and mythology, were given, together with extracts from descriptions of Japan, written by Mr Hearn.

Scenes also showing the intimate assocaition of the writer with the people of Japan, his marriage to a native Japanese and his interesting Japanese family, from whom he was removed by death in his early manhood, was a tale interesting in itself. The lecture will be repeated this afternoon.

Globe Jan 20

BURTON HOLMES' LECTURE

Burton Holmes' fourth photo-story of travel to be given here this coming week is entitled "Modernizing Chosen and Manchuria," "Chosen" being the name by which Korea is known in the far east. This travelogue gives a surprising inlook through the open door of opportunity in the vast, rich land of the Manchus and an animated record of the incredible transformations effected under Japanese auspices, at Dairen and Mukden, and of the progress achieved in Seoul and other cities of the one time "Hermit Kingdom' of Korea. Mr Holmes will give "Modernizing Chosen and Manchuria" at Symphony Hall on Friday evening, Jan. 26, and Saturday afternoon, Jan. 27. He will give an "extra" travelogue entitled "Three Decades of the Passion Play of Oberammergau" on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 10, at Symphony Hall, for the benefit of our disabled ex-service men, now in hospitals, under the auspices of the Hospital Department of the Community Service of Boston, Inc. Post 1-21

Post Jan 21

HOLMES TALKS ON 'UNFAMILIAR JAPAN'

~~He 1-20~~

Quotes Much from Writings of Lafcadio Hearn

The subject of Burton Holmes's illustrated travelogue in Symphony hall last night was "Unfamiliar Japan.' The program stated that the travelogue would be "embellished" with quotations from the writings of Lafcadio Hearn; also that Mr. Holmes would wear the dress of a Japanese gentleman. (The rumor that he would appear as a Geisha girl was wholly unfounded).

Mr. Holmes naturally had much to say about Hearn's life and work in Japan. The audience became acquainted with his surviving family, his home, his tomb. In this travelogue Japan and Hearn were inseparable in the mind of Mr. Holmes, nor was the illustrated talk the less interesting or instructive. There were beautiful views in the second part, scenes not often portrayed or described in magazine articles, and throughout the travelogue there was the reminder of that singularly gifted man, that writer of exquisite English, who found in Japan the peace, the freedom, the field for meditation that he sought for vainly in the United States.

The travelogue will be repeated this afternoon. Next week the subject will be "Modernizing Chosen (Korea) and Manchuria."

Herald Jan 20

Burton Holmes on "Unfamiliar Japan"

"Unfamiliar Japan," through the eye and pen of Lafcadio Hearn, was the means employed by Burton Holmes at Symphony Hall last night to make his travelogue doubly attractive. Hearn loved Japan and so viewed its people and their customs with sympathetic understanding. The achievement of great respect as a professor in English literature at the Imperial University of Tokyo, the taking of a Japanese wife, the building of a Japanese home of the old picturesque type, the habit of frequenting many of the most interesting spots in this colorful island of little temples, little houses and quaint superstitions, combined with the genius of authorship, all together made Hearn a large and pure lens through which Mr. Holmes could depict a truly authoritative Japan. The travelogue is to be repeated this afternoon. Next week the subject will be "Modernizing Chosen and Manchuria."

Monitor Jan 20

BURTON HOLMES IN MANCHURIA TALK

An interesting travelogue on Manchuria and Chosen (Korea) was given by Burton Holmes, appearing in native costume, in Symphony Hall last night.

It was shown in motion and colored pictures how the Korean is being modernized, under Japanese policies. Holmes took his audiences to Dairen, the great port of Manchuria, Port Arthur, Mukden, Chang-Chun and Harbin, showing Japanese schools, hotels, the biggest open-cut coal mine in the world, iron mines and coke ovens. He also visited Seoul, or Keijo, the Korean capital; the White Buddha and scores of other points of interest. Trav 1-27

This travel talk is to be repeated this afternoon at 2:30. The subject next week will be "Great Sights East of Suez." An extra travelogue on the "Passion Play" will be given Saturday afternoon, Feb. 10, for the benefit of disabled war veterans now in hospitals.

Traveler Jan 27

KOREA LOSING ITS CHARM

Burton Holmes Tells His Audience to Hasten If They Want to Enjoy Old Scenes and Customs Trans 1/27

Burton Holmes went to Manchuria and Korea last summer and was surprised at the modernizing work of the Japanese. Korea, in particular, is fast losing its old time charm, and it will not be long before the visitor will fail to recognize the land which held so much interest for tourists for many years. Though Japanese atrocities and policies are a matter of controversy, Mr. Holmes did not refer to them. He saw much to admire in what they are doing.

First, the lecturer showed the port of Dairen in Manchuria, with its Pullman cars, country clubs, golf, baseball and metropolitan hotels. Then followed the thriving cities of Port Arthur, Moukden, Chang-Chun and Harbin. There were views of the greatest open-cut coal mine of the world, parks and boulevards, health resorts and street scenes, schools and hospitals, all of which revealed the modern spirit.

In Korea last summer's visit was wonderful by way of contrast. Numerous pictures taken on other visits were frequently thrown on the screen. There were glimpses of the Diamond mountains, Buddhist strongholds in the hills, the old Korean capital, now called Keijo, the new hotel, Seoul by trolley, ancient gates, the royal home of the former ruler, the imperial gardens and people of various types

Transcript Jan 27

KOREA AND MANCHURIA DESCRIBED BY MR HOLMES

Burton Holmes gave in Symphony Hall last evening the fourth of his interesting series of Travelogues. His subject was "Korea and Manchuria." With the aid of colored views and motion pictures he gave vivid descriptions of those far away lands and told what has been done for them by modern civilization. He said that while the dominating influences of the Japanese had brought about many changes, there was still much of the old-time quaintness in customs and costumes. Korea remains a land of mystical romance, ever of fascinating interest to the tourist from other countries. Gl 1-27

In Manchuria the changes brought about by the Japanese are really wonderful and the rich resources of the country are being rapidly developed, but there are still great opportunities for the investment of foreign capital, and this notwithstanding the restrictions of the Japanese. The modernizing influences have naturally accomplished more in the cities than in the country districts, but even in the latter there have been remarkable transformations. The many pictures shown by Mr Holmes were as interesting as they were informative.

The lecture will be repeated this afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Globe Jan 27

BURTON HOLMES LECTURE

Post 1-27

Burton Holmes, taking as his subject matter, "Modernising Chosen and Manchuria," delivered another of the pleasing and instructing travelogues in his present series at Symphony Hall last evening. Motion pictures and colored slides, the whole interpreted and illuminated by Mr. Holmes' talented comment, completed the programme. The lectures will be repeated this afternoon.

Post Jan 27

HOLMES LECTURING AT SYMPHONY HALL

Burton Holmes, taking as his subject matter, "Modernizing Chosen and Manchuria," delivered another of the pleasing and instructing travelogues in his present series at Symphony Hall. Motion pictures and colored slides, the whole interpreted and illuminated by Mr. Holmes' talented comment, completed the program. The lectures will be repeated this afternoon.

American Jan 27

BURTON HOLMES' LECTURE

Burton Holmes will close his 30th annual series of travelogues in this city the coming week with the most interesting subject of his entire course, "East of Suez." It is a brilliantly illuminative presentation of the world-famous things that are the objectives of every traveller in India and Burmah, Ceylon and Siam, the Malay States and other colorful countries of the radiant Far East. Mr. Holmes will give "East of Suez" at Symphony Hall on Friday evening, Feb. 2, and Saturday afternoon, Feb. 3. Mr. Holmes will also give an extra travelogue, entitled "Three Decades of the Passion Play at Oberammergau," at Symphony Hall on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 10, for the benefit of our disabled ex-service men now in hospital. Post 1-28

Post Jan 28

"EAST OF SUEZ"

"East of Suez" is the title of the travelogue with which Burton Holmes will close his season of photo-stories of travel at Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. The journey is through India, Burma, Ceylon, Siam, the Malay States and other colorful countries of the East. Mr. Holmes' colored views and motion pictures will make this travelogue a realistic substitute for a personal visit. Adv 1/28

Advertiser Jan 28

"East of Suez," Subject of Burton Holmes' Travelogue

Gl 1/28

Burton Holmes will close his 30th annual series of Travelogues in Symphony Hall this week with the most interesting subject of his entire course. "East of Suez" suggests delightful scenes, picturesque peoples, quaint and unusual architecture, as well as lovely tropic scenery. It is a brilliantly illuminative presentation of the world-famous things that are the objectives of every traveler in India and Burma, Ceylon and Siam, the Malay States and other colorful countries of the radiant Far East.

Mr Holmes will give an extra Travelogue, entitled "Three Decades of the Passion Play of Oberammergau," at Symphony Hall Saturday afternoon, Feb 10, for the benefit of disabled ex-service men now in hospital.

Globe Jan 28

O'Hara Swears His Next Trip to Far North Will Be With Burton Holmes

Post 1/25

That stuff is all right for those that like it. But ye scribe is one of those urban guys that takes his excitement from four-alarm fires and riots in the Park street subway. The next time we go to the Far North again, it will be with Burton Holmes at Symphony Hall, where plush seats are more comfortable than all-wool underwear. So that is that and these are those. Post 1-25

Post Jan. 25

EXTRA TRAVELOGUE

Burton Holmes is to give an extra travelogue, entitled "Three Decades of the Passion Play at Oberammergau," at Symphony Hall next Saturday afternoon. There will be no Friday evening travelogue this week. The Saturday afternoon lecture is to be given for the benefit of ex-service men now in hospitals here. Adv 2/4

Advertiser Feb 4

EXTRA TRAVELOGUE

Burton Holmes will give an "extra" travelogue, "Three Decades of the Passion Play of Oberammergau," at Symphony hall on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 10. There will be no Friday evening travelogue this week, as the Saturday afternoon lecture is to be given for the benefit of our wounded ex-service men now in hospital, the whole being given under the auspices of the hospital department of the Community Service of Boston, Inc. Motion pictures and colored views will be shown portraying the incidents of the three decades of the Passion Play. He 2-4

Herald Feb 4

In Japan With Holmes

Next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon in Symphony Hall Burton Holmes will present his illustrated travelogue. "Unfamiliar Japan," the third in his duplicate series in Boston.

Globe Jan 16

TAKES AUDIENCE THROUGH CHINA

Her 1/13

Burton Holmes Shows Views of Gorges of the Yangtze

ARRAYS HIMSELF IN NATIVE COSTUMES

The subject of Burton Holmes's copiously illustrated travelogue last night in Symphony hall was "Into China Through the Gorges of the Yangtze." Of course Mr. Holmes began his journey at a hotel—this time at Shanghai—and talked of tea and tennis at a club, but he soon showed glimpses of the great river and the sights of Hangchow and Sooshow, homes of millionaires, tombs, lakes, images.

Not only the scenery; the life and manners of the people were described and pictured. Perhaps the chief feature of the travelogue was the journey through the gorges and the rapids, with the sight of the toiling junks, the dangers and the risks. Later, there were interesting views of the cities little known or even unknown by name to the great majority of the audience, cities of amazing commerce, cities swarming with inhabitants. China is a country in which even Americans who believe in the doctrine of "isolation" should be deeply interested, a country of a venerable civilization, of enormous possibilities. These travelogues treating of China, Japan and Manchuria should therefore attract more than ordinary attention.

Mr. Holmes is a shrewd observer and has an agreeable manner of imparting information. Last night to create the proper atmosphere—with the aid of a spotlight the program said—he was arrayed in two Chinese costumes.

The travelogue will be repeated this afternoon. Next week the subject will be "Unfamiliar Japan."

Herald Jan 13

HOLMES IN NATIVE DRESS

Lecturer Arrayed in Chinese Costume During His Talk on the Yangtze—Little-Known Cities Pictured

News 1/13

Burton Holmes gave his Symphony Hall audience last night a glimpse of a part of China which tourists seldom see. Last summer he journeyed up the Yangtze river, one of the greatest in that vast country, and though warned that nobody had been able to photograph with success the scenery in the gorges, he returned with views that are examples of photographic art.

Mr. Holmes again appeared in native Chinese dress, first in gray skirt and black blouse and later in a white silk gown, the Chinese travelling costume. In no part of the lecture, however, were the costumes to be seen in the photographs of the natives.

The trip up the 1000-mile river began with the sights of Hangchow and Soochow in beautifully colored views, and then followed 600 miles of monotonous river scenery until the great interior seaport of Hankow was reached. Here many foreigners live and conduct their business, pictures of them being shown. From there on, river scenery was interspersed by views of little cities until the steamer came into the great gorges and the rapids of the upper river, where Mr. Holmes was able to photograph natural wonders that strongly resembled the fjords of Norway.

The second portion of the lecture, much shorter than usual, was a continuation of river scenery and struggles with the rapids which the great junk fleet experiences today as in the last one thousand years. Finally, there was the city of Chungking, called the Chinese Constantinople, a port where the river level varies more than one hundred feet and where 1,000,000 Chinese live amid surroundings that seem unbelievable. Pictures of the Chinese and of their quarters led Mr. Holmes to say that two new commandments are needed: "Thou Shalt Smile!" and "Thou Shalt Not Grouch!"

Transcript Jan 13

FOR SERVICE MEN

Burton Holmes will give an "extra" travelogue, entitled "Three Decades of the Passion Play of Oberammergau" on Saturday afternoon, February 10, at Symphony Hall, for the benfit of our disabled ex-service men, now in hospitals, under the auspices of the Hospital Department of the Community Service of Boston, Inc. Amer 1-20

American Jan 20

BURTON HOLMES

Burton Holmes proposes to tell of the modernizing influences at work in Korea and Manchuria next week. The former country, now known as "Chosen," in spite of Japanese influences, still retains its old-time quaintness and picturesqueness of customs, costumes and architecture.

Manchuria is a wonderful land of opportunity. Mr. Holmes' pictures show the results of the medernizing influences at work today in both of these countries. He will give "Modernizing Chosen and Manchuria," at Sympony Hall, on Friday evening, Jan. 26, and Saturday afternoon, Jan. 27. Amer 1-20

American Jan 20

HOLMES DESCRIBES LIFE OF HEARN IN JAPAN

Gl 1/20

Scenes that lured Lafcadio Hearn to cast his lot among a people strange to him and the charm that bound the literary genius to the beauty spots of Japan were depicted last evening by Burton Holmes in Symphony Hall, in the third lecture of a series now in progress. Hearn's sympathies with the people of his adopted country and his understanding of their curious customs, their artistic endowments, their legends and mythology, were given, together with extracts from descriptions of Japan, written by Mr Hearn.

Scenes also showing the intimate assocaition of the writer with the people of Japan, his marriage to a native Japanese and his interesting Japanese family, from whom he was removed by death in his early manhood, was a tale interesting in itself. The lecture will be repeated this afternoon.

Globe Jan 20

BURTON HOLMES' LECTURE

Burton Holmes' fourth photo-story c travel to be given here this comin week is entitled "Modernizing Chose and Manchuria," "Chosen" being th name by which Korea is known in th far east. This travelogue gives a sur prising inlook through the open door c opportunity in the vast, rich land of th Manchus and an animated record of th incredible transformations effecte under Japanese auspices, at Dairen an Mukden, and of the progress achieve in Seoul and other cities of the one time "Hermit Kingdom' of Korea. Mr Holmes will give "Modernizing Chose and Manchuria" at Symphony Hall o Friday evening, Jan. 26, and Saturda afternoon, Jan. 27. He will give a "extra" travelogue entitled "Three Dec ades of the Passion Play of Oberan mergau" on Saturday afternoon, Fel 10, at Symphony Hall, for the benefit c our disabled ex-service men, now i hospitals, under the auspices of th Hospital Department of the Communit Service of Boston, Inc. Post 1-21

Post Jan 21

HOLMES TALKS ON 'UNFAMILIAR JAPAN'

Her 1-20

Quotes Much from Writings of Lafcadio Hearn

The subject of Burton Holmes's illustrated travelogue in Symphony hall last night was "Unfamiliar Japan.' The program stated that the travelogue would be "embellished" with quotations from the writings of Lafcadio Hearn; also that Mr. Holmes would wear the dress of a Japanese gentleman. (The rumor that he would appear as a Geisha girl was wholly unfounded).

Mr. Holmes naturally had much to say about Hearn's life and work in Japan. The audience became acquainted with his surviving family, his home, his tomb. In this travelogue Japan and Hearn were inseparable in the mind of Mr. Holmes, nor was the illustrated talk the less interesting or instructive. There were beautiful views in the second part, scenes not often portrayed or described in magazine articles, and throughout the travelogue there was the reminder of that singularly gifted man, that writer of exquisite English, who found in Japan the peace, the freedom, the field for meditation that he sought for vainly in the United States.

The travelogue will be repeated this afternoon. Next week the subject will be "Modernizing Chosen (Korea) and Manchuria."

Herald Jan 20

Burton Holmes on "Unfamiliar Japan"

"Unfamiliar Japan," through the eye and pen of Lafcadio Hearn, was th means employed by Burton Holmes a Symphony Hall last night to make hi travelogue doubly attractive. Hear loved Japan and so viewed its peopl and their customs with sympatheti understanding. The achievement o great respect as a professor in Englis literature at the Imperial University o Tokyo, the taking of a Japanese wife the building of a Japanese home of th old picturesque type, the habit of frequenting many of the most interesting spots in this colorful island of littl temples, little houses and quaint superstitions, combined with the genius of authorship, all together made Hearn a large and pure lens through which Mr. Holmes could depict a truly authoritative Japan. The travelogue is to be repeated this afternoon. Next week the subject will be "Modernizing Chosen and Manchuria."

Monitor Jan 20

BURTON HOLMES IN MANCHURIA TALK

An interesting travelogue on Manchuria and Chosen (Korea) was given by Burton Holmes, appearing in native costume, in Symphony Hall last night.

It was shown in motion and colored pictures how the Korean is being modernized, under Japanese policies. Holmes took his audiences to Dairen, the great port of Manchuria, Port Arthur, Mukden, Chang-Chun and Harbin, showing Japanese schools, hotels, the biggest open-cut coal mine in the world, iron mines and coke ovens. He also visited Seoul, or Keijo, the Korean capital; the White Buddha and scores of other points of interest. Trav 1-27

This travel talk is to be repeated this afternoon at 2:30. The subject next week will be "Great Sights East of Suez." An extra travelogue on the "Passion Play" will be given Saturday afternoon, Feb. 10, for the benefit of disabled war veterans now in hospitals.

Traveler Jan 27

KOREA LOSING ITS CHARM

Burton Holmes Tells His Audience t Hasten If They Want to Enjoy Ol Scenes and Customs

Burton Holmes went to Manchuria and Korea last summer and was surprised a the modernizing work of the Japanese Korea, in particular, is fast losing its old time charm, and it will not be long befor the visitor will fail to recognize the lan which held so much interest for tourist for many years. Though Japanese atrocities and policies are a matter of contro versy, Mr. Holmes did not refer to them He saw much to admire in what they ar doing.

First, the lecturer showed the port of Dairen in Manchuria, with its Pullman cars, country clubs, golf, baseball and metropolitan hotels. Then followed the thriving cities of Port Arthur, Moukden, Chang-Chun and Harbin. There were views of the greatest open-cut coal mine of the world, parks and boulevards, health resorts and street scenes, schools and hospitals, all of which revealed the modern spirit.

In Korea last summer's visit was wonderful by way of contrast. Numerous pictures taken on other visits were frequently thrown on the screen. There were glimpses of the Diamond mountains, Buddhist strongholds in the hills, the old Korean capital, now called Keijo, the new hotel, Seoul by trolley, ancient gates, the royal home of the former ruler, the imperial gardens and people of various types

Transcript Jan 27

KOREA AND MANCHURIA DESCRIBED BY MR HOLMES

Burton Holmes gave in Symphony Hall last evening the fourth of his interesting series of Travelogues. His subject was "Korea and Manchuria." With the aid of colored views and motion pictures he gave vivid descriptions of those far away lands and told what has been done for them by modern civilization. He said that while the dominating influences of the Japanese had brought about many changes, there was still much of the old-time quaintness in customs and costumes. Korea remains a land of mystical romance, ever of fascinating interest to the tourist from other countries.

In Manchuria the changes brought about by the Japanese are really wonderful and the rich resources of the country are being rapidly developed, but there are still great opportunities for the investment of foreign capital, and this notwithstanding the restrictions of the Japanese. The modernizing influences have naturally accomplished more in the cities than in the country districts, but even in the latter there have been remarkable transformations. The many pictures shown by Mr Holmes were as interesting as they were informative.

The lecture will be repeated this afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Globe Jan 27

BURTON HOLMES LECTURE

Burton Holmes, taking as his subject matter, "Modernizing Chosen and Manchuria," delivered another of the pleasing and instructing travelogues in his present series at Symphony Hall last evening. Motion pictures and colored slides, the whole interpreted and illuminated by Mr. Holmes' talented comment, completed the programme. The lectures will be repeated this after-

Post Jan 27

HOLMES LECTURING AT SYMPHONY HALL

Burton Holmes, taking as his subject matter, "Modernizing Chosen and Manchuria," delivered another of the pleasing and instructing travelogues in his present series at Symphony Hall. Motion pictures and colored slides, the whole interpreted and illuminated by Mr. Holmes' talented comment, completed the program. The lectures will be repeated this afternoon.

American Jan 27

BURTON HOLMES' LECTURE

Burton Holmes will close his 30th annual series of travelogues in this city the coming week with the most interesting subject of his entire course, "East of Suez." It is a brilliantly illuminative presentation of the world-famous things that are the objectives of every traveller in India and Burmah, Ceylon and Siam, the Malay States and other colorful countries of the radiant Far East. Mr. Holmes will give "East of Suez" at Symphony Hall on Friday evening, Feb. 2, and Saturday afternoon, Feb. 3. Mr. Holmes will also give an extra travelogue, entitled "Three Decades of the Passion Play at Oberammergau," at Symphony Hall on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 10, for the benefit of our disabled ex-service men now in hospital. Post 1-28

Post Jan 28

O'Hara Swears His Next Trip to Far North Will Be With Burton Holmes

That stuff is all right for those that like it. But ye scribe is one of those urban guys that takes his excitement from four-alarm fires and riots in the Park street subway. The next time we go to the Far North again, it will be with Burton Holmes at Symphony Hall, where plush seats are more comfortable than all-wool underwear. So that is that and these are those. Post 1-25

Post Jan 25

EXTRA TRAVELOGUE

Burton Holmes is to give an extra travelogue, entitled "Three Decades of the Passion Play at Oberammergau," at Symphony Hall next Saturday afternoon. There will be no Friday evening travelogue this week. The Saturday afternoon lecture is to be given for the benefit of ex-service men now in hospitals here.

Advertiser Feb 4

EXTRA TRAVELOGUE

Burton Holmes will give an "extra" travelogue, "Three Decades of the Passion Play of Oberammergau," at Symphony hall on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 10. There will be no Friday evening travelogue this week, as the Saturday afternoon lecture is to be given for the benefit of our wounded ex-service men now in hospital, the whole being given under the auspices of the hospital department of the Community Service of Boston, Inc. Motion pictures and colored views will be shown portraying the incidents of the three decades of the Passion Play. He 2-4

Herald Feb 4

"EAST OF SUEZ"

"East of Suez" is the title of the travelogue with which Burton Holmes will close his season of photo-stories of travel at Symphony Hall next Friday evening and Saturday afternoon. The journey is through India, Burma, Ceylon, Siam, the Malay States and other colorful countries of the East. Mr. Holmes' colored views and motion pictures will make this travelogue a realistic substitute for a personal visit. Adv 1/28

Advertiser Jan 28

"East of Suez," Subject of Burton Holmes' Travelogue

Gl 1/28

Burton Holmes will close his 30th annual series of Travelogues in Symphony Hall this week with the most interesting subject of his entire course. "East of Suez" suggests delightful scenes, picturesque peoples, quaint and unusual architecture, as well as lovely tropic scenery. It is a brilliantly illuminative presentation of the world-famous things that are the objectives of every traveler in India and Burma, Ceylon and Siam, the Malay States and other colorful countries of the radiant Far East.

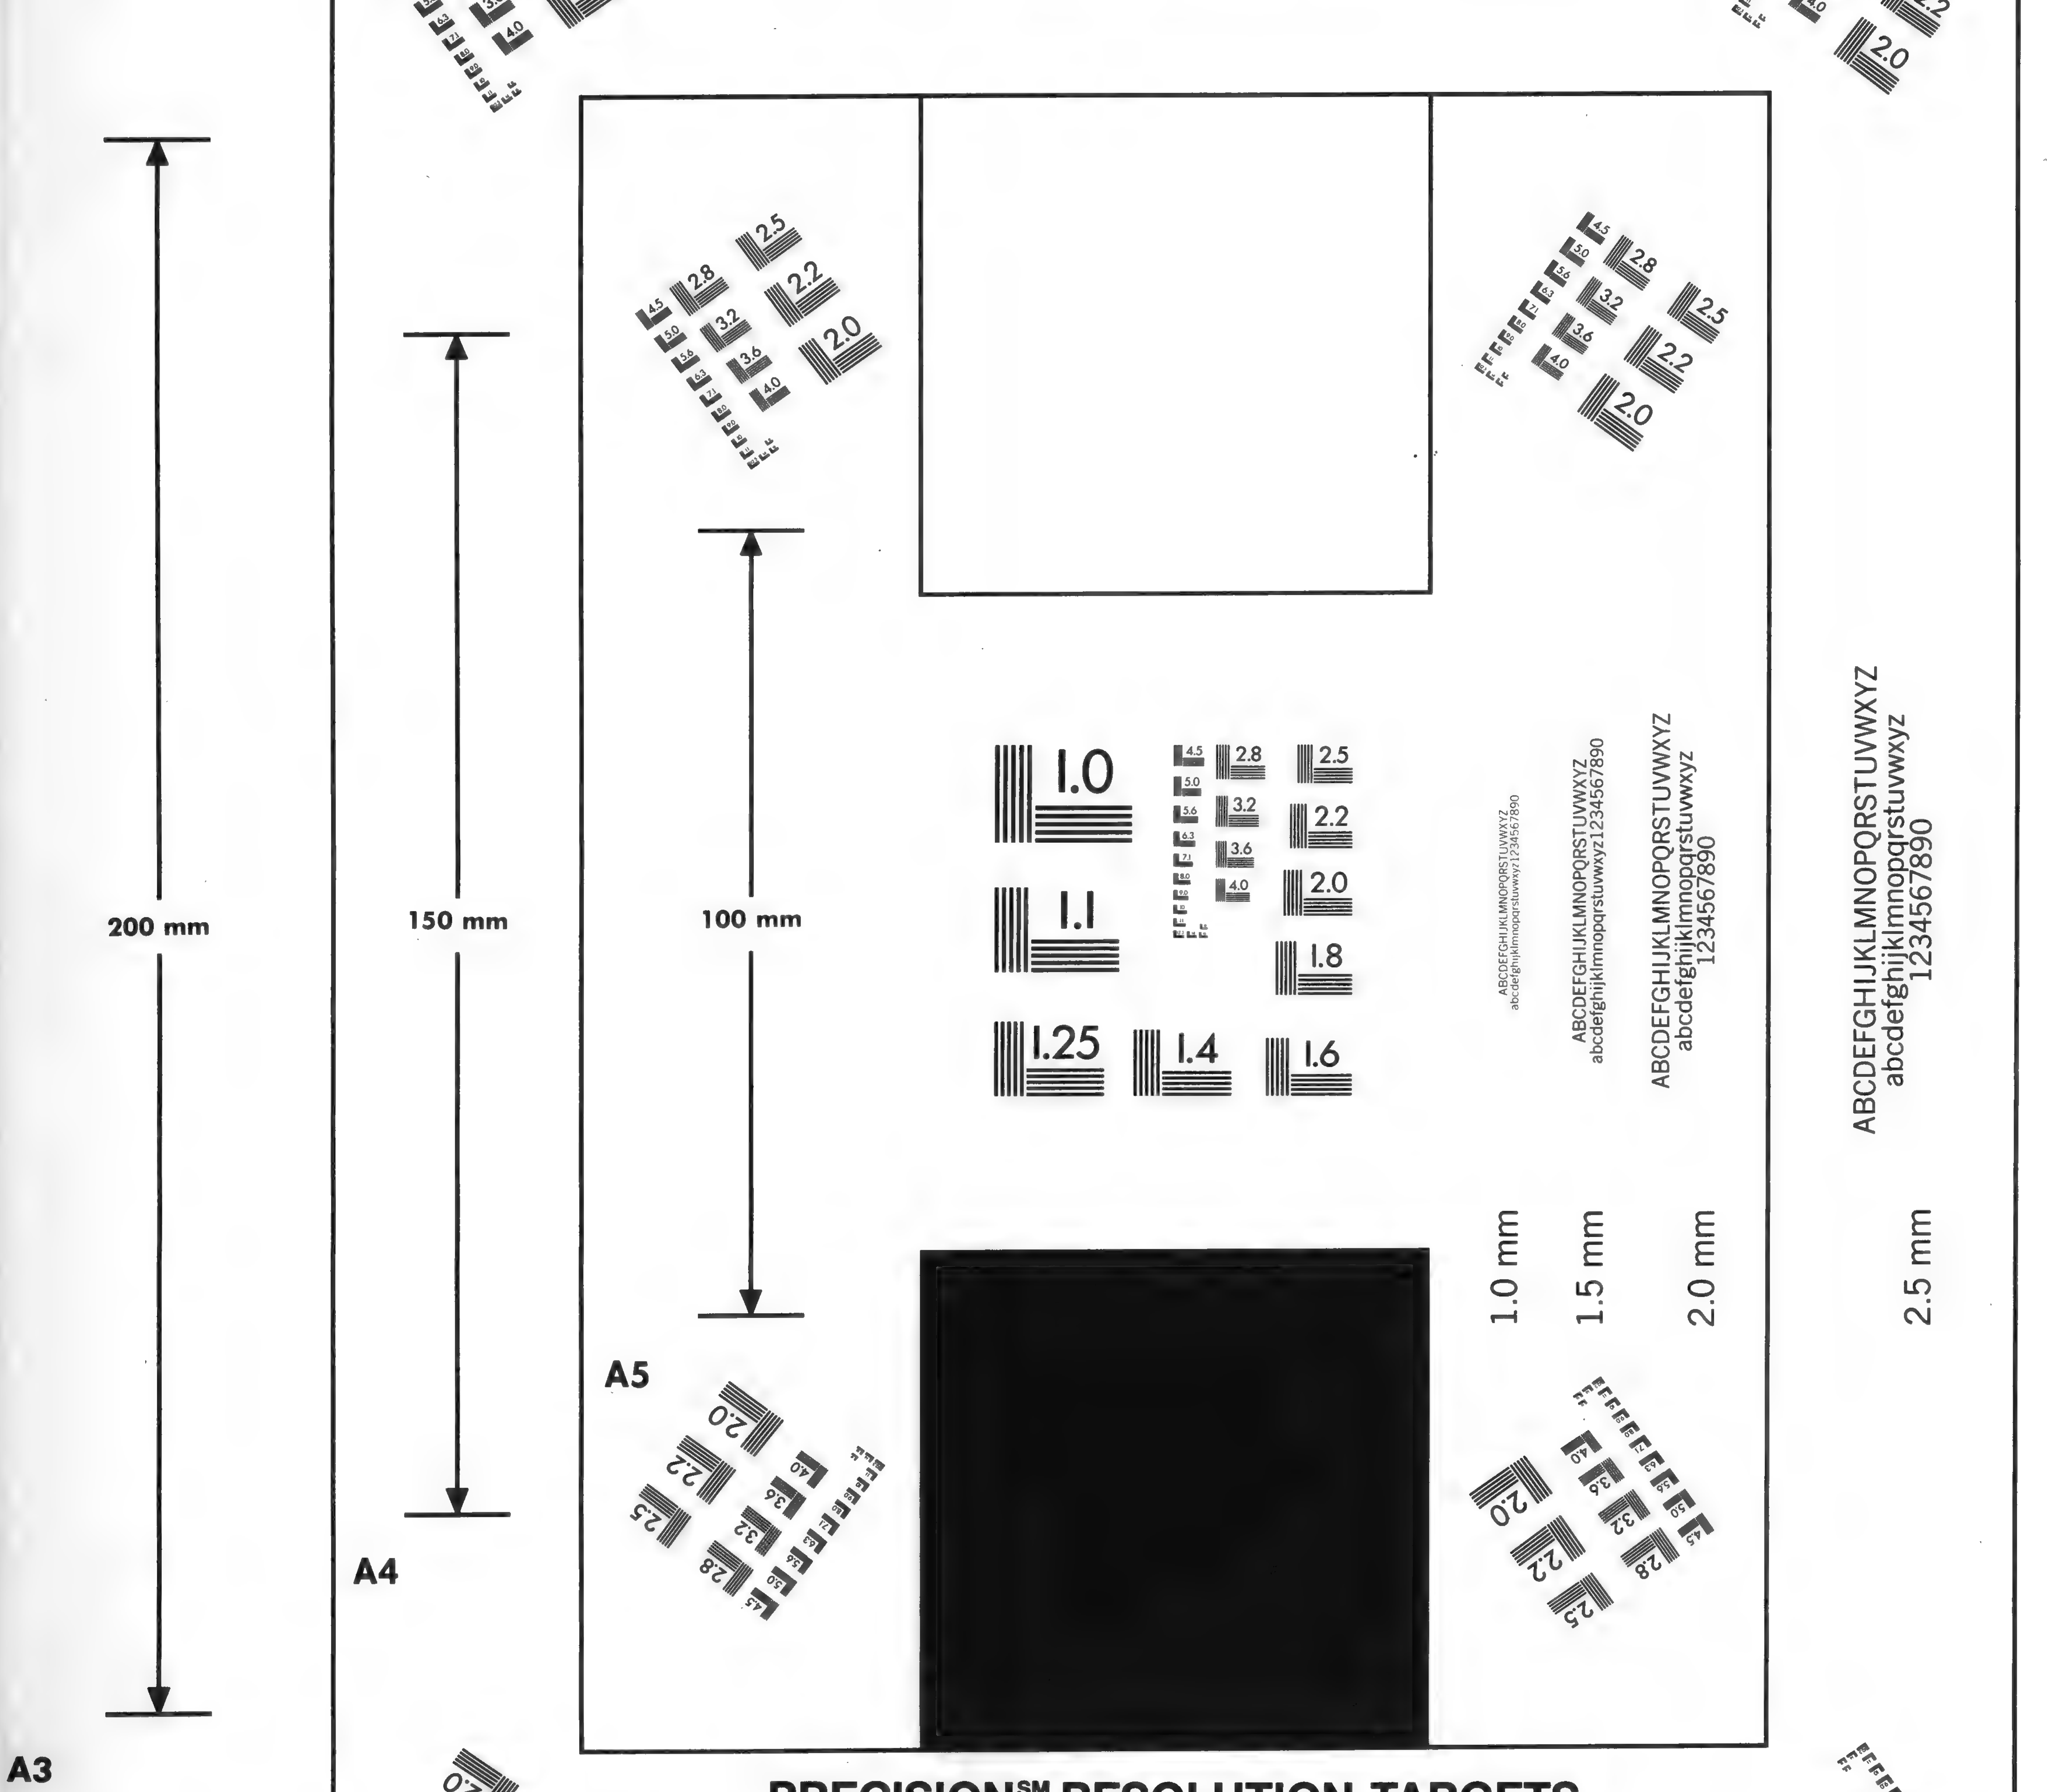
Mr Holmes will give an extra Travelogue, entitled "Three Decades of the Passion Play of Oberammergau," at Symphony Hall Saturday afternoon, Feb 10, for the benefit of disabled ex-service men now in hospital.

Globe Jan 28

[123]

REDUCTION
RATIO
13x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A5
A4
A3
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

Homer & Daughter Jan 14th 1923

HOMER CONCERT

Louise Homer and her daughter, Mrs. Louise Homer Stires, will give a joint concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 14

Advertiser Dec 24

Homer and Daughter

Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter, now Mrs. Louise Homer Stires, will give a joint concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, at 3:30.

Post Dec 24

Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, in Symphor Hall a concert of operatic numbers, mi cellaneous songs and, occasionally, duet sung by the elder and the younger Loui Homer. In the mother still glow the er bers of a rich and ranging contralto voi fanned by long experience and ready ski From the daughter comes a fresh sopro voice, light, bright and well directed young understanding.

Transcript Dec 23

HOMER AND DAUGHTER

Louise Homer, the great American contralto singer, and her daughter, now Mrs. Louise Homer Stires, will give a joint concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, at 3:30.

Traveler Dec 23

HOMER AND DAUGHTER

Madame Louise Homer and her aughter will each sing groups of ongs, and Louise Homer, Junior, a oprano, will blend her voice with he marvelous contralto tones of her other in duets, when the mother nd daughter give a concert together n Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, January 14th.

American Dec 30

HOMER AND DAUGHTER

Mme. Louise Homer and her daughte will each sing groups of songs, an Louise Homer, Jr., a soprano, will blen her voice with the contralto tones of he mother in duets when the mother an daughter give a concert together i Symphony hall, Sunday afternoon, Jar 14, at 3:30.

Trav 12-30

Traveler Dec 30

HOMER CONCERT

Madame Louise Homer and Louise Homer, her daughter, will appear together in a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 14. Songs by Sidney Homer, who is the father in this remarkabe family, will figure on the program.

Advertiser Dec 30

Mme. Louise Homer and Louise Homer Stires, her daughter, will appear together in a concert in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14.

Josef Hofmann will give a recital in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21.

Herald Dec 30

The elder and the younger Ho paired afresh at Symphony Hall on Su day afternoon, Jan. 14, will sing together "The Letter Duet" from Mozart's opera of "Figaro"; "The Gypsies" of Brahms; "The Night" of Chausson. Mme. Homer will range from airs of Gluck and Bach to her husband's songs; Miss Homer from "The Messiah" to a waltz of Strauss "vocalized."

Transcript Jan 6

Homer and Daughter

Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer, Jr., will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, at 3:30. They will sing solos and duets by Gluck, Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Handel, Sidney Homer, Hadley, Carpenter, Strauss, Carl Deis, Gounod, Ernest Chausson and F. Blangini.

Post Jan 7

Louise Homer's Program

Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer Jr, who sing songs separately and blend their soprano and contralto voices in a number of duets, will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan 14, at 3:30. Their program follows: Aria, "Che Faro Senza Euridice," from "Orfeo," Gluck; "My Heart Ever Faithful," Bach; duetto: "Sull' Aria," from "Le Nozze di Figaro," Mozart; "The Gipsies," Brahms; "Rejoice Greatly, O Daughter of Zion!" from "The Messiah," Handel; "The Eternal Goodness," Sidney Homer; "Botschaft," Brahms; "Time of Parting," Hadley; "Don't Ceare," Carpenter; "Voci di Primavera," Strauss; "Sing to [illegible]," and "Young Night Thought," [illegible] Homer; "Come Down to Kew," [illegible] "Bendemeer's Stream," Old [illegible] Wild Bells," Gounod; [illegible] "Per Val[illegible]

Globe Jan 7

THE HOMERS

Mme. Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, will give a concert in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The program will include songs by Gluck, Bach, Handel, Homer, Brahms, Hadley, Carpenter, Strauss, Deis, Gounod and duets by Mozart, Brahms, Chausson and Blangini.

Her 1-7

Herald Jan 7

SUNDAY afternoon, Jan. 14, in Symphony Hall, a concert of operatic numbers, miscellaneous songs and, occasionally, duets, sung by the elder and the younger Louise Homer. In the mother still glow the embers of a rich and ranging contralto voice fanned by long experience and ready skill. From the daughter comes a fresh soprano voice, light, bright and well directed by young understanding. Mme. Homer will range from old airs of Bach and Gluck to he husband's songs; Miss Homer from "The Messiah" to a waltz of Strauss "vocalized." Together they will be heard in duets of Mozart and Chausson.

Transcript Jan 6

HOMER AND DAUGHTER

A week from tomorrow afternoon, Jan. 14, in Symphony hall at 3:30, Louise Homer, the great American contralto, and her daughter, Louise Homer, Jr., soprano, will jointly give what may well be one of the most enjoyable concerts of the season.

Trav 1-6

Traveler Jan 6

HOMER RECITAL

A program replete with interest and beauty will be given by Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter,

Amer 1-13

Louise Homer.

Louise Homer-Stires, soprano, in their joint concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. Madame Homer will sing arias of Gluck, Bach, Saint Saens, and songs by Gounod, Chadwick, Deis and Sidney Homer. Louise Homer, Jr., will sing an aria from Handel's "Messiah," and songs by Brahms, Sidney Homer, Hadley, Carpenter and Strauss. The mother and daughter will sing a duet from Mozart's "Figaro," also "The Gipsies" by Brahms, "Venetian Boat Song" and songs by Chausson and Blangini.

Amer Jan 13

THE HOMERS TODAY

The following program will be presented by Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, at their concert in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30:

Her 1-14

Aria from "Orfeo" .... Gluck
My Heart Ever Faithful .... Bach
Louise Homer.
Duet from "Figaro" .... Mozart
The Gipsies .... Brahms
Mmes. Homer and Stires
Aria from "The Messiah" .... Handel
The Eternal Goodness .... Homer
Botschaft .... Brahms
Mme. Stires.
Aria from "Samson and Deliah" .... Saint-Saens
Ring Out, Wild Bells .... Gounod
Mme. Homer.
Time of Parting .... Hadley
Don't Ceare .... Carpenter
Voce di Primavera .... Strauss
Mme. Stires
Ballad of the Trees and the Master .... Chadwick
Come Down to Kew .... Deis
Young Night Thought; Sing to Me, Sing .... Homer
Mme. Homer.
Duets:
Venetian Boat Song .... Tosti

Herald 1-14

HOMERS SING TODAY

Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, will appear in joint concert at Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. They will sing solos and duets by Gluck, Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Handel, Sidney Homer, Saint-Saens, Gounod, Hadley, Carpenter, Strauss, Chadwick, Carl Deis and others.

Post 1-14

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30. Louise Homer, contralto, and Louise Homer-Stires, soprano.

Aria from "Orfeo," Gluck; "My Heart Ever Faithful," Bach; duet from "Figaro," Mozart; "The Gipsies," Brahms; aria from "The Messiah," Handel; "The Eternal Goodness," Sidney Homer; "Botschaft," Brahms; aria from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; "Ring Out, Wild Bells," Gounod; "Time of Parting," Hadley; "Don't Care," Carpenter; "Voce di Primavera," Strauss; "Ballad of the Trees and the Master," Chadwick; "Come Down to Kew," Carl Deis; "Young Night Thought" and "Sing to Me, Sing," Sidney Homer; "Venetian Boat Song," Tosti; "La Nuit," Ernest Chausson; "Per valli, per boschi," F. Blangini.

Globe Jan 14

Louise Homer and Daughter In Unusual Concert at Symphony Hall Sunday

LOUISE HOMER, CONTRALTO, AND LOUISE HOMER, SOPRANO

Tel 1-13

The following program, replete with interest and beauty, will be given by Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, soprano, in their joint concert in Symphony hall tomorrow afternoon, Jan. 14, at 3:30.

Madame Homer will sing arias of Gluck, Bach, Saint-Saens, and songs by Gounod, Deis, and Sidney Homer. Louise Homer Jr. will sing an aria from Handel's "Messiah," and songs by Brahms, Sidney Homer, Hadley, Carpenter and Strauss. The mother and daughter will sing a duet from Mozart's "Figaro," also "The Gipsies" by Brahms, Venetian Boat Song, and songs by Chausson and Blangini.

Telegram Jan 13

HOMERS HERE TODAY

Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer Stires, will appear in concert at Symphony Hall this afternoon. Each will sing two groups of solos, including classic and modern songs, and then the famous contralto and her daughter will sing several duets, one from "Figaro" and Brahms' "Gypsies," Tosti's "Venetian Boat Song" and other pieces by Chausson and Blangini.

Adv 1-14

Advertiser Jan 14

Paired Homers

Trans 1-13

Evidently the experiment, begun two seasons ago, has succeeded, and to Symphony Hall, for a third time, will come 'omorrow afternoon the elder and the younger Louise Homer for a concert of miscellaneous solo-pieces and occasional duets. In the mother still glow the embers of a rich and ranging contralto voice fanned by long experience and ready skill. From the daughter comes a fresh soprano voice, light, bright and well directed by young understanding. Mme. Homer will range from old airs of Bach and Gluck to h husband's songs; Miss Homer from "The Messiah" to a waltz of Strauss "vocalized." Together they will be heard in duets of Mozart and Chausson.

Transcript 1-13

DAUGHTER AND MOTHER SING

Post 1-15

Two Louise Homers Delight Audience at Concert

Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, soprano, gave a joint concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Miss Eleanor Scheib was the accompanist. There was a very large audience, including several hundred on the stage.

Chief interest in the concert centred on the reception that the audience accorded the daughter. It was a very enthusiastic one from the start, and due to her pleasing personality it increased in enthusiasm. The applause was very long for both singers, who added a good many solos and duets to the announced programme.

As to the singing, it may be said that, in spite of her declining powers, mother outshone daughter. To hear the mother is to listen to a gorgeous voice, that in spite of faults becoming more apparent with every concert, has still a rich and very warm quality, that has unusual range, and that has power of dramatic and dynamic contrasts. And Mme. Homer knows how to sing!

Louise Homer, the daughter, has a very pleasing voice, admirable in quality, but rather weak in spots. Her high tones are far from what they should be, for there was apparent a harshness and abruptness in these tones, and the singer was very obviously at great effort in producing them. On the other hand, in strictly coloratura passages she did very well, and when she made her high tones flute-like and staccato, she was very effective.

Post Jan 15

MME. HOMER AND DAUGHTER SING

Contralto and Soprano Appear in Pleasing Program

Her 1/15

A large audience that filled Symphony hall thoroughly enjoyed the effective recital by Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stiles, yesterday afternoon, with the following program:

"The faro senza Euridice" from "Orfeo," Gluck; "My Heart Ever Faithful, Bach, Louise Homer; "Sull' oria" from "Le Nosse Di Figaro," Mozart; Le Bohemiennes, Brahms, Louise Homer and Louise Homer-Stiles; "Rejoice Greatly, O Daughter of Zion!" from "The Messiah," Handel; The Eternal Goodness (Whittier), Sidney Homer; Botschaft, Brahms, Louise Homer-Stiles; "Printemps quit commence" from "Sampson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Ring out, Wild Bells, Gounod, Louise Homer; Time of Parting, Hadley; Don't Care, Carpenter; Voci di Primavera, J. Strauss, Louise Homer- Stires; Ballad of the Trees and the Master, Chadwick; Come Down to Kew, Carl Deis; Young Night Thought and Sing to Me, Sing, Sidney Homer, Louise Homer; Venetian Boat Song, Tosti; La nuit, Ernest Chausson; Per valli, per boschi, F. Blangini, Louise Homer and Louise Homer-Stires.

Those who went to hear Mme. Homer and her daughter were rewarded with an afternoon of delightful music; songs from different sources grouped in interesting fashion that gave an impression of freshness and variety.

Mme. Homer's rich contralto contrasts strikingly with the lilting soprano of her daughter and their duets were well-sung, especially Tosti's "Venetian Boat Song," included in their last group of songs.

Delightful as is Louise Homer-Stiles in songs that give her an opportunity to display her clear, bird-like notes, there is a distinct appeal in her songs that demand a lower, and more melodious range.

The audience was especially enthusiastic over "Ring Out, Wild Bells," sung by Mme. Homer and she responded graciously to the applause. Later both she and her daughter sang a number of encores, singing them with the warmth and charm that has endeared them to Boston audiences in past years.

Herald 1-15

LOUISE HOMER AND DAUGHTER GIVEN OVATION

Amer 1-15

By ZOE FABER

Mme. Louise Homer and Mme. Louise Homer-Stires, her daughter, gave a recital in Symphony Hall to a throng who derived an immense amount of pleasure from the singing. Every seat that could be placed on the stage was occupied.

The best that the program offered was the last group wherein mother and daughter sang three duets of which Tosti's "Venetian Boat Song" was the highlight. It cannot be gainsaid that the voices of the two Homers blend beautifully and that their work together bespeaks volumes in the matter of careful study with every detail of ensemble worked out with marked accuracy.

Of the voices individually, opinions differ. There were discernible some of the old, exquisitely beautiful tones of Louise Homer of a few years ago. Her audience was quite thrilled when she sang as an encore "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice."

Louise Homer-Stires has a rather sweet, clear, soprano, which she uses with the inimitable skill of her mother. The most excellent training is evident in everything she sings.

Innumerable encores were added to a program already sufficiently long—but not long enough at that for the audience.

Old Ways from Old Days

To Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon came again Mme. Homer and her daughter Louise Homer-Stires, joining their voices in a programme which, like that of their concert of two season ago, contained solo numbers for each of the singers, and duets as well. It is not the way of musical members of the family of Homer to look encouragingly upon the more "advanced" tendencies in the art to which they have devoted themselves, and the programme of yesterday's concert was characteristically conservative. A few pieces brought relief from dullness of respectability, the triteness of convention, or the flatness of mediocrity. Among these more enlivening pieces may be numbered the charming duet, "Sull' aria" from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," Brahm's "Botschaft" and Carpenter's "Don't Ceare" (both sung by Mrs. Stires), Chadwick's fine "Ballad of the Trees and the Master," Carl Deis's gay "Come Down to Kew" (from Mme. Homer), and a charming duet by Chausson, "La Nuit." The remaining numbers ranged from "classics" as Gluck's "Che Faro Senza Euridice," Bach's "My Heart Ever Faithful" and Handel's "Rejoice Greatly, O Daughter of Zion," to such unashamed triviality as Tosti's "Venetian Boat Song" and "Per valli, per boschi" (also a duet), by one Blangini. As a matter of course the name of Sidney Homer was not absent, and from his numerous compositions his daughter selected a suave setting of Whittier's "The Eternal Goodness," while his wife's choice fell upon the familiar "Sing to Me, Sing" and an innocent song to words by Stevenson—with the now inevitable "House That Jack Built" for a encore. . . . On the whole, an afternoon of mild pleasures, bringing with it a not unwelcome feeling of comfortable old-fashionedness, of remoteness from the strains and strivings of the troubling present. Born beneath the protecting shadow of the Victorian era, the elder Homers in their several musical ways are apparently content to cherish its traditions, and for the nonce their daughter seems well pleased to join hands with them.

At the outset of the concert—in the Air of Gluck so dear to her—it seemed that Mme. Homer's voice had lost much of its old-time beauty and power, and that there remained only her sure sense of style in such pieces. But as the afternoon progressed such impression was largely dispelled and, particularly in the songs of Chadwick and Deis and in her husband's pieces, there came vivid reminiscences of the Louise Homer of yesterday—one of the few great singers that this country has brought forth.

As in the days when she was known as Louise Homer, Jr., Mrs. Stires seems possessed of a pleasing soprano voice, but scarcely one that would have brought her prominence solely by reason of her own accomplishments. With her first piece of yesterday, the air from "The Messiah," came the impression that her voice had grown greatly in power and was distinctly bettered in quality; here her singing was not without a touch of brilliance and—though to less degree—the same was true of her performance of Johann Strauss's showy waltz-song, "Voices of Springtime." But in her other numbers Mrs. Stires's voice, as before, tended to thinness, while—to use a poor word in default of a better—her interpretation, though singularly winsome in lighter moods and undeeniably appealing through its honesty and unaffectedness, is still a little tentative, lacking in authority. Already Mrs. Stires has proved her ability to delight large audiences. She may yet develop into a singer of recognizable ability, and in that day she will have ceased to play the ingénue to her mother's "leading role." W. S. S.

Transcript Jan 15

Mme. Homer and Daughter at Symphony

Tel 1-15

By SYLVIA CUSHMAN

Louise Homer, contralto, and Louise Homer-Stires, soprano, gave a concert at Symphony hall, Sunday afternoon, the program being as follows:

Aria, "Che faro senza Euridice," from Orfeo, Gluck; "My Heart Ever Faithful," Back, Louise Homer; duetto, "Sull' Aria," from "Le Nozze Di Figaro," Mozart; "Le Bohemiennes," Louise Homer and Louise Homer Stires; aria from "The Messiah"; "The Eternal Goodness," Sidney Homer, "Botschaft," Brahms; Louise Homer-Stires; "Printemps qui commence," from Samson and Delilah; "Ring, Out, Wild Bells," Gounod, Louise Homer; "Time of Parting," Hadley; "Don't Care," Carpenter; "Voci di Primavera," J. Strauss, Louise Homer-Stires; "Ballad of the Trees and the Master," Chadwick; "Come Down to Kew," Carl Deis; "Young Night Thought," "Sing to Me Sing," Sidney Homer, Louise Homer; duets, "Venetian Boat Song," Tosti, "La Nuit," Chausson; "Per valli, per boschi," Blangini, Louise Homer and Louise Homer-Stires.

At such visit to Boston Mme. Homer seems to draw a larger and larger crowd. Yesterday afternoon the stage was packed as well as the auditorium. As radiant and blooming as ever Mme. Homer made her appearance at exactly 3:30 and received a tremendous ovation. A few moments later she was joined by her altogether charming daughter, Mme. Homer-Stires, who soon proved herself an artist in her own name. Her voice is soprano, strong and light at will. Her singing of "Don't Care" was a rare bit of artistry. It was not until this piece that she really came into her own. She also scored in "Voci di Primavera" by exquisite trills and coloratura singing. Louise Homer's daughter does not require the name of Homer to get by. Unknown, as Louise Stires, she could hold her own.

Of Madam Homer, there can be little said that has not already been offered in praise of this famous artist. As the years go by her voice grows in richness and tonal quality. The high head tones of the contralto are as beautiful as the low chest tones that thunder through the hall. Among the best of her selections were "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice" and "Ring Out, Wild Bells."

Homer & Daughter Jan 14th 1923

HOMER CONCERT

Louise Homer and her daughter, Mrs. Louise Homer Stires, will give a joint concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 14

Advertiser Dec 24

Homer and Daughter

Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter, now Mrs. Louise Homer Stires, will give a joint concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, at 3:30.

Post Dec 24

Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, in Symphony Hall a concert of operatic numbers, miscellaneous songs and, occasionally, duets sung by the elder and the younger Louise Homer. In the mother still glow the embers of a rich and ranging contralto voice fanned by long experience and ready skill. From the daughter comes a fresh soprano voice, light, bright and well directed young understanding.

Transcript Dec 23

HOMER AND DAUGHTER

Louise Homer, the great American contralto singer, and her daughter, now Mrs. Louise Homer Stires, will give a joint concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, at 3:30.

Traveler Dec 23

HOMER AND DAUGHTER

Madame Louise Homer and her daughter will each sing groups of songs, and Louise Homer, Junior, a soprano, will blend her voice with the marvelous contralto tones of her mother in duets, when the mother and daughter give a concert together in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, January 14th.

American Dec 30

HOMER AND DAUGHTER

Mme. Louise Homer and her daughter will each sing groups of songs, and Louise Homer, Jr., a soprano, will blend her voice with the contralto tones of her mother in duets when the mother and daughter give a concert together in Symphony hall, Sunday afternoon, Jan 14, at 3:30.

Traveler Dec 30

HOMER CONCERT

Madame Louise Homer and Louise Homer, her daughter, will appear together in a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 14. Songs by Sidney Homer, who is the father in this remarkabe family, will figure on the program.

Advertiser Dec 30

Mme. Louise Homer and Louise Homer Stires, her daughter, will appear together in a concert in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14.

Josef Hofmann will give a recital in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21.

Herald Dec 30

The elder and the younger Homer paired afresh at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, will sing together "The Letter Duet" from Mozart's opera of "Figaro"; "The Gypsies" of Brahms; "The Night" of Chausson. Mme. Homer will range from airs of Gluck and Bach to her husband's songs; Miss Homer from "The Messiah" to a waltz of Strauss "vocalized."

Transcript Jan 6

Homer and Daughter

Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer, Jr., will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, at 3:30. They will sing solos and duets by Gluck, Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Handel, Sidney Homer Hadley, Carpenter, Strauss, Carl Deis Gounod, Ernest Chausson and F. Blangini.

Post Jan 7

Louise Homer's Program

Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer Jr, who sing songs separately and blend their soprano and contralto voices in a number of duets, will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan 14, at 3:30. Their program follows: Aria, "Che Faro Senza Euridice," from "Orfeo," Gluck; "My Heart Ever Faithful," Bach: duetto: "Sull' Aria," from "Le Nozze di Figaro," Mozart; "The Gipsies," Brahms; "Rejoice Greatly, O Daughter of Zion!" from "The Messiah," Handel; "The Eternal Goodness," Sidney Homer; "Botschaft," Brahms; "Time of Parting," Hadley; "Don't Ceare," Carpenter; "Voci di Primavera," Strauss; "Sing to Me, Sing," and "Young Night Thought," Sidney Homer; "Come Down to Kew," Carl Deis; "Bendemeer's Stream," Old Irish; "Ring Out, Wild Bells," Gounod; "La Nuit," Ernest Chausson; "Per Valli, per Boschi," F. Blangini.

Globe Jan 7

THE HOMERS

Mme. Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, will give a concert in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The program will include songs by Gluck, Bach, Handel, Homer, Brahms, Hadley, Carpenter, Strauss, Deis, Gounod and duets by Mozart, Brahms, Chausson and Blangini.

Herald Jan 7

SUNDAY afternoon, Jan. 14, in Symphony Hall, a concert of operatic numbers, miscellaneous songs and, occasionally, duets, sung by the elder and the younger Louise Homer. In the mother still glow the embers of a rich and ranging contralto voice fanned by long experience and ready skill. From the daughter comes a fresh soprano voice, light, bright and well directed by young understanding. Mme. Homer will range from old airs of Bach and Gluck to he husband's songs; Miss Homer from "The Messiah" to a waltz of Strauss "vocalized." Together they will be heard in duets of Mozart and Chausson.

Transcript Jan 6

HOMER AND DAUGHTER

A week from tomorrow afternoon, Jan. 14, in Symphony hall at 3:30, Louise Homer, the great American contralto, and her daughter, Louise Homer, Jr., soprano, will jointly give what may well be one of the most enjoyable concerts of the season.

Traveler Jan 6

HOMER RECITAL

A program replete with interest and beauty will be given by Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter,

Louise Homer.

Louise Homer-Stires, soprano, in their joint concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. Madame Homer will sing arias of Gluck, Bach, Saint-Saens, and songs by Gounod, Chadwick, Deis and Sidney Homer. Louise Homer, Jr., will sing an aria from Handel's "Messiah," and songs by Brahms, Sidney Homer, Hadley, Carpenter and Strauss. The mother and daughter will sing a duet from Mozart's "Figaro," also "The Gipsies" by Brahms, "Venetian Boat Song" and songs by Chausson and Blangini.

Amer Jan 13

THE HOMERS TODAY

The following program will be presented by Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, at their concert in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30:

Aria from "Orfeo"..........Gluck
My Heart Ever Faithful..........Bach
Louise Homer.
Duet from "Figaro"..........Mozart
The Gipsies..........Brahms
Mmes. Homer and Stires
Aria from "The Messiah"..........Handel
The Eternal Goodness..........Homer
Botschaft..........Brahms
Mme. Stires.
Aria from "Samson and Deliah"..........Saint-Saens
Ring Out, Wild Bells..........Gounod
Mme. Homer.
Time of Parting..........Hadley
Don't Ceare..........Carpenter
Voce di Primavera..........Strauss
Mme. Stires
Ballad of the Trees and the Master..........Chadwick
Come Down to Kew..........Deis
Young Night Thought; Sing to Me, Sing..........Homer
Mme. Homer.
Duets:
Venetian Boat Song..........Tosti

Herald 1-14

HOMERS SING TODAY

Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, will appear in joint concert at Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. They will sing solos and duets by Gluck, Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Handel, Sidney Homer, Saint-Saens, Gounod, Hadley, Carpenter, Strauss, Chadwick, Carl Deis and others.

Post 1-14

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30. Louise Homer, contralto, and Louise Homer-Stires, soprano.

Aria from "Orfeo," Gluck; "My Heart Ever Faithful," Bach; duet from "Figaro," Mozart; "The Gipsies," Brahms; aria from "The Messiah," Handel; "The Eternal Goodness," Sidney Homer; "Botschaft," Brahms; aria from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; "Ring Out, Wild Bells," Gounod; "Time of Parting," Hadley; "Don't Care," Carpenter; "Voce di Primavera," Strauss; "Ballad of the Trees and the Master," Chadwick; "Come Down to Kew," Carl Deis; "Young Night Thought" and "Sing to Me, Sing," Sidney Homer; "Venetian Boat Song," Tosti; "La Nuit," Ernest Chausson; "Per valli, per boschi," F. Blangini.

Globe Jan 14

Louise Homer and Daughter In Unusual Concert at Symphony Hall Sunday

LOUISE HOMER, CONTRALTO, AND LOUISE HOMER, SOPRANO

Tel Jan 13

The following program, replete with interest and beauty, will be given by Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, soprano, in their joint concert in Symphony hall tomorrow afternoon, Jan. 14, at 3:30.

Madame Homer will sing arias of Gluck, Bach, Saint-Saens, and songs by Gounod, Deis, and Sidney Homer. Louise Homer Jr. will sing an aria from Handel's "Messiah," and songs by Brahms, Sidney Homer, Hadley, Carpenter and Strauss. The mother and daughter will sing a duet from Mozart's "Figaro," also "The Gipsies" by Brahms, Venetian Boat Song, and songs by Chausson and Blangini.

Telegram Jan 13

HOMERS HERE TODAY

Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer Stires, will appear in concert at Symphony Hall this afternoon. Each will sing two groups of solos, including classic and modern songs, and then the famous contralto and her daughter will sing several duets, one from "Figaro" and Brahms' "Gypsies," Tosti's "Venetian Boat Song" and other pieces by Chausson and Blangini.

Advertiser Jan 14

Paired Homers

Evidently the experiment, begun two seasons ago, has succeeded, and to Symphony Hall, for a third time, will come tomorrow afternoon the elder and the younger Louise Homer for a concert of miscellaneous solo-pieces and occasional duets. In the mother still glow the embers of a rich and ranging contralto voice fanned by long experience and ready skill. From the daughter comes a fresh soprano voice, light, bright and well directed by young understanding. Mme. Homer will range from old airs of Bach and Gluck to h husband's songs; Miss Homer from "The Messiah" to a waltz of Strauss "vocalized." Together they will be heard in duets of Mozart and Chausson.

Transcript 1-13

MME. HOMER AND DAUGHTER SING

Contralto and Soprano Appear in Pleasing Program

A large audience that filled Symphony hall thoroughly enjoyed the effective recital by Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stiles, yesterday afternoon, with the following program:

"The faro senza Euridice" from "Orfeo," Gluck; "My Heart Ever Faithful, Bach, Louise Homer; "Sull' oria" from "Le Nozze Di Figaro," Mozart; Le Bohemiennes, Brahms, Louise Homer and Louise Homer-Stiles; "Rejoice Greatly, O Daughter of Zion!" from "The Messiah," Handel; The Eternal Goodness (Whittier), Sidney Homer; Botschaft, Brahms, Louise Homer-Stiles; "Printemps quit commence" from "Sampson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Ring out, Wild Bells, Gounod, Louise Homer; Time of Parting, Hadley; Don't Care, Carpenter; Voci di Primavera, J. Strauss, Louise Homer- Stires; Ballad of the Trees and the Master, Chadwick; Come Down to Kew, Carl Deis; Young Night Thought and Sing to Me, Sing, Sidney Homer, Louise Homer; Venetian Boat Song, Tosti; La nuit, Ernest Chausson; Per valli, per boschi, F. Blangini, Louise Homer and Louise Homer-Stires.

Those who went to hear Mme. Homer and her daughter were rewarded with an afternoon of delightful music; songs from different sources grouped in interesting fashion that gave an impression of freshness and variety.

Mme. Homer's rich contralto contrasts strikingly with the lilting soprano of her daughter and their duets were well-sung, especially Tosti's "Venetian Boat Song," included in their last group of songs.

Delightful as is Louise Homer-Stiles in songs that give her an opportunity to display her clear, bird-like notes, there is a distinct appeal in her songs that demand a lower, and more melodious range.

The audience was especially enthusiastic over "Ring Out, Wild Bells," sung by Mme. Homer and she responded graciously to the applause. Later both she and her daughter sang a number of encores, singing them with the warmth and charm that has endeared them to Boston audiences in past years.

Herald 1-15

DAUGHTER AND MOTHER SING

Two Louise Homers Delight Audience at Concert

Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, soprano, gave a joint concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Miss Eleanor Scheib was the accompanist. There was a very large audience, including several hundred on the stage.

Chief interest in the concert centred on the reception that the audience accorded the daughter. It was a very enthusiastic one from the start, and due to her pleasing personality it increased in enthusiasm. The applause was very long for both singers, who added a good many solos and duets to the announced programme.

As to the singing, it may be said that, in spite of her declining powers, mother outshone daughter. To hear the mother is to listen to a gorgeous voice, that in spite of faults becoming more apparent with every concert, has still a rich and very warm quality, that has unusual range, and that has power of dramatic and dynamic contrasts. And Mme. Homer knows how to sing!

Louise Homer, the daughter, has a very pleasing voice, admirable in quality, but rather weak in spots. Her high tones are far from what they should be, for there was apparent a harshness and abruptness in these tones, and the singer was very obviously at great effort in producing them. On the other hand, in strictly coloratura passages she did very well, and when she made her high tones flute-like and staccato, she was very effective.

Post Jan 15

LOUISE HOMER AND DAUGHTER GIVEN OVATION

Jan 1-15

By ZOE FABER

Mme. Louise Homer and Mme. Louise Homer-Stires, her daughter, gave a recital in Symphony Hall to a throng who derived an immense amount of pleasure from the singing. Every seat that could be placed on the stage was occupied.

The best that the program offered was the last group wherein mother and daughter sang three duets of which Tosti's "Venetian Boat Song" was the highlight. It cannot be gainsaid that the voices of the two Homers blend beautifully and that their work together bespeaks volumes in the matter of careful study with every detail of ensemble worked out with marked accuracy.

Of the voices individually, opinions differ. There were discernible some of the old, exquisitely beautiful tones of Louise Homer of a few years ago. Her audience was quite thrilled when she sang as an encore "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice."

Louise Homer-Stires has a rather sweet, clear, soprano, which she uses with the inimitable skill of her mother. The most excellent training is evident in everything she sings.

Innumerable encores were added to a program already sufficiently long—but not long enough at that, for the audience.

Old Ways from Old Days

To Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon came again Mme. Homer and her daughter Louise Homer-Stires, joining their voices in a programme which, like that of their concert of two season ago, contained solo numbers for each of the singers, and duets as well. It is not the way of musical members of the family of Homer to look encouragingly upon the more "advanced" tendencies in the art to which they have devoted themselves, and the programme of yesterday's concert was characteristically conservative. A few pieces brought relief from dullness of respectability, the triteness of convention, or the flatness of mediocrity. Among these more enlivening pieces may be numbered the charming duet, "Sull' aria" from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," Brahm's "Botschaft" and Carpenter's "Don't Ceare" (both sung by Mrs. Stires), Chadwick's fine "Ballad of the Trees and the Master," Carl Deis's gay "Come Down to Kew" (from Mme. Homer), and a charming duet by Chausson, "La Nuit." The remaining numbers ranged from "classics" as Gluck's "Che Faro Senza Euridice," Bach's "My Heart Ever Faithful" and Handel's "Rejoice Greatly, O Daughter of Zion," to such unashamed triviality as Tosti's "Venetian Boat Song" and "Per valli, per boschi" (also a duet), by one Blangini. As a matter of course the name of Sidney Homer was not absent, and from his numerous compositions his daughter selected a suave setting of Whittier's "The Eternal Goodness," while his wife's choice fell upon the familiar "Sing to Me, Sing" and an innocent song to words by Stevenson—with the now inevitable "House That Jack Built" for a encore. . . . On the whole, an afternoon of mild pleasures, bringing with it a not unwelcome feeling of comfortable old-fashionedness, of remoteness from the strains and strivings of the troubling present. Born beneath the protecting shadow of the Victorian era, the elder Homers in their several musical ways are apparently content to cherish its traditions, and for the nonce their daughter seems well pleased to join hands with them.

At the outset of the concert—in the Air of Gluck so dear to her—it seemed that Mme. Homer's voice had lost much of its old-time beauty and power, and that there remained only her sure sense of style in such pieces. But as the afternoon progressed such impression was largely dispelled and, particularly in the songs of Chadwick and Deis and in her husband's pieces, there came vivid reminiscences of the Louise Homer of yesterday—one of the few great singers that this country has brought forth.

As in the days when she was known as Louise Homer, Jr., Mrs. Stires seems possessed of a pleasing soprano voice, but scarcely one that would have brought her prominence solely by reason of her own accomplishments. With her first piece of yesterday, the air from "The Messiah," came the impression that her voice had grown greatly in power and was distinctly bettered in quality; here her singing was not without a touch of brilliance and—though to less degree—the same was true of her performance of Johann Strauss's showy waltz-song, "Voices of Springtime." But in her other numbers Mrs. Stires's voice, as before, tended to thinness, while—to use a poor word in default of a better—her interpretation, though singularly winsome in lighter moods and undeeniably appealing through its honesty and unaffectedness, is still a little tentative, lacking in authority. Already Mrs. Stires has proved her ability to delight large audiences. She may yet develop into a singer of recognizable ability, and in that day she will have ceased to play the ingénue to her mother's "leading role." W. S. S.

Transcript Jan 15

Mme. Homer and Daughter at Symphony

Tel 1-15

By SYLVIA CUSHMAN

Louise Homer, contralto, and Louise Homer-Stires, soprano, gave a concert at Symphony hall, Sunday afternoon, the program being as follows:

Aria, "Che faro senza Euridice," from Orfeo, Gluck; "My Heart Ever Faithful," Back, Louise Homer; duetto, "Sull' Aria," from "Le Nozze Di Figaro," Mozart; "Le Bohemiennes," Louise Homer and Louise Homer Stires; aria from "The Messiah"; "The Eternal Goodness," Sidney Homer, "Botschaft," Brahms; Louise Homer-Stires; "Printemps qui commence," from Samson and Delilah; "Ring, Out, Wild Bells," Gounod, Louise Homer; "Time of Parting," Hadley; "Don't Care," Carpenter; "Voci di Primavera," J. Strauss, Louise Homer-Stires; "Ballad of the Trees and the Master," Chadwick; "Come Down to Kew," Carl Deis; "Young Night Thought," "Sing to Me Sing," Sidney Homer, Louise Homer; duets, "Venetian Boat Song," Tosti, "La Nuit," Chausson; "Per valli, per boschi," Blangini, Louise Homer and Louise Homer-Stires.

At such visit to Boston Mme. Homer seems to draw a larger and larger crowd. Yesterday afternoon the stage was packed as well as the auditorium. As radiant and blooming as ever Mme. Homer made her appearance at exactly 3:30 and received a tremendous ovation. A few moments later she was joined by her altogether charming daughter, Mme. Homer-Stires, who soon proved herself an artist in her own name. Her voice is soprano, strong and light at will. Her singing of "Don't Care" was a rare bit of artistry. It was not until this piece that she really came into her own. She also scored in "Voci di Primavera" by exquisite trills and coloratura singing. Louise Homer's daughter does not require the name of Homer to get by. Unknown, as Louise Stires, she could hold her own.

Of Madam Homer, there can be little said that has not already been offered in praise of this famous artist. As the years go by her voice grows in richness and tonal quality. The high head tones of the contralto are as beautiful as the low chest tones that thunder through the hall. Among the best of her selections were "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice" and "Ring Out, Wild Bells."

sings.

Innumerable encores were added to a program already sufficiently long—but not long enough at that, for the audience.

Homer + Daughter Jan 14th 1923

HOMER CONCERT

Louise Homer and her daughter, Mrs. Louise Homer Stires, will give a joint concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 14

Advertiser Dec 24

Homer and Daughter

Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter, now Mrs. Louise Homer Stires, will give a joint concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, at 3:30.

Post Dec 24

Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, in Symphony Hall a concert of operatic numbers, miscellaneous songs and, occasionally, duets sung by the elder and the younger Louise Homer. In the mother still glow the embers of a rich and ranging contralto voice fanned by long experience and ready skill. From the daughter comes a fresh soprano voice, light, bright and well directed by young understanding.

Transcript Dec 23

HOMER AND DAUGHTER

Louise Homer, the great American contralto singer, and her daughter, now Mrs. Louise Homer Stires, will give a joint concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, at 3:30.

Traveler Dec 23

HOMER AND DAUGHTER

Madame Louise Homer and her daughter will each sing groups of songs, and Louise Homer, Junior, a soprano, will blend her voice with the marvelous contralto tones of her mother in duets, when the mother and daughter give a concert together in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, January 14th.

American Dec 30

HOMER AND DAUGHTER

Mme. Louise Homer and her daughter will each sing groups of songs, and Louise Homer, Jr., a soprano, will blend her voice with the contralto tones of her mother in duets when the mother and daughter give a concert together in Symphony hall, Sunday afternoon, Jan 14, at 3:30.

Trav 1-3

Traveler Dec 30

HOMER CONCERT

Madame Louise Homer and Louise Homer, her daughter, will appear together in a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 14. Songs by Sidney Homer, who is the father in this remarkabe family, will figure on the program.

Advertiser Dec 30

Mme. Louise Homer and Louise Homer Stires, her daughter, will appear together in a concert in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14.

Josef Hofmann will give a recital in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Jan. 31.

Herald Dec 30

The elder and the younger Homer paired afresh at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, will sing together "The Letter Duet" from Mozart's opera of "Figaro"; "The Gypsies" of Brahms; "The Night" of Chausson. Mme. Homer will range from airs of Gluck and Bach to her husband's songs; Miss Homer from "The Messiah" to a waltz of Strauss "vocalized."

Transcript Jan 6

Homer and Daughter

Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer, Jr., will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, at 3:30. They will sing solos and duets by Gluck, Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Handel, Sidney Homer, Hadley, Carpenter, Strauss, Carl Deis, Gounod, Ernest Chausson and F. Blangini.

Post Jan 7

Louise Homer's Program

Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer Jr, who sing songs separately and blend their soprano and contralto voices in a number of duets, will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan 14, at 3:30. Their program follows: Aria, "Che Faro Senza Euridice," from "Orfeo," Gluck; "My Heart Ever Faithful," Bach; duetto: "Sull' Aria," from "Le Nozze di Figaro," Mozart; "The Gipsies," Brahms; "Rejoice Greatly, O Daughter of Zion!" from "The Messiah," Handel; "The Eternal Goodness," Sidney Homer; "Botschaft," Brahms; "Time of Parting," Hadley; "Don't Ceare," Carpenter; "Voci di Primavera," Strauss; "Sing to Me, Sing," and "Young Night Thought," Sidney Homer; "Come Down to Kew," Carl Deis; "Bendemeer's Stream," Old [illegible]; "Ring Out, Wild Bells," Gounod; "La Nuit," Ernest Chausson; "Per Valli per Boschi," F. Blangini.

Globe Jan 7

THE HOMERS

Mme. Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, will give a concert in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. The program will include songs by Gluck, Bach, Handel, Homer, Brahms, Hadley, Carpenter, Strauss, Deis, Gounod and duets by Mozart, Brahms, Chausson and Blangini.

Herald Jan 7

SUNDAY afternoon, Jan. 14, in Symphony Hall, a concert of operatic numbers, miscellaneous songs and, occasionally, duets, sung by the elder and the younger Louise Homer. In the mother still glow the embers of a rich and ranging contralto voice fanned by long experience and ready skill. From the daughter comes a fresh soprano voice, light, bright and well directed by young understanding. Mme. Homer will range from old airs of Bach and Gluck to her husband's songs; Miss Homer from "The Messiah" to a waltz of Strauss "vocalized." Together they will be heard in duets of Mozart and Chausson.

Transcript Jan 6

HOMER AND DAUGHTER

A week from tomorrow afternoon, Jan. 14, in Symphony hall at 3:30, Louise Homer, the great American contralto, and her daughter, Louise Homer, Jr., soprano, will jointly give what may well be one of the most enjoyable concerts of the season.

Trav 1-6

Traveler Jan 6

HOMER RECITAL

A program replete with interest and beauty will be given by Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter,

Amer 1-13

Louise Homer.

Louise Homer-Stires, soprano, in their joint concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. Madame Homer will sing arias of Gluck, Bach, Saint Saens, and songs by Gounod, Chadwick, Deis and Sidney Homer. Louise Homer, Jr., will sing an aria from Handel's "Messiah," and songs by Brahms, Sidney Homer, Hadley, Carpenter and Strauss. The mother and daughter will sing a duet from Mozart's "Figaro," also "The Gipsies" by Brahms, "Venetian Boat Song" and songs by Chausson and Blangini.

Amer Jan 13

THE HOMERS TODAY

The following program will be presented by Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, at their concert in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30:

Her 1-14

Aria from "Orfeo" .... Gluck
My Heart Ever Faithful .... Bach
Louise Homer.

Duet from "Figaro" .... Mozart
The Gipsies .... Brahms
Mmes. Homer and Stires

Aria from "The Messiah" .... Handel
The Eternal Goodness .... Homer
Botschaft .... Brahms
Mme. Stires.

Aria from "Samson and Deliah" Saint-Saens
Ring Out, Wild Bells .... Gounod
Mme. Homer.

Time of Parting .... Hadley
Don't Ceare .... Carpenter
Voce di Primavera .... Strauss
Mme. Stires

Ballad of the Trees and the Master Chadwick
Come Down to Kew .... Deis
Young Night Thought; Sing to Me, Sing Homer
Mme. Homer.

Duets:
Venetian Boat Song .... Tosti

Herald 1-14

HOMERS SING TODAY

Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, will appear in joint concert at Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. They will sing solos and duets by Gluck, Bach, Mozart, Brahms, Handel, Sidney Homer, Saint-Saens, Gounod, Hadley, Carpenter, Strauss, Chadwick, Carl Deis and others.

Post 1-14

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30. Louise Homer, contralto, and Louise Homer-Stires, soprano.

Aria from "Orfeo," Gluck; "My Heart Ever Faithful," Bach; duet from "Figaro," Mozart; "The Gipsies," Brahms; aria from "The Messiah," Handel; "The Eternal Goodness," Sidney Homer; "Botschaft," Brahms; aria from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; "Ring Out, Wild Bells," Gounod; "Time of Parting," Hadley; "Don't Care," Carpenter; "Voce di Primavera," Strauss; "Ballad of the Trees and the Master," Chadwick; "Come Down to Kew," Carl Deis; "Young Night Thought" and "Sing to Me, Sing," Sidney Homer; "Venetian Boat Song," Tosti; "La Nuit," Ernest Chausson; "Per valli, per boschi," F. Blangini.

Globe Jan 14

Louise Homer and Daughter In Unusual Concert at Symphony Hall Sunday

LOUISE HOMER, CONTRALTO, AND LOUISE HOMER, SOPRANO

Tel 1-13

The following program, replete with interest and beauty, will be given by Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, soprano, in their joint concert in Symphony hall tomorrow afternoon, Jan. 14, at 3:30.

Madame Homer will sing arias of Gluck, Bach, Saint-Saens, and songs by Gounod, Deis, and Sidney Homer. Louise Homer Jr. will sing an aria from Handel's "Messiah," and songs by Brahms, Sidney Homer, Hadley, Carpenter and Strauss. The mother and daughter will sing a duet from Mozart's "Figaro," also "The Gipsies" by Brahms, Venetian Boat Song, and songs by Chausson and Blangini.

Telegram Jan 13

HOMERS HERE TODAY

Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer Stires, will appear in concert at Symphony Hall this afternoon. Each will sing two groups of solos, including classic and modern songs, and then the famous contralto and her daughter will sing several duets, one from "Figaro" and Brahms' "Gypsies," Tosti's "Venetian Boat Song" and other pieces by Chausson and Blangini.

Advertiser Jan 14

Paired Homers

Trans 1-13

Evidently the experiment, begun two seasons ago, has succeeded, and to Symphony Hall, for a third time, will come tomorrow afternoon the elder and the younger Louise Homer for a concert of miscellaneous solo-pieces and occasional duets. In the mother still glow the embers of a rich and ranging contralto voice fanned by long experience and ready skill. From the daughter comes a fresh soprano voice, light, bright and well directed by young understanding. Mme. Homer will range from old airs of Bach and Gluck to her husband's songs; Miss Homer from "The Messiah" to a waltz of Strauss "vocalized." Together they will be heard in duets of Mozart and Chausson.

Transcript 1-13

MME. HOMER AND DAUGHTER SING

Contralto and Soprano Appear in Pleasing Program

A large audience that filled Symphony hall thoroughly enjoyed the effective recital by Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stiles, yesterday afternoon, with the following program:

"The faro senza Euridice" from "Orfeo," Gluck; "My Heart Ever Faithful, Bach, Louise Homer; "Sull' oria" from "Le Nozze Di Figaro," Mozart; Le Bohemiennes, Brahms, Louise Homer and Louise Homer-Stiles; "Rejoice Greatly, O Daughter of Zion!" from "The Messiah," Handel; The Eternal Goodness (Whittier), Sidney Homer; Botschaft, Brahms, Louise Homer-Stiles; "Printemps quit commence" from "Sampson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Ring out, Wild Bells, Gounod, Louise Homer; Time of Parting, Hadley; Don't Care, Carpenter; Voci di Primavera, J. Strauss, Louise Homer- Stires; Ballad of the Trees and the Master, Chadwick; Come Down to Kew, Carl Deis; Young Night Thought and Sing to Me, Sing, Sidney Homer, Louise Homer; Venetian Boat Song, Tosti; La nuit, Ernest Chausson; Per

Herald 1-15

DAUGHTER AND MOTHER SING

Two Louise Homers Delight Audience at Concert

Louise Homer, contralto, and her daughter, Louise Homer-Stires, soprano, gave a joint concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. Miss Eleanor Scheib was the accompanist. There was a very large audience, including several hundred on the stage.

Chief interest in the concert centred on the reception that the audience accorded the daughter. It was a very enthusiastic one from the start, and due to her pleasing personality it increased in enthusiasm. The applause was very long for both singers, who added a good many solos and duets to the announced programme.

As to the singing, it may be said that, in spite of her declining powers, mother outshone daughter. To hear the mother is to listen to a gorgeous voice, that in spite of faults becoming more apparent with every concert, has still a rich and very warm quality, that has unusual range, and that has power of dramatic and dynamic contrasts. And Mme. Homer knows how to sing!

Louise Homer, the daughter, has a very pleasing voice, admirable in quality, but rather weak in spots. Her high tones are far from what they should be, for there was apparent a harshness and abruptness in these tones, and the singer was very obviously at great effort in producing them. On the other hand, in strictly coloratura passages she did very well, and when she made her high tones flute-like and staccato she was very effective.

American Jan 15

Old Ways from Old Days

To Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon came again Mme. Homer and her daughter Louise Homer-Stires, joining their voices in a programme which, like that of their concert of two season ago, contained solo numbers for each of the singers, and duets as well. It is not the way of musical members of the family of Homer to look encouragingly upon the more "advanced" tendencies in the art to which they have devoted themselves, and the programme of yesterday's concert was characteristically conservative. A few pieces brought relief from dullness of respectability, the triteness of convention, or the flatness of mediocrity. Among these more enlivening pieces may be numbered the charming duet, "Sull' aria" from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," Brahm's "Botschaft" and Carpenter's "Don't Ceare" (both sung by Mrs. Stires), Chadwick's fine "Ballad of the Trees and the Master," Carl Deis's gay "Come Down to Kew" (from Mme. Homer), and a charming duet by Chausson, "La Nuit." The remaining numbers ranged from "classics" as Gluck's "Che Faro Senza Euridice," Bach's "My Heart Ever Faithful" and Handel's "Rejoice Greatly, O Daughter of Zion," to such unashamed triviality as Tosti's "Venetian Boat Song" and "Per valli, per boschi" (also a duet), by one Blangini. As a matter of course the name of Sidney Homer was not absent, and from his numerous compositions his daughter selected a suave setting of Whittier's "The Eternal Goodness," while his wife's choice fell upon the

Telegram Jan 13

LOUISE HOMER HEARD IN RECITAL WITH DAUGHTER

Louise Homer, the noted contralto, who has been a special favorite with many in this city ever since she lived here years ago, gave a joint recital with her daughter at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. There was a very large and appreciative audience, seats on the stage being needed, and extra numbers numerous. The inclusion on the program of several numbers by Sidney Homer, husband and father respectively of the two singers, made the concert a sort of family affair.

The younger singer, who before she became Mrs Stires, was also Louise Homer, is a soprano, so that duets between mother and daughter were musically feasible yesterday, and particularly appreciated by the audience.

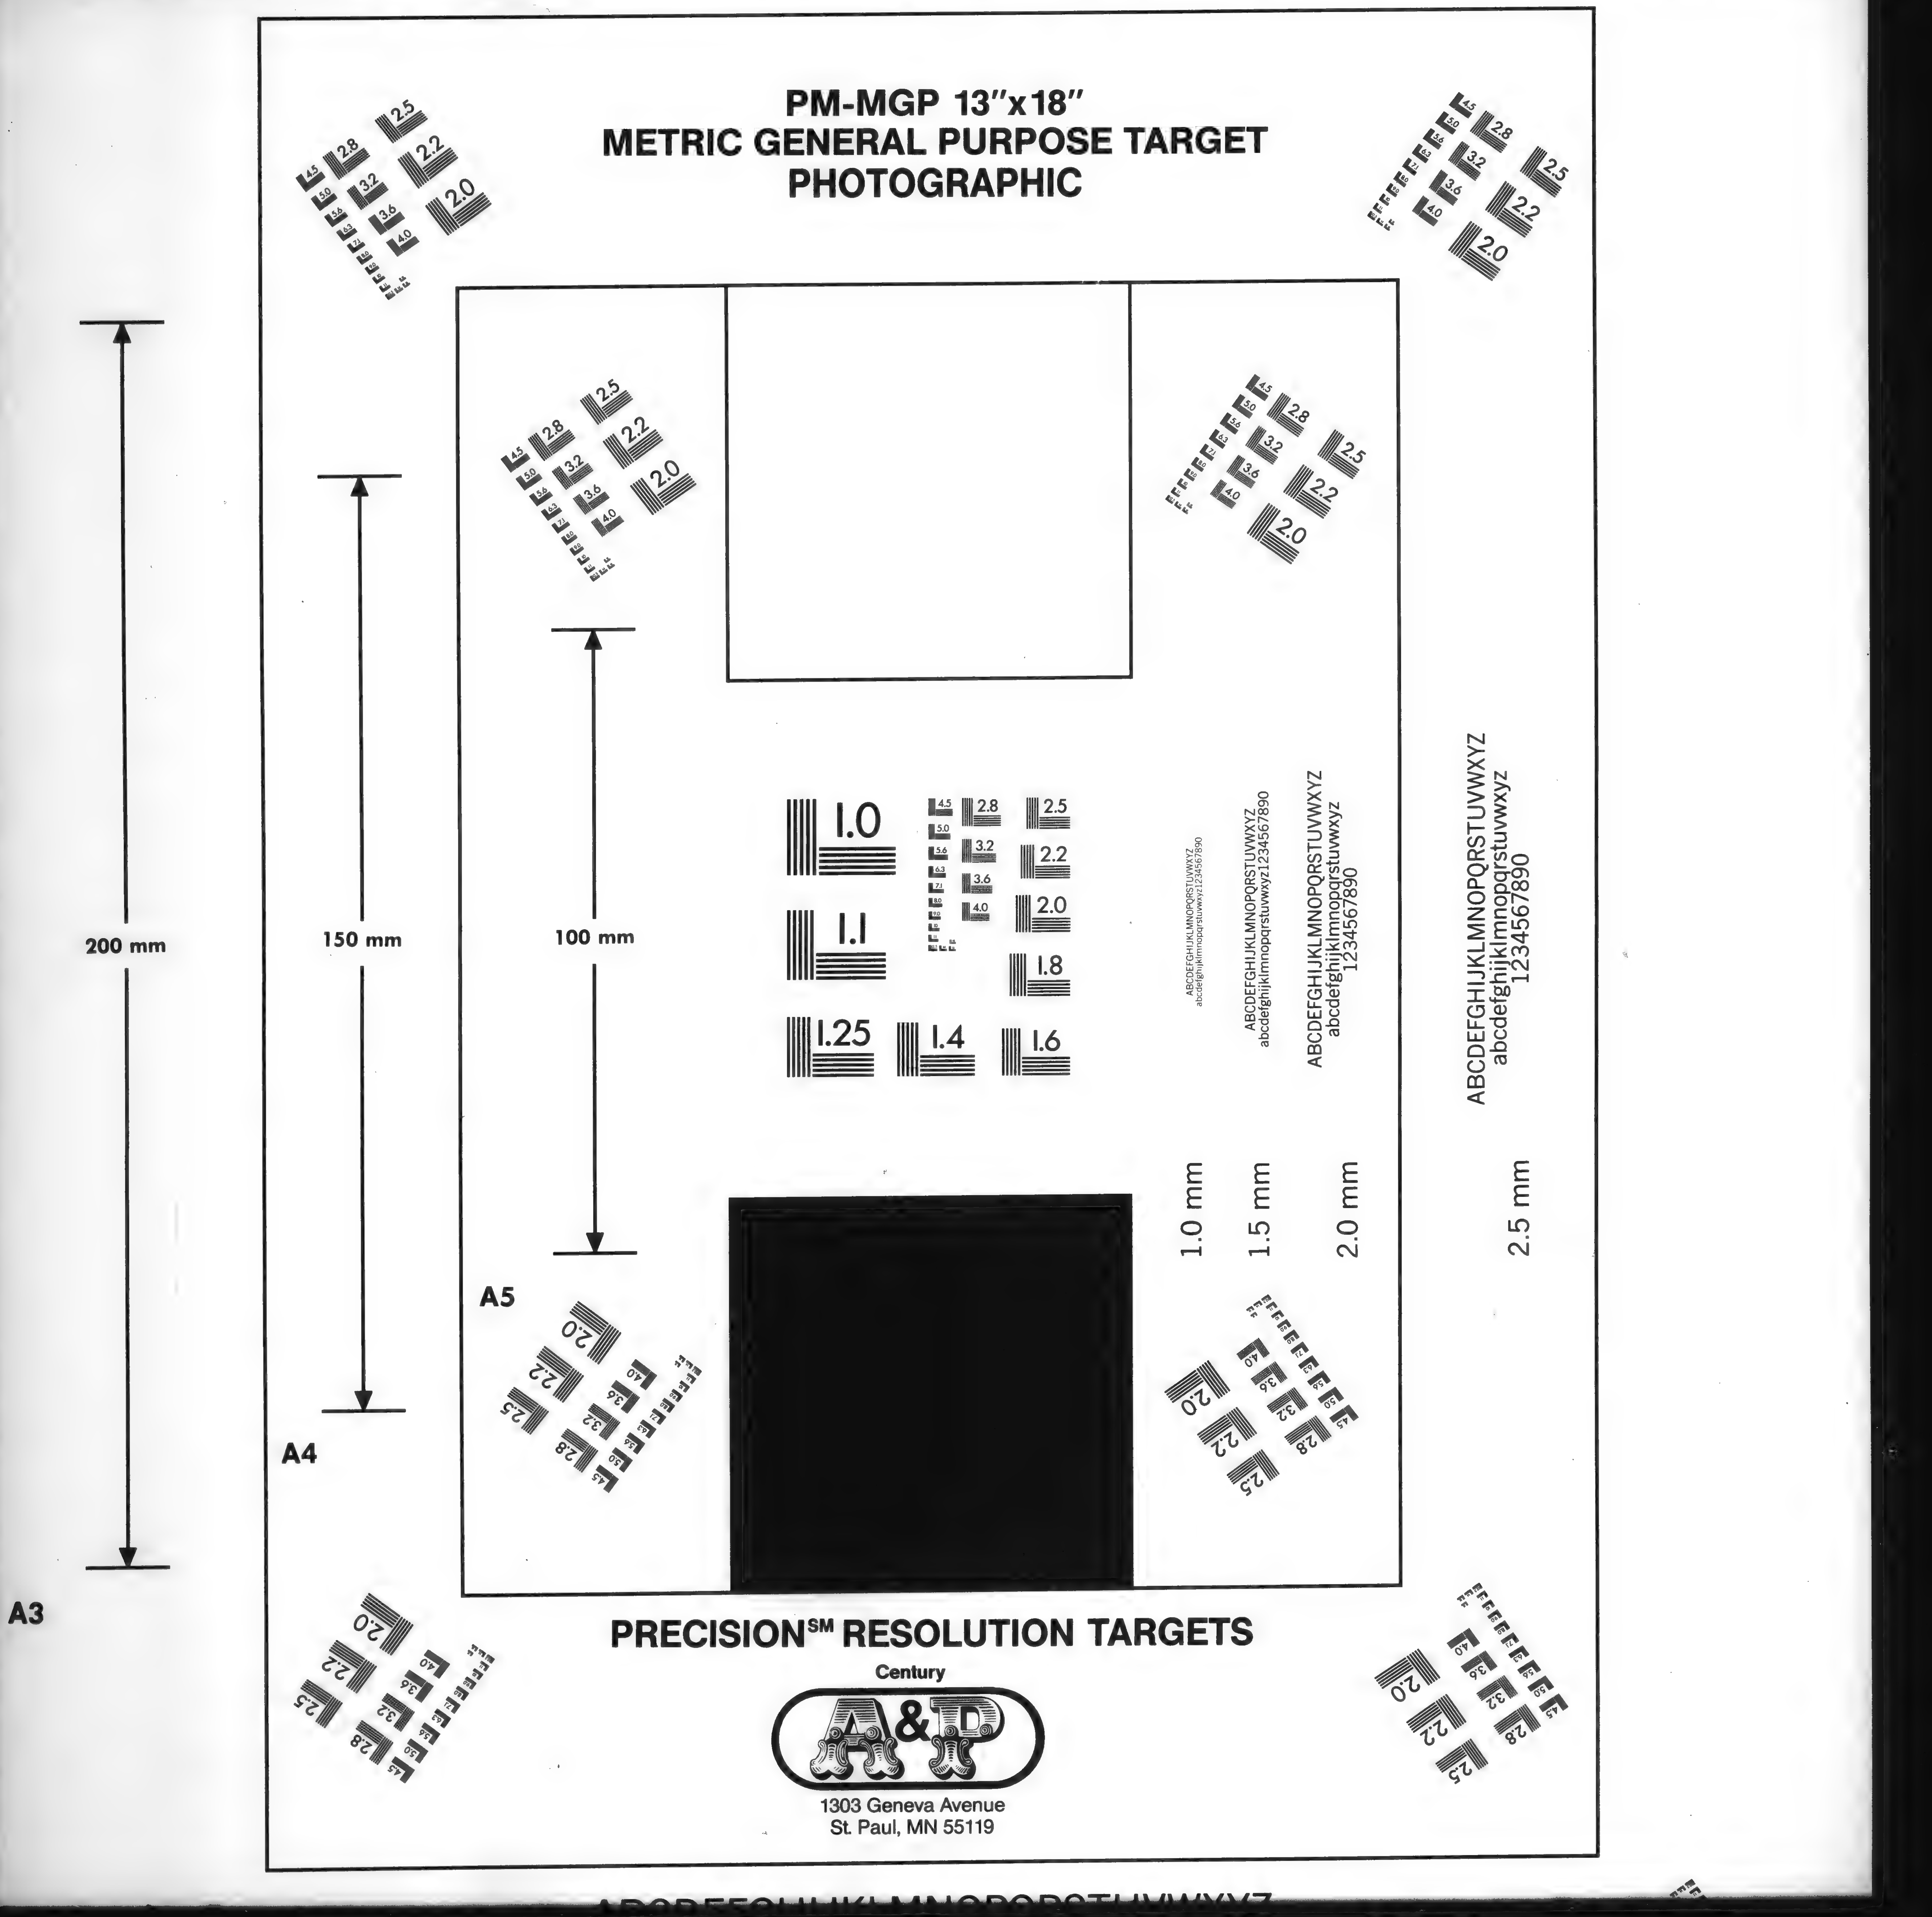
Mrs Stires has not exceptional vocal resources. Hers is a clear, thin soprano, flexible enough to be suited for coloratura work. She has a charming platform manner, and knows it. She was several times off pitch badly on high notes yesterday. The audience applauded her cordially in her solo numbers.

Mrs Homer's somber lower tones, ample vocal resources and effective use of them impressed, as always, the great majority of her hearers favorably. There are those, however, who wish that she sang a bit less like a gentlewoman and more like a prima donna.

Globe Jan 15

REDUCTION
RATIO
12x

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A3
A4
A5
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

Paderewski Dec 31, 1922

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30 Ignace Jan Paderewski, pianist. Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, Bach; Sonata in C minor, opus 111, Beethoven; Sonata, opus 11, Schumann; Ballade in F major, Nocturne in B major, Etudes Nos. 12, 7 and 3, opus 10, Mazurka No. 3; Valse, op 42, Chopin; Nocturne, Paderewski; "Hungarian Rhapsody" No. 10, Liszt.

Globe Dec 31

TO Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon, Mr. Paderewski will return for a second concert of piano-pieces in full range of hand, mind and spirit; in full zest of every familiar power; in new graces, even, recalled from what had seemed a vanished past. A vast public as warmly welcomes him. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Sonatas of Beethoven (Op. 111) and of Schumann (Op. 11); a miscellany from Chopin and Liszt and his own Nocturne fill the pianist's programme.

Traveler Dec 30

MR. PADEREWSKI

The program for Mr. Paderewski's second concert in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30 will include the chromatic fantasia and fugue, Bach; sonata, Op. 111, Beethoven; sonata, Op. 11, Schumann; a group by Chopin; nocturne, Paderewski; Hungarian rhapsody, Liszt.

Herald Dec 31

PADEREWSKI TODAY

The program for Paderewski's recital in Symphony Hall this afternoon includes the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Bach; Sonata, Op. 111, Beethoven; Sonata, Op. 11, Schumann; a group by Chopin; Nocturne, Paderewski; Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt.

Advertiser Dec 31

PADEREWSKI TODAY

The programme for Paderewski's second concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30 will include the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Bach; Sonata, Op. 111, Beethoven; Sonata, Op. 11, Schumann; a group by Chopin; Nocturne, Paderewski; Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt.

Post Dec 31

PADEREWSKI IS LIONIZED AGAIN

Ignace Jan Paderewski played again at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, for the last time unti near the end of the season, if even then. It is only settled that he is to go on a Western tour. But the peerless pianist likes Boston; has been spending the holidays here, in fact, and will return as soon as he can.

Once more he attracted a capacity audience at almost opera prices—no mere crowd of hero-worshippers, as in his early days as a star, but a crowd of earnest, respectfu admirers. Never have his art and his personality been so powerful, so captivating as they are today.

Paderewski is the last of the great classic pianists. With the exception of his own Nocturne, al the numbers on his program yesterday were strictly classical. His communings are with Bach, Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin, Liszt; and there is no one else today who can vie with him in interpreting such a program.

Advertiser Jan 1

MASTER OF THE PIANO AT HIS BEST

Paderewski Enthuses His Audience at Symphony Hall

BY OLIN DOWNES

Ignace Paderewski gave his second recital of the season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Again the hall was sold out to the last ticket for standing room. Again there was extraordinary enthusiasm to which the pianist responded by playing encores until nearly six o'clock.

AT ZENITH OF POWER

There seemed no limit to his enthusiasm or to that of his audience, and, indeed, the writer has not attended any performance of Mr. Paderewski in the last 20 years when he played more nobly and beautifully than yesterday afternoon.

His programme was again a gigantic one, including the Bach Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Beethoven's Sonata, op. III; the Schumann Sonata in F sharp minor; Chopin's F major Ballad, B major Nocturne, op. 62; Etudes Nos. 12, 7, 3 of op. 10; Mazurka No. 3, op. 59, and Waltz, op. 42; Paderewski's Nocturne; Liszt's 12th Hungarian Rhapsody. Another Rhapsody was played as an encore, also the Schubert-Liszt "Hark, Hark, the Lark," and the Chopin-Liszt "Maiden's Wish"; the Rubinstein "Valse Caprice," Mendelssohn's "Spinning Song" and one or two more compositions.

Growing During Years

It isn't possible to point a moral when Mr. Paderewski plays and say to the perspiring music student: "There are the fruits of a whole lifetime of work. Why are you discouraged?" One can't exactly talk this way, for Mr Paderewski was a wonderful pianist 3 years and more ago. Nevertheless, he has grown during all those years.

It is not easy to imagine a man of 30, however great his genius, playing the Beethoven sonata as it was played yesterday. Such a performance means experience of life and the gradual purification of the spirit. It also means the finest self-control from the emotional and artistic point of view.

Whereas Mr. Paderewski gave Schumann's sonata vivid and subjective interpretation which it not only permits, but demands, boldly meeting the composer half way, clarifying his thought in certain places, and adding to the color and the rythmic variety of the music—in Beethoven's sonata he was but the rapt, humble worshipper in the temple. None was there but the great Beethoven and the officiating high priest. There was not the remotest concession to an audience, not the thought of an effect for effect's sake.

All was exactly as ordained by the master. The sonata was felt surprisingly by the audience. We say this for two reasons. First, the Beethoven of op. III, is not the Beethoven of earlier and more readily understood works. Secondly, there appear to be in this world a fairly large number of people who feel that the price of a seat entitles them to bring to a concert an active, vigorous cough and enjoy themselves regardless of the performer or other listeners.

Inspiration led the pianist by the hand in the group of Chopin. Then he gained from his instrument an unbelievable number of tints and mezzo-tints and subtle rhythms. The piano sang a magic song. In the F major ballad, in some respects one of the most original and concise of Chopin's works in this form, it had the power and the thunders of the tempest.

The Nocturne was surely one of the high peaks of the afternoon, with its poignant richness of color and the singing of the melody that seemed to come from another land. Nor have we heard anyone, even Mr. de Pachmann, give such a performance of the Mazurka.

The simple Nocturne of Mr. Paderewski delighted the audience by the musicianship with which a charming idea was treated, and its plaistic interpretation. But why continue in the superlative? Mr. Paderewski played. His art today is more puissant and wonderful than ever before.

Post Jan 1

PADEREWSKI IN SECOND RECITAL

Plays in Heroic Vein for Greater Part of Program

An audience that filled every seat in Symphony Hall and every inch of standing room greeted Mr. Paderewski at his second recital, yesterday afternoon. This was his program: Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Bach; Sonata, op. III, Beethoven; Sonata, op. II, Schumann; Ballade, F major, op. 36, Chopin; Nocturne, B major, op. 62, Chopin; Etudes, Nos. 12, 7, 3, op. 10, Chopin; Mazurka, No. 3, op. 59, Chopin; Valse, op. 42, Chopin; Nocturne, Paderewski; Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt.

When Marshal Foch visits Boston, or Clemenceau, we stand on the curb, those of us who can get no nearer, to take off our hats as they pass by. So is it meet and right for us to flock to Symphony Hall to do honor to Paderewski, who, in the war for decency, gave his fortune for the cause and worked his fingers to the bone, and who as well, the war at an end, struggled in matters of state to build up anew his native Poland. For a man of his rare quality no honor is too great.

In paying our homage, though, to the patriot and statesman, let us not be deceived in our attitude toward the pianist. For the Paderewski who played yesterday is not the Paderewski of 30 years ago, that player who possessed above all his peers the quality of delightfulness and feeling for sheer beauty. How should he be? The sights he saw in Poland, his people's plight, can scarce make for an absorbing interest in the graceful turning of a phrase, in a pretty play of tonal color.

For beauty yesterday, for grace and charm, Mr. Paderewski had faint response. One long hour he played in the heroic vein, with regard, apparently, for only what was big, big tone, big speed, big swelling of sound, violent hurrying and relaxing of time, and even a big, if one may use the term, pianissimo. To such of the audience as found this bigness great, the performance must have proved emotionally overwhelming. To others it seemed hysterical, musically lacking in design, extravagant. It is all a matter of personal reaction.

In the course of the afternoon, of course, Mr. Paderewski did some playing exquisite from every point of view, notably portions of the fantasy, the first part of the fugue and the Schumann aria. The C major Chopin study and the one preceding it he played with the healthy vigor and all the dazzling brilliancy of old. The rousing applause these pieces fetched, as well as the Chopin waltz, suggests that beautiful playing, even today, makes a more potent appeal than emotionalism alone.

R. R. G.

Herald Jan 1

Paderewski

Paderewski gave his second recital of the session here in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. He played:

Bach—Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue.
Beethoven—Sonata, Op. 111.
Schumann—Sonata, Op. 11.
Chopin—Ballade in F major; Nocturne in B major, Op. 62; etudes in C major, C minor and E major from Op. 10; Mazurka in F sharp minor; Waltz in A flat, Op. 42.
Paderewski—Nocturne in B flat major.
Liszt—Rhapsody in C sharp minor.

Paderewski's art has been analyzed in detail for so many years that it would seem almost unnecessary, in fact, impertinent, to attempt to discuss it anew; yet one of the traits of his playing and one which must be characteristic of every great artist is its ever renewed freshness and variety, its continued change. The major pieces of yesterday's program (the Fantasia and Fugue of Bach, the sonatas of Beethoven and Schumann and the Ballade of Chopin) are thrice familiar under his hands; none the less, however, were they of absorbing interest, for as the years go by he discovers new beauties, new meanings in them.

It is impossible to write of Paderewski in the terms of ordinary musical criticism. Faults, defects, he most certainly has when judged by the usual standards. Without doubt he often forces the tone of his instrument beyond all limits (though throughout yesterday's program this was exceptionally rare); without doubt he is not technically impeccable, and so the catalogue might be continued were such fault finding to serve a useful purpose.

But Paderewski is not a pianist in the commonly accepted sense of the word. He is first and foremost a great musician who by chance has chosen the piano as a means of expression. With him the achievement of technical perfection is not the sole end; rather is he concerned with music, of which he is the very spirit and personification. And regarding him in this sense, who can compare with him? Who can bring to the music of Bach, for example, such a wealth of emotional significance as he? Who else can find out and express the cryptic Beethoven of the last piano sonatas as he can? And who but he can so fell portray in tones the fanciful, sensitive, subjective Chopin? As a great musical genius, then, must he be considered; and who could doubt his claims to that title after the recital of yesterday afternoon?

S. M.

Monitor Jan 2

Paderewski at Pinnacle

Memory may slip when it would span a gulf of years. The exhilaration of the instant may glamor, when it sets present and past side by side. Yet, as it seemed on Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall, the Paderewski of the last day in 1922 was the Paderewski treasured out of a golden prime. In those days, say fifteen years and more agone, he could not have gathered a more rapt audience—an intelligent, self-respecting audience, moreover, that forbore the parochial mummery of rising when the pianist first appeared. In those days, too, he could hardly have set a more exacting programme alike for himself and his hearers—the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue of Bach; Beethoven's Sonata of the Arietta, Opus 111; Schumann's manifold Sonata in G minor; Chopin in seven different voices; Mr. Paderewski's own Nocturne; the Tenth Rhapsody of Liszt. All this through two intent hours—with only one brief pause—and in a super-heated concert-room. By this time, it is easy to forgive Mr. Paderewski such insistencies. Much more lenient is he with them than of old. No more than ten minutes after the appointed hour was he ready to begin; late-comers little chafed him; he rebels no longer at the nervous cough of the national catarrh. The subdued lights, the leonine programmes, have become part of the occasion. In a day that is a mush of concession, Mr. Paderewski unaffectedly asks of his hearers as much as he gives from himself.

In those golden years at the turn of the century, beauty of tone and poetry of impression were the pervading qualities of the pianist. He was then content with the piano as such; he sought not to make it striving but intrinsically impotent orchestra. Power he plied when the composer bade or when the music set his own puissance glowing; but it was not the rebellious frenzy of the days in which he racked touch, tone, his instrument, himself. In that prime his mind deeply searching, his spirit profoundly stirred, impregnated his version of every music. Later came the fevered, tossing time through which he seemed to wrench many a familiar piece according to gusty, distorting, almost embittered, will. He was nigh to menacing the composer. "So would I have you write—according to this, my mood, my bidding." Possibly the energies spent upon the late war and the reconstitution of Poland have been outlet and release to Mr. Paderewski thus imperious, frenetic, at acrid odds with much that was the custom of his life. If so, they were less wasted years than Monsieur Clemenceau, speaking timely for the rest of us, rightly judged them. As plausibly, Mr. Paderewski may have undergone the clarifying of the mind, the calming of the spirit, the idealization and the exaltation of perception and expression that is the lot of illustrious artists in their final years. They say in Italy that beauty and poetry halo the acting of Mme. Duse in these her final days. No less on Sunday afternoon, they shone around Mr. Paderewski's head.

In that heyday now returned, the pianist could hardly have been more superlative technician. In the glissandi of the Hungarian Rhapsody, the octaves here and there in the miscellany from Chopin, the modulations of Schumann, the phrasing of Beethoven, the polyphony of Bach, a passion for perfection came near to attainment. Only the closest, most suspicious, most pedagogical ear could now and then detect what seemed for the instant unevenly balanced hands. Served by this skill was a touch upon keyboard and pedals that clothed in a wondrous beauty of tone the Arietta of Beethoven's Sonata, the slow movement of Schumann, the Ballad and the Nocturne of Chopin, the pianist's own Night Piece in whispers.

A tone more transparent and lustrous, more rounded and edgeless, more susceptible to contour and color, more pliant to every shade of pace and motion, imagination may hardly hear. In Massenet's paltry opera, Thais saw the heavens open; in Prospero's enchanted isle sang for Ariel the voices of the air; in such ecstasy and illusion, yet no whit ungoverned, came and went Mr. Paderewski's tone. Earth-born it was—for he is human like other men—yet, in the delight of the hour it seemed celestial—and these are no extravagant, thoughtless words. And the range? From the clarities of Bach's Prelude to the mists of Chopin's Mazurka; from the measured magnificence of Beethoven "Maestoso" to Schumann racing—and also repeating—romantic fancies through first movement and finale; from the song of Beethoven ecstatic, through the song of Schumann or Chopin musing, to Liszt's twanging gypsy ditties. End there was only as the chosen music set it.

To this beauty of voice Mr. Paderewski joined as wondrous sensibility of mind and poetry of mood. Twenty pianists may unravel and reweave the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue. One in ten thousand may, like Mr. Paderewski, make the music sound as romantic rhapsody, self-creating the form, yet miss not a single clear articulation, overdo no flight of power. For a hundred years pianists have been making transitions in this Sonata of Beethoven in C minor. Yet few may have summoned the thrill of mystery gathering and opening, the sense of darkness glowing into light, the tremor of the heaven-sent solace descending, that Mr. Paderewski compassed. Schumann dreams at the beginning of his Sonata; Schumann sings through the Aria musings upon a newfound loveliness; but the Schumann of the long Allegros is repetitious, overfed with its own fancies. The pianist must rescue him; be as one who rhapsodizes; avert monotony by changeful pace, accent, modulation, color. Unfailing, multifarious was Mr. Paderewski's glamor. In turn, the Mazurka and the Waltz of Chopin beat to rhythms of the dancing spirit, not the dancing body; while as poetizing flash were the changes of pace. The Studies, hackneyed as pianists' exercises, were reborn as lyric flights in tones limpid, lovely, light-bearing, sounded Chopin's melody out of the Nocturne; while the arabesques dappled the brightness like leaves reflected in sunshine. A moody rhapsodist sang—not over-drove—the Ballad. . . . So went Mr. Paderewski, transfigurer of music.

H. T. P.

Transcript

[125]

Paderewski Dec 31, 1922

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30 Ignace Jan Paderewski, pianist. Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, Bach; Sonata in C minor, opus 111, Beethoven; Sonata, opus 11, Schumann; Ballade in F major, Nocturne in B major, Etudes Nos. 12, 7 and 3, opus 10; Mazurka No. 3; Valse, op 42, Chopin; Nocturne, Paderewski; "Hungarian Rhapsody" No. 10, Liszt.

Globe Dec 31

TO Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon, Mr. Paderewski will return for a second concert of piano-pieces in full range of hand, mind and spirit; in full zest of every familiar power; in new graces, even, recalled from what had seemed a vanished past. A vast public as warmly welcomes him. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Sonatas of Beethoven (Op. 111) and of Schumann (Op. 11); a miscellany from Chopin and Liszt and his own Nocturne fill the pianist's programme.

Traveler Dec 30

MR. PADEREWSKI

The program for Mr. Paderewski's second concert in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30 will include the chromatic fantasia and fugue, Bach; sonata, Op. 111, Beethoven; sonata, Op. 11, Schumann; a group by Chopin; nocturne, Paderewski; Hungarian rhapsody, Liszt.

Herald Dec 31

PADEREWSKI TODAY

The program for Paderewski's recital in Symphony Hall this afternoon includes the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Bach; Sonata, Op. 111, Beethoven; Sonata, Op. 11, Schumann; a group by Chopin; Nocturne, Paderewski; Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt.

Advertiser Dec 31

PADEREWSKI TODAY

The programme for Paderewski's second concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30 will include the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Bach; Sonata, Op. 111, Beethoven; Sonata, Op. 11, Schumann; a group by Chopin; Nocturne, Paderewski; Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt.

Post Dec 31

PADEREWSKI IS LIONIZED AGAIN

Ignace Jan Paderewski played again at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, for the last time until near the end of the season, if even then. It is only settled that he is to go on a Western tour. But the peerless pianist likes Boston; has been spending the holidays here, in fact, and will return as soon as he can.

Once more he attracted a capacity audience at almost opera prices—no mere crowd of hero-worshippers, as in his early days as a star but a crowd of earnest, respectful admirers. Never have his art and his personality been so powerful, so captivating as they are today.

Paderewski is the last of the great classic pianists. With the exception of his own Nocturne, all the numbers on his program yesterday were strictly classical. His communings are with Bach, Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin, Liszt; and there is no one else today who can vie with him in interpreting such a program.

Advertiser Jan 1

MASTER OF THE PIANO AT HIS BEST

Paderewski Enthuses His Audience at Symphony Hall

BY OLIN DOWNES

Ignace Paderewski gave his second recital of the season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Again the hall was sold out to the last ticket for standing room. Again there was extraordinary enthusiasm to which the pianist responded by playing encores until nearly six o'clock.

AT ZENITH OF POWER

There seemed no limit to his enthusiasm or to that of his audience, and, indeed, the writer has not attended any performance of Mr. Paderewski in the last 20 years when he played more nobly and beautifully than yesterday afternoon.

His programme was again a gigantic one, including the Bach Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Beethoven's Sonata, op. III; the Schumann Sonata in F sharp minor; Chopin's F major Ballad, B major Nocturne, op. 62; Etudes Nos. 12, 7, 3 of op. 10; Mazurka No. 3, op. 59, and Waltz, op. 42; Paderewski's Nocturne; Liszt's 12th Hungarian Rhapsody. Another Rhapsody was played as an encore, also the Schubert-Liszt "Hark, Hark, the Lark," and the Chopin-Liszt "Maiden's Wish"; the Rubinstein "Valse Caprice," Mendelssohn's "Spinning Song" and one or two more compositions.

Growing During Years

It isn't possible to point a moral when Mr. Paderewski plays and say to the perspiring music student: "There are the fruits of a whole lifetime of work. Why are you discouraged?" One can't exactly talk this way, for Mr Paderewski was a wonderful pianist 30 years and more ago. Nevertheless, he has grown during all those years.

It is not easy to imagine a man of 30, however great his genius, playing the Beethoven sonata as it was played yesterday. Such a performance means experience of life and the gradual purification of the spirit. It also means the finest self-control from the emotional and artistic point of view.

Whereas Mr. Paderewski gave Schumann's sonata vivid and subjective interpretation which it not only permits, but demands, boldly meeting the composer half way, clarifying his thought in certain places, and adding to the color and the rythmic variety of the music—in Beethoven's sonata he was but the rapt, humble worshipper in the temple. None was there but the great Beethoven and the officiating high priest. There was not the remotest concession to an audience, not the thought of an effect for effect's sake.

All was exactly as ordained by the master. The sonata was felt surprisingly by the audience. We say this for two reasons. First, the Beethoven of op. III, is not the Beethoven of earlier and more readily understood works. Secondly, there appear to be in this world a fairly large number of people who feel that the price of a seat entitles them to bring to a concert an active, vigorous cough and enjoy themselves regardless of the performer or other listeners.

Inspiration led the pianist by the hand in the group of Chopin. Then he gained from his instrument an unbelievable number of tints and mezzo-tints and subtle rhythms. The piano sang a magic song. In the F major ballad, in some respects one of the most original and concise of Chopin's works in this form, it had the power and the thunders of the tempest.

The Nocturne was surely one of the high peaks of the afternoon, with its poignant richness of color and the singing of the melody that seemed to come from another land. Nor have we heard anyone, even Mr. de Pachmann, give such a performance of the Mazurka.

The simple Nocturne of Mr. Paderewski delighted the audience by the musicianship with which a charming idea was treated, and its plaistic interpretation. But why continue in the superlative? Mr. Paderewski played. His art today is more puissant and wonderful than ever before.

Post Jan 1

PADEREWSKI IN SECOND RECITAL

Plays in Heroic Vein for Greater Part of Program

An audience that filled every seat in Symphony Hall and every inch of standing room greeted Mr. Paderewski at his second recital, yesterday afternoon. This was his program: Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Bach; Sonata, op. III, Beethoven; Sonata, op. II, Schumann; Ballade, F major, op. 36, Chopin; Nocturne, B major, op. 62, Chopin; Etudes, Nos. 12, 7, 3, op. 10, Chopin; Mazurka, No. 3, op. 59, Chopin; Valse, op. 42, Chopin; Nocturne, Paderewski; Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt.

When Marshal Foch visits Boston, or Clemenceau, we stand on the curb, those of us who can get no nearer, to take off our hats as they pass by. So is it meet and right for us to flock to Symphony Hall to do honor to Paderewski, who, in the war for decency, gave his fortune for the cause and worked his fingers to the bone, and who as well, the war at an end, struggled in matters of state to build up anew his native Poland. For a man of his rare quality no honor is too great.

In paying our homage, though, to the patriot and statesman, let us not be deceived in our attitude toward the pianist. For the Paderewski who played yesterday is not the Paderewski of 30 years ago, that player who possessed above all his peers the quality of delightfulness and feeling for sheer beauty. How should he be? The sights he saw in Poland, his people's plight, can scarce make for an absorbing interest in the graceful turning of a phrase, in a pretty play of tonal color.

For beauty yesterday, for grace and charm, Mr. Paderewski had faint response. One long hour he played in the heroic vein, with regard, apparently, for only what was big, big tone, big speed, big swelling of sound, violent hurrying and relaxing of time, and even a big, if one may use the term, pianissimo. To such of the audience as found this bigness great, the performance must have proved emotionally overwhelming. To others it seemed hysterical, musically lacking in design, extravagant. It is all a matter of personal reaction.

In the course of the afternoon, of course, Mr. Paderewski did some playing exquisite from every point of view, notably portions of the fantasy, the first part of the fugue and the Schumann aria. The C major Chopin study and the one preceding it he played with the healthy vigor and all the dazzling brilliancy of old. The rousing applause these pieces fetched, as well as the Chopin waltz, suggests that beautiful playing, even today, makes a more potent appeal than emotionalism alone.

R. R. G.

Herald Jan 1

Paderewski

Paderewski gave his second recital of the session here in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. He played:

Bach—Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue.
Beethoven—Sonata, Op. 111.
Schumann—Sonata, Op. 11.
Chopin—Ballade in F major; Nocturne in B major, Op. 62; etudes in C major, C minor and E major from Op. 10; Mazurka in F sharp minor; Waltz in A flat, Op. 42.
Paderewski—Nocturne in B flat major.
Liszt—Rhapsody in C sharp minor.

Paderewski's art has been analyzed in detail for so many years that it would seem almost unnecessary, in fact, impertinent, to attempt to discuss it anew; yet one of the traits of his playing and one which must be characteristic of every great artist is its ever renewed freshness and variety, its continued change. The major pieces of yesterday's program (the Fantasia and Fugue of Bach, the sonatas of Beethoven and Schumann and the Ballade of Chopin) are thrice familiar under his hands; none the less, however, were they of absorbing interest, for as the years go by he discovers new beauties, new meanings in them.

It is impossible to write of Paderewski in the terms of ordinary musical criticism. Faults, defects, he most certainly has when judged by the usual standards. Without doubt he often forces the tone of his instrument beyond all limits (though throughout yesterday's program this was exceptionally rare); without doubt he is not technically impeccable, and so the catalogue might be continued were such fault finding to serve a useful purpose.

But Paderewski is not a pianist in the commonly accepted sense of the word. He is first and foremost a great musician who by chance has chosen the piano as a means of expression. With him the achievement of technical perfection is not the sole end; rather is he concerned with music, of which he is the very spirit and personification. And regarding him in this sense, who can compare with him? Who can bring to the music of Bach, for example, such a wealth of emotional significance as he? Who else can find out and express the cryptic Beethoven of the last piano sonatas as he can? And who but he can so fell portray in tones the fanciful, sensitive, subjective Chopin? As a great musical genius, then, must he be considered; and who could doubt his claims to that title after the recital of yesterday afternoon?

S. M.

Monitor Jan 2

Paderewski at Pinnacle

Memory may slip when it would span a gulf of years. The exhilaration of the instant may glamor, when it sets present and past side by side. Yet, as it seemed on Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall, the Paderewski of the last day in 1922 was the Paderewski treasured out of a golden prime. In those days, say fifteen years and more agone, he could not have gathered a more rapt audience—an intelligent, self-respecting audience, moreover, that forbore the parochial mummery of rising when the pianist first appeared. In those days, too, he could hardly have set a more exacting programme alike for himself and his hearers—the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue of Bach; Beethoven's Sonata of the Arietta, Opus 111; Schumann's manifold Sonata in G minor; Chopin in seven different voices; Mr. Paderewski's own Nocturne; the Tenth Rhapsody of Liszt. All this through two intent hours—with only one brief pause—and in a super-heated concert-room. By this time, it is easy to forgive Mr. Paderewski such insistencies. Much more lenient is he with them than of old. No more than ten minutes after the appointed hour was he ready to begin; late-comers little chafed him; he rebels no longer at the nervous cough of the national catarrh. The subdued lights, the leonine programmes, have become part of the occasion. In a day that is a mush of concession, Mr. Paderewski unaffectedly asks of his hearers as much as he gives from himself.

In those golden years at the turn of the century, beauty of tone and poetry of impression were the pervading qualities of the pianist. He was then content with the piano as such; he sought not to make it striving but intrinsically impotent orchestra. Power he plied when the composer bade or when the music set his own puissance glowing; but it was not the rebellious frenzy of the days in which he racked touch, tone, his instrument, himself. In that prime his mind deeply searching, his spirit profoundly stirred, impregnated his version of every music. Later came the fevered, tossing time through which he seemed to wrench many a familiar piece according to gusty, distorting, almost embittered, will. He was nigh to menacing the composer. "So would I have you write—according to this, my mood, my bidding." Possibly the energies spent upon the late war and the reconstitution of Poland have been outlet and release to Mr. Paderewski thus imperious, frenetic, at acrid odds with much that was the custom of his life. If so, they were less wasted years than Monsieur Clemenceau, speaking timely for the rest of us, rightly judged them. As plausibly, Mr. Paderewski may have undergone the clarifying of the mind, the calming of the spirit, the idealization and the exaltation of perception and expression that is the lot of illustrious artists in their final years. They say in Italy that beauty and poetry halo the acting of Mme. Duse in these her final days. No less on Sunday afternoon, they shone around Mr. Paderewski's head.

In that heyday now returned, the pianist could hardly have been more superlative technician. In the glissandi of the Hungarian Rhapsody, the octaves here and there in the miscellany from Chopin, the modulations of Schumann, the phrasing of Beethoven, the polyphony of Bach, a passion for perfection came near to attainment. Only the closest, most suspicious, most pedagogical ear could now and then detect what seemed for the instant unevenly balanced hands. Served by this skill was a touch upon keyboard and pedals that clothed in a wondrous beauty of tone the Arietta of Beethoven's Sonata, the slow movement of Schumann, the Ballad and the Nocturne of Chopin, the pianist's own Night Piece in whispers.

A tone more transparent and lustrous, more rounded and edgeless, more susceptible to contour and color, more pliant to every shade of pace and motion, imagination may hardly hear. In Massenet's paltry opera, Thais saw the heavens open; in Prospero's enchanted isle sang for Ariel the voices of the air; in such ecstasy and illusion, yet no whit ungoverned, came and went Mr. Paderewski's tone. Earth-born it was—for he is human like other men—yet, in the delight of the hour it seemed celestial—and these are no extravagant, thoughtless words. And the range? From the clarities of Bach's Prelude to the mists of Chopin's Mazurka; from the measured magnificence of Beethoven "Maestoso" to Schumann racing—and also repeating—romantic fancies through first movement and finale; from the song of Beethoven ecstatic, through the song of Schumann or Chopin musing, to Liszt's twanging gypsy ditties. End there was only as the chosen music set it.

To this beauty of voice Mr. Paderewski joined as wondrous sensibility of mind and poetry of mood. Twenty pianists may unravel and reweave the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue. One in ten thousand may, like Mr. Paderewski, make the music sound as romantic rhapsody, self-creating the form, yet miss not a single clear articulation, overdo no flight of power. For a hundred years pianists have been making translations in this Sonata of Beethoven in C minor. Yet few may have summoned the thrill of mystery gathering and opening, the sense of darkness glowing into light, the tremor of the heaven-sent solace descending, that Mr. Paderewski compassed. Schumann dreams at the beginning of his Sonata; Schumann sings through the Aria musings upon a newfound loveliness; but the Schumann of the long Allegros is repetitious, overfed with its own fancies. The pianist must rescue him; be as one who rhapsodizes; avert monotony by changeful pace, accent, modulation, color. Unfailing, multifarious was Mr. Paderewski's glamor. In turn, the Mazurka and the Waltz of Chopin beat to rhythms of the dancing spirit, not the dancing body; while as poetizing flash were the changes of pace. The Studies, hackneyed as pianists' exercises, were reborn as lyric flights in tones. Limpid, lovely, light-bearing, sounded Chopin's melody out of the Nocturne; while the arabesques dappled the brightness like leaves reflected in sunshine. A moody rhapsodist sang—not over-drove—the Ballad. So went Mr. Paderewski, transfigurer of music.

H. T. P.

Transcript Dec

[125]

BLANK PAGE

Hofmann Jan 21, 1923

Sunday afternoon, [illegible] Hall, a concert of piano-pieces played by Josef Hofmann, master of technique and tone, deep in insight, poised in imagination, musician of mind as well as of feeling, high-placed and firmly set among the illustrious pianists of our time. Not again this season will he be heard in Boston. Tr 12/30

Transcript Dec 30

HOFMANN COMING

Josef Hofmann will give his only concert of the season in Boston in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 21. Adv 1/31

Advertiser Dec 31

Once only will Josef Hofmann, the pianist, play in Boston in the course of the season—at a recital of his own in Symphony Hall, on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21. Trans 1-29

Transcript Dec 29

JOSEF HOFMANN

The great Russian pianist, Josef Hofmann, will give his only concert of the season in Boston when he appears in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21. Trav 1-30

Traveler Dec 30

JOSEF HOFMANN

Josef Hofmann, pianist, will give his sole recital in Boston in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, at 3:30 o'clock. Her 1-7

Herald Jan 7

HOFMANN COMING

Josef Hofmann, the great pianist, will make his only appearance in Boston this season in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 21. Adv 1/7

Advertiser Jan 7

Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces played by Josef Hofmann, master of technique and tone, deep in insight, poised in imagination, musician of mind as well as of feeling, high-placed and firmly set among the illustrious pianists of our time. Not again this season will he be heard in Boston. Trans 1/6

Transcript Jan 6

JOSEF HOFMANN

Josef Hofmann, long celebrated as one of the greatest pianists of all time, will give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, at 3:30. This will be his only appearance in Boston this season. Trav 1-6

Traveler Jan 6

At his concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, Mr. Hofmann will play Beethoven Sonata in A-flat; Opus 106; eight Studies of Chopin; and "Consolation" and the Spanish Rhapsody for seldom heard pieces of Liszt. Contrary to his custom, he will abound also in his own composition—five "Mignonettes" from a "Children's Corner" and a Study "for the Left-hand Alone"—or Mr. Hofmann fanciful technician.

Transcript Jan 11

A program of high interest will be presented by Josef Hofmann in a concert in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, February 21. The principal number will be the famous Hammerklavier sonata of Beethoven (op. 106), one of the master's final and mightiest works. Amer 1-13

* * *

American Jan 13

A program of high interest and musical importance will be presented by Josef Hofmann when the great Russian pianist makes his only appearance in Boston this season in a concert in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Feb. 21, at 3:30. The principal number will be the famous Hammerklavier Sonata of Beethoven (op. 106), one of the master's final and mightiest works. Mr. Hofmann will play in succession eight etudes of Chopin, his own etude for left hand alone, and a suite, "The Children's Corner" (Mignonettes), including Lonesome, Wooden Soldiers, Lullaby, Sister's Dolly, Complaint. He will also play Liszt's Spanish Rhapsody and Consolation in D flat.

Telegram Jan 13

HOFMANN'S PROGRAM

Josef Hofmann, pianist, will present the following program at his sole Boston concert of the season in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, at 3:30: Her 1-14

Sonata, Opus 106 .... Beethoven
8 Etudes .... Chopin
E major, C sharp minor.
A flat major, F major, C major.
C sharp minor, G flat major (black keys)
C minor (Revolutionary).
Mignonettes (Children's Corner) .. Hofmann
(a) Lonesome.
(b) Wooden Soldiers.
(c) Lullaby.
(d) Sister's Dolly.
(e) Complaint.
Etude in C major (for the left hand alone) .... Hofmann
Consolation in D flat major .... Liszt
Spanish Rhapsody .... Liszt

Herald Jan 14

Hofmann's Programme

Josef Hofmann, the great Russian pianist, will play in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, at 3:30. His programme includes the Sonata, Opus 106, of Beethoven; Eight Etudes of Chopin; "Mignonettes" (Children's Corner), and Etude in C major (for the left hand alone), Josef Hofmann, and two compositions of Liszt.

Post Jan 14

Sunday, Jan 21, at 3:30, Josef Hofmann, pianist. Sonata, opus 106, "For the Hammerklavier," Beethoven; eight etudes, Chopin; "Mignonettes," and etude for the left hand alone, Hofmann; "Consolation," in D flat, and Spanish rhapsody, Liszt. Glo 1-14

Globe Jan 14

HOFMANN'S PROGRAM

Josef Hofmann will present the following program at his only Boston recital this season to be given in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon: Adv 1-14

Sonata, Opus 106 .... Beethoven
Eight Etudes .... Chopin
Mignonettes (Children's Corner) Josef Hofmann
Etude in C Major (for left hand) .Hofmann
Consolation in D Flat Major .... Liszt
Spanish Rhapsody .... Liszt

Advertiser Jan 14

Sunday afteroon, Jan. 21, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces played by Josef Hofmann, master of technique and tone, deep in insight, poised in imagination, musician of mind as well as of feeling, high-placed and firmly set among the illustrious pianists of our time. Not again this season will he be heard in Boston. His programme traverses Beethoven's Sonata, Opus 106; eight Studies of Chopin; Liszt's seldom heard "Consolation" and his Spanish Rhapsody; "Mignonettes" from the pianist's "Children's Corner" & a Study of his own for the left hand

Transcript Jan 13

HOFMANN'S PROGRAM

Jan 1-13

A program of interest and musical importance will be presented by Josef Hofmann when the great Russian pianist makes his only appearance in Boston this season in a concert in Symphony hall, Sunday afternoon, Feb. 21, at 3:30.

Traveler Jan 13

HOFMANN PROGRAM

Am 1-20

Josef Hofmann, the Polish pianist, will give his only Boston concert of the season in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. His program will include Beethoven's famous "Hammerklavier" Sonata, Opus 106, Etudes of Chopin in E major, C sharp, A flat minor, C sharp minor, G flat major (black keys), and C minor, his own suite "Children's Corner," consisting of (a)—Lonesome; (b)—Wooden Soldiers; (c)—Complaint; (d)—Sister's Dolly; also his own Etude for the left hand alone, and Liszt's Consolation in D flat major, and Spanish Rhapsody.

American Jan 20

HOFMANN'S PROGRAM

Josef Hofmann, pianist, will present the following program at his sole Boston concert of the season in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, at 3:30:

Sonata, Opus 106 .... Beethoven
8 Etudes .... Chopin
E major, C sharp minor.
A flat major, F major, C major.
C sharp minor, G flat major (black keys.
C minor (Revolutionary).
Mignonettes (Children's Corner) .. Hofmann
(a) Lonesome.
(b) Wooden Soldiers. Her 1/21
(c) Lullaby.
(d) Sister's Dolly.
(e) Complaint.

Herald Jan 21

Mr. Hofmann in Prime

For the single recital that he undertakes each season in Boston comes Josef Hofmann, the pianist to Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon—master of technique and tone, deep in insight, poised in imagination, musician of mind as well as of feeling, high-placed and firmly set among the illustrious pianists of our time, this winter by all report excelling even himself. His programme traverses Beethoven's Sonata, Opus 106; six Studies of Chopin; Liszt's seldom heard "Consolation" and his Spanish Rhapsody; "Mignonettes" from the pianist's "Children's Corner," and a Study of his own for the left hand alone. Tran 1/20

Transcript Jan 20

HOFMANN TODAY

The following program will be played by Josef Hofmann at Symphony Hall this afternoon:

Sonata, Opus 106 .... Beethoven
8 Etudes: E Major .... Chopin
C Sharp Minor
A Flat Major Adv 1/21
C Sharp Minor
G Flat Major (black keys).
C Minor (revolution).
Mignonettes (Children's Corner)
Josef Hofmann
Etude in C Major (for the left hand alone) .... Joseph Hofmann
Consolation in D Flat Major .... Liszt
Spanish Rhapsody .... Liszt

Advertiser Jan 21

Hofmann Plays Today

The following splendid programme, headed by Beethoven's famous "Hammerclavier" Sonata of his later years, will be played by Josef Hofmann, the great Polish pianist, at his only Boston concert of the season in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30: Post 1-21

Sonata Opus 106, Beethoven; eight etudes, E major, C sharp minor, A flat major, C sharp minor, G flat major (black keys), C minor (Revolution), Chopin; Mignonettes (Children's Corner), Josef Hofmann; a, Lonesome (song without words); b Wooden Soldiers (march); c, Complaint (Nocturne); d, Sister's Dolly (polka); Etude in C major (for the left hand alone), Josef Hofmann; Consolation in D flat major, Liszt; Spanish Rhapsody, Liszt.

Post Jan 21

HOFMANN PLAYS EXTRA PIECES

Post 1/22

Free With Encores in Middle of Programme

Josef Hofmann, pianist, gave a concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. There was a large audience which greeted the pianist with a storm of applause when he first came on the stage. It was his first and probably only concert of the year, and his success was remarkable. By the time the pianist had even partially satisfied his audience his programme had lengthened to gigantic proportions. The concert started at half past three, and at six o'clock, spurred on by continued applause, Hofmann was still playing.

The pianist seemed in a mood for playing, for after his group of Chopin Etudes he played no less than four encores, and this, mind, in the middle of the programme. These encores were all from Chopin, if memory serves right. In the Etudes Hofmann exhibited once more his crystal-clear technique, his delicate phrasing, and his enormous power. All these things make an old story. Hofmann is still an amazing technician on the pianoforte, undoubtedly one of the greatest of all time. His dynamic changes of touch were just as surprising yesterday as they have always been; one doesn't get used to such prodigious skill.

No more does one become accustomed to Hofmann's essentially unmusical playing. It is not that he doesn't play the pieces "right." If another played them in Hofmann's fashion he would be hailed as a genius. But one expects something more from Mr. Hofmann. His playing of Beethoven's "Hammerklavier" Sonata was a soporific, because one felt that Hofmann was not doing what he could very well do with the Sonata, that he was uninterested. And this attitude, of course, leads immediately to lack of interest on the part of the listener.

In the Chopin Etudes, strangely enough, he was more successful, though even here he resorted to idiosyncrasies which are unexplainable. He played his own Mignonettes (Children's Corner) very well, but we saw no particular reason for the playing. We liked best of all his playing of that great show-piece, Liszt's "Spanish Rhapsody," which, in addition to being a showpiece, has some very lively themes. Such a piece is almost made to order for Hofmann. Yet even here, where one expects a good deal of thunder, Hofmann overpowered more than one listener. He is about the most powerful man who ever "tackled" the keyboard. And he shows very obviously that there can be too much power.

Post Jan 22

HOFMANN GETS BIG RECEPTION

Symphony Hall Audience Generous in Applause for Pianist

Her 1/22

RESPONDS WITH MANY ENCORES

Josef Hoffmann, pianist, played this program at his recital yesterday afternoon, in Symphony hall: Sonata in B-flat, Opus 106 Beethoven; Etudes, Chopin, E major, C-sharp minor, A-flat major, C-sharp minor, G-flat major, C minor; "Mignonettes," "Lonesome," "Wooden Soldiers," "Complaint," Sister's Dolly," Etude in C major (for the left hand alone), Josef Hofmann; Consolation in D-flat major, Spanish Rhapsody, Liszt.

It has been possible to read in the papers lately the views of eminent New York critics in regard to Mr. Hofmann's recent recital in Carnegie hall; the like of it, apparently, for grandeur, has seldom been heard. Though their enthusiasm is unfortunately no assurance of similar playing at a later concert, since a pianist is not a machine but a man subject to indispositions and moods, publishing it in the papers at least serves the useful purpose of putting an audience into the proper receptive attitude. Mr. Hofmann's audience yesterday, for instance, all disposed to be pleased, did not let it bother them one atom because the player thumped the piano brutally. Nor did they seem disturbed at the want of musical beauty, poetry or nobleness.

Mr. Hofmann's coarse energy, blusteringly in evidence all the afternoon, the people must have felt to be true greatness. If they were right (perhaps they were) they did well to applaud. Applaud they did, heartily, and not only in the desire for extra pieces, because the adagio in the sonata, after which, of course, there was nothing to be got, they acclaimed with true enthusiasm. In the course of the afternoon Mr. Hofmann had to play countless encore pieces. Whatever his musical abilities may be today, his is still the power to hold an audience in the hollow of his hand.

R. R. G.

Herald Jan 22

JOSEF HOFMANN IN PIANO RECITAL

Glo 1-22

Josef Hofmann gave a piano recital yesterday afternoon that roused considerable enthusiasm in an audience which did not fill Symphony Hall. Numerous extra pieces were added to the announced program.

Mr Hofmann has long been known here as one of the greatest living pianists. The extraordinarily subtle eloquence he showed yesterday in Beethoven's "Hammerklavier" sonata, abstruse yet noble music, upon which he lavished every resource of technique and imagination, set a new standard, even for Hofmann.

The individual merit of Hofmann's playing, its clarity and precision, which makes it easy for his hearers to follow every strand in the ever-weaving thread of music, made his Chopin etudes yesterday delightful to a listener weary of the muddled, smeared performances of them by most amateurs and many professionals.

His extraordinary sense of rhythm, with the perfect mastery he holds of his instrument, enable Mr Hofmann to play with the errorless accuracy of a machine. He does much more than any machine, however, has yet achieved, since his imagination dictates a perpetual series of nuances too delicate for any recording device to render.

The chief novelty on yesterday's program was Mr Hofmann's own "Mignonettes," a series of what Schumann would have called "Kinderscenen." These little pieces are agreeable trifles, composed in the early 1880's, when Hofmann was a small boy. He played also a new etude of his own for left hand alone, which has something to say, and says it with astonishing eloquence, considering the handicap the performer puts himself under.

Globe Jan 22

HOFMANN GIVES RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

Am 1/22

By ZOE FABER

Josef Hofmann, pianist, gave his first recital of the season at Symphony Hall before an audience that comprised the usual and definite following that Mr. Hofmann has in Boston.

The fact that the artist played four encores successively at the conclusion of the group of Chopin Etudes is proof of how he was playing and also, incidentally, of the unbounded enthusiasm of the audience. In passing, it should be noted that the Chopin Etudes were a real joy.

Not in some time in Boston have we heard six of them played with so much given to each one individually. Especially beautiful was the first in E major. The Revolutionary in C minor was tremendous and quite brought down the house.

An interesting and unusual number was the "Mignonettes," consisting of four little pieces with a special appeal to children. These were composed by Mr. Hofmann at an early age and presaged at that time, we take it, the unusual talent of the musician.

As a whole, the concert was delightful because the artist was in a playing mood.

American Jan 22

Superlative Hofmann

Trans 1-22

For the hour brief record must suffice of Mr. Hofmann's concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. For it he assembled a singular programme which became yet more singular when he divided it by an intermezzo of three or four extra pieces. It began reasonably enough with Beethoven's far-spreading and far-mounting Sonata, Opus 106. It proceeded, again reasonably, with an assorted six of Chopin's Studies. Then came the interlude specified and after it six childish pieces by the pianist himself—childish by the date upon them, 1882, childish also in matter and manner. Then ensued an exercise in sonorities and juggling "For the Left Hand Alone," exercise also of the pianist in maturer, more inventive years. For ending stood the tonally tearful "Consolation" of Liszt and his musically barren but technically thunderous "Spanish Rhapsody."

With all these numbers Mr. Hoffmann was the pianist he has chosen to be in these recent years, when none many excel him in superlative technical mastery, as far-reaching command of tone, in play of rhythm, and modulation, progress and climax. Once more he both unfolded and knit the design and the structure of the music. Once more he made it the full voice of grave and brooding moods, of power released and sweeping. By these attributes he set free the substance and form, the passion and the striving of Beethoven's Sonata as scarcely another pianist may do. By them again he glorified the gymastics of Liszt à l'Espagnole. By them yet once more he transformed Chopin's Studies into rhapsodic tone-poems alight with power. Yet sometimes the fancy in them seemed to sigh as a voice smothered.

H. T. P.

Transcript Jan 22

Josef Hofmann

Josef Hofmann, in his piano recital at Symphony hall last Sunday afternoon, proved that the magic of his playing was as potent as ever. His program was as follows: Tel

Beethoven Sonata in B Flat, Opus 106; Etudes, Chopin, E Major, C Sharp Minor, A Flat Major, C Sharp Minor, G Flat Major, C Minor; "Mignonettes," "Lonesome," "Wooden Soldiers," "Complaint," "Sister's Dolly," "Etude in C Major" (for left hand); Josef Hofmann; "Consolation in D Flat," Spanish rapsody, Liszt.

The thunders of the Beethoven Sonata were made to reverberate noisily by dint of considerable thumping, banging and whacking; albeit, its lovely Scherzo, a glint of sunshine through the storm, which was sent forth with charming appeal. Needless to say, the stupendous technical difficulties of this piece were tossed off by Mr. Hofmann as if they did not exist, though at the end of the colossal Fugue, taken with bewildering dash and speed, he was plainly tired. Nevertheless he added two encores.

In the group of his own compositions, composed some 38 or 40 years ago, he received a tremendous ovation that only the popular "Polonaise Militarie" could bring to a stop.

It would seem rather stupid to criticise Hofmann's playing. Hofmann is Hofmann and that is enough. He is quite beyond any blows that might be struck by a critic's typewriter if, indeed, such "blows" were necessary.

Telegram Jan 24

Hofmann Jan 21, 1923

Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces played by Josef Hofmann, master of technique and tone, deep in insight, poised in imagination, musician of mind as well as of feeling, high-placed and firmly set among the illustrious pianists of our time. Not again this season will he be heard in Boston.

Transcript Dec 30

HOFMANN COMING

Josef Hofmann will give his only concert of the season in Boston in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 21.

Advertiser Dec 31

Once only will, Josef Hofmann, the pianist, play in Boston in the course of the season—at a recital of his own in Symphony Hall, on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21.

Transcript Dec 29

JOSEF HOFMANN

The great Russian pianist, Josef Hofmann, will give his only concert of the season in Boston when he appears in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21.

Traveler Dec 30

JOSEF HOFMANN

Josef Hofmann, pianist, will give his sole recital in Boston in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, at 3:30 o'clock. Her 1-7

Herald Jan 7

HOFMANN COMING

Josef Hofmann, the great pianist, will make his only appearance in Boston this season in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, January 21.

Advertiser Jan 7

Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces played by Josef Hofmann, master of technique and tone, deep in insight, poised in imagination, musician of mind as well as of feeling, high-placed and firmly set among the illustrious pianists of our time. Not again this season will he be heard in Boston.

Transcript Jan 6

JOSEF HOFMANN

Josef Hofmann, long celebrated as one of the greatest pianists of all time, will give a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, at 3:30. This will be his only appearance in Boston this season.

Traveler Jan 6

At his concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, Mr. Hofmann will play Beethoven Sonata in A-flat; Opus 106; eight Studies of Chopin; and "Consolation" and the Spanish Rhapsody for seldom heard pieces of Liszt. Contrary to his custom, he will abound also in his own composition—five "Mignonettes" from a "Children's Corner" and a Study "for the Left-hand Alone"—or Mr. Hofmann fanciful technician.

Transcript Jan 11

A program of high interest will be presented by Josef Hofmann in a concert in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, February 21. The principal number will be the famous Hammerklavier sonata of Beethoven (op. 106), one of the master's final and mightiest works.

* * *

American Jan 13

A program of high interest and musical importance will be presented by Josef Hofmann when the great Russian pianist makes his only appearance in Boston this season in a concert in Symphony hall Sunday afternoon, Feb. 21, at 3:30. The principal number will be the famous Hammerklavier Sonata of Beethoven (op. 106), one of the master's final and mightiest works. Mr. Hofmann will play in succession eight etudes of Chopin, his own etude for left hand alone, and a suite, "The Children's Corner" (Mignonettes), including Lonesome, Wooden Soldiers, Lullaby, Sister's Dolly, Complaint. He will also play Liszt's Spanish Rhapsody and Consolation in D flat.

Telegram Jan 13

HOFMANN'S PROGRAM

Josef Hofmann, pianist, will present the following program at his sole Boston concert of the season in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, at 3:30: Her 1-14

Sonata, Opus 106 .... Beethoven
8 Etudes .... Chopin
E major, C sharp minor.
A flat major, F major, C major.
C sharp minor, G flat major (black keys)
C minor (Revolutionary).
Mignonettes (Children's Corner) .. Hofmann
(a) Lonesome.
(b) Wooden Soldiers.
(c) Lullaby.
(d) Sister's Dolly.
(e) Complaint.
Etude in C major (for the left hand alone) .... Hofmann
Consolation in D flat major .... Liszt
Spanish Rhapsody .... Liszt

Herald Jan 14

Hofmann's Programme

Josef Hofmann, the great Russian pianist, will play in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, at 3:30. His programme includes the Sonata, Opus 106, of Beethoven; Eight Etudes of Chopin; "Mignonettes" (Children's Corner), and Etude in C major (for the left hand alone), Josef Hofmann, and two compositions of Liszt.

Post Jan 14

Sunday, Jan 21, at 3:30, Josef Hofmann, pianist. Sonata, opus 106, "For the Hammerklavier," Beethoven; eight etudes, Chopin; "Mignonettes," and etude for the left hand alone, Hofmann; "Consolation," in D flat, and Spanish rhapsody, Liszt.

Globe Jan 14

HOFMANN'S PROGRAM

Josef Hofmann will present the following program at his only Boston recital this season to be given in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon:

Sonata, Opus 106 .... Beethoven
Eight Etudes .... Chopin
Mignonettes (Children's Corner)
Josef Hofmann
Etude in C Major (for left hand) . Hofmann
Consolation in D Flat Major .... Liszt
Spanish Rhapsody .... Liszt

Advertiser Jan 14

SUNDAY afteroon, Jan. 21, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces played by Josef Hofmann, master of technique and tone, deep in insight, poised in imagination, musician of mind as well as of feeling, high-placed and firmly set among the illustrious pianists of our time. Not again this season will he be heard in Boston. His programme traverses Beethoven's Sonata, Opus 106; eight Studies of Chopin; Liszt's seldom heard "Consolation" and his Spanish Rhapsody; "Mignonettes" from the pianist's "Children's Corner & a Study of his own for the left hand

Transcript Jan 13

HOFMANN'S PROGRAM

A program of interest and musical importance will be presented by Josef Hofmann when the great Russian pianist makes his only appearance in Boston this season in a concert in Symphony hall, Sunday afternoon, Feb. 21, at 3:30.

PEOPLE'S SYMPHONY

Traveler Jan 13

HOFMANN PROGRAM

Josef Hofmann, the Polish pianist, will give his only Boston concert of the season in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. His program will include Beethoven's famous "Hammorklavier" Sonata, Opus 106, Etudes of Chopin in E major, C sharp, A flat minor, C sharp minor, G flat major (black keys), and C minor, his own suite "Children's Corner," consisting of (a)—Lonesome; (b)—Wooden Soldiers; (c)—Complaint; (d)—Sister's Dolly; also his own Etude for the left hand alone, and Liszt's Consolation in D flat major, and Spanish Rhapsody.

American Jan 20

HOFMANN'S PROGRAM

Josef Hofmann, pianist, will present the following program at his sole Boston concert of the season in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21, at 3:30:

Sonata, Opus 106 .... Beethoven
8 Etudes .... Chopin
E major, C sharp minor.
A flat major, F major, C major.
C sharp minor, G flat major (black keys.
C minor (Revolutionary).
Mignonettes (Children's Corner) .. Hofmann
(a) Lonesome.
(b) Wooden Soldiers.
(c) Lullaby.
(d) Sister's Dolly.
(e) Complaint.

Her 1/21

Herald Jan 21

Mr. Hofmann in Prime

For the single recital that he undertakes each season in Boston comes Josef Hofmann, the pianist to Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon—master of technique and tone, deep in insight, poised in imagination, musician of mind as well as of feeling, high-placed and firmly set among the illustrious pianists of our time, this winter by all report excelling even himself. His programme traverses Beethoven's Sonata, Opus 106; six Studies of Chopin; Liszt's seldom heard "Consolation" and his Spanish Rhapsody; "Mignonettes" from the pianist's "Children's Corner," and a Study of his own for the left hand alone.

Transcript Jan 20

HOFMANN TODAY

The following program will be played by Josef Hofmann at Symphony Hall this afternoon:

Sonata, Opus 106 .... Beethoven
8 Etudes: E Major .... Chopin
C Sharp Minor
A Flat Major
C Sharp Minor
G Flat Major (black keys).
C Minor (revolution).
Mignonettes (Children's Corner)
Josef Hofmann
Etude in C Major (for the left hand alone) .... Joseph Hofmann
Consolation in D Flat Major .... Liszt
Spanish Rhapsody .... Liszt

Advertiser Jan 21

Hofmann Plays Today

The following splendid programme, headed by Beethoven's famous "Hammerclavier" Sonata of his later years, will be played by Josef Hofmann, the great Polish pianist, at his only Boston concert of the season in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30:

Sonata Opus 106, Beethoven; eight etudes, E major, C sharp minor, A flat major, C sharp minor, G flat major (black keys), C minor (Revolution), Chopin; Mignonettes (Children's Corner), Josef Hofmann; a. Lonesome (song without words); b Wooden Soldiers (march); c, Complaint (Nocturne): d, Sister's Dolly (polka); Etude in C major (for the left hand alone), Josef Hofmann; Consolation in D flat major, Liszt; Spanish Rhapsody, Liszt.

Post Jan 21

HOFMANN PLAYS EXTRA PIECES

Free With Encores in Middle of Programme

Josef Hofmann, pianist, gave a concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. There was a large audience which greeted the pianist with a storm of applause when he first came on the stage. It was his first and probably only concert of the year, and his success was remarkable. By the time the pianist had even partially satisfied his audience his programme had lengthened to gigantic proportions. The concert started at half past three, and at six o'clock, spurred on by continued applause, Hofmann was still playing.

The pianist seemed in a mood for playing, for after his group of Chopin Etudes he played no less than four encores, and this, mind, in the middle of the programme. These encores were all from Chopin, if memory serves right. In the Etudes Hofmann exhibited once more his crystal-clear technique, his delicate phrasing, and his enormous power. All these things make an old story. Hofmann is still an amazing technician on the pianoforte, undoubtedly one of the greatest of all time. His dynamic changes of touch were just as surprising yesterday as they have always been; one doesn't get used to such prodigious skill.

No more does one become accustomed to Hofmann's essentially unmusical playing. It is not that he doesn't play the pieces "right." If another played them in Hofmann's fashion he would be hailed as a genius. But one expects something more from Mr. Hofmann. His playing of Beethoven's "Hammerklavier" Sonata was a soporific, because one felt that Hofmann was not doing what he could very well do with the Sonata, that he was uninterested. And this attitude, of course, leads immediately to lack of interest on the part of the listener.

In the Chopin Etudes, strangely enough, he was more successful, though even here he resorted to idiosyncrasies which are unexplainable. He played his own Mignonettes (Children's Corner) very well, but we saw no particular reason for the playing. We liked best of all his playing of that great show-piece, Liszt's "Spanish Rhapsody," which, in addition to being a showpiece, has some very lively themes. Such a piece is almost made to order for Hofmann. Yet even here, where one expects a good deal of thunder, Hofmann overpowered more than one listener. He is about the most powerful man who ever "tackled" the keyboard. And he shows very obviously that there can be too much power.

Post Jan 22

HOFMANN GETS BIG RECEPTION

Symphony Hall Audience Generous in Applause for Pianist

RESPONDS WITH MANY ENCORES

Josef Hoffmann, pianist, played this program at his recital yesterday afternoon, in Symphony hall: Sonata in B-flat, Opus 106 Beethoven; Etudes, Chopin, E major, C-sharp minor, A-flat major, C-sharp minor, G-flat major, C minor; "Mignonettes," "Lonesome," "Wooden Soldiers," "Complaint," "Sister's Dolly," Etude in C major (for the left hand alone), Josef Hofmann; Consolation in D-flat major, Spanish Rhapsody, Liszt.

It has been possible to read in the papers lately the views of eminent New York critics in regard to Mr. Hofmann's recent recital in Carnegie hall; the like of it, apparently, for grandeur, has seldom been heard. Though their enthusiasm is unfortunately no assurance of similar playing at a later concert, since a pianist is not a machine but a man subject to indispositions and moods, publishing it in the papers at least serves the useful purpose of putting an audience into the proper receptive attitude. Mr. Hofmann's audience yesterday, for instance, all disposed to be pleased, did not let it bother them one atom because the player thumped the piano brutally. Nor did they seem disturbed at the want of musical beauty, poetry or nobleness.

Mr. Hofmann's coarse energy, blusteringly in evidence all the afternoon, the people must have felt to be true greatness. If they were right (perhaps they were) they did well to applaud. Applaud they did, heartily, and not only in the desire for extra pieces, because the adagio in the sonata, after which, of course, there was nothing to be got, they acclaimed with true enthusiasm. In the course of the afternoon Mr. Hofmann had to play countless encore pieces. Whatever his musical abilities may be today, his is still the power to hold an audience in the hollow of his hand.

R. R. G.

Herald Jan 22

JOSEF HOFMANN IN PIANO RECITAL

Josef Hofmann gave a piano recital yesterday afternoon that roused considerable enthusiasm in an audience which did not fill Symphony Hall. Numerous extra pieces were added to the announced program.

Mr Hofmann has long been known here as one of the greatest living pianists. The extraordinarily subtle eloquence he showed yesterday in Beethoven's "Hammerklavier" sonata, abstruse yet noble music, upon which he lavished every resource of technique and imagination, set a new standard, even for Hofmann.

The individual merit of Hofmann's playing, its clarity and precision, which makes it easy for his hearers to follow every strand in the ever-weaving thread of music, made his Chopin etudes yesterday delightful to a listener weary of the muddled, smeared performances of them by most amateurs and many professionals.

His extraordinary sense of rhythm, with the perfect mastery he holds of his instrument, enable Mr Hofmann to play with the errorless accuracy of a machine. He does much more than any machine, however, has yet achieved, since his imagination dictates a perpetual series of nuances too delicate for any recording device to render.

The chief novelty on yesterday's program was Mr Hofmann's own "Mignonettes," a series of what Schumann would have called "Kinderscenen." These little pieces are agreeable trifles, composed in the early 1880's, when Hofmann was a small boy. He played also a new etude of his own for left hand alone, which has something to say, and says it with astonishing eloquence, considering the handicap the performer puts himself under.

Globe Jan 22

HOFMANN GIVES RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

By ZOE FABER

Josef Hofmann, pianist, gave his first recital of the season at Symphony Hall before an audience that comprised the usual and definite following that Mr. Hofmann has in Boston.

The fact that the artist played four encores successively at the conclusion of the group of Chopin Etudes is proof of how he was playing and also, incidentally, of the unbounded enthusiasm of the audience. In passing, it should be noted that the Chopin Etudes were a real joy.

Not in some time in Boston have we heard six of them played with so much given to each one individually. Especially beautiful was the first in E major. The Revolutionary in C minor was tremendous and quite brought down the house.

An interesting and unusual number was the "Mignonettes," consisting of four little pieces with a special appeal to children. These were composed by Mr. Hofmann at an early age and presaged at that time, we take it, the unusual talent of the musician.

As a whole, the concert was delightful because the artist was in a playing mood.

American Jan 22

Superlative Hofmann

For the hour brief record must suffice of Mr. Hofmann's concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. For it he assembled a singular programme which became yet more singular when he divided it by an intermezzo of three or four extra pieces. It began reasonably enough with Beethoven's far-spreading and far-mounting Sonata, Opus 106. It proceeded, again reasonably, with an assorted six of Chopin's Studies. Then came the interlude specified and after it six childish pieces by the pianist himself—childish by the date upon them, 1882, childish also in matter and manner. Then ensued an exercise in sonorities and juggling "For the Left Hand Alone," exercise also of the pianist in maturer, more inventive years. For ending stood the tonally tearful "Consolation" of Liszt and his musically barren but technically thunderous "Spanish Rhapsody."

With all these numbers Mr. Hoffmann was the pianist he has chosen to be in these recent years, when none many excel him in superlative technical mastery, as far-reaching command of tone, in play of rhythm, and modulation, progress and climax. Once more he both unfolded and knit the design and the structure of the music. Once more he made it the full voice of grave and brooding moods, of power released and sweeping. By these attributes he set free the substance and form, the passion and the striving of Beethoven's Sonata as scarcely another pianist may do. By them again he glorified the gymastics of Liszt à l'Espagnole. By them yet once more he transformed Chopin's Studies into rhapsodic tone-poems alight with power. Yet sometimes the fancy in them seemed to sigh as a voice smothered.

H. T. P.

Transcript Jan 22

Josef Hofmann

Josef Hofmann, in his piano recital at Symphony hall last Sunday afternoon, proved that the magic of his playing was as potent as ever. His program was as follows:

Beethoven Sonata in B Flat, Opus 106; Etudes, Chopin, E Major, C Sharp Minor, A Flat Major, C Sharp Minor, G Flat Major, C Minor; "Mignonettes," "Lonesome," "Wooden Soldiers," "Complaint," "Sister's Dolly," "Etude in C Major" (for left hand); Josef Hofmann; "Consolation in D Flat," Spanish rapsody, Liszt.

The thunders of the Beethoven Sonata were made to reverberate noisily by dint of considerable thumping, banging and whacking; albeit, its lovely Scherzo, a glint of sunshine through the storm, which was sent forth with charming appeal. Needless to say, the stupendous technical difficulties of this piece were tossed off by Mr. Hofmann as if they did not exist, though at the end of the colossal Fugue, taken with bewildering dash and speed, he was plainly tired. Nevertheless he added two encores.

In the group of his own compositions, composed some 38 or 40 years ago, he received a tremendous ovation that only the popular "Polonaise Militarie" could bring to a stop.

It would seem rather stupid to criticise Hofmann's playing. Hofmann is Hofmann and that is enough. He is quite beyond any blows that might be struck by a critic's typewriter if, indeed, such "blows" were necessary.

Telegram Jan 24

[127]

Sir Basil Thomson Jan. 8th 1923.

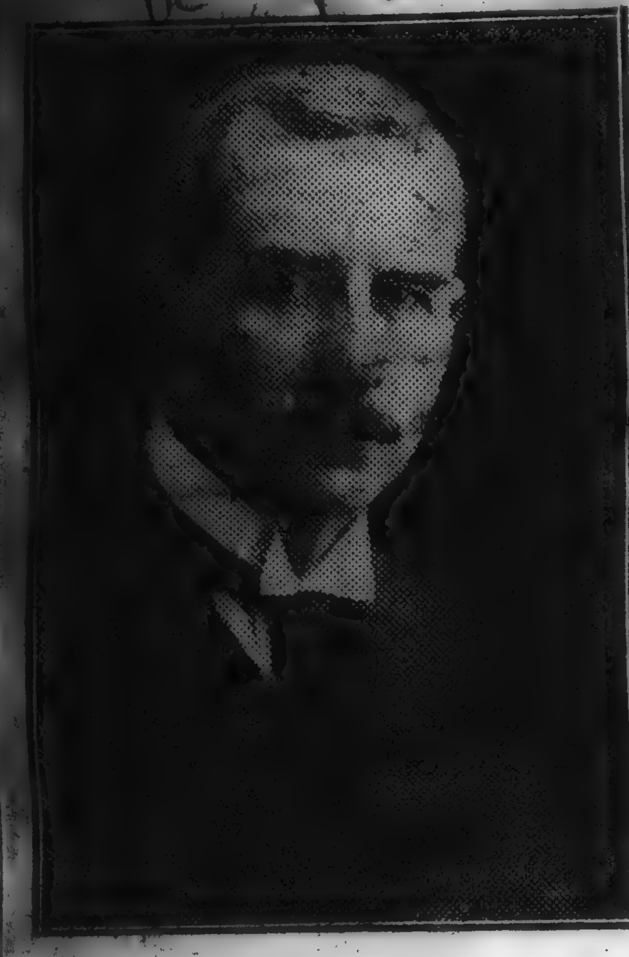
~~Ivogun~~ Feb. 4, 1923.

WILL TELL OF SCOTLAND YARD

Sir Basil Thomson to Lecture in Boston on Experiences as Head of England's Detective Force

Sir Basil Thomson, K.C.B., formerly head of the criminal investigation department of Scotland Yard, and director of the British secret sercice during the war, will lecture at Symphony Hall, on Monday, Jan. 8, under the auspices of the Boston Lions Club. His topic will be "My Experiences at Scotland Yard."

Sir Basil is the son of the late Archbishop of York. He is a graduate of New College, Oxford, and was formerly in the colonial service for the British Government. He took part in the exploration of New Guinea and subsequently held several official positions. On his return to England he was appointed to reorganize several prisons and this led to his becoming head of the department of criminal investigation at Scotland Yard. He has been responsible for the education of its detectives along new and improved lines.



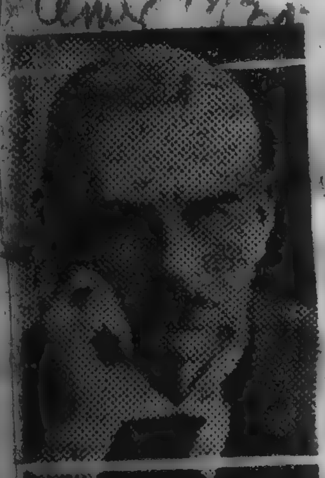
Sir Basil Thomson

Since the war he has been active in keeping Russian revolutionary emissaries from invading England, in connection with the activities of the radical British labor element.

Transcript Jan 2

'SHERLOCK HOLMES" TO LECTURE HERE

Quick, Watson--the needle! Sherlock Holmes is coming to Boston! Amer 1/2



Sir Basil King

Or, rather, Sir Basil King, K. C. B., former head of Scotland Yard and director of the British secret service during the war, is on his way here.

Sir Basil is said to be the closest approximation to Sherlock Holmes that ever existed. For years he was the power behind the British police, filling to a great extent the role of heroes of the type of Sherlock Holmes and Craig Kennedy.

He will lecture in Symphony Hall January 8 under the auspices of the Boston Lions Club. He will talk on "My Experiences at Scotland Yard."

American Dec 30

SCOTLAND YARD CHIEF TO SPEAK

Former Head of Noted Detective Organization Will Arrive in Boston Friday as Guest of Lions Club

Trans 1/4

Sir Basil Thomson, K.C.B., former head of Scotland Yard, will arrive in Boston tomorrow morning to lecture at Symphony Hall on Monday evening on "My Experiences at Scotland Yard." Sir Basil comes as the guest of the Lions Club, under whose auspices he will appear at Symphony Hall. At one o'clock tomorrow afternoon he will be the guest of the club at a luncheon at the Parker House. Mayor Curley, Commissioner of Police Herbert A. Wilson, Major General André Brewster, Colonel Frank C. Bolles, chief of staff 94th Division, O. R. C., and Edward F. Gray, British consul general, are among the guests invited. Sir Basil will stay at the Hotel Touraine.

Scotland Yard, of which Sir Basil was the head for more than eight years, came into existence about 1832, when Sir Robert Peel organized London's first metropolitan police to take the place of the "Bow street [illegible]," socalled because their duty was [illegible] criminals when fortunate [illegible] them. They usually made

---

Miss Ivogun, well remembered singer from the Sunday Concerts of last winter, will return to them at Symphony Hall on Jan. 28. A year ago the charm of her light voice, her graces in song, the quick, clear play of responsive feeling commended her. She then pleased a handful of the curious. To many more on her return she should give equal pleasure. Trans 1-10

Transcript Jan 10

Maria Ivogun, who first came to America last season and appeared with such fine success in leading roles with the Chicago Opera Company, is to give a concert in Boston, in Symphony Hall, on Sunday afternoon, February 4. Amer 1-13

* * *

American Jan 13

IVOGUN CONCERT

Adv 1-14

Maria Ivogun, the Hungarian colorature soprano, whose extraordinary vocal beauty and skill made her one of the most important newcomers to America last season, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 4.

Advertiser Jan 14

~~Sunday afternoon~~ - Feb 4 in S. H.

Hall, a concert of ornate operatic pieces, German, French and other songs, sung by Maria Ivogün, bright, clear and plastic of voice, excelling in florid music, deft with lightly moulded, lightly freighted pieces, sensitive, intelligent, ingratiating always. A year ago she proved her mettle to a pleasured audience. Trans 1-13

Transcript Jan 13

MARIA IVOGUN

Trav 1-13

The Hungarian soprano, Maria Ivogun; who first came to America last season and appeared with fine success in leading roles with the Chicago Opera Company and in a number of concerts in various cities, is to give a concert in Boston, in Symphony hall, on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4.

Traveler Jan 13

One of the most notable singers who came to Amercia last season was Maria Ivogun, the young Hungarian coloratura soprano. Miss Ivogun is to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 4. Amer 1-20

* * *

Amer Jan 20

Maria Ivogun, soprano, will give a recital in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4. Her 1-21

Herald Jan 21

Those who care for beautiful singing from a beautiful voice are urged by the reviewer for the Globe not to miss Maria Ivogun's recital at Symphony Hall, Feb 4. This testimonial is entirely unsolicited. Gl 1-21

Globe Jan 21

MARIA IVOGUN

Trav 1/27

On Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4, in Symphony hall, Maria Ivogun, the Hungarian coloratura soprano who aroused such great enthusiasm by her appearances with the Chicago Opera Company last season and likewise in concerts, will sing here. This artist will sing two numbers with flute obbligato—Bishop's "Lo, Here the Gentle Lark" and Densmore's "The Voice and the Flute."

Traveler Jan 27

SUNDAY afternoon, Feb. 4, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Maria Ivogün, bright, clear and plastic of voice, excelling in florid music, deft with lightly moulded, lightly freighted pieces, sensitive, intelligent, ingratiating always. A year ago she proved her mettle to a pleasured audience. She will sing airs of Mozart; songs of Schubert; American miscellany; sundry ornate numbers.

Trans 1-27

Transcript Jan 27

IVOGUN'S PROGRAM

Maria Ivogun, the Hungarian coloratura soprano who came to America for the first time last season will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4, at 3:30.

Her 1-28

"Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark" .... Bishop
(With flute.)
Aria, "Martern aller Arten" .... Mozart
Alleluja .... Mozart
Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt .... Schubert
Pastorella .... Schubert
Die Forelle .... Schubert
Seligkeit .... Schubert
"Come Unto These Yellow Sands" .... Laforge
"Windflowers" .... Josten
"Pirate Dreams" .... Huerter
"Brown Birdeen" .... Buzzi-Peccia
"The Voice and the Flute" .... Densmore
(With flute.)

Herald Jan 28

Maria Ivogun Sings With Chicago Symphony

Mon 1/17

Special from Monitor Bureau

CHICAGO, Jan. 16—Maria Ivogun occupied a large space in the artistic scheme set forth by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at its concerts last Friday and Saturday. Miss Ivogun is one of the exponents of the gymnastic vocalization which, in mid-Victorian days, ran to florid cadenzas and obbligatos on the flute. Both those things were in evidence at this concert, for the soloist sang the air "L'Amerò sarò costante" from Mozart's "Il Re Pastore"—that contained a violin obbligato for a change—the air "Sweet Bird" from Handel's "L'Allegro, il Penseroso ed il Moderato" (with the inevitable flute) and the Bell song from Delibes' "Lakmé." There can be no doubt that the artist who negotiated these arias stands well to the front among the coloratura sisterhood. Her bravura is of impressive brilliancy and her tone is of ingratiating kind. Moreover, Miss Ivogun is successful in the matter of intonation.

Among the purely orchestral morceaux Mr. Stock included a tone poem entitled "In a Withered Garden," by Elliott Schenck. This was one of five symphonic works selected from over 70 submitted in the Chicago North Shore Festival competition last season and played at a public rehearsal at Evanston in May. Mr. Schenck has been an industrious composer, for his portfolio contains the scores of two operas, symphonic poems, overtures and other extensive works, and he has worked, perhaps without much artistic pleasure on his part, in providing theatrical productions with tunes.

"In a Withered Garden" contains some highly imaginative music. Believing, apparently, that one must be up to date in order to win the laurel of success, Mr. Schenck has poured modernity in liberal measure on the pages of his score. There are plenty of bizarre harmonic effects and a nice adjustment of melodic conditions to the exigencies of the whole tone scale. But the fact of importance is that the composer was able to establish a mood, and by that token "In a Withered Garden" was of interest.

Mr. Stock's musicians gave a lovely interpretation to the F major symphony by Brahms, and a glowing and brilliant one to the "Don Juan" by Richard Strauss. F. B.

Monitor Jan 17

IVOGUN COMING

Adv 1-28

Maria Ivogun, the young Hungarian coloratura soprano, who has won an enviable place among the singers of the day, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 4.

Advertiser Jan 28

IVOGUN PROGRAM

Maria Ivogun, the Hungarian coloratura soprano, who came to America for the first time last season and was praised as a supreme mistress of ornate and lyric song, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall nevt Sunday afternoon. Her program includes: "Lo, Here the Gentle Lark," by Mozart; "Martern aller Arten," and "Alleluja." A group of Schubert songs and then modern songs. Adv 1-28

Advertiser Jan 28

When Miss Ivogun, the soprano of bright voice and supple skill in ornate song, re-appears at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4, she will sing Mozart's flooding "Alleluia"; the much-adorned air from his opera, "Il Seraglio"; a bedecked piece by Bishop; four songs of Schubert and five by miscellaneous minor composers. The good memory of her concert in Boston last year heralds her. Trans 1-26

Transcript Jan 26

Trav 2-3

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30, Maria Ivogun, the Hungarian coloratura soprano, will give a concert. This singer, who came to America last year from Europe, where she had long held a pre-eminent reputation, completely captivated audiences when she appeared with the Chicago Opera Company and when she gave concerts in various cities.

She will sing with flute obligato songs by Bishop and Adam, also four songs by Schubert, an aria from "Don Pasquale," and songs by La Forge, Josten, Huerter and Buzzi-Peccia.

Traveler Feb 3

Mme. Ivogun Returns

Trans 2/3

A year ago, to a surprised and pleasured audience, Mme. Ivogün, newly come to America and to Boston, proved her mettle as singer, bright, clear and plastic of voice, excelling in florid music, deft with lightly moulded, lightly freighted pieces, sensitive, intelligent, ingratiating always. With one accord all who heard applauded and prophesied. Now that she is to return to Symphony Hall for a concert tomorrow afternoon they have only to remember their sayings and fulfil them. If they do, Mme. Ivogün, here as elsewhere, will lack neither audience nor plaudits. She will sing airs of Mozart; songs of Schubert; American miscellany; sundry ornate numbers.

Transcript Feb 3

MARIA IVOGUN

Amer 2/3

Maria Ivogun, the Hungarian coloratura soprano, will give a concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. This singer, who came to America last year from Europe, where she had long held a pre-eminent reputation, completely captivated her audiences by the charm of her singing when she appeared with the Chicago Opera Company and when she gave concerts in various cities.

American Feb 3

IVOGUN SINGS TODAY

Post 2/4

The Hungarian coloratura soprano, Maria Ivogun, will give a concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. She came to America last year, appearing with the Chicago Opera Company in Chicago and New York, likewise in concerts in various cities.

Madame Ivogun will sing music by Bishop, Schubert, Donizetti, Frank La Forge, Werner Josten, Huerter, A. Buzzi-Peccia and others.

Post Feb 4

Ivogun Sings at Symphony Hall Today

MARIA IVOGUN, famous Hungarian coloratura soprano, will give a concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon. In Central Europe she has been in recent years considered the finest living mistress of ornate song. She came to America last year appearing with the Chicago Opera Company and also in concerts, captivating audiences by the charm of her voice and the remarkable use of coloratura.

Classic songs by Donizetti, Adam, Bishop and Schubert and new songs in English are on the program.

Advertiser Feb 4

IVOGUN SINGS TODAY

The Hungarian coloratura soprano, Maria Ivogun, will give a concert in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30. In Central Europe she has been in recent years considered one of the finest living mistresses of ornate song. She came to America last year and appearing with the Chicago Opera Company in Chicago and New York, likewise in concerts in various cities, captivated her audiences by the charm of her voice and her coloratura. Her 2/4

Mme. Ivogun will sing at this concert:

Lo, Here the Gentle Lark (with flute) .... Bishop
Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt .... Schubert
Pastorella .... Schubert
Die Forelle .... Schubert
Seligkeit .... Schubert
Cavatina: "So anch'io la virtu magica," from "Don Pasquale" .... Donizetti
Come Unto These Yellow Sands .... La Forge
Windflowers .... Werner Josten
Pirate Dreams .... Huerter
Brown Birdeen .... Buzzi-Peccia
Variations on a melody by Mozart (with flute)

Herald Feb 4

Ivogun Concert Today Promises Fine Singing

Gl 2/4

Maria Ivogun, the coloratura soprano to be heard this afternoon at Symphony Hall, began her career in opera at Munich in 1913. In 1921, she came to America to sing with the Chicago Opera, which accorded her but one performance, late in the season. She was enthusiastically received by public and critics, but politics within the company seems to have prevented a reengagement.

She has been soloist with most of the leading Symphony orchestras in this country, and has given many recitals in various cities, winning a good deal of very high praise. The reviewer for the Globe was unusually enthusiastic about her first Boston concert, at Symphony Hall, last year. Here is a clear, sweet, pure soprano, which takes very [illegible] notes with an extraordinary [illegible] and beauty of tone, almost [illegible] among contemporary singers. One doubly regrets the [illegible] arias by [illegible] from her [illegible]

Globe Feb 4

Reviews! 4th page ahead

[128]

Sir Basil Thomson. Jan. 8th, 1923.

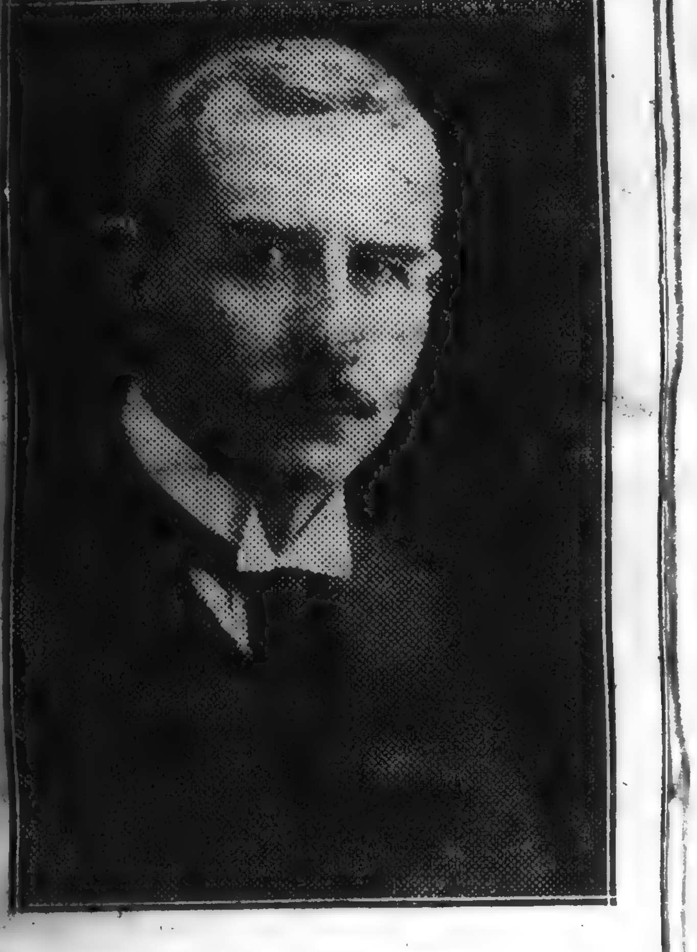
~~Ivogun~~ Feb. 4, 1923.

WILL TELL OF SCOTLAND YARD

Sir Basil Thomson to Lecture in Boston on Experiences as Head of England's Detective Force

Sir Basil Thomson, K.C.B., formerly head of the criminal investigation department of Scotland Yard, and director of the British secret sercice during the war, will lecture at Symphony Hall, on Monday, Jan. 8, under the auspices of the Boston Lions Club. His topic will be "My Experiences at Scotland Yard."

Tr 1-2



Sir Basil Thomson

Sir Basil is the son of the late Archbishop of York. He is a graduate of New College, Oxford, and was formerly in the colonial service for the British Government. He took part in the exploration of New Guinea and subsequently held several official positions. On his return to England he was appointed to reorganize several prisons and this led to his becoming head of the department of criminal investigation at Scotland Yard. He has been responsible for the education of its detectives along new and improved lines.

Since the war he has been active in keeping Russian revolutionary emissaries from invading England, in connection with the activities of the radical British labor element.

Transcript Jan 2

'SHERLOCK HOLMES" TO LECTURE HERE

Quick, Watson--the needle! Sherlock Holmes is coming to Boston!

Amer 12/30

Sir Basil King

Or, rather, Sir Basil King, K. C. B., former head of Scotland Yard and director of the British secret service during the war, is on his way here.

Sir Basil is said to be the closest approximation to Sherlock Holmes that ever existed. For years he was the power behind the British police, filling to a great extent the role of heroes of the type of Sherlock Holmes and Craig Kennedy.

He will lecture in Symphony Hall January 8 under the auspices of the Boston Lions Club. He will talk on "My Experiences at Scotland Yard."

American Dec 30

SCOTLAND YARD CHIEF TO SPEAK

Former Head of Noted Detective Organization Will Arrive in Boston Friday as Guest of Lions Club

Trans 1/4

Sir Basil Thomson, K.C.B., former head of Scotland Yard, will arrive in Boston tomorrow morning to lecture at Symphony Hall on Monday evening on "My Experiences at Scotland Yard." Sir Basil comes as the guest of the Lions Club, under whose auspices he will appear at Symphony Hall. At one o'clock tomorrow afternoon he will be the guest of the club at a luncheon at the Parker House. Mayor Curley, Commissioner of Police Herbert A. Wilson, Major General André Brewster, Colonel Frank C. Bolles, chief of staff 94th Division, O. R. C., and Edward F. Gray, British consul general, are among the guests invited. Sir Basil will stay at the Hotel Touraine.

Scotland Yard, of which Sir Basil was the head for more than eight years, came into existence about 1832, when Sir Robert Peel organized London's first metropolitan police to take the place of the "Bow street runners," socalled because their duty was to run after criminals when fortunate enough to locate them. They usually made [illegible] of it. Peel's men were called [illegible] "bobbies" and these names still [illegible]

Transcript Jan 4

Miss Ivogün, well remembered singer from the Sunday Concerts of last winter, will return to them at Symphony Hall on Jan. 28. A year ago the charm of her light voice, her graces in song, the quick, clear play of responsive feeling commended her. She then pleased a handful of the curious. To many more on her return she should give equal pleasure. Trans 1-10

Transcript Jan 10

Maria Ivogun, who first came to America last season and appeared with such fine success in leading roles with the Chicago Opera Company, is to give a concert in Boston, in Symphony Hall, on Sunday afternoon, February 4. Amer 1-13

* * *

American Jan 13

IVOGUN CONCERT

Maria Ivogun, the Hungarian colorature soprano, whose extraordinary vocal beauty and skill made her one of the most important newcomers to America last season, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 4.

Advertiser Jan 14

~~Sunday afternoon~~ - Feb. 4 in S. H.

Hall, a concert of ornate operatic pieces, German, French and other songs, sung by Maria Ivogün, bright, clear and plastic of voice, excelling in florid music, deft with lightly moulded, lightly freighted pieces, sensitive, intelligent, ingratiating always. A year ago she proved her mettle to a pleasured audience. Trans 1-13

Transcript Jan 13

MARIA IVOGUN

Trav 1-13

The Hungarian soprano, Maria Ivogun, who first came to America last season and appeared with fine success in leading roles with the Chicago Opera Company and in a number of concerts in various cities, is to give a concert in Boston, in Symphony hall, on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4.

Traveler Jan 13

One of the most notable singers who came to Amercia last season was Maria Ivogun, the young Hungarian coloratura soprano. Miss Ivogun is to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 4. Amer 1-20

* * *

Amer Jan 20

Maria Ivogun, soprano, will give a recital in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4.

Herald Jan 21

Those who care for beautiful singing from a beautiful voice are urged by the reviewer for the Globe not to miss Maria Ivogun's recital at Symphony Hall, Feb 4. This testimonial is entirely unsolicited. Gl 1-21

Globe Jan 21

MARIA IVOGUN

Trav 1/27

On Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4, in Symphony hall, Maria Ivogun, the Hungarian coloratura soprano who aroused such great enthusiasm by her appearances with the Chicago Opera Company last season and likewise in concerts, will sing here. This artist will sing two numbers with flute obbligato—Bishop's "Lo, Here the Gentle Lark" and Denmore's "The Voice and the Flute."

Traveler Jan 27

SUNDAY afternoon, Feb. 4, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Maria Ivogün, bright, clear and plastic of voice, excelling in florid music, deft with lightly moulded, lightly freighted pieces, sensitive, intelligent, ingratiating always. A year ago she proved her mettle to a pleasured audience. She will sing airs of Mozart; songs of Schubert; American miscellany; sundry ornate numbers. Trans 1/27

Transcript Jan 27

IVOGUN'S PROGRAM

Maria Ivogun, the Hungarian coloratura soprano who came to America for the first time last season will give a concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4, at 3:30. He 1-28

"Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark" .... Bishop
(With flute.)
Aria, "Martern aller Arten" .... Mozart
Alleluja .... Mozart
Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt .... Schubert
Pastorella .... Schubert
Die Forelle .... Schubert
Seligkeit .... Schubert
"Come Unto These Yellow Sands" .... Laforge
"Windflowers" .... Josten
"Pirate Dreams" .... Huerter
"Brown Birdeen" .... Buzzi-Peccia
"The Voice and the Flute" .... Densmore
(With flute.)

Herald Jan 28

Maria Ivogun Sings With Chicago Symphony

Mon 1/17

Special from Monitor Bureau

CHICAGO, Jan. 16—Maria Ivogun occupied a large space in the artistic scheme set forth by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at its concerts last Friday and Saturday. Miss Ivogun is one of the exponents of the gymnastic vocalization which, in mid-Victorian days, ran to florid cadenzas and obbligatos on the flute. Both those things were in evidence at this concert, for the soloist sang the air "L'Amerò sarò costante" from Mozart's "Il Re Pastore"—that contained a violin obbligato for a change—the air "Sweet Bird" from Handel's "L'Allegro, il Penseroso ed il Moderato" (with the inevitable flute) and the Bell song from Delibes' "Lakmé." There can be no doubt that the artist who negotiated these arias stands well to the front among the coloratura sisterhood. Her bravura is of impressive brilliancy and her tone is of ingratiating kind. Moreover, Miss Ivogun is successful in the matter of intonation.

Among the purely orchestral morceaux Mr. Stock included a tone poem entitled "In a Withered Garden," by Elliott Schenck. This was one of five symphonic works selected from over 70 submitted in the Chicago North Shore Festival competition last season and played at a public rehearsal at Evanston in May. Mr. Schenck has been an industrious composer, for his portfolio contains the scores of two operas, symphonic poems, overtures and other extensive works, and he has worked, perhaps without much artistic pleasure on his part, in providing theatrical productions with tunes.

"In a Withered Garden" contains some highly imaginative music. Believing, apparently, that one must be up to date in order to win the laurel of success, Mr. Schenck has poured modernity in liberal measure on the pages of his score. There are plenty of bizarre harmonic effects and a nice adjustment of melodic conditions to the exigencies of the whole tone scale. But the fact of importance is that the composer was able to establish a mood, and by that token "In a Withered Garden" was of interest.

Mr. Stock's musicians gave a lovely interpretation to the F major symphony by Brahms, and a glowing and brilliant one to the "Don Juan" by Richard Strauss. F. B.

Monitor Jan 17

IVOGUN COMING

Maria Ivogun, the young Hungarian coloratura soprano, who has won an enviable place among the singers of the day, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 4.

Advertiser Jan 28

IVOGUN PROGRAM

Maria Ivogun, the Hungarian coloratura soprano, who came to America for the first time last season and was praised as a supreme mistress of ornate and lyric song, is to give a concert in Symphony Hall nevt Sunday afternoon. Her program includes: "Lo, Here the Gentle Lark," by Mozart; "Martern aller Arten," and "Alleluja." A group of Schubert songs and then modern songs. Adv 1-28

Advertiser Jan 28

When Miss Ivogun, the soprano of bright voice and supple skill in ornate song, reappears at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 4, she will sing Mozart's flooding "Alleluia"; the much-adorned air from his opera, "Il Seraglio"; a bedecked piece by Bishop; four songs of Schubert and five by miscellaneous minor composers. The good memory of her concert in Boston last year heralds her. Trans 1-26

Transcript Jan 26

Trav 2-3

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30, Maria Ivogun, the Hungarian coloratura soprano, will give a concert. This singer, who came to America last year from Europe, where she had long held a pre-eminent reputation, completely captivated audiences when she appeared with the Chicago Opera Company and when she gave concerts in various cities.

She will sing with flute obligato songs by Bishop and Adam, also four songs by Schubert, an aria from "Don Pasquale," and songs by La Forge, Josten, Huerter and Buzzi-Peccia.

Traveler Feb 3

[128]

Mme. Ivogun Returns

Trans 2/3

A year ago, to a surprised and pleasured audience, Mme. Ivogün, newly come to America and to Boston, proved her mettle as singer, bright, clear and plastic of voice, excelling in florid music, deft with lightly moulded, lightly freighted pieces, sensitive, intelligent, ingratiating always. With one accord all who heard applauded and prophesied. Now that she is to return to Symphony Hall for a concert tomorrow afternoon they have only to remember their sayings and fulfil them. If they do, Mme. Ivogün, here as elsewhere, will lack neither audience nor plaudits. She will sing airs of Mozart; songs of Schubert; American miscellany; sundry ornate numbers.

Transcript Feb 3

MARIA IVOGUN

Amer 2/3

Maria Ivogun, the Hungarian coloratura soprano, will give a concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. This singer, who came to America last year from Europe, where she had long held a pre-eminent reputation, completely captivated her audiences by the charm of her singing when she appeared with the Chicago Opera Company and when she gave concerts in various cities.

American Feb 3

IVOGUN SINGS TODAY

Post 2/4

The Hungarian coloratura soprano, Maria Ivogun, will give a concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. She came to America last year, appearing with the Chicago Opera Company in Chicago and New York, likewise in concerts in various cities.

Madame Ivogun will sing music by Bishop, Schubert, Donizetti, Frank La Forge, Werner Josten, Huerter, A. Buzzi-Peccia and others.

Post Feb 4

Ivogun Sings at Symphony Hall Today

MARIA IVOGUN, famous Hungarian coloratura soprano, will give a concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon. In Central Europe she has been in recent years considered the finest living mistress of ornate song. She came to America last year appearing with the Chicago Opera Company and also in concerts, captivating audiences by the charm of her voice and the remarkable use of coloratura.

Classic songs by Donizetti, Adam, Bishop and Schubert and new songs in English are on the program.

Advertiser Feb 4

IVOGUN SINGS TODAY

The Hungarian coloratura soprano, Maria Ivogun, will give a concert in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30. In Central Europe she has been in recent years considered one of the finest living mistresses of ornate song. She came to America last year and, appearing with the Chicago Opera Company in Chicago and New York, likewise in concerts in various cities, captivated her audiences by the charm of her voice and her coloratura. He 2/4

Mme. Ivogun will sing at this concert:

Lo, Here the Gentle Lark (with flute), ... Bishop
Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt .... Schubert
Pastorella .... Schubert
Die Forelle .... Schubert
Seligkeit .... Schubert
Cavatina: "So anch'io la virtu magica," from "Don Pasquale" .... Donizetti
Come Unto These Yellow Sands .... La Forge
Windflowers .... Werner Josten
Pirate Dreams .... Huerter
Brown Birdeen .... Buzzi-Peccia
Variations on a melody by Mozart (with flute) ....

Herald Feb 4

Ivogun Concert Today Promises Fine Singing

Gl 2/4

Maria Ivogun, the coloratura soprano to be heard this afternoon at Symphony Hall, began her career in opera at Munich in 1913. In 1921, she came to America to sing with the Chicago Opera, which accorded her but one performance, late in the season. She was enthusiastically received by public and critics, but politics within the company seems to have prevented a reengagement.

She has been soloist with most of the leading Symphony orchestras in this country, and has given many recitals in various cities, winning a good deal of very high praise. The reviewer for the Globe was unusually enthusiastic about her first Boston concert, at Symphony Hall, last year. Hers is a clear, sweet, pure soprano, which takes very high notes with an extraordinary warmth and beauty of tone, almost unparalleled among contemporary singers.

One deeply regrets the absence of arias by Mozart from her Boston program, since she is one of the few living sopranos capable of singing his music beautifully. She has set herself with [illegible]

Globe Feb 4

Reviews 4th page ahead

Onegin Feb 8, 1923

Programmes in Prospect

For once, we in Boston are to hear a notable singer of the Metropolitan Opera House while she is still new and stirring comer—Sigrid Onégin, announced for a concert of her own at Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Feb. 8. Her voice is a magnificent mezzo-soprano, ranging downward rather than upward—a voice in full prime of body, resonance, pliancy and color. She uses it with large skill; while over it play both power and beauty. Even more in the concert-hall than in the oper house, New York, whither she came las autumn from Munich, has applauded he

Transcript Jan 5

ONEGIN COMING

Adv 1-14

One of the most important acquisition of the Metropolitan Opera Company this season is Sigrid Onegin, contralto of Swedish origin, who will make her first appearance in Boston in concert at Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, February 8.

Advertiser Jan 14

Sigrid Onegin, the contralto of Swedish origin, is to visit Boston and make her debut in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, February 8. Amer 1-13

American Jan 13

Thursday evening, Feb. 8, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Sigrid O'negin, applauded newcomer from German stages to the Metropolitan Opera House. A contralto voice of rare depth, richness, power and pliancy distinguishes her. She uses opulently the arts of song. In the concert-hall she has won more praise than even in the opera house. One of the "revelations" of the musical year.

Transcript Jan 13

SIGRID ONEGIN

There is considerable curiosity and interest hereabouts in Sigrid Onegin, the contralto of Swedish origin, who is looked upon as the most important of the season's new singers in the Metropolitan Opera House, and who is to visit Boston and make her debut in concert in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Feb. 8.

Traveler Jan 13

Sigrid Onegin, the Swedish contralto, will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, February 8.

* * *

American Jan 20

Sigrid Onegin, who made her first appearance in Chicago at a recital given Jan. 12, disclosed a contralto voice the richness of which was equaled only by the skill with which it was handled. Having heard Mme. Onegin negotiate some old arias—notably Lotti's "Pur Dicesti" and the "Chi Vuoi la Zingarella" by Paisello—as well as some modern American compositions, it becomes easy to predict for her a distinguished future; for this artist evidently has learned that much more goes to singing than voice and that hearts must be moved as well as ears soothed with sensuous beauty of tone. F. B.

Monitor Jan 20

Sigrid Onegin, the distinguished contralto of the Metropolitan Opera House, will give a concert in Symphony hall on Thursday evening, Feb. 8. German Liedor, Italian songs by the old masters and Pastourellas of the 16th century.

Herald Jan 21

ONEGIN CONCERT

Sigrid Onegin, the sensational Swedish contralto, newly acquired by the Metropolitan Opera Company, will give a concert at Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, February 8. Her program will include German lieder, old Italian songs and a group of pastourelles.

Advertiser Jan 21

Sigrid Onegin, the Metropolitan Opera's sensational new mezzo soprano, has made a great hit in recital in Chicago. She will sing here for the first time Feb 8. Her voice is said to be the best of its kind since Schumann-Heink.

Globe Jan 21

SIGRID ONEGIN

No other new singer of the season in New York has made more impression than Sigrid Onegin, the Swedish contralto. Coming from central Europe, where she has long been held in the highest esteem both in concert and opera, she has immediately won high renown in both fields, having already appeared in several important parts at the Metropolitan Opera House. There is keen interest, therefore, in her coming concert in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Feb.

Traveler Jan 20

SIGRID ONEGIN

Sigrid Onegin, the Swedish contralto, is to make her Boston debut in a concert in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Feb. 8. Mme. Onegin will sing a group of French pastorals; Italian songs, groups of songs by Schubert and by Brahms, and English songs by Fisher, Deis, Clarke, and Ronald.

Traveler Jan 27

Thursday evening, Feb. 8, in Symphony Hall, a concert by Sigrid Onegin, applauded newcomer from German stages to the Metropolitan Opera House. A contralto voice of rare depth, richness, power and pliancy distinguishes her. She uses opulently the arts of song. In the concert-hall she has won more praise than even in the opera house. One of the "revelations" of the musical year. Old Italian airs; songs of Schubert and Brahms; light French pieces of the seventeenth century; Anglo-American miscellany fill her programme.

Transcript Jan 27

ONEGIN COMING

Sigrid Onegin, the remarkable Swedish contralto, who is looked upon as one of the most important acquisitions of the Metropolitan Opera Company in many years, and who has likewise completely charmed New York by her concerts, will make her Boston debut in Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, February 8.

Advertiser Jan 28

When, in turn, Mme. Onegin, the new and rich-voiced alto of the Metropolitan Opera House, ventures a song-recital at Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, Feb. 8, she will be heard in old airs of Marcello, Lotti and Paisiello; songs of Schubert and Brahms; light French pieces set down in the seventeenth century and arranged by Weckerlin in the nineteenth. The usual Anglo-American miscellany rounds her programme.

Transcript Jan 26

Mme Onegin Comes

For the first time in Boston, at Symphony Hall on Thursday evening, a new and noted singer will be heard—Mme. Sigrid Onegin, lately passed from German stages to the Metropolitan Opera House. A contralto voice of rare depth, richness, power and pliancy distinguishes her. She uses opulently the arts of song. In the concert-hall she has won more praise than even in the opera house. One of the "revelations" of the musical year. Old Italian airs; songs of Schubert and Brahms; light French pieces of the seventeenth century; Anglo-American miscellany fill her programme.

Transcript Feb 3

ONEGIN'S DEBUT

One of the most important concerts of the season in Boston will be the first appearance here of Sigrid Onegin, the Swedish contralto who comes to Symphony hall next Thursday evening, Feb. 8th, for her first Boston concert.

Mme. Onegin will sing old Italian songs by Marcello, Lotti and Paisiello, songs by Schubert and Brahms, French pastorals of the 17th century, and songs by Fisher, Harris, Clarke and Deis.

Traveler Feb 3

ONEGIN'S DEBUT

One of the most important concerts of the season in Boston will be the first appearance here of Sigrid Onegin, the Swedish contralto who, coming to America for the first time, has become one of the foremost singers of the Metropolitan Opera Company. This splendid artist has won even higher praise in recital in New York, and therefore she should be heard at her best when she comes to Symphony Hall next Thursday evening.

American Feb 3

Post 2/4 SIGRID ONEGIN

Perhaps the most important new sing er of the season in New York is Sigr Onegin, the Swedish contralto, who h now become one of the foremost singe of the Metropolitan Opera Compan both in Wagnerian and other roles. S will make her first appearance in Bo ton in Symphony Hall next Thursda evening, Feb. 8, at 8:15, singing son and arias by Benedetto Marcello, Ant nio Lotti, Paisiello, Schubert, Brahm
William Arms Fisher, Victor Harr
Robert Coningsby Clarke and Carl De

Post Feb 4

ONEGIN CONCERT

The most important new singer of the season in New York is Sigrid Onegin, Swedish contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Company. It will therefore be a concert and a debut of real importance when this singer makes her first appearance in Boston in Symphony Hall next Thursday evening in a program of French, German, [illegible] and English songs.

adv. Feb 4

Her 2/4 SIGRID ONEGIN

Without a doubt, the most important new singer of the season in New York is Sigrid Onegin, the Swedish contralto, who is now one of the foremost singers of the Metropolitan Opera Company, in Wagnerian and other roles.

Her success in opera has been even exceeded by the beauty of her recitals. She will make her first appearance in Boston in Symphony Hall next Thursday evening, at 8:15.

Il mio bel fuoco	Marcello
Pur dicesti	Lotti

Herald Feb 4

Onegin Debut Thursday Promises a Musical Sensation

Probably the most important new artist, musically speaking, to be heard in Boston this season is Sigrid Onegin, the new contralto of the Metropolitan Opera, who in leading roles this season has extorted enthusiastic praise from even the most blase of New York musical reviewers. At any rate, of the new artists announced for Boston appearances, she is the one the reviewer for the Globe is most curious about.

If she lives up to her New York and Chicago reviews, of which the Globe has copies not donated, or expurgated by her press agent, Mme Onegin Thursday night will prove the greatest contralto sensation since Schumann Heink, whose voice hers is said to resemble in power. Her musicianship has also been highly spoken of elsewhere.

Mme Onegin is said to be Swedish. She has sung with success in opera in Germany before coming to this country.

Globe Feb 4

SIGRID ONEGIN AT SYMPHONY HALL

New Contralto of Metropolitan Opera Company Makes Debut Here

Her 2/9

BOTH OLD AND NEW ON SONG PROGRAM

SYMPHONY HALL—Sigrid Onegin.

Last night in Symphony hall Sigrid Onegin, the new contralto of the Metropolitan opera company, made her first appearance in Boston. To the excellent accompaniments of Michael Rauchleisen, she sang this program:

Il mio bel fuoco	Marcello
Pur dicesti	Lotti
Chi vuol la zingarella	Paisiello
Der Musensohn	Schubert
Der Erlkoenig	Schubert
Sapphische Ode	Brahms
Willst du dass ich geh?	Brahms
Pastorals and Romances of the 17th Century....Arranged by J. B. Weckerlin
L'amour s'envole
Menuet d'Exaudet
Non je n'irai plus au bois
Jeune fillette
I Heard a Cry	Fisher
April	Harris
The Blind Ploughman	Clarke
Come Up	Deis

To give persons who were not at Symphony hall last night an impression of what the famous new contralto is like, perhaps one cannot do better than to suggest that she reminds one vividly of Mme. Schumann-Heink in her most exuberant mood. Like the older singer, Mme. Onegin is blessed with a personality that rouses the interest of an audience before she had walked half way from the door to the pianoforte. She possesses as well a magnificent voice of great volume and long range, a voice, furthermore, absolutely under her control, and consequently capable of a wide variation of color. Fine qualities, too, of musicianship Mme. Onegin has at her command, a smooth legato, a nice feeling for the shape of a phrase, a sensitiveness to rhythm, and, beyond all else, a ready response to the emotional content of a song. All these essentials of fine singing Mme. Onegin brought most markedly into play when she sang, very admirably, the four little songs of old France.

In too many other songs, however, Mme. Onegin, like Mme. Schumann-Heink sometimes before her, showed herself quite ready to sacrifice her art to obtain effect. To Italian airs of the classic time she did not hesitate to add high notes and low and tricks and graces of florid song. The exquisite opening phrase of the Sapphic Ode she did not mind splitting in two, for the sake of singing the song very slow, with a weight of sentiment it cannot bear. She abandoned too often her even scale, her legato. In the way once more of Mme. Schumann-Heink, Mme. Onegin was willing by her extravagance to ruin the grace, the elegance of the Brindisi from "Lucrezia."

Mme. Onegin's misuse of a noble voice and talent seems a pity. It is surely unnecessary. With her voice, her dramatic temperament and her strong personality she could entrance an audience just as she did last night, even though she sang all the time as beautifully as she well knows how to sing.

R. R. G.

SIGRID ONEGIN IN BOSTON DEBUT

Gl 2/9

New Singer's Great Voice Rouses Enthusiasm

Sigrid Onegin, a contralto whose success this season with the Metropolitan Opera has been extraordinary, sang for the first time in Boston last night at Symphony Hall to a very enthusiastic audience of good size. Hers is beyond question a really great voice, of almost unparalleled power and remarkable beauty, deserving the very high praise given it in New York and Chicago in concert and in opera.

She demonstrated last night her ability to please an audience. The number of encores was unusual for a new artist, the applause throughout the evening being the real thing and not perfunctory, polite clapping. Judging by appearances, too, her coming had stirred many to the un-Bostonian act of actually buying tickets for a performer never previously heard in this city.

She announced herself on the programs as a contralto, but the range of her voice would make it possible for her to sing many soprano roles in opera. The lower register is dark, warm, velvety, luscious in quality, with a beauty heard by this generation in no other voice. The rest of the wide range has a peculiar ringing intensity of quality, something like the trumpets in an orchestra. The upper tones are not always thoroughly satisfactory, judged by an ideal standard and not by most other contraltos and mezzos with whom Onegin compares very favorably.

If her admirers should call hers "the voice of a generation," they would be surprisingly near the truth. If, however, they ventured upon similar encomiums about her musicianship, the critical listener might retort that her interpretations lack subtlety, that she relies too much upon certain tricks of style, among them a peculiar kind of swooping portamento effect and that she does not sufficiently differentiate the music of composers of different ages and countries.

She exaggerates the superficially dramatic quality of such things as Schubert's "Erlking" and Paisiello's "Chi vuol la Zingarella." She even forces her tone in such popular ballads as William Arms Fisher's "I Heard a Cry."

Nobody since Titta Buffo has made a bigger vocal noise in Symphony Hall than she produced at several climaxes. She annoyed the purists by prolonging a high note in Mozart's "Alleluia," sung as an extra, and by breaking the melodic line of Schumann's "Spring Night," another encore, in order to play up the dramatic content of the words.

Onegin seems, in short, more an opera singer than a great interpreter of concert songs.

Mme Onegin will sing March 4 at a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in aid of the pension fund.

[129]

Kreisler Jan 16 1923

Tuesday evening, Jan. 16, in Symphony Hall, a concert of violin-pieces played by Mr. Kreisler still in prime of the powers that have made him paragon of present fiddlers. In him man, music, instrument meet and the audience is at one with all three. The poise of the man becomes the balance of the musician; fineness of spirit threads into fineness of tone; while sensibility is as magic, ever new.

Transcript Jan 17

Onegin Feb 8th 1923

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

SIGRID ONEGIN DISCOVERED AND APPLAUDED

A Singer of Voice, a Singer of Temperament, a Singer to Sway Audiences—Mr. Ballantine's New Music Heard in Cambridge—Mr. Monteux and a Programme—Mr. Stransky Resigns

HALF expectantly, half inquiringly came the audience to Symphony Hall last evening. Discoveringly it listened to Mme. Sigrid Onegin singing old Italian airs, songs of Schumann and Brahms, French trifles culled by Weckerlin out of the seventeenth century, machine-made American balladry. After many extra pieces, rejoicingly it departed. The new singer had interested it from the moment in which she first crossed the stage. No sooner had she sung than it was impressed as well. Louder and longer waxed the applause as the concert proceeded, keeping touch and time with the mounting pleasure. As hands clapped, tongues wagged. By every sign known to the chronicles of the concert-hall, high word from New York had been this day fulfilled in Bostonian ears.

The new singer, Scandinavian by birth, German by career in opera house and concert-room, is an imposing person. She lacks neither height nor breadth, but both upon her have the just and pleasing proportion that distinguished Mme. Nordica. Her dark face lightens with intelligence, brightens with play of mood; while not too emphatically, except once and again in head thrown back and torso thrown forward, does her body betray the physical zest and effort of her singing. She is mistress of manners in the concert-hall, neither holding herself too remote from hearers, nor over-effusively condescending to them. Yet plain enough were her pleasure in the crescendo of applause last evening and the stimulus it lent to voice and spirit. In a word, Mme. Onegin bears herself like a personage of the concert-room; possesses the communicating fire that sets an audience in glow. To both American hearers answer quickly.

Clearly Mme. Onegin's best possession is her voice. She calls herself a contralto; and in such parts as Amneris and Brangaene she has oftenest appeared in opera houses. The lower range, the deeper timbres of her tones, warrant such designation; yet they run as high and as full as any mezzo-soprano's. These upper tones indeed give her voice individuality, since they are singularly clear, bright and soft, with the resonance that may haunt poet's fancy when they write of silver trumpets. Elsewhere Mme. Onegin escapes the thickness, the heaviness, the unwieldiness of tone, often haunting contralto voices. Rich sounds her singing; deep it may go; she may flood it into phrases long sustained; yet never once does it lose this bright resonance. Therein has she, again, a rare, an individualized voice. It is supple as well at ease and a-glow in quick-paced, changeful music, capable even of the arabesques and the ornaments of song. In it also dwells a rare propulsive power. She does not drive through her songs after the manner of many a singer similarly large-voiced and large tempered. Yet she brings to them a pervading and communicating warmth of re-creation. Not a few of her numbers last evening were familiar. Yet from her it was possible to hear them with what actors call "the illusion of the first time."

Using this voice, Mme. Onegin is by no means faultless singer. The technicians will say truly that her uppermost tones sometimes spread and so lose quality; that now and again she tends to lift herself to a note rather than to gain it squarely. On the other hand, her sense of sustained vocal line, of moulded and fused phrase, of the beat of rhythm and the play of modulation is clear token of the perceiving, practised, poised singer. Mme. Onegin is no outpourer "of a magnificent voice." In her is accumulated wisdom, controlling will, directing temperament. Even when she errs, she does not slip blindly, carelessly. She was pleased last evening to decorate her old Italian airs with feats of song hardly indicated by the composers. Such exercises of virtuosity she knew would please her audience. She chose again to deliver Schubert's "Erl-King" as though it were a drama in three acts with three personages—instead of a narrative-ballad, more or less characterized in music and in verse. So doing, she was again and with calculation playing upon the response of her hearers. And operatic she could be in the full sense of the word in the broadening emphases she bestowed upon airs from "Samson and Delilah" and "Lucrezia Borgia."

Yet it was not shortcomings, either in skill or in taste, that the listener numbered last evening, unless he were pedant beyond redeeming. Rather he took thought—and [illegible]—of the sweep of Mme. Onegin's [illegible] over the spacious phrases, the up-[illegible] periods of the airs of Marcello, [illegible] was vocal vesture as [illegible]. To hear her in the heights and breadths of Paisiello's few measures of declamation was to sit for the instant in the opera house. She passed to Schubert's "Musensohn" and suppleness of voice and brightness of tone seemed but channel for the gayety of re-creating mood. Mme. Onegin altered the opening measures of Brahms's "Sapphische Ode," but only to suffuse them the more with the darksome splendors of her tones. As ready was she with the light vigors of "Willst Du Dass Ich Geh?" She turned now to her French trifles and the touch of her tones could hardly have been lighter; the play of accent, color and implication more felicitous. To amplitudes so succeeded artifice, to power, grace. And as occasion asked, Mme. Onegin had but to glorify with her song the usual paltry ditties that are singer's and audience's homage to American composers. . . . . Far-ranging is this new voice; as wide is the range of color it may bear, the range of mood, it may convey.

H. T. P.

Transcript Feb 9th

Dark Eyed, Bright Voiced

Sigrid Onegin

Singer of the New Generation Yesterday Discovered in Boston

Kreisler Jan 16, 1923

Onegin Feb 8th 1923

Tuesday evening, Jan. 16, in Symphony Hall, a concert of violin-pieces played by Mr. Kreisler still in prime of the powers that have made him paragon of present fiddlers. In him man, music, instrument meet and the audience is at one with all three. The poise of the man becomes the balance of the musician; fineness of spirit threads into fineness of tone; while sensibility is as magic, ever new.

Transcript Jan 6

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

SIGRID ONEGIN DISCOVERED AND APPLAUDED

Trans

A Singer of Voice, a Singer of Temperament, a Singer to Sway Audiences—Mr. Ballantine's New Music Heard in Cambridge—Mr. Monteux and a Programme—Mr. Stransky Resigns

HALF expectantly, half inquiringly came the audience to Symphony Hall last evening. Discoveringly it listened to Mme. Sigrid Onegin singing old Italian airs, songs of Schumann and Brahms, French trifles culled by Weckerlin out of the seventeenth century, machine-made American balladry. After many extra pieces, rejoicingly it departed. The new singer had interested it from the moment in which she first crossed the stage. No sooner had she sung than it was impressed as well. Louder and longer waxed the applause as the concert proceeded, keeping touch and time with the mounting pleasure. As hands clapped, tongues wagged. By every sign known to the chronicles of the concert-hall, high word from New York had been this day fulfilled in Bostonian ears.

The new singer, Scandinavian by birth, German by career in opera house and concert-room, is an imposing person. She lacks neither height nor breadth, but both upon her have the just and pleasing proportion that distinguished Mme. Nordica. Her dark face lightens with intelligence, brightens with play of mood; while not too emphatically, except once and again in head thrown back and torso thrown forward, does her body betray the physical zest and effort of her singing. She is mistress of manners in the concert-hall, neither holding herself too remote from hearers, nor over-effusively condescending to them. Yet plain enough were her pleasure in the crescendo of applause last evening and the stimulus it lent to voice and spirit. In a word, Mme. Onegin bears herself like a personage of the concert-room; possesses the communicating fire that sets an audience in glow. To both American hearers answer quickly.

Clearly Mme. Onegin's best possession is her voice. She calls herself a contralto; and in such parts as Amneris and Brangaene she has oftenest appeared in opera houses. The lower range, the deeper timbres of her tones, warrant such designation; yet they run as high and as full as any mezzo-soprano's. These upper tones indeed give her voice individuality, since they are singularly clear, bright and soft, with the resonance that may haunt poet's fancy when they write of silver trumpets. Elsewhere Mme. Onegin escapes the thickness, the heaviness, the unwieldiness of tone, often haunting contralto voices. Rich sounds her singing; deep it may go; she may flood it into phrases long sustained; yet never once does it lose this bright resonance. Therein has she, again, a rare, an individualized voice. It is supple as well at ease and a-glow in quick-paced, changeful music, capable even of the arabesques and the ornaments of song. In it also dwells a rare propulsive power. She does not drive through her songs after the manner of many a singer similarly large-voiced and large tempered. Yet she brings to them a pervading and communicating warmth of re-creation. Not a few of her numbers last evening were familiar. Yet from her it was possible to hear them with what actors call "the illusion of the first time."

Using this voice, Mme. Onegin is by no means faultless singer. The technicians will say truly that her uppermost tones sometimes spread and so lose quality; that now and again she tends to lift herself to a note rather than to gain it squarely. On the other hand, her sense of sustained vocal line, of moulded and fused phrase, of the beat of rhythm and the play of modulation is clear token of the perceiving, practised, poised singer. Mme. Onegin is no outpourer "of a magnificent voice." In her is accumulated wisdom, controlling will, directing temperament. Even when she errs, she does not slip blindly, carelessly. She was pleased last evening to decorate her old Italian airs with feats of song hardly indicated by the composers. Such exercises of virtuosity she knew would please her audience. She chose again to deliver Schubert's "Erl-King" as though it were a drama in three acts with three personages—instead of a narrative-ballad, more or less characterized in music and in verse. So doing, she was again and with calculation playing upon the response of her hearers. And operatic she could be in the full sense of the word in the broadening emphases she bestowed upon airs from "Samson and Delilah" and "Lucrezia Borgia."

Yet it was not shortcomings, either in skill or in taste, that the listener numbered last evening, unless he were pedant beyond redeeming. Rather he took thought—and delight—of the sweep of Mme. Onegin's tones over the spacious phrases, the upwelling periods of the airs of Marcello and Lotti, since here was vocal vesture as rich as the music itself. To hear her in the heights and breadths of Paisiello's few measures of declamation was to sit for the instant in the opera house. She passed to Schubert's "Musensohn" and suppleness of voice and brightness of tone seemed but channel for the gayety of re-creating mood. Mme. Onegin altered the opening measures of Brahms's "Sapphische Ode," but only to suffuse them the more with the darksome splendors of her tones. As ready was she with the light vigors of "Willst Du Dass Ich Geh?" She turned now to her French trifles and the touch of her tones could hardly have been lighter; the play of accent, color and implication more felicitous. To amplitudes so succeeded artifice, to power, grace. And as occasion asked, Mme. Onegin had but to glorify with her song the usual paltry ditties that are singer's and audience's homage to American composers. . . . Far-ranging is this new voice; as wide is the range of color it may bear, the range of mood, it may convey.

H. T. P.

Dark Eyed, Bright Voiced

Trans 79

Sigrid Onegin

Singer of the New Generation Yesterday Discovered in Boston

Transcript Feb 9th

Kreisler Jan 16, 1923

Tuesday evening, Jan. 16, in Symphony Hall, a concert of violin-pieces played by Mr. Kreisler still in prime of the powers that have made him paragon of present fiddlers. In him man, music, instrument meet and the audience is at one with all three. The poise of the man becomes the balance of the musician; fineness of spirit threads into fineness of tone; while sensibility is as magic, ever new.

Transcript Jan

Onegin Feb 8th 1923

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

SIGRID ONEGIN DISCOVERED AND APPLAUDED

A Singer of Voice, a Singer of Temperament, a Singer to Sway Audiences—Mr. Ballantine's New Music Heard in Cambridge—Mr. Monteux and a Programme—Mr. Stransky Resigns

HALF expectantly, half inquiringly came the audience to Symphony Hall last evening. Discoveringly it listened to Mme. Sigrid Onegin singing old Italian airs, songs of Schumann and Brahms, French trifles culled by Weckerlin out of the seventeenth century, machine-made American balladry. After many extra pieces, rejoicingly it departed. The new singer had interested it from the moment in which she first crossed the stage. No sooner had she sung than it was impressed as well. Louder and longer waxed the applause as the concert proceeded, keeping touch and time with the mounting pleasure. As hands clapped, tongues wagged. By every sign known to the chronicles of the concert-hall, high word from New York had been this day fulfilled in Bostonian ears.

The new singer, Scandinavian by birth, German by career in opera house and concert-room, is an imposing person. She lacks neither height nor breadth, but both upon her have the just and pleasing proportion that distinguished Mme. Nordica. Her dark face lightens with intelligence, brightens with play of mood; while not too emphatically, except once and again in head thrown back and torso thrown forward, does her body betray the physical zest and effort of her singing. She is mistress of manners in the concert-hall, neither holding herself too remote from hearers, nor over-effusively condescending to them. Yet plain enough were her pleasure in the crescendo of applause last evening and the stimulus it lent to voice and spirit. In a word, Mme. Onegin bears herself like a personage of the concert-room; possesses the communicating fire that sets an audience in glow. To both American hearers answer quickly.

Clearly Mme. Onegin's best possession is her voice. She calls herself a contralto; and in such parts as Amneris and Brangaene she has oftenest appeared in opera houses. The lower range, the deeper timbres of her tones, warrant such designation; yet they run as high and as full as any mezzo-soprano's. These upper tones indeed give her voice individuality, since they are singularly clear, bright and soft, with the resonance that may haunt poet's fancy when they write of silver trumpets. Elsewhere Mme. Onegin escapes the thickness, the heaviness, the unwieldiness of tone, often haunting contralto voices. Rich sounds her singing; deep it may go; she may flood it into phrases long sustained; yet never once does it lose this bright resonance. Therein has she, again, a rare, an individualized voice. It is supple as well at ease and a-glow in quick-paced, changeful music, capable even of the arabesques and the ornaments of song. In it also dwells a rare propulsive power. She does not drive through her songs after the manner of many a singer similarly large-voiced and large tempered. Yet she brings to them a pervading and communicating warmth of re-creation. Not a few of her numbers last evening were familiar. Yet from her it was possible to hear them with what actors call "the illusion of the first time."

Using this voice, Mme. Onegin is by no means faultless singer. The technicians will say truly that her uppermost tones sometimes spread and so lose quality; that now and again she tends to lift herself to a note rather than to gain it squarely. On the other hand, her sense of sustained vocal line, of moulded and fused phrase, of the beat of rhythm and the play of modulation is clear token of the perceiving, practised, poised singer. Mme. Onegin is no outpourer "of a magnificent voice." In her is accumulated wisdom, controlling will, directing temperament. Even when she errs, she does not slip blindly, carelessly. She was pleased last evening to decorate her old Italian airs with feats of song hardly indicated by the composers. Such exercises of virtuosity she knew would please her audience. She chose again to deliver Schubert's "Erl-King" as though it were a drama in three acts with three personages—instead of a narrative-ballad, more or less characterized in music and in verse. So doing, she was again and with calculation playing upon the response of her hearers. And operatic she could be in the full sense of the word in the broadening emphases she bestowed upon airs from "Samson and Delilah" and "Lucrezia Borgia."

Yet it was not shortcomings, either in skill or in taste, that the listener numbered last evening, unless he were pedant beyond redeeming. Rather he took thought—and delight—of the sweep of Mme. Onegin's tones over the spacious phrases, the upswelling periods of the airs of Marcello and Lotti, since here was vocal vesture as rich as the music itself. To hear her in the heights and breadths of Paisiello's few measures of declamation was to sit for the instant in the opera house. She passed to Schubert's "Musensohn" and suppleness of voice and brightness of tone seemed but channel for the gayety of re-creating mood. Mme. Onegin altered the opening measures of Brahms's "Sapphische Ode," but only to suffuse them the more with the darksome splendors of her tones. As ready was she with the light vigors of "Willst Du Dass Ich Geh?" She turned now to her French trifles and the touch of her tones could hardly have been lighter; the play of accent, color and implication more felicitous. To amplitudes so succeeded artifice, to power, grace. And as occasion asked, Mme. Onegin had but to glorify with her song the usual paltry ditties that are singer's and audience's homage to American composers. . . . Far-ranging is this new voice; as wide is the range of color it may bear, the range of mood, it may convey.

H. T. P.

Dark Eyed, Bright Voiced

Sigrid Onegin

Singer of the New Generation Yesterday Discovered in Boston

Transcript Feb 9th

[130]

SVEA
The Swedish Newspaper
549 TREMONT BLDG.
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

Symphony Hall
Huntington & Mass. ave's,
Boston
Mass

Mr Judd.

Sigrid Onegin, den i Stockholm födda kontraalten, som sedan sin ankomst till Amerika titulerats för "världens i dag förnämsta altsångerska", har fått så ampla, ja, utomordentliga beröm öfverallt under sin senaste konsertturné, att en liten axplockning ur desamma ej skadar för att ytterligare belysa hennes storartade triumfer, trots det att vi vecka efter vecka följt henne i denna afdelning från plats till plats. Mme Onegin är redan lika berömd som på sin tid Jenny Lind och Christina Nilsson, således den tredje storstjärnan på de svenska sångardrottningarnas himmel. Vi återgifva omnämnandena på engelska språket, då öfversättningen kanske skulle borttaga en del af de väsentligaste effekterna. Så här skrifves om henne:

Henry T. Finck, New York Evening Post: Richard Wagner was not always as dignified as a cardinal. Sometimes when particularly happy, he climbed a tree like a monkey or stood on his head, to the great scandalizing of Frau Cosima. Had he been in Carnegie Hall last night he would at least have thrown his hat clear up to the ceiling and shouted for joy; for he would have heard a Wagnerian artist of the rare kind he dreamt of when he started in Bayreuth a high school for dramatic singing. That school came to naught because the raw material was lacking. Oh, that he might have had Sigrid Onegin for his Bayreuth festivals! I am glad, though, that he didn't, for then I would not have hade the pleasure of hearing this superlative artist yesterday, when she made her American debut as soloist of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Sigrid Onegin is a big woman, of the northern, Valkyre type, splendidly formed, and her voice is as heroic and resplendent as her physique. It pours from her throat with as little effort as a Norwegian waterfall. It is as agreeable in its quality as in its spontaneity, and it has dramatic warmth to burn.

A great mezzo-soprano is this Swedish prima donna, with a leaning toward the contralto. She recalls Marianna Brandt and Schumann-Heink in their best days. Her reception by the audience was exetrmely enthusiastic, and she was recalled many times. She may safely cable home: "I came, was heard, and conquered."

Richard Aldrich, New York Times: Mme. Sigrid Onegin disclosed herself at once as an artist of distinguished gifts in voice and in dramatic expression. It is a powerful and darkly colored mezzo-soprano, used with more skill than in common in singers of her class, with a good command of phrase and discerning declamation; a voice well equalized throughout its range.

Deems Taylor, New York World: After hearing Madame Onegin sing her three numbers it is impossible not to believe that she will do great things at the Metropolitan, for she has looks, personality, voice and an unerring dramatic instinct. The voice is remarkable, rich and dark in its lower register, a little metallic, but still beatiful in the upper tones, and enormous in volume. It rolled through Carnegie Hall with such huge effortless power that one could almost see it. She sang beautifully, for the most part with fine restraint, lit by flashes of terrific dramatic force, and with an evident pure joy in singing that was good to see and better to hear.

Max Smith, New York American: She disclosed her voice in the sweeping dramatic cadences of "Andromache's Lament" from Bruch's "Achilles"—a superb organ of mezzo-soprano character, strong, potent, voluminous and encompassing easily two octaves.

M. Halperson, Staats-Zeitung: The voice is truly almost to be called a miracle. Of simply phenomenal range, the organ impresses one in all registers by the smoothness and strength of tone. On the peak of vocal and technical merits stands intelligence and deep spiritual understanding.

Chicago Tribune: An unusual personage came upon the stage of Orchestra Hall last night. She is Sigrid Onegin, contralto, who has been singing this season with the Metropolitan Opera and came here for a song recital. Of all the contralto voices in memory there is none like hers.

I would not attempt to tell offhand ow wide her vocal range is, but last ight it seemed as though there were o limit to it, either up or down. A lorious voice it is, too, as even hrough its whole extent as though it ere produced by a mechanism intead of a human throat, clear, ingratating, flexible—one wants to use all the adjectives there are, and hesitates only through fear of extravagance.

What is more to the point, this glorious voice is applied to the purpose of glorious singing. In fact, Mme. Onegin is almost unbelievable. She has looks, personality, and a superabundance of vitality. She strides upon the stage—and ordinary walk is too lifeless for her—takes her place in front of the piano, and one is immediately in danger of losing his head, his heart, and his critical faculty. Certainly the old Italian songs of Marcello, Lotti, and Poisiello and the lieder of Schubert and Brahms took on a charm that I hardly suspected before.

Chicago Daily News: In Sigrid Onegin, the contralto of the Metropolitan Opera House ,we became acquainted last evening with an artist of the first rank. She came to Orchestra Hall, making her Chicago debut in a recital which ranks among the best we have heard here this season.

Mme. Onegin has personality; she has artistic instinct and she has vocal gifts of remarkable excellence. Her voice has a wide range. It is even throughout, from the deeper contralto tones to the higher registers, where it is clear and brilliant. Her interpretations are musical and show the art of projecting the mood and feeling, and also poetic imagination.

Minneapolis Evening Tribune: Leaving the University last night after hearing Sigrid Onegin sing, an old German was heard to mutter over and over again: "Himmel, das war ein Genuss, das war herrlich, herrlich;" but that only half expresses the supreme satisfaction, the glory of Onegin's art, voice and personality gave to the most enthusiastic audience that ever greeted an artist in this hall. This woman has the voice of a century, ranging easily through three octaves, capable of expressing every shade of human emotion and without a single discernable flaw.

Minneapolis Star: Sigrid Onegin brought one of the most astounding voices of the decade to Minneapolis last night, in her recital at the University concert course. Only in superlative terms can one appraise the art of this marvelous contralto. A new "greatest" voice, it seems, has been added to the roster of America's songbirds in the person of this Swedish singer.

Svea
Feb 7 1923

Sigrid Onegin är en underbar sångerska,

måhända den mest underbara, som någonsin sjungit i det ryktbarhetens tempel i Chicago, hvilket går under namnet Orchestra hall, skrifver "Sv K." Och icke nog med detta. Sigrid Onegin torde vara den mest tilldragande sångerska, som någonsin stått på denna konserttribun där så godt som alla kända sångerskor af rang i världen försökt taga publiken. Sigrid Onegin tog denna publik innan hon sjungit en ton vid sin konsert. Och efter hennes första nummer blef hon drottningen bland allt hvad sångerskor heter, ingen nu lefvande undantagen. Detta uttalande kanske förefaller de flesta öfverdrifvet. Men ingen, som hörde henne vid hennes debutkonsert härstädes, kan uppskatta henne annorlunda. Till och med den förhärdade amerikanska kritiken föll till föga inför denna sångerskas trollmakt. Och som ett bevis härpå vilja vi aftrycka hvad Chicago Tribunes aktade Glen Dillard Gunn har att anföra. Han skref nämligen i lördags följande:

"An unusual personage came upon the stage of Orchestra hall last night. She is Sigrid Onegin, contralto, who has been singing this season with the Metropolitan opera and came here for a song recital. Of all the contralto voices in memory there is none like hers.

"I would not attempt to tell offhand how wide her vocal range is, but last night it seemed as though there were no limit to it, either up or down. A glorious voice it is, too, as even through its whole extent as though it were produced by a mechanism instead of human throat, clear, ingratiating, flexible—one wants to use all the adjectives there are, and hesitates only through fear of extravagance.

"What is more to the point, this glorious voice is applied to the purpose of glorious singing. In fact, Mme. Onegin is almost unbelievable. She has looks, personality, and a superabundance of vitality. She strides upon the stage—an ordinary walk is too lifeless for her—takes her place in front of the piano, and one is immediately in danger of losing his head, his heart, and his critical faculty. Certainly the old Italan songs of Marcello, Dotti, and Paisiella and the lieder of Schubert and Brahms took a charm that I hardly suspected before."

Ingen af de amerikanska kritikerna stannade för att höra hela Sigrid Onegins program. På Operan gafs nämligen samma afton "Tosca", och där skulle den firade stjärnan Mary Gardens uppträdande bedömas, hvarför herrar tidningsmän — med sorg i hjärtat, förmodligen — måste rusa i väg från Orchestra Hall till Auditorium, hvarest operaföreställningarna, som bekant, gifvas. Inga andra än dessa skulle emellertid ha kunnat lämna Orchestra Hall, äfven om man erbjudit dem stora summor. Till denna grad hade Sigrid Onegins märkliga röst och tilldragande person hypnotiserat dem. Sak samma hvad hon sjöng, allt mottogs med öronbedöfvande applåder. Gamla kända konsertsaker — bland dem Schuberts "Der Erlkönig" — blefvo helt och hållet nya, då hon tolkade dem med sin härliga stämma, hvilken knappast tycktes hafva någon gräns, vare sig i höjden eller i de lägre registren. Ovationerna för sångerskan steg med hvarje nummer, som utfördes. Och efter det ordinarie programmets slut, hvilket åtföljdes af otaliga extranummer, rusade ingen ur lokalen. Alla stodo upp ur sina platser samt stampade och skreko af förtjusning. Att klappa i händerna var hvarje åhörare vid den tidpunkten alldeles för trött till genom den ideliga ansträngningen under konsertens gång. Till slut kom sångerskan åter fram, åtföljd af ackompagnatören. Det skulle alltså bli ytterligare ett nummer. Dödstystnad rådde. Man kunde ha hört en knappnål falla. Och så kom — mäktigare, ståtligare och mera gripande än hvad någon kan föreställa sig — Stenhammars SVERIGE. Denna sång kommo landsmännen i salongen att fälla tårar af rörelse. Sigrid Onegin lade här sitt rika hjärta in i sången. Man kände ordens innebörd dallra i sitt innersta. Sverige sökte här sina barn och fann dem också genom Sigrid Onegins oförlikneliga konst. Konserten var sannerligen ett bestående minne för lifvet.

En konsert, som inväntas af vår stads sång- och musikälskande publik, blir den i Symphony Hall torsdagsaftonen den 8 februari, hvarvid vår ryktbara svenska kontraalt, mme Sigrid Onegin, gör sin Bostondebut, och själf utför hela programmet. Vi ha läst och hört så mycket om vår firade operadiva under den senaste tiden att vi invänta hennes uppträdande med största intresse. Hon kommer hit med ett rykte att vara säsongens bästa artist och vi hoppas att hon vid sitt uppträdande här den 8 febr. kommer att bekräfta detsamma.

MME SIGRID ONEGIN.

Mme Onegin kommer att bjuda på följande varierande och storslagna program:

I.

a. Il mio bet fuoco
Benedetto Marcello (1686-1734)
b. Pur dicesti
Antonio Lotti (1667-1740)
c. Chi vuol a cingarella
Paisiello (1741-1816)

II.

a. Der Musensohn ....Schubert
b. Der Erlkoenig............Schubert
c. Sapphische Ode............Brahms
d. Willst du dass ich geh.....Brahms

III.

Pastorals and Romances of the 17th Century, arranged by
J. B. Weckerlin
a. L'amour s'envole
b. Menuet d'Exaudet
c. Non je n'irai plus au bois
d. Jeune fillette

IV.

a. I Heard a Cry
William Arms Fisher
b. Come up.................Carl Deis
c. The Blind Ploughman
Robert Coningsby Clarke
d. Southern Songs....Landon Ronald

Svea
Feb. 7 1923

Sigrid Onegin, vår ståtliga svenska operadiva, som enligt många olika pressuttalanden är en af nutidens allra förnämsta stjärnor på sångkonstens himmel, gör i morgon, torsdag, kväll sin Bostondebut i Symphony Hall.

Mme. Onegin är Stockholmsbarn och har sedan sin hitkomst förliden höst gjort furore hvarhelst hon uppträdt, vare sig det varit på operascenen eller konserttribunen. Hon har en fenomenal röst, både kontraalt och mezzosopran, sträckande sig öfver tre oktaver, men icke nog därmed, hon har utesende och en ovanligt ståtlig gestalt. Ingen med svenskt blod i sina ådror bör uraktlåta att bevista konserten i Symphony Hall. Här nedan vilja vi ytterligare återgifva några pressuttalanden.

Så t. ex. skrifver Henry T. Finck i New York Evening Post bl. a.: "Sigrid Onegin is a big woman, of northern, Valkyre type, splendidly formed, and her voice is a heroic and resplendent as her physique. It pours from her throat with as little effort as a Norwegian waterfall. It is as agreeable in its quality as in its spontaneity, and it has dramatic warmth to burn.—A mezzosoprano is this Swedish prima donna, with a leaning toward the contrato. She recalls Marianna Brandt and Schumann-Heink in their best days. Her reception by the audience was extremely enthusiastic, and she was recalled many times. She may safely cable home: "I came, was heard, and conquered."

W. J. Henderson, New York Herald, skrifver om henne bl. a.: "Since this Swedish artist is to be heard often in opera it is not cecessary to exhaust comment on her singing this morning. A brief sketch, however, would have to contain certain items, namely, the development of a robust art on the foundation of a truly noble voice of grand proportions, commanding power and dramatic quality."

Deems Taylor, New York World, skrifver bl. a.: "After hearing Madame Onegin sing her three numbers it is impossible not to believe that she will do great things at the Metropolitan, for she has looks, personality, voice and an unerring dramatic instinct. The voice is remarkable, rich and dark in its lower register, a little metallic, but still beautiful in the upper tones, and enormous in volume. It rolled through Carnegie Hall with such effortless power that one could almost see it. She sang beautifully, for the most part with fine restraint, lit by flashes of terrific dramatic force, and with an evident pure joy in singing that was good to see and better to hear."

G. W. Gabriel, New York Sun "There rang last night a voice destined within a month to sweep some cobwebs from the sainted rafters of the Metropolitan Opera The voice belonged to Sigrid Onegin, making her New York debut. Her first notes told the tale of a splendid new voice in the Metropolitan fold."

M. Halperson, Staats-Zeitung: "The voice is truly almost to be called a miracle. Of simple phenomenal range, the organ impresses one in all registers by the smoothness and strenght of tone. On the peak of vocal and technical merits stands intelligence and deep spiritual understanding."

Frank H. Warren, New York Evening World: "Mme. Onegin, a fine figure of a woman, showed a voice, big, warm, luscious, of wide range, at times ravishing in its upper tones. To paraphrase the late Mr. Huncker: "Hats off, gentlemen—a voice!"

Vi ha många fler som kunde återgifvas, men utrymmet medgifver ej mera denna gång. Nog af, gå och lyssna till vår landsmaninnas underbara röst i Symphony Hall i morgon, torsdag, kväll. Se vidare annonsen.

SYMPHONY HALL : : THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 8, at 8.15

BOSTON DEBUT

SIGRID ONEGIN

The remarkable new Swedish contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Co., N. Y.

"Exquisite quality and tremendous power.—Vocal lovliness, intelligence, and a splendid emotional sweep."—H. E. Krehbied, N. Y. Tribune.

Seats—$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50 (Plus 10c tax).

Sigrid Onegin kommer, såsom i korthet omtalades i förra numret af SVEA, att göra sin Bostondebut i Symphony Hall torsdagskvällen den 8 februari och det är med stor längtan och trängtan, som vår musikälskande publik motser hennes uppträdande här. Vår frejdade landsmaninna, och som hon kallas "the sensational Swedish contralto", är en af säsongens nya stjärnor, vid Metropolitan Opera Co. i New York och har hon där vunnit såväl publikens son pressens odelade beröm och entusiastiska bifall.

Madame Onegin är Stockholmsbarn, men tillbrakte sina barnaår i Frankrike samt vid femton års ålder reste till Tyskland för att utbilda sin sångröst. Utbildningen fortsattes sedan under italienska mästare och år 1912 gjorde hon sin debut som storsångerska i Berlin.

Kort därefter debuterade hon som operasångerska och har sedan dess ådragit sig stor uppmärksamhet i de många och olika partier hon utfört. Då hon i hötas kom till New York och där gjorde sin debut vid en konsert blef hon genast en gunstling och ansågs af såväl publik som press en af de bästa kontralter hörd under de sista åren. Vid Metropolitan Opera House har hon redan sjungit ett flertal roller och anses där som en af sällskapets allra bästa artister.

Det skall bli ett sannt nöje att få hälsa vår ryktbara landsmaninna välkommer till Boston och lyssna till hennes präktiga stämma i ett väl valdt program, hvilket vi torde komma att återgifva i ett kommande nummer. De som önska höra henne torde i god tid förse sig med biljetter, hvilka nu finnas till salu i Symphony Halls biljettlucka. Se annonsen.

Sigrid Onegin,

den i Stockholm födda kontraalten, som sedan sin ankomst till Amerika titulerats för "världens i dag förnämsta altsångerska", har fått så ampla, ja, utomordentliga beröm öfverallt under sin senaste konsertturné, att en liten axplockning ur desamma ej skadar för att ytterligare belysa hennes storartade triumfer, trots det att vi vecka efter vecka följt henne i denna afdelning från plats till plats. Mme Onegin är redan lika berömd som på sin tid Jenny Lind och Christina Nilsson, således den tredje storstjärnan på de svenska sångardrottningarnas himmel. Vi återgifva omnämnandena på engelska språket, då öfversättningen kanske skulle borttaga en del af de väsentligaste effekterna. Så här skrifves om henne:

Henry T. Finck, New York Evening Post: Richard Wagner was not always as dignified as a cardinal. Sometimes when particularly happy, he climbed a tree like a monkey or stood on his head, to the great scandalizing of Frau Cosima. Had he been in Carnegie Hall last night he would at least have thrown his hat clear up to the ceiling and shouted for joy; for he would have heard a Wagnerian artist of the rare kind he dreamt of when he started in Bayreuth a high school for dramatic singing. That school came to naught because the raw material was lacking. Oh, that he might have had Sigrid Onegin for his Bayreuth festivals! I am glad, though, that he didn't, for then I would not have hade the pleasure of hearing this superlative artist yesterday, when she made her American debut as soloist of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Sigrid Onegin is a big woman, of the northern, Valkyre type, splendidly formed, and her voice is as heroic and resplendent as her physique. It pours from her throat with as little effort as a Norwegian waterfall. It is as agreeable in its quality as in its spontaneity, and it has dramatic warmth to burn.

A great mezzo-soprano is this Swedish prima donna, with a leaning toward the contralto. She recalls Marianna Brandt and Schumann-Heink in their best days. Her reception by the audience was exetrmely enthusiastic, and she was recalled many times. She may safely cable home: "I came, was heard, and conquered."

Richard Aldrich, New York Times: Mme. Sigrid Onegin disclosed herself at once as an artist of distinguished gifts in voice and in dramatic expression. It is a powerful and darkly colored mezzo-soprano, used with more skill than in common in singers of her class, with a good command of phrase and discerning declamation; a voice well equalized throughout its range.

Deems Taylor, New York World: After hearing Madame Onegin sing her three numbers it is impossible not to believe that she will do great things at the Metropolitan, for she has looks, personality, voice and an unerring dramatic instinct. The voice is remarkable, rich and dark in its lower register, a little metallic, but still beatiful in the upper tones, and enormous in volume. It rolled through Carnegie Hall with such huge effortless power that one could almost see it. She sang beautifully, for the most part with fine restraint, lit by flashes of terrific dramatic force, and with an evident pure joy in singing that was good to see and better to hear.

Max Smith, New York American: She disclosed her voice in the sweeping dramatic cadences of "Andromache's Lament" from Bruch's "Achilles"—a superb organ of mezzo-soprano character, strong, potent, voluminous and encompassing easily two octaves.

M. Halperson, Staats-Zeitung: The voice is truly almost to be called a miracle. Of simply phenomenal range, the organ impresses one in all registers by the smoothness and strength of tone. On the peak of vocal and technical merits stands intelligence and deep spiritual understanding.

Chicago Tribune: An unusual personage came upon the stage of Orchestra Hall last night. She is Sigrid Onegin, contralto, who has been singing this season with the Metropolitan Opera and came here for a song recital. Of all the contralto voices in memory there is none like hers.

I would not attempt to tell offhand how wide her vocal range is, but last night it seemed as though there were no limit to it, either up or down. A glorious voice it is, too, as even through its whole extent as though it were produced by a mechanism instead of a human throat, clear, ingratiating, flexible—one wants to use all the adjectives there are, and hesitates only through fear of extravagance.

What is more to the point, this glorious voice is applied to the purpose of glorious singing. In fact, Mme. Onegin is almost unbelievable. She has looks, personality, and a superabundance of vitality. She strides upon the stage—and ordinary walk is too lifeless for her—takes her place in front of the piano, and one is immediately in danger of losing his head, his heart, and his critical faculty. Certainly the old Italian songs of Marcello, Lotti, and Poisiello and the lieder of Schubert and Brahms took on a charm that I hardly suspected before.

Chicago Daily News: In Sigrid Onegin, the contralto of the Metropolitan Opera House ,we became acquainted last evening with an artist of the first rank. She came to Orchestra Hall, making her Chicago debut in a recital which ranks among the best we have heard here this season.

Mme. Onegin has personality; she has artistic instinct and she has vocal gifts of remarkable excellence. Her voice has a wide range. It is even throughout, from the deeper contralto tones to the higher registers, where it is clear and brilliant. Her interpretations are musical and show the art of projecting the mood and feeling, and also poetic imagination.

Minneapolis Evening Tribune: Leaving the University last night after hearing Sigrid Onegin sing, an old German was heard to mutter over and over again: "Himmel, das war ein Genuss, das war herrlich, herrlich;" but that only half expresses the supreme satisfaction, the glory of Onegin's art, voice and personality gave to the most enthusiastic audience that ever greeted an artist in this hall. This woman has the voice of a century, ranging easily through three octaves, capable of expressing every shade of human emotion and without a single discernable flaw.

Minneapolis Star: Sigrid Onegin brought one of the most astounding voices of the decade to Minneapolis last night, in her recital at the University concert course. Only in superlative terms can one appraise the art of this marvelous contralto. A new "greatest" voice, it seems, has been added to the roster of America's songbirds in the person of this Swedish singer.

Svea
Feb 7 1923

Sigrid Onegin är en underbar sångerska,

måhända den mest underbara, som någonsin sjungit i det ryktbarhetens tempel i Chicago, hvilket går under namnet Orchestra hall, skrifver "Sv K." Och icke nog med detta. Sigrid Onegin torde vara den mest tilldragande sångerska, som någonsin stått på denna konserttribun där så godt som alla kända sångerskor af rang i världen försökt taga publiken. Sigrid Onegin tog denna publik innan hon sjungit en ton vid sin konsert. Och efter hennes första nummer blef hon drottningen bland allt hvad sångerskor heter, ingen nu lefvande undantagen. Detta uttalande kanske förefaller de flesta öfverdrifvet. Men ingen, som hörde henne vid hennes debutkonsert härstädes, kan uppskatta henne annorlunda. Till och med den förhärdade amerikanska kritiken föll till föga inför denna sångerskas trollmakt. Och som ett bevis härpå vilja vi aftrycka hvad Chicago Tribunes aktade Glen Dillard Gunn har att anföra. Han skref nämligen i lördags följande:

"An unusual personage came upon the stage of Orchestra hall last night. She is Sigrid Onegin, contralto, who has been singing this season with the Metropolitan opera and came here for a song recital. Of all the contralto voices in memory there is none like hers.

"I would not attempt to tell offhand how wide her vocal range is, but last night it seemed as though there were no limit to it, either up or down. A glorious voice it is, too, as even through its whole extent as though it were produced by a mechanism instead of human throat, clear, ingratiating, flexible—one wants to use all the adjectives there are, and hesitates only through fear of extravagance.

"What is more to the point, this glorious voice is applied to the purpose of glorious singing. In fact, Mme. Onegin is almost unbelievable. She has looks, personality, and a superabundance of vitality. She strides upon the stage—an ordinary walk is too lifeless for her—takes her place in front of the piano, and one is immediately in danger of losing his head, his heart, and his critical faculty. Certainly the old Italan songs of Marcello, Dotti, and Paisiella and the lieder of Schubert and Brahms took a charm that I hardly suspected before."

Ingen af de amerikanska kritikerna stannade för att höra hela Sigrid Onegins program. På Operan gafs nämligen samma afton "Tosca", och där skulle den firade stjärnan Mary Gardens uppträdande bedömas, hvarför herrar tidningsmän — med sorg i hjärtat, förmodligen — måste rusa i väg från Orchestra Hall till Auditorium, hvarest operaföreställningarna, som bekant, gifvas. Inga andra än dessa skulle emellertid ha kunnat lämna Orchestra Hall, äfven om man erbjudit dem stora summor. Till denna grad hade Sigrid Onegins märkliga röst och tilldragande person hypnotiserat dem. Sak samma hvad hon sjöng, allt mottogs med öronbedöfvande applåder. Gamla kända konsertsaker — bland dem Schuberts "Der Erlkönig" — blefvo helt och hållet nya, då hon tolkade dem med sin härliga stämma, hvilken knappast tycktes hafva någon gräns, vare sig i höjden eller i de lägre registren. Ovationerna för sångerskan steg med hvarje nummer, som utfördes. Och efter det ordinarie programmets slut, hvilket åtföljdes af otaliga extranummer, rusade ingen ur lokalen. Alla stodo upp ur sina platser samt stampade och skreko af förtjusning. Att klappa i händerna var hvarje åhörare vid den tidpunkten alldeles för trött till genom den ideliga ansträngningen under konsertens gång. Till slut kom sångerskan åter fram, åtföljd af ackompagnatören. Det skulle alltså bli ytterligare ett nummer. Dödstystnad rådde. Man kunde ha hört en knappnål falla. Och så kom — mäktigare, ståtligare och mera gripande än hvad någon kan föreställa sig — Stenhammars SVERIGE. Denna sång kommo landsmännen i salongen att fälla tårar af rörelse. Sigrid Onegin lade här sitt rika hjärta in i sången. Man kände ordens innebörd dallra i sitt innersta. Sverige sökte här sina barn och fann dem också genom Sigrid Onegins oförlikneliga konst. Konserten var sannerligen ett bestående minne för lifvet.

SYMPHONY HALL : : THURSDAY EVE., FEB. 8, at 8.15

BOSTON DEBUT

SIGRID ONEGIN

The remarkable new Swedish contralto of the Metropolitan Opera Co., N. Y.

"Exquisite quality and tremendous power.—Vocal lovliness, intelligence, and a splendid emotional sweep."—H. E. Krehbied, N. Y. Tribune.

Seats—$1, $1.50, $2, $2.50 (Plus 10c tax).

En konsert,

som inväntas af vår stads sång- och musikälskande publik, blir den i Symphony Hall torsdagsaftonen den 8 februari, hvarvid vår ryktbara svenska kontraalt, mme Sigrid Onegin, gör sin Bostondebut, och själf utför hela programmet. Vi ha läst och hört så mycket om vår firade operadiva under den senaste tiden att vi inväntа hennes uppträdande med största intresse. Hon kommer hit med ett rykte att vara säsongens bästa artist och vi hoppas att hon vid sitt uppträdande här den 8 febr. kommer att bekräfta detsamma.

MME SIGRID ONEGIN.

Mme Onegin kommer att bjuda på följande varierande och storslagna program:

I.

a. Il mio bet fuoco
Benedetto Marcello (1686-1734)
b. Pur dicesti
Antonio Lotti (1667-1740)
c. Chi vuol a cingarella
Paisiello (1741-1816)

II.

a. Der Musensohn ....Schubert
b. Der Erlkoenig............Schubert
c. Sapphische Ode............Brahms
d. Willst du dass ich geh.....Brahms

III.

Pastorals and Romances of the 17th Century, arranged by
J. B. Weckerlin
a. L'amour s'envole
b. Menuet d'Exaudet
c. Non je n'irai plus au bois
d. Jeune fillette

IV.

a. I Heard a Cry
William Arms Fisher
b. Come up................Carl Deis
c. The Blind Ploughman
Robert Coningsby Clarke
d. Southern Songs....Landon Ronald

Sigrid Onegin

kommer. såsom i korthet omtalades i förra numret af SVEA, att göra sin Bostondebut i Symphony Hall torsdagskvällen den 8 februari och det är med stor längtan och trängtan, som vår musikälskande publik motser hennes uppträdande här. Vår frejdade landsmaninna, och som hon kallas "the sensational Swedish contralto", är en af säsongens nya stjärnor, vid Metropolitan Opera Co. i New York och har hon där vunnit såväl publikens son pressens odelade beröm och entusiastiska bifall.

Madame Onegin är Stockholmsbarn, men tillbrakte sina barnaår i Frankrike samt vid femton års ålder reste till Tyskland för att utbilda sin sångröst. Utbildningen fortsattes sedan under italienska mästare och år 1912 gjorde hon sin debut som storsångerska i Berlin.

Kort därefter debuterade hon som operasångerska och har sedan dess ådragit sig stor uppmärksamhet i de många och olika partier hon utfört. Då hon i hötas kom till New York och där gjorde sin debut vid en konsert blef hon genast en gunstling och ansågs af såväl publik som press en af de bästa kontralter hörd under de sista åren. Vid Metropolitan Opera House har hon redan sjungit ett flertal roller och anses där som en af sällskapets allra bästa artister.

Det skall bli ett sannt nöje att få hälsa vår ryktbara landsmaninna välkommer till Boston och lyssna till hennes präktiga stämma i ett väl valdt program, hvilket vi torde komma att återgifva i ett kommande nummer. De som önska höra henne torde i god tid förse sig med biljetter, hvilka nu finnas till salu i Symphony Halls biljettlucka. Se annonsen.

Svea
Feb. 7 1923

Sigrid Onegin,

vår ståtliga svenska operadiva, som enligt många olika pressuttalanden är en af nutidens allra förnämsta stjärnor på sångkonstens himmel, gör i morgon, torsdag, kväll sin Bostondebut i Symphony Hall.

Mme. Onegin är Stockholmsbarn och har sedan sin hitkomst förliden höst gjort furore hvarhelst hon uppträdt, vare sig det varit på operascenen eller konserttribunen. Hon har en fenomenal röst, både kontraalt och mezzosopran, sträckande sig öfver tre oktaver, men icke nog därmed, hon har utesende och en ovanligt ståtlig gestalt. Ingen med svenskt blod i sina ådror bör uraktlåta att bevista konserten i Symphony Hall. Här nedan vilja vi ytterligare återgifva några pressuttalanden.

Så t. ex. skrifver Henry T. Finck i New York Evening Post bl. a.: "Sigrid Onegin is a big woman, of northern, Valkyre type, splendidly formed, and her voice is a heroic and resplendent as her physique. It pours from her throat with as little effort as a Norwegian waterfall. It is as agreeable in its quality as in its spontaneity, and it has dramatic warmth to burn.—A mezzosoprano is this Swedish prima donna, with a leaning toward the contrato. She recalls Marianna Brandt and Schumann-Heink in their best days. Her reception by the audience was extremely enthusiastic, and she was recalled many times. She may safely cable home: "I came, was heard, and conquered."

W. J. Henderson, New York Herald, skrifver om henne bl. a.: "Since this Swedish artist is to be heard often in opera it is not cecessary to exhaust comment on her singing this morning. A brief sketch, however, would have to contain certain items, namely, the development of a robust art on the foundation of a truly noble voice of grand proportions, commanding power and dramatic quality."

Deems Taylor, New York World, skrifver bl. a.: "After hearing Madame Onegin sing her three numbers it is impossible not to believe that she will do great things at the Metropolitan, for she has looks, personality, voice and an unerring dramatic instinct. The voice is remarkable, rich and dark in its lower register, a little metallic, but still beautiful in the upper tones, and enormous in volume. It rolled through Carnegie Hall with such effortless power that one could almost see it. She sang beautifully, for the most part with fine restraint, lit by flashes of terrific dramatic force, and with an evident pure joy in singing that was good to see and better to hear."

G. W. Gabriel, New York Sun "There rang last night a voice, destined within a month to sweep some cobwebs from the sainted rafters of the Metropolitan Opera The voice belonged to Sigrid Onegin, making her New York debut. Her first notes told the tale of a splendid new voice in the Metropolitan fold."

M. Halperson, Staats-Zeitung: "The voice is truly almost to be called a miracle. Of simple phenomal range, the organ impresses one in all registers by the smoothness and strenght of tone. On the peak of vocal and technical merits stands intelligence and deep spiritual understanding."

Frank H. Warren, New York Evening World: "Mme. Onegin, a fine figure of a woman, showed a voice, big, warm, luscious, of wide range, at times ravishing in its quality. To paraphrase the late Mr. Huncker: "Hats off, gentlemen—a voice!"

Vi ha många fler som kunde återgifvas, men utrymmet medgifver ej mera denna gång. Nog af, gå och lyssna till vår landsmaninnas underbara röst i Symphony Hall i morgon, torsdag, kväll. Se vidare annonsen.

Ivogun – Feb 4, 1923

MARIA IVOGUN GIVES RECITAL

Soprano Shows Fine Knowledge of Phrasing and Rhythm

MUCH OF PROGRAM IS FLORID MUSIC

For her recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall Maria Ivogun, soprano, had the assistance of Arthur Brooke, flutist, and Michael Rauchleisen, accompanist. The program:

Lo, Here the Gentle Lark (with flute)	Bishop
Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt	Schubert
Pastorella	Schubert
Die Forelle	Schubert
Seligkeit	Schubert
Cavatina, "So anch' io" "Don Pasquale"	Donizetti
Come Unto These Yellow Sands	La Forge
Windflowers	Josten
Pirate Dreams	Huerter
Brown Birdeen	Buzzi-Peccia
Variations on a Melody by Mozart (with flute)	Adam

If Mme. Ivogun has the wish to make a career in America, she would do well to seek the counsel of somebody wise in the ways of American concert-goers. Such a person would surely warn her against trusting too confidently in the power of coloratura singing to attract; three long florid pieces of the emptiest sort of bravura he would at all events pronounce too many in a concert that lasted a scant hour and a quarter. To this showy music add the group of American songs, pretty enough of their kind, but chosen frankly for their popular appeal. Four Schubert songs remain for solid fare, only one, "Die Forelle," Schubert at his best. If Mme. Ivogun would win a public worth the having, she must offer programs more worth while.

In the year that has passed since she first sang in Boston Mme. Ivogun seems to have bettered her technique. She controls her breath more firmly now, to her low tones she has added strength, and her medium register she has much improved; in the way of clear enunciation she still has much to learn. Now, as well as a year ago, she rejoices in a smooth legato, head tones perfectly taken, and a florid execution exceedingly precise. Above many singers she shows herself a musician, with a fine knowledge of what a phrase means, and rhythm.

All her songs and airs she sang well yesterday. What one liked the best is merely a matter of taste. Mr. Rauchleisen played the accompaniments not only beautifully, but with admirable discretion. Mr. Brooke of course played well. The audience asked for repetitions and encores.

Why, when next she visits Boston, could not Mme. Ivogun be persuaded to give her concert in a smaller hall where her pretty voice and her manifest talents would tell to better advantage than in a hall too large for her? On this imaginary occasion she might well choose to sing one or two of those Mozart airs in which she has proved she excells, a few early Italian airs in which she surely must excell, and also songs of worth. A large and intelligent audience would surely go out to hear a program of fine quality from Mme. Ivogun. Any effort for popular acclaim she may wisely leave to singers of bigger voice and more highly colored style.

R. R. G.

Herald Feb 5

Marie Ivogun Concert

BY OLIN DOWNES

The Sunday concert in Symphony Hall was given yesterday by Marie Ivogun, soprano, a pleasing figure on the stage, and what is more important, an artist.

Miss Ivogun has an admirably trained voice. She is not only expert in coloratura, but in sustained song. In matters of phrasing and of diction her intelli ence and instinctive musical feeling re immediately noticed. Then, too, al hough she seemed yesterday not to be in best voice, probably owing to the weather, she sings with an apparent ease, a pleasure and spontaneity in her task, which give a charming effect to her appearances.

The programme included Bishop's song of the lark, four Schubert songs, "Nur were die sensucht kennt," "Pastorella," "Die Forelle," "Seligkeit"; the cavatina, "So auch' io la virtu magica," of Donizetti, and other songs by Frank La Forge, Werner Josten, Hueter, Busi-Peccia and Mozart. In the Mozart melody and variations and in Bishop's song the flute obligato was played by Arthur Brooke of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Michael Rauchleisen accompanied. The audience, of good size, though it might well have packed the house for such a performance, repeatedly recalled and en ored the singer.

Post Feb 5

MME IVOGUN IN POPULAR PROGRAM

Arouses Large Audience to Great Enthusiasm

Maria Ivogun, a soprano, whose exquisite voice and beautiful use of it deeply impressed her first Boston audience, returned to Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon and aroused the enthusiasm of a large audience by a popular program, with the chief emphasis placed upon feats of florid song such as "Lo, here the gentle lark," nad "Ah, vous d'rai-je, maman." Arthur Brooke, for many years a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, played the flute obbligatos for these two pieces. Mme Ivogun gracefully yielded to him a larger share of the applause than he would probably have felt justified in claiming for his excellent performance.

These two showy airs, both worn rather thin by usage, won Mme Ivogun great applause. She sang them with an obvious striving for display which made her force her tone, and even resort to the vibrato effect that verges upon the quavering tremolo.

Her coloratura effects are readily and accurately gained. Such high notes as hers, taken easily, sustained clearly and sweetly are phenomenal, and beautiful. She did not always keep on pitch yesterday, nor was her voice in particularly good condition.

The cavatina from "Don Pasquale" was the best suited of all the things she sang yesterday, except a group of Schubert songs, to display the individual vocal and musical virtues Mme Ivogun possesses in such large measure. It is a difficult show piece, but also an integral part of the opera buffa from which it comes. Donizetti, whatever his defects, certainly knew more about writing singable music than did Verdi or Puccini. To the cavatina Mme Ivogun brought a beautifully sensuous clarity of tone, musicianly phrasing and dynamics, and a marked capacity for conveying the dramatic purport of the words.

"Nur wer die Sehnsucht kennt" was perhaps the best sung of her Schubert songs, the one sop to the musical connoisseur her program contained. Her group in English contained four popular ballads, by La Forge, Josten, Huerter and Buzzi-Peccia. She repeated the latter's "Brown Birdeen" and had applause enough to have justified her repetition of the three others.

After each group there was an encore, and at the end the people refused to go home until she had sung several times more. She added to the program only after many recalls and prolonged applause convinced her that people really wanted to hear more, a courtesy shown by few singers with their way to make.

If she is wise, she will make Arditi's "Il bacio" her stock encore, as the "Blue Danube" is Hempel's. It greatly pleased her hearers yesterday, when she returned after what had obviously been meant as her final departure. Yesterday's concert showed that Mme Ivogun can win and hold a big popular audience as well as please the critics. It should notably aid her in the always tedious job of winning a personal following in Boston.

Globe Feb 5

MARIA IVOGUN SINGS AT SYMPHONY HALL

Maria Ivogun, colorature soprano, returned to Boston yesterday to give a concert at Symphony Hall. Her voice is rather small for so large an auditorium, and her singing of English songs is marked by poor diction; but she sang a group of German songs pleasingly and showed expertness in florid songs, notably in an aria from Donizetti's "Don Pasqua and in Adam's "Variations on Mozart Melody." She was arti tically assisted by Michael Rauch leisen, pianist, and Arthur Brooke, one of the Symphony flute players.

Advertiser Feb 5

Mme. Ivogun in Recital

Maria Ivogun, in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, sang Bishop's "Lo, here the gentle lark," and Adam's variations on a Mozart melody, to the flute accompaniment of Arthur Brooke; the cavatina "So anch' io la virtu magica," from Donizetti's "Don Pasquale;" a Schubert group, and songs by La Forge, Josten, Huerter and Buzzi-Peccia. Mme. Ivogun again proved herself the possessor of a remarkable technical accomplishment; too technical, one might say, although her audience gave ample testimony of its pleasure in her singing. Certainly there was an oversight of displayful pieces. Mme. Ivogun's voice, while not so excellent as her use of it, might, by token of odd moments yesterday, be heard to advantage in a more lyric program. Mr. Brooke and Michael Rauchleisen, at the piano, were helpful.

Monitor Feb 5

MARIA IVOGUN GIVES RECITAL AT SYMPHONY

By ZOE FABER

There is no denying the fact that coloratura singing, as such, has far less of an appeal with the American concert public of today than it had, say, twenty-five years ago or even ten.

Just why, then, a singer with the voice and mentality and charm that Maria Ivogun has at her command should elect to sing a program at her recital in Symphony Hall that has far more than its rightful share of coloratura, is not quite clear.

She can do it and do it beautifully, but the question is, why do it? Why not have sung, for instance, the Bird Song from "Pagliacci," which would have provided the opportunities she likes and would have contributed far more enjoyment to her hearers than the "Variations on a Melody by Mozart."

There was a group of Schubert in which the singer had more to convey to her audience than in the entire remainder of the program.

Maria Ivogun is a charming personality and she won her hearers with her lovely voice. The high tones are unusual.

Michael Rauchleisen was at the piano for the singer and Arthur Brooke contributed some flute obligatos.

Several encores, including the "Connais Tu Le Pays" from "Mignon" were added at the insistent request of the audience.

American Feb 5

MISS IVOGUN AND OPPORTUNITY MISSED

A Singer Deserving Fitter Place and Fortunes—Stuart Mason as Conductor with the People's Orchestra—Shocking Schoenberg—Mr. Gabrilowitsch to Return

THIS winter as last, Miss Ivogün seems uneasy, uncertain, unplaced in American concert-halls. Evidently, she would cultivate the American vineyard, since again she returns to it, though she lacks neither reputation nor opportunity in Central Europe. Yet somehow she fails to find the plot that she can best till for her own. As evidently, she pleases an American public. In New York, in Boston, in other cities, she wins increasing audiences; while the "records" spread good report of her. Yet how and wherewith she may best address this public seems still to puzzle her. She is small of person; she is light of voice; her singing abounds in fine detail; she avoids the strain upon herself and upon her hearers of prolonged concerts. Yet she chooses such huge concert-rooms as Carnegie Hall in New York or Symphony Hall in Boston wherein charm is evaporation. As she proved yesterday in four pieces from Schubert, she excels in songs of light body and lyrical texture. The grace of her singing gilds the commonplace of even a final miscellany a la mode. Yet more deliberately, as it seems, she would have her audience seek and applaud her as ornate singer. Hence a flute, the lark and Sir Henry Bishop of a mid-nineteenth-century day. Hence the unsparing variations of the late Monsieur Adam upon measures of Mozart. Hence a "Cavatina," showy and not much else, from Donizetti's "Don Pasquale" and a florid waltz of Arditi for extra piece. Obviously a programme at cross-purposes assembled by an uncertain singer.

The similar example in her earlier days, the fruitful precept as she has now become, is Mme. Hempel. Like Miss Ivogün, she forsook the opera house for the concert hall; was minded to cultivate the American field; at first groped there for becoming place. Not so long ago, her programmes also ran hither and thither, seeking unity and finding it not. Now she lets the music of the eighteenth century exhibit her voice and skill unadorned or bedecked. Pieces from Mozart, pieces from Handel, invite her to ornate song more than do Italian exercises therein or nondescript journeymen's variations. She ripens in the German masters from Schubert and Schumann through Franz and Brahms. She condescends less than is the custom in the enjoined balladry of the end. In a word Mme. Hempel's pieces new interest in themselves, succeed one another according to a discoverable course and standard. She also discovered that, while florid singing may still please in elder operas, it does not beguile into the concert-hall the audience best understanding and applauding other abilities. Gaining this wisdom and also practising it, Mme. Hempel, in American concert-halls, in European as well, is now high-placed. An assured public seeks her and is glad.

Like opportunity opens before Miss Ivogün, did she discern and follow it. Her voice is light, bright, limpid, supple and as yet edgeless. She uses it, not merely with skill, but with a pervasive and insinuating grace. She is plainly both schooled and intuitive musician. Whatever the piece, she divines the design, adjusts line and motion, holds music and text in continuous progress. Time and again, an inflection of the melody, the shaping of a phrase, the turn of a modulation, a variation of rhythm, prove her sensitive and imaginative singer. Choosing the ornaments of song, she can give them the impetus that make them less feats than rhapsody. Choosing such pieces as those from Schubert, the beauty of her voice, the grace of her song, wing the fancy to which over music and verse she gives equal play. When she descends to trifles, she glamors them. She could not be showy, if she would. The continence that is refinement in the better sense of the word stays her. Throughout her singing goes the finesse that is connoisseur's delight and layman's pleasure. Yet she chooses halls in which, perforce, it must run thin; halls also in which her voice strives against vast spaces; halls in which her personal charm is as nothing except to a near-by few. She has been told, seemingly, that this, that and the other sort of piece will most surely win her the desired public. Better in the long run the free and better choice that shall join with her qualities in song.

H. T. P.

Transcript Feb 5

Walska Feb 25th (also 4th page following)

[illegible] Walska, now Mrs Harold McCormick, sang the air from "L'Enlevement au Serail" at a recent concert given in Paris by Andre Caplet. Her American tour seems to have been indefinitely postponed. Gl 1-28

Globe Jan 28

Ganna Walska, the Polish opera singer, in private life wife of Harold F. McCormick, will make her debut in Boston at a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25. Her 2/4

Herald Feb 4

GANNA WALSKA

Madame Ganna Walska, the Polish beauty and opera singer, in private life wife of Mr. Harold F. McCormick, multi-millionaire, is shortly expected to arrive with her husband in America. She will make her debut in Boston at a concert to be given in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25.

Post Feb 4

Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25, in Symphony Hall, Ganna Walska, "the beautiful Pole," better known to the social and matrimonial chronicles of the newspapers than to the records of the concert-hall. Yet she also sings. There is Parisian word for it—and here is her concert for first appearance in Boston. Trans 2-10

Transcript Feb 10

GANNA WALSKA

Mrs. Harold F. McCormick, who is known as Ganna Walska, the Polish singer, has just arrived in America for the first time and will immediately begin a concert tour in her private car, which is to include an appearance in Boston in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25. Trav 2-10

Traveler Feb 10

Ganna Walska, the beautiful wife of Harold F. McCormick, has just arrived in this country in readiness for a concert tour in her private car, which will include an appearance in Symphony Hall, Sunday afternoon, Feb 25. Gl 2/11

Globe Feb 11

WALKSA COMING Adv 2/11

Ganna Walksa will make her first appearance in Boston at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 25. Her recent Paris concerts were applauded.

Advertiser Feb 11

GANNA WALSKA'S HUB DEBUT ROUSES PUBLIC Adv 2/17

Ganna Walska McCormick has chosen a program of classic and modern songs for her Boston debut at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25. It includes several Mozart arias. Max Kaplick, a member of the old Boston Opera Company, will sing a duet with her, and also several solos. The ticket sale indicates great curiosity to see the beautiful singer who married one American multi-millionaire after another.

Advertiser Feb 17

MME. WALSKA WILL SING HERE

Amer 2/17

A program of high musical interest will be given by Madame Ganna Walska at her Boston debut, which will take place in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, February 25. The Polish beauty, having lately arrived in America with her husband, Harold F. McCormick, is following her recent success in Paris by a tour of this country in which she is to be assisted by Max Kaplick, baritone, who was formerly a conspicuous member of the Boston Opera Company.

Ganna Walska

American Feb 17

GANNA WALSKA Her 2/17

[illegible] program of musical interest will [illegible] by Mme. Ganna Walska at [illegible] Boston debut, which will take place [illegible] Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25, at 3:30. The Polish [illegible] having lately arrived in America [illegible] husband, Harold F. McCormick, [illegible] her recent success in Paris [illegible]

Herald Feb 17

SUNDAY afternoon, Feb. 25, in Symphony Hall, Ganna Walska, "the beautiful Pole," better known to the social and matrimonial chronicles of the newspapers than to the records of the concert-hall. Yet she also sings. There is Parisian word for it—and here is her concert for first appearance in Boston. Her numbers include airs of Mozart; songs of Scarlatti and Strauss; other pieces light and ornate. Max Kaplick, of old baritone of the Boston Opera Company, will assist Mme. Walska. Trans 2/17

Transcript Feb 17

GANNA WALSKA AT SYMPHONY HALL

Tel 2/17

A program of high musical interest will be given by Madame Ganna Walska at her Boston debut, which will taken place in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25, at 3:30.

The Polish beauty, having lately arrived in America with her husband, Harold F. McCormick, is following her recent success in Paris by a tour of this country in which she is to be assisted by Max Kaplick, baritone, who was formerly a conspicuous member of the Boston Opera Company.

At her Boston concert Madame Walska will sing three Mozart arias and songs by Scarlatti and Richard Strauss, also Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Hymn to the Sun." Madame Walska and Max Kaplick will close with a duet from "Rigoletto."

Telegram Feb 17

Ganna Walska to Sing Here Next Sunday

Gl 2/18

Ganna Walska, now the wife of Harold McCormack, the Chicago multi-millionaire, from whom John D. Rockefeller's daughter was recently divorced, will give a song recital next Sunday afternoon at Symphony Hall. There has been a great deal of discussion in the news columns of American newspapers about this Polish singer, who is said to possess extraordinary personal charm and beauty. She has sung in France with success in concert, according to news dispatches. It is rumored that her husband will buy for her an opera house in Paris.

Mme Walska wishes to be heard and judged merely as a singer, according to statements in New York and Chicago newspapers.

Globe Feb 18

Walska Programme

Ganna Walska, the Polish soprano, and wife of Harold F. McCormick, will make her Boston debut in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25, at 3:30. Post 2/18

Madame Walska is undertaking a tour of this country, following recent appearances with the Pasdeloup Orchestra under Andre Caplet in Paris and other concerts in France.

She will be assisted by Max Kaplick, formerly baritone of the Boston Opera Company. She will sing the Aria of Constance from "L'enlevement au Serail," of Mozart; "Porgi Amor," from "Nozze di Figaro," Mozart; "Violette," Scarlatti; "Amor," Richard Strauss; Aria de Blondine, Mozart; air from "Coq d'Or," Rimsky-Korsakoff; Valse, Johann Strauss. With Mr. Kaplick Mme. Walska will sing a duet from "Rigoletto."

Post Feb 18

WALSKA PROGRAM Adv 2/18

Ganna Walska, Polish soprano, and wife of Harold F. McCormick, at her Boston debut in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, will sing an aria from Mozart's "Constance" and songs by Scarlatti, Strauss, Mozart and Rimsky-Korsakoff. She will be assisted by Max Kaplic, baritone.

Advertiser Feb 18

WALSKA PROGRAM

Ganna Walska, the Polish soprano, and wife of Harold F. McCormick, will sing in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25, at 3:30. She will be assisted by Max Kaplick, formerly baritone of the Boston Opera Company.

Her 2/18

Il templario .... Nicolai
I'prigionieri d'Edinburgo .... Ricci
Mr. Kaplick
Aria of Constance, from "L'enlevement au Serail", Mozart
Mme. Walska
Aria—Vision Fugitive from "Herodiade" Massenet
Mr. Kaplick
"Porgi Amor" from "Nozze di Figaro," Mozart
Violette .... Scarlatti
Amor .... Strauss
Mme. Walska
Aria de Blondine .... Mozart
Coq d'Or .... Rimsky-Korsak[illegible]
Valse .... Johann Stra[illegible]
Mme. Walska
Japanisches Regenlied .... Mar[illegible]
Ecce Homo .... Trun[illegible]
Daddy's Little Boy .... Manna-Zucc[illegible]
Three Shadows .... Burleig[illegible]
Mr. Kaplick
Duet from "Rigoletto" .... Verdi
[illegible]

Herald Feb 18

GANNA WALSKA, AT SYMPHONY HALL ON SUNDAY, FEB. 25.

Herald Feb 18

WALSKA NEXT Amer 2/24

Madame Ganna Walska, otherwise known as Mrs. Harold F. McCormick, will make her first appearance in Boston at Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. She will be assisted by Max Kaplick, formerly leading baritone of the Boston Opera Company.

American Feb 24

Mme. Ganna Walska to Make Debut Here Tomorrow

Trav 2/24

Tomorrow afternoon at Symphony hall at 3:30 Mme. Ganna Walska, otherwise known as Mrs. Harold F. McCormick, will make her first appearance in Boston. Mme. Walska will be assisted by Max Kaplick, formerly leading baritone of the Boston Opera Company and will sing three arias from the operas of Mozart, songs by Duparc, Delibes, Strauss and others. Max Kaplick will sing arias by Nicolai, Strauss, Ricci, and Trunk, and will sing a duet from "Rigoletto" with Mme. Walska.

Traveler Feb 24

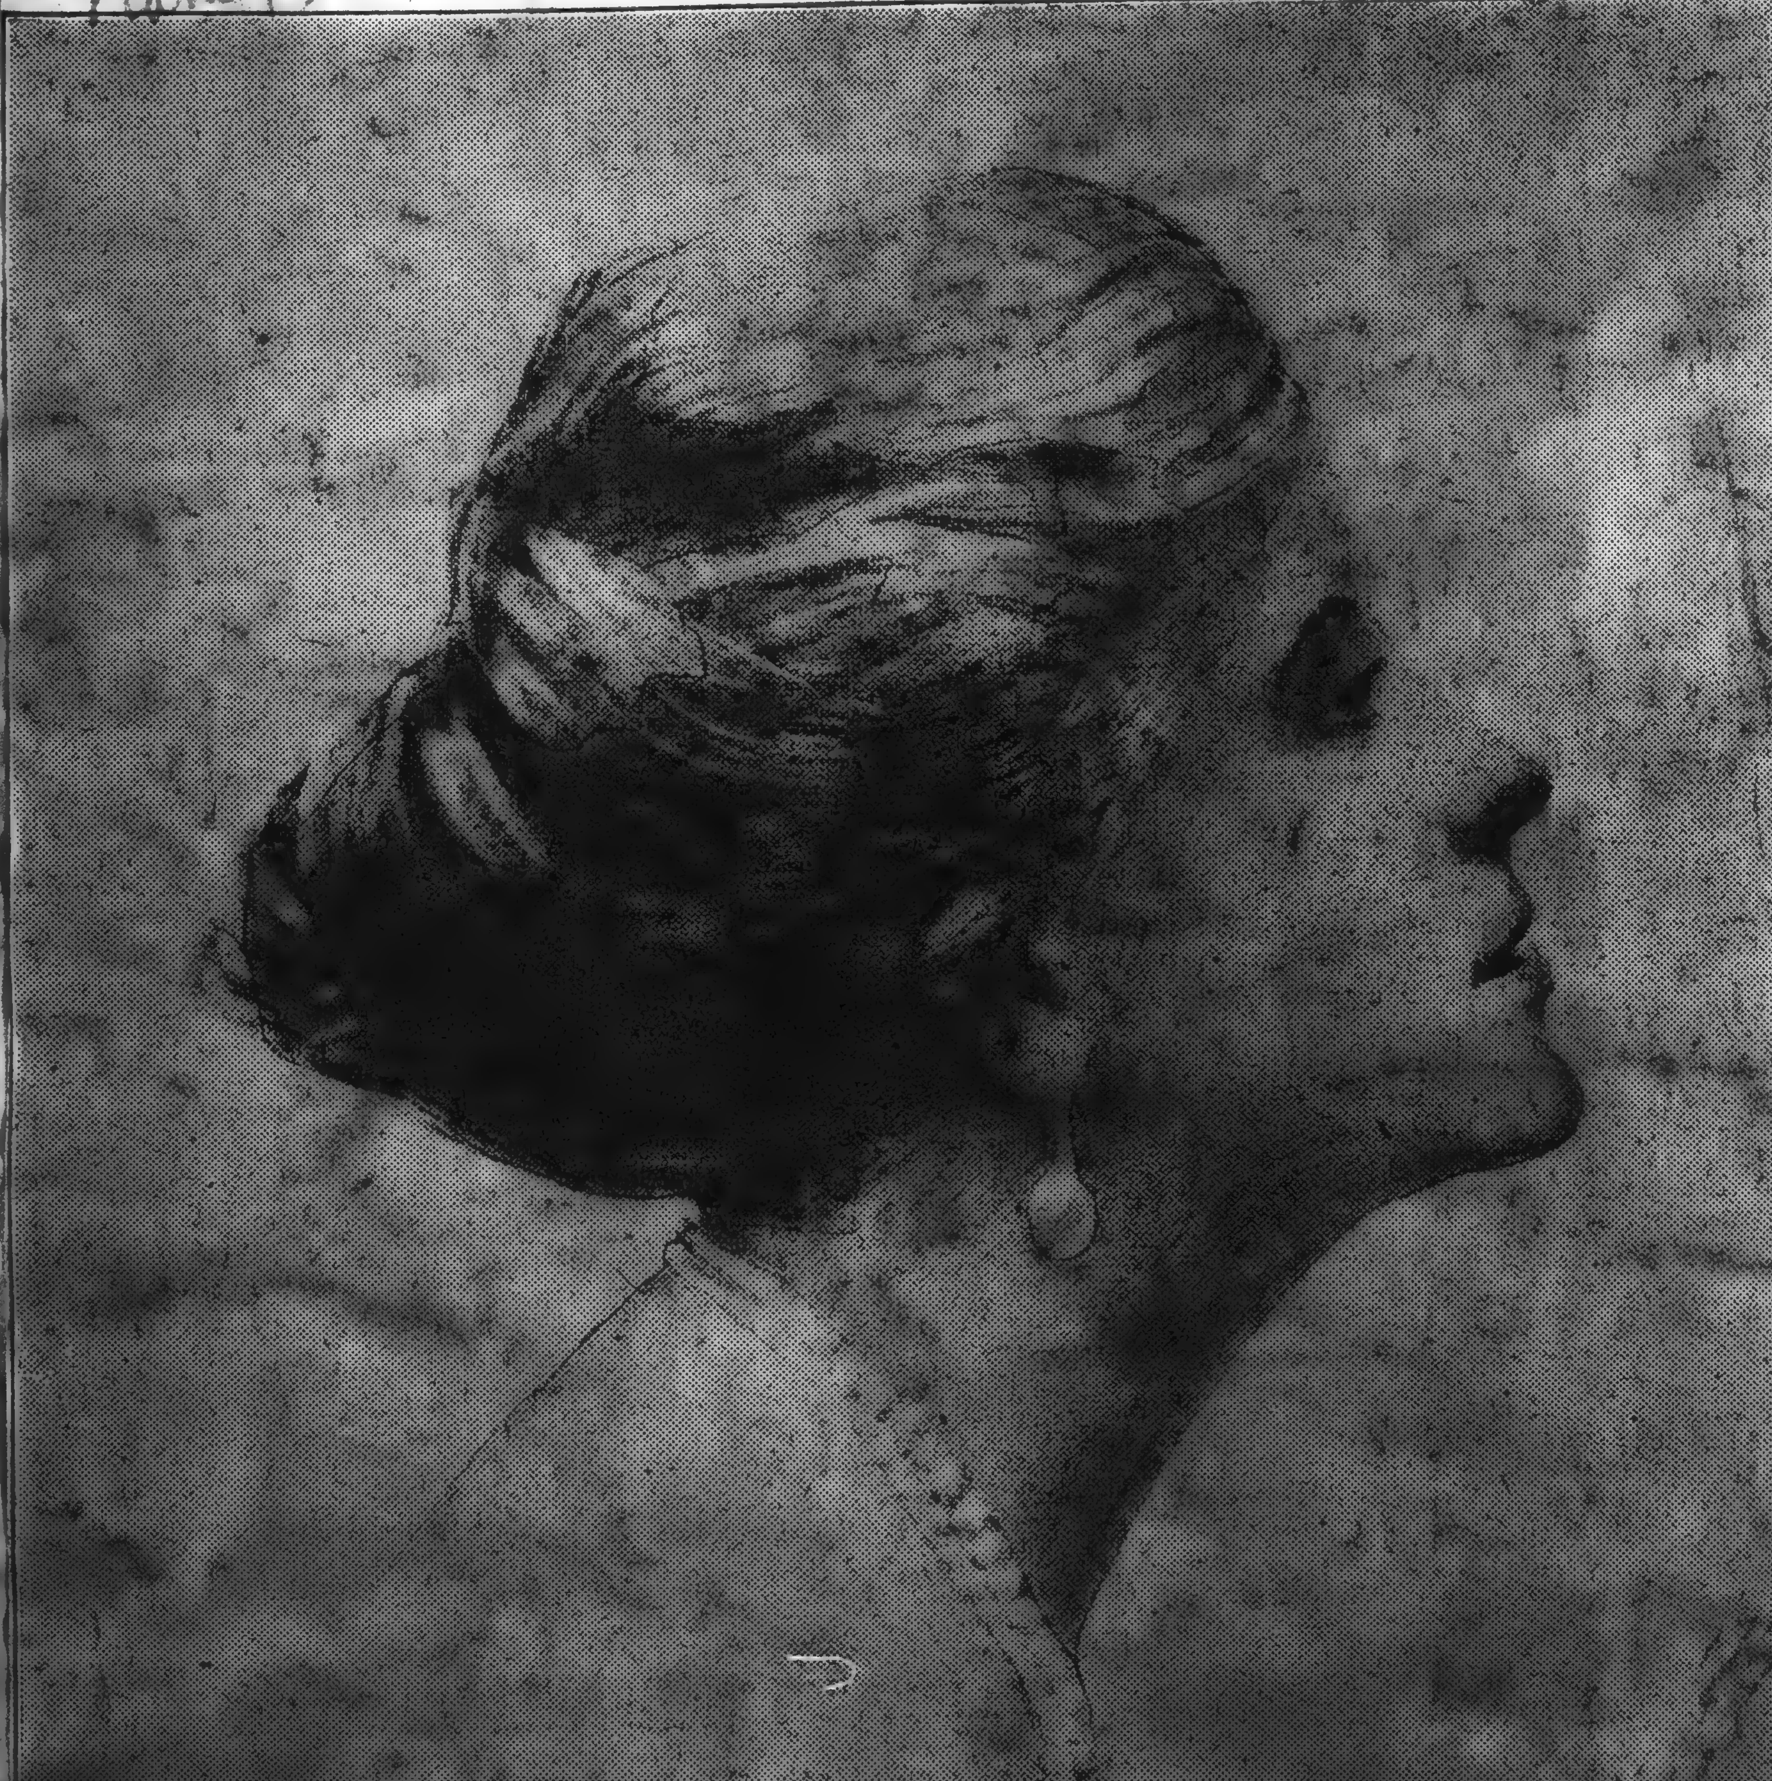
Coming Concerts Tel 2/24

Ganna Walska, recently returned from Europe with her husband, Harold F. McCormick, will make her first Boston appearance tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30 o'clock. Mme. Walska's program will be made up of three arias from the operas of Mozart, and songs by Duparc, Delibes and others. She will be assisted by Max Kaplick, with whom she will sing a duet from "Rigoletto."

Telegram Feb 24

"Perhaps It May Turn Out a Song"

Trans 2/23



Ganna Walska

From the Sketch on a Current Window-Card

Transcript Feb 23

Walska Feb ~~25~~th (also 4th page following)

Ganna Walska, now Mrs Harold McCormick, sang the air from "L'Enlevement au Serail" at a recent concert given in Paris by Andre Caplet. Her American tour seems to have been indefinitely postponed. Gl 1-28

Globe Jan 28

Ganna Walska, the Polish opera singer, in private life wife of Harold F. McCormick, will make her debut in Boston at a concert in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25. Her 2-4

Herald Feb 4

GANNA WALSKA

Post 2/4

Madame Ganna Walska, the Polish beauty and opera singer, in private life wife of Mr. Harold F. McCormick, multi-millionaire, is shortly expected to arrive with her husband in America. She will make her debut in Boston at a concert to be given in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25.

Post Feb 4

Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25, in Symphony Hall, Ganna Walska, "the beautiful Pole," better known to the social and matrimonial chronicles of the newspapers than to the records of the concert-hall. Yet she also sings. There is Parisian word for it—and here is her concert for first appearance in Boston. Trans 2-10

Transcript Feb 10

GANNA WALSKA

Mrs. Harold F. McCormick, who is known as Ganna Walska, the Polish singer, has just arrived in America for the first time and will immediately begin a concert tour in her private car, which is to include an appearance in Boston in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25. Trav 2-10

Traveler Feb 10

Ganna Walska, the beautiful wife of Harold F. McCormick, has just arrived in this country in readiness for a concert tour in her private car, which will include an appearance in Symphony Hall, Sunday afternoon, Feb 25.

Globe Feb 11

WALKSA COMING

Adv 2/11

Ganna Walksa will make her first appearance in Boston at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, February 25. Her recent Paris concerts were applauded.

Advertiser Feb 11

GANNA WALSKA'S HUB DEBUT ROUSES PUBLIC

Adv

Ganna Walska McCormick has chosen a program of classic and modern songs for her Boston debut at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25. It includes several Mozart arias. Max Kaplick, a member of the old Boston Opera Company, will sing a duet with her, and also several solos. The ticket sale indicates great curiosity to see the beautiful singer who married one American multi-millionaire after another.

Advertiser Feb 17

MME. WALSKA WILL SING HERE

Amer 2/17

Ganna Walksa

A program of high musical interest will be given by Madame Ganna Walska at her Boston debut, which will take place in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, February 25. The Polish beauty, having lately arrived in America with her husband, Harold F. McCormick, is following her recent success in Paris by a tour of this country in which she is to be assisted by Max Kaplick, baritone, who was formerly a conspicuous member of the Boston Opera Company.

American Feb 17

GANNA WALSKA

Trav 2/17

A program of musical interest will be given by Mme. Ganna Walska at her Boston debut, which will take place in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25, at 3:30. The Polish beauty, having lately arrived in America with her husband, Harold F. McCormick, is following her recent success in Paris by a tour of this country in which she is to be assisted by Max Kaplick, baritone, formerly a member of the Boston

Traveler Feb 17

SUNDAY afternoon, Feb. 25, in Symphony Hall, Ganna Walska, "the beautiful Pole," better known to the social and matrimonial chronicles of the newspapers than to the records of the concert-hall. Yet she also sings. There is Parisian word for it—and here is her concert for first appearance in Boston. Her numbers include airs of Mozart; songs of Scarlatti and Strauss; other pieces light and ornate. Max Kaplick, of old baritone of the Boston Opera Company, will assist Mme. Walska.

Transcript Feb 17

GANNA WALSKA AT SYMPHONY HALL

A program of high musical interest will be given by Madame Ganna Walska at her Boston debut, which will taken place in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25, at 3:30.

The Polish beauty, having lately arrived in America with her husband, Harold F. McCormick, is following her recent success in Paris by a tour of this country in which she is to be assisted by Max Kaplick, baritone, who was formerly a conspicuous member of the Boston Opera Company.

At her Boston concert Madame Walska will sing three Mozart arias and songs by Scarlatti and Richard Strauss, also Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Hymn to the Sun." Madame Walska and Max Kaplick will close with a duet from "Rigoletto."

Telegram Feb 17

Ganna Walska to Sing Here Next Sunday

Ganna Walska, now the wife of Harold McCormack, the Chicago multi-millionaire, from whom John D. Rockefeller's daughter was recently divorced, will give a song recital next Sunday afternoon at Symphony Hall. There has been a great deal of discussion in the news columns of American newspapers about this Polish singer, who is said to possess extraordinary personal charm and beauty. She has sung in France with success in concert, according to news dispatches. It is rumored that her husband will buy for her an opera house in Paris.

Mme Walska wishes to be heard and judged merely as a singer, according to statements in New York and Chicago newspapers.

Globe Feb 18

Walska Programme

Ganna Walska, the Polish soprano, and wife of Harold F. McCormick, will make her Boston debut in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25, at 3:30.

Post 2/18

Madame Walska is undertaking a tour of this country, following recent appearances with the Pasdeloup Orchestra under Andre Caplet in Paris and other concerts in France.

She will be assisted by Max Kaplick, formerly baritone of the Boston Opera Company. She will sing the Aria of Constance from "L'enlevement au Serail," of Mozart; "Porgi Amor," from "Nozze di Figaro," Mozart; "Violette," Scarlatti; "Amor," Richard Strauss; Aria de Blondine, Mozart; air from "Coq d'Or," Rimsky-Korsakoff; Valse, Johann Strauss. With Mr. Kaplick Mme. Walska will sing a duet from "Rigoletto."

Post Feb 18

WALSKA PROGRAM

Adv 2/18

Ganna Walska, Polish soprano, and wife of Harold F. McCormick, at her Boston debut in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, will sing an aria from Mozart's "Constance" and songs by Scarlatti, Strauss, Mozart and Rimsky-Korsakoff. She will be assisted by Max Kaplic, baritone.

Advertiser Feb 18

WALSKA PROGRAM

Ganna Walska, the Polish soprano, and wife of Harold F. McCormick, will sing in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, Feb. 25, at 3:30. She will be assisted by Max Kaplick, formerly baritone of the Boston Opera Company.

Her 2/18

Il templario .... Nicolai
I'prigionieri d'Edinburgo .... Ricci
Mr. Kaplick
Aria of Constance,
from "L'enlevement au Serail", Mozart
Mme. Walska
Aria—Vision Fugitive from "Herodiade," Massenet
Mr. Kaplick
"Porgi Amor" from "Nozze di Figaro," Mozart
Violette .... Scarlatti
Amor .... Strauss
Mme. Walska
Aria de Blondine .... Mozart
Coq d'Or .... Rimsky-Korsak
Valse .... Johann Stra
Mme. Walska
Japanisches Regenlied .... Mar
Ecce Homo .... Trun
Daddy's Little Boy .... Manna-Zucc
Three Shadows .... Burleig
Mr. Kaplick
Duet from "Rigoletto" .... Verd
Mme. Walska and Mr. Kaplick

Herald Feb 18

GANNA WALSKA, AT SYMPHONY HALL ON SUNDAY, FEB. 25.

Herald Feb 18

WALSKA NEXT

Amer 2/24

Madame Ganna Walska, otherwise known as Mrs. Harold F. McCormick, will make her first appearance in Boston at Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. She will be assisted by Max Kaplick, formerly leading baritone of the Boston Opera Company.

American Feb 24

Mme. Ganna Walska to Make Debut Here Tomorrow

Trav 2/24

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30 Mme. Ganna Walska, otherwise known as Mrs. Harold F. McCormick, will make her first appearance in Boston. Mme. Walska will be assisted by Max Kaplick, formerly leading baritone of the Boston Opera Company and will sing three arias from the operas of Mozart, songs by Duparc, Delibes, Strauss and others. Max Kaplick will sing arias by Nicolai, Strauss, Ricci, and Trunk, and will sing a duet from "Rigoletto" with Mme. Walska.

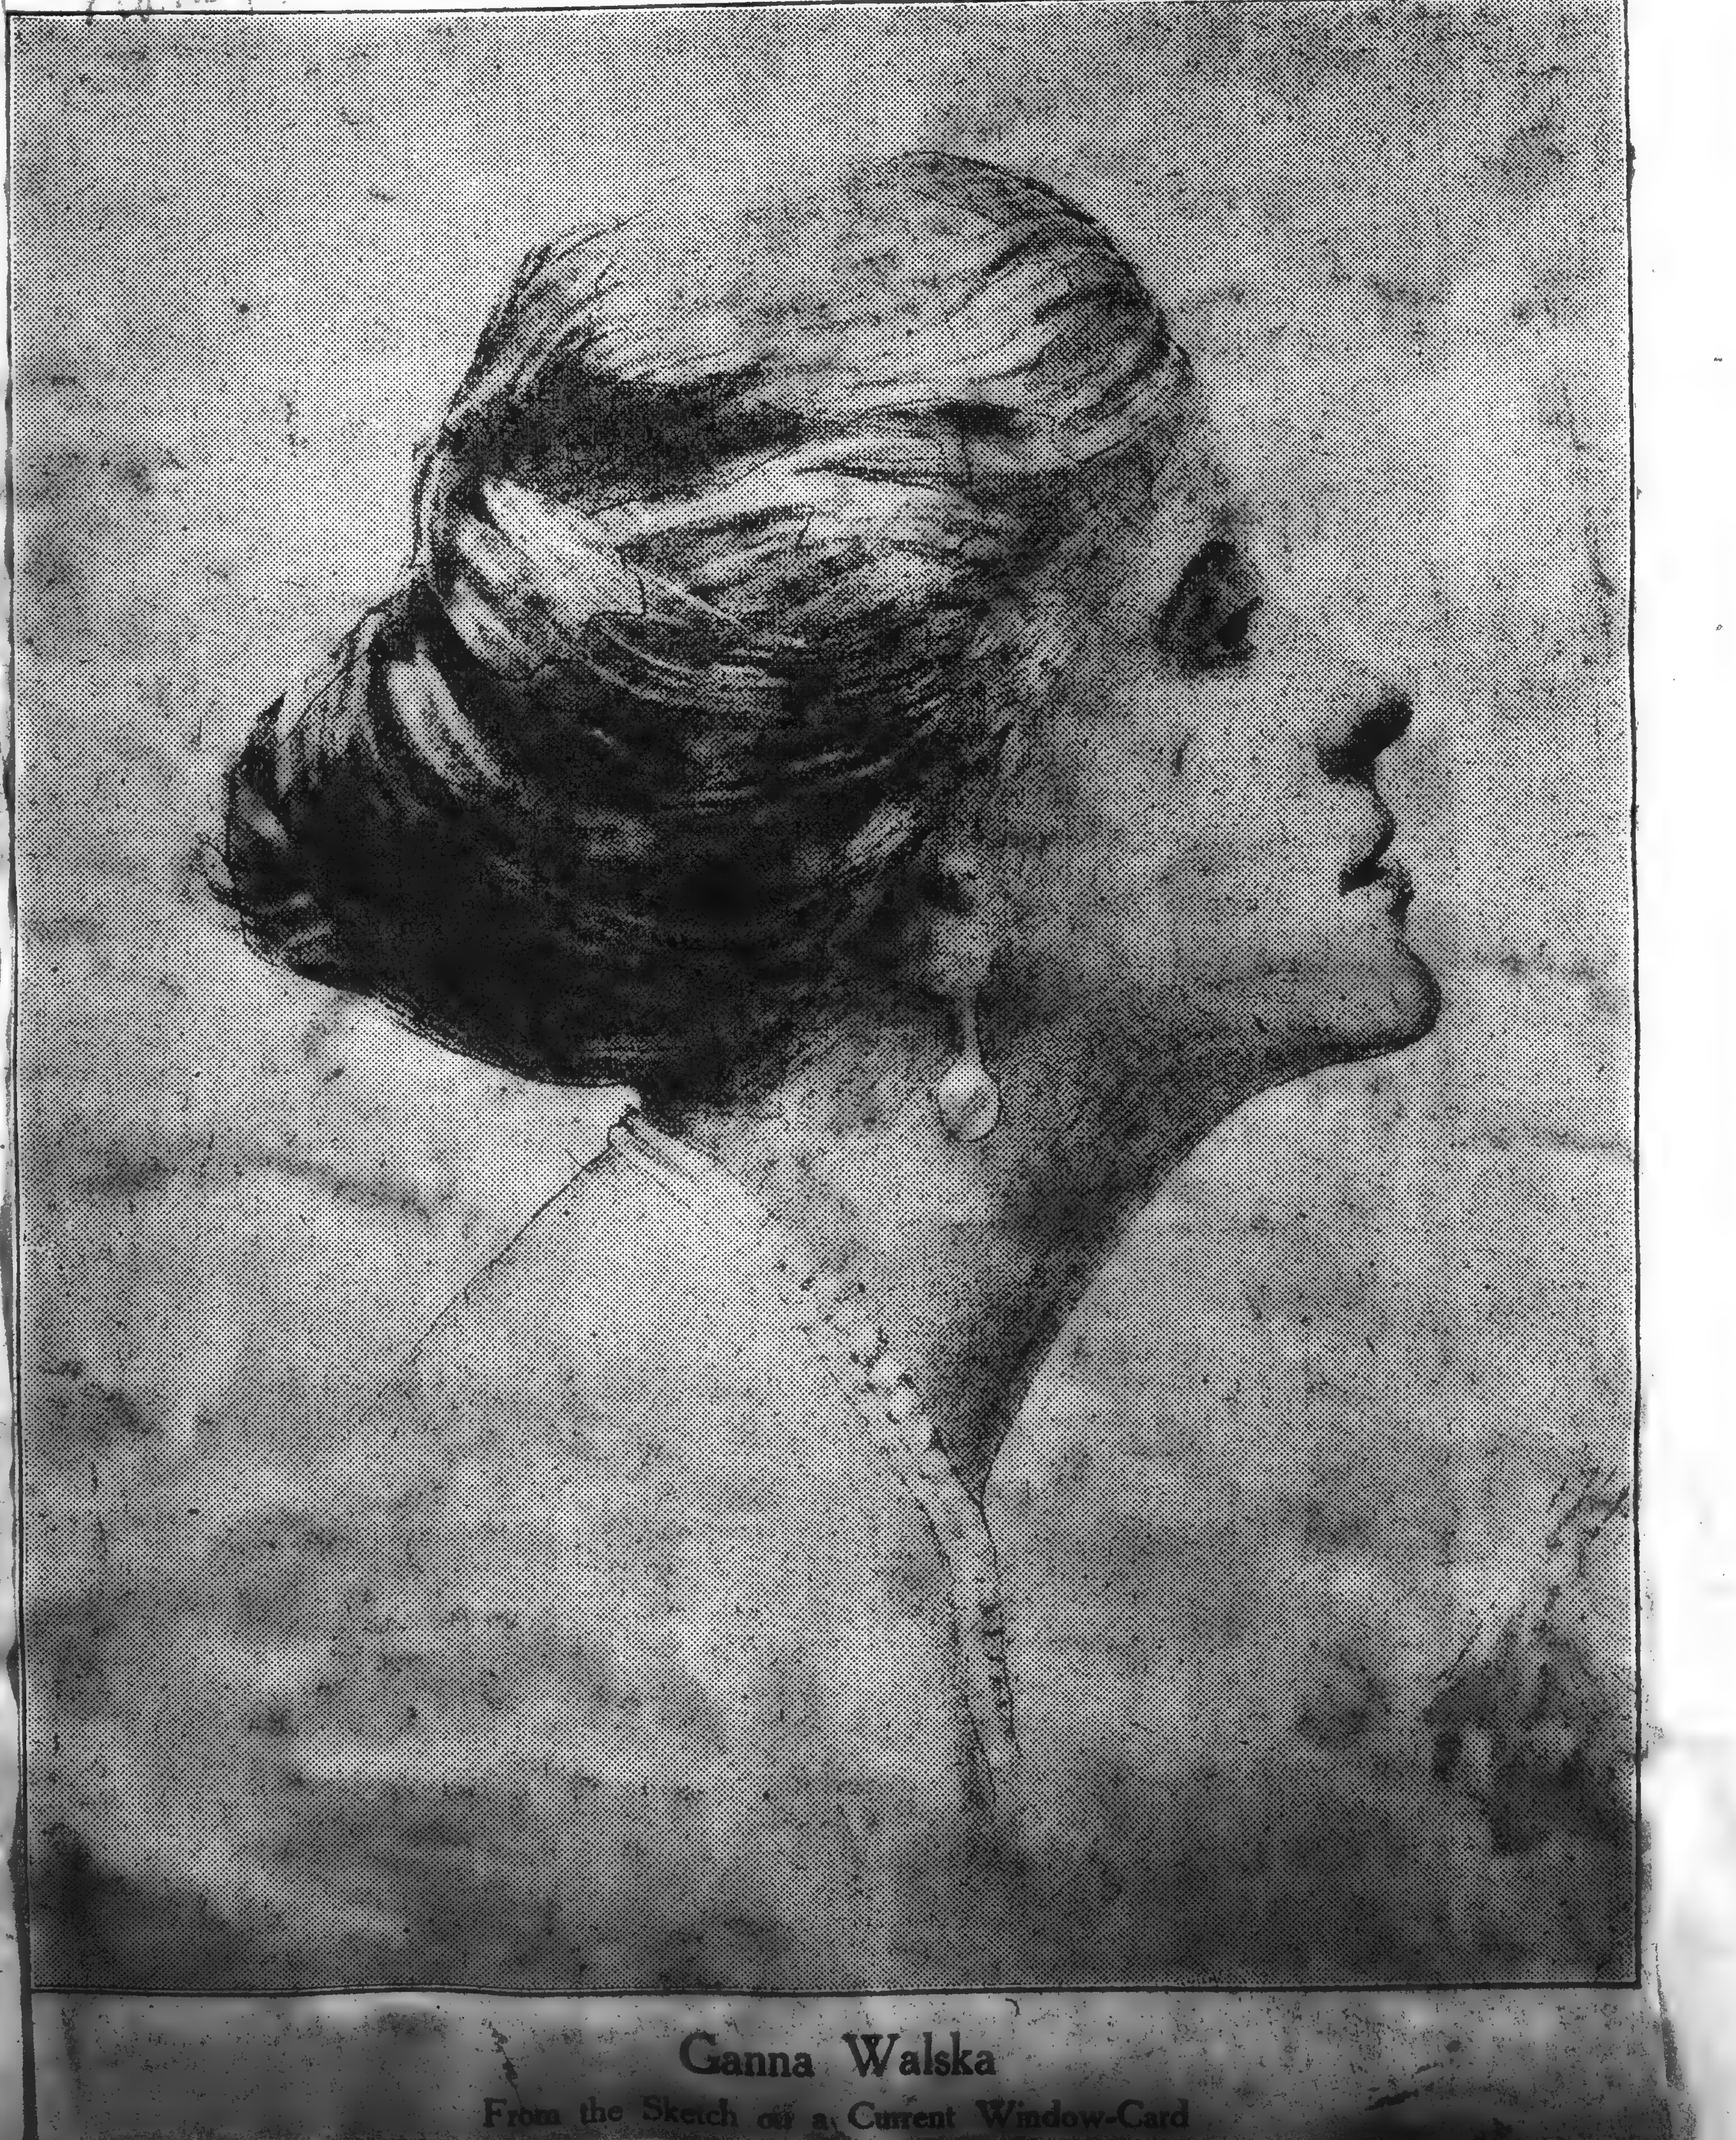
Traveler Feb 24

Coming Concerts

Ganna Walska, recently returned from Europe with her husband, Harold F. McCormick, will make her first Boston appearance tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30 o'clock. Mme. Walska's program will be made up of three arias from the operas of Mozart, and songs by Duparc, Delibes and others. She will be assisted by Max Kaplick, with whom she will sing a duet from "Rigoletto."

Telegram Feb 24

"Perhaps It May Turn Out a Song"



Ganna Walska
From the Sketch on a Current Window-Card

Transcript Feb 23

Handel & Haydn Society

(Alcock)

Merle Alcock

Herald Feb 11

DREAM OF GERONTIUS IMPRESSIVELY GIVEN

Glo 2/12

Handel and Haydn Society Heard at Best

Neglected Masterpiece of Elgar Proves Its Worth

Handel and Haydn Society yesterday afternoon gave an impressive performance of Sir Edward Elgar's too seldom heard masterpiece, "The Dream of Gerontius." This, one of the noblest and most beautiful of all oratorios, demands of the chorus, soloists and orchestra more technical skill and more imagination than are needed for such stock pieces as "Elijah," or "The Redemption."

Mr Mollenhauer and the musical forces under his leadership did not achieve a flawless performance, but they succeeded in conveying the emotional content of the music and of Cardinal Newman's poem to their hearers. All in all, this performance represents the finest achievement of the Handel and Haydn Society for many seasons. One ventures to hope that next season they will attempt at least one other neglected masterpiece, or at least repeat "The Dream of Gerontius."

It is a current fashion among critical youth in England to sneer at Elgar as out-of-date, and to exalt the musical virtues of Arnold Bax, Ralph Vaughn Williams and other aspiring talents. After hearing "Gerontius," one wondered how anyone with no personal bias could fail to recognize this oratorio as a work of genius.

Elgar has used musical means employed before him by Wagner. He has chosen to depict emotions akin to those Wagner works upon in "Parsifal." And yet there is no lack of originality, no reliance upon borrowed musical means or second-hand emotions in "Gerontius."

Elgar's mastery of intricate vocal and orchestral resources is astonishing, yet only upon reflection does one realize that the work is a triumph of musical skill. "Gerontius" is no mere academic tour-de-force. It is great music, of compelling emotional power.

The leading solo part, that of Gerontius, was taken by Richard Crooks, a young tenor, new to Boston, who has this season been extraordinarily successful in Wagner concerts and other performances in New York. Mr Crooks has individuality, personality, temperament, and a fine natural voice. He felt and made his hearers feel the awe and faith of Gerontius at his vision of the angels and the judgment seat.

At moments there was rhetorical overemphasis in his singing. When he sang forte, an unpleasant harshness of quality crept into his voice. On the whole, however, his was a more musical and a more manly performance than one expects from oratorio tenors.

Mrs Alcock and Mr Whitehill, to whom the other solo parts fell, sang with the degree of beauty and skill expected from them by those who remembered their many previous appearances here as soloists at oratorio performances.

The following members of the chorus were grouped together as the small choir of angelic voices given a prominent part by Elgar in the oratorio: Mrs J. L. P. St Coeur, Ruth E. Brown, Mrs Grace Allen Grant, Mrs Greta N. Holmes, Mildred Brookings, Irene G. Goring, Jessie L. Wise, A. Elizabeth Holder, Alice G. Farrell, Helen Hill, Marion L. Horner, Irene M. Bonnemort, Peter Marissette, Walter T. Wingfield, John H. Lander, Frank L. Whitcher, Thomas Duffryn, S. C. Howard, Joseph H. Soliday and Harvey P. L. Partridge.

Globe Feb 12

GIVES 'DREAM OF GERONTIUS'

Handel and Haydn Society Produces Elgar Work in Symphony Hall

Her 2/12

AUDIENCE SHOWS GREAT ENTHUSIASM

Yesterday afternoon the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, produced Elgar's "The Dream of Gerontius." The soloists were Merle Alcock, contralto, Richard Crooks, tenor, and Clarence Whitehill, bass. The orchestra was the Boston Festival Orchestra, John W. Crowley, principal; the organist, E. Rupert Sircom. A very large audience heard the oratorio in reverent silence, but broke at the end into a demonstration of approval such has not been heard at a Boston choral concert in many a day.

It was in 1901 that Elgar startled the world with his oratorio, the work of a genius, good judges proclaimed second to none then living and not to many dead—most competent "Capellmeister music," other judges swore. So opinions varied in Boston when the Cecilia Society, in 1904, sang it. To hear it yesterday once again proved an interesting experience.

Much already has lately been written about the work. Cardinal Newman's poem deals with matters of mighty import, the agony of a dying man afraid to meet his God, his cries for help in his extremity, his calls for the prayers of men and women and priests about him, his pleas to the saints, to Mary, Jesus; his proclamation of his faith; his passing; his waking to find himself in vast silent spaces, alone, until the coming of his guardian angel, who leads him through the throng of demons clamoring for his soul, through the myriads of the heavenly hosts singing praises unto God, to the House of Judgment, where the Angel of the Agony, he who ministered in the garden unto Christ, prays to Jesus in his behalf. One instant, then, he stands in the very Presence. "Consumed, yet quickened, by the glance of God," he cries to be taken away, to the lowest deep, the soner to arrive "and see Him in the truth of everlasting day." And once more sing the heavenly hosts: "Praise to the Holiest in the height."

Matters of mighty import in truth! Who, Wagner dead and Cesar Franck, and perhaps the Verdi of the four sacred pieces, could imagine music rightly sublime? Not Elgar. Where Newman rose highest, he showed himself weakest. How bereft of awe the Judgment theme, how pallid the suggestion of the restful solitude when the soul awakes from death, how paltry the music of the tremendous sentence, "We are come into the veiled presence of our God!" Most moving, today, remain the measures where the dying man, summoning all his failing strength, wildly shouts for help, "Sanctus fortis, sanctus Deus," a cry of true dramatic poignancy. The celestial choruses, too, have genuine beauty, though they make their greatest effect when they achieve the solid mass beloved of all oratorio writers, not when Elgar tries by divisions of his chorus to contrive something new.

The "newness" indeed, so widely praised 20 years ago, has disappeared. Except for his laying aside the halts between numbers of the older writers, and his more liberal use of his splendid powers of orchestration, Elgar appears in this oratorio to have done little that Mendelssohn might not have done, if Mendelssohn had lived in the days when the harmonic scheme had been extended.

There is not time to speak at length of the performance. The orchestra played well, with careful attention to tone and phrasing. The chorus sang with excellent tone and with shading often very fine. Miss Alcock did all that may be done with the ungrateful music of the angel. Mr. Whitehill seemed not at ease. Mr. Crooks, however, sang the tenor part with beautiful tone, fine phrasing, rhetorical intelligence and a passionate fervor that lifted his performance to a high plane. He is truly a singer to reckon with.

R. R. G.

Herald Feb 12

ORATORIO, NEW TO BOSTON, IS SUNG

Amer 2/12

By ZOE FABER

"The Dream of Gerontius" from the text of Cardinal Newman, with music by Sir Edward Elgar, was given for the first time in Boston at Symphony Hall by the Handel and Haydn Society under the direction of Emil Mollenhauer. The soloists were Richard Crooks, tenor; Merle Alcock, contralto; and Clarence Whitehall, bass. E. Rupert Sircom was at the organ.

Merle Alcock and Clarence Whitehall are too well-known to lovers of oratorio here to require much comment. Both of the fine voices were heard to advantage although one regretted that Mr. Whitehill did not have more of an opportunity. Of Richard Crooks, it can be said that his voice is a splendid one, which he uses with much intelligence and a great deal of effect.

The chorus acquitted themselves well, as they always do.

American Feb 12

Elgar Cantata Well Performed

Adv 2/12

Sir Edward Elgar's melodies and dramatic cantata, "The Dream of Gerontins," which is considered the finest religious work ever produced in England, with text by Cardinal Newman, was performed at Symphony Hall yesterday by the Handel and Haydn Society. It was a welcome change from the stereotyped oratorio program and was enthusiastically received by an audience that filled the big auditorium. Emil Mollenhauer conducted. Chorus and soloists were warmly applauded. Richard Crooks, Merle Alcock and Clarence Whitehill sang the solo parts. The Boston Festival Orchestra assisted.

Advertiser Feb 12

ELGAR'S GREAT ORATORIO SUNG

Post 2/12

Handel and Haydns Give "Dream of Gerontius"

BY OLIN DOWNES

The Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer conductor, performed Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius" yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The soloists were Richard Crooks, tenor; Merle Alcock, contralto, Clarence Whitehill, bass. The Boston Festival Orchestra with John W. Crowley as principal and Walter Smith, trumpeter, made the instrumental forces.

It has been years since Elgar's work was heard here. It is a little more than 30 years old. When it was first given in Boston it made a sensation and it was ultra-modern. All sorts of articles were written about this music, the world over. And it is a significant contribution to the literature of choral music, but no longer because of its modernity. It is significant because, despite "longeurs" and lapses into conventionality, most of it is very sincere, mystical, and inspired.

Perhaps the orchestra tells more, with greater variety and eloquence of manner, than the chorus, and yet there are great passages for the massed voices, passages, and thunders in the orchestra of revelation; there workmanship at once substantial and brilliant, and the part of Gerontius is one to intrigue any singer of temperament and intelligence.

The society was fortunate in its principal soloist, Mr. Crooks. He has a voice of manly and agreeable quality, expressive, well employed. Moreover, he not only sang Gerontius; he characterized him in tones. It is testimony either to the singer's ability, or his artistic nature, or both, that he seemed to have a penchant for this particular work.

As regards diction Mr. Whitehill was the most remarkable of the soloists. He employed consummate intelligence and economy of effort when he made his effects. It is not easy to imagine a more restrained and at the same time a more impressive delivery of the lines of the Angel of Agony. Mrs. Alcock was not so fortunate. The part is not one that lies well for her voice, and it demands not only range, but more power than she possesses.

It is a good thing to see the Handel and Hayden departing from its more accustomed repertory and selecting one of the most significant and modern choral works for production. The performance was earnest, often of a good tone quality, but candor compels the statement that it was plodding in interpretation and too often hesitating or insecure in character.

A large audience was very enthusiastic.

Post Feb 12

TO FRESH ADVENTURE

Trans 2/12

ELGAR, NEWMAN, "THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS"

The Handel and Haydn Society Forsakes Its Classics for New Field—A Groping, Timid, Over-Literal Performance—Saving Soloists, with Mr. Crooks for Discovery—The Years and the Music

According to his lights, the reviewer is presumably the servant of music. Therefore, at discreet and indiscreet intervals, he urges the Handel and Haydn Society to leave the rut of "Messiahs," "Elijahs," Verdi's "Requiem," Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah," and enter fresher fields of choral music. So advising, he praises when it sets "The Dream of Gerontius," in the text of Newman and to the music of Elgar, upon its schedule for the current season. Yet being also the servant of truth (as he sees it) he is bound to write regretful dispraise of the performance, as it came to pass yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Many many times has the chorus of the Society sung the measures of "The Messiah" or "The Manzoni Requiem." It is at ease, even confident, with them, singing in full free voice; alert to detail, large in climax, quick with shadings, euphonies, emphases, warm with both the substance and the spirit of text and music. Essaying Elgar's choruses for the first time—unless memory slips—the choir was in different case. The new music made it hesitant, tentative, uneasy, pale. It missed familiarity; it wanted confidence; it dared not let itself go.

The new music was novel also; since Sir Edward writes not in the manner of Handel or Mendelssohn; nor yet again in the patterns of Verdi or Saint-Saëns. His choral measures run in a musical speech of his own. They take cue—if they take cue at all—from Franck in "The Beatitudes" or Wagner in "Parsifal"; and neither of these composers is exactly a familiar of the Handel and Haydn Society. Consequently the chorus groped over the letter and was colorless with the spirit of Elgar's measures. The music of the demons sounded tame and wry—not fierce and discordant. The recurring hymn of adoration lacked body and motion, warmth and ecstasy. The voices of Purgatory made but muffled entreaty. Only when the choir invoked the host of heaven to speed the passing of Gerontius's soul did the music beat warm and high.

As cribbed by new adventure, as wanting in usual fervors, seemed also Mr. Mollenhauer. Being practised choral conductor, he beat the measure, gave the cues, held orchestra and choir in balance, followed as so much fact, the plain indication of the music. Faithfully, literally, he read it; yet quite failed to infuse his forces—the semi-independent solo-singers aside—with either its spirit or its significance. For "The Dream of Gerontius" is intrinsically a dramatic poem. Though Newman writes lines that are bald, clumsy prose, no whit amenable to music, yet has he dramatized death and judgment, individualizing them in a single soul. As dramatically did Elgar write his music. Gerontius traverses the pangs of bodily dissolution, entreats succor and solace from all that he worships. His gathered friends swell these petitions. The attendant priest bids him to his journey. . . . His soul passes, knows and speaks the sensations of another world. The guarding angel, the preying demons, the hymning choir celestial, "The great Angel of the Agony," voices in Purgatory—all bear part in mystical visioning of Divine Judgment.

Clearly a dramatic action in word and by grace of Elgar, deeply suffused with the poem, an action yet more dramatic in the clothing music. Only in a few interchanges between the inquiring soul and the informing angel is it static. Elsewhere and manifold, dramatic life animates it. Through the choral voices, through the orchestral voices, plays an incessant, an intensified imagery. Either Mr. Mollenhauer has not yet discovered it, as he is sure to do with further study, or yesterday, being a ill at beginnings, he could convey it to neither choir nor band. As it was, Elgar and New[illegible]

Continued on Following Page

became as muted voices; while nothing happened among chorus and orchestra when and where much should have befallen. To sing "The Dream of Gerontius," as it sings its classics, the Handel and Hayden Society must persist; while—again to spare not the truth—the audience of yesterday was no large encouragement to persistence. Musically, Boston remains an incurious town.

Far better succeeded the solo-singers. To Mr. Whitehill, singing-actor of the Metropolitan Opera House, fell the speech of the commending priest and the witness and the prayer of "The Angel of the Agony." He declaimed with a flawless clarity, unerring vocal means and with the exalted passion which is the very spirit of Elgar's music. For once, too, his tones escaped all hardness and dryness. The darkling richness, the pulsing flow of Mrs. Alcock's contralto song suited likewise the somewhat prolix and explanatory guardian-angel. The music [illegible] more variety of accent and color; yet it lost her tones little of its recurring beauty of grave compassion.

More akin to Mr. Whitehill was Mr. Crooks newly come to Boston with a new made reputation to herald him. His voice is a full-throated, masculine tenor, holding ample, even and warm into the higher tones, marred in usage only by an occasional excess of the fashionable "tremor of feeling," ardent in motion, supple to line, eager for color. A perceiving mind, a responsive and communicating temperament, a keen sense of the rhetoric of music further enrich Mr. Crooks. From his lips the dying Gerontius testified and prayed in a lofty passion of faith; in his tones went the beauty, remote, calm, fulfilled, with which Elgar clothes the soul newly come heavenward. An American tenor with ardors is discovery enough—and to this glow of young prime Mr. Crooks adds understanding.

Performance aside, not all of Elgar's music seems now to attain to "the height of his great argument." After all the preparation for the hymn of the Sons of God, only inspiration could write it once and then repeat it intensified. At the courts of heaven Elgar sings; yet never quite opens them radiant, celestial. The Wagner of the Grail Sanctuary, the Franck of one or another Beatitude measures—and diminishes—him. And in these days of dissonance, of key wrangling with key, of chord lacerating chord, the Elgarian demons are but a reticent folk. At moments also his explanatory angel perilously approaches the dutiful and routine narrator of ancient oratorio. Yet much remains neither lessened nor tarnished. Mozart's music of death—in his Requiem—shrinks and shivers in pang and fear. Elgar's exalts agony with a high and deep splendor of faith. If he falls short of the celestial hymn, beatitude suffuses the final pages of Purgatorial peace. Twenty times has Elgar written upon symphonic music "nobilamente." When "The Angel of the Agony" recalls the Son of God to succor, the music needs no charactering word. The nobility is intrinsic.

H. T. P.

Transcript Feb 12

[133]

Handel & Haydn Society

(Alcock)

Merle Alcock

Herald Feb 11

DREAM OF GERONTIUS IMPRESSIVELY GIVE

Gl 2/12

Handel and Haydn Society Heard at Best

Neglected Masterpiece of Elga Proves Its Worth

Handel and Haydn Society yesterday afternoon gave an impressive performance of Sir Edward Elgar's too seldom heard masterpiece, "The Dream of Gerontius." This, one of the noblest and most beautiful of all oratorios, demands of the chorus, soloists and orchestra more technical skill and more imagination than are needed for such stock pieces as "Elijah," or "The Redemption."

Mr Mollenhauer and the musical forces under his leadership did not achieve a flawless performance, but they succeeded in conveying the emotional content of the music and of Cardinal Newman's poem to their hearers. All in all, this performance represents the finest achievement of the Handel and Haydn Society for many seasons. One ventures to hope that next season they will attempt at least one other neglected masterpiece, or at least repeat "The Dream of Gerontius."

It is a current fashion among critical youth in England to sneer at Elgar as out-of-date, and to exalt the musical virtues of Arnold Bax, Ralph Vaughn Williams and other aspiring talents. After hearing "Gerontius," one wondered how anyone with no personal bias could fail to recognize this oratorio as a work of genius.

Elgar has used musical means employed before him by Wagner. He has chosen to depict emotions akin to those Wagner works upon in "Parsifal." And yet there is no lack of originality, no reliance upon borrowed musical means or second-hand emotions in "Gerontius."

Elgar's mastery of intricate vocal and orchestral resources is astonishing, yet [illegible] upon reflection does one realize that the work is a triumph of musical skill. "Gerontius" is no mere academic tour-de-force. It is great music, of compelling emotional power.

The leading solo part, that of Gerontius, was taken by Richard Crooks, a young tenor, new to Boston, who has this season been extraordinarily successful in Wagner concerts and other performances in New York. Mr Crooks has individuality, personality, temperament, and a fine natural voice. He felt and made his hearers feel the awe and faith of Gerontius at his vision of the angels and the judgment seat.

At moments there was rhetorical overemphasis in his singing. When he sang forte, an unpleasant harshness of quality crept into his voice. On the whole, however, his was a more musical and a more manly performance than one expects from oratorio tenors.

Mrs Alcock and Mr Whitehill, to whom the other solo parts fell, sang with the degree of beauty and skill expected from them by those who remembered their many previous appearances here as soloists at oratorio performances.

The following members of the chorus were grouped together as the small choir of angelic voices given a prominent part by Elgar in the oratorio: Mrs J. L. P. St Coeur, Ruth E. Brown, Mrs Grace Allen Grant, Mrs Greta N. Holmes, Mildred Brookings, Irene G. Goring, Jessie L. Wise, A. Elizabeth Holder, Alice G. Farrell, Helen Hill, Marion L. Horner, Irene M. Bonnemort, Peter Marissette, Walter T. Wingfield, John H. Lander, Frank L. Whitcher, Thomas Duffryn, S. C. Howard, Joseph H. Soliday and Harvey P. L. Partridge.

Globe Feb 12

GIVES 'DREAM OF GERONTIUS'

Handel and Haydn Society Produces Elgar Work in Symphony Hall

Her 2/12

AUDIENCE SHOWS GREAT ENTHUSIASM

Yesterday afternoon the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, produced Elgar's "The Dream of Gerontius." The soloists were Merle Alcock, contralto, Richard Crooks, tenor, and Clarence Whitehill, bass. The orchestra was the Boston Festival Orchestra, John W. Crowley, principal; the organist, E. Rupert Sircom. A very large audience heard the oratorio in reverent silence, but broke at the end into a demonstration of approval such has not been heard at a Boston choral concert in many a day.

It was in 1901 that Elgar startled the world with his oratorio, the work of a genius, good judges proclaimed second to none then living and not to many dead—most competent "Capellmeister music," other judges swore. So opinions varied in Boston when the Cecilia Society, in 1904, sang it. To hear it yesterday once again proved an interesting experience.

Much already has lately been written about the work. Cardinal Newman's poem deals with matters of mighty import, the agony of a dying man afraid to meet his God, his cries for help in his extremity, his calls for the prayers of men and women and priests about him, his pleas to the saints, to Mary, Jesus; his proclamation of his faith; his passing; his waking to find himself in vast silent spaces, alone, until the coming of his guardian angel, who leads him through the throng of demons clamoring for his soul, through the myriads of the heavenly hosts singing praises unto God, to the House of Judgment, where the Angel of the Agony, he who ministered in the garden unto Christ, prays to Jesus in his behalf. One instant, then, he stands in the very Presence. "Consumed, yet quickened, by the glance of God," he cries to be taken away, to the lowest deep, the soner to arrive "and see Him in the truth of everlasting day." And once more sing the heavenly hosts: "Praise to the Holiest in the height."

Matters of mighty import in truth! Who, Wagner dead and Cesar Franck, and perhaps the Verdi of the four sacred pieces, could imagine music rightly sublime? Not Elgar. Where Newman rose highest, he showed himself weakest. How bereft of awe the Judgment theme, how pallid the suggestion of the restful solitude when the soul awakes from death, how paltry the music of the tremendous sentence, "We are come into the veiled presence of our God!" Most moving, today, remain the measures where the dying man, summoning all his failing strength, wildly shouts for help, "Sanctus fortis, sanctus Deus," a cry of true dramatic poignancy. The celestial choruses, too, have genuine beauty, though they make their greatest effect when they achieve the solid mass beloved of all oratorio writers, not when Elgar tries by divisions of his chorus to contrive something new.

The "newness" indeed, so widely praised 20 years ago, has disappeared. Except for his laying aside the halts between numbers of the older writers, and his more liberal use of his splendid powers of orchestration, Elgar appears in this oratorio to have done little that Mendelssohn might not have done, if Mendelssohn had lived in the days when the harmonic scheme had been extended.

There is not time to speak at length of the performance. The orchestra played well, with careful attention to tone and phrasing. The chorus sang with excellent tone and with shading often very fine. Miss Alcock did all that may be done with the ungrateful music of the angel. Mr. Whitehill seemed not at ease. Mr. Crooks, however, sang the tenor part with beautiful tone, fine phrasing, rhetorical intelligence and a passionate fervor that lifted his performance to a high plane. He is truly a singer to reckon with.

R. R. G.

Herald Feb 12

ORATORIO, NEW TO BOSTON, IS SUNG

Amer 2/12

By ZOE FABER

"The Dream of Gerontius" from the text of Cardinal Newman, with music by Sir Edward Elgar, was given for the first time in Boston at Symphony Hall by the Handel and Haydn Society under the direction of Emil Mollenhauer. The soloists were Richard Crooks, tenor; Merle Alcock, contralto; and Clarence Whitehall, bass. E. Rupert Sircom was at the organ.

Merle Alcock and Clarence Whitehall are too well-known to lovers of oratorio here to require much comment. Both of the fine voices were heard to advantage although one regretted that Mr. Whitehill did not have more of an opportunity. Of Richard Crooks, it can be said that his voice is a splendid one, which he uses with much intelligence and a great deal of effect.

The chorus acquitted themselves well, as they always do.

American Feb 12

Elgar Cantata Well Performed

Sir Edward Elgar's melodies and dramatic cantata, "The Dream of Gerontins," which is considered the finest religious work ever produced in England, with text by Cardinal Newman, was performed at Symphony Hall yesterday by the Handel and Haydn Society. It was a welcome change from the stereotyped oratorio program and was enthusiastically received by an audience that filled the big auditorium. Emil Mollenhauer conducted. Chorus and soloists were warmly applauded. Richard Crooks, Merle Alcock and Clarence Whitehill sang the solo parts. The Boston Festival Orchestra assisted.

Advertiser Feb 12

ELGAR'S GREAT ORATORIO SUNG

Post 2/12

Handel and Haydns Give "Dream of Gerontius"

BY OLIN DOWNES

The Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer conductor, performed Elgar's "Dream of Gerontius" yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The soloists were Richard Crooks, tenor; Merle Alcock, contralto, Clarence Whitehill, bass. The Boston Festival Orchestra with John W. Crowley as principal and Walter Smith, trumpeter, made the instrumental forces.

It has been years since Elgar's work was heard here. It is a little more than 30 years old. When it was first given in Boston it made a sensation and it was ultra-modern. All sorts of articles were written about this music, the world over. And it is a significant contribution to the literature of choral music, but no longer because of its modernity. It is significant because, despite "longeurs" and lapses into conventionality, most of it is very sincere, mystical, and inspired.

Perhaps the orchestra tells more, with greater variety and eloquence of manner, than the chorus, and yet there are great passages for the massed voices, passages, and thunders in the orchestra of revelation; there workmanship at once substantial and brilliant, and the part of Gerontius is one to intrigue any singer of temperament and intelligence.

The society was fortunate in its principal soloist, Mr. Crooks. He has a voice of manly and agreeable quality, expressive, well employed. Moreover, he not only sang Gerontius; he characterized him in tones. It is testimony either to the singer's ability, or his artistic nature, or both, that he seemed to have a penchant for this particular work.

As regards diction Mr. Whitehill was the most remarkable of the soloists. He employed consummate intelligence and economy of effort when he made his effects. It is not easy to imagine a more restrained and at the same time a more impressive delivery of the lines of the Angel of Agony. Mrs. Alcock was not so fortunate. The part is not one that lies well for her voice, and it demands not only range, but more power than she possesses.

It is a good thing to see the Handel and Hayden departing from its more accustomed repertory and selecting one of the most significant and modern choral works for production. The performance was earnest, often of a good tone quality, but candor compels the statement that it was plodding in interpretation and too often hesitating or insecure in character.

A large audience was very enthusiastic.

Post Feb 12

TO FRESH ADVENTURE

Trans 2/12

ELGAR, NEWMAN, "THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS"

The Handel and Haydn Society Forsakes Its Classics for New Field—A Groping, Timid, Over-Literal Performance—Saving Soloists, with Mr. Crooks for Discovery—The Years and the Music

ACCORDING to his lights, the reviewer is presumably the servant of music. Therefore, at discreet and indiscreet intervals, he urges the Handel and Haydn Society to leave the rut of "Messiahs," "Elijahs," Verdi's "Requiem," Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah," and enter fresher fields of choral music. So advising, he praises when it sets "The Dream of Gerontius," in the text of Newman and to the music of Elgar, upon its schedule for the current season. Yet being also the servant of truth (as he sees it) he is bound to write regretful dispraise of the performance, as it came to pass yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Many many times has the chorus of the Society sung the measures of "The Messiah" or "The Manzoni Requiem." It is at ease, even confident, with them, singing in full free voice; alert to detail, large in climax, quick with shadings, euphonies, emphases, warm with both the substance and the spirit of text and music. Essaying Elgar choruses for the first time—unless memory slips—the choir was in different case. The new music made it hesitant, tentative, uneasy, pale. It missed familiarity; it wanted confidence; it dared not let itself go.

The new music was novel also; since Sir Edward writes not in the manner of Handel or Mendelssohn; nor yet again in the patterns of Verdi or Saint-Saëns. His choral measures run in a musical speech of his own. They take cue—if they take cue at all—from Franck in "The Beatitudes" or Wagner in "Parsifal"; and neither of these composers is exactly a familiar of the Handel and Haydn Society. Consequently the chorus groped over the letter and was colorless with the spirit of Elgar's measures. The music of the demons sounded tame and wry—not fierce and discordant. The recurring hymn of adoration lacked body and motion, warmth and ecstasy. The voices of Purgatory made but muffled entreaty. Only when the choir invoked the host of heaven to speed the passing of Gerontius's soul did the music beat warm and high.

As cribbed by new adventure, as wanting in usual fervors, seemed also Mr. Mollenhauer. Being practised choral conductor, he beat the measure, gave the cues, held orchestra and choir in balance, followed as so much fact, the plain indication of the music. Faithfully, literally, he read it: yet quite failed to infuse his forces—the semi-independent solo-singers aside—with either its spirit or its significance. For "The Dream of Gerontius" is intrinsically a dramatic poem. Though Newman writes lines that are bald, clumsy prose, no whit amenable to music, yet has he dramatized death and judgment, individualizing them in a single soul. As dramatically did Elgar write his music. Gerontius traverses the pangs of bodily dissolution, entreats succor and solace from all that he worships. His gathered friends swell these petitions. The attendant priest bids him to his journey. . . . His soul passes, knows and speaks the sensations of another world. The guarding angel, the preying demons, the hymning choir celestial, "The great Angel of the Agony," voices in Purgatory—all bear part in mystical visioning of Divine Judgment.

Clearly a dramatic action in word and by grace of Elgar, deeply suffused with the poem, an action yet more dramatic in the clothing music. Only in a few interchanges between the inquiring soul and the informing angel is it static. Elsewhere and manifold, dramatic life animates it. Through the choral voices, through the orchestral voices, plays an incessant, an intensified imagery. Either Mr. Mollenhauer has not yet discovered it, as he is sure to do with further study, or yesterday, being still at beginnings, he could convey it to neither choir nor band. As it was, Elgar and Newman became as muted voices; while nothing happened among chorus and orchestra when and where much should have befallen. To sing "The Dream of Gerontius," as it sings its classics, the Handel and Hayden Society must persist; while—again to spare not the truth—the audience of yesterday was no large encouragement to persistence. Musically, Boston remains an incurious town.

Continued on Following Page

Far better succeeded the solo-singers. To Mr. Whitehill, singing-actor of the Metropolitan Opera House, fell the speech of the commending priest and the witness and the prayer of "The Angel of the Agony." He declaimed with a flawless clarity, unerring vocal means and with the exalted passion which is the very spirit of Elgar's music. For once, too, his tones escaped all hardness and dryness. The darkling richness, the pulsing flow of Mrs. Alcock's contralto song suited likewise the somewhat prolix and explanatory guardian-angel. The music might gain under more variety of accent and color; yet it lost in her tones little of its recurring beauty of grave compassion.

More akin to Mr. Whitehill was Mr. Crooks newly come to Boston with a new made reputation to herald him. His [illegible] is a full-throated, masculine tenor, holding ample, even and warm into the higher tones, marred in usage only by an occasional excess of the fashionable "tremor of feeling," ardent in motion, supple to line, eager for color. A perceiving mind, a responsive and communicating temperament, a keen sense of the rhetoric of music further enrich Mr. Crooks. From his lips the dying Gerontius testified and prayed in a lofty passion of faith; in his tones went the beauty, remote, calm, fulfilled, with which Elgar clothes the soul newly come heavenward. An American tenor with ardors is discovery enough—and to this glow of young prime Mr. Crooks adds understanding.

Performance aside, not all of Elgar's music seems now to attain to "the height of his great argument." After all the preparation for the hymn of the Sons of God, only inspiration could write it once and then repeat it intensified. At the courts of heaven Elgar sings; yet never quite opens them radiant, celestial. The Wagner of the Grail Sanctuary, the Franck of one or another Beatitude measures—and diminishes—him. And in these days of dissonance, of key wrangling with key, of chord lacerating chord, the Elgarian demons are but a reticent folk. At moments also his explanatory angel perilously approaches the dutiful and routine narrator of ancient oratorio. Yet much remains neither lessened nor tarnished. Mozart's music of death—in his Requiem—shrinks and shivers in pang and fear. Elgar's exalts agony with a high and deep splendor of faith. If he falls short of the celestial hymn, beatitude suffuses the final pages of Purgatorial peace. Twenty times has Elgar written upon symphonic music "nobilmente." When "The Angel of the Agony" recalls the Son of God to succor, the music needs no charactering word. The nobility is intrinsic.

H. T. P.

Transcript Feb. 12

[133]

Ukrainian Chorus March 12th

Monday evening, March 12, in Symphony Hall, a second concert by the celebrated Ukrainian Choir of Russian peasants, two score strong, schooled and led by Alexander Koshetz. Up and down Europe they have wandered for two years and everywhere the body and color of their voices, their instinctive and acquired skill and zest in song, their sincere conveyance of mood, sentiment, emotion, have praised them alike with the expert and with the simple. Now they return to Boston. Mme. Koshetz, heard and liked at the Symphony Concerts last winter, will be the solo-singer. Trans 2/17

Transcript Feb 17

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

The Ukrainian National Chorus, which made a deep impression here last autumn, will again sing in Symphony hall on Monday evening, March 12, conducted by Alexander Koshetz. The program will consist mainly of Russian folk songs. The soloist will be Nina Koshetz, dramatic soprano. Her 2/18

Herald Feb 18

The Ukrainian Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, which made a very favorable impression here last Fall, will return to Symphony Hall March 12, at 8:15, with Nina Koshetz, the dramatic soprano heard here last season as soloist at a pair of Symphony concerts, as assisting artist. Gl 2/18

Globe Feb 18

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

The Ukrainian National Chorus will give a return concert in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, March 12. It will be assisted by two soloists, Nina Kochetz and Oba Slobodskaja, dramatic sopranos, leading Russian opera singers.

Advertiser Feb 25

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

The Ukrainian national chorus which, visiting America for the first time this season, will give a return concert in Symphony hall on Monday evening, March 12th. The chorus, under its skilled conductor, Alexander Koshetz, will give three groups of Russian folk songs, mostly Ukrainian. The two soloists, Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja of the Petrograd opera and Mme. Nina Koshetz of the Moscow opera will each have a group of songs. Trav 3/3

Traveler Mar 3

The Ukrainian National Chorus, visiting America for the first time this season, will give a return concert in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, March 12th. Amer 3/1

American Mar 3

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

The return concert of the Ukrainian National Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, will be given in Symphony hall, on Monday evening, March 12. This concert follows a tour of the West, reaching to Mexico, by this remarkable organization. Its singing was received everywhere with the same surprise and enthusiasm which it met in Boston. The choral part of the program will include the folk songs: Her 3/4

Our Lady of Potchaiv, Young Uliana, The Stars, Lullaby, Kolemejka, Early Morning, Behind the Mountain, From the Mountains and the Valleys, Shtchedryk, On the Mountain, Hey! Near Boryshpol, The Little Tarin, Jachil's Daughter, In the Garden Stands an Elderbush, Mushrooms.

Oda Slobodskaja, soprano of the Petrograd Grand Opera, will sing arias by Tchaikovsky, Gluck, Beethoven, Puccini and Massenet. Nina Koshetz, soprano of the Moscow opera, will sing a Russian group, including Gretchaninov's "Over the Steppe," Rimsky-Korsakov's Eastern Romance and a song from "The Tzar's Bride," and Rachmaninov's "Pied Piper."

Herald Mar 4

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

The famous Ukrainian National Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, will sing in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, March 12. The choral part of the program will include many folk songs. Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja of the Petrograd Opera and Madame Nina Koshetz of the Moscow Opera will be the soloists. Am 3/4

American Mar 4

Ukrainian Chorus

The Ukrainian National Chorus, Alexander Koshets, conductor, will appear in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, March 12. Post 3/4

Post Mar 4

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

Tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall ... National

Again the Ukrainians

Trans 3/10

Readily remembered as novel and vivid experience of the concert-room last autumn, the Ukranian Choir will be heard anew in Symphony Hall on Monday evening next—Russian peasants two-score strong, schooled and led by Alexander Kochetz. Up and down Europe they have wandered for tyo years; while everywhere the body and color of their voices, their instinctive and acquired skill and zest in song, their sincere conveyance of mood, sentiment, emotion, have praised them alike with the expert and with the simple. Now they return to Boston. Mme. Koshetz, heard and liked at the Symphony Concerts last winter, and Mme. Slobodasaya, who assisted the choir last October, will be the solo-singers. Their numbers are operatic airs, variously chosen, and Russian songs. The choir will be heard in many and manifold folk-pieces.

Transcript Mar 10

Monday evening, March 12, in Symphony Hall, a second concert by the celebrated Ukrainian Choir of Russian peasants, two score strong, schooled and led by Alexander Koshetz. Up and down Europe they have wandered for two years; while everywhere the body and color of their voices, their instinctive and acquired skill and zest in song, their sincere conveyance of mood, sentiment, emotion, have praised them alike with the expert and with the simple. Now they return to Boston. Mme. Koshetz, heard and liked at the Symphony Concerts last winter, and Mme. Slobodkaya, who assisted the choir last October, will be the solo-singers. Their numbers are operatic airs, variously chosen, and Russian songs. The choir will be heard many and manifold folk-pieces. Trans 3/3

Transcript Mar 3

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

Trav 3/10

Monday evening in Symphony hall at 8:15 the Ukraining National Chorus will give a return concert in Boston. The program will consist mostly of the folk songs of the Ukraine, both old and new. The Ukrainian Chorus has amply proved the fertility in folk song of their own country.

There will be two soloists, Nina Koshetz, who will sing a group of Russian songs and arias, and Oda Slobodskaja, likewise a Russian prima donna, who will sing songs by Tchaikovsky, Gluck, Beethoven, Puccini and Massenet.

Traveler Mar 10

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

Tomorrow evening in Symphony hall at 8:15, the Ukrainian National Chorus will give its return concert and last appearance in Boston this season. This body of singers, under the leadership of Alexander Koshetz, will sing predominantly the folk songs, ancient and modern, of their own country, which is said to be the richest of all lands in folk music. There will be two soloists—Nina Koshetz and Oda Slobodskaja, both operatic sopranos, highly regarded in Moscow and Petrograd.

Early Morning	Arr. Stupnitzky
Behind the Mountain	Leontovich
From the Mountain and the Valleys	Stetzenko
Shtchedryk	Leontovich
On the Mountain	Stetzenko
The chorus
Arioso from the opera "Opritchnik"	Tschaikovsky
Divinities du Styx	Gluck
Der Kuss	Beethoven
Aria from "Tosca"	Puccini
Aria from "Le Cid"	Massenet
Oda Slobodskaja
Our Lady of Potchaiv	Leontovich
Young Uliana	Koshetz
The Stars	Koshetz
Lullaby	Barvinsky-Koshetz
Kolomejka, song	Kolessa
The chorus
Over the Steppe	Gretchaninov
Song from "Tzar's Bride"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Eastern Romance	Rimsky-Korsakov
The Pied Piper (dedicated to Mme. Koshetz)	Rachmaninov
Nina Koshetz
Hey! Near Boryshpol	Koshetz
The Little Tarin	Koshetz
Jachil's Daughter	Koshetz
In the Garden Stands an Elderbush	Lyssenko
Mushrooms	Lyssenko
The chorus

Her 3/11

Herald Mar 11

Ukrainian Chorus

Tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall at 8:15, the Ukrainian National Chorus will give their return concert and last appearance in Boston this season.

This body of singers, which can attain such marvelous results in tone and ensemble, under the leadership of Alexander Koshetz, will sing predominantly the folk songs, ancient and modern, of their own country, which is said to be the richest of all lands in folk music. There will be two soloists, Nina Koshetz and Oda Slobodskaja, both operatic sopranos who are highly regarded as prima donnas in Moscow and Petrograd. Post 3/11 this being its last appearance in Boston this season. This internationally famous body of singers, under the leadership of Alexander Koshetz, will sing folk songs of their own country. Nina Koshetz and Oda Slobodskaja, Russian prima donnas, will be the soloists. Adv 3/11

Post Mar 11

Advertiser Mar 11

The Ukranian Chorus tomorrow night, besides two soloists, each previously heard here with the Boston Symphony, offers attractive groups of Russian choral music. These peasant singers, in costume, produce extraordinary musical effects that come near to deserving the praise of the passionate press agent.

Globe Mar 11

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

The Ukrainian National Chorus will give a return concert in Boston Monday evening in Symphony Hall. The program will consist mostly of folk songs of the Ukraine, both old and new. There will be two soloists—Nina Koshetz, who will sing a group of Russion songs and arias, and Oda Slobodskaja, who will sing songs by Tchaikovsky, Gluck, Beethoven, Puccini and Massenet.

American Mar 11

THE UKRAINIANS AGAIN MAKE HIT

Her 3/13

Chorus in Brilliant Native Garb Gives National Airs Vivid Rendition

TWO SOLOISTS HELP ROUND OUT PROGRAM

Last night the Ukrainian National Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, gave a concert in Symphony hall, with the help of Oda Slobodskaja, soprano, Nina Koshetz, mezzo-soprano, and Nicholas Steinber, accompanist. The program:

Early Morning	Arr. Stupnitzky
Behind the Mountain	Leontovich
From the Mountain and the Valleys	Stezenko
Shtchdryk	Leontovich
On the Mountain	Stetzenko
The Ukrainian National Chorus
Arioso from "Opritchnik"	Tschaikowsky
Divinites du Styx	Gluck
Der Kuss	Beethoven
Aria from "Tosca"	Puccini
Aria from "La Cid"	Massenet
Mlle. Slobodskaja
Our Lady of Potchaiv	Leontovich
Young Uliana	Koshetz
The Stars	Koshetz
Lullaby	Barvinsky-Koshetz
Kolomejka	Kolessa
The Ukrainian National Chorus
Over the Steppe	Gretchaninoff
Song from "Tsar's Bride"	Rimsky-Korsakoff
Eastern Roman	Rimsky-Korsakoff
Widmung	Schumann
Mme. Koshetz
Hey! Near Boryshpol	Koshetz
The Little Tarin	Koshetz
Jachil's Daughter	Koshtez
In the Garden Stands an Elderbush	Lyssenko
Mushrooms	Lyssenko
The Ukrainian National Chorus

This chorus out a gallant show, three rows of men and women dressed out in vivid blues, greens and reds. What is more to the purpose, they made their tone as brilliant in color contrasts as their garb. Other choruses—though, to be sure, not many—can sing with a musical nicety equal to these Ukrainians; but never a chorus of them all can afford to stand near these singers when variation of color is a question. By means of closed mouths they produce amazing effects; and, of course, they have in their favor the deep bass voices which abound in Russia.

But after all it is not the voices which make this chorus remarkable; with the exception of their deepness, they are nothing extraordinary, and the sopranos indeed at times sound shrill. Nor is it their unusual skill that one will remember about them. It is their vitality that tells. They sing as though they mean what they sing. When they mark a rythm they mark it till every listener feels it too. But it is vitality does it, mind, not extravagance. An object lesson!

Mr. Koshetz led his forces with a refreshing absence of display. Miss Slobodskaja, her voice once at its ease, overcame the handicap of a bad method and sang with a dramatic warmth that brought her two encores. Mme. Koshets was also encored, and, for the matter of that, so was the chorus. Mr. Steinber made his accompaniments sound little less than orchestral. Since Mr. Koshetz brings his chorus here to sing music of their country which we should hardly hear otherwise, it would be folly to complain because they do not sing from Bach's B-minor mass. But, nevertheless, the fact remains that to many listeners too much of this nationalistic music, despite its interest and charm, by force of its very exoticism palls; it says after all, to western ears, but little. There must be music by Russians of a wider experience of the world, like Tchaikovsky, Glinka, Mussorgsky and the rest, which would add variety to Mr. Koshets's programs.

R. R. G.

Herald Mar 13

UKRAINIANS PLEASE BOSTONIANS AGAIN

Two Opera Singers Heard in Groups of Solos

Gl 3/13

The Ukrainian National Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, gave its second Boston concert last night at Symphony Hall to an audience of good size, which seemed delighted with the extraordinary musicianship of what is said to be a group of peasants from Little Russia.

Two Russian opera singers, Oda Slobodskaja and Nina Koshetz, both previousl yheard here at concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were the assisting soloists. Their many numbers and encores swelled the program to unviously heard here at concerts of the pleasant length.

Since the chorus members who were heard in incidental solos in several of the chosen pieces, proved quite as able as the operatic stars to interest a concert audience, one doubted the wisdom of inserting so much rather trite and hackneyed music as Miss Slobodskaja and Mme Koshetz sang into a program whose chief attraction was its exotic character.

Their first concert here last Autumn abundantly proved these Russian peasant singers make remarkably subtle use of naturally fine voices, under the skillful direction of Dr Koshetz. Last night the sopranos showed at times the strain of the long and arduous concert season the chorus has so successfully undertaken in the United States and Mexico. Otherwise the performance did not fall short of the earlier one, except that the conductor tends now to show off the qualities of singers and music rather more obviously than before, by means of such tricks as having his phenomenal bass singers hold onto a very low note after the others stop singing, lest anyone miss noting their deep tones.

Miss Slobodskaja in "Vissi d'arte," from "Tosca" and "Plenrez, mes veux" from Massenet's "Le Cid" proved herself an intense dramatic soprano likely to stir an average operatic audience to marked enthusiasm. Her voice is powerful, but ill-controlled. Her high notes are frequently off pitch and always shrill and wobbly. She has a temperament, but chose her singing master unwisely.

Mme Koshetz is also an essentially dramatic singer. She has a notion of beautiful singing for its own sake, but resists few temptations to exaggerated emotional emphasis. Her voice is of great natural beauty, but not judiciously employed. In certain operatic roles she would give an impressive performance, unless all signs fail.

The audience was polite to both singers but kept most of its real plaudits for the chorus. Opera singers are no novelty here, but Boston has never heard anything else quite like the Ukrainian chorus.

Globe Mar 13

UKRAINIANS GIVE LAST CONCERT

By ZOE FABER.

The last of the two scheduled concerts of this season by the Ukrainian Chorus took place last night at Symphony Hall under the exceptionally able direction of Alexander Koshetz. The assisting artists were Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja and Mme. Nina Koshetz.

Alexander Koshetz is a conductor of remarkable force, as was shown in song after song. He has, it is true, very splendid average of voices from which to get his effects—but the point is, that he gets them. Many another with the same material would fail where he succeeds so greatly.

Am 3/13

The songs of the chorus ran the gauntlet of the emotions of joy and sorrow. The audience was very enthusiastic, no matter what the song.

For her group of songs, Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja sang selections from Tschaikovsky, Gluck, Beethoven, Puccini and Massenet. Her voice is a beautiful one, with the highest tones of wonderful clarity.

American Mar 13

Ukrainian National Chorus

A painter who also does a little writing has long made his home on an island off the northern Massachusetts coast. During the greater part of the year he has no neighbors, for this island is a summer resort. Living there undistracted by the sounds of civilization, he has become uncommonly sensitive to the rhythms of nature—the soughing of wind in the trees and the break of waves on the beach; and these are the rhythms of his prose essays.

Something of this sort, one felt last night when listening to the ineffable folk-singing of the Ukrainian National Chorus on their second visit to Symphony Hall, lies behind their songs. However much Alexander Koshetz and other arrangers have done in the way of polishing and setting the rough diamonds of peasant-made music, they have had the artistic conscience not to rob these tunes of their elemental rhythms, rhythms which surely must have been suggested by their subjects—the clear, broad spaces of the skies in "The Stars," the surge of un-

UKRAINIANS GIVE MUSICAL TREAT

MARGARET HARRIS

Those who were fortunate enough to have heard the Urkainian National Chorus last evening at Symphony hall, carry in their hearts a beautiful musical memory. Attired in their native costume, the chorus, conducted by Alexander Kochetz, sang with perfection, and so thoroughly did they enjoy this singing of songs of their native country that their auditors were thrilled, and made to feel every emotion which these simple little melodies sonality, possessing rare musical intelligence and a voice of great beauty, Mme. Kochetz can truly be named as perhaps the greatest artist of our time.

M. Nicholaj Steinber, accompanist for the artists, played with no little ability, and was most satisfying.

Telegram Mar 13

CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

The Ukrainians Return for Another Concert of Unique Quality—Above All Else Timbres—The Limits of Their Folk-Pieces—Contrasting Soloists

SURELY, it behooves the management of the Ukrainian National Chorus to order the choir's concerts that they do not reach the present unconscionable lengths. No less than twenty-four num- Ukrainian folk-songs have each to each an outward similiarity and so long as Mr. Koshetz's forces sing nothing else, they might well proffer a less numerous array of them in the course of a single evening. Only rarely are these pieces arresting as sheer music, as when one or another of them has the haunting note of an age-old sadness, or is instinct with a semi-barbaric elation, or appeals by reason of its artless gaiety. For the most part they make their effect through the marvellous manipulation of timbres suggested by the transcriber and brought to full realization through the magic of Mr. Koshetz's conducting Report goes that Mr. Koshetz has chosen his choristers less for the beauty, resonance or power of their respective voices than for the color, or more particularly, for the resemblance of the voices to various orchestral instruments. Certain it is that only an orchestra, and in a modern score to boot, may produce such richness and diversity of sound as comes from this Ukrainian choir; there is nothing remotely approaching it in any choral singing to which the western world is accustomed.

Not so long ago a Russian voice was something of a rarity hereabouts, but of late Bostonians have heard with frequency Mr. Shalyápin and Mr. Rosing, and for a fortnight this season a whole troupe of Russian opera-singers ministered to us. It is possible, then, to state with some confidence that the Russian singer is fundamentally distinguishable from his or her fellow in other lands. These Slavic voices have not the roundness and brilliance of the Italian; the throaty richness of the German; or the charm of the French. They have, however, a peculiar resonance and intensity and a surprising degree and variety of color. Oddly enough, in this Ukrainian Chorus the men-singers outnumber the women almost two to one: yet there is no feeling of faulty balance. It is, indeed, as though fourteen oboes and clarinets were supported by twenty cellos and violas, with a quartet of horns for roundness and a bass tuba for foundation. If the men's voices are more resonant and sonorous than are the women's, the latter are more penetrating. In combination they produce an intensity of sound more thrilling and impressive than the are ... yet only Mme. Frijsh has so vivified the former and, within recollection, none other has made so much of the latter piece. Few indeed would dare, as did Mme. Koshetz last evening, to sing with the piano its melodic epilogue that runs from C-sharp above the staff to the C-sharp two ... Mme. Koshetz be... ...tone.

the sound seemed to come from far-off, and for a moment the ear was actually deceived. Next as the notes descended, the tones became fuller and more tangible; then at length disappeared in a whispered breath. A trick, perhaps, but one that few singers might equal; while the end gained justified the means used to gain it.

W. S. S.

Transcript Mar 13

[134]

Ukrainian Chorus March 12th

Monday evening, March 12, in Symphony Hall, a second concert by the celebrated Ukrainian Choir of Russian peasants, two score strong, schooled and led by Alexander Koshetz. Up and down Europe they have wandered for two years and everywhere the body and color of their voices, their instinctive and acquired skill and zest in song, their sincere conveyance of mood, sentiment, emotion, have praised them alike with the expert and with the simple. Now they return to Boston. Mme. Koshetz, heard and liked at the Symphony Concerts last winter, will be the solo-singer. Trans 2/17

Transcript Feb 17

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

The Ukrainian National Chorus, which made a deep impression here last autumn, will again sing in Symphony hall on Monday evening, March 12, conducted by Alexander Koshetz. The program will consist mainly of Russian folk songs. The soloist will be Nina Koshetz, dramatic soprano. Her 2/18

Herald Feb 18

The Ukrainian Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, which made a very favorable impression here last Fall, will return to Symphony Hall March 12, at 8:15, with Nina Koshetz, the dramatic soprano heard here last season as soloist at a pair of Symphony concerts, as assisting artist. Gl 2/18

Globe Feb 18

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

The Ukrainian National Chorus will give a return concert in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, March 12. It will be assisted by two soloists, Nina Kochetz and Oba Slobodskaja, dramatic sopranos, leading Russian opera singers.

Advertiser Feb 25

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

The Ukrainian national chorus which, visiting America for the first time this season, will give a return concert in Symphony hall on Monday evening, March 12th. The chorus, under its skilled conductor, Alexander Koshetz, will give three groups of Russian folk songs, mostly Ukrainian. The two soloists, Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja of the Petrograd opera and Mme. Nina Koshetz of the Moscow opera will each have a group of songs. Trav 3/3

Traveler Mar 3

The Ukrainian National Chorus, visiting America for the first time this season, will give a return concert in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, March 12th.

• • • Amer 3/2

American Mar 3

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

The return concert of the Ukrainian National Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, will be given in Symphony hall, on Monday evening, March 12. This concert follows a tour of the West, reaching to Mexico, by this remarkable organization. Its singing was received everywhere with the same surprise and enthusiasm which it met in Boston. The choral part of the program will include the folk songs: He. 3/4

Our Lady of Potchaiv, Young Uliana, The Stars, Lullaby, Kolemejka, Early Morning, Behind the Mountain, From the Mountains and the Valleys, Shtchedryk, On the Mountain, Hey! Near Boryshpol, The Little Tarin, Jachil's Daughter, In the Garden Stands an Elderbush, Mushrooms.

Oda Slobodskaja, soprano of the Petrograd Grand Opera, will sing arias by Tchaikovsky, Gluck, Beethoven, Puccini and Massenet. Nina Koshetz, soprano of the Moscow opera, will sing a Russian group, including Gretchaninov's "Over the Steppe," Rimsky-Korsakov's Eastern Romance and a song from "The Tzar's Bride," and Rachmaninov's "Pied Piper."

Herald Mar 4

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

The famous Ukrainian National Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, will sing in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, March 12. The choral part of the program will include many folk songs. Mlle. Ola Slobodskaja of the Petrograd Opera and Madame Nina Koshetz of the Moscow Opera will be the soloists. Am 3/4

American Mar 4

Ukrainian Chorus

The Ukrainian National Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, will appear in Symphony Hall on Monday evening, March 12. Post 3/4

Post Mar 4

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

Tomorrow evening in Symphony [illegible] National [illegible]

Again the Ukrainians Trans 3/10

Readily remembered as novel and vivid experience of the concert-room last autumn, the Ukranian Choir will be heard anew in Symphony Hall on Monday evening next—Russian peasants two-score strong, schooied and led by Alexander Kochetz. Up and down Europe they have wandered for tyo years; while everywhere the body and color of their voices, their instinctive and acquired skill and zest in song, their sincere conveyance of mood, sentiment, emotion, have praised them alike with the expert and with the simple. Now they return to Boston. Mme. Koshetz, heard and liked at the Symphony Concerts last winter, and Mme. Slobodasaya, who assisted the choir last October, will be the solo-singers. Their numbers are operatic airs, variously chosen, and Russian songs. The choir will be heard in many and manifold folk-pieces.

Transcript Mar 10

Monday evening, March 12, in Symphony Hall, a second concert by the celebrated Ukrainian Choir of Russian peasants, two score strong, schooled and led by Alexander Koshetz. Up and down Europe they have wandered for two years; while everywhere the body and color of their voices their instinctive and acquired skill and zest in song, their sincere conveyance of mood, sentiment, emotion, have praised them alike with the expert and with the simple. Now they return to Boston. Mme. Koshetz, heard and liked at the Symphony Concerts last winter, and Mme. Slobodskaya, who assisted the choir last October will be the solo-singers. Their numbers are operatic airs, variously chosen, and Russian songs. The choir will be heard many and manifold folk-pieces. Trans 3/

Transcript Mar 3

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

Monday evening in Symphony hall at 8:15 the Ukraining National Chorus will give a return concert in Boston. The program will consist mostly of the folk songs of the Ukraine, both old and new. The Ukrainian Chorus has amply proved the fertility in folk song of their own country.

There will be two soloists, Nina Koshetz, who will sing a group of Russian songs and arias, and Oda Slobodskaja, likewise a Russian prima donna, who will sing songs by Tchaikovsky, Gluck, Beethoven, Puccini and Massenet.

Traveler Mar 10

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

Tomorrow evening in Symphony hall at 8:15, the Ukrainian National Chorus will give its return concert and last appearance in Boston this season. This body of singers, under the leadership of Alexander Koshetz, will sing predominantly the folk songs, ancient and modern, of their own country, which is said to be the richest of all lands in folk music. There will be two soloists—Nina Koshetz and Oda Slobodskaja, both operatic sopranos, highly regarded in Moscow and Petrograd.

Early Morning	Arr. Stupnitzky
Behind the Mountain	Leontovich
From the Mountain and the Valleys	Stetzenko
Shtchedryk	Leontovich
On the Mountain	Stetzenko
The chorus
Arioso from the opera "Opritchnik"	Tschaikovsky
Divinities du Styx	Gluck
Der Kuss	Beethoven
Aria from "Tosca"	Puccini
Aria from "Le Cid"	Massenet
Oda Slobodskaja
Our Lady of Petchaiv	Leontovich
Young Uliana	Koshetz
The Stars	Koshetz
Lullaby	Barvinsky-Koshetz
Kolomejka, song	Kolessa
The chorus
Over the Steppe	Gretchaninov
Song from "Tzar's Bride"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Eastern Romance	Rimsky-Korsakov
The Pied Piper (dedicated to Mme. Koshetz)	Rachmaninov
Nina Koshetz
Hey! Near Boryshpol	Koshetz
The Little Tarin	Koshetz
Jachil's Daughter	Koshetz
In the Garden Stands an Elderbush	Lyssenko
Mushrooms	Lyssenko
The chorus

Herald Mar 11

Ukrainian Chorus

Tomorrow evening in Symphony Hall at 8:15, the Ukrainian National Chorus will give their return concert and last appearance in Boston this season.

This body of singers, which can attain such marvelous results in tone and ensemble, under the leadership of Alexander Koshetz, will sing predominantly the folk songs, ancient and modern, of their own country, which is said to be the richest of all lands in folk music. There will be two soloists, Nina Koshetz and Oda Slobodskaja, both operatic sopranos who are highly regarded as prima donnas in Moscow and Petrograd. Post 3/11

Post Mar 11

---

this being its last appearance in Boston this season. This internationally famous body of singers, under the leadership of Alexander Koshetz, will sing folk songs of their own country. Nina Koshetz and Oda Slobodskaja, Russian prima donnas, will be the soloists. Adv 3/11

Advertiser Mar 11

The Ukranian Chorus tomorrow night, besides two soloists, each previously heard here with the Boston Symphony, offers attractive groups of Russian choral music. These peasant singers, in costume, produce extraordinary musical effects that come near to deserving the praise of the passionate press agent.

Globe Mar 11

UKRAINIAN CHORUS

The Ukrainian National Chorus will give a return concert in Boston Monday evening in Symphony Hall. The program will consist mostly of folk songs of the Ukraine, both old and new. There will be two soloists—Nina Koshetz, who will sing a group of Russion songs and arias, and Oda Slobodskaja, who will sing songs by Tchaikovsky, Gluck, Beethoven, Puccini and Massenet.

American Mar 11

THE UKRAINIANS AGAIN MAKE HIT

Chorus in Brilliant Native Garb Gives National Airs Vivid Rendition

TWO SOLOISTS HELP ROUND OUT PROGRAM

Last night the Ukrainian National Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, gave a concert in Symphony hall, with the help of Oda Slobodskaja, soprano, Nina Koshetz, mezzo-soprano, and Nicholas Steinber, accompanist. The program:

Early Morning	Arr. Stupnitzky
Behind the Mountain	Leontovich
From the Mountain and the Valleys	Stezenko
Shtchdryk	Leontovich
On the Mountain	Stetsenko
The Ukrainian National Chorus
Arioso from "Opritchnik"	Tschaikowsky
Divinites du Styx	Gluck
Der Kuss	Beethoven
Aria from "Tosca"	Puccini
Aria from "La Cid"	Massenet
Mlle. Slobodskaja
Our Lady of Potchaiv	Leontovich
Young Uliana	Koshetz
The Stars	Koshetz
Lullaby	Barvinsky-Koshetz
Kolomejka	Kolessa
The Ukrainian National Chorus.
Over the Steppe	Gretchaninoff
Song from "Tsar's Bride"	Rimsky-Korsakoff
Eastern Roman	Rimsky-Korsakoff
Widmung	Schumann
Mme. Koshetz
Hey! Near Boryshpol	Koshetz
The Little Tarin	Koshetz
Jachil's Daughter	Koshtez
In the Garden Stands an Elderbush	Lyssenko
Mushrooms	Lyssenko
The Ukrainian National Chorus

This chorus out a gallant show, three rows of men and women dressed out in vivid blues, greens and reds. What is more to the purpose, they made their tone as brilliant in color contrasts as their garb. Other choruses—though, to be sure, not many—can sing with a musical nicety equal to these Ukrainians; but never a chorus of them all can afford to stand near these singers when variation of color is a question. By means of closed mouths they produce amazing effects; and, of course, they have in their favor the deep bass voices which abound in Russia.

But after all it is not the voices which make this chorus remarkable; with the exception of their deepness, they are nothing extraordinary, and the sopranos indeed at times sound shrill. Nor is it their unusual skill that one will remember about them. It is their vitality that tells. They sing as though they mean what they sing. When they mark a rythm they mark it till every listener feels it too. But it is vitality does it, mind, not extravagance. An object lesson!

Mr. Koshetz led his forces with a refreshing absence of display. Miss Slobodskaja, her voice once at its ease, overcame the handicap of a bad method and sang with a dramatic warmth that brought her two encores. Mme. Koshetz was also encored, and, for the matter of that, so was the chorus. Mr. Steinber made his accompaniments sound little less than orchestral. Since Mr. Koshetz brings his chorus here to sing music of their country which we should hardly hear otherwise, it would be folly to complain because they do not sing from Bach's B-minor mass. But, nevertheless, the fact remains that to many listeners too much of this nationalistic music, despite its interest and charm, by force of its very exoticism palls; it says after all, to western ears, but little. There must be music by Russians of a wider experience of the world, like Tchaikovsky, Glinka, Mussorgsky and the rest, which would add variety to Mr. Koshets's programs.

R. R. G.

Herald Mar 13

UKRAINIANS PLEASE BOSTONIANS AGA

Two Opera Singers Hea in Groups of Solos

The Ukrainian National Chorus, Alexander Koshetz, conductor, gave its second Boston concert last night at Symphony Hall to an audience of good size, which seemed delighted with the extraordinary musicianship of what is said to be a group of peasants from Little Russia.

Two Russian opera singers, Oda Slobodskaja and Nina Koshetz, both previousl yheard here at concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were the assisting soloists. Their many numbers and encores swelled the program to unviously heard here at concerts of the pleasant length.

Since the chorus members who were heard in incidental solos in several of the chosen pieces, proved quite as able as the operatic stars to interest a concert audience, one doubted the wisdom of inserting so much rather trite and hackneyed music as Miss Slobodskaja and Mme Koshetz sang into a program whose chief attraction was its exotic character.

Their first concert here last Autumn abundantly proved these Russian peasant singers make remarkably subtle use of naturally fine voices, under the skillful direction of Dr Koshetz. Last night the sopranos showed at times the strain of the long and arduous concert season the chorus has so successfully undertaken in the United States and Mexico. Otherwise the performance did not fall short of the earlier one, except that the conductor tends now to show off the qualities of singers and music rather more obviously than before, by means of such tricks as having his phenomenal bass singers hold onto a very low note after the others stop singing, lest anyone miss noting their deep tones.

Miss Slobodskaja in "Vissi d'arte," from "Tosca" and "Pleurez, mes veux" from Massenet's "Le Cid" proved herself an intense dramatic soprano likely to stir an average operatic audience to marked enthusiasm. Her voice is powerful, but ill-controlled. Her high notes are frequently off pitch and always shrill and wobbly. She has a temperament, but chose her singing master unwisely.

Mme Koshetz is also an essentially dramatic singer. She has a notion of beautiful singing for its own sake, but resists few temptations to exaggerated emotional emphasis. Her voice is of great natural beauty, but not judiciously employed. In certain operatic roles she would give an impressive performance, unless all signs fail.

The audience was polite to both singers but kept most of its real plaudits for the chorus. Opera singers are no novelty here, but Boston has never heard anything else quite like the Ukrainian chorus.

Globe Mar 13

UKRAINIANS GIVE LAST CONCERT

By ZOE FABER.

The last of the two scheduled concerts of this season by the Ukrainian Chorus took place last night at Symphony Hall under the exceptionally able direction of Alexander Koshetz. The assisting artists were Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja and Mme. Nina Koshetz.

Alexander Koshetz is a conductor of remarkable force, as was shown in song after song. He has, it is true, very splendid average of voices from which to get his effects—but the point is, that he gets them. Many another with the same material would fail where he succeeds so greatly.

The songs of the chorus ran the gauntlet of the emotions of joy and sorrow. The audience was very enthusiastic, no matter what the song.

For her group of songs, Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja sang selections from Tschaikovsky, Gluck, Beethoven, Puccini and Massenet. Her voice is a beautiful one, with the highest tones of wonderful clarity. Am 3/13

American Mar 13

---

the sound seemed to come from far-off, and for a moment the ear was actually deceived. Next as the notes descended, the tones became fuller and more tangible; then at length disappeared in a whispered breath. A trick, perhaps, but one that few singers might equal; while the end gained justified the means used to gain it.

W. S. S.

Transcript Mar 13

---

in "The Stars," the [illegible] sophisticated religious feeling in "Our Lady of Potchaiv," the universal throb of brooding tenderness in "The Lullaby," the push after push of the quick upspringing of "Mushrooms."

Carefully cherishing these rhythms Mr. Koshetz as conductor last night presented them in endless variety. Never was a phrase twice repeated quite the same in contour under his shaping; never was a repetition precisely a repetition, thanks to his delicate temperamental variations of volume and pace. And the sounds that he shaped and guided—who that heard them can forget the diminuendoes that floated imperceptibly into silence, the sweet high notes of the four sopranos who were as one voice, the basses who sang like bass viols and the humming chorus that was an Æolian harp to every breath of the director's fancy?

Between the groups of songs by the chorus Mlle. Oda Slobodskaja and Mme. Nina Koshetz sang operatic airs to the evident pleasure of most of the audience.

Monitor Mar 13

UKRAINIANS GIVE MUSICAL TREAT

MARGARET HARRIS

Those who were fortunate enough to have heard the Urkainian National Chorus last evening at Symphony hall, carry in their hearts a beautiful musical memory. Attired in their native costume, the chorus, conducted by Alexander Kochetz, sang with perfection, and so thoroughly did they enjoy this singing of songs of their native country that their auditors were thrilled, and made to feel every emotion which these simple little melodies [illegible]

sonality, possessing rare musical intelligence and a voice of great beauty, Mme. Kochetz can truly be named as perhaps the greatest artist of our time.

M. Nicholaj Steinber, accompanist for the artists, played with no little ability, and was most satisfying.

Telegram Mar 13

CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

The Ukrainians Return for Another Concert of Unique Quality—Above All Else Timbres—The Limits of Their Folk-Pieces—Contrasting Soloists

SURELY, it behooves the management of the Ukrainian National Chorus to order the choir's concerts that they do not reach the present unconscionable lengths. No less than twenty-four numUkrainian folk-songs have each to each an outward similiarity and so long as Mr. Koshetz's forces sing nothing else, they might well proffer a less numerous array of them in the course of a single evening. Only rarely are these pieces arresting as sheer music, as when one or another of them has the haunting note of an age-old sadness, or is instinct with a semi-barbaric elation, or appeals by reason of its artless gaiety. For the most part they make their effect through the marvellous manipulation of timbres suggested by the transcriber and brought to full realization through the magic of Mr. Koshetz's conducting Report goes that Mr. Koshetz has chosen his choristers less for the beauty, resonance or power of their respective voices than for the color, or more particularly, for the resemblance of the voices to various orchestral instruments. Certain it is that only an orchestra, and in a modern score to boot, may produce [illegible] shoutings of a chorus of three or four hundred nondescript Anglo-Saxon voices. One of the wonders of present-day music is the ability of a Schönberg, a Stravinsky or a Honegger to obtain from some twenty-odd instruments extraordinary effects of color and sonority. In performance such a score is to that of, say, a classical symphony as is the Ukrainian Choir to the mammoth bodies of singers that our perverted taste in such matters fosters and encourages.

From the peasant costumes of the Ukrainian Chorus to the conventional evening gowns of Miss Slobodskaja and Mme. Koshetz is a far cry, and as far removed from the folksongs were Miss Slobodskaja's pieces by Chaikovsky, Gluck, Beethoven, Massenet and Puccini. Miss Slobodskaja is blessed with a large and opulent voice, which she occasionally forces beyond its natural bounds. She is prone to tear passion to tatters, yet she often sings beautifully and to the eye she is a striking figure. Subtler and more characteristically Slavic are the ways of Mme. Koshetz; she does with her voice some of the things that Mr. Koshetz accomplishes with his chorus. She is mistress of varied tone, and, in a more temperate fashion than Miss Slobodskaja, she is emotional singer as well. Gretchaninov's "Over the Steppe" and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Nightingale and the Rose" are familiar here, yet only Mme. Frijsh has so vivified the former and, within recollection, none other has made so much of the latter piece. Few indeed would dare, as did Mme. Koshetz last evening, to sing with the piano its melodic epilogue that runs from C-sharp above the staff to the C-sharp two octaves below. [illegible] Mme. Koshetz be[illegible] "head-tone."

Elly Ney ~~Bachaus~~ March 24th

Sunday afternoon, March 18, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces, all in the key of C-sharp minor, played by Wilhelm Bachaus, familiar and accomplished pianist, abounding in technical resource, running the gamut of tone, keen-minded to the chosen music, lacking only a little in warming and imparting feeling. A like concert of pieces in one key pleased an audience last autumn in London.

Transcript Mar 9

ELLY NEY

Elly Ney, the pianist, who came to this country for the first time last season, will make her only appearance in Boston this season at a concert to be given in Symphony hall on Saturday afternoon, March 24.

Traveler Mar 10

ELLY NEY AGAIN.

Elly Ney, pianist, will make her only appearance in Boston this season at a concert to be given in Symphony Hall on Saturday afternoon, March 24. Adv 3/11

Advertiser Mar 11

Elly Ney, the pianist, now resident in New York, where her husband, Mr Van Hooggstraten, has just been appointed conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra, succeeding Stransky, will give another Boston recital Saturday, March 24. Those who heard her here last season were enthusiastic about her personality and emotional intensity.

Globe Mar 11

Saturday afternoon, March 24, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces played by Elly Ney, well remembered virtuoso and musician of a season ago. Understanding mind, warm temperament, large resource, pervading energy distingush her. Yet she knows also grace, lightness, fancy. A pianist often as imposing as her presence. Trans 3/10

Transcript Mar 10

ELLY NEY

When Elly Ney came to America for the first time last season she was received in New York, Boston and other cities as one of the most brilliant of living pianists. Much is expected therefore of her only concert here this season, which will take place in Symphony Hall next Saturday afternoon, March 24, at 2:30.

Traveler Mar 17

Saturday at 2:30, Elly Ney, pianist; Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue, Bach; Sonata in C minor, Opus 111, Beethoven; "Wanderer" Fantasie," Schubert; Waltzes, Opus 39, Brahms; Ballade in A flat and Polonaise in A flat, Chopin. 3/18

Globe Mar 18

First and impressively heard in Boston a year ago, Mme. Elly Ney, the pianist, will return to Symphony Hall next Saturday afternoon for a second concert of her own. Understanding mind, warm temperament, large resource, pervading energy distinguish her. Yet she knows also grace, lightness, fancy. She will play Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Beethoven's Sonata in C minor, Op. 111; Schubert's "Wanderer Fantasia"; Brahms's set of Waltzes; Chopin's Ballad in A-flat and Polonaise in the same key. Trans 3/17

Transcript Mar 17

NEY RECITAL

Amer 3/17

When Elly Ney came to America for the first time last season she was received in New York, Boston and other cities as one of the most musicianly and brilliant of living pianists. She will give a recital in Symphony Hall next Saturday afternoon.

American Mar 17

Elly Ney

Next Saturday afternoon, March 24, at 2:30, Elly Ney will make her only appearance in Boston this season. Her programme includes the Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue, Bach; Sonata in C minor, Opus III, Beethoven; Wanderer Fantasie, Schubert; Waltzes, Opus 39, Brahms; Ballad in A flat, Polonaise in A flat, Chopin. Post 3/18

Post Mar 18

ELLY NEY

Next Saturday afternoon, March 24, at 2:30, Elly Ney, pianist, will make her only appearance in Boston this season.

Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue.........Bach
Sonata in C minor, Opus 111.........Beethoven
Wanderer Fantasia.........Schubert
Waltzes, Opus 39.........Brahms
Ballad in A flat.........
Polonaise in A flat.........

Herald Mar 18

Gifted Pianist to Be Heard in Symphony Hall Recital

Her 3/23

MME. ELLY NEY

MME. ELLY NEY TO GIVE SINGLE BOSTON RECITAL

Noted Pianist Comes to Symphony Hall Tomorrow Afternoon

Mme. Elly Ney, celebrated pianist, whose finest interpretations have been recorded for the Ampico, will give a recital tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 in Symphony Hall. This will be her only appearance in Boston this season.

Her program: Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue, Bach; Sonata in C minor, opus 111, Beethoven; Wanderer Fantasie, Schubert; Waltzes, opus 39, Brahms; Ballad in A flat, Chopin; Polonaise in A flat, Chopin.

Mme. Ney is the wife of Willy van Hoogstraten, distinguished Dutch conductor, recently selected to lead the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. She came to America with a great European reputation as an artist of the highest rank—a rare and exceptionally gifted pianist.

Herald Mar 23

WITH THE VIRTUOSI

PIANISTS VARIOUSLY; ALSO A VIOLINIST

Transcript

Mme. Ney and the Larger Ways with the Classics—Mr. Maier and Mr. Pattison, Present and Future—The Merits of Morini—Assorted Prospects

A RARELY puissant and persuasive pianist is Elly Ney, yet even she could not make interesting the programme that she played in Symphony Hall on Saturday afternoon. How can it be that some in Germany have thought that Mme. Ney passes among us [illegible] but a energy, though in the past it has often seemed—and more fittingly—one of the noblest and mose majestic passages in all Chopin. Although she chose a none too emotional programme, Mme. Ney is, above all things, an emotional player. In the [illegible] ception that lay outside the scope of his technique. An unearthly serenity illumines certain pages of this Arietta with Variations. Much of the rest seems but notes, notes, notes! But the Allegro and its dramatic introduction make a different story. Here is Beethoven as composer for the piano at something approaching his best. Some pianist should attempt the experiment of playing this movement without its successor, as it might be well to play in like isolation the Adagio of the "Hammerklavier." Each of the last five sonatas boasts at least one movement of supreme eloquence, but at least three of the five are tedious and even frankly boresome when heard in their entirety.

However great the esteem in which are held the pieces from Bach and Beethoven that were chosen by Mme. Ney, few indeed are those who today keep high regard for the so-called "Wanderer" Fantasia of Schubert. No composer of the stature of Bach or Beethoven was Schubert, and when he, too, as in this Fantasia, strove to write music for which the time was not ripe, he often gave less the impression of greatness inarticulate than of inept experiments. Here and there in this long Fantasia come pleasant phrases; the most of the piece seems but futility made music. Of all the great composers Schubert was the least self-critical, and glorious as is some of his music, some of it, too, is almost inconceivably bad. . . . It may be added that Mme. Ney played this Fantasia con amore and, at least in outward aspect, as one convinced of its validity and beauty. Yet even she might not redeem its more flaccid pages. The thought of the piece in less accomplished hands staggers and appalls, but fortunately its appearances on programmes of the present day are few and far between. Trans 3/26 H. T. P. S.

Transcript March 26

ELLY NEY, PIANIST, IN 'HEAVY' RECITAL

Program Limited to Works of Elder Teutonic Classicists

3/25

By PHILIP HALE

Elly Ney, pianist, gave a recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. Her program read as follows: Bach, Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Beethoven, Sonata, C minor, op. 111; Schubert, "Wanderer" Fantasia; Brahms, Rhapsody and Three Intermezzi op. 119; Chopin, Ballade in A flat, Polonaise in A flat.

Years ago Thomas Heywood wrote a sort of encyclopaedia of women in which he devoted a section to the cruel and tyrannous. This was long before the day of traveling pianists of the female sex, or this section would have been considerably enlarged.

Mme. Ney is a pianist of indisputable parts, but she must be ranked with those characterised by the Germans as formidable. Undoubtedly in private life she is a model of amiability. What possessed her to frame the program of yesterday. To follow the Chromatic Fantasia with Beethoven's op. 111 was a sufficient tax on the patience and endurance of the audience. Then came the merciless infliction of the "Wanderer" Fantasia.

Perhaps she thought that the dignity of Symphony hall would suffer if she did not present a "massive and concrete" program. Is her motto as a pianist, "No Frenchman need apply"? Are there no Russians or Italians worthy of her attention? Could not her excellent qualities as a pianist be revealed in compositions of less magnitude than those chosen? Is she a Minerva of the piano frowning on music that is emotional and sensuous?

In her Amazonian way she played brilliantly, also musically as far as phrasing and control of dynamic gradations was concerned. Noteworthy was the manner in which she built up the increasing force in Bach's fugue, maintaining artistically one degree after another.

Yet there are humbler pianists with varied and engrossing programs of less pretentions that give more pleasure at the moment and are remembered gratefully.

Herald Mar 25

ELLY NEY'S PIANO PLAYING AGAIN STIRS APPLAUSE

Glo 3/25

Elly Ney, distinguished pianist now resident in New York, again stirred the enthusiasm of a rather small audience yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. She has a vivid individuality, and an extraordinary mastery of her instrument; qualities likely to win her eventually a larger popular following in Boston than she can yet boast. Her reputation in Europe is considerable, particularly in Germany. Her performance yesterday of two of the very greatest masterpieces, Bach's Chromatic Fantaisie and Fugue and Beethoven's last piano sonata, opus 111, proved her a remarkable musician, as well as an extraordinary pianist.

She managed to make Bach interesting to her audience, not by taking liberties, or by flashy technical display, but by clean cut playing, with an exquisitely beautiful quality of tone and in intelligent following of the musical pattern in Bach's mind.

To her Beethoven sonata she brought the necessary instinct for rhythmic contrasts and subtleties, and a good deal of the requisite ability to comprehend the austerities of the grand manner of the composer's later years. The arietta in this sonata has never been surpassed by anyone for lyric beauty. Mme Ney's playing of it was very lovely.

Her other numbers were Schubert's "Wanderer Fantaisie," four Brahms pieces, and two from Chopin. More short pieces and fewer classics might have drawn her a bigger audience, but she is not the sort of artist to sacrifice musical considerations in order to bid for popularity.

Globe Mar 25

MME. NEY CONCERT

For her concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, Mme. Elly Ney had set herself a programme which displayed her intrepidity before her audience, to say the least. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue opened the concert, and was followed by Beethoven's C Minor Sonata, Op. III, and this by Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasia. Three very long works in succession, and not even a note for preparation! True, there is some very great music in these three works, but to expect an audience to subsist merely on great music is to be intrepid, we maintain. True, also, Mme. Ney played them all with the surety and authority of a master, though there were times when one felt that she has been overrated. The Bach number was rendered magnificently. The Beethoven Sonata was played romantically, but it is hard to make this work always interesting. There are passages in it which even the touch of the pianist of yesterday could not prevent from being tiresome. There were pianissimo passages which Mme. Ney played with an amazing touch, producing a lightness and at the same time a clarity of tone which have not been matched here for many a day.

For the last part of her programme the pianist played a Rhapsody and three Intermezzi (Op. 119) of Brahms, and Chopin's Ballade in A flat and his Polonaise in the same key. The Intermezzi were played charmingly. It was possible to disagree with the manner in which the Ballade was interpreted, but the playing of the last number rounded off the concert well.

There was a good-sized audience, which applauded the pianist.

Post Mar 25

[135]

Elley Ney ~~Bachaus~~ March 24th

Sunday afternoon, March 18, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces, all in the key of C-sharp minor, played by Wilhelm Bachaus, familiar and accomplished pianist, abounding in technical resource, running the gamut of tone, keen-minded to the chosen music, lacking only a little in warming and imparting feeling. A like concert of pieces in one key pleased audience last autumn in London. Trans 3/10

Transcript Mar 10

ELLY NEY

Trans 3/10

Elly New, the pianist, who came to this country for the first time last season, will make her only appearance in Boston this season at a concert to be given in Symphony hall on Saturday afternoon, March 24.

Traveler Mar 10

ELLY NEY AGAIN.

Elly Ney, pianist, will make her only appearance in Boston this season at a concert to be given in Symphony Hall on Saturday afternoon, March 24. Adv 3/11

Advertiser Mar 11

Elly Ney, the pianist, now resident in New York, where her husband, Mr Van Hoogstraten, has just been appointed conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra, succeeding Stransky, will give another Boston recital Saturday, March 24. Those who heard her here last season were enthusiastic about her personality and emotional intensity.

Globe Mar 11

Saturday afternoon, March 24, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces played by Elly Ney, well remembered virtuosa and musician of a season ago. Understanding mind, warm temperament, large resource, pervading energy distingush her. Yet she knows also grace, lightness, fancy. A pianist often as imposing as her presence. Trans 3/10

Transcript Mar 10

ELLY NEY

Trav 3/17

When Elly Ney came to America for the first time last season she was received in New York, Boston and other cities as one of the most brilliant of living pianists. Much is expected therefore of her only concert here this season, which will take place in Symphony Hall next Saturday afternoon, March 24, at 2:30.

Traveler Mar 17

Saturday at 2:30; Elly Ney, pianist; Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue, Bach; Sonata in C minor, Opus 111, Beethoven; "Wanderer Fantasie," Schubert; Waltzes, Opus 39, Brahms; Ballade in A flat and Polonaise in A flat, Chopin. Gl 3/18

Globe Mar 18

First and impressively heard in Bost a year ago, Mme. Elly Ney, the piani will return to Symphony Hall next Sat day afternoon for a second concert of own. Understanding mind, warm temperament, large resource, pervading energ distinguish her. Yet she knows also grace lightness, fancy. She will play Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Beethoven's Sonata in C minor, Op. 111; Schubert's "Wanderer Fantasia"; Brahms's set of Waltzes; Chopin's Ballad in A-flat and Polonaise in the same key. Trans 3/17

Transcript Mar 17

NEY RECITAL

Amer 3/17

When Elly Ney came to America for the first time last season she was received in New York, Boston and other cities as one of the most musicianly and brilliant of living pianists. She will give a recital in Symphony Hall next Saturday afternoon.

American Mar 17

Elly Ney

Next Saturday afternoon, March 24, at 2:30, Elly Ney will make her only appearance in Boston this season. Her programme includes the Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue, Bach; Sonata in C minor, Opus III, Beethoven; Wanderer Fantasie, Schubert; Waltzes, Opus 39, Brahms; Ballad in A flat, Polonaise in A flat, Chopin. Post 3/18

Post Mar 18

ELLY NEY

Her 3/18

Next Saturday afternoon, March 24, at 2:30, Elly Ney, pianist, will make her only appearance in Boston this season.

Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue	Bach
Sonata in C minor, Opus 111	Beethoven
Wanderer Fantasie	Schubert
Waltzes, Opus 39	Brahms
Ballad in A flat	Chopin
Polonaise in A flat	Chopin

Herald Mar 18

Gifted Pianist to Be Heard in Symphony Hall Recital

Her 3/23

MME. ELLY NEY

MME. ELLY NEY TO GIVE SINGLE BOSTON RECITAL

Noted Pianist Comes to Symphony Hall Tomorrow Afternoon

Mme. Elly Ney, celebrated pianist, whose finest interpretations have been recorded for the Ampico, will give a recital tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 in Symphony Hall. This will be her only appearance in Boston this season.

Her program: Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue, Bach; Sonata in C minor, opus 111, Beethoven; Wanderer Fantasie, Schubert; Waltzes, opus 39, Brahms. Ballad in A flat, Chopin; Polonaise in A flat, Chopin.

Mme. Ney is the wife of Willy van Hoogstraten, distinguished Dutch conductor, recently selected to lead the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. She came to America with a great European reputation as an artist of the highest rank—a rare and exceptionally gifted pianist.

Herald Mar 23

WITH THE VIRTUOSI

PIANISTS VARIOUSLY; ALSO A VIOLINIST

Trans 3/26

Mme. Ney and the Larger Ways with the Classics—Mr. Maier and Mr. Pattison, Present and Future—The Merits of Morini—Assorted Prospects

A RARELY puissant and persuasive pianist is Elly Ney, yet even she could not make interesting the programme that she played in Symphony Hall on Saturday afternoon. How can it be that some in Germany have thought that Mme. Ney passes among ns this theme an [illegible] Could any but a energy, though in the past it has often seemed—and more fittingly—one of the noblest and mose majestic passages in all Chopin. Although she chose a none too emotional programme, Mme. Ney, is, above all things, an emotional player. In the [illegible] Bach, Beethoven, Schubert and ception that lay outside the scope of his technique. An unearthly serenity illumines certain pages of this Arietta with Variations. Much of the rest seems but notes, notes, notes! But the Allegro and its dramatic introduction make a different story. Here is Beethoven as composer for the piano at something approaching his best. Some pianist should attempt the experiment of playing this movement without its successor, as it might be well to play in like isolation the Adagio of the "Hammerklavier." Each of the last five sonatas boasts at least one movement of supreme eloquence, but at least three of the five are tedious and even frankly boresome when heard in their entirety.

However great the esteem in which are held the pieces from Bach and Beethoven that were chosen by Mme. Ney, few indeed are those who today keep high regard for the so-called "Wanderer" Fantasia of Schubert. No composer of the stature of Bach or Beethoven was Schubert, and when he, too, as in this Fantasia, strove to write music for which the time was not ripe, he often gave less the impression of greatness inarticulate than of inept experiments. Here and there in this long Fantasia come pleasant phrases; the most of the piece seems but futility made music. Of all the great composers Schubert was the least self-critical, and glorious as is some of his music, some of it, too, is almost inconceivably bad. . . . It may be added that Mme. Ney played this Fantasia con amore and, at least in outward aspect, as one convinced of its validity and beauty. Yet even she might not redeem its more flaccid pages. The thought of the piece in less accomplished hands staggers and appalls, but fortunately its appearances on programmes of the present day are few and far between.

Trans 3/26 S.

Transcript March 26

ELLY NEY, PIANIST, IN 'HEAVY' RECITAL

Program Limited to Works of Elder Teutonic Classicists

3/25

By PHILIP HALE

Elly Ney, pianist, gave a recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. Her program read as follows: Bach, Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Beethoven, Sonata, C minor, op. 111; Schubert, "Wanderer" Fantasia; Brahms, Rhapsody and Three Intermezzi op. 119; Chopin, Ballade in A flat, Polonaise in A flat.

Years ago Thomas Heywood wrote a sort of encyclopaedia of women in which he devoted a section to the cruel and tyrannous. This was long before the day of traveling pianists of the female sex, or this section would have been considerably enlarged.

Mme. Ney is a pianist of indisputable parts, but she must be ranked with those characterized by the Germans as formidable. Undoubtedly in private life she is a model of amiability. What possessed her to frame the program of yesterday. To follow the Chromatic Fantasia with Beethoven's op. 111 was a sufficient tax on the patience and endurance of the audience. Then came the merciless infliction of the "Wanderer" Fantasia.

Perhaps she thought that the dignity of Symphony hall would suffer if she did not present a "massive and concrete" program. Is her motto as a pianist, "No Frenchman need apply"? Are there no Russians or Italians worthy of her attention? Could not her excellent qualities as a pianist be revealed in compositions of less magnitude than those chosen? Is she a Minerva of the piano frowning on music that is emotional and sensuous?

In her Amazonian way she played brilliantly, also musically as far as phrasing and control of dynamic gradations was concerned. Noteworthy was the manner in which she built up the increasing force in Bach's fugue, maintaining artistically one degree after another.

Yet there are humbler pianists with varied and engrossing programs of less pretentions that give more pleasure at the moment and are remembered gratefully.

Herald Mar 25

ELLY NEY'S PIANO PLAYING AGAIN STIRS APPLAUSE

Gl 3/25

Elly Ney, distinguished pianist now resident in New York, again stirred the enthusiasm of a rather small audience yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. She has a vivid individuality, and an extraordinary mastery of her instrument; qualities likely to win her eventually a larger popular following in Boston than she can yet boast. Her reputation in Europe is considerable, particularly in Germany. Her performance yesterday of two of the very greatest masterpieces, Bach's Chromatic Fantaisie and Fugue and Beethoven's last piano sonata, opus 111, proved her a remarkable musician, as well as an extraordinary pianist.

She managed to make Bach interesting to her audience, not by taking liberties, or by flashy technical display, but by clean cut playing, with an exquisitely beautiful quality of tone and in intelligent following of the musical pattern in Bach's mind.

To her Beethoven sonata she brought the necessary instinct for rhythmic contrasts and subtleties, and a good deal of the requisite ability to comprehend the austerities of the grand manner of the composer's later years. The arietta in this sonata has never been surpassed by anyone for lyric beauty. Mme Ney's playing of it was very lovely.

Her other numbers were Schubert's "Wanderer Fantaisie," four Brahms pieces, and two from Chopin. More short pieces and fewer classics might have drawn her a bigger audience, but she is not the sort of artist to sacrifice musical considerations in order to bid for popularity.

Globe Mar 25

MME. NEY CONCERT

P 3/25

For her concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, Mme. Elly Ney had set herself a programme which displayed her intrepidity before her audience, to say the least. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue opened the concert, and was followed by Beethoven's C Minor Sonata, Op. III, and this by Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasia. Three very long works in succession, and not even a note for preparation! True, there is some very great music in these three works, but to expect an audience to subsist merely on great music is to be intrepid, we maintain. True, also, Mme. Ney played them all with the surety and authority of a master, though there were times when one felt that she has been overrated. The Bach number was rendered magnificently. The Beethoven Sonata was played romantically, but it is hard to make this work always interesting. There are passages in it which even the touch of the pianist of yesterday could not prevent from being tiresome. There were pianissimo passages which Mme. Ney played with an amazing touch, producing a lightness and at the same time a clarity of tone which have not been matched here for many a day.

For the last part of her programme the pianist played a Rhapsody and three Intermezzi (Op. 119) of Brahms, and Chopin's Ballade in A flat and his Polonaise in the same key. The Intermezzi were played charmingly. It was possible to disagree with the manner in which the Ballade was interpreted, but the playing of the last number rounded off the concert well.

There was a good-sized audience, which applauded the pianist.

Post Mar 25

Elly Ney ~~Bachaus~~ March 24th

Sunday afternoon, March 18, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces, all in the key of C-sharp minor, played by Wilhelm Bachaus, familiar and accomplished pianist, abounding in technical resource, running the gamut of tone, keenminded to the chosen music, lacking only little in warming and imparting feeling. Like concert of pieces in one key pleased audience last autumn in London.

Transcript Mar 9

ELLY NEY

Elly New, the pianist, who came to this country for the first time last season, will make her only appearance in Boston this season at a concert to be given in Symphony hall on Saturday afternoon, March 24.

Traveler Mar 10

ELLY NEY AGAIN.

Elly Ney, pianist, will make her only appearance in Boston this season at a concert to be given in Symphony Hall on Saturday afternoon, March 24. Adv 3/11

Advertiser Mar 11

Elly Ney, the pianist, now resident in New York, where her husband, Mr Van Hoogstraten, has just been appointed conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra, succeeding Stransky, will give another Boston recital Saturday, March 24. Those who heard her here last season were enthusiastic about her personality and emotional intensity.

Globe Mar 11

Saturday afternoon, March 24, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces played by Elly Ney, well remembered virtuosa and musician of a season ago. Understanding mind, warm temperament, large resource, pervading energy distingush her. Yet she knows also grace, lightness, fancy. A pianist often as imposing as her presence. Trans 3/10

Transcript Mar 10

ELLY NEY

When Elly Ney came to America for the first time last season she was received in New York, Boston and other cities as one of the most brilliant of living pianists. Much is expected therefore of her only concert here this season, which will take place in Symphony Hall next Saturday afternoon, March 24, at 2:30.

Traveler Mar 17

Saturday at 2:30; Elly Ney, pianist; Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue, Bach; Sonata in C minor, Opus 111, Beethoven; "Wanderer Fantasie," Schubert; Waltzes, Opus 39, Brahms; Ballade in A flat and Polonaise in A flat, Chopin. 3/16

Globe Mar 18

First and impressively heard in Boston a year ago, Mme. Elly Ney, the pianist, will return to Symphony Hall next Saturday afternoon for a second concert of her own. Understanding mind, warm temperament, large resource, pervading energy distinguish her. Yet she knows also grace, lightness, fancy. She will play Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Beethoven's Sonata in C minor, Op. 111; Schubert's "Wanderer Fantasia"; Brahms's set of Waltzes; Chopin's Ballad in A-flat and Polonaise in the same key. Trans 3/17

Transcript Mar 17

NEY RECITAL

Amer 3/17

When Elly Ney came to America for the first time last season she was received in New York, Boston and other cities as one of the most musicianly and brilliant of living pianists. She will give a recital in Symphony Hall next Saturday afternoon.

American Mar 17

Elly Ney

Next Saturday afternoon, March 24, at 2:30, Elly Ney will make her only appearance in Boston this season. Her programme includes the Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue, Bach; Sonata in C minor, Opus III, Beethoven; Wanderer Fantasie, Schubert; Waltzes, Opus 39, Brahms; Ballad in A flat, Polonaise in A flat, Chopin. Post 3/18

Post Mar 18

ELLY NEY

Next Saturday afternoon, March 24, at 2:30, Elly Ney, pianist, will make her only appearance in Boston this season.

Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue	Bach
Sonata in C minor, Opus 111	Beethoven
Wanderer Fantasie	Schubert
Waltzes, Opus 39	Brahms
Ballad in A flat
Polonaise in A flat

Herald Mar 18

Gifted Pianist to Be Heard in Symphony Hall Recital

Her 3/23

MME. ELLY NEY

MME. ELLY NEY TO GIVE SINGLE BOSTON RECITAL

Noted Pianist Comes to Symphony Hall Tomorrow Afternoon

Mme. Elly Ney, celebrated pianist, whose finest interpretations have been recorded for the Ampico, will give a recital tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 in Symphony Hall. This will be her only appearance in Boston this season.

Her program: Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue, Bach; Sonata in C minor, opus 111, Beethoven; Wanderer Fantasie, Schubert; Waltzes, opus 39, Brahms. Ballad in A flat, Chopin; Polonaise in A flat, Chopin.

Mme. Ney is the wife of Willy van Hoogstraten, distinguished Dutch conductor, recently selected to lead the Philharmonic Orchestra. She for a French woman? Could any German pianist, trained in Germany, and with a lack of humor typically Teutonic, have set upon a single programme—and in the order named—Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Beethoven's Sonata, Opus III, Schubert's "Wanderer" "Fantasia," four pieces by Brahms and, for conclusion, two of the most familiar of all the pieces of Chopin?

---

To say that Mme. Ney played these things discerningly, with a largeness and power, with unfailing expressiveness and warmth, is but to state the expected. It was indeed possible to differ in part with her version of the pieces by Chopin—to consider, for example, that she chose too slow a pace for the first portion of the A-flat major Ballad and played too fast the concluding pages. And while she gave to most of the Polonaise in A-flat its full measure of eloquence, yet through undue haste with it she robbed the chief theme of its rightful breadth and impressiveness. Like others who have played the Polonaise here of late, Mme. Ney is minded to make this theme an expression of tempestuous energy, though in the past it has often seemed—and more fittingly—one of the noblest and mose majestic passages in all Chopin. Although she chose a none too emotional programme, Mme. Ney, is, above all things, an emotional player. In the music of Bach, Beethoven, Schubert and Brahms this temperamental warmth served to make endurable passages that may seem, in other hands, dryness incarnate. But there is less urgent necessity to interpret "to the hilt" the more straightforward Ballad and Polonaise of Chopin, and Mme. Ney's way with them came close to exaggeration and distortion. Trans 3/26

Perchance some, as heavily serious as Mme. Ney herself, would scout the suggestion that hers was a dull programme. It may be but personal prejudice that finds Bach's Fantasia—however masterly the Fugue that follows it—a generally uninteresting and discursive composition, a stringing together of recitatives, arpeggios and rambling passage-work, with little enough inter-relation. Again there are those who deem the Sonata, Opus 111, Beethoven's finest, seeing in the second movement an echo of the apocalyptic vision of St. John on Patmos, though others find here, despite the simple and touching beauty of the theme on which the movement is based, an instance of the later Beethoven, striving vainly to find expression for a musical con[illegible] seems but futility made music. Of all the great composers Schubert was the least self-critical, and glorious as is some of his music, some of it, too, is almost inconceivably bad. . . . It may be added that Mme. Ney played this Fantasia con amore and, at least in outward aspect, as one convinced of its validity and beauty. Yet even she might not redeem its more flaccid pages. The thought of the piece in less accomplished hands staggers and appalls, but fortunately its appearances on programmes of the present day are few and far between.

S.

Transcript March 26

ELLY NEY, PIANIST, IN 'HEAVY' RECITAL

Program Limited to Works of Elder Teutonic Classicists

3/25

By PHILIP HALE

Elly Ney, pianist, gave a recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. Her program read as follows: Bach, Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Beethoven, Sonata, C minor, op. 111; Schubert, "Wanderer" Fantasia; Brahms, Rhapsody and Three Intermezzi op. 119; Chopin, Ballade in A flat, Polonaise in A flat.

Years ago Thomas Heywood wrote a sort of encyclopaedia of women in which he devoted a section to the cruel and tyrannous. This was long before the day of traveling pianists of the female sex, or this section would have been considerably enlarged.

Mme. Ney is a pianist of indisputable parts, but she must be ranked with those characterised by the Germans as formidable. Undoubtedly in private life she is a model of amiability. What possessed her to frame the program of yesterday. To follow the Chromatic Fantasia with Beethoven's op. 111 was a sufficient tax on the patience and endurance of the audience. Then came the merciless infliction of the "Wanderer" Fantasia.

Perhaps she thought that the dignity of Symphony hall would suffer if she did not present a "massive and concrete" program. Is her motto as a pianist, "No Frenchman need apply"? Are there no Russians or Italians worthy of her attention? Could not her excellent qualities as a pianist be revealed in compositions of less magnitude than those chosen? Is she a Minerva of the piano frowning on music that is emotional and sensuous?

In her Amazonian way she played brilliantly, also musically as far as phrasing and control of dynamic gradations was concerned. Noteworthy was the manner in which she built up the increasing force in Bach's fugue, maintaining artistically one degree after another.

Yet there are humbler pianists with varied and engrossing programs of less pretentions that give more pleasure at the moment and are remembered gratefully.

Herald Mar 25

ELLY NEY'S PIANO PLAYING AGAIN STIRS APPLAUSE

Glo 3/25

Elly Ney, distinguished pianist now resident in New York, again stirred the enthusiasm of a rather small audience yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. She has a vivid individuality, and an extraordinary mastery of her instrument; qualities likely to win her eventually a larger popular following in Boston than she can yet boast. Her reputation in Europe is considerable, particularly in Germany. Her performance yesterday of two of the very greatest masterpieces, Bach's Chromatic Fantaisie and Fugue and Beethoven's last piano sonata, opus 111, proved her a remarkable musician, as well as an extraordinary pianist.

She managed to make Bach interesting to her audience, not by taking liberties, or by flashy technical display, but by clean cut playing, with an exquisitely beautiful quality of tone and in intelligent following of the musical pattern in Bach's mind.

To her Beethoven sonata she brought the necessary instinct for rhythmic contrasts and subtleties, and a good deal of the requisite ability to comprehend the austerities of the grand manner of the composer's later years. The arietta in this sonata has never been surpassed by anyone for lyric beauty. Mme Ney's playing of it was very lovely.

Her other numbers were Schubert's "Wanderer Fantaisie," four Brahms pieces, and two from Chopin. More short pieces and fewer classics might have drawn her a bigger audience, but she is not the sort of artist to sacrifice musical considerations in order to bid for popularity.

Globe Mar 25

MME. NEY CONCERT

For her concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, Mme. Elly Ney had set herself a programme which displayed her intrepidity before her audience, to say the least. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue opened the concert, and was followed by Beethoven's C Minor Sonata, Op. III, and this by Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasia. Three very long works in succession, and not even a note for preparation! True, there is some very great music in these three works, but to expect an audience to subsist merely on great music is to be intrepid, we maintain. True, also, Mme. Ney played them all with the surety and authority of a master, though there were times when one felt that she has been overrated. The Bach number was rendered magnificently. The Beethoven Sonata was played romantically, but it is hard to make this work always interesting. There are passages in it which even the touch of the pianist of yesterday could not prevent from being tiresome. There were pianissimo passages which Mme. Ney played with an amazing touch, producing a lightness and at the same time a clarity of tone which have not been matched here for many a day.

For the last part of her programme the pianist played a Rhapsody and three Intermezzi (Op. 119) of Brahms, and Chopin's Ballade in A flat and his Polonaise in the same key. The Intermezzi were played charmingly. It was possible to disagree with the manner in which the Ballade was interpreted, but the playing of the last number rounded off the concert well.

There was a good-sized audience, which applauded the pianist.

Post Mar 25

Walska (Continued)

Walska to Make Boston Debut Today

GANNA WALSKA'S Boston debut will take place in Symphony Hall this aftrnoon. The Polish beauty, now Mrs. Harold F. McCormick, is making her first American concert tour. Max Kaplick, a baritone, formerly connected with the Boston Opera Company, is assisting.

Madame Walaska will sing three Mozart arias and songs by Scarlatti and Richard Strauss, also Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Hymn to the Sun." She will also sing in a duet from "Rigoletto."

Advertiser Feb 25

WALSKA'S DEBUT TODAY

Ganna Walska, the Polish lyric soprano, otherwise known as Mrs. Harold F. McCormick, will make her first appearance here at a concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. She will be assisted by Max Kaplick remembered as a baritone of the Boston Opera Company. The programme follows:

Aria from "Il Templario"	Nicola
Max Kaplick
Aria of Constance from "L'enlevement au Serail"	Mozart
Ganna Walska
"Ecce Homo"	Trunk
Zueignung	Strauss
"I prigionieri d'Edimburgo"	Ricci
Max Kaplick
"Air de Blondine"	Mozart
"Porgi Amor" from "Nozze di Figaro"	Mozart
"Dans le Foret"	Delibes
"Voci di Primavera"	Joh. Strauss
Ganna Walska
Duet from "Rigoletto"	Verdi
Ganna Walska and Max Kaplick

Post Feb 25

Ganna Walska to Sing Her First Boston Recital Today

Mme Ganna Walska, soprano, whose recent marriage to Harold McCormick of Chicago has caused much press comment, is announced to sing at Symphony hall this afternoon for the first time in Boston. She will be assisted by Max Kaplick, a baritone formerly for one season a member of the Boston Opera company.

Mme Walska gave the first concert of her American tour at Elmira, N Y, last Monday night. It is said that she was obliged by legal complications due to a suit brought by another singer to retain the exclusive services of Jules Daiber as manager to defer several concerts announced for earlier dates in American cities, among them Chicago and Philadelphia.

Mme Walska has set a program that should afford an ample test of her musical abilities. She is said to wish to be heard and judged merely as a singer.

Globe Feb 25

SONG BIRD WHO MADE HER BOSTON DEBUT

MME. GANNA WALSKA

Bride of Harold McCormick, Chicago millionaire, heard in recital Symphony Hall.

Mme. Ganna Walska, who recently became the bride of Harold McCormick, Chicago millionaire, made her first Boston appearance yesterday afternoon at a recital in Symphony Hall.

Although the audience recalled her after each group of numbers more than once, her singing was keenly a disappointment. Billed as a "lyric soprano," Mme. Ganna Walska's numbers were from the repertory of the florid colorature soprano, which conceal most of the singer's vocal resources from her listeners.

When not trying to warble, but simply singing, she produced beautiful tones. The singer was apparently laboring under a nervous strain, causing her to deviate from the pitch and exhibit an unpleasant quality of tone.

Her program included Constance's air from Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio"; Mozart's "Porgi Amor," which she sang with real feeling; the duet from "Rigoletto," in which she was assisted by Max Kaplick, baritone, who was cordially applauded, and other selections including the florid version for soprano of Strauss' waltz, "Voices of Spring."

American Feb 26

Without Excuse

The pastimes of the rich may reach even to the concert-stage. They did a few years ago when, in Symphony Hall, a faintly remembered Mme. Coudert tried her fortunes as a singer—then, there and never more. They did so again yesterday when Mme. Ganna Walska in the same room sang three airs out of Mozart's operas; a song of Delibes; a waltz of Strauss "vocalised" by an Italian hand; and, with the baritone, Mr. Kaplick, a duet from "Rigoletto." Mme. Walska's voice is thin, sharp, wiry, metallic. She uses it dryly, tautly. She is unskilled and insensitive in the arts and means of song—line, phrase, modulation, transition, climax. With pace and rhythm, she exhibits neither intelligence, intuition, nor the fruits of study. The ornaments of song—especially the ornaments of Mozart in the two most intricate airs of "Il Seraglio"—mock her. The beauty and the mood of song—as in the Countess's "Porgi Amor" from "Figaro's Wedding"—altogether evade her. Of Mozartean style, of the simpler exigencies of Delibes and Strauss, she gave not a hint. In every attribute of an accomplished and interesting singer—even to carriage on the stage—she is altogether deficient. Similar occasions have often moved the listeners to a pitying sympathy for mistaken and ill-furnished ambition. Mme. Walska's incompetence is of another and a harder sort. Not even curiosity could she evoke, since no more than a handful of hearers were polite and patient through her brief hour. "There isn't any more."

H. T. P.

Transcript Feb 26

GANNA WALSKA AT SYMPHONY HALL

Max Kaplich, Baritone, Appears with Lyric Soprano

Yesterday afternoon Ganna Walska, lyric soprano, gave a concert in Symphony hall. She was assisted by Jeanne Krieger, accompanist, and Max Kaplich, baritone, who sang arias from "Puritani" and Ricci's "I Prigonieri d'Edimburgo," "Ecce Homo by Trunk, Strauss's "Zueignung"" and, with Mme. Walska, a duet from "Rigoletto." Mme. Walska sang Constanze's big air from Mozart's "Die Entfuehrung," Blondine's air from the same opera, "Porgi Amor" from "Le Nuzze di Figaro," the romance [illegible] "Lakme," and a [illegible] Primavera," also for an encore the "laughing song" of Auber.

Remembering the prophet's warning, "Woe unto him that calls evil good," of Mme. Walska's performance yesterday one can only say that the singer showed poor judgment when she essayed a program so exacting. In the middle of her voice she has a few notes of pleasant quality; till to these she has succeeded, by well-directed and diligent study, in adding more, she is unwise to sing in public.

Mr. Kaplich, the possessor of an excellent voice well-trained, showed the value of technique and of operatic routine: what he wants to do he can do. Yesterday he seemed disposed to sing with undue sentimentality. Best of all went the lively air by Ricci. To the program he added two encores. Miss Krieger [illegible] the accompaniments [illegible]

WALSKA GRIEVES HEARERS

Fails to Give Evidence of Being Concert Singer

VOICE VERY METALLIC AND OF NO BEAUTY

Is Comely, But Lacks Training for Stage of Music

BY OLIN DOWNES

Madame Ganna Walska, who, after much about her in the newspapers being the wife of Harold F. McCormick, appeared in song recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, has the laudable ambition to sing, but she cannot. Her programme included quite a little of Mozart—the air of Constance from "The Elopement From the Seraglio"; the air of Blondine; the air, "Porgi Amor," from "Marriage of Figaro," the charming song of Delibes, "Dans le foret"; the bravura waltz piece of Johann Strauss, "Voci di primavera," and at the last Mme. Walska sang the duet from the second act of "Rigoletto" with Max Kaplick, who was a member of the Boston Opera Company some years ago.

It was evident when she appeared that Mme. Walska was very nervous. It would be a pleasure to be able to say that this nervousness gradually wore off, that as she recovered herself a beauty of tone and a quality of technic not shown in her opening number appeared. But that is hardly the fact. Take 50 per cent of badness off for nervousness, it still remains that the performance was anything but convincing from the standpoint of art.

The moment when the voice showed at its best was in the "Porgiamor," when the throat relaxed in a measure, when a few phrases had even a pleasing quality to the ear. But that moment passed and with it any hope of better things before the end of the programme.

Tone Shrill and Unmusical

Elsewhere the tone was very shrill and unmusical. It lacked any true resonance or carrying power. It never flowed with a beautiful legato. There was neither ease nor freedom in passages of bravura. Nor was there the thought of intelligent, let alone moving, interpretation. Had these performances been letter perfect, and no better interpreted than they were yesterday, they would wholly have lacked a soul.

Mme. Walska might say in her own defence that nervousness hindered her doing herself justice. Doubtless this was in a measure true. When a performer knows that she is doing what is technically and tonally an impossible thing, she cannot be expected to devote great attention to the higher branches of interpretation. She is in no frame of mind to do so. But after listening to the complete programme of Mme. Walska it is not possible sincerely to say that she ever gave the impression of being an artist.

Voice Is Not There

Under such circumstances, why sing, above all others, Mozart, and why attempt, in the name of all that is ludicrous, the bravura piece of Strauss?

Why not, for the sake of Mme. Walska and also the public, state the facts as they are, to the best of our observation, belief, and opinion?

Mme. Walska has no reason, as her vocal equipment is at this time, to sing. It is doubtful if the voice could ever be developed in a way to be beautiful or appealing. The technic is so far gone in the wrong way that for years at least Mme. Walska, if she is determined on a concert career, should seclude herself in the studio of a master, far away from the public or from flatterers.

Mr. Kaplick, with a far better voice than Mme. Walska, did not notably improve the occasion, since his tone was most of the time unsteady and inclined to spread, and his phrasing was not that of a fine musician. To complete the sad tale, there were metallic, poorly played accompaniments. The audience was not a [illegible] one. It was [illegible]

Post Feb 26

WALSKA IN FIRST BOSTON CONCERT

Reveals a Voice of Much Natural Beauty

Program Not Well Chosen to Display It—Singer Wins Great Applause

Ganna Walska's first Boston concert yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall proved that whatever her errors of vocal technique may be, she has the first essential for a singer, a voice naturally of unusual power and beauty One must add that at present, by misguided and ineffective attempts at singing in the coloratura style, best known to most present-day Americans through the performance of Galli-Curci, Mme Walska manages to conceal most of her vocal resources from the casual listener.

Yesterday's recital was, to be frank, a failure; yet one hearing the beautiful tones the singer produced when she wasn't trying to warble, but simply singing, could understand why Mme Walska believes that she is entitled to a career as a notable public performer.

Mme Walska, as all the world knows, has lately married a Chicago multimillionaire, Harold McCormick, able to promise her, as he is said to have done, an opera house. With unlimited money at command it is curious that she should not have procured wiser advice from vocal experts than she has seemingly followed.

Her dressmaker serves her better, and her own personality aided in the effect of simplicity and dignity she gave to the eye yesterday, as she stood by the piano in the center of a stage softly and clearly lighted by spot and footlights, with the usual overhead illumination extinguished above the stage and turned low in the rest of the hall.

It is something to wear a rope of pearls and several dazzling rings and, yet seem, as she did, an unpretentious aspirant for musical fame. She is obviously a very clever as well [illegible] beautiful woman.

Her programs announced Mme Walska as a "lyric soprano," yet all her numbers yesterday were from the repertory of the florid coloratura soprano. Almost no living singer could safely begin a recital, without a chance to warm up and overcome nervousness, with a number so difficult as Constance's air from Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio," Mme Walska's throat was obviously constricted with nervousness, which had a good deal to do with the deviations from pitch and the unpleasant quality of tone she produced.

Even in this unlucky first number, however, there were a few notes in the lower register that proved to the discerning listener that Mme Walska was not by any means doing her voice justice. Mozart's "Porgi amor," in her second group, gave added opportunity for simple lyric singing, and showed, except in a few difficult phrases, that Mme Walska's voice is naturally beautiful. She sang this music with real feeling, though not subtly.

In the duet from "Rigoletto," the one which in Verdi's opera follows the heroine, Gilda's first entrance, Mme Walska showed schooling in operatic routine. But her "Caro nome" would doubtless at present prove as ineffective as her singing of the florid version for soprano of Strauss' waltz "Voices of Spring" was yesterday.

For such a voice as hers a concert career and an operatic career in non-coloratura roles that do not demand heroic singing is possible. Her beauty, her personal charm, her taste, and her apparently sound, though wrongly trained musical intelligence, supplement Mme Walska's voice.

Yesterday's audience recalled Mme Walska after each group of numbers more than once. She added but a single encore, and that after repeated recalls.

She was assisted in the duet from "Rigoletto" by Max Kaplick, baritone, who was cordially applauded for his singing of several solos. The hall was about two-thirds full, a good-sized audience for a singer new to this city.

Globe Feb 26

WALSKA MAKES BOSTON DEBUT

Mme. Ganna Walska sang in Boston for the first time in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. She was given a friendly greeting and there was generous applause for her efforts. In the fair-sized audience were many who sympathized with her, for various reasons.

Mme. Walska was billed as a lyric soprano, but most of her selections were of the florid order, which rather overtaxed both her voice and her technic. She seemed timid and nervous, but nevertheless her manner on the whole was that of a woman consumed with ambition to make a success. Without doubt she would have fared better with purely lyric selections, for her best singing was done in the sweet and relatively simple "Porgi Amor" song from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro." She also had fair success in the third act duet from "Rigoletto" with Max Kaplick.

Mr. Kaplick also sang several solos. It was an extraordinary matinee, all in all, unique in Symphony Hall annals.

Advertiser Feb 26

[136]

Walska (Continued)

Walska to Make Boston Debut Today

GANNA WALSKA'S Boston debut will take place in Symphony Hall this aftrnoon. The Polish beauty, now Mrs. Harold F. McCormick, is making her first American concert tour. Max Kaplick, a baritone, formerly connected with the Boston Opera Company, is assisting.

Madame Walaska will sing three Mozart arias and songs by Scarlatti and Richard Strauss, also Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Hymn to the Sun." She will also sing in a duet from "Rigoletto."

Advertiser Feb 25

WALSKA'S DEBUT TODAY

Ganna Walska, the Polish lyric soprano, otherwise known as Mrs. Harold F. McCormick, will make her first appearance here at a concert in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. She will be assisted by Max Kaplick remembered as a baritone of the Boston Opera Company. The programme follows:

Aria from "Il Templario" .... Nicola
Max Kaplick
Aria of Constance from "L'enlevement au Serail" .... Mozart
Ganna Walska
"Ecce Homo" .... Trunk
Zueignung .... Strauss
"I prigionieri d'Edimburgo" .... Ricci
Max Kaplick
"Air de Blondine" .... Mozart
"Porgi Amor" from "Nozze di Figaro" .... Mozart
"Dans le Foret" .... Delibes
"Voci di Primavera" .... Joh. Strauss
Ganna Walska
Duet from "Rigoletto" .... Verdi
Ganna Walska and Max Kaplick

Post Feb 25

Ganna Walska to Sing Her First Boston Recital Today

Mme Ganna Walska, soprano, whose recent marriage to Harold McCormick of Chicago has caused much press comment, is announced to sing at Symphony hall this afternoon for the first time in Boston. She will be assisted by Max Kaplick, a baritone formerly for one season a member of the Boston Opera company.

Mme Walska gave the first concert of her American tour at Elmira, N Y, last Monday night. It is said that she was obliged by legal complications due to a suit brought by another singer to retain the exclusive services of Jules Daiber as manager to defer several concerts announced for earlier dates in American cities, among them Chicago and Philadelphia.

Mme Walska has set a program that should afford an ample test of her musical abilities. She is said to wish to be heard and judged merely as a singer.

Globe Feb 25

SONG BIRD WHO MADE HER BOSTON DEBUT

MME. GANNA WALSKA

Bride of Harold McCormick, Chicago millionaire, heard in recital Symphony Hall.

Mme. Ganna Walska, who recently became the bride of Harold McCormick, Chicago millionaire, made her first Boston appearance yesterday afternoon at a recital in Symphony Hall.

Although the audience recalled her after each group of numbers more than once, her singing was keenly a disappointment. Billed as a "lyric soprano," Mme. Ganna Walska's numbers were from the repertory of the florid coloratura soprano, which conceal most of the singer's vocal resources from her listeners.

When not trying to warble, but simply singing, she produced beautiful tones. The singer was apparently laboring under a nervous strain, causing her to deviate from the pitch and exhibit an unpleasant quality of tone.

Her program included Constance's air from Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio"; Mozart's "Porgi Amor," which she sang with real feeling; the duet from "Rigoletto," in which she was assisted by Max Kaplick, baritone, who was cordially applauded, and other selections including the florid version for soprano of Strauss' waltz, "Voices of Spring."

American Feb 26

Without Excuse

The pastimes of the rich may reach even to the concert-stage. They did a few years ago when, in Symphony Hall, a faintly remembered Mme. Coudert tried her fortunes as a singer—then, there and never more. They did so again yesterday when Mme. Ganna Walska in the same room sang three airs out of Mozart's operas; a song of Delibes; a waltz of Strauss "vocalised" by an Italian hand; and, with the baritone, Mr. Kaplick, a duet from "Rigoletto." Mme. Walska's voice is thin, sharp, wiry, metallic. She uses it dryly, tautly. She is unskilled and insensitive in the arts and means of song—line, phrase, modulation, transition, climax. With pace and rhythm, she exhibits neither intelligence, intuition, nor the fruits of study. The ornaments of song—especially the ornaments of Mozart in the two most intricate airs of "Il Seraglio"—mock her. The beauty and the mood of song—as in the Countess's "Porgi Amor" from "Figaro's Wedding"—altogether evade her. Of Mozartean style, of the simpler exigencies of Delibes and Strauss, she gave not a hint. In every attribute of an accomplished and interesting singer—even to carriage on the stage—she is altogether deficient. Similar occasions have often moved the listeners to a pitying sympathy for mistaken and ill-furnished ambition. Mme. Walska's incompetence is of another and a harder sort. Not even curiosity could she evoke, since no more than a handful of hearers were polite and patient through her brief hour. "There isn't any more."

H. T. P.

Transcript Feb 26

GANNA WALSKA AT SYMPHONY HALL

Max Kaplich, Baritone, Appears with Lyric Soprano

Her 2/26

Yesterday afternoon Ganna Walska, lyric soprano, gave a concert in Symphony hall. She was assisted by Jeanne Krieger, accompanist, and Max Kaplich, baritone, who sang arias from "Puritani" and Ricci's "I Prigonieri d'Edimburgo," "Ecce Homo" by Trunk, Strauss's "Zueignung" and, with Mme. Walska, a duet from "Rigoletto." Mme. Walska sang Constanze's big air from Mozart's "Die Entfuehrung," Blondine's air from the same opera, "Porgi Amor" from "Le Nozze di Figaro," the romance [illegible] "Lakme," and a [illegible] Primavera," also for an encore the "laughing song" of Auber.

Remembering the prophet's warning, "Woe unto him that calls evil good," of Mme. Walska's performance yesterday one can only say that the singer showed poor judgment when she essayed a program so exacting. In the middle of her voice she has a few notes of pleasant quality; till to these she has succeeded, by well-directed and diligent study, in adding more, she is unwise to sing in public.

Mr. Kaplich, the possessor of an excellent voice well-trained, showed the value of technique and of operatic routine; what he wants to do he can do. Yesterday he seemed disposed to sing with undue sentimentality. Best of all went the lively air by Ricci. To the program he added two encores. Miss Krieger [illegible] the accompaniments [illegible]

WALSKA GRIEVES HEARERS

Pst 2/26

Fails to Give Evidence of Being Concert Singer

VOICE VERY METALLIC AND OF NO BEAUTY

Is Comely, But Lacks Training for Stage of Music

BY OLIN DOWNES

Madame Ganna Walska, who, after much about her in the newspapers being the wife of Harold F. McCormick, appeared in song recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, has the laudable ambition to sing, but she cannot. Her programme included quite a little of Mozart—the air of Constance from "The Elopement From the Seraglio", the air of Blondine; the air, "Porgi Amor," from "Marriage of Figaro," the charming song of Delibes, "Dans le foret"; the bravura waltz piece of Johann Strauss, "Voci di primavera," and at the last Mme. Walska sang the duet from the second act of "Rigoletto" with Max Kaplick, who was a member of the Boston Opera Company some years ago.

It was evident when she appeared that Mme. Walska was very nervous. It would be a pleasure to be able to say that this nervousness gradually wore off, that as she recovered herself a beauty of tone and a quality of technic not shown in her opening number appeared. But that is hardly the fact. Take 50 per cent of badness off for nervousness, it still remains that the performance was anything but convincing from the standpoint of art.

The moment when the voice showed at its best was in the "Porgiamor," when the throat relaxed in a measure, when a few phrases had even a pleasing quality to the ear. But that moment passed and with it any hope of better things before the end of the programme.

Tone Shrill and Unmusical

Elsewhere the tone was very shrill and unmusical. It lacked any true resonance or carrying power. It never flowed with a beautiful legato. There was neither ease nor freedom in passages of bravura. Nor was there the thought of intelligent, let alone moving, interpretation. Had these performances been letter perfect, and no better interpreted than they were yesterday, they would wholly have lacked a soul.

Mme. Walska might say in her own defence that nervousness hindered her doing herself justice. Doubtless this was in a measure true. When a performer knows that she is doing what is technically and tonally an impossible thing, she cannot be expected to devote great attention to the higher branches of interpretation. She is in no frame of mind to do so. But after listening to the complete programme of Mme. Walska it is not possible sincerely to say that she ever gave the impression of being an artist.

Voice Is Not There

Under such circumstances, why sing, above all others, Mozart, and why attempt, in the name of all that is ludicrous, the bravura piece of Strauss? [illegible] ception we all are inclined to practice when our inclinations are strong, until she has at least a physical foundation for giving performances acceptable to the public.

Is Good to Look At

For the rest, she appeared as a strikingly beautiful woman, though evidently ill at ease and almost awkward through self-consciousness on the stage, and a singer whose anxiety and nervous tension produced facial distortions disagreeable, like the tone, to the beholders.

Mr. Kaplick, with a far better voice than Mme. Walska, did not notably improve the occasion, since his tone was most of the time unsteady and inclined to spread, and his phrasing was not that of a fine musician. To complete the sad tale, there were metallic, poorly played accompaniments. The audience was not a large one. It was [illegible]

Post Feb 26

WALSKA IN FIRST BOSTON CONCERT

Gl 2/26

Reveals a Voice of Much Natural Beauty

Program Not Well Chosen to Display It—Singer Wins Great Applause

Ganna Walska's first Boston concert yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall proved that whatever her errors of vocal technique may be, she has the first essential for a singer, a voice naturally of unusual power and beauty. One must add that at present, by misguided and ineffective attempts at singing in the coloratura style, best known to most present-day Americans through the performance of Galli-Curci, Mme Walska manages to conceal most of her vocal resources from the casual listener.

Yesterday's recital was, to be frank, a failure; yet one hearing the beautiful tones the singer produced when she wasn't trying to warble, but simply singing, could understand why Mme Walska believes that she is entitled to a career as a notable public performer.

Mme Walska, as all the world knows, has lately married a Chicago multimillionaire, Harold McCormick, able to promise her, as he is said to have done, an opera house. With unlimited money at command it is curious that she should not have procured wiser advice from vocal experts than she has seemingly followed.

Her dressmaker serves her better, and her own personality aided in the effect of simplicity and dignity she gave to the eye yesterday, as she stood by the piano in the center of a stage softly and clearly lighted by spot and footlights, with the usual overhead illumination extinguished above the stage and turned low in the rest of the hall.

It is something to wear a rope of pearls and several dazzling rings and yet seem, as she did, an unpretentious aspirant for musical fame. She is obviously a very clever as well as a very beautiful woman.

Her programs announced Mme Walska as a "lyric soprano," yet all her numbers yesterday were from the repertory of the florid coloratura soprano. Almost no living singer could safely begin a recital, without a chance to warm up and overcome nervousness, with a number so difficult as Constance's air from Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio." Mme Walska's throat was obviously constricted with nervousness, which had a good deal to do with the deviations from pitch and the unpleasant quality of tone she produced.

Even in this unlucky first number, however, there were a few notes in the lower register that proved to the discerning listener that Mme Walska was not by any means doing her voice justice. Mozart's "Porgi amor," in her second group, gave added opportunity for simple lyric singing, and showed, except in a few difficult phrases, that Mme Walska's voice is naturally beautiful. She sang this music with real feeling, though not subtly.

In the duet from "Rigoletto," the one which in Verdi's opera follows the heroine, Gilda's first entrance, Mme Walska showed schooling in operatic routine. But her "Caro nome" would doubtless at present prove as ineffective as her singing of the florid version for soprano of Strauss' waltz "Voices of Spring" was yesterday.

For such a voice as hers a concert career and an operatic career in non-coloratura roles that do not demand heroic singing is possible. Her beauty, her personal charm, her taste, and her apparently sound, though wrongly trained musical intelligence, supplement Mme Walska's voice.

Yesterday's audience recalled Mme Walska after each group of numbers more than once. She added but a single encore, and that after repeated recalls.

She was assisted in the duet from "Rigoletto" by Max Kaplick, baritone, who was cordially applauded for his singing of several solos. The hall was about two-thirds full, a good-sized audience for a singer new to this city.

Globe Feb 26

WALSKA MAKES BOSTON DEBUT

Mme. Ganna Walska sang in Boston for the first time in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. She was given a friendly greeting and there was generous applause for her efforts. In the fair-sized audience were many who sympathized with her, for various reasons.

Mme. Walska was billed as a lyric soprano, but most of her selections were of the florid order, which rather overtaxed both her voice and her technic. She seemed timid an dnervous, but nevertheless her manner on the whole was that of a woman consumed with ambition to make a success. Without doubt she would have fared better with purely lyric selections, for her best singing was done in the sweet and relatively simple "Porgi Amor" song from Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro." She also had fair success in the third act duet from "Rigoletto" with Max Kaplick.

Mr. Kaplick also sang several solos. It was an extraordinary matinee, all in all, unique in Symphony Hall annals.

Advertiser Feb 26

[136]

Bachaus March 18th

BACHAUS AND C SHARP MINOR

The inspiration which the great composers have found in the mysterious key of C sharp minor will be revealed by William Bachaus, the celebrated pianist, in his only appearance of the season in Boston, at a recital in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon at 3:30. At his recital in New York on March 6, he played Rachmaninov's Prelude, which James Hunker said was written for the funeral of a piano tuner in Brooklyn; Beethoven's "Moonlight" sonata; Schumann's Symphonic Studies; six pieces by Chopin, and Liszt's 12th Hungarian Rhapsody. For encores he played Schubert's C sharp Minor Musical Movement; also Chopin's A flat Etude and "Revolutionary" Etude, and Strauss's "Blue Danube" waltz.

He 3/11

Herald Mar 11

Programme in C Sharp Minor

The inspiration which the great composers have found in the mysterious key of C sharp minor will be revealed by Bachaus, the celebrated pianist, in his only appearance of the season in Boston, at a recital to be given in Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon, March 18, at 3:30.

Post 3/11

Post Mar 11

3/10

BACHAUS RECITAL

The key of C sharp minor, which has so often inspired the romantic and, indeed, all the great composers for the piano, will furnish an entire program for the recital of Bachaus, the noted virtuoso, who is to make his only Boston appearance of the season at Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, March 18, at 3:30.

Traveler Mar 10

SUNDAY afternoon, March 18, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano pieces, all in the key of C sharp minor, layed by Wilhelm Bachaus, familiar and complished pianist, abounding in techni l resource, running the gamut of tone, en-minded to the chosen music, lacking y a little in warming and impart feeling. Beethoven's "Moonlight So a"; Schumann's "Symphonic Studies"; Prelude, a Nocturne, two Studies, Mazurka, a Scherzo and the Im ptu Fantasia of Chopin; the Twelfth sody of Liszt; and (as programmes in heatre used to say with emphasis) a in Prelude of Rahkmaninov, are the nted numbers.

Transcript Mar 10

Multifold Pianists

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afterno for a concert of pieces in the key of sharp minor or closely related key comes Wilhelm Bachaus, familiar an accomplished pianist, abounding in techn cal resource, running the gamut of ton keen-minded to the chosen music, lackin only a little in warming and impart ing feeling. Beethoven's "Moonlight S nata"; Schumann's "Symphonic Studies" a Prelude, a Nocturne, two Studie a Mazurka, a Scherzo and the Im promptu Fantasia of Chopin; the Twelft Rhapsody of Liszt; and (as programmes in the theatre used to say with emphasis) a certain Prelude of Rahkmaninov, are the appointed numbers.

Trans 3/17

Transcript Mar 17

BACHAUS PROGRAM

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30 William Bachaus, the famous pianist, will make his only appearance in Boston this season in his now celebrated "Program in C sharp minor."

This program, which has met with so much success in London, New York and other cities, includes Rachmaninoff's Prelude, Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata, Schumann's Symphonic Studies, Chopin's Prelude, Nocturne, Two Studies, Mazurka, Fantasie Impromptu and Scherzo, and Liszt's Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody.

Trav 3/17

Traveler Mar 17

BACHAUS TODAY

Her 3/18

This afternoon in Symphony hall, at 3:30, William Bachaus, the celebrated pianist, will give his only recital here this season. His program will be entirely in the key of C sharp minor, as given with outstanding success in London, New York and other cities.

The numbers follow:

Prelude	Rachmaninov
Sonata quasi una fantasia, Opus 27, No 2 ("Moonlight")	Beethoven
Etudes Symphoniques	Schumann
Prelude	Chopin
Nocturne	Chopin
Two Studies	Chopin
Mazurka	Chopin
Fantasie Impromptu	Chopin
Scherzo	Chopin
Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt

Herald Mar 18

Her 3/18

Herald Mar 18

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30, Wilhelm Bachaus, pianist. Program in the key of C sharp minor. Prelude, Rachmaninoff; Sonata quasi una fantasia opus 27, No. 2, Beethoven; Etudes Symphoniques, Schumann; Prelude, Nocturne, Two Studies, Mazurka, Fantasie Impromptu and Scherzo, Chopin; Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt.

Globe Mar 18

BACHAUS RECITAL

This afternoon in Symphony Hall, William Bachaus, the only Boston recital of the season. His program, entirely in the key of C sharp minor, follows:

Prelude	Rachmaninoff
Sonata quasi una fantasia opus 27, No. 2 ("Moonlight")	Beethoven
Etudes Symphoniques	Schumann
Prelude	Chopin
Nocturne	Chopin
Two Studies	Chopin
Mazurka	Chopin
Fantasie Impromptu	Chopin
Scherzo	Chopin
Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt

Advertiser Mar 18

BACHAUS TODAY

This afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30 William Bachaus, the celebrated pianist, will give his only Boston recital of the season. His programme will be entirely in the key of C sharp minor, as given with outstanding success in London, New York and other cities. The numbers follow: Prelude, Rachmaninoff; Sonata, "Moonlight," Beethoven; Etudes Symphoniques, Schumann; Prelude, Nocturne, Two Studies, Mazurka, Fantasie Impromptu and Scherzo, Chopin; Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt.

Post Mar 18

BACHAUS IN ONLY LOCAL CONCERT

Amer 3/17

William Bachaus, pianist, will make his only appearance in Boston this season at Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon in his celebrated "Program in C sharp minor." This program, which has met with so much success in London, New York and other cities, includes Rachmaninoff's Prelude, Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata, Schumann's Symphonic Studies, Chopin's Prelude, Nocturne, Two Studies, Mazurka, Fantasie Impromptu and Scherzo, and Liszt's Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody.

William Bachaus

American Mar 17

WILLIAM BACHAUS IN SYMPHONY HALL

Piano Recital Stirs Audience to Enthusiasm

Yesterday afternoon William Bachaus, pianist, gave a recital in Symphony hall. Because either he likes the key above all others, or else just from a whim, he chose to play a very long program of pieces all in the key of C sharp minor. The Rachmaninoff prelude, Beethoven's sonata opus 27, No. 2; Schumann's Symphonic Studies, a prelude by Chopin and a nocturne, two studies, the Fantasie Impromptu, a mazurka and scherzo, and Liszt's 12th Hungarian Rhapsody. He played encores as well, for the audience applauded with enthusiasm.

In that audience yesterday there were undoubtedly some few persons blessed with the possession of absolute pitch. They, one may guess, must have found the steady insistence on one key tiresome; to others not so blessed it could matter little. Many more people must have been tired by the long continued minor, which indeed, especially in the Chopin group, grew wearing. There was another element in evidence, however, which proved irksome. Because he was playing in a single key, Mr. Bachaus, perhaps with the high aim of consistency, elected to play for many minutes in a single mood, a deliberate mood of sluggish pace, that left as much of poetry in the first two movements of Beethoven's romantic sonata as might be found in a two-foot rule. For the last movement changing his humor, Mr. Bachaus played this music as though it told of alarums and excursions, wars and commotions. And so he played the symphonic studies.

With the Chopin group, however, Mr. Bachaus altered his frame of mind once more, and for the better. He proved himself indeed an admirable player of Chopin, not whining and moaning on the one hand, nor trying on the other to make of Chopin an unduly heroic soul. Finding the golden mean, he played delightfully, the mazurka above all, with exquisite rhythm, the first study brilliantly, and with fine fervor in the impromptu and the scherzo.

Better still he played the Hungarian Rhapsody, with an amazing mastery of technique, but without a hint of unbecoming display. He brought more than technique, though, into action. He showed himself sensitive to the rhapsodical content of this music as honest as any Liszt wrote—who, when he dealt with his native rhythms, idoms and cadences, forgot to pose or to try to be grand. Feeling Liszt's passionate outburst just aright, Mr. Bachaus played it superbly. If to the wild stirring poetry he added a technique of singularly dazzling beauty, where lies the harm in that?

R. R. G.

Herald Mar 19

BACHAUS PLAYS IN C SHARP MINOR

Pianist's Program in One Key Pleases

Wilhelm Bachaus gave a program of piano music in C sharp minor yesterday afternoon to an enthusiastic audience that half-filled Symphony Hall. He played, of course, Rachmaninoff's prelude, the only one in the world to some amateurs; Beethoven's so-called "Moonlight" sonata, Schumann's "Symphonic Etudes," Liszt's 12th Rhapsody and seven Chopin pieces, of which the scherso and Fantaisie Impromptu were the most familiar to concert goers.

Mr Bachaus' whimsy for pieces in a single key made this program unique, though it might have happened by accident that a pianist had chosen this same assortment of repertory pieces. Since many of the numbers yesterday did not remain in C sharp minor for more than a few measures before modulation to other related keys, there was less monotony than some may have anticipated from this cause.

Aside from the much advertised key scheme, yesterday's recital was not out of the ordinary piano virtuoso entertainment. One found one's self gasping at the number of notes per second Mr Bachaus managed to play, and then reflecting that Chopin, Beethoven et al would probably have gasped too, at hearing their music so efficiently speeded up. His was a really extraordinary stunt performance, though it must be admitted that there are nowadays machines capable of even more extraordinary feats of virtuosity.

Liszt's Rhapsody was played with real, or at least, stage fire and warmth. Mr Bachaus' temperament is eminently suited to such music, and he excels in it.

But Beethoven and Chopin had emotions apparently alien to Mr Bachaus' universe. His way of poetizing music is to play rubato and look up at the ceiling. Liszt himself may have done the same. Beethoven and Chopin demand of a player more than muscular energy and preposterously agile fingers.

Globe Mar 19

BACHAUS RECITAL

William Bachaus, pianist, gave a recital in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. There was a good-sized audience which evidently enjoyed the pianist's playing, applauding him heartily. He added liberally to a long programme.

Po 3/19

All of the pieces listed were in C-sharp minor. This is an unusual procedure, to say the least. In picking his key Mr. Bachaus showed wisdom. C-sharp minor has a characteristic brilliance duplicated by few other keys—and at all events, the key color is individual and characteristic.

With one exception all the pieces came from the "great masters." The exception was Rachmaninoff's C-sharp minor prelude, which was played with brilliance enough. In the first two movements of Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata, Mr. Bachaus was more successful than in the last, in which his tone was too hard. The Schumann Symphonic Studies were beautifully played. In his group from Chopin the pianist was for the most part successful. He did not sentimentalize, but he produced lovely tones.

Post Mar 19

PIANO RECITAL IN ONE KEY BY BACHAUS

Amer 3/19

By ZOE FABER.

The finest day in weeks, if not months probably kept a good many people away from Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon when William Bachaus, pianist, gave his recital in C-sharp minor. The same recital given in London last Fall had created quite an impression.

William Bachaus

A few years ago the name of William Bachaus was a very well known one among the music lovers of this country. Today many people regard hims as more or less of a newcomer to the field. Another of the many careers that the war split.

Of all the things that Mr. Bachaus chose to play for his audience on this occasion, we liked the Chopin group much the best, and of this group the Scherzo. It was because of his interpretation of Chopin that Mr. Bachaus won his laurels formerly.

As for tone, touch and technic, William Bachaus ranks, if not with the highest, at least with the high. His tone and touch, when in piano and pianissimo passages, are beautiful. It is only when the weight of his shoulder goes into the tone to effect loud passages that there is a decided inclination to harshness, if not actual hardness.

The program, all in the above mentioned key, was all classic, with one exception, Rachmaninoff. The other illustrious names were Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Liszt.

William Bachaus is an entirely worthwhile artist, and it is hoped that he will be better received when he comes again. He deserves it.

American Mar 19

Sharp indeed was the contrast of Mr. Bachaus, playing all things in one manner, one mood, one voice. From his hands clanged Rakhmáninov's Prelude, happily set as little overture to the concert—but from what pianist does it not so sound? With skill, he photographed Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata." Not a note was inexact and not a measure was poetized. Sentiment, much less sentimentality, is not Mr. Bachaus's pitfall. A balder litteralist with the piano and the music there of our concert-rooms do not know. Like a timetable he recorded Beethoven. In the mathematics of music he tabulated the variations between the introduction and the finale of the "Symphonic Studies." There and only there did Schumann, for once in a way magnificent, quicken him. Elsewhere he made monotonies more monotonous. And to Schumann dulled succeeded Chopin matter-of-fact. Such miracle is possible and not diabolically or perversely, but with the best will in the world Mr. Bachaus wrought it. He had ears to hear notes; he had eyes to see markings; he had hands to list upon the piano all that he had seen and heard. There Mr. Bachaus stops; but there also, as it happens, Chopin begins. Liszt bade the pianist back to technical prowress; to whirls of rhythm, to thunders of climax. They were vigorous enough for Mr. Bachaus to hear. Twice, thrice and fourfold he returned them to his audience. One hour and thirty minutes of pianistic pedantry; fifteen minutes of pianistic tumult. The clapping company called it a recital. So be it.

H. T. P.

Transcript Mar 19

[137]

H & H Society – April 1st

THE REDEMPTION

On Easter Sunday, April 1, Gounod's great oratorio, the "Redemption," will be performed by the Handel and Haydn Society under Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor.

Traveler Mar 10

EASTER REDEMPTION

A brilliant array of soloists will take part in the Easter performance of Gounod's Redemption to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society as their last concert of the season in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 1. The soloists will be Richard Crooks, tenor; Florence Hinkle, soprano; Jeanne Laval, contralto; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Clifton Woods, bass.

Traveler Mar 17

Sunday afternoon, April 1, in Symphony Hall, a concert of the Handel and Haydn Society at which Gounod's familiar oratorio, "The Redemption," will be sung by its chorus and by Mmes. Hinkle, Laval, Messrs. Crooks, Werrenrath and Woods as solo-singers. The usual orchestra will assist and Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct in music he has often made imposing.

Transcript Mar 17

EASTER ORATORIO

The final concert of the season by the Handel and Haydn Society will be a performance of "The Redemption," Gounod's oratorio, in Symphony Hall on Easter Sunday afternoon. Richard Crooks, Florence Hinkle, Jeanne Laval, Reinald Werrenrath and Clifton Woods will be the soloists.

Advertiser Mar 18

The Handel and Haydn Society, Mr. Mollenhauer, conductor, will perform Gounod's "Redemption" in Symphony Hall on Easter Sunday, April 1, at 3:30 P. M. It will be the last concert of the society this season. The solo singers will be Florence Hinkle, Jeanne Laval, Richard Crooks, Reinald Werrenrath and Clifton Woods.

Herald Mar 18

EASTER REDEMPTION

A brilliant array of soloists should make notable the Easter performance of Gounod's Redemption, to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 1. The soloists will be Richard Crooks, Florence Hinkle, Jeanne Laval, Reinald Werrenrath and Clifton Woods.

American Mar 17

HANDEL AND HAYDN

A splendid list of soloists has been engaged for the performance of Gounod's "Redemption," to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall on Easter Sunday. Florence Hinkle will be the soprano, Marion Telva the contralto, Reinald Werrenrath the baritone, and Clifton Woods the bass. The tenor will be Richard Crooks, a young American singer who made a striking impression earlier in the season.

Advertiser Mar 24

EASTER "REDEMPTION"

A splendid list of soloists has been engaged for the Easter performance of Gounod's "Redemption," to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony hall on Easter Sunday, April 1, at 3:30. Florence Hinkle will be the soprano, Marion Telva the contralto, Reinard Werrenrath the baritone, Clifton Woods the bass and Richard Crooks the tenor.

Traveler Mar 24

SUNDAY afternoon, April 1, in Symphony Hall, a concert of the Handel and Haydn Society at which Gounod's familiar oratorio, "The Redemption," will be sung by its chorus and by Mmes. Hinkle and Laval, Messers. Crooks, Werrenrath and Woods as solo-singers. The usual orchestra will assist and Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct in music he has often made imposing.

Transcript Mar 24

Easter "Redemption

A group of soloists of the first eminence should make notable the performance of Gounod's popular oratorio, "The Redemption," by the Handel and Hadyn Society, which is to be given in Symphony Hall at 3:30 on Easter Sunday afternoon, April 1. Florence Hinkle will be the soprano and Marion Telva the contralto. The tenor will be Richard Crooks, the young American singer, who, appearing earlier with the Handel and Hadyn Society, made a striking impression as one of the finest new singers of the present Boston season. Reinald Werrenrath will be the baritone and Clifton Woods the bass singer. [illegible] of the Handel and Haydn Society will [illegible]

The final list, or at least the latest list, of soloists for the Handel and Haydn performance of Gounod's Redemption next Sunday is Florence Hinkle, soprano; Marion Telva, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Reinald Warrenrath, baritone; and Clifton Woods, bass. Miss Telva is a St Louis girl who has made good with the Metropolitan Opera in the past two seasons. She has never sung here. Mr Crooks made an extraordinary impression at his Boston debut earlier in the season with the Handel and Haydn. Mr Woods has pleased here in recital. Mrs Hinkle and Mr Werrenrath need no introduction. As a whole this is an extraordinarily fine list of soloists. One wishes one would say as much for the oratorio, which is flashy and rather vulgar music on a theme demanding quite other qualities.

Globe Mar 25

EASTER "REDEMPTION"

A group of soloists of the first eminence should make notable the performance of Gounod's oratorio, "The Redemption" by the Handel and Haydn Society, in Symphony hall at 3:30 on Easter Sunday afternoon, April 1. Florence Hinkle will be the soprano, Marion Telva, the contralto; Richard Crooks, the tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, the baritone, and Clifton Woods, the bass. Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct.

Herald Mar 25

EASTER ORATORIO

Gounod's popular oratorio, "The Redemption," will be sung by the Handel and Haydn Society, which is to be given in Symphony Hall Easter Sunday afternoon. Florence Hinkle, Marion Telva, Richard Crooks, Reinald Werrenrath and Clifton Woods will be the soloists.

Advertiser Mar 25

Choral Song

For final choral concert of the present season, tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall, the Handel and Haydn Society will sing its way through Gounod's oratorio "The Redemption, long standard and enjoyable music to its public. The solo-singers are Mmes. Hinkle and Laval; Messrs. Crooks, Werrenrath and Wood. Of them Mme. Hinkle and Mr. Werrenrath are as "standard" as the piece; while Mr. Crooks as he proved six weeks ago in "The Dream of Gerontius," is risen, rather than rising tenor. The usual orchestra will assist and Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct in music he has often made imposing.

Transcript Mar 31

Handel and Haydn Society in Easter Performance of "Redemption"

For the Easter performance of Gounod's "Redemption" by the Handel and Haydn Society, to take place tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30, a truly remarkable list of soloists will appear, including, Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcook, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Reinald Werrenrah, baritone, and Clifton Wood, bass. Emil Mollenhauer and the chorus of 400 which comprise the Handel and Haydn Society, together with a large symphony orchestra, will join forces in what promises to be a splendid performance of the oratorio.

Traveler Mar 31

EASTER "REDEMPTION"

For the Easter performance of Gounod's "Redemption" by the Handel and Haydn Society, to take place tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall, an attractive list of soloists will appear, including Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone; and Clifton Wood, bass.

American Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL, Today at 3:30—The Handel and Haydn Society in Gounod's Oratorio, "The Redemption." Emil Mollenhauer, conductor. Soloists, Florence Hinkle, soprano; Marion Telva, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Clifton Woods, bass.

Globe April 1

'THE REDEMPTION' TODAY

The Easter performance of Gounod's "Redemption" will be the last choral concert of the season by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30. The soloists will be Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Clifton Wood, bass. Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct the great chorus of this society and a symphony orchestra in the performance of this popular oratorio.

Herald April 1

EASTER ORATORIO

An Easter performance of Gounod's "Redemption" will be given by the Handel and Haydn Society at Symphony Hall this afternoon. Florence Hinkle, Merle Alcock, Richard Crooks, Reinald Werrenrath and Clifton Wood will be the soloists. Emil Mollenhauer will conduct. The big chorus and a symphony orchestra will be prominent features.

Advertiser April 1

"REDEMPTION" TODAY

An Easter performance of Gounod's "Redemption" will constitute the last choral concert of the season by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30.

The soloists will be Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Richard Cook, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Clifton Wood, bass. Emil Mollenhauer will conduct.

Post April 1

'REDEMPTION' SUNG AT SYMPHONY HALL

Handel and Haydn Society Gives Gounod's Oratorio

Yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, sang Gounod's "Redemption." The soloists were: Florence Hinkle and Edith Whitcomb Steeves, sopranos; Merle Alcock, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Frank L. Whitcher, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Clifton Hood, bass. The Boston Festival Orchestra, John W. Crowley, principal, played, and the organist was Frank H. Luker.

The program stated some facts that carry suggestion. Gounod himself, no great hand at literature, wrote the words of this oratorio as well as the music. He composed it for the Birmingham festival, that of 1882. He dedicated it to Queen Victoria. From these three items of information a person only moderately acute, even if he has heard never a note of this music, can guess shrewdly as to its quality.

Even so this guesser, however, even though he be as good at the game as the proverbial Yankee, will scarcely guess how feebly the composer of "Faust" rose to the occasion when he tried to deal with Calvary. His very grace and charm, his elegance—a slender equipment, to be sure, for the theme in hand, but something, nevertheless—deserted him. Pretty music one might expect of Gounod; yesterday it sounded for the most part only weak.

Refreshingly the chorus fell on the ear where the trumpets sound at the beginning of part one, for at least it has to commend it liveliness. And there is always "Unfold, Ye Portals," good oratorio music of its kind, whose massive sonorousness can always make its appeal; it did yesterday, fetching warm applause.

Though the chorus sang yesterday with its usual fine body of tone, otherwise the performance did little to mend matters—if music has not the quality that makes it go of itself, it must be helped along by close attention to rhythm and by bringing to hearing the most that in the orchestra lies.

The soloist, too—but what could they do? They lent their voices, for the most part good ones, and sang for the most part smoothly and with taste. Mr. Crooks, who had the heaviest share of the work, again delighted by his beautiful voice and excellent technique. The audience was very large.

R. R. G.

Herald April 2

GREAT CHORUS ENDS SEASON

"Redemption" Is Sung by Handel and Haydn Society

For its final concert of the season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer conductor, performed Gounod's "Redemption," with soloists who included Florence Hinkle, soprano; Edith Whitcomb Stevens, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Frank L. Whitcher, tenor; Clifton Wood, bass; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone. The Boston Festival orchestra, John W. Crowley principal, Walter Smith, trumpeter, interpreted the instrumental parts.

The melodiousness of Gounod's score and the abilities of the great chorus which Mr. Mollenhauer conducts with so much authority made the occasion a very pleasurable one. Gounod's music says nothing that is especially new or individualistic today, but the scoring for chorus is very beautiful, and there are effective solos and concerted numbers. The performance of the chorus was characteristic of the high standards Mr. Mollenhauer has long ere this accomplished. The exceptionally strong list of soloists added greatly to the effect of the composition.

These soloists need today little introduction to the public. With the fine intelligence and the admirable vocal art Mmes. Hinkle and Alcock the local concert goers are well acquainted. Mr. Crooks, an exceptionally accomplished singer, and comparatively new here, again distinguished himself by the freshness of his voice and feeling as an interpreter. Mr. Werrenrath is a baritone who excels in whatever musical position he is placed. In parts indispensable to the effect of the score, Mr. Whitcher, tenor; Clifton Wood, bass, and Mrs. Whitcomb Stevens made passages which might have sounded perfunctory interesting and significant. This performance was greeted with much enthusiasm by a big audience and it made a worthy conclusion of the Handel and Haydn's season.

Post april 2

Wasted Pains

The problem of finding material for the concerts of the Handel and Haydn Society seems to grow increasingly difficult. In no way was its recent venture with "The Dream of Gerontius" a conspicuous success, and by this token it might fare no better, if as well, with other modern pieces. Yet of its present repertory much is fast outliving usefulness. Relatively speaking, "The Messiah," "Elijah," "The Creation," Verdi's "Requiem," even Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah" change but little with each passing year. On occasion, they will undoubtedly serve the society well for some time to come. Yet these half-dozen pieces make all too brief a list on which to draw for three concerts a year, and of late attempts to vary them with other less dependable compositions have not been over-fortunate.

Yesterday afternoon it was the turn of Gounod's "Redemption" to be taken from the shelf and brought to carefully prepared performance. Upon it indeed the Society lavished its pains. Among the soloists were singers of such eminence as Merle Alcock, Florence Hinkle and Reinald Werrenrath, as well as the now widely acclaimed tenor, Richard Crooks. Throughout the afternoon these and the other soloists—Edith Steeves and Clifton Wood—were at their best, as were Mr. Mollenhauer, the chorus and the orchestra, not omitting the four trumpeters stationed in the balconies. Yet in the persistent dulness, flatness and empty commonplace of Gounod's score most of their effort came to naught. A very large audience was present—possibly attracted by the prominence of the assisting singers rather than by the piece in hand. This audience listened attentively and, in so far as it might, appreciatively. But there was little show of enthusiasm. For all its blatancy, "Unfold Ye Portals" is an uncommonly effective bit of writing for chorus and orchestra, and with it came yesterday a temporary lifting of the pall of monotonous mediocrity. And here and there through the rest of "The Redemption" are other bright spots—yet they seem all too widely separated. The Prologue discloses the composer of "Faust" in his suavest mood. If the music is here a trifle syrupy, it neither annoys nor offends. But for the musical depiction of the tragedy of Calvary Gounod's pretty talent is hopelessly inadequate. This portion of the poem—which would have been Bach's opportunity—was Gounod's undoing. Until the final chorus, "Part II" plods its weary way along with but few arresting moments, though the short final division of the piece is partially redeemed by the pretty choral measures of "Lovely Appear" and the appended solo for soprano.

Engaged upon so thankless a task, the solo-singers might make little impression. It was possible to note again the rare smoothness and roundness of Mr. Werrenrath's tones, but even he could not give significance to the generally flaccid music that was his to sing. When opportunity came, as in the anguished cry, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" Mr. Werrenrath made the most of it, but such occasions were rare. As in "Gerontius," Mr. Crooks, still in the flush of youthful enthusiasm, the elation of youthful success, sang with superabundant energy, expressiveness and warmth. To him fell the part of the First Narrator, and through his [illegible] zeal he contrived to endow it with a [illegible] of dramatic and [illegible]

Transcript Apr

H & H Society – April 1st

THE REDEMPTION

On Easter Sunday, April 1, Gounod's great oratorio, the "Redemption," will be performed by the Handel and Haydn Society under Emil Mollenhauer, the conductor.

Traveler Mar 10

EASTER REDEMPTION

A brilliant array of soloists will take part in the Easter performance of Gounod's Redemption to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society as their last concert of the season in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 1. The soloists will be Richard Crooks, tenor; Florence Hinkle, soprano; Jeanne Laval, contralto; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Clifton Woods, bass.

Traveler Mar 17

Sunday afternoon, April 1, in Symphony Hall, a concert of the Handel and Haydn Society at which Gounod's familiar oratorio, "The Redemption," will be sung by its chorus and by Mmes. Hinkle, Laval, Messrs. Crooks, Werrenrath and Woods as solo-singers. The usual orchestra will assist and Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct in music he has often made imposing.

Transcript Mar 17

EASTER ORATORIO

The final concert of the season by the Handel and Haydn Society will be a performance of "The Redemption," Gounod's oratorio, in Symphony Hall on Easter Sunday afternoon. Richard Crooks, Florence Hinkle, Jeanne Laval, Reinald Werrenrath and Clifton Woods will be the soloists.

Advertiser Mar 18

The Handel and Haydn Society, Mr. Mollenhauer, conductor, will perform Gounod's "Redemption" in Symphony Hall on Easter Sunday, April 1, at 3:30 P. M. It will be the last concert of the society this season. The solo singers will be Florence Hinkle, Jeanne Laval, Richard Crooks, Reinald Werrenrath and Clifton Woods.

Herald Mar 18

EASTER REDEMPTION

A brilliant array of soloists should make notable the Easter performance of Gounod's Redemption, to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 1. The soloists will be Richard Crooks, Florence Hinkle, Jeanne Laval, Reinald Werrenrath and Clifton Woods.

American Mar 17

HANDEL AND HAYDN

A splendid list of soloists has been engaged for the performance of Gounod's "Redemption," to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall on Easter Sunday. Florence Hinkle will be the soprano, Marion Telva the contralto, Reinald Werrenrath the baritone, and Clifton Woods the bass. The tenor will be Richard Crooks, a young American singer who made a striking impression earlier in the season.

Advertiser Mar 24

EASTER "REDEMPTION"

A splendid list of soloists has been engaged for the Easter performance of Gounod's "Redemption," to be given by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony hall on Easter Sunday, April 1, at 3:30. Florence Hinkle will be the soprano, Marion Telva the contralto, Reinard Werrenrath the baritone, Clifton Woods the bass and Richard Crooks the tenor.

Traveler Mar 24

Sunday afternoon, April 1, in Symphony Hall, a concert of the Handel and Haydn Society at which Gounod's familiar oratorio, "The Redemption," will be sung by its chorus and by Mmes. Hinkle and Laval, Messrs. Crooks, Werrenrath and Woods as solo-singers. The usual orchestra will assist and Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct in music he has often made imposing.

Transcript Mar 24

Easter "Redemption"

A group of soloists of the first eminence should make notable the performance of Gounod's popular oratorio, "The Redemption," by the Handel and Hadyn Society, which is to be given in Symphony Hall at 3:30 on Easter Sunday afternoon, April 1. Florence Hinkle will be the soprano and Marion Telva the contralto. The tenor will be Richard Crooks, the young American singer, who, appearing earlier with the Handel and Hadyn Society, made a striking impression as one of the finest new singers of the present Boston season. Reinald Werrenrath will be the baritone and Clifton Woods the bass singer. The chorus of the Handel and Haydn Society will [illegible] conducted by [illegible].

The final list, or at least the latest list, of soloists for the Handel and Haydn performance of Gounod's "Redemption" next Sunday is Florence Hinkle, soprano; Marion Telva, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Reinald Warrenrath, baritone; and Clifton Woods, bass. Miss Telva is a St Louis girl who has made good with the Metropolitan Opera in the past two seasons. She has never sung here. Mr Crooks made an extraordinary impression at his Boston debut earlier in the season with the Handel and Haydn. Mr Woods has pleased here in recital. Mrs Hinkle and Mr Werrenrath need no introduction. As a whole this is an extraordinarily fine list of soloists. One wishes one would say as much for the oratorio, which is flashy and rather vulgar music on a theme demanding quite other qualities.

Globe Mar 25

EASTER "REDEMPTION"

A group of soloists of the first eminence should make notable the performance of Gounod's oratorio, "The Redemption" by the Handel and Haydn Society, in Symphony hall at 3:30 on Easter Sunday afternoon, April 1. Florence Hinkle will be the soprano, Marion Telva, the contralto; Richard Crooks, the tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, the baritone, and Clifton Woods, the bass. Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct.

Herald Mar 25

EASTER ORATORIO

Gounod's popular oratorio, "The Redemption," will be sung by the Handel and Haydn Society, which is to be given in Symphony Hall Easter Sunday afternoon. Florence Hinkle, Marion Telva, Richard Crooks, Reinald Werrenrath and Clifton Woods will be the soloists.

Advertiser Mar 25

Choral Song

For final choral concert of the present season, tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall, the Handel and Haydn Society will sing its way through Gounod's oratorio "The Redemption, long standard and enjoyable music to its public. The solo-singers are Mmes. Hinkle and Laval; Messrs. Crooks, Werrenrath and Wood. Of them Mme. Hinkle and Mr. Werrenrath are as "standard" as the piece; while Mr. Crooks as he proved six weeks ago in "The Dream of Gerontius," is risen, rather than rising tenor. The usual orchestra will assist and Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct in music he has often made imposing.

Transcript Mar 31

Handel and Haydn Society in Easter Performance of "Redemption"

For the Easter performance of Gounod's "Redemption" by the Handel and Haydn Society, to take place tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30, a truly remarkable list of soloists will appear, including, Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Reinald Werrenrah, baritone, and Clifton Wood, bass. Emil Mollenhauer and the chorus of 400 which comprise the Handel and Haydn Society, together with a large symphony orchestra, will join forces in what promises to be a splendid performance of the oratorio.

Traveler Mar 31

EASTER "REDEMPTION"

For the Easter performance of Gounod's "Redemption" by the Handel and Haydn Society, to take place tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall, an attractive list of soloists will appear, including Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone; and Clifton Wood, bass.

American Mar 31

SYMPHONY HALL, Today at 3:30—The Handel and Haydn Society in Gounod's Oratorio, "The Redemption." Emil Mollenhauer, conductor. Soloists, Florence Hinkle, soprano; Marion Telva, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Clifton Woods, bass.

Globe April 1

'THE REDEMPTION' TODAY

The Easter performance of Gounod's "Redemption" will be the last choral concert of the season by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony hall this afternoon at 3:30. The soloists will be Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Clifton Wood, bass. Mr. Mollenhauer will conduct the great chorus of this society and a symphony orchestra in the performance of this popular oratorio.

Herald April 1

EASTER ORATORIO

An Easter performance of Gounod's "Redemption" will be given by the Handel and Haydn Society at Symphony Hall this afternoon. Florence Hinkle, Merle Alcock, Richard Crooks, Reinald Werrenrath and Clifton Wood will be the soloists. Emil Mollenhauer will conduct. The big chorus and a symphony orchestra will be prominent features.

Advertiser April 1

"REDEMPTION" TODAY

An Easter performance of Gounod's "Redemption" will constitute the last choral concert of the season by the Handel and Haydn Society in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30.

The soloists will be Florence Hinkle, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Richard Cook, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Clifton Wood, bass.

Emil Mollenhauer will conduct.

Post April 1

'REDEMPTION' SUNG AT SYMPHONY HALL

Handel and Haydn Society Gives Gounod's Oratorio

Yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer, conductor, sang Gounod's "Redemption." The soloists were: Florence Hinkle and Edith Whitcomb Steeves, sopranos; Merle Alcock, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Frank L. Whitcher, tenor; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, and Clifton Hood, bass. The Boston Festival Orchestra, John W. Crowley, principal, played, and the organist was Frank H. Luker.

The program stated some facts that carry suggestion. Gounod himself, no great hand at literature, wrote the words of this oratorio as well as the music. He composed it for the Birmingham festival, that of 1882. He dedicated it to Queen Victoria. From these three items of information a person only moderately acute, even if he has heard never a note of this music, can guess shrewdly as to its quality.

Even so this guesser, however, even though he be as good at the game as the proverbial Yankee, will scarcely guess how feebly the composer of "Faust" rose to the occasion when he tried to deal with Calvary. His very grace and charm, his elegance—a slender equipment, to be sure, for the theme in hand, but something, nevertheless—deserted him. Pretty music one might expect of Gounod; yesterday it sounded for the most part only weak.

Refreshingly the chorus fell on the ear where the trumpets sound at the beginning of part one, for at least it has to commend it liveliness. And there is always "Unfold, Ye Portals," good oratorio music of its kind, whose massive sonorousness can always make its appeal; it did yesterday, fetching warm applause.

Though the chorus sang yesterday with its usual fine body of tone, otherwise the performance did little to mend matters—if music has not the quality that makes it go of itself, it must be helped along by close attention to rhythm and by bringing to hearing the most that in the orchestra lies.

The soloist, too—but what could they do? They lent their voices, for the most part good ones, and sang for the most part smoothly and with taste. Mr. Crooks, who had the heaviest share of the work, again delighted by his beautiful voice and excellent technique. The audience was very large. R. R. G.

Herald April 2

GREAT CHORUS ENDS SEASON

"Redemption" Is Sung by Handel and Haydn Society

For its final concert of the season yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, the Handel and Haydn Society, Emil Mollenhauer conductor, performed Gounod's "Redemption," with soloists who included Florence Hinkle, soprano; Edith Whitcomb Stevens, soprano; Merle Alcock, contralto; Richard Crooks, tenor; Frank L. Whitcher, tenor; Clifton Wood, bass; Reinald Werrenrath, baritone. The Boston Festival orchestra, John W. Crowley principal, Walter Smith, trumpeter, interpreted the instrumental parts.

The melodiousness of Gounod's score and the abilities of the great chorus which Mr. Mollenhauer conducts with so much authority made the occasion a very pleasurable one. Gounod's music says nothing that is especially new or individualistic today, but the scoring for chorus is very beautiful, and there are effective solos and concerted numbers. The performance of the chorus was characteristic of the high standards Mr. Mollenhauer has long ere this accomplished. The exceptionally strong list of soloists added greatly to the effect of the composition.

These soloists need today little introduction to the public. With the fine intelligence and the admirable vocal art Mmes. Hinkle and Alcock the local concert goers are well acquainted. Mr. Crooks, an exceptionally accomplished singer, and comparatively new here, again distinguished himself by the freshness of his voice and feeling as an interpreter. Mr. Werrenrath is a baritone who excels in whatever musical position he is placed. In parts indispensable to the effect of the score, Mr. Whitcher, tenor; Clifton Wood, bass, and Mrs. Whitcomb Stevens made passages which might have sounded perfunctory interesting and significant. This performance was greeted with much enthusiasm by a big audience and it made a worthy conclusion of the Handel and Haydn's season.

Post April 2

Wasted Pains

The problem of finding material for the concerts of the Handel and Haydn Society seems to grow increasingly difficult. In no way was its recent venture with "The Dream of Gerontius" a conspicuous success, and by this token it might fare no better, if as well, with other modern pieces. Yet of its present repertory much is fast outliving usefulness. Relatively speaking, "The Messiah," "Elijah," "The Creation," Verdi's "Requiem," even Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah" change but little with each passing year. On occasion, they will undoubtedly serve the society well for some time to come. Yet these half-dozen pieces make all too brief a list on which to draw for three concerts a year, and of late attempts to vary them with other less dependable compositions have not been over-fortunate.

Yesterday afternoon it was the turn of Gounod's "Redemption" to be taken from the shelf and brought to carefully prepared performance. Upon it indeed the Society lavished its pains. Among the soloists were singers of such eminence as Merle Alcock, Florence Hinkle and Reinald Werrenrath, as well as the now widely acclaimed tenor, Richard Crooks. Throughout the afternoon these and the other soloists—Edith Steeves and Clifton Wood—were at their best, as were Mr. Mollenhauer, the chorus and the orchestra, not omitting the four trumpeters stationed in the balconies. Yet in the persistent dulness, flatness and empty commonplace of Gounod's score most of their effort came to naught. A very large audience was present—possibly attracted by the prominence of the assisting singers rather than by the piece in hand. This audience listened attentively and, in so far as it might, appreciatively. But there was little show of enthusiasm. For all its blatancy, "Unfold Ye Portals" is an uncommonly effective bit of writing for chorus and orchestra, and with it came yesterday a temporary lifting of the pall of monotonous mediocrity. And here and there through the rest of "The Redemption" are other bright spots—yet they seem all too widely separated. The Prologue discloses the composer of "Faust" in his suavest mood. If the music is here a trifle syrupy, it neither annoys nor offends. But for the musical depiction of the tragedy of Calvary Gounod's pretty talent is hopelessly inadequate. This portion of the poem—which would have been Bach's opportunity—was Gounod's undoing. Until the final chorus, "Part II" plods its weary way along with but few arresting moments, though the short final division of the piece is partially redeemed by the pretty choral measures of "Lovely Appear" and the appended solo for soprano.

Engaged upon so thankless a task, the solo-singers might make little impression. It was possible to note again the rare smoothness and roundness of Mr. Werrenrath's tones, but even he could not give significance to the generally flaccid music that was his to sing. When opportunity came, as in the anguished cry, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" Mr. Werrenrath made the most of it, but such occasions were rare. As in "Gerontius," Mr. Crooks, still in the flush of youthful enthusiasm, the elation of youthful success, sang with superabundant energy, expressiveness and warmth. To him fell the part of the First Narrator, and through his very zeal he contrived to endow it with a [illegible] of dramatic and emotional force.

Transcript April 2

Gabrilowitsch April 8

GABRILOWITSCH HERE.

Gabrilowitsch, pianist, will give his only Boston concert of the season in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 8.

Advertiser Mar 11

MR. GABRILOWITSCH

Next Sunday afternoon at 3:30 in Symphony hall, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, will present only a Chopin program.

Etude, A major; valse, A minor; valse, A-flat major; sonata, B-flat minor; twelve

---

GABRILOWITSCH IN SYMPHONY CONCERT

Pianist Presents Pleasing Pros Pieces

ssip Gabrilo-is program of Hall: Etude,
minor; Valse,
-flat minor;
Mazurka, B
or; Scherzo,

Mr. Gabrilo-
in Vienna. for the Boes-
with an en-
Mr. Gabriloplayed like a pieces he relude. At nts, fearful glory, shook went about:
old thing?"
uneasy, for mply, so abality, but all that he set ore.
de in public risk, today grown less.
s pieces, by lar risk ob-
as this way:
nown these the greater been playing or more. Is o play them the spontast he not in-routine, or ine, tend today, whatever

, played not does. His clear. His y beautiful, an hour and of all, there exquisitely associates itsch. There
, and some-and always rmth. When it is much lowitsch will his mettle.
ay with en-
R. R. G.

pril 9

Twin Graced and Proved

Ossip Gabrilowitsch

Conductor of the Detroit Orchestra; Pianist of Many a Concert

(From a Photograph of 1923)

Music of Chopin will fill the programme of Mr. Gabrilowitsch's concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 8, viz.: the Sonata of the Funeral March; the twelve Preludes of Opus 28; the Study in E major: the Waltz in A-flat major; the Mazurka in B minor; the Nocturn in D flat major; the Scherzo in B minor—an array of pieces as representative of the composer as taxing upon the pianist.

Transcript Mar 26

SUNDAY afternoon, April 8, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces, all chosen from the treasure-house of Chopin, played by Mr. Gabrilowitsch, conductor indeed of the Detroit Orchestra but still in the prime of his powers as resourceful, adroit, sensitive pianist, minded more to his music than to himself, playing it with equal insight and eloquence. Not often does he return to Boston. His programme traverses the Sonata of the Funeral March; the Twelve Preludes of Opus 28; the Study in E major; the Waltz in A-flat major; the Mazurka in B minor; the Nocturne in D-flat major; the Scherzo in B minor.

Transcript Mar 31

Items of the Day

Music of Chopin will fill the programme of Mr. Gabrilowitsch's concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 8, viz.: the Sonata of the Funeral March; the twelve Preludes of Opus 28; the Study in E major: the Waltz in A-flat major; the Mazurka in B minor; the Nocturn in D flat major; the Scherzo in B minor—an array of pieces as representative of the composer as taxing upon the pianist.

Transcript Mar 26

Gabrilowitsch's Chopin program this afternoon at Symphony Hall should please his many local admirers. Since he became conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, his concert appearances have been too few to satisfy the demand.

This afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, also conductor of the Detroit Symphony orchestra, will give his only recital of the season in Boston. The program will be devoted to the music of Chopin.

Etude, E major.
Valse, A minor.
Valse, A flat minor.
Sonata, B flat minor.
Twelve Preludes, op. 28.
Mazurka, B minor.
Nocturne, D flat major.
Scherzo, op. 20.

Herald April 8

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist. Chopin program: Etude in E major, Valse in A minor, Valse in A-flat major, Sonata in B-flat minor, Twelve Preludes, op. 28, Mazurka in B minor, Nocturne in D-flat major, and Scherzo, op. 20, in B minor, Chopin.

Globe April 8

GABRILOWITSCH HERE

This afternoon in Symphony Hall Ossip Gabrilowitsch will give his only recital of the season in Boston. The famous Russian pianist offers the following Chopin program: Etude, E major; valse, A minor; valse, A flat major; sonata, B flat minor; twelve preludes, op. 28; Mazurka, B minor; nocturne, D flat major; Scherzo, op. 20.

Advertiser April 8

GABRILOWITSCH TODAY

This afternoon in Symphony Hall, at 3:30, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the eminent pianist, who is likewise conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will give his only recital of the season in Boston. This great Russian virtuoso will devote his programme to the music of Chopin in the interpretation of which he is considered a past master.

Post April 8

USES THUSIASM

ed a Chopin
oon at Sym-t roused an usual demon-
After his last eir feet and e floor, clap-

he became Symphony Or-
as found time
s. His many Boston, es-rical recitals, ollowing here
the qualities isits have be-

and Wagner, wide an emo-
many pieces
ot readily tire

of which most people that a recital composed wholly of his works does not suffer from monotony or dullness, unless through the performer's fault.

Yesterday's program was skillfully chosen. It included much of what Huneker called "The Greater Chopin," and few of the pretty salon pieces written to please Parisian drawing rooms. The E major etude, opus 10, No. 3, with which it began is one of the loveliest melodies ever composed. The sonata with the Funeral March, op 35 in B flat minor, though lacking the sustained grandeur of Beethoven is deeply emotional.

It was a pleasure to find a pianist choosing one of the other scherzos, that in B minor, instead of the overplayed one in C sharp minor. The twelve preludes from opus 28 are delightful little mood pictures. Fortunately the pianist did not confuse program making with cataloguing and inflict the whole set upon his hearers.

Mr Gabrilowitsch does not put meaningless sound and fury into his playing. He secures an unusually lovely quality of tone, and makes the piano sing lovingly, perhaps a bit too languidly, the chosen melodies.

He can be vigorous upon occasion, but is never so out of season. His Chopin playing is in many ways more like the descriptions left us by those who heard the composer perform his works than are the versions of the "Thunder and Lightning" school of pianists.

Globe April 9

MASTER OF PIANO PLAYS

Gabrilowitsch Delights With His Rare Artistry

BY OLIN DOWNES

When such an artist as Ossip Gabrilowitsch, who played yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, sits down to discourse music, it is the grateful privilege of a newspaper writer to sit back, enjoy himself and absorb and remember, for his own future benefit, all he can receive from the occasion. Sanity, nobility and poetry are wonderfully combined in this pianist, who seems to stand higher and higher as the years pass in his art.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch made doubly impressive the enduring greatness of Chopin. Only one other composer stands a programme devoted wholly to his music, and that is Bach. Mr. Gabrilowitsch chose from Chopin the E major etude, two waltzes in A minor and A flat major; the B flat minor sonata; 12 of the Preludes; the B minor mazurka, the Nocturne in D flat and the B minor scherzo, which made up his programme.

He played these compositions with a freshness, simplicity and poetic feeling incredible from so active a musician, so long acquainted with piano literature. The singing tone, the refinement of conception, the fire and power, so perfectly controlled, and the idealism which shines through everything the man does, make any recital he gives stand out in the memory. There are a number of very great pianists before the public today. There are none we more admire and receive more inspiration from than Mr. Gabrilowitsch.

Post April 9

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

CHOPIN AND MR. GABRILOWITSCH JOINED

Afternoon of Pleasure, Poise and Perfections — The Gales of Mr. Nyiregyhazi and the Calms of Mr. Thomas—Mr. Hofmann Remembers Schumann's Daughters and Twice Rediscovers Their Father

AS American practice goes, only Wagner of composers for orchestra may hold an audience through a whole concert unsated and unwearied. As practice in both Europe and America also runs, only Beethoven and Chopin of composers for the piano may do likewise: while of the two, outside routined and "serious" Germany, the Pole—alike for player and listeners—is the safer risk. Even a whole afternoon, as Mr. Gabrilowitsch proved yesterday at Symphony Hall, need not exhaust the range of form that Chopin affords. No Ballad stood on the pianist's list; no Polonaise, no Impromptu, no miscellaneous piece outside the familiar Chopinesque categories. A Study; two Waltzes; the Sonata of the Funeral March; the twelve Preludes of Opus 28; a Mazurka; a Nocturne; the Scherzo in B minor stocked a programme as well chosen as, in order, it was well martialled. Not once, except in the brief Waltzes, did it repeat a form; while as various as the numbers was the revelation, old and familiar, yet in such assembly ever new, of Chopin's mastery of musical structure. As poet in tones, he is unexhaustible alike to hearers and commentators; as poet and diviner of the piano he is to both perpetually fecund. Yet Chopin, master of every form, except the Concerto, in which he wrote, is easy for both to forget.

Such a programme as that of yesterday timely arrays and assorts this prowess The most orthodox—and they abounded in Chopin's day—might not question the formal progress, the intrinsic and essential dance-quality, of Waltzes or Mazurka; yet within those prescriptions the composer wrought his poetry of tones. The Study was unquestionably a technical exercise upon the piano; yet also an exercise in the paths of imagination. Not one of the Preludes lacked unity of matter, form and impression; yet in sum they were as diverse as an improviser's string of tonal beads. The cutter of a cameo is not at more pains with outlines and surfaces than was Chopin in the Nocturne; yet within dwelt a poetry of fancy and mood. The Scherzo followed and respected an established form; yet high, deep and diversely, Chopin amplified the expressive content within. Orthodoxy might indeed find the Sonata "free"; but in that direction it goes no whit further than at will did all the romantical composers of the first half of the ninteenth century. Like the others, Chopin loosed bonds only to gain wider scope; while within that range a coördinating and unifying mind guides every flight of imagination. Such mingling of formal freedom and formal continence is preservative in the arts against every tooth of time and fashion; antidote as well to satiety and boredom. Workmanship endures, and workmanship as changeful as it is complete, makes a concert of Chopin both pos- ility and plea

With Wagner and the orchestra when the concert stretches from "The Flying Dutchman" and "Lohengrin" to "The Ring" and "Parsifal," the listener hears inexhaustible diversity of matter at high pitch of defining and imparting voice. Even so with Chopin and the piano; while equally familiarity multiplies rather than divides pleasure. Put aside those quidnuncs, who must inquire exactly how each eminent pianist plays the Sonata of the Funeral March. Hear it only as music for the music's sake. For the fiftieth time, the first gleam of the intermediary melody across the Scherzo thrills; the massed chords of the Funeral March—flame of lament against shadows of sorrow—lose not a jot of power and progress; while at height of imaginative unity the large, firm sweep of the beginning becomes the tremulous rustle of the end. Every practised listener foresees the glamored rhythm of Waltz or Mazurka; the harmonic veils wreathing like tonal mists around the imaginary dancers—forsees only to enjoy. Once more from a Nocturne is to flow that crystalline, bell-like melody, softened to the musings of melancholy or alight with its own ardors which is of Chopin and no other. It returns and listening delight is as new as it is old. A Scherzo—and Chopin plies the whips that lash imagination to power.

A succession of Preludes and a succession of new discoveries. Endless is the variety, endless the felicities. The ear hears the music, as the hand turns precious stones. With each measure of the one as with each motion of the other come new lustres. And whatever the piece, it begins, ascends, deepens, cumulates, and passes with a rare sensation of a completeness near often to perfection. Beethoven strives; Schubert lets loose his flood of song; Schumann blows hither and thither over romantic heights and depths; Wagner overtaxes following mortals. In contrast Chopin—at a golden mean of intent and fulfilment, encompassing every ear. Two hours, through a whole concert, is short life to such pleasure.

Yet Chopin must be played and yesterday Mr. Gabrilowitsch was the pianist seemingly at poise with himself, music, instrument, audience. Through the Sonata and the Scherzo he gave voice certainly to an "heroic" Chopin; yet the means were of the piano as itself and not as futile orchestra. As he played them, the Nocturne, the Waltzes, the Mazurka, sounded the Chopin of musing moods and mazy fancies; yet never a Chopin sentimentalized. From Prelude to Prelude he proceeded; as endless as Chopin's was the variety of matter and mood, speech and manner—diversity and felicity joined—yet hardly once did the ear suspect the pianist of groping for inner voices, of manipulating pace or accent for the sake of idiosyncrasy. Mr. Gabrilowitsch perceived, divined, played, disclosed, and therewith was content.

Yet from himself as well as from the composer the pianist gained, for example, his splendors of massed tone in the Funeral March, and a subduing of the preceding Scherzo rather than an over-emphasis of the interrupting and contrasting melody. Mirror he was to Chopin, but mirror held as clear as it was manifold by his own penetration and poise. His touch, his tone, his disposition of melody, harmony and ornament; his sense of design, detail, progress and climax; the measure that is the wisdom of mood and emotion in the arts were the light and the shadow upon these reflections. There are those who would have Chopin either in scented sentimental sighs or in frenzied flights heroical. For them Mr. Gabrilowitsch plays not. His is Chopin in spirit and truth, played by a pianist in whom this seeming detachment is divination; in whom this reticence of means flowers in a luminous realization. A concert finer-tempered Boston has not known the season through. H. T. P.

Transcript April 9

[139]

Gabrilowitsch April 8

GABRILOWITSCH HERE.

Gabrilowitsch, pianist, will give his only Boston concert of the season in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 8.

Advertiser Mar 11

Gabrilowitsch, Russian pianist and conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will give his only Boston concert of the season in Symphony Hall on Sunday, April 8th.

American Mar 10

Sunday afternoon, April 8, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces, for the most part familiar and exacting classics, played by Mr. Gabrilowitsch, conductor indeed of the Detroit Orchestra but still in the prime of his powers as resourceful, adroit, sensitive pianist, minded more to his music than to himself, playing it with equal insight and eloquence. Not often does he return to Boston. Trans 3/17

Transcript Mar 17

GABRILOWITSCH HERE

Ossip Gabriloswitsch, a piano star long absent from Boston, will give a concert at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 8.

Advertiser Mar 18

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the great Russian pianist and conductor, will play on Sunday afternoon, April 8, in Symphony Hall. It was a surprise to many when this virtuoso, who had devoted his career to the pianoforte, took a similar rank among conductors some seasons ago. Post 3/18

Post Mar 18

GABRILOWITSCH

An all-Chopin program will be presented by Ossip Gabrilowitsch at his Boston recital of the season, to be given in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 8, at 3:30.

Traveler Mar 24

Sunday afternoon, April 8, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces, all chosen from the treasure-house of Chopin, played by Mr. Gabrilowitsch, conductor indeed of the Detroit Orchestra but still in the prime of his powers as resourceful, adroit, sensitive pianist, minded more to his music than to himself, playing it with equal insight and eloquence. Not often does he return to Boston.

Transcript Mar 24

GABRILOWITSCH HERE

An all-Chopin program will be presented by Ossip Gabrilowitsch piano star, at his only Boston concert of the season, in Symphony Hall, Sunday afternoon, April 8.

Advertiser Mar 25

Items of the Day

Music of Chopin will fill the programme of Mr. Gabrilowitsch's concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 8, viz.: the Sonata of the Funeral March; the twelve Preludes of Opus 28; the Study in E major: the Waltz in A-flat major; the Mazurka in B minor; the Nocturn in D flat major; the Scherzo in B minor—an array of pieces as representative of the composer as taxing upon the pianist. Trans 3-26

Transcript Mar 26

SUNDAY afternoon, April 8, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces, all chosen from the treasure-house of Chopin, played by Mr. Gabrilowitsch, conductor indeed of the Detroit Orchestra but still in the prime of his powers as resourceful, adroit, sensitive pianist, minded more to his music than to himself, playing it with equal insight and eloquence. Not often does he return to Boston. His programme traverses the Sonata of the Funeral March; the Twelve Preludes of Opus 28; the Study in E major; the Waltz in A-flat major; the Mazurka in B minor; the Nocturne in D-flat major; the Scherzo in B minor. Trans 3/31

Transcript Mar 31

Items of the Day

Trans 3/26

Music of Chopin will fill the programme of Mr. Gabrilowitsch's concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 8, viz.: the Sonata of the Funeral March; the twelve Preludes of Opus 28; the Study in E major: the Waltz in A-flat major; the Mazurka in B minor; the Nocturn in D flat major; the Scherzo in B minor—an array of pieces as representative of the composer as taxing upon the pianist.

Transcript Mar 26

Gabrilowitsch's Chopin program this afternoon in Symphony Hall should [illegible] his many local admirers. Since he became conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, his concert appearances have been too few to satisfy [illegible] demand.

MR. GABRILOWITSCH

Next Sunday afternoon at 3:30 in Symphony hall, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, will present only a Chopin program.

Etude, A major; valse, A minor; valse, A-flat major; sonata, B-flat minor; twelve preludes; mazurka, B minor; nocturne, D-flat major; scherzo, op. 20.

This will be his only appearance in Boston this season.

Herald April 1

Sunday, April 8, at 3:30, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist; Chopin program.

Globe April 1

GABRILOWITCH HERE

Next Sunday afternoon at Symphony Hall, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, famous Russian pianist, will devote his only Boston appearance this season to a Chopin program, including the Etude in E major, the waltzes in A minor and A flat major, the B-flat minor sonata, twelve preludes, Mazurka in B minor, nocturne, D flat major and Scherzo, Op 20.

Advertiser April 1

CHOPIN PROGRAM

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the great Russian pianist, will make his only appearance of the season in Boston at Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. This virtuoso, who is also known as the conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will devote his program to Chopin, including Etude, Valses, Sonata, P flat minor, Twelve Preludes, Mazurka, Nocturne and Scherzo.

Herald April 7

Gabrilowitsch and Chopin

Tomorrow afternoon, in Symphony Hall, a concert of piano-pieces, all chosen from the treasure-house of Chopin, will bring back to Boston Mr. Gabrilowitsch, conductor indeed of the Detroit Orchestra but still in the prime of his powers as resourceful, adroit, sensitive pianist, minded more to his music than to himself, playing it with equal insight and eloquence. Not often does he return to Boston. The programme traverses the Sonata of the Funeral March; the Twelve Preludes of Opus 28; the Study in E major; the Waltz in A-flat major; the Mazurka in B minor; the Nocturne in D-flat major; the Scherzo in B minor. Trans 4/7

Transcript April 7

GABRILOWITSCH

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall, at 3:30, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the great Russian pianist, will make his only appearance of the season in Boston. This splendid virtuoso, who is also known as the conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will devote his program to the music of Chopin, including Etude, Valses, Sonata, B flat minor, Twelve Preludes, Mazurka, Nocturne and Scherzo.

Traveler April 7

GABRILOWITSCH

This afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, also conductor of the Detroit Symphony orchestra, will give his only recital of the season in Boston. The program will be devoted to the music of Chopin.

Etude, E major.
Valse, A minor.
Valse, A flat minor.
Sonata, B flat minor.
Twelve Preludes, op. 28.
Mazurka, B minor.
Nocturne, D flat major.
Scherzo, op. 20.

Herald April 8

SYMPHONY HALL—Today at 3:30, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist. Chopin program: Etude in E major, Valse in A minor, Valse in A-flat major, Sonata in B-flat minor, Twelve Preludes, op. 28, Mazurka in B minor, Nocturne in D-flat major, and Scherzo, op. 20, in B minor, Chopin.

Globe April 8

GABRILOWITSCH HERE

This afternoon in Symphony Hall Ossip Gabrilowitsch will give his only recital of the season in Boston. The famous Russian pianist offers the following Chopin program: Etude, E major; valse, A minor; valse, A flat major; sonata, B flat minor; twelve preludes, op. 28; Mazurka, B minor; nocturne, D flat major; Scherzo, op. 20.

Advertiser April 8

GABRILOWITSCH TODAY

This afternoon in Symphony Hall, at 3:30, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the eminent pianist, who is likewise conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, will give his only recital of the season in Boston. This great Russian virtuoso will devote his programme to the music of Chopin in the interpretation of which he is considered a past master.

Post April 8

GABRILOWITSCH IN SYMPHONY CONCERT

Pianist Presents Pleasing Program of Chopin's Pieces

Yesterday afternoon Ossip Gabrilowitsch, pianist, played this program of piano music in Symphony Hall: Etude, E major, Op. 10; Valse, A minor; Valse, A-flat major; Sonata, B-flat minor; Twelve Preludes, Op. 28; Mazurka, B minor; Nocturne, D-flat major; Scherzo, Op. 20.

In the winter of 1895-6 Mr. Gabrilowitsch gave his first recital in Vienna. It was a stirring occasion, for the Boesendorfer Saal was packed with an entusiastic throng, and Mr. Gabrilowitsch, then very young, played like a god. Among his encore pieces he played the Chopin D flat prelude. At the first bar his fellow-students, fearful that he might diminish his glory, shook their heads. Whispers went about: "Why does he play that old thing?" They need not have been uneasy, for he played the music so simply, so absolutely without sentimentality, but all with such enchanting tone, that he set the people to teasing for more.

But if to play that prelude in public 25 years ago was to take a risk, today the risk can scarcely have grown less. With the most of Chopin's pieces, by the same argument, a similar risk obtains, and the argument runs this way: Mr. Gabrilowitsch has known these Chopin pieces, at all events the greater part of them, and has been playing them in public, for 25 years or more. Is it possible for him now to play them with the absorbing interest, the spontaneity, of 20 years ago? Must he not inevitably either drop into routine, or else, in dread of that routine, tend toward extravagance?

Mr. Gabrilowitsch yesterday, whatever it was that hampered him, played not so greatly as he usually does. His technique was not always clear. His tone, though often very beautiful, lacked variety. For nearly an hour and a half, after the first piece of all, there came scarcely one of those exquisitely turned phrases which one associates with the name of Gabrilowitsch. There was dryness in his playing, and sometimes over-sentimentality, and always lack of communicating warmth. When next he appears in Boston it is much to be hoped that Mr. Gabrilowitsch will play a program worthy of his mettle. He was applauded yesterday with enthusiasm.

R. R. G.

Herald April 9

GABRILOWITSCH ROUSES GREAT ENTHUSIASM

Ossip Gabrilowitsch played a Chopin program yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall in a way that roused an audience of fair size to unusual demonstrations of enthusiasm. After his last number people stamped their feet and pounded umbrellas on the floor, clapping noisily.

Mr Gabrilowitsch, since he became conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra three years ago, has found time for but few piano recitals. His many previous appearances in Boston, especially a series of historical recitals, won him a personal following here which has not forgotten the qualities of his playing since his visits have become infrequent.

Chopin, like Beethoven and Wagner, covered in his music so wide an emotional range, and wrote so many pieces of which most people do not readily tire that a recital composed wholly of his works does not suffer from monotony or dullness, unless through the performer's fault.

Yesterday's program was skillfully chosen. It included much of what Huneker called "The Greater Chopin," and few of the pretty salon pieces written to please Parisian drawing rooms. The E major etude, opus 10, No. 3, with which it began is one of the loveliest melodies ever composed. The sonata with the Funeral March, op 35 in B flat minor, though lacking the sustained grandeur of Beethoven is deeply emotional.

It was a pleasure to find a pianist choosing one of the other scherzos, that in B minor, instead of the overplayed one in C sharp minor. The twelve preludes from opus 28 are delightful little mood pictures. Fortunately the pianist did not confuse program making with cataloguing and inflict the whole set upon his hearers.

Mr Gabrilowitsch does not put meaningless sound and fury into his playing. He secures an unusually lovely quality of tone, and makes the piano sing lovingly, perhaps a bit too languidly, the chosen melodies.

He can be vigorous upon occasion, but is never so out of season. His Chopin playing is in many ways more like the descriptions left us by those who heard the composer perform his works than are the versions of the "Thunder and Lightning" school of pianists. Globe 4/9

Globe April 9

MASTER OF PIANO PLAYS

Gabrilowitsch Delights With His Rare Artistry

BY OLIN DOWNES

When such an artist as Ossip Gabrilowitsch, who played yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, sits down to discourse music, it is the grateful privilege of a newspaper writer to sit back, enjoy himself and absorb and remember, for his own future benefit, all he can receive from the occasion. Sanity, nobility and poetry are wonderfully combined in this pianist, who seems to stand higher and higher as the years pass in his art.

Mr. Gabrilowitsch made doubly impressive the enduring greatness of Chopin. Only one other composer stands a programme devoted wholly to his music, and that is Bach. Mr. Gabrilowitsch chose from Chopin the E major etude, two waltzes in A minor and A flat major; the B flat minor sonata; 12 of the Preludes; the B minor mazurka, the Nocturne in D flat and the B minor scherzo, which made up his programme.

He played these compositions with a freshness, simplicity and poetic feeling incredible from so active a musician, so long acquainted with piano literature. The singing tone, the refinement of conception, the fire and power, so perfectly controlled, and the idealism which shines through everything the man does, make any recital he gives stand out in the memory. There are a number of very great pianists before the public today. There are none we more admire and receive more inspiration from than Mr. Gabrilowitsch.

Post April 9

CONCERT-CHRONICLE

CHOPIN AND MR. GABRILOWITSCH JOINED

Trans 4/9

Afternoon of Pleasure, Poise and Perfections — The Gales of Mr. Nyiregyhazi and the Calms of Mr. Thomas—Mr. Hofmann Remembers Schumann's Daughters and Twice Rediscovers Their Father

AS American practice goes, only Wagner of composers for orchestra may hold an audience through a whole concert unsated and unwearied. As practice in both Europe and America also runs, only Beethoven and Chopin of composers for the piano may do likewise; while of the two, outside routined and "serious" Germany, the Pole—alike for player and listeners—is the safer risk. Even a whole afternoon, as Mr. Gabrilowitsch proved yesterday at Symphony Hall, need not exhaust the range of form that Chopin affords. No Ballad stood on the pianist's list; no Polonaise, no Impromptu, no miscellaneous piece outside the familiar Chopinesque categories. A Study; two Waltzes; the Sonata of the Funeral March; the twelve Preludes of Opus 28; a Mazurka; a Nocturne; the Scherzo in B minor stocked a programme as well chosen as, in order, it was well martialled. Not once, except in the brief Waltzes, did it repeat a form; while as various as the numbers was the revelation, old and familiar, yet in such assembly ever new, of Chopin's mastery of musical structure. As poet in tones, he is unexhaustible alike to hearers and commentators; as poet and diviner of the piano he is to both perpetually fecund. Yet Chopin, master of every form, except the Concerto, in which he wrote, is easy for both to forget.

Such a programme as that of yesterday timely arrays and assorts this prowess. The most orthodox—and they abounded in Chopin's day—might not question the formal progress, the intrinsic and essential dance-quality, of Waltzes or Mazurka; yet within those prescriptions the composer wrought his poetry of tones. The Study was unquestionably a technical exercise upon the piano; yet also an exercise in the paths of imagination. Not one of the Preludes lacked unity of matter, form and impression; yet in sum they were as diverse as an improviser's string of tonal beads. The cutter of a cameo is not at more pains with outlines and surfaces than was Chopin in the Nocturne; yet within dwelt a poetry of fancy and mood. The Scherzo followed and respected an established form; yet high, deep and diversely, Chopin amplified the expressive content within. Orthodoxy might indeed find the Sonata "free"; but in that direction it goes no whit further than at will did all the romantical composers of the first half of the ninteenth century. Like the others, Chopin loosed bonds only to gain wider scope; while within that range a coördinating and unifying mind guides every flight of imagination. Such mingling of formal freedom and formal continence is preservative in the arts against every tooth of time and fashion; antidote as well to satiety and boredom. Workmanship endures, and workmanship as changeful as it is complete, makes a concert of Chopin both pos- [illegible]

With Wagner and the orchestra when the concert stretches from "The Flying Dutchman" and "Lohengrin" to "The Ring" and "Parsifal," the listener hears inexhaustible diversity of matter at high pitch of defining and imparting voice. Even so with Chopin and the piano; while equally familiarity multiplies rather than divides pleasure. Put aside those quidnuncs, who must inquire exactly how each eminent pianist plays the Sonata of the Funeral March. Hear it only as music for the music's sake. For the fiftieth time, the first gleam of the intermediary melody across the Scherzo thrills; the massed chords of the Funeral March—flame of lament against shadows of sorrow—lose not a jot of power and progress; while at height of imaginative unity the large, firm sweep of the beginning becomes the tremulous rustle of the end. Every practised listener foresees the glamored rhythm of Waltz or Mazurka; the harmonic veils wreathing like tonal mists around the imaginary dancers—forsees only to enjoy. Once more from a Nocturne is to flow that crystalline, bell-like melody, softened to the musings of melancholy or alight with its own ardors which is of Chopin and no other. It returns and listening delight is as new as it is old. A Scherzo—and Chopin plies the whips that lash imagination to power.

A succession of Preludes and a succession of new discoveries. Endless is the variety, endless the felicities. The ear hears the music, as the hand turns precious stones. With each measure of the one as with each motion of the other come new lustres. And whatever the piece, it begins, ascends, deepens, cumulates, and passes with a rare sensation of a completeness near often to perfection. Beethoven strives; Schubert lets loose his flood of song; Schumann blows hither and thither over romantic heights and depths; Wagner overtaxes following mortals. In contrast Chopin—at a golden mean of intent and fulfilment encompassing every ear. Two hours, through a whole concert, is short life to such pleasure.

Yet Chopin must be played and yesterday Mr. Gabrilowitsch was the pianist, seemingly at poise with himself, [illegible] metn, audience. Through the Sonata and the Scherzo he gave voice certainly to an "heroic" Chopin; yet the means were of the piano as itself and not as futile orchestra. As he played them, the Nocturne, the Waltzes, the Mazurka, sounded the Chopin of musing moods and mazy fancies; yet never a Chopin sentimentalized. From Prelude to Prelude he proceeded; as endless as Chopin's was the variety of matter and mood, speech and manner—diversity and felicity joined—yet hardly once did the ear suspect the pianist of groping for inner voices, of manipulating pace or accent for the sake of idiosyncrasy. Mr. Gabrilowitsch perceived, divined, played, disclosed, and therewith was content.

Yet from himself as well as from the composer the pianist gained, for example, his splendors of massed tone in the Funeral March, and a subduing of the preceding Scherzo rather than an over-emphasis of the interrupting and contrasting melody. Mirror he was to Chopin, but mirror held as clear as it was manifold by his own penetration and poise. His touch, his tone, his disposition of melody, harmony and ornament; his sense of design, detail, progress and climax; the measure that is the wisdom of mood and emotion in the arts were the light and the shadow upon these reflections. There are those who would have Chopin either in scented sentimental sighs or in frenzied flights heroical. For them Mr. Gabrilowitsch plays not. His is Chopin in spirit and truth, played by pianist in whom this seeming detachment is divination; in whom this reticence of means flowers in a luminous realization. A concert finer-tempered Boston has not known the season through.

H. T. P.

Transcript April 9

Chaliapin April 15, 1922

Sunday afternoon, April 15, in Symphony Hall, a second and final concert for the season, by Fedor Shalyapin, the magnificent Russian, unexcelled among the singers of our time in the range and quality of his characterizing and dramatizing power, in command of his audience, in mastery of the larger arts of song. His prestige heralds him. Memories of his visits to Boston whet a waiting public.

Transcript Mar 24

CHALIAPIN

The farewell concert of the season by Chaliapin, the great Russian bass singer, will be given in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 15, at 3:30. This supreme figure of the present concert stage has just returned from an extensive tour of the western United States to make his last appearances of the season with the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York.

Traveler Mar 31

CHALIAPIN CONCERT

Chaliapin, the great Russian dramatic singer, will appear in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 15.

Advertiser April 1

Feodor Chaliapin

Having returned from his tour of the Western United States, Chaliapin, the Russian bass-baritone, has arranged to give an additional concert in Boston. His appearance will take place in Symphony Hall, Sunday afternoon, April 15, at 3:30.

Post April 1

SUNDAY afternoon, April 15, in Symphony Hall, a second and final concert for the season, by Fedor Shalyápin, the magnificent Russian, unexcelled among the singers of our time in the range and quality of his characterizing and dramatizing power, in command of his audience, in mastery of the larger arts of song. His prestige heralds him. Memories of his visits to Boston whet a waiting public.

Transcript April 7

Mr. Chaliapin will give a farewell recital in Symphony hall, next Sunday afternoon.

Herald April 8

Chaliapin's recital next Sunday, the last this season in Boston, is likely to provide thrills, as usual. If the plans of his manager, Mr Hurok, as rumored from Chicago recently, come true, Boston may next season see him in opera with a Russian company, to which Pavlowa and her ballet are to be joined.

Globe April 8

CHALIAPIN CONCERT

Next Sunday afternoon, in Symphony Hall, Feodor Chaliapin, the famous Russian opera singer, will give his farewell concert of the season here.

Advertiser April 8

Chaliapin

Next Sunday, April 15, at 3:30, in Symphony Hall, Feodor Chaliapin, the Russian singer, will give his farewell concert of the season here.

Post April 8

Shalyapin Takes Leave

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon for a second and final concert in Boston this season comes Fedor Shalyapin, the magnificent Russian, unexcelled among the singers of our time in the range and quality of his characterizing and dramatizing power, in command of his audience, in mastery of the larger arts of song. His prestige heralds him. Memories of his visits to Boston whet a waiting public. As usual he will choose his numbers—all sung in Russian—as the concert progresses, announces each so that hearers may follow it in the distributed book of translations.

Transcript April 14

Chaliapin, Famous Russian Bass, in Farewell Concert Tomorrow

Trav 4/14

Chaliapin's farewell concert of the season in Boston will take place in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon at 3:30. The great singer has not announced any program, according to his usual custom. There will be distributed free among the audience a booklet with complete texts in English with each one numbered so that those not familiar with the Russian language may the more readily follow.

Traveler April 14

SYMPHONY HALL. Today at 3:30 Feodor Chaliapin, bass. Mr Chaliapin, as usual, will announce his numbers from the stage. Books of words will be provided free of charge.

Globe April 15

CHALIAPIN

Her 4/15

This afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30 Feodor Chaliapin will give his second and last concert of the Boston season. As usual, he is not announcing any program in advance. He will announce each song he is to sing by number from the stage. Pamphlets with complete texts in English will be distributed free so that those who do not know Russian may follow the songs more readily.

Herald April 15

CHALIAPIN'S CONCERT

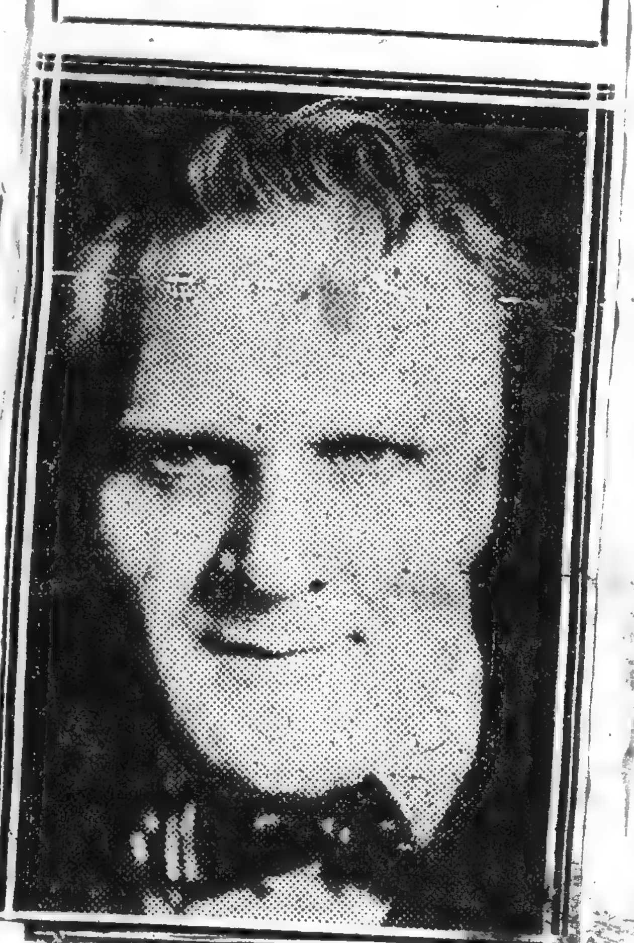
Feodor Chaliapin

Amer 4/14

Chaliapin's farewell concert of the season in Boston will take place in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. The singer has not announced any program. There will be distributed free among the audience a booklet with complete texts in English for those not familiar with the Russian language.

American April 14

FEODOR CHALIAPIN, Russian song star, at Symphony Hall this afternoon.



Chaliapin Sings at Farewell Today

Adv 4/15

THIS afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30 Feodor Chaliapin will give his second and last concert of the Boston season.

As usual, the great Russian singer is not announcing any program in advance, but will announce each song he is to sing by number from the stage. Booklets with complete texts in English will be distributed free so that those who do not know Russian may follow his songs.

Advertiser April 15

CHALIAPIN PLEASES ANOTHER SYMPHONY HALL CROWD

Feodor Chaliapin pleased another large audience at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon by his dramatic interpretations of two groups of songs. He gave only a dozen numbers, including encores, announcing them from the stage for the audience to look up in the little booklets that contain the texts of his complete concert repertory. His audiences would probably prefer to know in advance of buying tickets what Chaliapin is going to sing to them, but he prefers to follow the impulse of the moment.

He sang "Night," Tschaikowsky; an aria from the opera "Aleko," Rachmaninoff; "The Three Roads," Koeneman; "The Two Grenadiers," Schumann; "The Government Clerk," Dargomizshky; "Sapphische Ode," Brahms; Leporello's "Catalogue" aria from "Don Giovanni," Mozart; a Russian "Convict Song"; the familiar "Volga Boatmen's Song"; "When the King Went Forth to War," Koeneman; "The Song of the Flea," Musorgsky, and "The Drunken Miller," Dargomizshky.

Between times Nicolas Lavienne, 'cellist, and Max Rabinowitsch, pianist, also accompanist, were heard in solos.

Most of Chaliapin's numbers yesterday he has sung here before more than once. His extraordinary dramatic gift is even more in evidence in ironic and farcical pieces than in serious numbers. His voice yesterday was not in its best condition, owing to a cold.

"Bel canto" is seemingly a matter of indifference to all Russians, though there are many felicities in detail about Chaliapin's singing. His fame has been won in opera, in which Boston has not yet had a chance to hear him despite his appearances this season elsewhere with both the Chicago and Russian Opera Companies, and of course the Metropolitan.

Globe April 16

CHALIAPIN PLEASES LARGE AUDIENCE

Amazes by Volume and Splendor of His Voice

Her 4/16

Yesterday afternoon Feodor Chaliapin gave a second recital before a wildly enthusiastic audience that all but filled Symphony hall. As on the occasion before, Max Rabinowitch contributed some brilliantly played piano solos as well as very careful accompaniments, and Nicholas Levienne again played attractively some 'cello solo pieces which pleased more than a little. Mr. Chaliapin sang, in Italian, Leporello's "Catalogue," air from "Don Giovanni," and, in Russian, Tchaikowsky's "Night," a scena from Rachmaninoff's "Aleko"; "The Three Roads," by Kennemann; Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers"; "The Government Clerk," by Dargomizhsky; Brahms's "Sapphic Ode," a Russian convict song arranged by Karatigin; the Volga boat song, "When the King Went Forth to War," by Koenemann, and other songs as well.

Mr. Chaliapin amazed, as he amazed at his concert two months or so ago, by the great volume and the splendor of his voice, and also by the superb development of his technique. When he chooses really to sing, as he sang, for instance, the Koenemann, "When the King Went Forth to War," he can move and delight all types of listeners. When he prefers, however, to declaim with scarcely a hint of vocal sound, with lengthy pauses which play sad havoc with rhythm,, listeners who have no Russian must find themselves at a loss. Sometimes, though, and fortunately, Mr. Chaliapin calls to his aid his skill in impersonation; then his hearers, whether they understand Russian or not, at least know what he is about. Yesterday he suggested vividly the dying soldier of "The Two Grenadiers," a drunken humble government clerk who scorned the general's daughter, and that malicious man, Leporello, valuable servant to Don Giovanni.

In this last performance Mozart, to be sure, was pretty well lost sight of. Schumann, too, received scarcely respectful treatment, and Brahms would have found the rhythm and the line of his Sapphic Ode sorely twisted. But such are Mr. Chaliapin's ways, with which it is vain to quarrel. Persons for whom the power of his declamation and dramatic suggestion do not compensate for frequent distortion of rhythm and the ruin of many a musical phrase, are not compelled by law to hear Mr. Chaliapin sing.

Herald April 16

CHALIAPIN RECITAL

Chaliapin gave his second concert of the season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall before an audience which packed the house. He was in his usual good spirits and under his influence the audience applauded and the programme stretched itself out almost to nightfall. The singer was assisted by Max Rabinowitch, pianist, who accompanied him and in addition played a solo group, doing both things very well, and by Nicholas Levienne, who played Glazunov's "Chant du Menestral," a dull piece, a Berceuse by Cui and "Zardos" by Fischer.

Chaliapin has such a dominating personality that he defies criticism. One listens to him sing, and agrees with his manner or not, one does not argue. Even when he is all wrong, which is almost never, he is wrong with such earnestness, he has such a tremendous way of being wrong, that the critic is defeated before he opens his mouth. Yesterday the great Russian sang first "Night" by Tschaikowsky. "Aleko," by Rachmaninoff, is a powerful piece of music, with an effective climax, worked up immensely by the singer. He had other opportunities to be dramatic, as only he can be—in "The Three Roads," by Kennermann, in the "Two Grenadiers" of Schumann, which Chaliapin boomed out with his usual fervors, in the Volga Boat Song, which brought down the house, of course. The Russian Convict Song was sung touchingly and with beautiful style.

Chaliapin's genius is of the most varied kind, for no sooner does he overwhelm his listeners with a dramatic interpretation than he turns to a light ditty and has his audience in contagious good humor. He has such an expressive face that one doesn't have to be a listener.

That is just how Chaliapin impresses one, with his huge figure, enormous head, majestic carriage and walk, and his amazing intelligence—the king of singers, of actors, of interpreters.

Post April 16

ONE of the marks of popularity on the concert-stage—if the artist chooses to avail himself of it—is the easing of the burdens of recital-giving through the sharing of those burdens with others. For a singer of no reputation to give a concert thus aided hints at incompetence, or at least at lack of confidence, and the wise neophyte shuns such support. But with impunity may Mr. Shalyápin, through the magic of his name, lure eager listeners to Symphony Hall, then sit complacently by while 'cellist and pianist consume his audience's time with indifferent performance of hackneyed or inconsequential pieces. There was indeed promise yesterday afternoon that one of these incidental selections would prove worth the hearing. On the printed programme stood Liszt's Fantasia on Chaikovsky's "Eugene Onégin"—a piece whose very existence is unknown to many musicians on this side of the water—to be played by Mr. Rabinowitch, thoroughly accomplished accompanist if in no way significant soloist. But in place of Liszt's presumably ingenious and fanciful play upon Chaikovsky's delightful melodies, the audience was treated to Balakirev's well-worn paraphrase of Glinka's song, "The Lark," and to a Waltz of Chopin, played with more of glibness than of discernment.

So much for interlude and attendant incident. On his two appearances Mr. Shalyepin sang liberally from his "Book of Songs," and to wonted power, persuasiveness and penetration. In most cases the chosen numbers were pieces known and liked by the audience. Occasionally, as in the case of the "Volga Boatmen's Song," the mere announcement of its number in the book provoked immediate outburst of applause. Again, when the number itself was without meaning, its identification was cause for vigorous hand-clapping, and even though it smacks of ingenuousness, enthusiasm such as this is refreshing to see. Occupying in a concert by Mr. Shalyápin it enhances the natural excitements of the occasion, setting it aside, as it should be set aside. from the concerts of singers who may not add interpretive greatness and greatness of personality to great vocal accomplishments.

It is now perhaps superfluous to comment in detail on Mr Shalyápin's singing, so familiar are its varied aspects, while at each concert he sings pieces in which he has been repeatedly heard as well as songs previously little known or unknown in our concert-rooms. Thus it was that yesterday, besides the "Boatmen's Song," he sang Schumann's "The Two Grenadiers" and Musorgsky's "Song of the Flea." Yet with a Shalyápin there can be no such thing as dry routine, nor can there be staled pleasures for his listeners. Were he to be heard in these three pieces a hundred times, it would be always to fresh enjoyment. Incidentally, since Mr. Shalyápin has himself been a laborer on the banks of the Volga, his version of the "Ai Ukhnyòm" should be authoritative. though his way with it is directly contradictory to the accepted interpretation of the piece as the voice of the oppressed peasant groaning and fainting at his task. Cheerily, jauntily, Mr. Shalyápin sings these measures, generally made the musical counter-part of Millet's picture and Markham's poem "The Man With the Hoe." And the words of the text, as printed in Mr. Shalyápin "Book of Songs," would seem to give weight to his rather than to the usual mood and tempo with the music.

Ye, heave-oh! yo, heave-oh! And again and yet again.
As along the shore we run,
Sing our chanty in the sun,
Ai da da, ai da; as da da, ai da,
Sing our chanty in the sun.

Briefly described and summarized, Mr. Shalyápin's other songs of yesterday were two short but sharply pointed comic pieces by Dargomizhsky, Brahms's "Sapphic Ode," Koeneman's conventionally effective "When the King Went Forth to War," Kennemann's gloomy "The Three Roads," Leporello's amusing enumeration of his master's amours from Mozart's "Don Juan," Chaikovsky's plaintive "Night," a dreary Russian Convict Song, and an intensely dramatic monologue from Rakhmaninov's early opera "Aleko." To mention these pieces is almost to describe Mr. Shalyápin's performance of them. Whether the song in hand be humorous or tragic, passionate or melancholy, Mr. Shalyápin lends it his peculiar graphicness, intensity and vividness. Actor and mime as well as singer, man as well as artist, Mr. Shalyápin lays bare the very soul of a song. And he is of the few who, through sheer force of genius, can, if need be, transmute baser metal into gold. A wholly commonplace song he would not stop to sing. Yet in his hands could any song remain wholly commonplace?

W. S. S.

Transcript April 16

Hannah, born last of February, 1655 (165 1656), baptized March 2, 1655-6; Ma born Nov. 15, 1658; Stephen, born Feb. 2 1660-1, died April 1, 1661; Samuel, bo Sept. 1, 1662; and Sarah, who marri Thomas Judd of Waterbury Feb. 9, 168 Perhaps there were other children born Newark. After the death of Stephen, h widow married Robert Porter of Wate bury. In 1691 she was Hannah Clark, i dicating a third marriage. NYUMPS

509. 2. CHEESEBOROUGH, AVER A. B. S. K., Feb. 28, 1923. William (Cheeseborough came on the Arbella, 163 and settled at Stonington, Conn., 1649. was married, Dec. 15, 1620, at Bosto England, by Rev. John Cotton, to An Stevenson, who died Aug. 24, 1673, ag seventy-five. He died June 9, 1667, ag seventy-three. Samuel (2) Cheeseboroug baptized at Boston, England, April 1, 162 married, Nov. 30, 1655, Abigail ——, a was buried at Stonington July 31, 167 Abigail (3) Cheeseborough, born Sept. 1656, married, Nov. 29, 1675, John Aver

W. W. N. Y.

533. 4. HUBBELL, FINCH. B. K. March 7, 1923. I believe that the seco wife of Richard (1) Hubbell was Elizabet eldest daughter of Samuel and Elizabe (Hull) Gaylord of Windsor, Conn. If she was born Oct. 4, 1647. Stiles "Ancie Windsor" says that she married, fir Richard Hubbell, second, Samuel Rockwe but the Rockwell Genealogy says it w her cousin Elizabeth whom Samuel Roc well married. Her brother Samuel, in will dated June 7, 1690, left his proper after the death of his wife to Samuel Hu bell, son of Richard "which he hath by m sister Elizabeth Gaylord" and to Samu Alexander, son of his sister Sarah. T peculiar wording of the bequest to h nephew Samuel Hubbell, is, I believe, d to the fact that Elizabeth was then dea He simply calls Samuel Alexander the s of his sister, Sarah, not son of that sister husband, and Sarah was living at that tim The will of Samuel Gaylord, Sr., was date Sept. 22, 1689, and does not mention h daughter Elizabeth in any way, but wh the estate was settled in 1696, among t heirs who supposedly signed the agreeme were Richard Hubbell and wife Elizabet and Samuel Gaylord, Jr. But Samuel, Jr. estate was inventoried 1691, so he was a most certainly dead in 1696. It seems co fusing, but I have come to the conclusio from some other instances as well as thi that Richard Hubbell signed the agreeme in his wife's name as her heir, and t heirs of Samuel, Jr. signed it for him. wish I knew the surname of Samuel Hu bell, Jr.'s wife Elizabeth. I thought onc I had found her, but I cannot make th dates agree. However, I am not yet ce tain that she is not the one, so I will gi you what I have. I have had no oppo tunity to thoroughly investigate it. Fe 25, 1745 the heirs of Richard Jones pet tioned for a division of his lands. Amon them were Samuel Hubbell and his wi Elizabeth. Richard Jones was of Hadda and died 1670, and Elizabeth Hubbell wa his great-granddaughter (Martha Boot and —) (Ebenezer Booth and Elizabet Jones). I, too, am looking for Marth Finch. I have no record of Nathan Hu bell's being a captain. I don't believe was a sailor.

H. L. S. P.

5. MEIGS. Vincent Meggs and his t sons were first known at Plymouth, Ma early in 1637. He with his two sons. Jo

Transcript Apr 3.

CHALIAPIN IN FINE CONCERT AT SYMPHONY

Amer 4-16

By ZOE FABER.

As at his previous recital here, they stood rows deep for the length of Symphony Hall to hear "the great Russian," Feodor Chaliapin sing.

His place with the concert public is unique. There is no one who so completely holds the audience or who [illegible] by the slightest intonation of his voice or the lightest movement of his expressive hand, convey more. He sang, as always, right into the hearts of the throng assembled.

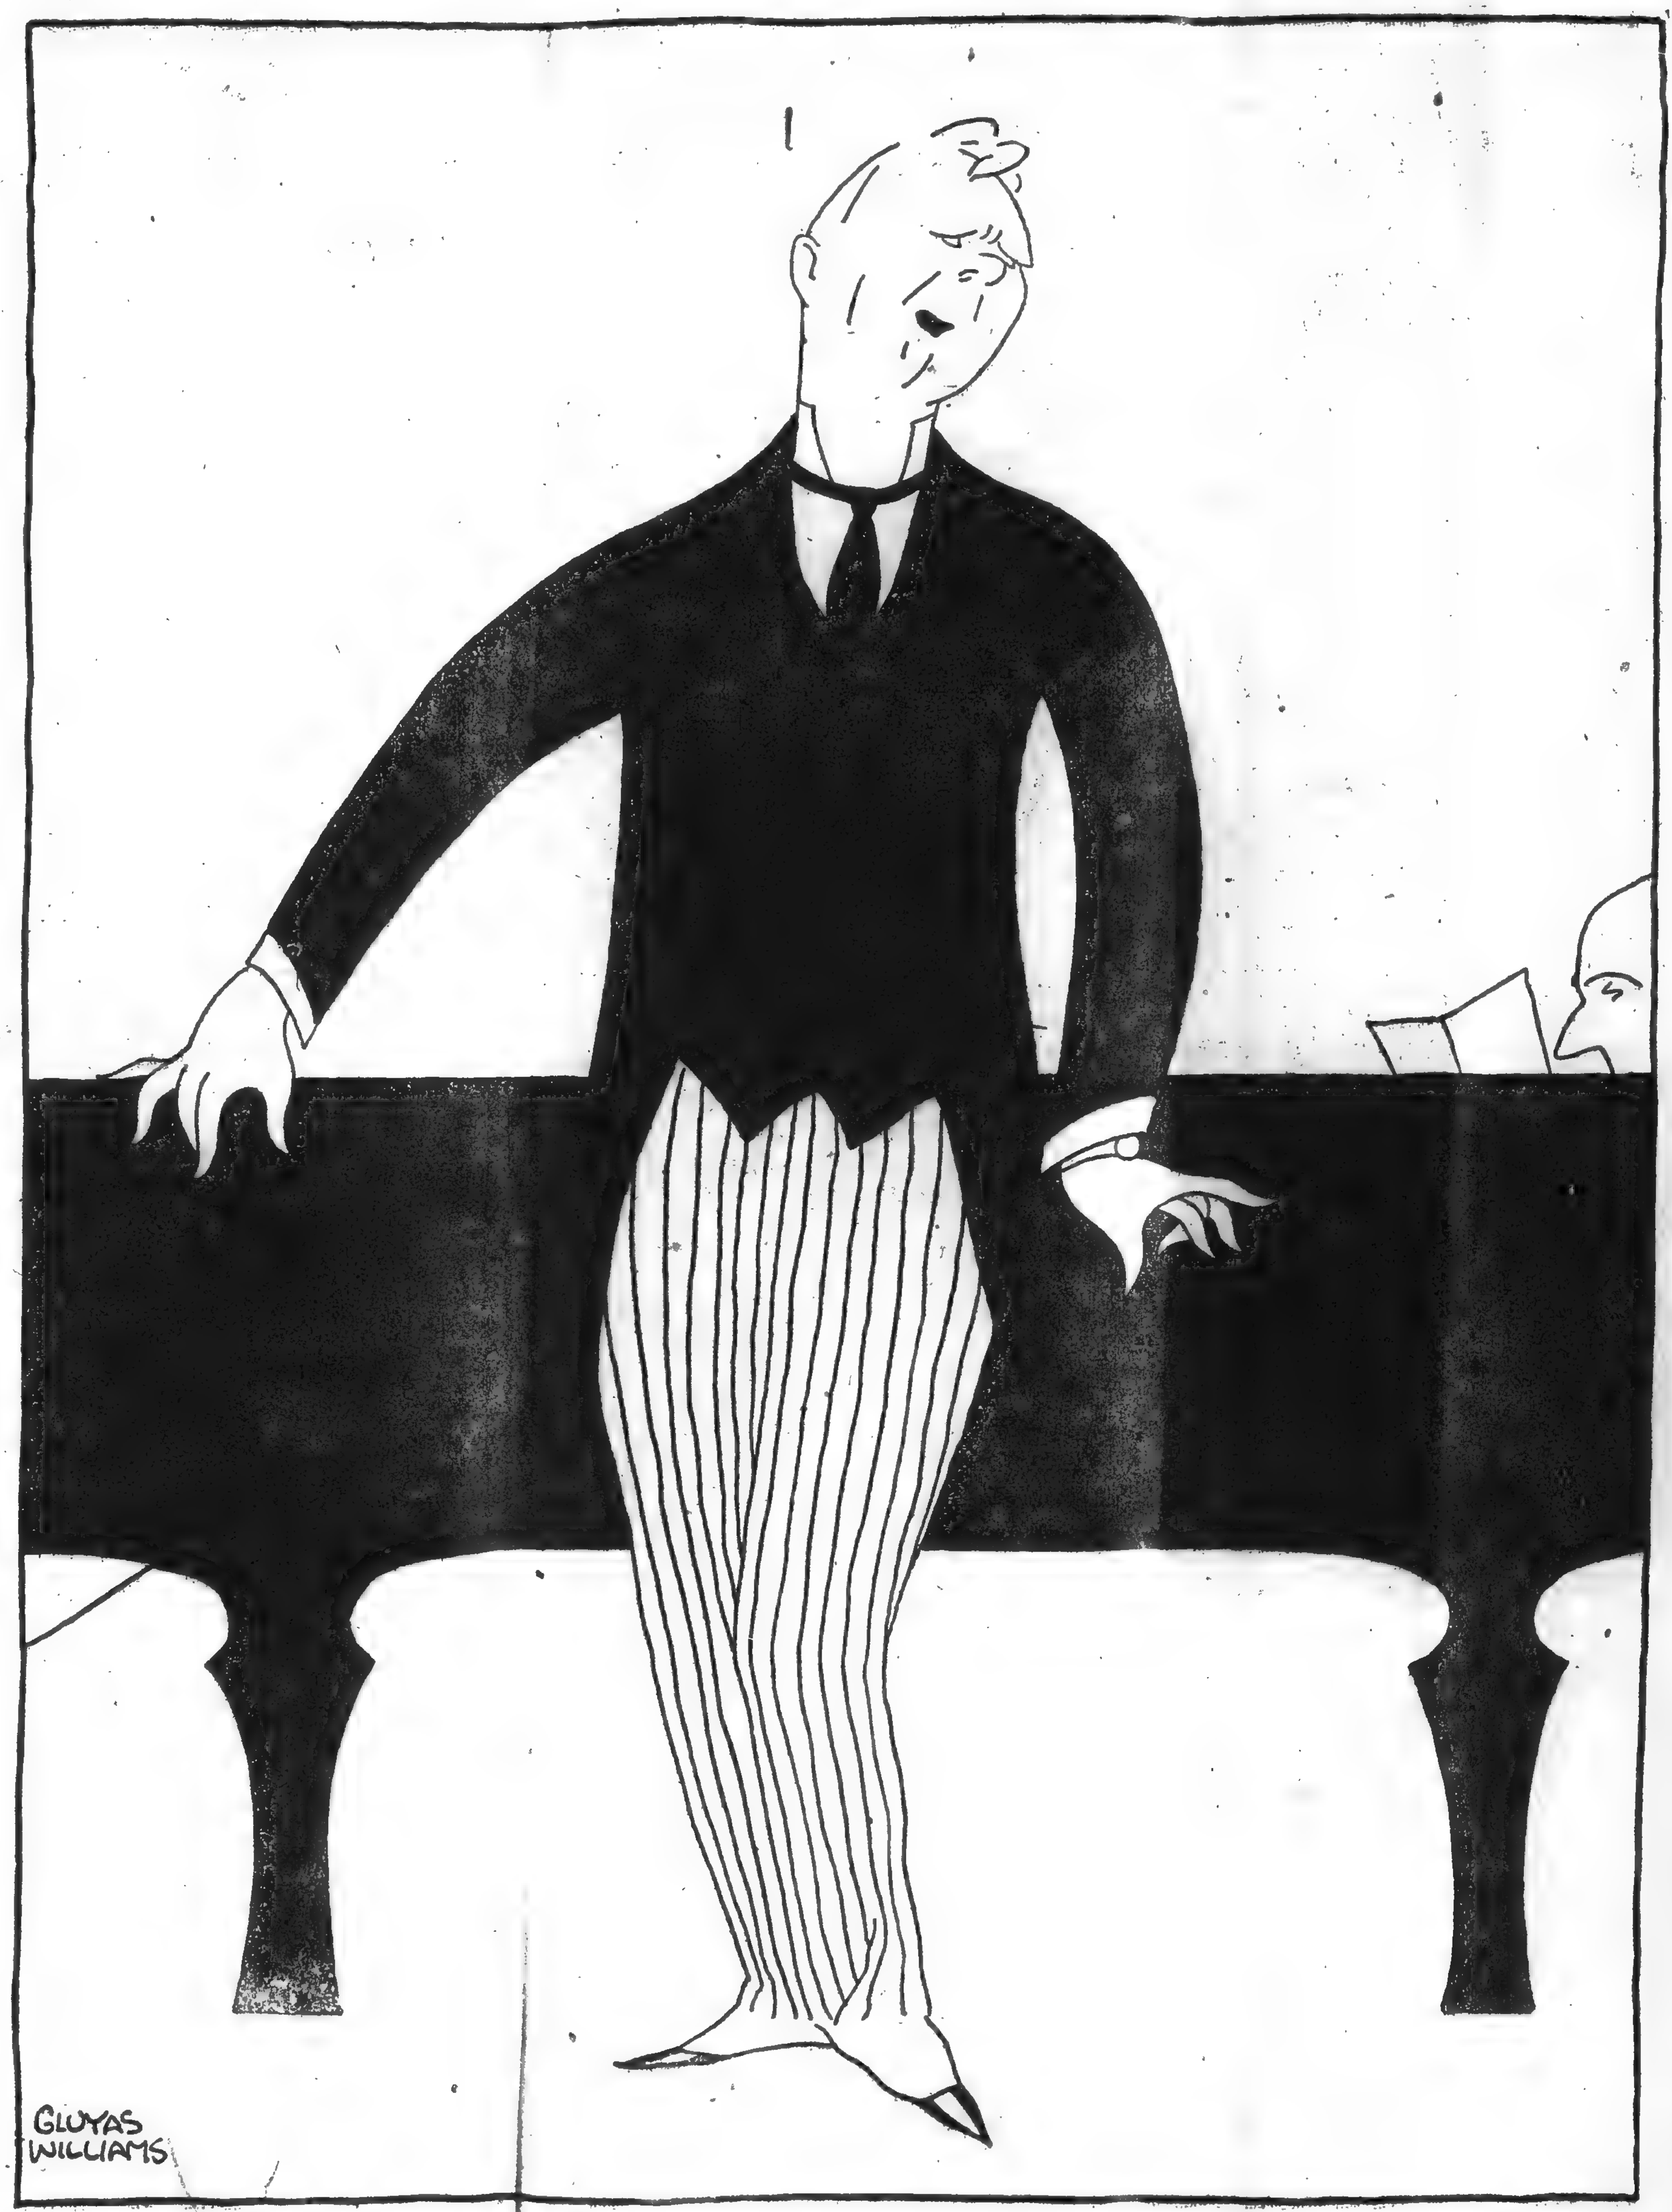
It seemed that a cold marred the beauty of some of his tones. There was a blur, a cloudiness that prevented the perfection of tone that was so marked when last he sang. Notwithstanding this, he gave unstintedly and brought great joy to his hearers. At any disadvantage he is of the greatest artists.

Accompanying Mr. Chaliapin, and also playing a solo or two, was Rabinowitch. Contributing 'cello solos was Nicholas Levienne. They were adequate for the parts assigned to them.

Mr. Chaliapin sang many songs and then more at the repeated request of the audience. His generosity is among other things that endears him to his public.

American April 16

The Stature of His Song



Tran 4/3

Fédor Shalyápin

Condescending to the Concert-Hall

Transcript Apr 3.

of his voice or the lightest movement of his expressive hand, convey more. He sang, as always, righ into the hearts of the throng assembled.

It seemed that a cold marred th beauty of some of his tones. Ther was a blur, a cloudiness that prevented the perfection of tone that was so marked when last he sang Notwithstanding this, he gave unstintedly and brought great joy t his hearers. At any disadvantage he is of the greatest artists.

Accompanying Mr. Chaliapin, and also playing a solo or two, was Rabinowitch. Contributing 'cello solos was Nicholas Levienne. They were adequate for the parts assigned to them.

Mr. Chaliapin sang many songs and then more at the repeated request of the audience. His generosity is among other things that endears him to his public.

n April 16

Elman April 22

Once more Mr. Elman will return to the Sunday Concerts at Symphony Hall—on the afternoon of April 22. Not until next winter, as it seems, does Mr. Heifetz come to revisit Boston. A diminished audience displeased him. Trans 3/26

Transcript Mar 26

Once more Mr. Elman will return to the Sunday Concerts at Symphony Hall—on the afternoon of April 22. Not until next winter, as it seems, does Mr. Heifetz come to revisit Boston. A diminished audience displeased him. Trans 3/31

Transcript Mar 31

Mischa Elman, violinist, will give a recital in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 22. Her 4/1

Herald April 1

ELMAN CONCERT

Adv 4/1

Mischa Elman will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 22.

Advertiser April 1

Sunday afternoon, April 22, in Symphony Hall, a concert of violin-pieces, played by Mischa Elman, in the flower of his powers alike as virtuoso and musician, keeping old ardors, yet now better guiding and tempering them. Twice this season has a Bostonian audience heard him with large pleasure. Trans 4/7

Transcript April 7

ELMAN

Trav 4/7

On Sunday afternoon, April 22, at 3:30 in Symphony hall, Mischa Elman, the great violinist, will play here. This concert will be the third and last appearance of the season here by the great Russian virtuoso

Traveler, April 7

Mischa Elman will play the violin in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 22. Her 4/8

Herald April 8

ELMAN AGAIN

Adv 4/8

Mischa Elman will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 22. This will be the Russian star's last appearance here this season.

Advertiser April 8

Mischa Elman will give a concert in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, April 22, at 3:30. This will be his third and last appearance of the season.

Globe April 8

At his concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 22, Mr. Elman, the violinist, will play an ancient Sonata by Nardini; Mendelssohn's Concerto; Sarasate's "Gypsy Airs"; and a miscellany of shorter pieces stretching from Mozart and Boccherini to Chopin and Brahms. Trans 4/13

Transcript April 13

Sunday afternoon, April 22, in Symphony Hall, a concert of violin-pieces, played by Mischa Elman, in the flower of his powers alike as virtuoso and musician, keeping old ardors, yet now better guiding and tempering them. Twice this season has a Bostonian audience heard him with large pleasure. This time he will play an ancient Sonata by Nardini; Mendelssohn's Concerto; Sarasate's "Gypsy Airs" and a miscellany drawn from Mozart and Boccherini, Chopin and Brahms. Trans 4/14

Transcript April 14

Her 4/15

ELMAN

Mischa Elman, violinist, will make his third and last appearance of the season in Boston next Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall, April 22, at 3:30. His program will be as follows:

Sonata in D Major	Nardini
Concerto	Mendelssohn
Adagio	Mozart
Minuet	Boccherini
Nocturne	Chopin-Sarasate
Hungarian Dance, No. 7	Brahms-Joachim
Orientale	Amani-Elman
Zigeunerweisen	Sarasate

Herald April 15

ELMAN PROGRAM

Elman's program next Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall follows: Adv 4/15

Sonata, D major	Nardini
Concerto	Mendelssohn
Adagio	Mozart
Minuet	Boccherini
Nocturne	Chopin-Sarasate
Hungarian Dance, No. 7	Brahms-Joachim
Orientale	Amani-Elman
Zigeunerweisen	Sarasate

Advertiser April 15

Mischa Elman

Post 4/15

Mischa Elman, violinist, will make his third and last appearance of the season in Boston next Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall, April 22, at 3:30. Elman's programme will include the Sonata in D major, Nardini; Concerto, Mendelssohn, and smaller compositions by Mozart, Boccherini, Chopin - Sarasate, Brahms - Joachim, Amani-Elman. Elm Post 4/15

Post April 15

Sunday, April 22, at 3:30, Mischa Elman, violinist. Sonata in D major, Nardini; Concerto, Mendelssohn; Adagio, Mozart; Minuet, Boccherini; Nocturne, Chopin-Sarasate; Hungarian Dance, No 7, Brahms-Joachim; Orientale, Amani-Elman; Zigeunerweisen, Sarasate. Gl 4/15

Globe April 15

Mr. Elman Yet Again

For a concert of violin-pieces, tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall, comes again Mischa Elman in the flower of his powers alike as virtuoso and musician, keeping old ardors, yet now better guiding and tempering them. Twice before in the course of the season has a Bostonian audience heard him with large pleasure. This time he will play an ancient Sonata by Nardini; Mendelssohn's Concerto; Sarasate's "Gypsy Airs and a miscellany drawn from Mozart and Boccherini, Chopin and Brahms. Trans 4/21

Transcript Apr 21

Mischa Elman to Give His Farewell Concert Here Tomorrow

Trav 4/21

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30 Mischa Elman, the great Russian violinist, will be heard in the following program at his farewell concert of the season here:

Nardini's Sonata in D major, Mendelssohn's Concerto in E minor, and shorter numbers by Mozart, Boccherini, Chopin, Brahms, Elman and Sarasate.

Traveler Apr 21

Mischa Elman, the Russian violinist, will make his farewell local appearance of the season in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. His program will include Nardini's Sonata in D major, Mendelssohn's Concerto in E minor, and shorter numbers by Mozart, Boccherini, Chopin, Brahms, Elman and Sarasate. Amer 4/21

American Apr 21

ELMAN

Her 4/22

Mischa Elman, violinist, will make his third and last appearance of the season in Boston this afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30. His program will be as follows:

Sonata in D Major	Nardini
Concerto	Mendelssohn
Adagio	Mozart
Minuet	Boccherini
Nocturne	Chopin-Sarasate
Hungarian Dance No. 7	Brahms-Joachim
Orientale	Amanji-Elman
Zigeunerweisen	Sarasate

Herald Apr 22

Elman Gives His Final Recital Today

Adv 4/22

MISCHA ELMAN, Russian violin star, will make his farewell appearance of the season in Symphony Hall this afternoon in the following program:

Sonata, D. major	Nardini
Concerto in E. minor	Mendelssohn
Adagio	Mozart
Minuet	Boccherini
Nocturne	Chopin-Sarasate
Hungarian Dance, No. 7	Brahms-Joachim
Orientale	Amani-Elman
Zigeunerweisen	Sarasate

Advertiser Apr 22

Post 4/22

ELMAN TODAY

Mischa Elman, the Russian violinist, will make his farewell appearance of the season in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. The great virtuoso will be heard in the Sonata in D major, Nardini; Concerto in E minor, Mendelssohn; Adagio, Mozart; Minuet, Boccherini; Nocturne, Chopin-Sarasate; Hungarian Dance, No. 7, Brahms-Joachim; Orientale, Amani-Elman; Zigeunerweisen, Sarasate.

Post Apr 22

ELMAN GIVES RECITAL IN SYMPHONY HALL

Highly Appreciative Audience Heard Violinist

Her 4/23

Mischa Elman gave a recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall with the following program:

Sonata, D major	Nardina
Concerto in E minor	Mendelssohn
a. Adagio	Mozart
b. Minuet	Boccherini
c. Nocturne	Chopin-Sarasate
d. Hungarian Dance, No 7	Brahms-Joachim
a. Orientale	Amani-Elman
b. Zigeunerweisen	Sarasate

Mr. Elman's audience, which half-filled the hall, was very appreciative. This is his third and last recital of the season, and yesterday's program was well chosen. The first two selections, Nardini's sonata, and the Mendelssohn concerto, gave Mr. Elman ample opportunity to display his excellent technique, sometimes at the cost of lack of feeling and expression. There was a coldness and certain harshness about the sonata that was particularly noticeable.

Boccherini's dainty minuet fared better; the Chopin-Sarasate "Nocturne" was also played with more feeling and understanding.

The familiar Hungarian Dance was effectively played, and the final selection, "Zigeunerweisen," a fantastic composition, varied in mood, was well played. Mr. Elman gave several encores, and his audience was most enthusiastic. Josef Bonime accompanied him.

Herald Apr 23

MISCHA ELMAN HEARD IN THIRD BOSTON CONCERT

Glo 4/23

Mischa Elman gave his third Boston concert of the current season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. An audience of good size, which did not, however, fill the hall, applauded with the usual vigor and persistence, eliciting numerous encores, and remaining at the end until the piano lid was shut as a gentle hint that no more 'gumdrops' were to be vouchsafed.

Mr Elman's program, as is often expedient at popular concerts, contained no modern pieces, and nothing not familiar to regular frequenters of concert halls. Nardini's D major sonata and the Mendelssohn concerto were its long numbers. One wishes violinists would refrain from playing concertos with a much subdued piano replacing the necessary orchestra. Or if they must do it, why not stick to Vieuxtemps and Wieniawski, whose music is at best a mere pretext for "stunt" playing.

Mr Elman has seemingly of late sought to make his tone purer in quality, less treacly than of old. He has achieved purity, but at the expense of volume. He played Nardini's larghetto rubato, something not in the style of the period at all. It is a pity to sacrifice even a faded elegance to attain a mushy smear of emotion.

His many gifts, unusual technique, feeling for melody, liking for romantic music and so on still make Elman no ordinary fiddler. But when so much is offered by a performer the listener is annoyed at not finding perfection.

Globe Apr 23

Mischa Elman Recital

Mischa Elman gave his last violin recital of the season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. Mr. Elman played with his usual sound musicianship, his skilled interpretation, sure sense of style, technical flawlessness, and above all with his emotional fervor.

Post 4/23

Mr. Elman's selections yesterday, the best intrinsically, was the Mendelssohn E-minor concerto, beautifully played. Nardini's D-major sonata interested in spots, and the rest of the programme was humdrum. The encores were no better. Yet through all the pieces the genius of Elman glowed.

Post Apr 23

Adv 4/23

Elman Gives His Farewell Recital

Mischa Elman's final Boston recital of the season was given at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. With one exception, no other violinist visiting the Hub draws so well and plays so well as the little "Russion lion." More than anyone else he does credit to his teacher, Auer. His popularity is based upon artistic prowess alone, and in this respect he is almost a unique figure in the violin field. Classic pieces filled a large part of his program yesterday, with here and there a more modern work by Sarasate, Joachim and other recent stars of the fiddling world. Elman's own arrangement of Amani's "Orientale" greatly pleased the good-sized audience.

Advertiser Apr 23

Prime and Prowess Trans 4/23

Mr. Elman in poise and at maturity must evidently conquer a new public in lieu of that which preferred him as violinist excessive and immature. Yesterday afternoon he returned again to Symphony Hall full-clothed in his present virtues; he proffered a programme that fulfilled promise with pleasure; yet a relatively small audience heard and applauded him. It was an audience, however, far more practised and discriminating than of old he assembled in Boston; it was encouragingly sprinkled with intelligent youth; and since undaunted he spared himself not a whit, so also it answered with proportionate plaudits. In such circumstance the new Elman seemed more than ever to have sloughed away the old. Not even in Sarasate's muted arrangement of a Nocturne from Chopin did he overpress his bow and overhold phrase and period that the music might ooze sentimentality. Not once in Sarasate's "Gypsy-Tunes" did he do fiddler's tricks, playing rather as mastter-technician in zest for rhapsodic and exacting measures. At his hands Mendelssohn's "Allegro molto Appassionato" stood with reason over the first movement of the time-worn Concerto; yet not once were these fires calculated emphasis for metricious ends. Through the course of the concert a light, fine-fingered zest often commended the violinist. Gone altogether were the heavy displayful energies of old.

Rather, out of each piece shone the Elman who has learned to master himself and so be the finer master of his violin and his music. Continence is spring of beauty in the serenely curving, measuredly advancing, slow movements of the older music for the violin. They open calm vistas in tones and over these vistas plays the light and shade—and no more—of sentiment. So Elman played the Adagio and the Larghetto of Nardini's Concerto and a kindred fragment of Mozart Nardini wrote quick movements, exacting evenness, certainty and endless felicity of bow and finger. On paper they seem hardly more than routine; the violinist's play of rhythm, elegance of phrase and progress, distinction of tone must glorify them in adept measure—and to it Mr. Elman held. Akin was his playing of Boccherini's Minuet, sounding at last unhackneyed. To this day, there are fine fires in Mendelssohn's Concerto for Violin, though only Mr. Kreisler has hitherto had the insight to perceive them, the hand and voice to rekindle them. Yesterday with him Mr. Elman shared them. He regarded the fine precisions and suavities of the music; he made of passage-work and cadenza airy arabesques gossamer-spun. Yet underneath he kept glowing the warmth, the fancy, still dormant in the music, still quick to wakening hand. Gentle and rounded was the beauty of the slow movement; while through the finale the flying fingers of composer and violinist touched the music as one. For in the new Elman goes also intuition. H. T. P.

Transcript Apr 23

MISCHA ELMAN GIVES VIOLIN RECITAL

Am 4/23

By ZOE FABER

The lure of open country in Spring made noticeable inroads on the size of the audience that foregathered yesterday in Symphony Hall to hear Mischa Elman in the last, for this season, of his recitals that have been a feature of the music of the Winter.

Mr. Elman seemed in particularly good vein and played his program through with unusual zest for the music in hand.

BEAUTIFUL THEMES.

The Mendelssohn Concerto was especially well done and the audience responded with the warmest of applause. It is music that is very grateful to the violinist who made the most of the hauntingly beautiful themes that are woven and interwoven in it.

Of the smaller numbers, the Boccherini Minuet was charming and the Chopin Nocturne arranged by Sarasate played by Mr. Elman on muted strings created an effect of mist and music that was unusual. It is one of the most played of the Chopin Nocturnes, yet it has seldom sounded less hackneyed.

BONIME AT PIANO.

As customarily, Josef Bonime was at the piano for Mr. Elman and again his accompaniments were an admirable factor in the artistic success of the recital as a whole.

Mr. Elman was gracious as well as generous with his encores. Of the several that he added, the best liked was the Ave Maria, which was exquisitely played and brought to a close a recital that was a pleasure from start to finish.

American Apr 23

Once more Mr. Elman will return to the Sunday Concerts at Symphony Hall—on the afternoon of April 22. Not until next winter, as it seems, does Mr. Heifetz come to revisit Boston. A diminished audience displeased him. Trans 3-26

Transcript Mar 26

Once more Mr. Elman will return to the Sunday Concerts at Symphony Hall—on the afternoon of April 22. Not until next winter, as it seems, does Mr. Heifetz come to revisit Boston. A diminished audience displeased him.

Transcript Mar 31

Mischa Elman, violinist, will give a recital in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 22.

Herald April 1

ELMAN CONCERT

Mischa Elman will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 22.

Advertiser April 1

Sunday afternoon, April 22, in Symphony Hall, a concert of violin-pieces, played by Mischa Elman, in the flower of his powers alike as virtuoso and musician, keeping old ardors, yet now better guiding and tempering them. Twice this season has a Bostonian audience heard him with large pleasure.

Transcript April 7

ELMAN

On Sunday afternoon, April 22, at 3:30 in Symphony hall, Mischa Elman, the great violinist, will play here. This concert will be the third and last appearance of the season here by the great Russian virtuoso

Traveler, April 7

Mischa Elman will play the violin in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 22.

Herald April 8

ELMAN AGAIN

Mischa Elman will give a concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 22. This will be the Russian star's last appearance here this season.

Advertiser April 8

Mischa Elman will give a concert in Symphony Hall Sunday afternoon, April 22, at 3:30. This will be his third and last appearance of the season.

Globe April 8

At his concert in Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 22. Mr. Elman, the violinist, will play an ancient Sonata by Nardini; Mendelssohn's Concerto; Sarasate's "Gypsy Airs"; and a miscellany of shorter pieces stretching from Mozart and Boccherini to Chopin and Brahms.

Transcript April 13

SUNDAY afternoon, April 22, in Symphony Hall, a concert of violin-pieces, played by Mischa Elman, in the flower of his powers alike as virtuoso and musician, keeping old ardors, yet now better guiding and tempering them. Twice this season has a Bostonian audience heard him with large pleasure. This time he will play an ancient Sonata by Nardini; Mendelssohn's Concerto; Sarasate's "Gypsy Airs" and a miscellany drawn from Mozart and Boccherini, Chopin and Brahms.

Transcript April 14

ELMAN

Her 4/15

Mischa Elman, violinist, will make his third and last appearance of the season in Boston next Sunday afternoon in Symphony hall, April 22, at 3:30. His program will be as follows:

Sonata in D Major .... Nardini
Concerto .... Mendelssohn
Adagio .... Mozart
Minuet .... Boccherini
Nocturne .... Chopin-Sarasate
Hungarian Dance, No. 7 .... Brahms-Joachim
Orientale .... Amani-Elman
Zigeunerweisen .... Sarasate

Herald April 15

ELMAN PROGRAM

Elman's program next Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall follows:

Adv 4/15

Sonata, D major .... Nardini
Concerto .... Mendelssohn
Adagio .... Mozart
Minuet .... Boccherini
Nocturne .... Chopin-Sarasate
Hungarian Dance, No. 7 .... Brahms-Joachim
Orientale .... Amani-Elman
Zigeunerweisen .... Sarasate

Advertiser April 15

Mischa Elman

Post 4/15

Mischa Elman, violinist, will make his third and last appearance of the season in Boston next Sunday afternoon in Symphony Hall, April 22, at 3:30. Elman's programme will include the Sonata in D major, Nardini; Concerto, Mendelssohn, and smaller compositions by Mozart, Boccherini, Chopin - Sarasate, Brahms - Joachim, Amani-Elman.

Post April 15

Sunday, April 22, at 3:30, Mischa Elman, violinist. Sonata in D major, Nardini; Concerto, Mendelssohn; Adagio, Mozart; Minuet, Boccherini; Nocturne, Chopin-Sarasate; Hungarian Dance, No 7, Brahms-Joachim; Orientale, Amani-Elman; Zigeunerweisen, Sarasate,

Globe April 15

Mr. Elman Yet Again

For a concert of violin-pieces, tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall, comes again Mischa Elman in the flower of his powers alike as virtuoso and musician, keeping old ardors, yet now better guiding and tempering them. Twice before in the course of the season has a Bostonian audience heard him with large pleasure. This time he will play an ancient Sonata by Nardini; Mendelssohn's Concerto; Sarasate's "Gypsy Airs and a miscellany drawn from Mozart and Boccherini, Chopin and Brahms.

Transcript Apr 21

Mischa Elman to Give His Farewell Concert Here Tomorrow

Trav 4/21

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30 Mischa Elman, the great Russian violinist, will be heard in the following program at his farewell concert of the season here:

Nardini's Sonata in D major, Mendelssohn's Concerto in E minor, and shorter numbers by Mozart, Boccherini, Chopin, Brahms, Elman and Sarasate.

Traveler Apr 21

Mischa Elman, the Russian violinist, will make his farewell local appearance of the season in Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon. His program will include Nardini's Sonata in D major, Mendelssohn's Concerto in E minor, and shorter numbers by Mozart, Boccherini, Chopin, Brahms, Elman and Sarasate.

American Apr 21

ELMAN

Her 4/22

Mischa Elman, violinist, will make his third and last appearance of the season in Boston this afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30. His program will be as follows:

Sonata in D Major .... Nardini
Concerto .... Mendelssohn
Adagio .... Mozart
Minuet .... Boccherini
Nocturne .... Chopin-Sarasate
Hungarian Dance No. 7 .... Brahms-Joachim
Orientale .... Amanji-Elman
Zigeunerweisen .... Sarasate

Herald Apr 22

Elman Gives His Final Recital Today

Adv 4/22

MISCHA ELMAN, Russian violin star, will make his farewell appearance of the season in Symphony Hall this afternoon in the following program:

Sonata, D. major .... Nardini
Concerto in E, minor .... Mendelssohn
Adagio .... Mozart
Minuet .... Boccherini
Nocturne .... Chopin-Sarasate
Hungarian Dance, No. 7 .... Brahms-Joachim
Orientale .... Amani-Elman
Zigeunerweisen .... Sarasate

Advertiser Apr 22

ELMAN TODAY

Mischa Elman, the Russian violinist, will make his farewell appearance of the season in Symphony Hall this afternoon at 3:30. The great virtuoso will be heard in the Sonata in D major, Nardini; Concerto in E minor, Mendelssohn; Adagio, Mozart; Minuet, Boccherini; Nocturne, Chopin-Sarasate; Hungarian Dance, No. 7, Brahms-Joachim; Orientale, Amani-Elman; Zigeunerweisen, Sarasate.

Post Apr 22

ELMAN GIVES RECITAL IN SYMPHONY HALL

Highly Appreciative Audience Hears Violinist

Her 4/23

Mischa Elman gave a recital yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall with the following program:

Sonata, D major .... Nardina
Concerto in E minor .... Mendelssohn
a. Adagio .... Mozart
b. Minuet .... Boccherini
c. Nocturne .... Chopin-Sarasate
d. Hungarian Dance, No 7 .... Brahms-Joachim
a. Orientale .... Amani-Elman
b. Zigeunerweisen .... Sarasate

Mr. Elman's audience, which half-filled the hall, was very appreciative. This is his third and last recital of the season, and yesterday's program was well chosen. The first two selections, Nardini's sonata, and the Mendelssohn concerto, gave Mr. Elman ample opportunity to display his excellent technique, sometimes at the cost of lack of feeling and expression. There was a coldness and certain harshness about the sonata that was particularly noticeable.

Boccherini's dainty minuet fared better; the Chopin-Sarasate "Nocturne" was also played with more feeling and understanding.

The familiar Hungarian Dance was effectively played, and the final selection, "Zigeunerweisen," a fantastic composition, varied in mood, was well played. Mr. Elman gave several encores, and his audience was most enthusiastic. Josef Bonime accompanied him.

Herald Apr 23

MISCHA ELMAN HEARD IN THIRD BOSTON CONCERT

Mischa Elman gave his third Boston concert of the current season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. An audience of good size, which did not, however, fill the hall, applauded with the usual vigor and persistence, eliciting numerous encores, and remaining at the end until the piano lid was shut as a gentle hint that no more 'gumdrops' were to be vouchsafed.

Mr Elman's program, as is often expedient at popular concerts, contained no modern pieces, and nothing not familiar to regular frequenters of concert halls. Nardini's D major sonata and the Mendelssohn concerto were its long numbers. One wishes violinists would refrain from playing concertos with a much subdued piano replacing the necessary orchestra. Or if they must do it, why not stick to Vieuxtemps and Wieniawski, whose music is at best a mere pretext for "stunt" playing.

Mr Elman has seemingly of late sought to make his tone purer in quality, less treacly than of old. He has achieved purity, but at the expense of volume. He played Nardini's larghetto rubato, something not in the style of the period at all. It is a pity to sacrifice even a faded elegance to attain a mushy smear of emotion.

His many gifts, unusual technique, feeling for melody, liking for romantic music and so on still make Elman no ordinary fiddler. But when so much is offered by a performer the listener is annoyed at not finding perfection.

Globe Apr 23

Mischa Elman Recital

Mischa Elman gave his last violin recital of the season yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. Mr. Elman played with his usual sound musicianship, his skilled interpretation, sure sense of style, technical flawlessness, and above all with his emotional fervor.

Mr. Elman's selection yesterday, the best intrinsically, was the Mendelssohn E-minor concerto, beautifully played. Nardini's D-major sonata interested in spots, and the rest of the programme was humdrum. The encores were no better. Yet through all the pieces the genius of Elman glowed.

Post Apr 23

Elman Gives His Farewell Recital

Adv 4/23

Mischa Elman's final Boston recital of the season was given at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon. With one exception, no other violinist visiting the Hub draws so well and plays so well as the little "Russion lion." More than anyone else he does credit to his teacher, Auer. His popularity is based upon artistic prowess alone, and in this respect he is almost a unique figure in the violin field. Classic pieces filled a large part of his program yesterday, with here and there a more modern work by Sarasate, Joachim and other recent stars of the fiddling world. Elman's own arrangement of Amani's "Orientale" greatly pleased the good-sized audience.

Advertiser Apr 23

Prime and Prowess

Trans 4/23

Mr. Elman in poise and at maturity must evidently conquer a new public in lieu of that which preferred him as violinist excessive and immature. Yesterday afternoon he returned again to Symphony Hall full-clothed in his present virtues; he proffered a programme that fulfilled promise with pleasure; yet a relatively small audience heard and applauded him. It was an audience, however, far more practised and discriminating than of old he assembled in Boston; it was encouragingly sprinkled with intelligent youth; and since undaunted he spared himself not a whit, so also it answered with proportionate plaudits. In such circumstance the new Elman seemed more than ever to have sloughed away the old. Not even in Sarasate's muted arrangement of a Nocturne from Chopin did he overpress his bow and overhold phrase and period that the music might ooze sentimentality. Not once in Sarasate's "Gypsy-Tunes" did he do fiddler's tricks, playing rather as mastter-technician in zest for rhapsodic and exacting measures. At his hands Mendelssohn's "Allegro molto Appassionato" stood with reason over the first movement of the time-worn Concerto; yet not once were these fires calculated emphasis for metricious ends. Through the course of the concert a light, fine-fingered zest often commended the violinist. Gone altogether were the heavy displayful energies of old.

Rather, out of each piece shone the Elman who has learned to master himself and so be the finer master of his violin and his music. Continence is spring of beauty in the serenely curving, measuredly advancing, slow movements of the older music for the violin. They open calm vistas in tones and over these vistas plays the light and shade—and no more—of sentiment. So Elman played the Adagio and the Larghetto of Nardini's Concerto and a kindred fragment of Mozart Nardini wrote quick movements, exacting evenness, certainty and endless felicity of bow and finger. On paper they seem hardly more than routine; the violinist's play of rhythm, elegance of phrase and progress, distinction of tone must glorify them in adept measure—and to it Mr. Elman held. Akin was his playing of Boccherini's Minuet, sounding at last unhackneyed. To this day, there are fine fires in Mendelssohn's Concerto for Violin, though only Mr. Kreisler has hitherto had the insight to perceive them, the hand and voice to rekindle them. Yesterday with him Mr. Elman shared them. He regarded the fine precisions and suavities of the music; he made of passage-work and cadenza airy arabesques gossamer-spun. Yet underneath he kept glowing the warmth, the fancy, still dormant in the music, still quick to wakening hand. Gentle and rounded was the beauty of the slow movement; while through the finale the flying fingers of composer and violinist touched the music as one. For in the new Elman goes also intuition. H. T. P.

Transcript Apr 23

MISCHA ELMAN GIVES VIOLIN RECITAL

Am 4/23

By ZOE FABER

The lure of open country in Spring made noticeable inroads on the size of the audience that foregathered yesterday in Symphony Hall to hear Mischa Elman in the last, for this season, of his recitals that have been a feature of the music of the Winter.

Mr. Elman seemed in particularly good vein and played his program through with unusual zest for the music in hand.

BEAUTIFUL THEMES.

The Mendelssohn Concerto was especially well done and the audience responded with the warmest of applause. It is music that is very grateful to the violinist who made the most of the hauntingly beautiful themes that are woven and interwoven in it.

Of the smaller numbers, the Boccherini Minuet was charming and the Chopin Nocturne arranged by Sarasate played by Mr. Elman on muted strings created an effect of mist and music that was unusual. It is one of the most played of the Chopin Nocturnes, yet it has seldom sounded less hackneyed.

BONIME AT PIANO.

As customarily, Josef Bonime was at the piano for Mr. Elman and again his accompaniments were an admirable factor in the artistic success of the recital as a whole.

Mr. Elman was gracious as well as generous with his encores. Of the several that he added, the best liked was the Ave Maria, which was exquisitely played and brought to a close a recital that was a pleasure from start to finish.

American Apr 23

Paderewski April 29th

It is safe to say that Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon April 29, will not contain all that wish to hear Mr. Paderewski. Yet the disappointed may take comfort. From next November through next April he will again make a round of American cities—Boston thrice included.

Transcript April 13

Sunday afternoon, April 29, in Symphony Hall, a third and final concert—for the season—of piano-pieces played by Mr. Paderewski, returned to the practice of his profession in all the fulness and the fineness of his powers as technician, musician, poet, man of mastery and man of genius. The years only ripen, deepen and the more reveal him. Once again a rejoicing public will hail him.

Transcript Apr. 14

PADEREWSKI

In Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 29 at 3:30, Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, will give his third and last concert of the season in Boston.

Traveler April 14

PADEREWSKI AGAIN

Paderewski will give his farewell concert of the season at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 29.

Advertiser April 15

PADEREWSKI

Returning from his tour of the western United States which has extended as far as the Pacific coast, Mr. Paderewski will give his farewell concert of the season at Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 29, at 3:30.

Herald April 15

Paderewski

Returning from his tour of the Western United States, which has extended as far as the Pacific coast, Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, will give his farewell concert of the season at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 29, at 3:30.

Post April 15

Paderewski's recital at Symphony Hall, April 29, offers the last chance this season for those who could not get tickets for his two previous Boston concerts to hear him. Every seat will be sold far in advance, unless precedents fail.

Globe April 15

SUNDAY afternoon, April 29, in Symphony Hall, a third and final concert—for the season—of piano pieces played by Mr. Paderewski, returned to the practice of his profession in the fulness and the fineness of his powers as technician, musician, poet, man of mastery and man of genius. The years only ripen, deepen and the more reveal him. Once again a rejoicing public will hail him. Music of Chopin fill his programme, vis.: Fantasia, Op. 49; Four Preludes, Nos. 15, 16, 21 and 24. Two Nocturnes, Op. 15; Ballad in A flat; Scherzo in B flat minor; Barcarolle; Four Studies, No. 6 of Op. 25; No. 10 of Op. 10, and Nos. 7 and 11 of Op. 25; Sonata, Op. 35; Mazurka, Op. 17, No. 4; [illegible] the Polonaise, Op. 53.

Transcript Apr 21

PADEREWSKI TO RETURN

Paderewski will give a special Chopin program in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 29, at 3:30, to include the fantasia, four preludes, two nocturnes, ballad in A flat, scherzo in B flat minor, barcarolle, four etudes, "Funeral March," sonata, mazurka, waltz and polonaise.

Traveler Apr 21

PADEREWSKI AND CHOPIN

Mr. Paderewski will give a Chopin program at his third and last recital of the Boston season to be given in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, April 29, at 3:30. The numbers are:

Fantasia Op. 49.
Four Preludes, Nos. 15, 16, 21, 24.
Two nocturnes Op. 15.
Ballade, A flat.
Scherzo, B flat minor.
Barcarolle No. 6.
Four Etudes, No. 6 op. 25, No. 10 op. 10,
Nos. 7, 11 op. 25.
Sonata Op. 35.
Mazurka op. 17 No. 4.
Valse.
Polonaise Op. 53.

Herald Apr 22

Paderewski's choice of an all-Chopin program for his third and final Boston concert next Sunday will gratify the many who feel that he is preeminent in his great compatriot's music. Paderewski is announced for another American tour next season, with several appearances in this city, a fact which may console the very many likely to be unable to get tickets for next Sunday.

Globe Apr 22

PADEREWSKI PROGRAM

Paderewski will give an all Chopin program at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon. The numbers are: Fantasia op. 49; four preludes Nos. 15, 16, 21, 24; two nocturnes, op. 15; ballade, A flat; [illegible] B flat minor; Barcarolle

Advertiser Apr 22

Paderewski and Chopin

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon for the final Sunday Concert of the season comes Mr. Paderewski, returned to the practice of his profession in the fulness and the fineness of his powers as technician, musician, poet, man of mastery and man of genius. The years only ripen, deepen and the more reveal him. Once again a rejoicing public will hail him. Music of Chopin fill his programme, viz.: Fantasia, Op. 49: Four Preludes, Nos. 15, 16, 21 and 24. Two Nocturnes, Op. 15; Ballad in A flat; Scherzo in B flat minor; Barcarolle; Four Studies, No. 6 of Op. 25; No. 10 of Op. 10, and Nos. 7 and 11 of Op. 25; Sonata, Op. 35; Mazurka, Op. 17, No. 4; a Waltz and the Polonaise, Op. 53.

Transcript Apr 28

Paderewski to Be Heard in All-Chopin Program Tomorrow

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30 o'clock Paderewski will be heard in the following all-Chopin programme: Fantasia, Four Preludes, Two Nocturnes, Ballade in A flat, Scherzo B flat minor, Borcarolle, Four Etudes, Sonata Opus 35, Mazurka, Valse and Polonaise.

Traveler Apr 28

PADEREWSKI AGAIN

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30 o'clock Paderewski will be heard in the following all-Chopin programme: Fantasia, Four Preludes, Two Nocturnes, Ballads in A flat, Scherzo B flat minor, Baroarolle, Four Etudes, Sonato Opus 35, Mazurko, Valse and Polonaise.

American Apr 28

PADEREWSKI IN CHOPIN PROGRAM

Today in Symphony hall at 3:30 Mr. Paderewski will play these pieces by Chopin: Fantasia, four preludes, Nos. 15, 16, 21 and 24; two nocturnes, ballade in A flat, scherzo B flat minor, Barcarolle, four etudes, Nos. 6, 10, 7 and 11, sonata opus 35, mazurka, valse and polonaise.

Herald Apr 29

SYMPHONY HALL, Today at 3:30, Ignace Jan Paderewski, Pianist. Chopin Program—Fantasia, four preludes, numbers 15, 16, 21 and 24; two nocturnes, ballade in A flat, Scherzo in B flat minor, Barcarolle, four etudes, numbers 6, 10, 7 and 11; sonata, opus 35; Mazurka, valse, polonaise, all by Chopin.

Globe Apr 29

It is stated that Paderewski has played this season to audiences that have paid in cash for tickets more than $500,000. His largest single audience was in San Francisco, where 10,000 people paid exactly $24,690 to hear him. His total receipts for his three Boston recitals, with audiences that filled Symphony Hall to its capacity, have been announced as $24,500, paid by a slightly smaller number of persons. He could have had audiences of 15,000 at each concert here, had there been a large enough hall.

Globe Apr 29

PADEREWSKI TODAY

This afternoon, in Symphony Hall at 3:30, Paderewski will be heard in the following all-Chopin programme: "Fantasia," four preludes, Noumbers 15, 16, 21 and 24; two nocturnes, ballade in A flat, scherzo B flat minor, barcarolle, four etudes, Numbers 6, 10, 7 and 11; sonata, Opus 35; mazurka, valse and polonaise.

Post Apr 29

PADEREWSKI PLAYS CHOPIN PROGRAM

Wild Applause Rewards the Pianist's Performance

Yesterday afternoon Ignace Jan Paderewski gave his third recital this season before an audience that filled every nook and corner of Symphony hall. This was his program, all by Chopin:

Fantasia, op. 49; Four Preludes, Nos. 15, 16, 21, 24; Two Nocturnes, op. 15; Ballade, A-flat; Scherzo, B-flat minor; Barcarolle; Four Etudes, No. 6, op. 25; No. 10, op. 10; Nos. 7, 11, op. 25; Sonata, op. 35; Mazurka, op. 17, No. 4; Valse; Polonaise, op. 53.

Of Mr. Paderewski it has been the fashion to say this winter that he has grown from a great pianist into a mighty musician of such overwhelming force that a mere piano no longer serves his needs. This view may be right. It seems, though, more reasonable to believe that no man can travel constantly the length and breadth of the land giving 70 concerts in one season, and always play his best. People who went to Symphony hall yesterday to witness bigness running riot must have felt at a loss. It is to be hoped they found compensation in beautiful pianoforte playing.

For Mr. Paderewski played in truth beautifully. If at times to be sure he gave of his strength too freely, during the first half of the program, in any case he stopped short of real abuse of the instrument. If sometimes, too, he played so fast—as in one or two of the preludes—that much detail got ruthlessly pushed aside, this did not happen often. And there were the two nocturnes for moments of rest, music exquisitely played, with a loveliness of tone Mr. Paderewski himself could not have bettered 25 years ago.

They had that individual atmosphere about them, too, these nocturnes, that for Chopin one feels is precisely right. So too had the D-flat prelude, the easiest Chopin piece there is to wander astray in, and the ballad, and the scherzo. What the elements are of this atmosphere, who shall say? The sweetness of maple syrup, though, insipid sentimentality, and rhythm twisted out of shape are surely not among them. So much Mr. Paderewski proved yesterday. And the wild applause that followed his playing proved that people like the real thing when they hear it. There were small children in the audience, taken perhaps to the concert so that they may tell their childrens' children they heard the great Paderewski. If only they could tell them too just what he did with Chopin!

R. R. G.

Herald Apr 30

PADEREWSKI HEARD IN THIRD RECITAL

Chopin Program Delights Great Audience

Paderewski played a Chopin program yesterday afternoon to an audience that crowded Symphony Hall, listened with almost breathless attention, and at the end refused to go away without numerous extra pieces. Hundreds waited and clapped madly for 10 minutes after the final encore. There was a throng around the stage door waiting to see the great pianist step into his car.

Nobody can accuse Paderewski of not giving his audiences generous programs, played with his best skill. Yesterday's entertainment, including encores, lasted almost three hours, with very brief waits between pieces. Yet at the end it was necessary to send someone out to lock up the piano to convince an enthusiastic throng that the great pianist could give them no more.

Program and encores were all from Chopin. Paderewski has always shown especial devotion to his great compatriot's music. Praise of his playing at this late date, would be an impertinence. The most exquisite felicities in yesterday's performance were in the phrasing and shading of simple melodies, in the trio of the Funeral March, in the 15th Prelude and in the Ballade in A flat.

The real proof of Paderewski's genius is in this ability to do simple things, things often within the supposed range of average amateur performers, with absolute perfection. There may be room for mistake in one's astonished praise of the "Thunder and Lightning" virtuoso player's fireworks. But nobody with any music in him can fail to be deeply moved at a melody perfectly sung.

Paderewski's interpretations are now most poignant, most unforgettable, not in the fiery things, like the B flat minor Scherzo and the A flat Polonaise, but in the quietly, almost hopelessly tragic moods of such pieces as the Etude, opus 25, No. 7, or the trio of the Scherzo in the B flat minor Sonata.

His playing yesterday was not flawless in technique. There were moments of pounding, there were moments of brittle touch, there were even a few wrong notes, if one's ears may be trusted. But nobody else in our time has ever made the piano so human an instrument as Paderewski makes it. Only one or two other living musicians share his power of touching the hearts of the plain people while giving them of the best art [illegible]

Globe Apr 30

PADEREWSKI KEEPS PLAYING

Responds to Demands of Delighted Audience

BY OLIN DOWNES

Symphony Hall was, of course, crowded to capacity when Paderewski played a Chopin programme yesterday afternoon. Equally, of course, there were frantic demonstrations of delight, and a great number of encores resulting in virtually a second concert, as the audience left its seats and crowded down to the front of the hall. These things happen, invariably, when Paderewski plays.

We do not believe they happen because Mr. Paderewski has had a singularly dramatic career in politics as well as music. We think they come directly from the creative power [illegible] the sheer spell of his art. [illegible]

No other pianist of whom we know can so impress a hearer with the [illegible] wonder of the simplest phrase. [illegible] is likely to be a perfectly [illegible] sage, heard hundreds of [illegible]. It may be so familiar that the listener sees with his mind's [illegible] page of music as the [illegible]. Nevertheless there is [illegible] emotion of beauty [illegible] the hearer long [illegible] ceased to sound [illegible]

The mastery of all this is perfectly concealed. That Paderewski has faithfully, humbly, [illegible] and the emotional [illegible] phrase that [illegible] with the [illegible] might [illegible] a musi[illegible] not conce[illegible] they feel [illegible]

This [illegible] Mr. Paderewski [illegible] at [illegible]

Post Apr 30

Paderewski

Paderewski gave his third and last recital of the season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, playing the following works of Chopin: Fantasia, op. 49; four preludes, Nos. 15, 16, 21, 24; two nocturnes, op. 15; ballade in A flat; scherzo in B flat minor; Barcarolle; four études, op. 25, No. 6, op. 10, No. 10, op. 25, Nos. 7 and 11; sonata, op. 35; mazurka, op. 17, No. 4; valse; polonaise, op. 53.

Plenty of contrast, obviously, and emphasized by the sharp light and shade of the player and his dynamic variety. Yet this program was by no means so interesting as his previous ones in Boston this season. It was a program of pianism and sentiment: the master pianist revealing the beauties of the great composer for the piano; also, Pole interpreted by Pole. But with so much Chopin the feeling is inescapable that this music is after all only glorified exercises for the piano. One misses the deeper musicality of greater composers, longs for the grandeur of a Beethoven sonata. Even the "Marcia funebre" could not fill the need. And why cannot Paderewski omit the sequel of the presto, which seems such bathos?

Yet even a comparatively uninteresting program could not hide the genius of the player. There were the familiar violence to the instrument and the peculiarities of interpretation of which nobody can complain in the greatest pianist of the generation. There were also the extraordinary beauties of lyric phrase and cascading run, and the hovering clouds of shimmering tone that were so particularly noticeable in the op. 10, No. 10. The audience of course filled all available space and remained for its extra program.

Monitor Apr 30

OVATION GIVEN PADEREWSKI AT RECITAL

By ZOE FABER

Scores crowded down to the stage and begged for encores and still more encores and got them to the number of six or seven at the close of the program that Jan Paderewski gave yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall to an audience that lined the length of the hall with standees.

Chopin's and only Chopin's name appeared on the program. Of all the things that the artist chose to play those that were most appealing for one reason or another were the Fantasia; the Raindrop Prelude; the A-flat Ballade and the B-flat minor Scherzo. Such playing as distinguished these numbers is nothing short of remarkable.

Pawerewski seemed in a happy mood. He touched the keys with a delicacy that was like the finest spun cobweb and when he sang, it was a song that ran the gauntlet of all the emotions. He thundered a bit, now and then, it is true, but after all, a Paderewski recital would not be quite that if he didn't, would it? Genius, it seems, is not to be questioned.

At any rate, it was a happy audience that went home at the end of a long afternoon and there were not a few faces that were fairly beaming with happiness or (let us hope) inspiration!

American Apr 30

Paderewski April 29th

Items of the Day

It is safe to say that Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon April 29, will not contain all that wish to hear Mr. Paderewski. Yet the disappointed may take comfort. From next November through next April he will again make a round of American cities—Boston thrice included.

Transcript April 13

Sunday afternoon, April 29, in Symphony Hall, a third and final concert—for the season—of piano-pieces played by Mr. Paderewski, returned to the practice of his profession in all the fulness and the fineness of his powers as technician, musician, poet, man of mastery and man of genius. The years only ripen, deepen and the more reveal him. Once again a rejoicing public will hail him.

Transcript Apr. 14

PADEREWSKI

In Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 29 at 3:30, Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, will give his third and last concert of the season in Boston.

Traveler April 14

PADEREWSKI AGAIN

Paderewski will give his farewell concert of the season at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 29.

Advertiser April 15

PADEREWSKI

Returning from his tour of the western United States which has extended as far as the Pacific coast, Mr. Paderewski will give his farewell concert of the season at Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 29, at 3:30.

Herald April 15

Paderewski

Returning from his tour of the Western United States, which has extended as far as the Pacific coast, Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, will give his farewell concert of the season at Symphony Hall on Sunday afternoon, April 29, at 3:30.

Post April 15

Paderewski's recital at Symphony Hall, April 29, offers the last chance this season for those who could not get tickets for his two previous Boston concerts to hear him. Every seat will be sold far in advance, unless precedents fail.

Globe April 15

SUNDAY afternoon, April 29, in Symphony Hall, a third and final concert—for the season—of piano pieces played by Mr. Paderewski, returned to the practice of his profession in the fulness and the fineness of his powers as technician, musician, poet, man of mastery and man of genius. The years only ripen, deepen and the more reveal him. Once again a rejoicing public will hail him. Music of Chopin fill his programme, vis.: Fantasia, Op. 49; Four Preludes, Nos. 15, 16, 21 and 24. Two Nocturnes, Op. 15; Ballad in A flat; Scherzo in B flat minor; Barcarolle; Four Studies, No. 6 of Op. 25; No. 10 of Op. 10, and Nos. 7 and 11 of Op. 25; Sonata, Op. 35; Mazurka, Op. 17, No. 4; a Waltz and the Polonaise, Op. 53.

Transcript Apr 21

PADEREWSKI TO RETURN

Paderewski will give a special Chopin program in Symphony hall on Sunday afternoon, April 29, at 3:30, to include the fantasia, four preludes, two nocturnes, ballad in A flat, scherzo in B flat minor, barcarolle, four etudes, "Funeral March," sonata, mazurka, waltz and polonaise.

Traveler Apr 21

PADEREWSKI AND CHOPIN

Mr. Paderewski will give a Chopin program at his third and last recital of the Boston season to be given in Symphony hall next Sunday afternoon, April 29, at 3:30. The numbers are:

Fantasia Op. 49.
Four Preludes, Nos. 15, 16, 21, 24.
Two nocturnes Op. 15.
Ballade, A flat.
Scherzo, B flat minor.
Barcarolle No. 6.
Four Etudes, No. 6 op. 25, No. 10 op. 10, Nos. 7, 11 op. 25.
Sonata Op. 35.
Mazurka op. 17 No. 4.
Valse.
Polonaise Op. 53.

Herald Apr 22

Paderewski's choice of an all-Chopin program for his third and final Boston concert next Sunday will gratify the many who feel that he is preeminent in his great compatriot's music. Paderewski is announced for another American tour next season, with several appearances in this city, a fact which may console the very many likely to be unable to get tickets for next Sunday.

Globe Apr 22

PADEREWSKI PROGRAM

Paderewski will give an all Chopin program at Symphony Hall next Sunday afternoon. The numbers are: Fantasia op. 49; four preludes Nos. 15, 16, 21, 24; two nocturnes, op. 15; ballade, A flat; Scherzo B flat minor; Barcarolle

Advertiser Apr 22

Paderewski and Chopin

To Symphony Hall tomorrow afternoon for the final Sunday Concert of the season comes Mr. Paderewski, returned to the practice of his profession in the fullness and the fineness of his powers as technician, musician, poet, man of mastery and man of genius. The years only ripen, deepen and the more reveal him. Once again a rejoicing public will hail him. Music of Chopin fill his programme, viz.: Fantasia, Op. 49: Four Preludes, Nos. 15, 16, 21 and 24. Two Nocturnes, Op. 15; Ballad in A flat; Scherzo in B flat minor; Barcarolle; Four Studies, No. 6 of Op. 25; No. 10 of Op. 10, and Nos. 7 and 11 of Op. 25; Sonata, Op. 35; Mazurka, Op. 17, No. 4; a Waltz and the Polonaise, Op. 53.

Transcript Apr 28

Paderewski to Be Heard in All-Chopin Program Tomorrow

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony hall at 3:30 o'clock Paderewski will be heard in the following all-Chopin programme: Fantasia, Four Preludes, Two Nocturnes, Ballade in A flat, Scherzo B flat minor, Borcarolle, Four Etudes, Sonata Opus 35, Mazurka, Valse and Polonaise.

Traveler Apr 28

PADEREWSKI AGAIN

Tomorrow afternoon in Symphony Hall at 3:30 o'clock Paderewski will be heard in the following all-Chopin programme: Fantasia, Four Preludes, Two Nocturnes, Ballads in A flat, Scherzo B flat minor, Baroarolle, Four Etudes, Sonato Opus 35, Mazurko, Valse and Polonaise.

American Apr 28

PADEREWSKI IN CHOPIN PROGRAM

Today in Symphony hall at 3:30 Mr. Paderewski will play these pieces by Chopin: Fantasia, four preludes, Nos. 15, 16, 21 and 24; two nocturnes, ballade in A flat, soherzo B [illegible] minor, Barcarolle, four etudes, Nos. 6, 10, 7 and 11, sonata opus 35, mazurka, valse and polonaise.

Herald Apr 29

SYMPHONY HALL, Today at 3:30, Ignace Jan Paderewski, Pianist. Chopin Program—Fantasia, four preludes, numbers 15, 16, 21 and 24; two nocturnes, ballade in A flat, Scherzo in B flat minor, Barcarolle, four etudes, numbers 6, 10, 7 and 11; sonata, opus 35; Mazurka, valse, polonaise, all by Chopin.

Globe Apr 29

It is stated that Paderewski has played this season to audiences that have paid in cash for tickets more than $500,000. His largest single audience was in San Francisco, where 10,000 people paid exactly $24,590 to hear him. His total receipts for his three Boston recitals, with audiences that filled Symphony Hall to its capacity, have been announced as $24,500, paid by a slightly smaller number of persons. He could have had audiences of 15,000 at each concert here, had there been a large enough hall.

Globe Apr 29

PADEREWSKI TODAY

This afternoon, in Symphony Hall at 3:30, Paderewski will be heard in the following all-Chopin programme: "Fantasia," four preludes, Noumbers 15, 16, 21 and 24; two nocturnes, ballade in A flat, scherzo B flat minor, barcarolle, four etudes, Numbers 6, 10, 7 and 11; sonata, Opus 35; mazurka, valse and polonaise.

Post Apr 29

PADEREWSKI PLAYS CHOPIN PROGRAM

Her 4/30

Wild Applause Rewards the Pianist's Performance

Yesterday afternoon Ignace Jan Paderewski gave his third recital this season before an audience that filled every nook and corner of Symphony hall. This was his program, all by Chopin:

Fantasia, op. 49; Four Preludes, Nos. 15, 16, 21, 24; Two Nocturnes, op. 15; Ballade, A-flat; Scherzo, B-flat minor; Barcarolle; Four Etudes, No. 6, op. 25; No. 10, op. 10; Nos. 7, 11, op. 25; Sonata, op. 35; Mazurka, op. 17, No. 4; Valse; Polonaise, op. 53.

Of Mr. Paderewski it has been the fashion to say this winter that he has grown from a great pianist into a mighty musician of such overwhelming force that a mere piano no longer serves his needs. This view may be right. It seems, though, more reasonable to believe that no man can travel constantly the length and breadth of the land giving 70 concerts in one season, and always play his best. People who went to Symphony hall yesterday to witness bigness running riot must have felt at a loss. It is to be hoped they found compensation in beautiful pianoforte playing.

For Mr. Paderewski played in truth beautifully. If at times to be sure he gave of his strength too freely, during the first half of the program, in any case he stopped short of real abuse of the instrument. If sometimes, too, he played so fast—as in one or two of the preludes—that much detail got ruthlessly pushed aside, this did not happen often. And there were the two nocturnes for moments of rest, music exquisitely played, with a loveliness of tone Mr. Paderewski himself could not have bettered 25 years ago.

They had that individual atmosphere about them, too, these nocturnes, that for Chopin one feels is precisely right. So too had the D-flat prelude, the easiest Chopin piece there is to wander astray in, and the ballad, and the scherzo. What the elements are of this atmosphere, who shall say? The sweetness of maple syrup, though, insipid sentimentality, and rhythm twisted out of shape are surely not among them. So much Mr. Paderewski proved yesterday. And the wild applause that followed his playing proved that people like the real thing when they hear it. There were small children in the audience, taken perhaps to the concert so that they may tell their childrens' children they heard the great Paderewski. If only they could tell them too just what he did with Chopin! R. R. G.

Herald Apr 30

PADEREWSKI HEARD IN THIRD RECITAL

Chopin Program Delights Great Audience

Paderewski played a Chopin program yesterday afternoon to an audience that crowded Symphony Hall, listened with almost breathless attention, and at the end refused to go away without numerous extra pieces. Hundreds waited and clapped madly for 10 minutes after the final encore. There was a throng around the stage door waiting to see the great pianist step into his car.

Nobody can accuse Paderewski of not giving his audiences generous programs, played with his best skill. Yesterday's entertainment, including encores, lasted almost three hours, with very brief waits between pieces. Yet at the end it was necessary to send someone out to lock up the piano to convince an enthusiastic throng that the great pianist could give them no more.

Program and encores were all from Chopin. Paderewski has always shown especial devotion to his great compatriot's music. Praise of his playing at this late date, would be an impertinence. The most exquisite felicities in yesterday's performance were in the phrasing and shading of simple melodies, in the trio of the Funeral March, in the 15th Prelude and in the Ballade in A flat.

The real proof of Paderewski's genius is in this ability to do simple things, things often within the supposed range of average amateur performers, with absolute perfection. There may be room for mistake in one's astonished praise of the "Thunder and Lightning" virtuoso player's fireworks. But nobody with any music in him can fail to be deeply moved at a melody perfectly sung.

Paderewski's interpretations are now most poignant, most unforgettable, not in the fiery things, like the B flat minor Scherzo and the A flat Polonaise, but in the quietly, almost hopelessly tragic moods of such pieces as the Etude, opus 25, No. 7, or the trio of the Scherzo in the B flat minor Sonata.

His playing yesterday was not flawless in technique. There were moments of pounding, there were moments of brittle touch, there were even a few wrong notes, if one's ears may be trusted. But nobody else in our time has ever made the piano so human an instrument as Paderewski makes it. Only one or two other living musicians share his power of touching the hearts of the plain people while giving them of the best art affords.

Globe Apr 30

PADEREWSKI KEEPS PLAYING

Responds to Demands of Delighted Audience

BY OLIN DOWNES

Symphony Hall was, of course, crowded to capacity when Paderewski played a Chopin programme yesterday afternoon. Equally, of course, there were frantic demonstrations of delight, and a great number of encores resulting in virtually a second concert, as the audience left its seats and crowded down to the front of the hall. These things happen, invariably, when Paderewski plays.

We do not believe they happen because Mr. Paderewski has had a singularly dramatic career in politics as well as music. We think they arise directly from the creative power [illegible] the sheer spell of his art.

No other pianist of whom we know can so impress a hearer with the [illegible] wonder of the simplest phrase. [illegible] is likely to be a perfectly [illegible] sage, heard hundreds of times before. It may be so familiar that the listener sees with his mind's eye the printed page of music as the fingers fall. Nevertheless there is [illegible] emotion of beauty which [illegible] with the hearer long after the tones have ceased to sound.

The mastery of all this is perfectly concealed. That Paderewski has faithfully, humbly, lovingly studied the curve and the emotional [illegible] of every phrase that [illegible] with the same [illegible] as [illegible] might study for 20 [illegible] a muscle in the calf of the leg, need not concern the audience—save that they feel it [illegible] consciously [illegible] awed by the [illegible]

This was next [illegible] 70 concerts Mr. Paderewski has given this season. Plans have already been perfected for a tour of at least equal proportions next winter. [illegible]

Post Apr 30.

Paderewski

Paderewski gave his third and last recital of the season in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, playing the following works of Chopin: Fantasia, op. 49; four preludes, Nos. 15, 16, 21, 24; two nocturnes, op. 15; ballade in A flat; scherzo in B flat minor; Barcarolle; four études, op. 25, No. 6, op. 10, No. 10, op. 25, Nos. 7 and 11; sonata, op. 35; mazurka, op. 17, No. 4; valse; polonaise, op. 53.

Plenty of contrast, obviously, and emphasized by the sharp light and shade of the player and his dynamic variety. Yet this program was by no means so interesting as his previous ones in Boston this season. It was a program of pianism and sentiment: the master pianist revealing the beauties of the great composer for the piano; also, Pole interpreted by Pole. But with so much Chopin the feeling is inescapable that this music is after all only glorified exercises for the piano. One misses the deeper musicality of greater composers, longs for the grandeur of a Beethoven sonata. Even the "Marcia funebre" could not fill the need. And why cannot Paderewski omit the sequel of the presto, which seems such bathos?

Yet even a comparatively uninteresting program could not hide the genius of the player. There were the familiar violence to the instrument and the peculiarities of interpretation of which nobody can complain in the greatest pianist of the generation. There were also the extraordinary beauties of lyric phrase and cascading run, and the hovering clouds of shimmering tone that were so particularly noticeable in the op. 10, No. 10. The audience of course filled all available space and remained for its extra program.

Monitor apr 30

OVATION GIVEN PADEREWSKI AT RECITAL

By ZOE FABER

Scores crowded down to the stage and begged for encores and still more encores and got them to the number of six or seven at the close of the program that Jan Paderewski gave yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall to an audience that lined the length of the hall with standees.

Chopin's and only Chopin's name appeared on the program. Of all the things that the artist chose to play those that were most appealing for one reason or another were the Fantasia; the Raindrop Prelude; the A-flat Ballade and the B-flat minor Scherzo. Such playing as distinguished these numbers is nothing short of remarkable.

Pawerewski seemed in a happy mood. He touched the keys with a delicacy that was like the finest spun cobweb and when he sang, it was a song that ran the gauntlet of all the emotions. He thundered a bit, now and then, it is true, but after all, a Paderewski recital would not be quite that if he didn't, would it? Genius, it seems, is not to be questioned.

At any rate, it was a happy audience that went home at the end of a long afternoon and there were not a few faces that were fairly beaming with happiness or (let us hope) inspiration!

American Apr 30

[142]

Paderewski Questionless

As Mr. Paderewski has conquered two generations in American concert-rooms, so now he prevails with a third. Elders were not lacking in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon—elders who could remember even those recitals of the nineties that first disclosed him. Yet the whole aspect of the audience was youthful, even as it is when Mr. Kreisler plays or this or that eminence sings. There are those who profess to despair of these younger folk in Bostonian concert-rooms, and it is quite true that mediocrity or pretence may seldom assemble them. Yet out they come to the summits of music and the summits of performance. They do not fail Mr. Paderewski or Mr. Kreisler or Mme. Onegin. They flock to a "Wagner Programme"; they are not few or far between at the supplementary concerts of the Symphony Orchestra. Beyond the middle-aged, they are the life to every such occasion, catching, fostering, making the spirit of it. As it seemed yesterday, not a hand was still in the length and breadth of Symphony Hall when Mr. Paderewski, slipping through a half-opened door in the singular fashion habitual with him, came first to his place. Nor would the clapping yield, until of himself he had bowed it into silence. As rapt was the listening; not even a rustled programme or a belated April cough might trouble it; while the applause was the plaudits of spirits illuded, illumined, released above themselves. For two hours such was the listening company under the mingled spell of Chopin and Mr. Paderewski. For half an hour more he also played extra pieces. For as the years mount, so also seems to mount the pleasure with which he exercises his powers. More zestful, than his remembered forties are his actual sixties.

From Chopin came all Mr. Paderewski's numbers—the Fantasia and the Sonata of the Funeral March; Preludes and Studies, four of each; two Nocturnes; a Ballad, a Scherzo, a Waltz, a Mazurka, a Polonaise, even the Barcarolle—a complete round of the composer, save only the pieces in which to his detriment he wrestled with an orchestra. Time and again returned the Chopin of the wondrous melody, lucent, crystalline, bell-like; the Chopin of the ornament that is as the spray of fancy sun-shot; the Chopin who, of a sudden, will arrest his formal progress that the heavens of beauty may open; the Chopin whose wings of imagination may as suddenly beat from depths to heights of power. Through the Preludes and Studies went the composer who about technical exercise winds the garlands of capricious and poetizing fancy. Through the Mazurka, the Waltz and the Polonaise went the composer who makes a rhythm of the dance rhythm also to dream and vision. The Chopin of fantasy sounded here and sounded there. The Chopin of power rang through the Sonata, the Scherzo and the Polonaise. And at every turn with every piece sounded also the Chopin who was intuitive genius of the piano; who, overflowing with imagination, perceived that form does but guide and deepen and enrich the flood—so long as matter and matter meet in a single sensibility and reveal themselves in as fused and perfect sensation.

In every piece, at every turn, Mr. Paderewski semed full and flawless voice to this Chopin. Playing them elsewhere, as the brethren of reviewing recount, he may have over-driven tone and instrument; may have let left hand wait upon right; may have disclosed a certain irritability at the end of long and trying concerts. Yet of these idiosyncracies, of this infirmity he yesterday gave no sign. Again he was the perfect pianist of this his year of artistic rebirth. Those who would marvel at his technical skill, like to divination of the mind become achievement of the fingers and the wrist, might hear it through the Studies, the Bacarolle, the Preludes. Those who would hear him as architect of music, uprearing the composer's edifice in spirit and in truth, had only to follow him through the Fantasia, the Sonata or the Ballad. Those who prefer him as poetic temperament, glamoring whatever music it essays, might sup full from the Waltz, the Mazurka, the Nocturnes and the Finale of the Sonata. Those who crave the Paderewski of puissance, the Paderewski who, above all other pianists of our time, may strike the high, heroic note had only to listen to the Scherzo, the Polonaise, the Funeral March of the Sonata. Mr. Paderewski has not only flowered anew. He has flowered also enriched—and with the most precious of these new riches, which is self-mastery. We have heard Paderewski at full used to say the generation of the turn of the century. They have not, unless they also heard him in this winter and this spring of 1923.

H. T. P.

Transcript Apr 30

BOSTON SUNDAY POST PICTORIAL SECTION Jan 8

LATEST PHOTO OF CONDUCTOR P

Paderewski Questionless

As Mr. Paderewski has conquered two generations in American concert-rooms, so now he prevails with a third. Elders were not lacking in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon—elders who could remember even those recitals of the nineties that first disclosed him. Yet the whole aspect of the audience was youthful, even as it is when Mr. Kreisler plays or this or that eminence sings. There are those who profess to despair of these younger folk in Bostonian concert-rooms, and it is quite true that mediocrity or pretence may seldom assémble them. Yet out they come to the summits of music and the summits of performance. They do not fail Mr. Paderewski or Mr. Kreisler or Mme. Onegin. They flock to a "Wagner Programme"; they are not few or far between at the supplementary concerts of the Symphony Orchestra. Beyond the middle-aged, they are the life to every such occasion, catching, fostering, making the spirit of it. As it seemed yesterday, not a hand was still in the length and breadth of Symphony Hall when Mr. Paderewski, slipping through a half-opened door in the singular fashion habitual with him, came first to his place. Nor would the clapping yield, until of himself he had bowed it into silence. As rapt was the listening; not even a rustled programme or a belated April cough might trouble it; while the applause was the plaudits of spirits illuded, illumined, released above themselves. For two hours such was the listening company under the mingled spell of Chopin and Mr. Paderewski. For half an hour more he also played extra pieces. For as the years mount, so also seems to mount the pleasure with which he exercises his powers. More zestful, than his remembered forties are his actual sixties.

From Chopin came all Mr. Paderewski's numbers—the Fantasia and the Sonata of the Funeral March; Preludes and Studies, four of each; two Nocturnes; a Ballad, a Scherzo, a Waltz, a Mazurka, a Polonaise, even the Barcarolle—a complete round of the composer, save only the pieces in which to his detriment he wrestled with an orchestra. Time and again returned the Chopin of the wondrous melody, lucent, crystalline, bell-like; the Chopin of the ornament that is as the spray of fancy sun-shot; the Chopin who, of a sudden, will arrest his formal progress that the heavens of beauty may open; the Chopin whose wings of imagination may as suddenly beat from depths to heights of power. Through the Preludes and Studies went the composer who about technical exercise winds the garlands of capricious and poetizing fancy. Through the Mazurka, the Waltz and the Polonaise went the composer who makes a rhythm of the dance rhythm also to dream and vision. The Chopin of fantasy sounded here and sounded there. The Chopin of power rang through the Sonata, the Scherzo and the Polonaise. And at every turn with every piece sounded also the Chopin who was intuitive genius of the piano; who, overflowing with imagination, perceived that form does but guide and deepen and enrich the flood—so long as matter and matter meet in a single sensibility and reveal themselves in as fused and perfect sensation.

In every piece, at every turn, Mr. Paderewski semed full and flawless voice to this Chopin. Playing them elsewhere, as the brethren of reviewing recount, he may have over-driven tone and instrument; may have let left hand wait upon right; may have disclosed a certain irritability at the end of long and trying concerts. Yet of these idiosyncracies, of this infirmity he yesterday gave no sign. Again he was the perfect pianist of this his year of artistic rebirth. Those who would marvel at his technical skill, like to divination of the mind become achievement of the fingers and the wrist, might hear it through the Studies, the Bacarolle, the Preludes. Those who would hear him as architect of music, uprearing the composer's edifice in spirit and in truth, had only to follow him through the Fantasia, the Sonata or the Ballad. Those who prefer him as poetic temperament, glamoring whatever music it essays, might sup full from the Waltz, the Mazurka, the Nocturnes and the Finale of the Sonata. Those who crave the Paderewski of puissance, the Paderewski who, above all other pianists of our time, may strike the high, heroic note had only to listen to the Scherzo, the Polonaise, the Funeral March of the Sonata. Mr. Paderewski has not only flowered anew. He has flowered also enriched—and with the most precious of these new riches, which is self-mastery. We have heard Paderewski at full used to say the generation of the turn of the century. They have not, unless they also heard him in this winter and this spring of 1923.

H. T. P.

Transcript Apr 30

BOSTON SUNDAY POST PICTORIAL SECTION Jan 8

LATEST PHOTO OF CONDUCTOR P

Paderewski Questionless

Trans 4/30

As Mr. Paderewski has conquered two generations in American concert-rooms, so now he prevails with a third. Elders were not lacking in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon—elders who could remember even those recitals of the nineties that first disclosed him. Yet the whole aspect of the audience was youthful, even as it is when Mr. Kreisler plays or this or that eminence sings. There are those who profess to despair of these younger folk in Bostonian concert-rooms, and it is quite true that mediocrity or pretence may seldom assemble them. Yet out they come to the summits of music and the summits of performance. They do not fail Mr. Paderewski or Mr. Kreisler or Mme. Onegin. They flock to a "Wagner Programme"; they are not few or far between at the supplementary concerts of the Symphony Orchestra. Beyond the middle-aged, they are the life to every such occasion, catching, fostering, making the spirit of it. As it seemed yesterday, not a hand was still in the length and breadth of Symphony Hall when Mr. Paderewski, slipping through a half-opened door in the singular fashion habitual with him, came first to his place. Nor would the clapping yield, until of himself he had bowed it into silence. As rapt was the listening; not even a rustled programme or a belated April cough might trouble it; while the applause was the plaudits of spirits illuded, illumined, released above themselves. For two hours such was the listening company under the mingled spell of Chopin and Mr. Paderewski. For half an hour more he also played extra pieces. For as the years mount, so also seems to mount the pleasure with which he exercises his powers. More zestful, than his remembered forties are his actual sixties.

From Chopin came all Mr. Paderewski's numbers—the Fantasia and the Sonata of the Funeral March; Preludes and Studies, four of each; two Nocturnes; a Ballad, a Scherzo, a Waltz, a Mazurka, a Polonaise, even the Barcarolle—a complete round of the composer, save only the pieces in which to his detriment he wrestled with an orchestra. Time and again returned the Chopin of the wondrous melody, lucent, crystalline, bell-like; the Chopin of the ornament that is as the spray of fancy sun-shot; the Chopin who, of a sudden, will arrest his formal progress that the heavens of beauty may open; the Chopin whose wings of imagination may as suddenly beat from depths to heights of power. Through the Preludes and Studies went the composer who about technical exercise winds the garlands of capricious and poetizing fancy. Through the Mazurka, the Waltz and the Polonaise went the composer who makes a rhythm of the dance rhythm also to dream and vision. The Chopin of fantasy sounded here and sounded there. The Chopin of power rang through the Sonata, the Scherzo and the Polonaise. And at every turn with every piece sounded also the Chopin who was intuitive genius of the piano; who, overflowing with imagination, perceived that form does but guide and deepen and enrich the flood—so long as matter and matter meet in a single sensibility and reveal themselves in as fused and perfect sensation.

In every piece, at every turn, Mr. Paderewski semed full and flawless voice to this Chopin. Playing them elsewhere, as the brethren of reviewing recount, he may have over-driven tone and instrument; may have let left hand wait upon right; may have disclosed a certain irritability at the end of long and trying concerts. Yet of these idiosyncracies, of this infirmity he yesterday gave no sign. Again he was the perfect pianist of this his year of artistic rebirth. Those who would marvel at his technical skill, like to divination of the mind become achievement of the fingers and the wrist, might hear it through the Studies, the Bacarolle, the Preludes. Those who would hear him as architect of music, uprearing the composer's edifice in spirit and in truth, had only to follow him through the Fantasia, the Sonata or the Ballad. Those who prefer him as poetic temperament, glamoring whatever music it essays, might sup full from the Waltz, the Mazurka, the Nocturnes and the Finale of the Sonata. Those who crave the Paderewski of puissance, the Paderewski who, above all other pianists of our time, may strike the high, heroic note had only to listen to the Scherzo, the Polonaise, the Funeral March of the Sonata. Mr. Paderewski has not only flowered anew. He has flowered also enriched—and with the most precious of these new riches, which is self-mastery. We have heard Paderewski at full used to say the generation of the turn of the century. They have not, unless they also heard him in this winter and this spring of 1923.

H. T. P.

Transcript Apr 30

NOTICE

Empire Theatre, FALL RIVER, Mass.

Sunday Afternoon, December 31, at 3 o'clock

LEAVE (South Station) Boston. . . . . . 12:30 noon

Back Bay. 12:35

DUE FALL RIVER. 2:15

LEAVE Fall River. . . . . 5:37 p.m.

DUE Boston (Back Bay Station) 7:20

" (South Station) . . . . . 7:25 p.m.

W. H. BRENNAN, Manager.

Paderewski Questionless Jun 4/23

As Mr. Paderewski has conquered two generations in American concert-rooms, so now he prevails with a third. Elders were not lacking in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon—elders who could remember even those recitals of the nineties that first disclosed him. Yet the whole aspect of the audience was youthful, even as it is when Mr. Kreisler plays or this or that eminence sings. There are those who profess to despair of these younger folk in Bostonian concert-rooms, and it is quite true that mediocrity or pretence may seldom assemble them. Yet out they come to the summits of music and the summits of performance. They do not fail Mr. Paderewski or Mr. Kreisler or Mme. Onegin. They flock to a "Wagner Programme"; they are not few or far between at the supin spirit and in truth, had only to follow him through the Fantasia, the Sonata or the Ballad. Those who prefer him as poetic temperament, glamoring whatever music it essays, might sup full from the Waltz, the Mazurka, the Nocturnes and the Finale of the Sonata. Those who crave the Paderewski of puissance, the Paderewski who, above all other pianists of our time, may strike the high, heroic note had only to listen to the Scherzo, the Polonaise, the Funeral March of the Sonata. Mr. Paderewski has not only flowered anew. He has flowered also enriched—and with the most precious of these new riches, which is self-mastery. We have heard Paderewski at full used to say the generation of the turn of the century. They have not, unless they also heard him in this winter and this spring of 1923.

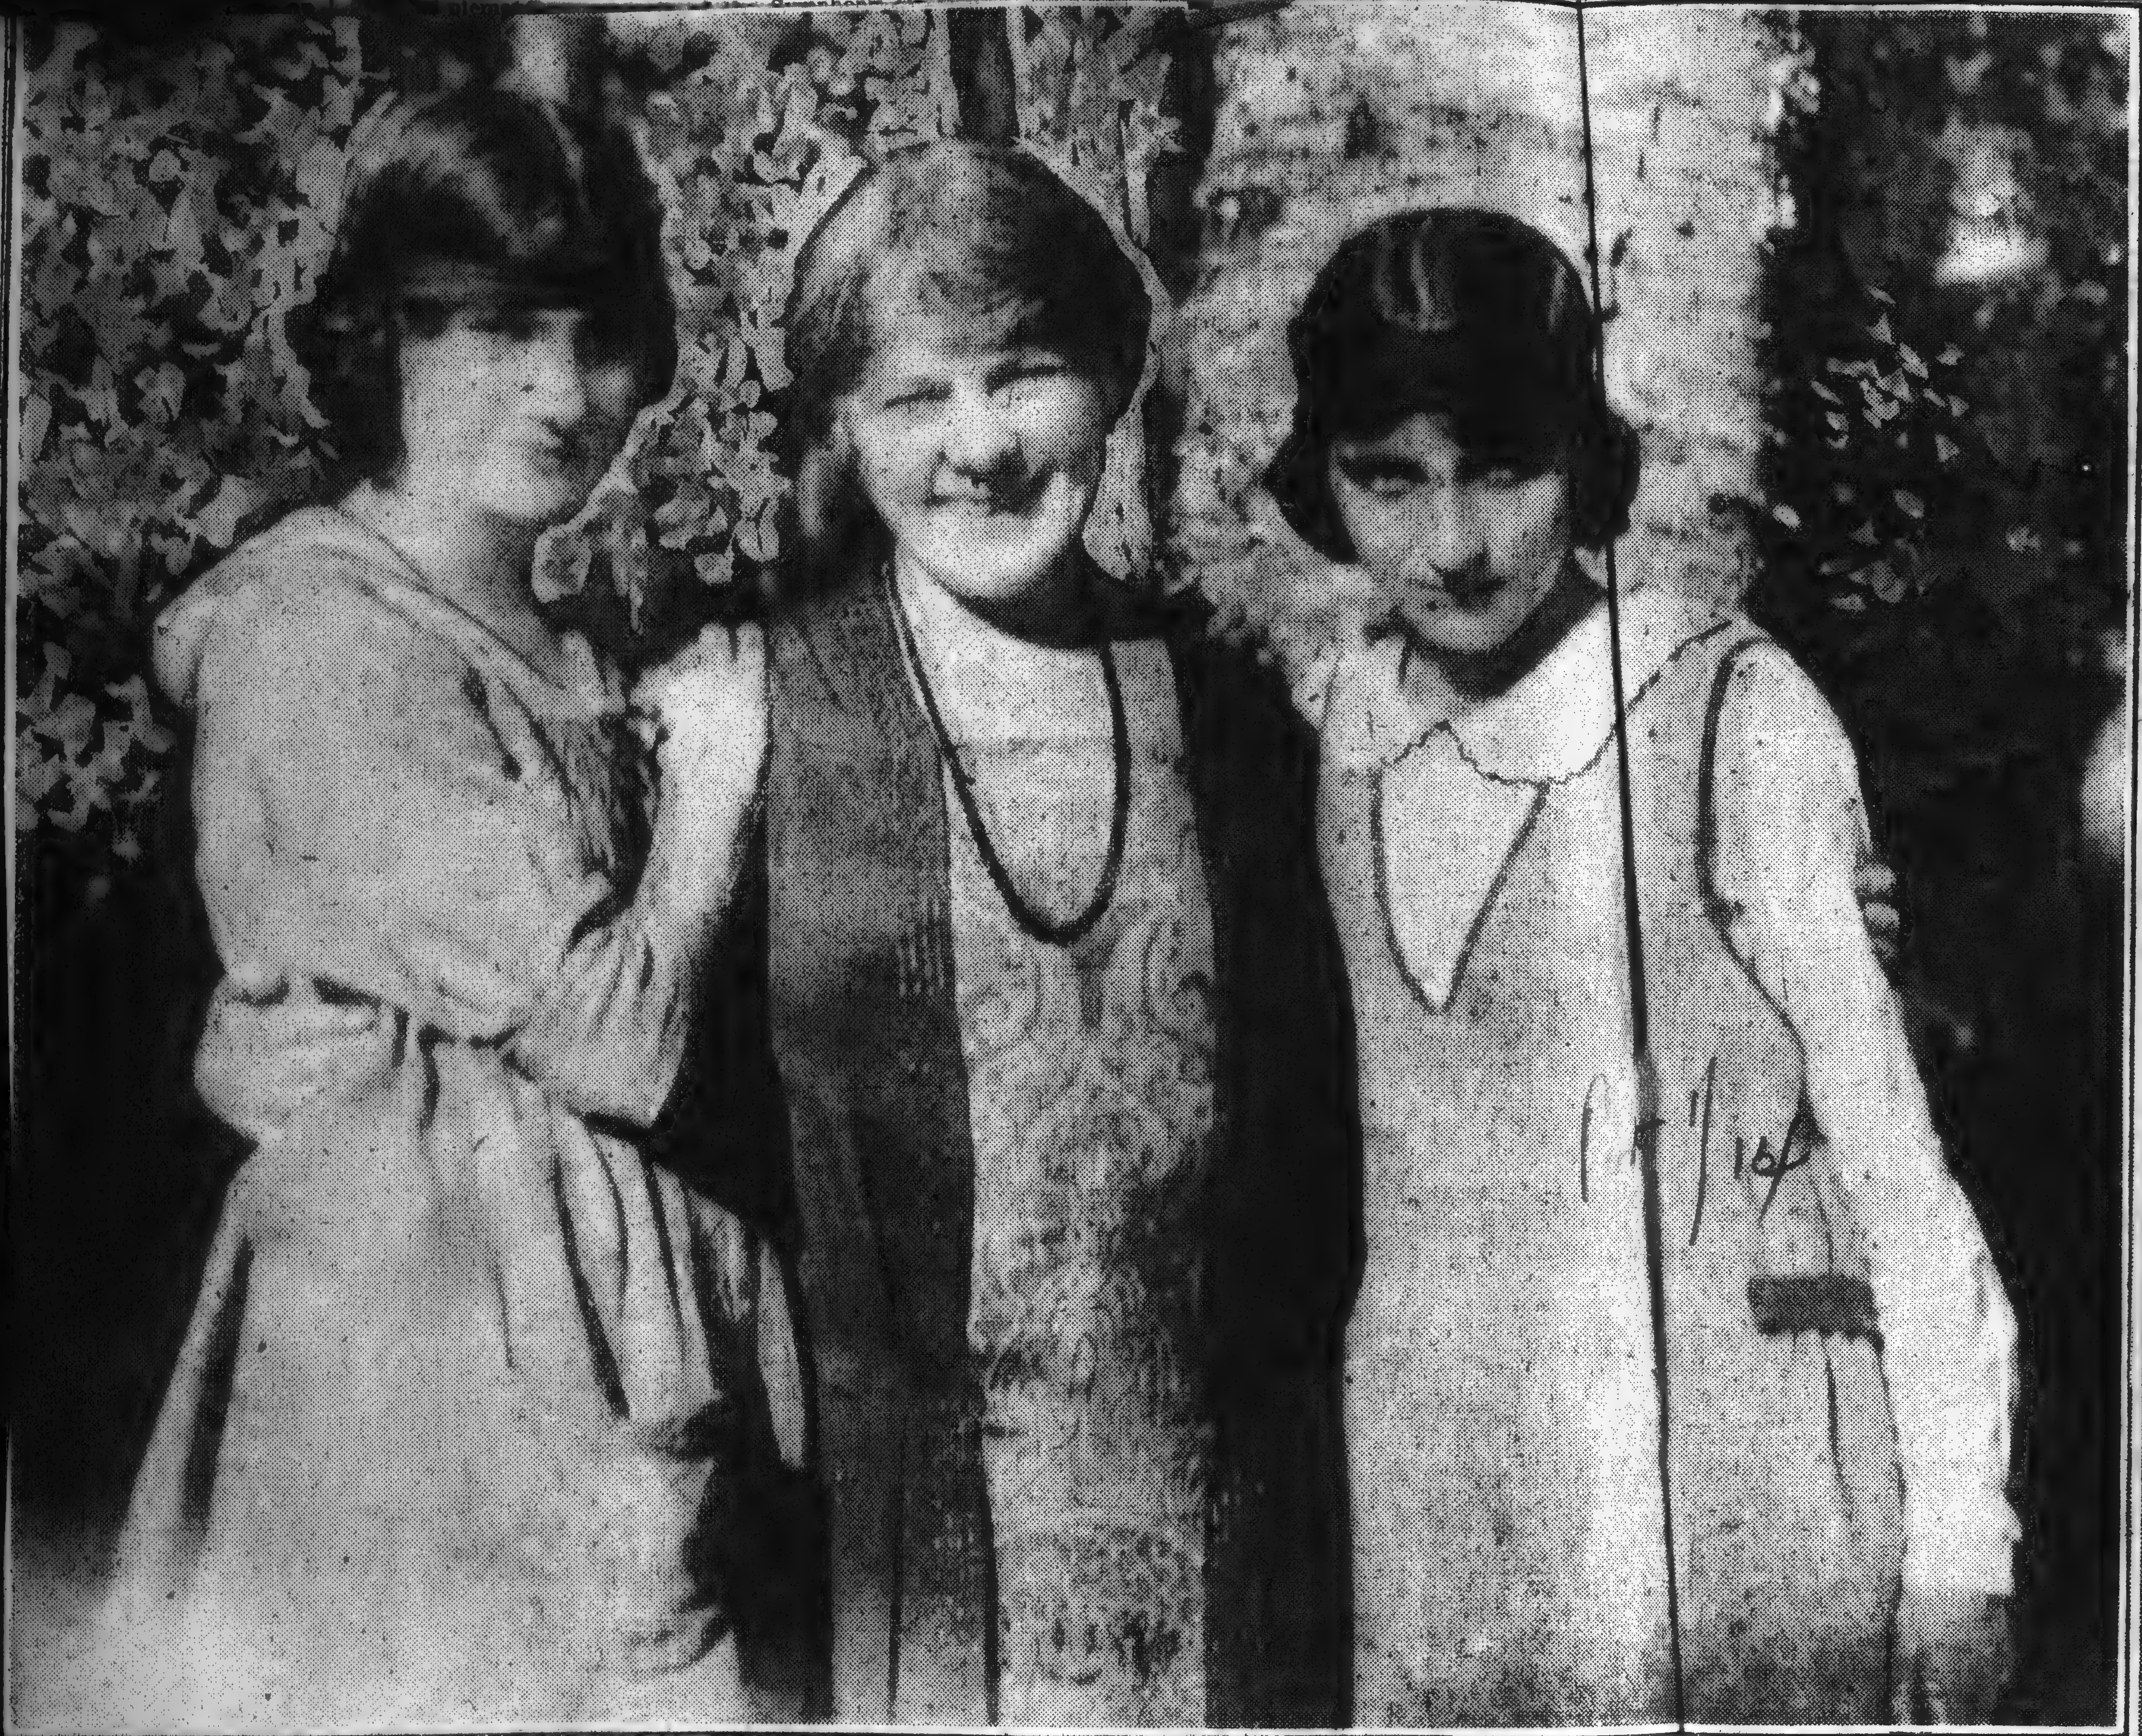
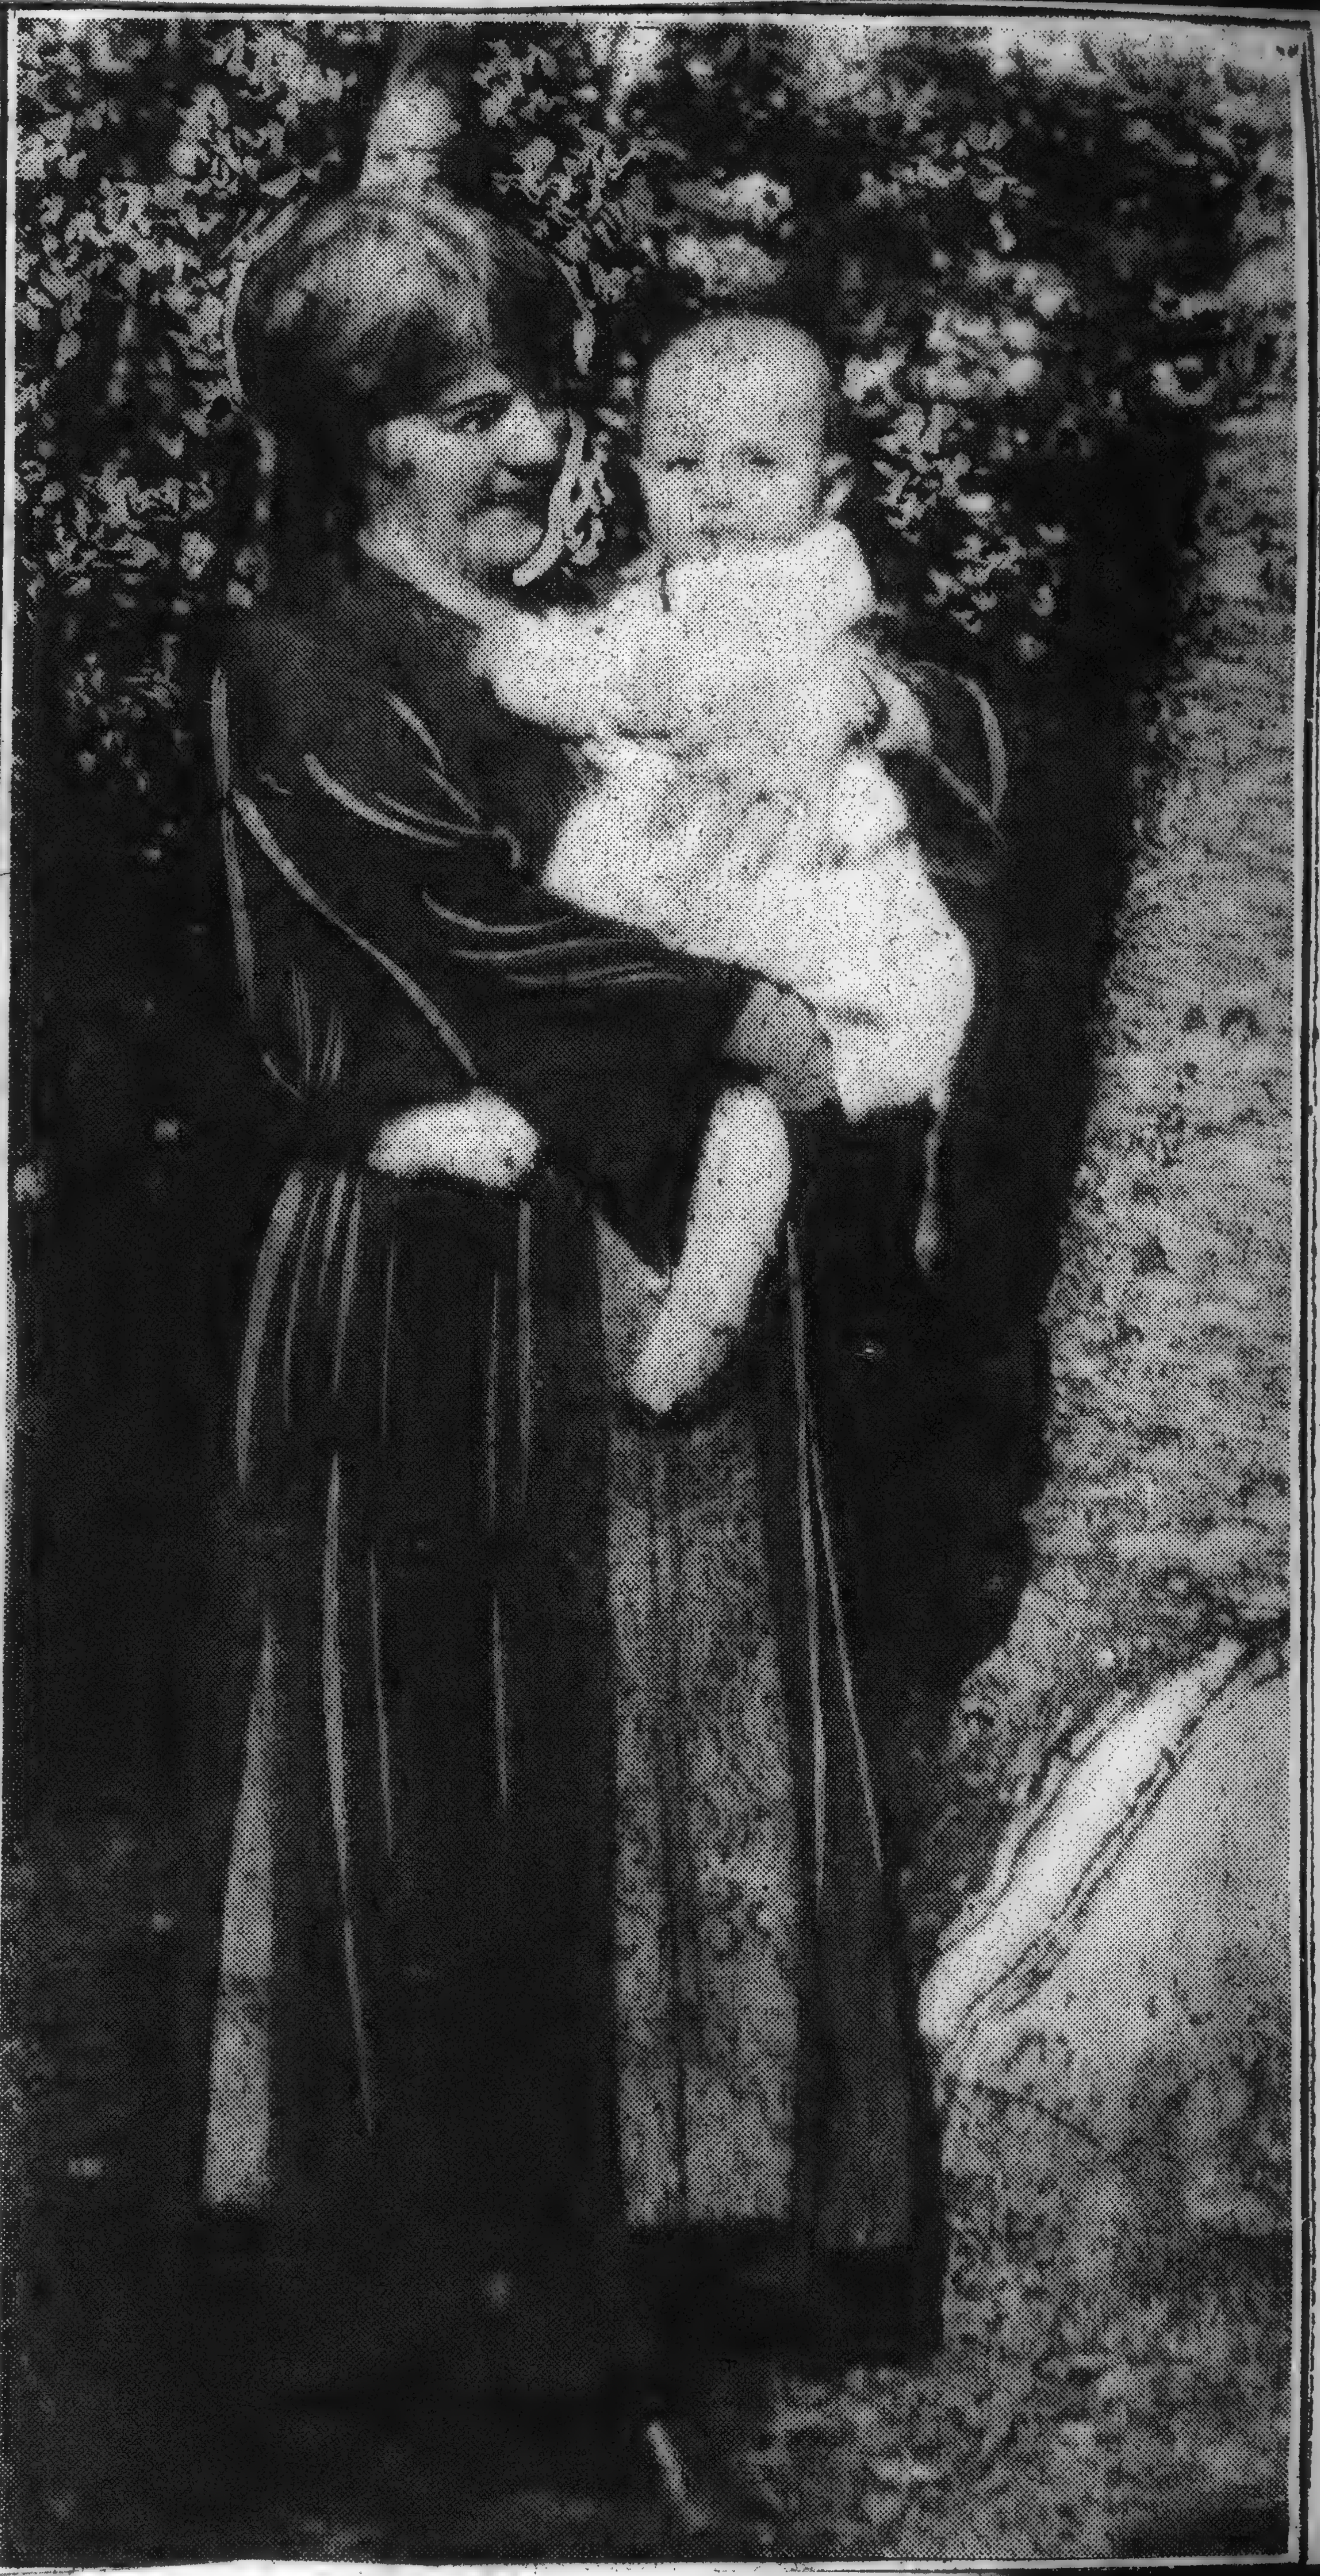
H. T. P.

Transcript Apr 30



Oct 1/16



Madam Homer and Some of Her Jewels

These intimate snapshots taken at the Homer summer place at Bolton-on-Hudson have just been obtained exclusively by the Sunday Post. Above is Madam Homer with her twins, Ann and Katherine, and at the right the great singer is holding her first grandchild, Louise Homer Stires. It is related that Madam Homer, her daughter, Louise, and her husband, who is an industrious composer, all require separate apartments in order that they may work and practise undisturbed. Madam Homer is scheduled to sing in Boston this afternoon.

[143]

Paderewski Questionless Tran 4/30

As Mr. Paderewski has conquered two generations in American concert-rooms, so now he prevails with a third. Elders were not lacking in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon—elders who could remember even those recitals of the nineties that first disclosed him. Yet the whole aspect of the audience was youthful, even as it is when Mr. Kreisler plays or this or that eminence sings. There are those who profess to despair of these younger folk in Bostonian concert-rooms, and it is quite true that mediocrity or pretence may seldom assemble them. Yet out they come to the summits of music and the summits of performance. They do not fail Mr. Paderewski or Mr. Kreisler or Mme. Onegin. They flock to a "Wagner Programme"; they are not few or far between at the sup-of music, uprearing the composer's in spirit and in truth, had only to follow him through the Fantasia, the Sonata or the Ballad. Those who prefer him as poetic temperament, glamoring whatever music it essays, might sup full from the Waltz, the Mazurka, the Nocturnes and the Finale of the Sonata. Those who crave the Paderewski of puissance, the Paderewski who, above all other pianists of our time, may strike the high, heroic note had only to listen to the Scherzo, the Polonaise, the Funeral March of the Sonata. Mr. Paderewski has not only flowered anew. He has flowered also enriched—and with the most precious of these new riches, which is self-mastery. We have heard Paderewski at full used to say the generation of the turn of the century. They have not, unless they also heard him in this winter and this spring of 1923.

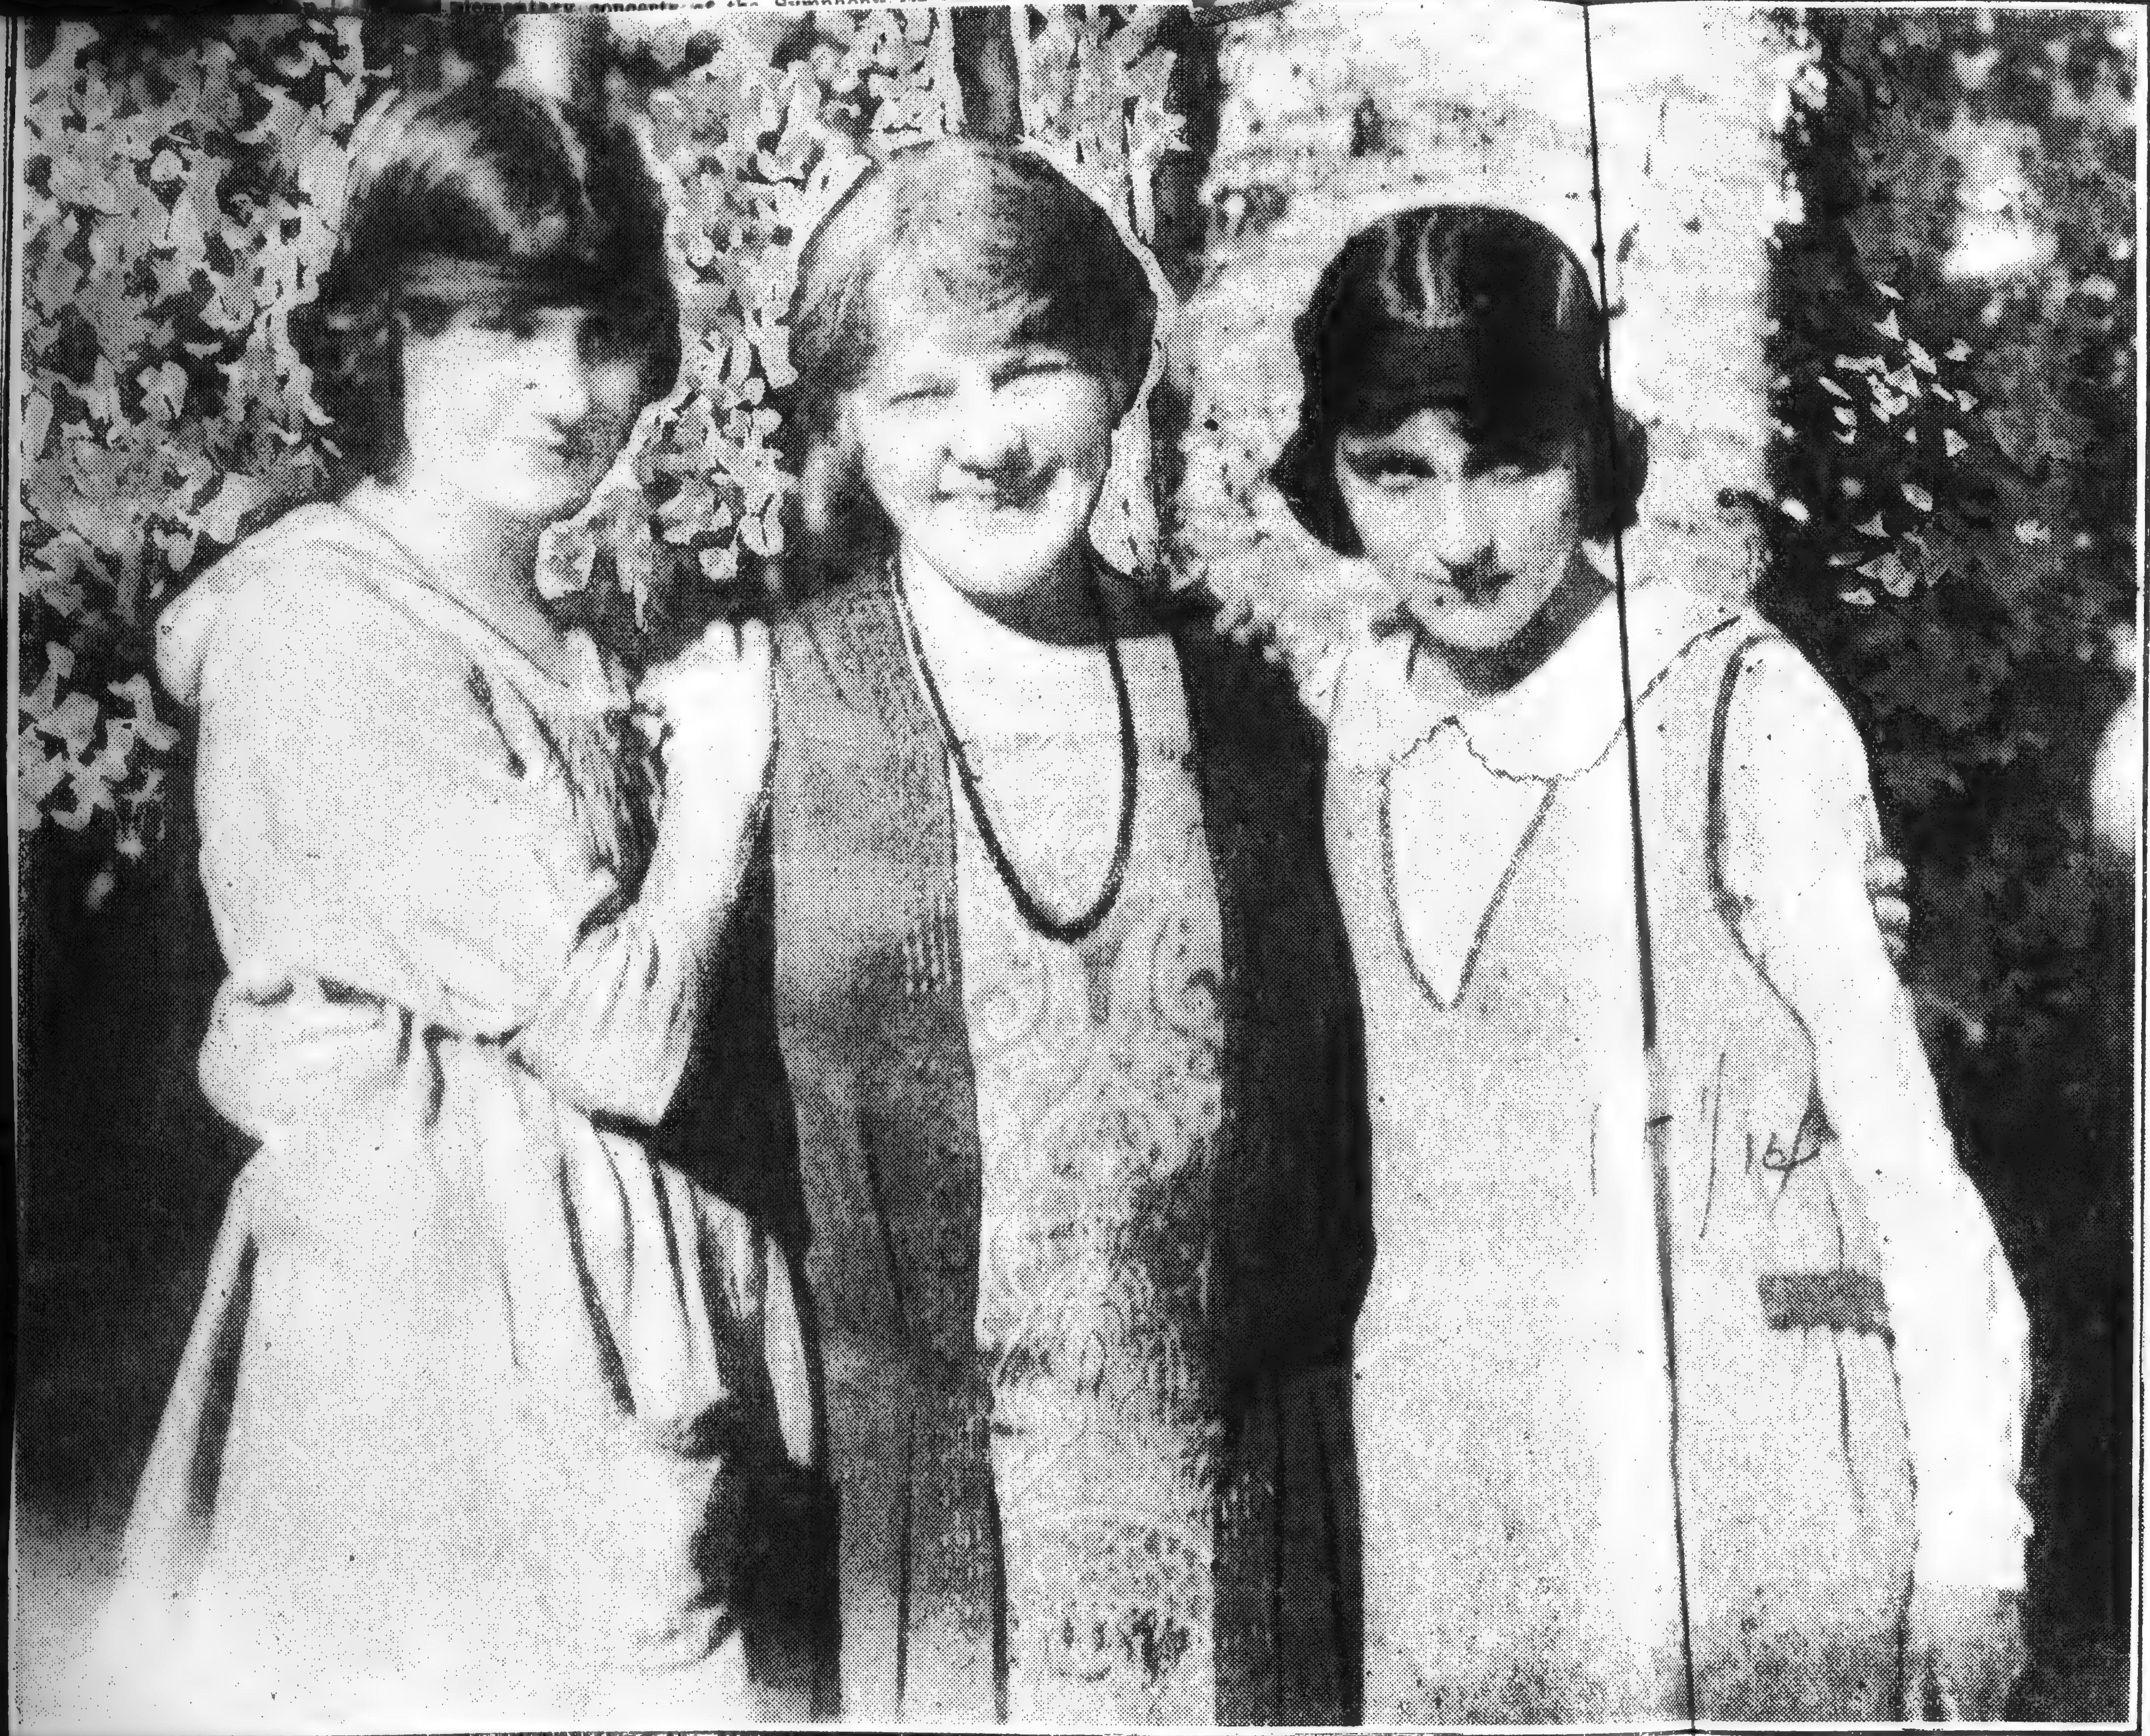
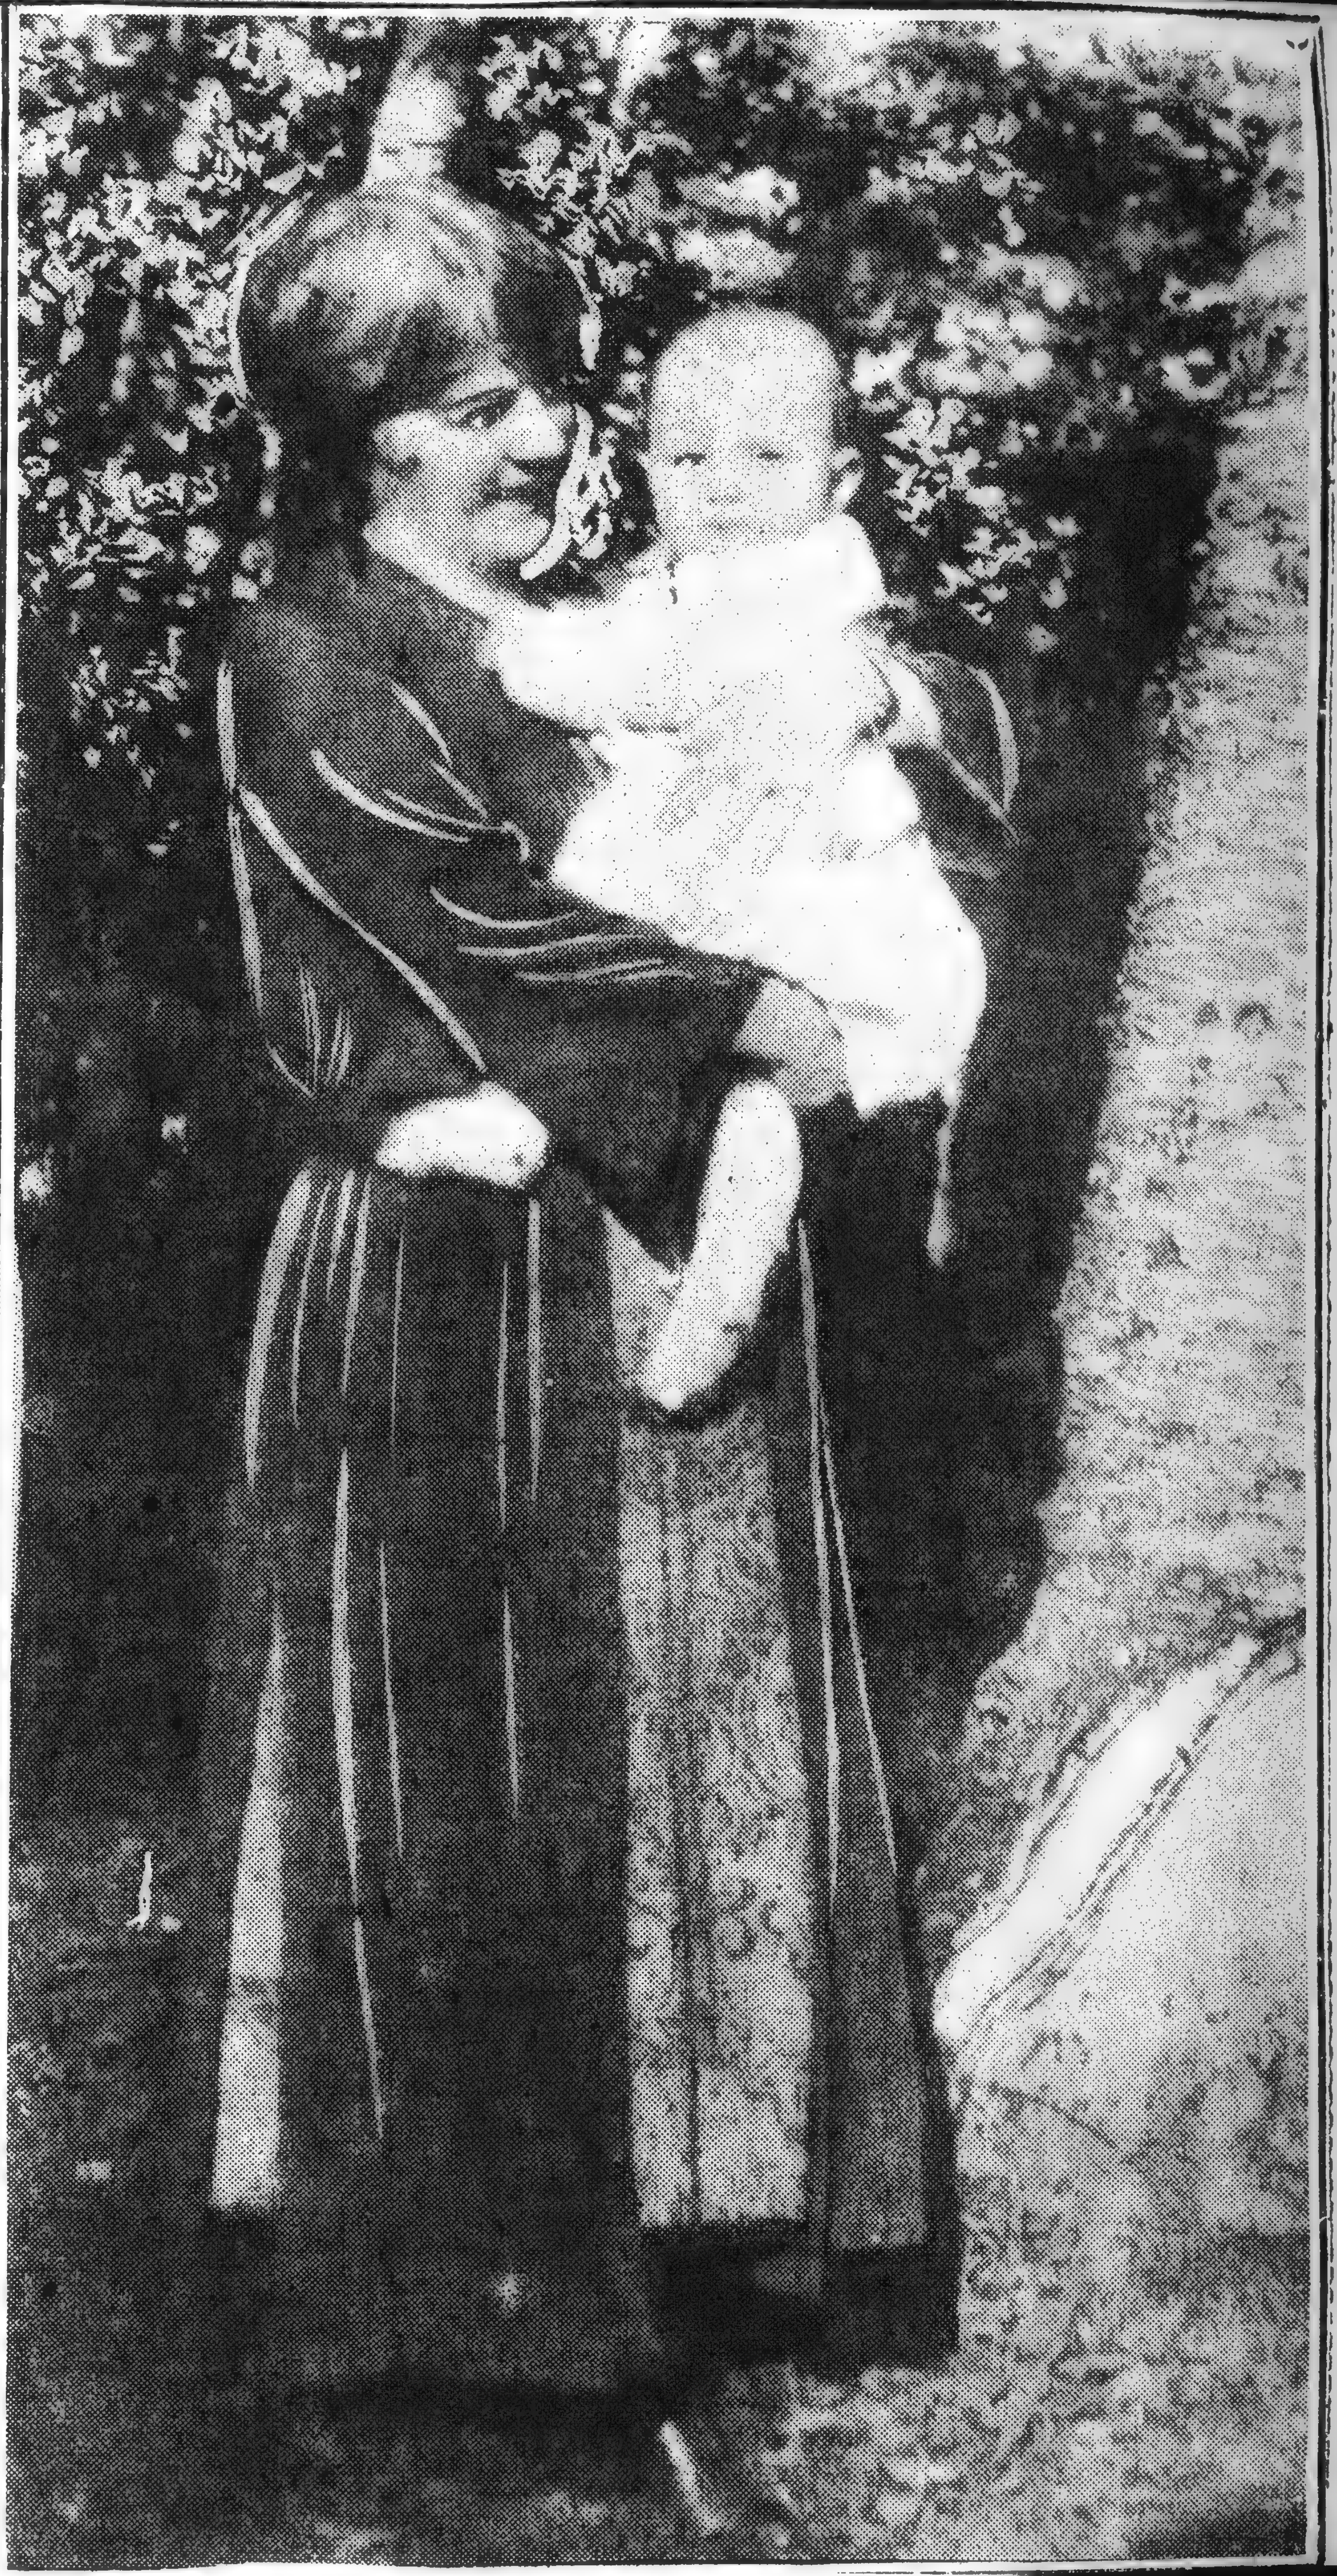
H. T. P.

Transcript Apr 30





Madam Homer and Some of Her Jewels

These intimate snapshots taken at the Homer summer place at Bolton-on-Hudson have just been obtained exclusively by the Sunday Post. Above is Madam Homer with her twins, Ann and Katherine, and at the right the great singer is holding her first grandchild, Louise Homer Stires. It is related that Madam Homer, her daughter, Louise, and her husband, who is an industrious composer, all require separate apartments in order that they may work and practise undisturbed. Madam Homer is scheduled to sing in Boston this afternoon.

BLANK PAGE

END OF VOLUME

END OF REEL

PLEASE
REWIND